Suffolke hath had Earles and Dukes out of ſundry families. There be of the later writers, who report, that the Glanvils in times paſt were honoured with this title: But ſeeing they ground upon no certaine authority, wheras men may eaſily miſtake, and I haue found nothing of them in the publicke records of the Kingdome, they muſt pardon me if I beleeve them not, untill they produce more certainty. Yet in the meane while I confeſſe, that the family of the Glanvils in this tract was of right good note and high reputation. Neither haue I hitherto learned by witneſſes of credite, that any one was entituled Earle of this province ſeverally before the daies of King B Edward the Third, who created Sir Robert Vfford Earle of Suffolke a man much renowned both in peace and warre, the ſonne of Sir Robert Vfford Steward of the Kings houſe under King Edward the Second, by Cecilie de Valonijs Ladie of Orford. After him ſuceeded his ſonne William, who having foure ſonnes that were taken away by untimely death during his life, died himſelfe ſuddenly in the Parliament houſe as he was about to report the minde of the Commonalty. And then Sir Robert Willoughby, Roger Lord Scales, and Henrie Ferrars of Groby the next of his bloud and his heires, divided the inheritance betweene them. Afterward King Richard the Second promoted Michael De-la-Pole to this title, & made him L. Chancellor of C England. Who, as Thomas Walſingham writeth, imploied himſelfe more in traffieke and merchandiſe, (as having beene a merchant and a merchants ſonne) than in martiall matters. For he was the ſonne of William De la-pole, that firſt Maior of Ringſton vpon Hull, and for his welthy eſtate, adorned by King Edward the Third with the dignity of a Baneret. But when as in the proſperous confluence of ſo many aduancements, the mans nature was not capable of ſo great fortunes, he was enforced by his aduerſaries enuie to depart out of his country, and ſo died a baniſhed man. His ſonne Michael being reſtored, died at the ſiege of Harflew, and againe within one moneth his ſonne Michael was ſlaine in the battaile of Agincourt leauing daughters only. Then William his brother ſucceeded, whom King Henrie the Sixt ſo fauoured that he made him alſo Earle of Penbroke, and then Marqueſſe of Suffolke, to him and the heires D maſles of his body. And that both hee and the heires of his body ſhould carry the golden rod having a doue in the top thereof, on the coronation day of the King of England: and the like rod or verge Yuory at the coronation of the Queenes of England: And afterwards he aduanced the ſame William for his great ſeruice and deſerts to the honor and title of Duke of Suffolke. Certes hee was an excellent man in thoſe daies, famous, and of great worth. For whereas his father and three brethren had in the French warres loſt their liues for their countrie; he, as we find in the Parliament Rols of the 28. of K Henrie the Sixth, in the ſame war ſerved full 34. yeeres: For ſeventeene yeeres together he never returned home from warfare; being once taken priſoner when hee was as yet no better than a priuate Knight, he paid downe for his ranſome twenty thou- E ſand pounds of our Engliſh money: he was of the Kings privie Counſell 15. yeeres; and a Knight of the Order of the Garter 30. Heereupon, as hee ſtood in eſpeciall grace and favour with his Prince, ſo hee incurred therefore the greater envy of the common people, and ſome emulatours: being grieueouſly charged with treaſon and miſpriſions. And therefore called before the King and Lords of the Parliament, after he had anſwered the Articles obiected, referred himſelfe to the Kings order. Whereupon the Chancellour by the Kings commandment pronounced, that wheras the Duke did not put himſelfe vpon his Peeres, the King touching the Articles of treaſon, would be doubtfull, and as for the Articles of miſpriſion, not as a Iudge by ad- F uice of the Lords, but as one to whoſe order the Duke had ſubmitted himſelfe, did baniſh him the realme and all other his dominions for fiue yeeres. But when he was embarked for France, he was by his adverſaries intercepted upon the ſea & beheaded. He left a ſonne named Iohn De-la-Pole, who wedded King Edward the fourth his ſiſter, and of her begat Iohn Earle of Lincolne by King Richard the Third proclaimed heire apparant of the Crowne: whoſe ambitious minde puffed vp and giddy therewith could Dukes and Earles of Suffolke.

Inquiſit. 5. Rich. 2.

Leland, in his Commentary upon his Cygnea Cantio.

Walſingham pag. 358.

Regiſt. Monall de Melſa. See Hull in Yorkſhire.

could not contain it ſelf, but ſoone after brak out againſt K. Henrie the Seuenth, to his own deſtruction (for in the battel at Stoke he was quickly ſlain) to his fathers death alſo, (who for very griefe of heart ended his daies) & to the utter ruine of the whole family, which together with them was in a ſort extinguiſhed & broght to nothing. For, his brother Edmund being Earle of Suffolke fled into Flanders: began there to conſpire and ſtirre vp rebellion againſt King Henrie the Seuenth, who, albeit hee feared him, would ſeeme to fauour him, and as a Prince better contented with repentance than puniſhment, freely pardoned him for ſundry offences, that he might winne him. But after he was thus fled, his eſtate was forfeited, and the King neuer thought himſelfe ſecure from his practiſes, vntill he had ſo farre prevailed with Philip Duke of Burgundie, that he was delivered into his hands (againſt the law of hoſpitality toward ſtrangers, as ſome then gaue out) vpon ſolemne promiſe in the word of a Prince that his life ſhould be ſpared. Nevertheleſſe he was kept cloſe priſoner, and after executed by King Henrie the Eighth (who thought himſelfe not tied to his fathers promiſe) what time as he firſt minded to make warre upon France, for feare leaſt in his abſence ſome troubles might be raiſed at home in his behalfe, yet his younger brother S. Richard de la Pole a baniſhed man in France, uſurped the title of Duke of Suffolke: who being the laſt male (to my knowledge) of this houſe, was ſlaine in the battaile of Pavie (wherin Francis the firſt, King of France was taken priſoner in the yeere of our Lord 1524.) fighting manfully among the thickeſt of his enemies. For whom, in conſideration of his ſingular valour, and high parentage the Duke of Burbon himſelfe, although hee was his enemie, made a ſumptuous funerall, and honoured the ſame with his preſence in mourning blacke. In the meane time, King Henrie the Eighth adorned Sir Charles Brandon, vnto whom hee had given in marriage his owne ſiſter Marie widdow, and Dowager to Lewis the twelft King of France, with the title of Duke of Suffolke, and granted to him all the Honours, and Manours which Edmund Earle of Suffolke had forfeited. After whom ſucceeded Henrie his ſonne a child, and after him his brother Charles: who both died of the Engliſh ſwet vpon one day in the yeere 1551. Then King Edward the Sixth honoured with that title Henrie Grey Marqueſſe Dorſet, who had married Francis their ſiſter: but hee enjoying the ſame but a ſmall time loſt his head in Queene Maries daies for complotting to make his daughter Queene, and was the laſt Duke of Suffolke. From that time lay this title of Suffolke void, untill that very lately King Iames aduanced to that honor Thomas Lord Howard of Walden, the ſecond ſonne of Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolke, whom for his approued fidelity and vertue he alſo made his Lord Chamberlaine, in his firſt entrie into the kingdome.

The Pariſhes in this County amount to the number of 575.

NORTH-

names of the hundreds of this mappe

17	Clackclowse
18	S. Grenchowe
19	Launditche
20	Forchowe
21	Humliarde
22	Hensted
23	Claueringe et Loddon
24	Grimshoe
25	Wayland
26	Shorcham
27	Depewade
28	Gileros
29	Dis
30	Erisham
31	Mutforde

Brandovnvm

Wayborne hoyp.

Burnham ouere

Tichwell

Burnhm dedale

Burnhm norton

Wells

Holkhm

Sancta Edmunde

Thornham

Braneaster

Holme

Hunstanton

Burnham market

Burnham thorp

Burnham Sutton

Ringsted

Stanboo

Hicham

Dockinge

Berwick

in y brakes

N. Krake

Seagforde

Fringe

Bermere

S. Krake

Snetsham

Sedisterne

Waterden

Bagthorp

Gatesend

E. Rudhm

Fingles thorp

Bircham

Taterset

W. Rudhm

Tatersforde

Walterton

Dosingham

Houghton

Helloughton

Sandringham

Newton

Aumur

10

Flinham

E. Rancham

W. Rancham

Cherforde

W. Wotton

Risingchase

Hillington

S. Rancham

THE WASHE

Clenchwarton

Croskeys

Tirrington

Wolpole

Old Linn

MERSHE

Tylney

Linn

W. Winch

E. Winch

Middleton

Gayton thorp

N. Runton

Bylney

Gayton

Massingham p.

Massingham ma.

Wikin

Mylndin

Gaywood

Lessiat

Bawsey

Raydon

Harpley

Grimston

Congham

S. Wotton

Set Maries

E. Stington

Germans

Walton

LANDE

Wignell petre

Walsoken

Wisbich 16

Elme

Emneth

Owtwell

The old podick

Saltorn lode

Vpwell

The new podick

Maden lode

PARTE

Creke lode

OF Littleport

CAMBRIDG

E.

Ely

SHIRE

Ouse fl.

Ouse magna fl.

LACKFORD

HV

Stowell

Mildnell

PARTE OF SVFF

Ouse pva fl.

Hockold

Wangforde

Lakenheath

Brandon

Thetforde

SITOMAGVS

Elden

Bernham

Ewston

Knatshall

Hopton

Silverton

Rushforth

Blownorton

Castory

Bidlesworth

Bretenham

Bridgeham

W. Herlinge

Ellington

Rowdham

Eccles

Wylby

W. Wretham

E. Wretham

Hockham

Larlingforde

Shropham

Snitter

Harpham

Old Buckenham

Brockles

Stow

Tattington

Tomson

Rockland

Morton

Easton

Bedney

Watton 25

Ellingham p.

Kirsingham p.

Kirsingham m.

Ashell

Thraxton

Carbrook

Skoulton

Woodrising

Cranworton

Berrowe 31

Letton

Shipdam

Ouington

Saham

Holton sup mont

Holmehale

Remerston

Whimbo

Thurston

Gerueston

Neckton

E. Bradnham

W. Bradnham

Sorle

Wendling

Yoxham

E. Dereham

Marshall

Westfeld

Tudnham

Bard

Fransham m.

Fransham p.

Dunham p.

Dunham m.

Besthorp cu Bittering

Greshenhall

Hoecumdelington

Hockring

Newton

Castle Aker

W. Aker

S. Aker

Walton

Pentney

Bylney

Wrungey

Cottenhell

Wattelington

Wallington

Holme

Shuldham

Garbicsthorp

Marham

Nerford

Nerboro

Swatham

N. Pickenham

S. Pickenham

Bicham Well

Finchem

Stradset

Mendlesham

Rungton

Stow

17

Berton

Wimbotsham

Crimpolsham

Boxwell

Cley

13 Goddersston

W. Dercham

Wereham

Downham

Ruston

Denber

Bowton

Oxboro

Fouldon

Hilboro

Langforth

Didlington

Stoke

Wretton

Fordham

Northolde

Coulston

Cranchowse

Igboro

Thurston

Stanforde

Helgey

Southrey

Metholde

Mumford

Fetwell

24

Toftes

Weting

Downcham

Wilton

Croxton

Tuddenham

Hockering

Beloue

Sparham

Belingford

Bawdeswick

Byntre

Gateley

Colkirke

Testerton

Toftes

Riburgh m.

Riburgh p.

Peusthorp

Hemton

Paddingnorton

Wissingsed

Godwick

Wellingham

Tetleshall

Wesenham

N. Elmham

Worthing

Brisley

Mylcham

E. Lexham

W. Lexham

Luchcham

Starsfeld

E. Bilney

Betley

Swanton morley

Lenghan

Kempston

19

Ruffham

Hornyngtoft

Tuddenham

Bard

Marshall

Braun

Ramha

Tyvford

Falsham

Thimbletherp

Geswick

Woddawlin

Hilderston

Thurnyng

Woodnorton

Stubbord

Ketleston

Skulthorp

Fakenham

Thorpland

Fulmerston

Dunton

Burston

Corpsty

Swanton

Melton

Saxthorp

Burro

Burnyngham

Edgefelde

Studday

Basm

Snoringe m.

Barney

N. Basham

W. Basham

E. Basham

Snoring p.

Gunthorp

Thorndge

Hunworth

Houghton

Thurssford

Egmore

Hinderingham

Battell

Brunton

Walsingham

Sherington

Laxlingham

Langham

Lauresel

Glamsford

Wighton

Bynham

Old Walsingham

Feldc Dawlinge

Bayfeld

Bodham

Holt

Hemsted

Clay

Kelinge

Wayborne

Sahawsen

Sh

Pe

Bl

Ha

Ca

Ba

Wi

Ha

Ca

Ha

Ha

Ha

NORFOLCIÆ comitatus, quem olim ICENI Insederunt. Continens in Se opida Mercatoria XXVI. Pagos et Villas DCXXV. Una Cum Singulis hundredis et fluminibus in eodem.

Auctore Christophoro Saxton.

William Kip Sculpsit

Cromere Elmerton
Sustrand Oxtrand Gunningham Felbridge Rowton
S. Reppes Paston Bromholme Trimingham Suffted
N. Reppes Thorpmerket Mounsley Gresham Metton Trunch Backton Hanworth
Bradfield Knapton Erpingham Walcate Thwaite
Alby Coulby
Antingham Swafeld Ridlington
Hasiborc Hemsted
Eckles Mattaske Witton
Ruston Pawling Wickmere Suffelde
N. Walsham Lesingham
Wilterton Calthop Bannigham Felmingham
6 Hovynge Ingworth
Ingham
Waxham Horsee
E. Semerton
Stalham
Hayham
Winterton nesse Tuttingham Wurfted.
Sutton
Hicklinge Skeyton Swanton
Winterton
Blecklinge Burre 13 Dilam Smalboro
W. Somerton Martham Olton Oxned Lammes Westwick Tunsted Vrsted Carfelde Hemmesby Roleshy Scratby Ormesby Aylsham Scotto Beston
Burton
Nerishede Thurne Burtos
Scr. Michaell
Caston
Bramton
Hobbes m: Slawley Ashmanhall Ormesby
Masham
Scr. Benet
8 Scornston Reppes Obey Fulby Moulsby Castor
Heuerland Hemingh.
Hobbes p:
Below Berton
Horning Basiwick Horsted Coulshill Heston Luchan Bilokby Thirgoby Runham Betton
Stratton Freckenhamhill Wraxham br:
Rancworth Clipsby Stokesby Castor 9 Swanyngton Feltthorp Haynsforth Wodbastwick Panworth Herringby Yermouth Wichlingham Tauerham 14
Scr. Fathes
Crostwick Hemlington Walsham
Acle Sallowes
Vpton Fishley Hauergate Burgh Ca: Attellbridge Horsforth Spikesworth Rackey Witton
Boyton
GARIENIS flu:
Ostium
Draton
Morton sup mont
Hellesdon Spretton Plumsted
burlingham Wickhamton Tunstall
15 GARIANONVM Ringland Catton Plumsted
Broston Blofelde Southwood Moulton
Gorleston Hunnyham Thorp Paswick Brundale Lingwood Lympenhow Redham
Belton
Ashbye
Goose Euston Bowthorp
Hayham
Strumpshall Hasingham Fresthorp Hopton
Bayber NORWICH
Crown Buckenamsery Fritton LOVINGLAND
Colton Marlingford Erlham Cakenham Surlingham Hierus flu:
Scrola 20 Eton Brameton Claxton
Thorp Herringfleet Lounde Berford Colney Keswick
Yardley Hokingham Somerley Carton
Carleton
Melton g Cringleforde Bixley
Carleton
Langley Thurleton Blunston Gunton Armingale
Rockland
Hadsco
Melton m: Intwood Ashbye
Norton Wheatakerboro Bernham
Swardston
Castor Hellington Chedgrave Shipton Oldton Wramplingham Hethersett
Dunston
22 Portland
VENTA ICENORVM Hales Raningham Wheataker
Carleton
Lestoffe Kettering
Carleton
Howe
Thurston Loddon Tostengachorum Crounthorp Braken Nelneston Barrowe
Sisland
23 Winston Albye Kirkley Winundham Heithell Swengthorp Shotesham Sething Skotto Gillingham Barnby
As: Windham Ashwell Wreningham
Newton
Flardon Saxlingham Breke Worlingham Morleys Fundenhall
kirsted Mundham Gelston Beckles Gislam Rakefelde Hopton
Hemnall Wotton
Thwaite
Brome Ellingham
Tacleston Thorston Tasburc Fugate
N. Cove
Rushmere Kessland Fornecet Freston Topcroft Dickingham Barsham Stretton Hedenham Shepemedow Weston
Wisford Moulton
Shelton Mourning Beddingham Erisham
Henstead Bunwell
27 Wackton thorp Bungay Kyngesfeld Willingham
Carleton
Estington
Denton
Benacre Hardwick Alboro Elixton
S. Elman
Scr. Johns Saterley Couenith Tibenham Pulham 30 Redgell Redsham p: Shanfelde Ellowe Wrentham
Titshall marget Storton
Scr. Cros
Titshall mary Pulham mary Homersfeld
Scr. Michaell
Redsham m:
S. Cove
Harleston Gissinge Dicklebo
Scr. Margaret Rumbero Bromton
Easton
Winferlinge Rushall
Southelmham Henham Sowowlde Banham
Burston
29 Thelton Brodishe Mendham Waybred Halesworth Bliboro Kenningale Shelfhanger Billingforde Fersfeld Sylam Wingfelde Wetherisdale Wenhaston Walderswich Garbulsham Osmondston Roydon Birssingham Oche Hevening ham Dunwiche
Leppham m: Sturton
Hexen Horham Sibton Palgraue Broine Denham Laxfelde Redgraue Wartham
Aye
Scala Miliarum
1 2 4 6 8 10

A

NORTH-FOLKE.

B NORTH-FOLKE, commonly Norfolke, which is by interpretation, people of the North, lieth Northward of Suffolke, from which it is divided by those two little rivers which I spake of, Ouse the least, and Waveney, running divers waies: on the East & North side the German Ocean which is plē-tifull of fish beateth upon the shores with a mighty noise: On the West, the greater Ouse, a river disporting himselfe with his manifold branches and divisions secludeth it from Cambridgeshire. It is a region large and spatious, and in maner all throughout a plaine champion, unlesse it be where there rise gently some prety hils; passing rich, exceeding full of sheepe, and stored with conies: repleni-shed likewise with a great number of populous villages: for, beside xxvij mercate townes, it is able to shew villages and country townes 625: Watered with divers rivers and brookes, and not altogether destitute of woods. The soile, according to the variety of C places, is of a divers nature: Some where, fat, ranke and full of moisture, as in Mersh-land and Flegg: otherwhere, but Westward especially, leane, light, and sandy: elsē where, standing upon clay and chalke. But the goodnesse of the ground a man may collect by this (whence Varro willeth vs to gather it) that the inhabitants are of a pas-sing good complexion: to say nothing of their exceeding wily wits, and the same right quicke in the insight of our common lawes: in so much, as it is counted, as well now, as in times past, the onely country for best breed of Lawyers: so that even out of the meanest sort of the common people, there may be found not a few, who, if their were nothing else to beare action, are able to fetch matter enough of wrang-ling controversies, even out of the very prickes, titles, and accents of the Law. But
D least, whiles I desire brevity, I become long by these digressions which may distaste; I will turne my penne from the people to the places; and beginning at the South side, runne over briefly those which are more memorable, and of greater anti-quitie.

Vpon the least Ouse, where Thet a small brooke breaking out of Suffolke, meeteth and runneth with him, in a low ground, was seated that ancient Citie SITOMAGVS, which Antonine the Emperour maketh mention of, corruptly in the Fragments of an old Choragraphicall table called SIMOMAGVS, and SINOMAGVS now Thet-ford, in the Saxon language Ðeoꝺford, in which remaineth part of the former name with the addition of the English word Ford. For, like as Sitomagus in the British Sitomagus. Thetford.
E tongue implieth a Citie by the river Sit, which now is Thet (for Magus as Plinie shew-eth, signified a Citie) so Thetford in English betokeneth the Ford of Thet; neither are these two names Sit and Thet much unlike in sound. There are in it at this day but few inhabitants, although it be of a good bignesse; but in times past it was very po-pulous; and beside other tokens of antiquity it hath still to be seene a great mount rai-sed to a good height by mens hands; fensed with a double rampier, and as the report goeth, fortified in ancient time with walles: Which was a Romane worke as some thinke, or rather of the Englishe Saxons Kings, as others would haue it, under whom it flourished a long time. But after it was sacked, first by Suenus the Dane, who in a rage set it on fire in the yeere 1004; an six yeeres after being spoiled againe by the fu-
F rious Danes, it lost all the beauty and dignity that it hād. For the recovery whereof, Bishop Arfast removed his Episcopall See from Elmham hither, and Bishop William his successour did all he could to adorne and set it out: so that, under King Edward the Confessour, there were counted in it 947 Burgesses, and in William the Conque-rours time 720 Mansions: whereof 224 stood void, and the chiefe Magistrate was termed a Consul, which name may intimate that it was a Roman towne. But when

Bishop

Biſhop Herbert (ſurnamed Loſenga, for that he was compoſed of Leaſing and Flattery) the third prelate that by evill meanes & Symonie climbed up to this dignity, had removed his ſeat from hence to Norwich, it fell againe to decay, and as it were languiſhed. Neither could it ſufficiently be comforted for the abſence of the Biſhop, by the Abbay of Cluniac Monkes, which by his meanes was built. This Abbay, Hugh Bigod built out of the ground: For ſo writeth he in the Inſtrument of the foundation. I Hugh Bigod Steward to King Henry, by his graunt and by the adviſe of Herbert Biſhop of Norwich, have ordained Monkes of the Order of Cluny, in the Church of S. Mary which was the Epiſcopall ſeat of Thetford, which I gave unto them, and afterwards founded another more meet for their uſe, without the towne. Howbeit even then, the greateſt part of the City that ſtood on the hithermore banke by little and little fell to the ground: the other part although it was much decaied, yet one or two ages agoe flouriſhed with ſeven Churches, beſides three ſmall religious houſes, whereof the one was, by report erected in memoriall of the Engliſhmen and Danes ſlaine heere. For hard by as our Hiſtorians doe record, Edmund that moſt holy king a little before his death fought ſeaven houres and more with the Danes not without an horrible ſlaughter, and afterwards gave over the battaile on even hand; ſuch was the alternative fortune of the field that it drave both ſides paſt their ſenſes.

By Waveney the other river of thoſe twaine, that bound this ſhire and runneth Eaſtward, not farre from the ſpring head thereof, are ſeene Buckenham and Keninghall. This which may ſeeme to haue the name left unto it of the Iceni, is the ſeat of that moſt honorable family of the Howards, whoſe glory is ſo great, that the envie of Buchanan cannot empaire it. As for the other, ſo named, as I take it of Beech trees which the Saxons called Bucken; it is a faire and ſtrong Caſtle, built by William de Aubigny the Norman, (unto whom the Conquerour had given the place) & by his heires that were ſucceſſiuely Earles of Arundell, it deſcended to the Tatſalls, and from them by Caly and the Cliftons unto the family of the Knevets. Theſe are of an ancient houſe and renowned ever ſince Sir Iohn Knevet was Lord Chancellour of England under King Edward the Third, and alſo honourably allied by great marriages. For over and beſide theſe of Buckenham, from hence ſprang thoſe right worſhipfull Knights, Sir Thomas Knevet Lord Knevet, Sir Henrie Knevet of Wiltſhire, and Sir Thomas Knevet of Aſhellwell Thorp & others. This Aſhellwell Thorp is a little towne nere adioining, which from the Thorpes in times paſt of Knights degree, by the Tilneis and the L. L. Bourchiers of Berners, is devolved at length hæreditarily unto that Sir Thomas Knevet beforenamed. As for that Buckenham, aforeſaid, it is holden by this tenure and condition, that the Lords thereof ſhould at the Coronation of the Kings of England be the Kings Butlers that day. Like as, (a thing that may beſeeme the noting) in Charleton a little neighbour village, Raulph de Carleton and ſome one other, held lands by this ſervice, namely, To preſent an hundred Herring-pies or paſties, when Herings firſt come in, unto their ſoveraigne Lord the King, whereſoever he be in England.

But this river neare to his ſpring runneth by and by under Diſce, now Dis, a prety towne well knowne; which king Henrie the Firſt gaue frankely to Sir Richard Lucy, and hee ſtreightwaies paſſed it over to Walter Fitz-Robert with his daughter: of whoſe poſterity Robert Fitz-Walter obteined for this place the libertie of keeping mercat, at the hands of King Edward the Firſt. From thence, although Waveney bee on each ſide beſet with townes, yet there is not one amongſt them that may boaſt of any antiquity: unleſſe it bee Harleſton a good mercat, and Shelton that ſtandeth farther of, both which haue given ſurnames to the ancient families of the Sheltons and Harleſtons: but before it commeth to the ſea, it coupleth it ſelfe with the river Yare, which the Britans called Guerne, the Engliſhmen Gerne and Iere, of Alder trees, no doubt, ſo termed in Britiſh wherewith it is over ſhadowed. It ariſeth out of the mids of this countrie, not far from Gernſton a little towne that tooke name thereof, and hath hard by it Hengham, which his Lords, deſcended from Iohn Mareſcall (nephew by the brother to William Mareſcall Earle of Penbroch) upon whom King Iohn beſtowed it with the lands of Hugh de Gornay, a traitour, and alſo with the daughter

The family of the Knevets.

Barons Bourchiers of Berners.

Hengham. Lord of Rhia.

A daughter and coheire of Hubert de Rhia. From this Mareſcals it paſſed in revolution of time, unto the Lord Morleis, and from them by Lovell unto the Parkers, now Lords Morley. A little from hence is Sculton, otherwiſe called Burdos or, Burdelois, which was held by this tenure, that the Lord thereof on the Coronation daie of the Kings of England, ſhoula bee chiefe Lardiner. Ioint-neighbour to Sculton is Wood-Riſing the faire ſeate of the familie of Southwells, which received the greateſt reputation and encreaſe from Sir Richard Southwell privie councellour to king Edward the Sixth; and his brother Sir Robert Maiſter of the Rowles.

Sculton.
Wood riſing.

More Eaſtward is to be ſeene Wimundham, now ſhort, Windham, famous for the Albineys Earles of Arundell, there enterred: whoſe anceſtour and progenitor William D'
B Albiney, Butler to king Henrie the Firſt founded the Priory, and gaue it to the Abbay of Saint Albans for a Cell, which afterward was advanced to an Abbay. Upon the ſteeple whereof, which is of a great height, William Ket one of the Captains of the Norfolke Rebels, in the yeare of our Lord 1549. was hanged on high. Neither would it be paſſed over in ſilence, that fiue miles from hence ſtandeth Attilborrough, the ſeate of the Mortimers, an ancient familie, who beeing different from thoſe of Wigmor, bare for their Armes, A ſhield Or, Semè de floures de Lyz Sables, and founded heere a Collegiat Church, where there is little now to bee ſeene. The inheritance of theſe Mortimers hath by marriage long ſince accrued to the Ratcliffs, now Earles of Suſſex, to the familie of Fitz-Ralph, and to Sir Ralph Bigot. But returne wee
C now to the river.

Windham.

Attilborrough.
Mortimers.

The ſaid Yare holdeth not his courſe farre into the Eaſt, before he taketh Wentſum a riveret (others call it Wentſar) from the South, into his ſtreame: upon which, neere unto the head thereof, there is a foure ſquare rampier at Taiesborrough, conteining foure and twentie acres. It may ſeeme to haue beene a campe place of the Romans, if it bee not that which in an old Chorographicall table or Map publiſhed by Marcus VVelſerus, is called Ad Tavm. Somewhat higher, upon the ſame river, ſtood
D Venta Icenorvm, the moſt flouriſhing City, (for a little one) in times paſt of all this people; but now having loſt the old name, it is called Caſter. And no mervaile, that of the three Ventae, Cities of Britain, this onely loſt the name, ſeeing it hath quite loſt it ſelfe. For, beſide the ruines of the walles, which containe within a ſquare plot or quadrant, about thirty acres, and tokens appearing upon the ground where ſometimes houſes ſtood, and ſome fewe peeces of Romane money which are now and then there digged up, there is nothing at all remaining. But out of this ancient Venta, in the ſucceeding ages, Norwich had her beginning, about three miles from hence, nere unto the confluents of Yare and another nameleſſe river (ſome call it Bariden) where they meet in one: which river with a long courſe running in and out by Fakenham, which king Henry the Firſt gaue to Hugh Capell, and K. Iohn afterward to the Earle of Arundel; and making many crooked reaches,
E ſpeedeth it ſelfe this way by Attilbridge to Yare, and leaveth Horſford North from it: where a Caſtle of William * Cheneys, who in the reigne of Henry the Second, was one of the great Lords and chiefe peeres of England, lieth overgrowne with buſhes and brambles. This Norvvich is a famous City, called in the Engliſh Saxon tongue Noꝛþpỳc, that is, a Northerly Creek, if Wic among the Saxons ſignifieth the creeke or Cove of a river, as Rhenanus ſheweth unto us: for, in this verie place the river runneth downe amaine with a crooked and winding compaſſe: or, a Northren Station, if Wic, as Hadrianus Iunius would haue it, betokeneth a ſure and ſecure ſtation or place of aboad; where dwelling houſes ſtand jointly and cloſe together: or a Northerly Caſtle, if Wic ſound as much as a Caſtle, as our * Archbiſhop Alfrick the Saxon hath interpre-
F ted it. But, if I ſhould with ſome others bee of opinion that Norwich by a little turning is derived from Venta, what ſhould I doe but turne a wrie from the verie truth? For, by no better right may it chalenge unto it ſelf the name of Venta, than either Baſil in Germany, the name of Avgvsta, or Baldach of Babylon. For, like as Baldach had the beginning of Babylons fall; and Baſil ſprang from the ruine of Auguſta: even ſo our Norwich appeared and ſhewed it ſelfe, though it were late, out of that ancient Horſford.

* De Caſineto.

Norwich.
Wic in the Saxons tongue what it ſignifieth.

* In the Engliſh Saxon Grammer.

Venta Icenorum.
Caſter.

Auguſta Rauracorum.

VENTA, which, the Britiſh name therof Caer Guntum in Authors, doth proue: wherein, like as in the river Wentſum or Wentfar the name of Venta doth moſt plainely diſcover it ſelfe. For, this name Norwich wee cannot reade of any where in our Chronicles before the Daniſh warres. A

So farre is it off, that either Cæſar or Guiteline the Britain built it, as they write who are more haſty to beleeue all than to weigh matters with ſound judgement. But now, verily, by reaſon of the wealth, the number of Inhabitants, and reſort of people, the faire buildings, and faire Churches, and thoſe ſo many, (for it conteineth about thirtie Pariſhes) the painefull induſtrie of the Citizens, their loialty towards their Prince, and their courteſie unto ſtrangers, it is worthily to bee raunged with the moſt celebrate Cities of Britain. It is right pleaſantly ſituate on the ſide of an hill two and fiftie degrees and fortie ſcrupuls from the Aequator, and foure and twentie degrees and fiue and fiftie ſcrupuls in Longitude. The forme is ſomewhat long: lying out in length from South to North a mile and an halfe: but carrying in breadth, about halfe ſo much, drawing it ſelfe in by little and little at the South end in manner, as it were, of a cone or ſharpe point. Compaſſed it is about with ſtrong walles (in which are orderly placed many turrets, and twelue gates) unleſſe it bee on the Eaſt-ſide; where the river (after it hath with many windings in and out watered the North part of the Citie, having foure bridges for men to paſſe to and fro over it) is a fence thereto, with his deepe chanell there, and high ſteepe bankes. In the verie infancie, as I may ſo ſay, of this City, when Etheldred a witleſſe and vnaduiſed Prince reigned, Sueno or Swan the Dane who raunged at his pleaſure through England with a great rable of ſpoiling ravenours, firſt put it to the ſacke, and afterwards ſet it on fire. Yet it revived againe, and as wee reade in that Domeſday booke wherein William the Conquerour tooke the reviewe of all England, there were by account in King Edward the Confeſſours time, no fewer than one thouſand three hundred and twentie Burgeſſes in it. At which time (that I may ſpeake out of the ſame booke) It paid unto the King twenty pounds and to the Earle ten pounds: and beſide all this twentie ſhillings, and foure prebendaries, and ſixe Sextars of Hony; alſo a beare and ſixe dogs for to bait the beare: but now it paieth ſeauentie pounds by weight to the King, and an hundred ſhillings for a * Gerſume to the Queene, and an ambling palfrey: alſo twenty pounds Blanc to the Earle, and twenty ſhillings for a Gerſume by tale. But while the ſaid King William reigned, that flaming fire of fatall ſedition, which Raulph Earle of Eaſt England had kindled againſt the King, ſettled it ſelfe here. For, when hee had ſaved him ſelfe by flight, his wife together with the French Britons endured in this place a moſt grievous ſiege even to extreame famine: yet at length driven ſhe was to this hard pinch that ſhe fled the land, and this Citie was ſo empaired, that ſcarce 560. Burgeſſes were left in it, as wee reade in that Doweſday booke. Of this yeelding up of the City Lanfrank Archbiſhop of Canterbury maketh mention in his Epiſtle to king William, in theſe words. Your Kingdome is purged of theſe vilanous and filthy Britons, The Caſtle of Norwich is rendred up into your hands. And the Britons who were therein and had lands in England, having life and limme granted unto them, are ſworne within fortie daies to depart out of your realme, and not enter any more into it without your leave and licence. From that time beganne it againe to recover it ſelfe by little and little out of this diluge of calamities, and Biſhop Herbert whoſe good name was cracked for his foule Simony, tranſlated the Epiſcopall See from Thetford hither, and built up a verie faire Cathedral Church on the Eaſt ſide & lower part of the City, in a certaine place then called Cow-holme, nere unto the Caſtle. The firſt ſtone whereof in the reigne of king William Rufus, and in the yeare after Chriſts nativity 1096. himſelfe laid, with this inſcription. B C D E F

*Fine, as ſome take it.

DOMINVS HERBERTVS POSVIT PRIMVM LAPIDEM IN NOMINE PATRIS, FILII, ET SPIRITVS SANCTI. AMEN.

That is,

LORD

A LORD [BISHOP] HERBERT LAID THE FIRST STON IN THE NAME OF THE FATHER, THE SONNE, AND HOLY GHOST, AMEN.

Afterwards, he procured of Pope Paschal that it should be established, and confirmed for the Mother Church of Norfolke and Suffolke: he endowed it bountifully with as much lands, as might sufficiently maintaine three score Monkes, who had there faire and spacious Cloysters. But after that they were thrust out by King Henry the Eight, there were substituted for them a Deane, six Prebendaries and others. The
B Church being thus built and an Episcopall see there placed, the towne now (as saith William of Malmesbury) became of great name for frequent trade of Merchants and resort of people. And in the 17. yeere of King Stephen, as we read in old Annals, Norwich was founded a new, became a well peopled City, and was made a Corporation. And most certaine it is out of the Kings Records, that King Stephen granted it unto his sonne William for his Appennage, as they tearme it, or inheritance. Out of whose hands King Henry the Second shortly after wrested it by composition and kept it for himselfe: And albeit his Sonne Henry, called the younger King, when he aspired ambitiously to the kingdome, had made a large promise thereof unto Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolke whom he had drawen to side with him. At which time Bigod taking part
C with the younge King, who could not containe his hope of the Kingdome within the bounds of dutie and equitie, most grieuously afflicted and oppressed this citie: and then as it is thought reedified that Castle standing within the very City upon an high hill neere unto the Cathedrall Church, which being compassed with a ditch of a wonderfull depth seemed in those daies impregnable. Which notwithstanding, Lewis the French-man, with whom the seditious Barons of England combined against King Iohn, won it easily by siege. Now, that Bigod reedified this castle I verily beleeue, because I haue seene Lions Saliant engraven there in a Stone after the same forme that the Bigods used in times past in their seales: of whom also there was one that in his seale used a Crosse. These things fell out in the first age (wee may D say) of Norwich.

But in the age next ensuing, it encreased mightily & flourished, by reason that the Citizens grew to be passing wealthy, who exhibited a supplication in the Parliament house unto King Edward the First, that they might be permitted to wall their City about, which they afterwards performed to the exceeding great strengthning and honour thereof. They obteined moreover of K. Richard the Second, that the Worsted made there might be transported: and in the yeere 1403. K. Henry the Fourth, granted that they might choose every yeere a Major in steed of their Bailiffes, which before were the principall Magistrates. They built likewise a passing faire Towne-house in the very middest of the City neere unto the Mercat-place, which on certaine
E set daies is furnished exceeding well with all things necessary for mans life. And verily much beholden it is unto the *Netherlanders, that being weary of Duke de Alba his cruelty, and hating the bloudy Inquisition, repaired hither in great numbers and first brought in the making and trade of saies, baies, & other stuffes now much in vse. But why should I stand long upon these things, when as Alexander Nevill a Gentleman well borne and very learned hath notably described all these matters, together with the story of their Bishops, the orderly succession of their Magistrates, and the furious outrage of that most villanous Rebell Ket against this City? This onely will I adde, that in the yeere 1583. the Citizens conveighed water out of the river through pipes by an artificiall instrument or water-forcer up into the highest places
F of the City. Heere I might iustly commence an action both against Polydor Virgill an Italian, and also against Angelus Capellus a Frenchman, and put them to their answer before the Tribunall of venerable Antiquity, why they have avouched that the ancient ORDOVICES, who be seated, as it were in another world, inhabited this Norwich. I would have the same mery action also against our country man D. Caius, but that I know for certaine that the good old man, right learned though he were, was blinded in this point with the naturall loue of this his owne native country. Neither have I

*Or Dutchmen of the Low countries.

more to say of Norwich unlesse it may please you to runne over these verses of M. Iohn Ionston a Scotish-Britan written of the same. A

Vrbs speciosa situ, nitidis pulcherrima tectis,
Grata peregrinis, delitiosa suis.
Bellorum sedes, trepido turbante tumultu,
Tristia Neustriaco sub duce damna tulit.
Victis dissidijs, post quàm caput arduа cælo
Extulit, immensis crevit opima opibus.
Cultus vincit opes, & cultum gratia rerum,
Quam bene? si luxus non comitetur opes. B
Omnia sic adeò sola hæc sibi sufficit, ut si
Fors regno desit, hæc caput esse queat.

A City seated daintily, most faire built she is knowen,
Pleasing and kinde to strangers all, delightfull to her owne.
The seat of war whiles civill sturs and tumults yet remain'd,
In William the Normans daies, she grievous losse sustain'd.
These broiles and jarres once past, when as her head aloft againe
She bare, in richnesse infinite and wealth she grew amaine.
Her port exceeds that wealth, and things all superfine, this port
How happy were it, if excesse with such wealth did not sort. C
So all sufficient in her selfe, and so complete is shee,
That if neede were, of all the Realme the mistresse shee might bee.

From Norwich, the river Yare having entertained other beackes and brookes as guests, yet all under his owne name, passeth on still with many winding crookes very full of the fishes called Ruffes, which name because in English it soundeth like to Rough, D. Caius named it aptly in Latine Aspredo, that is, Rough. For, it is all the body over, rough and hath very sharpe & pricky finnes: it delighteth in sandy places; for shape and bignesse like unto a perch; in colour browne and duskish aboue, but palish yellow beneath: marked by the chawes with a double course of half-circles: the eie for the upper halfe of it of a darke browne, for the nether somewhat yellowish like delayed gold, the ball and sight thereof blacke. This speciall marke by it selfe it hath, that there is a line goeth along the backe, and fastened to the body (as it were) with an overthwart thred, all to be spotted over the taile and finnes with blacke speckes: which finnes when the fish is angry stand up and bristle stiffe and strong: but when the anger is alaied they fall flat againe. The meat of this Ruffe resembleth that of the Perch, much commended for holsomnesse; and for eating tender & short. D

A Ruffe. De Rariorum animalium, Historia.

* When Yare is gone past Claxton, where there stands a Castlet built round, which Sr Thomas Gawdy Knight Iustice of the Common Plees of late repaired, it receiveth a brook which passeth by nothing memorable but Halles-hal, & that only memorable for his ancient owner Sir James Hobart Atturney Generall and of the Privy Counsell to King Henry the Seventh (by him dubbed Knight at such time as he created Henry his sonne Prince of Wales) who by building from the ground the faire Church at Loddon being his parish Church, Saint Olaues bridge over Waveney that diuideth Norfolke and Suffolke, the cawsey thereby, and other workes of piety, deserved well of the Church, his country, and the Common-weale, and planted three houses of his owne issue, out of the second wherof Sir Henry Hobart his great Grandchild now likewise Atturney Generall to King Iames is lineally descended. Now Yare approching nearer to the sea, runneth downe Southward, that so it may shed it selfe more gently into the salt sea waves, & thereby maketh a little languet of land like a tongue thrust out, which it selfe of one side watereth, and the sea on the other beateth upon. On this languet I saw standing in a most open plaine shore, Yarmouth, in the English-Saxon Gaɜ-muð, and Ieɜ-muð, that is Yares-mouth, a very convenient haven, and as faire a towne, beautifully built and passing well fensed both by the naturall strength of the place and also by the skilfull industry of mans art. For although it be environed almost round with water, on the West side with the river which hath a draw bridge over it, and from other partes with the Ocean, unlesse it bee E F

Halles-hall. Hobart.

Garienis Ostium. Yarmouth.

Northward

A Northward where there is firme land: yet is it in moſt ſightly maner encloſed with a good ſtrong wall, which together with the river make a ſquare forme of foure ſides, but ſomewhat long: upon which wall, beſide towres, there is caſt a mount toward the Eaſt, from whence the great peeces of Ordnance uſe to thunder and flaſh all about into the ſea under it, which is ſcarce 60. paces off. It hath indeed but one Church, yet the ſame is very large, having a paſſing high ſpire ſteeple to adorne it, built by Herbert Biſhop of Norwich hard by the North gate: under which are to be ſeene the foundations brought above ground of a goodly peece of worke to enlarge the ſame. That this was that old towne GARIANONVM, where, in times paſt, the Garianonum.
B Stableſian Horſemen kept their ſtanding watch and ward againſt the barbarous enimies, I dare not affirme; neither doe I thinke that Garianonum was where Caſter is now (in times paſt the faire ſeat of Sir Iohn Faſtolfe, a moſt martiall Knight, and now appertaining to the Paſtons) albeit it is much celebrated among the inhabitants for the antiquity thereof, and the fame goeth that the river Yare had another mouth or paſſage into the ſea under it.

But, as I am perſwaded that GARIANONVM ſtood at Burgh-Caſtle in Suffolke, which is on the other banke about two miles off, ſo I am eaſily induced to thinke, that both Yarmouth aroſe out of the ruines thereof, and alſo that the ſaid Caſter was one of the Roman forts, placed alſo upon the mouth of Yare, that now is ſtopped
C up. For, like as the *North Weſterne winde doth play the Tyrant upon Holland *Caurus.
over againſt it, and by drift of ſhelves and Sand-heapes hath choked the mideſt of the Rhene-Mouthes: even ſo the *North-Eaſt winde afflicteth and annoi- *Aquilo.
eth this Coaſt, and driveth the ſand on heapes, ſo as it may ſeeme to have dammed up this mouth alſo.

Neither will it be preiudiciall to the Truth, if I ſhould name our Yarmouth, GARIANONVM, being ſo neere adjoining as it is, unto the old Garianonum: conſidering that Garienis the river, whence it tooke the name, having now changed his chanell, entreth into the maine ſea a little beneath this towne, which it hath alſo given name unto: For, I muſt needs confeſſe, that this our Yarmouth is of later memorie. For,
D when that ancient Garianonum aforeſaid was decayed, and there was no garriſon to defend the ſhore, Cerdick a warlike Saxon landed heere (whereupon the inhabitants at this day call the place Cerdikeſand, and the writers of Hiſtories, Cerdik-ſhore) and after he had made ſore warre upon the Iceni, tooke ſea and ſailed from hence into the Weſt parts, where he erected the kingdome of the Weſt Saxons. And not long after, the Saxons in ſteed of Garianonum, founded a new towne in that moiſt and wateriſh ground, neere the Weſt ſide of the river and named it Yarmouth: But finding the ſituation thereof not to be healthfull, they betooke themſelues to the other ſide of the river called then of the ſame Cerdicke, Cerdikſand, and built this new towne, in which there flouriſhed in King Edward the Confeſſour his daies 70. Burgeſſes, as we find re-
E corded in the * Notitia of England. After this, about the yeere of our redemption 1340, the towneſmen ſtrengthned it with a wall, and in ſhort ſpace it grew ſo rich and puiſant, that oftentimes in ſea fights they ſet upon their neighbours of Leſtoff, yea and the * Portmen, for ſo they termed the inhabitants of the Cinque ports, not without much bloud ſhed on both ſides. For they were moſt ſpitefully bent againſt them, haply for being excluded out of the number of the Cinque ports, & deprived of theſe priviledges which old Garianonum or Yarmouth, and their anceſtours, enjoied under the * Comes of the Saxon ſhore in elder times. But this their ſtoutneſſe was repreſſed
F at length and taken downe by the Kings authority: or as ſome thinke, their luſty courage became abated by that moſt grievous and lamentable plague, which in one yeere, within this one little towne brought 7000. to their graves. The which is witneſſed by an ancient latin Chronographicall Table hanging up in the Church, wherein are ſet downe alſo their warres with the Portmen and Leſtoffians aforeſaid.

Since that time, their hearts haue not beene ſo hauty, nor their wealth ſo great, to make them bold: howbeit painfully they follow the trade of Merchandiſe, and

Cerdicus the Saxon. Cerdik ſand

William Worceſter. *Domſday booke.

*Portuenſes.

*Lieutenant.

Herrings.

Halecum. and taking of Herrings (which the learned thinke to be Chalcides and Leucomænides) a kinde of fiſh more plentifull heere than in any other coaſt of the world againe. For, it may ſeeme incredible how great a faire, and with what reſort of people, is holden here at the feaſt of Saint Michaell, and what ſtore of herrings and other fiſh is then Portuenſes. bought and ſold. At which time, they of the Cinque-Ports abouesaid by an old order and cuſtome, appoint their Bailiffs, Commiſsioners, and ſend them hither, who, that I may ſpeake out of their owne Patent or Commiſsion, togither with the magiſtrates of this towne, during the time of the free faire, hold a Court, for matters concerning the faire, doe execute the Kings juſtice, and keepe the Kings peace. As for the haven below the towne, it is verie commodious both for the inhabitants, and for Norwich-men alſo: but for feare that it ſhould be barred and ſtopped up, they wreſtle as it were, to their great coſt and charges, with the maine ſea: which to make them amends and to reſtore what it hath eaten and ſwallowed up elſe where in this ſhore, hath by heaping of earth and ſand together, caſt up here of late a prety Iſland. A B

The river Thyrn. At this mouth alſo, another river, which ſome call Thyrn ſheddeth it ſelfe together with Yare into the ſea: This river ſpringing up neere unto Holt a towne ſo called of an Holt or tuft of trees, and for the mercat well knowne, running about fiue miles diſtant from Yare, holdeth on a joint courſe a great way and keepeth pace with him, by Blickling, now the ſeat of the ancient familie of Clere who in former times dwelt Blickling. Aileſham. at Ormesby; and by Aileſham a mercat towne of good reſort, where the Earle of Athole in Scotland had lands not farre from Worſted, where as I reade, the Stuffe Worſted, in ſo great requeſt amongſt our anceſtours, was firſt made; and hence ſo named, as Dornicks, Cameric, Calecut &c. had in like manner their denomination from the places where they were firſt invented, and made. Then paſſeth Thirn neare the decaied great Abbay called Saint Benet in the Holme: which Knut the Dane built, and the monkes afterward ſo ſtrengthned with moſt ſtrong wals and bulwarks, that it ſeemed rather a Caſtle than a Cloiſter. In ſo much, that William the Conquerour could not winne it by aſſault, untill a monke betraied it into his hands upon this condition, that himſelfe might be made Abbot thereof. Which was done accordingly: but forthwith, this new Abbot for beeing a traitour, (as the inhabitants make report) was hanged up by the kings commandement, and ſo juſtly puniſhed for this treaſon. But the ground in this Iſland or Holme is ſo fenny and rotten, that if a man cut up the ſtrings and rootes of trees, and ſhrubs there growing, in floteth aloft on the water, and is ready to follow one whither he will haue it. And ſome there be who thinke, by the perwinkles and cocles that other while are digged up there; that the ſea had broken in thither. From thence runneth this river downe by Ludham, an houſe of the Biſhops of Norwich, and by Clipsby, which gave name to a family of ancient note in his tract, and ſtreightway vniteth his owne ſtreame with the Yare. From the mouth of Yare the ſhore goeth directly (as it were) North, to Winterton a point or cape very well knowne to ſailers, which tooke that name, I ſuppoſe, of the cold and winterly ſituation. For, it lieth full upon the Ocean, the father of winds and cold, who with exceeding violence ruſheth againſt the bankes and piles that are oppoſed againſt him. Howbeit, the country adiojning round about, in many mens opinion hath the fatteſt ſoile and ſofteſt mould of any country in all England, as which asketh leaſt labour, and yeeldeth moſt fruit. For, with a ſilly jade, (as Plinie writeth of Bizacium in Afri ke) and a poore old woman at one ſide of the yoake drawing the plough, it is eaſily broken up, and eared. From Winterton immediatly the ſhore turning Weſtward, the ſea retireth, without any bearing out in maner at all, along a flat and low coaſt, as farre as to Eccles, which is almoſt overflowed and drowned with the Ocean. From thence it carrieth an higher ſhore, by Bronholme ſometime a Priorie founded and enriched by G. Glanvill, and ſeated upon the ſharpe top of an hill, the Croſſe whereof our anceſtours had in holy reverence, I know not for what miracles. Next it is Paſton a ſmall townlet which yet hath giuen ſurname to a family growne great, both in eſtate and alliance, ſince they matched with an heireſſe of Beary and Maultbye. Not farre hence is Gimmingham, which with other Manors, Iohn Earle Ludham. Clipsby.

A moſt fat and battle ground.

Bronholme.

Paſton. Gimmingham.

C D E F

of

A of Warren and Surrie gaue in times past to Thomas Earle of Lancaster, and by Cromer where the neighbour inhabitants with great expense went about to make an havenet, but to small purpose, the Ocean so furiously plaied the tyrant and made resistance. Thence the shore runneth forth to Wauburne-hope; a Creeke fortified in our time, so called of Wauburne a little towne, unto which by the incercession of Oliver de Burdeaux, King Edward the Second granted the libertie of keeping a mercat: Next unto it is Clay, and over against it with a little river running betweene, Blackney, our country man Bale calleth it Nigeria, a famous house of Carmelite Friers in this late age afore going, built by Sir Robert de Roos, Sir Ro-

Wauburn.

B bert Bacon, and Iohn Bret: out of which came Iohn Baconthorp, so named of the place of his nativity, (which now is the habitation of the Heidons, an ancient race of knights degree) A man in that age of such variety and depth withall of excellent learning, that hee was had in exceeding great admiration among the Italians, and commonly called The Resolute Doctor. Whence it is, that Paulus Pansa thus writeth of him: If thy minde stand to enter into the secret powre of the Almighty and most mercifull God, no man hath written of his essence more exactly. If any man desireth to learne the causes of things, or the effects of Nature; if hee wish to know the sundrie motions of heaven, and the contrary qualities of the Elements, this man offereth himselfe as a store-house to furnish him: The Armour of Christian Religion, of better proofe

Blackney.
1321.
Iohn Baconthorp.
The Resolute Doctor.

C and defence than those of Vulcans making against the Iewes, this resolute Doctour alone hath delivered &c. When you are past Wauborn, the coast lieth more low and flat, as farre as to Saint Edmunds Point, cut through and distinguished with many a rillet, and hardly defended from the injurie of the sea by heapes of sand which they use to call Meales, opposed against it.

Meales or Miles.

More within the Country is Walsingham scarce foure miles from hence: whereupon it is that of the vicinity unto the sea Erasmus calleth it Parathalassia. Verie famous now is this village by reason of the best Saffron growing there: but of late time as much renowned through all England for a pilgrimage to our Ladie the Virgin Marie: whom hee who had not in that former age visited and presented with Walsingham.

D offerings, was reputed irreligious. But this shall Erasmus an eye-witnesse describe in his owne verie words. Not farre from the sea, (saith hee) about foure miles, there standeth a towne living almost of nothing else but upon the resort of pilgrimes. There is a Colledge of Chanons, yet such, as unto whom the Latinists haue given the addition of Regulares, a middle kinde betwixt Monkes and those Chanons whom they terme Secular: This Colledge hath scarce any other revenewes than from the liberality of the said Virgin. For certaine of the greater presents and oblations are laied up and preserved. But if there bee any money offered or aught else, of small value, that goeth unto the maintenance of the Covent and their Head or president, whom they call Prior. The Church is faire and neat; yet in it the Virgin dwelleth not: that honour, forsooth, shee hath done unto her

Regulares.

E Sonne: shee hath her Church by her selfe, but so, as that shee may bee on the right hand of her Sonne. Neither doth shee dwell heere for all this, for why, the building is not yet finished, and the place hath a through light and ayre on all sides, with open dores and wide open windowes; the Ocean-sea withall, the father and foster of Winds is hard by. In that Church, which I said was unfinished, there is a small chappell, but all of wood, whereinto on either side at a narrow and little dore are such admitted as come with their devotions and offrings. Smal light there is in it, and none other in manor but by tapers or wax-candles, yeelding a most deinty and pleasant smel. Nay if you looke into it, you would say it were the habitation of heavenly Saints in deed, so bright shining it is all over with precious stones, with gold and silver. But within the memory of F our fathers, when King Henry the Eighth had set his minde and eye both, upon the riches and possessions of Churches, all this vanished quite away. Touching Walsingham, I haue nothing else to say more, but that the familie of the Walsinghams, knights (as they will haue it that curiously search after Genealogies) fetched first their name and originall from hence: Out of which house flourished that Sir Francis Walsingham, Secretarie unto Queene Elizabeth, a man as of deepe insight, so also of as rare and painfull industry in the weightiest affaires of the Realme. But hardby it at Houghton, flourished sometime the noble family of the Neirfords, who by matching in mariage with* Parnel de Vallibus (who had about Holt, Cley, and elsewhere a goodly inheritance) was greatly enriched. But now let vs looke backe againe to the shore.

as

Houghton. The Neirfords. * Petronilla Vaulx.

Neere unto Walsingham Westward, upon the sea side, was that ancient towne BRANNODVNVM, where when the Saxons first molested Britajne with their invasions, The Dalmatian Horsemen laie in Garison under the Lieutenant of the Saxon Shore. But now it is a country village, reteining nought but the remaines of that name, and shewing a trench and rampire (the neighbour inhabitants call it the Castle) that conteineth within it a plot of ground much about eight acres, and is named Brancaster, where peeces of Romane mony are many times gotten out of the earth. Very commodiously was there a garison planted in this place: for at S. Edmunds Chappell neere adjoining, and Hunstanton, built by that holy King Saint Edmund, the coast draweth backe into the South, and so admitteth a larger creek for the sea to enter into, lying open for pirats, into which many rivers also doe void themselves. As for Hunstanton it is to be remembred in this regard if there were nothing else, for that it hath beene the Habitation of the family of Le Strange, Knights by degree, ever since that in the reigne of Edward the Second, Iohn Baron Le Strange of Knockin, gave the same unto Hamon his younger brother.

Brannodunum.

Brancaster.

Hunstanton.

Le-Strange.

The catching of hawkes, and the plentifull fishing, the Ieat and Amber also found oftentimes in this shore I wittingly omit, seeing that there is great store of these things elsewhere along this tract. Yet Sharnborn in this coast is not to be omitted both for that Fœlix the Burgundian who brought these East Englishmen to the Christian faith and state of perpetuall felicity, built in this place the second Church of Christians in this Country (for the first, he founded at Babingley where he landed) as also becaus it is verily thought and that by the faithfull testimony of old deeds and evidences, that an old Englishman Lord of this place before the comming of the Normans, by vertue of sentence given judicially in open Court by William Conquerour himselfe, recovered this Lordship against Warren, unto whom the Conquerour had given it. Which argument they enforce hard, who would prove that the said William entred upon the possession of England by covenant and agreement, and not by right of war and conquest.

Sharnborn. Fœlix a Bishop.

The foresaid Creeke or Bay, our country men call the Washes, Ptolomee termed it AESTVARIVM METARIS, haply for Malthraith, by which name the Britans called the like Frithes and Armes of the sea in other places: neither doth it signifie among them any other thing than an Arme of the sea vncertainly changing the chanell such as this is: upon this, where the River Ouse striveth forcibly against the Ocean, standeth Linne, peradventure so named of the waters broad spreading; For that doth Lhyn import in the* British tongue. A large towne this is encompassed with a deepe trench and wals for the most part thereof, divided by two smal rivers that have fifteene bridges or thereabout over them: and although it be of no great antiquity and not long since called Linnum Episcopi, that is, Bishops Linne, becaus it appertained to the Bishops of Norwich, untill King Henry the Eighth his daies, for it had beginning out of the ruines of an elder towne which stood over against it in Marshland, & is at this day called Old Linne and Linnum Regis, that is, Kings Linne; yet by reason of the safe Haven which yeeldeth most easie accesse, for the number also of Merchants there dwelling, and thether resorting, for the faire and the goodly houses, the wealth also of the townesmen, it is doubtlesse the principall towne of this shire except Norwich onely. It hath likewise most large franchises and immunities, which the inhabitants bought with their owne bloud of King Iohn, whiles they tooke part with him and defended his quarrell, who ordeined there a Major, and delivered unto them his owne sword to be caried before him, yea and gave unto them a silver cup all gilt, which they still doe keepe. These their liberties being afterwards lost, they redeemed not without bloud also, of King Henry the Third, when siding with him

The Washes. Metaru Æstuarium.

Lynne. * Welch.

and

A and ſerving under his banner, they fought an unfortunat battaile againſt the outlawed Lords in the Iſle of Ely, as the booke of Ely and Mathew Paris doe both iointly witneſſe.

Over againſt Linne, on the farther ſide of the river lieth Merſhland, a little moiſt merſh country, as the name implieth, divided and parted every where with ditches, trenches & furrows to draine & draw the waters away: a ſoile ſtanding upon a very rich and fertile mould, and breeding aboundance of cattaile: in ſo much as that in a place commonly called Tilneyſmeth there feed much about 30000 ſheep: but ſo ſubject to the beating, and overflowing of the roaring maine Sea, which very often breaketh,
B teareth, and troubleth it ſo grievouſly, that hardly it can be holden off with chargeable wals and workes. The places of greater note in this Merſhland, are theſe: Walpole, which the Lord of the place gave in times paſt unto the Church of Ely together with his ſonne, whom he made a Monke there: Wigenhall, the poſſeſſion of I. Howard in the reigne of Edward the firſt, whoſe poſterity ſpred, and became a moſt honorable and noble family; whereof I haue already ſpoken: Tilney, whence in old time the ſtocke of the Tilneys, Knights, tooke name; and Saint Maries the ſeat of the ancient race of the Carvils. Tilney. S. Maries.

Now have we paſſed along all the Sea-coaſt. As for the inner part of the country, there are alſo very many townes toward the Weſt ſide, but becauſe they be of later
C memory, I will briefely runne them over. Neere to Linne upon an high hill ſtandeth Riſing-caſtle, almoſt matchable to the Caſtle of Norwich; the ſeat in times paſt of the Albineys; afterwards of Robert de Monthault, by one of the ſiſters and coheires of Hugh Albiney Earle of Arundell; and at laſt the manſion place of the Mowbrays; who, as I have learned, came out of the ſame houſe that the Albineys did. But now, after long languiſhing, as it were, by reaſon of old age, the ſaid Caſtle hath given up the ghoſt. Below it is Caſtle-acre, where was ſometimes the habitation of the Earles of Warren, in a Caſtle now halfe downe, on a little rivers ſide: which carrying no name, ariſeth not farre from Godwicke a lucky good name, where there ſtands a ſmall houſe, but greatly graced by the Lord thereof, Sir Edward Coke Knight, a man of rare
D endowments of nature, and as in the Common lawes much practiſed, ſo of deepe inſight therin, which all England both took knowledge of whiles he diſcharged the function of Attourney Generall many yeeres moſt learnedly, and now acknowledgeth whiles being Lord chiefe Iuſtice of the Common Plees, hee adminiſtreth juſtice as vprightly and iudiciouſly. Neither is he leſſe to be remembred, for that he loueth learning, and hath well deſerved of the preſent and ſucceeding ages by his learned labours. Reports.

This riveret or brooke with a ſmall ſtreame and ſhallow water runneth Weſtward to Linne, by Neirford, that gave name to the familie of the Neirfords famous in times paſt, and by Neirborrough: where neere unto the houſe of the Spilmans, Knights, upon
E a very high hill is to be ſeene a warlike fort of paſſing great ſtrength and of ancient worke, ſo ſituated, as it hath a very faire proſpect into the country about it. After, upon the ſaid brooke is ſeated Penteney, a prety Abbay the ordinary buriall place in ancient time of the Noble men and gentlemen in this tract. Neirford.

Neere unto it lieth Wormegay, commonly Wrongey, which Reginald de Warren brother of William de Warren the ſecond Earle of Surrie had with his wife, of whom as I have read, the ſaid Earle had the donation or Maritagium (as they uſe to ſpeake in the law phraſe) and by his ſonnes daughter ſtreightwaies it was tranferred to the Bardolphs, who being Barons of great nobility, flouriſhed a long time in honorable ſtate, and bare for their Armes Three cinque-foiles Or in a ſhield Azur, The greateſt part of F whoſe inheritance together with the title came to Sir William Phellps, and by his daughter paſſed away to the Vicount Beaumont. More Eaſtward are ſeated, Swaffham a mercat towne of good note, ſometime the poſſeſſion of the Earle of Richmond: Aſhele Manour, by tenure whereof the Haſtings and Greies Lords of Ruthin had the charge of table clothes and linnen uſed at the ſolemne Coronation of the Kings of England: North Elmham, the Biſhops See for a good time, when as this province Wormegay. Bardolphs Barons.

was

was divided into two Dioceſes: Dereham, wherein Withburga King Annas daughter was buried: whom becauſe ſhe was piouſly affected, farre from all riotous exceſſe, and wanton lightneſſe, our anceſtours accounted for a Saint. Next unto which is Greſhenhall, and adjoining thereto Elſing, the poſſeſſions in ancient time of the Folliots, men of great worth and dignity, which in right of dowrie came by a daughter of Richard Folliot to Sir Hugh de Haſtings, deſcended out of the family of Abergevenny: and at length by the daughters and heires of Haſtings the laſt, Greſhenhall aforeſaid fell unto Sir Hamon le Strange of Hunſtanton, and Elſing unto William Browne the brother of Sir Antonie Browne the firſt Vicount Mount-acute. In this quarter alſo is Ick-borrough, which Talbot ſuppoſeth to have beene that ICIANI, whereof Antonine ſpeaketh. Neither have I cauſe to write any more of theſe places. And now I thinke it is good time to ſet downe the Earles and Dukes of Northfolke, that I may proceede to Cambridgeſhire.

Greſhenhall. Elſing. Folliots. A

Ickborrough. Iciani. B

William the Conquerour made one Raulph Governour of Eaſt-England, that is to ſay, of Norfolke, Suffolke, and Cambridgeſhire, who forthwith gaping as I ſaid, after an alteration and change in the ſtate, was diſpoſſeſſed of that place. After certaine yeeres, in the reigne of Stephen, Hugh Bigod was Earle of Norfolke: For, when peace was concluded betweene Stephen and Henrie Duke of Aniou, who became afterwards King Henrie the ſecond, by expreſſe words it was provided, that William King Stephens ſonne ſhould have the whole Earldome of Northfolke, excepting among other things, The third peny of that County, whereof Hugh Bigod was Earle. Whom notwithſtanding King Henrie the Second created Earle againe, of the third peny of Norfolke and Norwich. Who dying about the 27. yeere of Henrie the Second, Roger his ſonne ſucceeded, who, for what cauſe I know not, obtained at the hands of King Richard the Firſt a new Charter of his creation: Him ſucceeded his ſonne Hugh, who tooke to his wife Mawde the eldeſt daughter and one of the heires of William Mareſcall Earle of Pembroch. By whom he had iſſue one ſonne named Roger, Earle of Norfolke and Mareſcall of England, who at Tournament having his bones put out of joint, died without iſſue: and another, called Hugh Bigod Lord chiefe Iuſtice of England ſlaine in the battaile of Lewis: whoſe ſonne Roger ſucceeded his Vncle in the Earldome of Norfolke and dignity of Mareſcall: but having incurred through his inſolent contumacy the high diſpleaſure of King Edward the Firſt, was compelled to paſſe away his honors and well neere his whole inheritance into the Kings hands to the uſe of Thomas of Brotherton the Kings ſonne, whom he had begotten of his ſecond wife Margaret ſiſter to Philip the Faire, King of France. For thus reporteth the Hiſtorie, out of the Librarie of Saint Auſtens in Canterbury. In the yeere 1301. Roger Bigod Earle of Norfolke ordained King Edward to be his heire: and he delivered into his hands the rod of the Marſhals office with this condition, that if his wife brought him any children he ſhould without all contradiction receive again all from the Ki. & hold it peaceably as before: and the King gave unto him 1000 pounds in money, and a thouſand pound land during his life, together with the Marſhalſhip, and the Earldome. But when he was departed this life without iſſue King Edward the Second, honored the ſaid Thomas of Brotherton his brother, according to the conveiance aforeſaid, with the Titles of Marſhall and Earle of Norfolke. Whoſe daughter Margaret called Marſhalleſſe and Counteſſe of Norfolke wife to Iohn Lord Segrave, King Richard the Second created in her abſence Dutcheſſe of Norfolke for terme of life: and the ſame day created Thomas Mowbray the daughters ſonne of the ſaid Margaret, then Earle of Notingham, the firſt Duke of Norfolke, To him and his heires males; unto whom he had likewiſe granted before the State and ſtile of Earle Marſhall of England.

Earles and Dukes of Norfolke. C

Compoſition betwixt King Stephen and Henrie Duke Anjou. D

Parliament 21. Rich. 2. E

This is he, that before the King was challenged and accuſed by Henrie of Lancaſter Duke of Hereford, for vttering inconſideratly certaine reprochfull, and derogatorie words againſt the King. And when they were to fight a combat, at the very barre and entry of the Liſts, by the voice of an Herauld it was proclaimed in the Kings name, That both of them ſhould be baniſhed, Lancaſter for ten yeeres, and Mowbray for ever: who afterwards ended his life at Venice, leaving two ſonnes behind him in England. F

A England. Of which, Thomas Earle Marſhall and of Nottingham, for no other title uſed he, was beheaded for ſeditious plotting againſt Henrie of Lancaſter, who now had poſſeſſed himſelfe of the Crowne by the name of King Henrie the Fourth. But his brother and heire Iohn, who through the favour of King Henrie the Fift was raiſed up, and for certaine yeeres after called onely Earle Marſhall and of Nottingham, at laſt in the very beginning of Henrie the Sixth his reigne; By authority of Parliament and by vertue of the patent granted by King Richard the Second, was declared, Duke of Norfolke, as being the ſonne of Thomas Duke of Norfolke his father, and heire to Thomas his brother. Rot. Parl. 3. Hen. 6.

B After him ſucceeded Iohn his ſonne, who died in the firſt yeere of Edward the fourth: and after him likewiſe Iohn his ſonne, who whiles his father lived was created by King Henrie the Sixth Earle of Surrie and of Warren. Whoſe onely daughter Anne, Richard Duke of Yorke, the young ſonne of King Edward the Fourth tooke to wife, and together with her received of his father the titles of Duke of Norfolke, Earle Marſhall, Earle of Warren and Nottingham. But after that he and his wife both were made away in their tender yeares, Richard the Third, King of England conferred this title of the Duke of Norfolke, and the dignity of Earle Marſhall upon Iohn Lord Howard, who was found next coſen in bloud & one of the heires to the ſaid Anne Dutcheſſe of Yorke and Norfolke; as whoſe mother was one of the daughters of that firſt Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolke, and who in the time of King Edward the Fourth was ſummoned a Baron to the Parliament.

C This Iohn loſt his life at Boſworth field, fighting valiantly in the quarell of King Richard, againſt King Henrie the Seuenth. His ſonne Thomas, who being by King Richard the Third created Earle of Surrie, & by King Henrie the Seventh made Lord Treaſurer, was by Ki. Henrie the Eighth reſtored to the title of Duke of Norfolke, & his ſonne the ſame day created Earle of Surrie: after that by his conduct, Iames the Fourth, King of the Scots was ſlaine, and the Scotiſh power vanquiſhed at Branxton. In memoriall of which victorie the ſaid King granted to him and his heires males for ever; that they ſhould beare in the midſt of the Bend in the Howards Armes, the whole halfe of the vpper part of a Lyon Geules, pierced through the mouth with an arrow, in the due colours of the Armes of D the King of Scots. I tranſlate it Verbatim out of the Patent. After him ſucceeded his ſonne Thomas as well in his honours, as in the office of Lord Treaſurer of England, and lived to the time of Queene Marie, toſſed too and fro betweene the reciprocall ebbes and flowes of fortune, whoſe grand ſonne Thomas (by his ſonne Henrie, the firſt of the Engliſh nobility that did illuſtrate his high birth with the beauty of learning) being attainted for purpoſing a marriage with Marie the Queene of Scots, loſt his life in the yeere of our Lord 1572. and was the laſt Duke of Norfolke. Since which time his ofspring lay for a good while halfe dead: but now watered and revived with the vitall dew of King Iames, reflouriſheth very freſhly. Floddon field. See in the Adages of Hadrianus Iunius, Achilleum Votum.

E

In this Province there be Pariſh Churches about 660.

F

CAMBRIDGE.

LINCOLN: PARS

SEP TENS

Spalding

St Marics Tide

St Giles Tide

Trokenhole

Newton

Pfondreue

Leucrington

Coubet

St Maries

Crowlande

Downsdale

Giherne

Merketdeping

Welland flu.

Waldram hall

Coldam

Hobbes howse

Watersey Leame

Thorney

Smaleſele

Thorney myll

Eye

NORTH

The new Leant

Eldernall

Merſh

The chare

HAM

Oxney

Peterburgh

Whittleſey

Woodſton

Staungrounde

Whittleſey dike

Fleton

Longuill

Faſſet

THE ILE

Dunyngton

Yaxley

Whittleſey mere

Trandle mere

Ramſey mere

Holme

Vg mere

The ſtrith dyke

HVN

Ramſey

Chateres

Downe

Couency

PARS

TING

Bury

Wicham

Mepole

Wentworth

Wiſtow

Warboyes

Sutton

Wilberton

Fenton

Hadnam

Pidley

Somerſham

Old houſe

Erith cauſey

Audre

Ripton regis

Woodhurſt

Blunt ſham

Saply pk.

Wilton

Iues

Erith

Ouſe flu.

Cotenham

PARS

Wabridge forest

Huntingdon

Holywell

Waterbeach

Houghton

Hemmingford

Owre

Willingham

Rampton

Landbeach

Brampton

Godmanchester

Fenny drayton

Swaſye

Mylton

Bugden

Beggers buſhe

Fenny ſtantan

Diddington

Offordes

Hilton

Lowlworth

Hyſtons

Impington

Cunnyngton

Hoggmton

South hoo

Grantley

Papworth annes

Drydraton

Griton

Cheſterton

Paxton pua:

Paxton

Papworth ſeured

Knapwell

Madingley

Coton

Halewſton

mag:

Yelding

Elſworth

Childerſley

CAMBRIDGE

BED

Toſelande

Boxworth

Berton

Cherry

St Neot

Winteringham

Elſley

Hardwick

FORDI

Eaton

Eyneſbury

Croxton

Caxton

Caweote

Toſte

Granteeter

Comberton

Trumpit

Abotſley

Euerſden pua:

Haſtingfelde

Berkforde

Wareſley

Bucne

Shelford ma

Rokkeſden

Granſden mag:

Stowe

Kingſton

Euerſden mag:

Hawkeſton

Granſden pua:

Harleton

Harleſton

Æ

Tetworth

Wimple

Barrington

Witleſforde

Temſforde

Gaulingay

Hatley

Orwell

Enerdon

Hatley mag:

Arington

Newton

Bedforde

Cokinghatley

Malton

Taxton

Potton

Crawden

Sheperheath

Wormleghton

Clopton

Fulmere

Dyrw

E worth

Wendye

Melared

Triplow

Granteſh:

Tallow

Shengye

Whodden

Bigelſwade

Dunton

Gildinmorden

Baſingborne

Melborne

Stratton

Abbington

PARS

Steplemorden

Royſton

Langforde

Shefforde

Edworth

Henxworth

Lytlington

Berlee

Aſhwell

Aſtwick

Caweot

HART PAR

MERI Rede DIES

OCIDEN

CAMBRIDGE

Comitatus quem olim ICENI Insederunt

TRIO

Walton
Walsakbn
Wisbiche
The old podik
Emneth
Owtwell
Spwell
Downcham
Salters lode
The new podik
Denber
Helgey
Sowthrey Welney
Maden Lode
Prestbowses ELY Litleport Shepye Copthall
Thetsham Turbulsey Newbernes Ougney Thorney
Norney Stantney
Scham Scham magna Ferdeham
Wiken Snalewell Chipenham Kennet Lanworth
Vpware Exning Reche Burwells ICIANI Newmarket Kenforde
Moulton
Swafham prior Swafham bulbeck
Newmarket heath
Ditton
Ashley Cheuely Horuyngsey
Stow qui Botsham Saxum Catlidge
Wilborham pua:
Wilborham mag:
Stachworth Burrough Dullingham Cowlidge Tenuersham Westley Willingham
Brinklow Bradley
IBORITVM Fulburne
Weston Coucell
Carleton
Gogmogog hills
Wratting Balsham Thirlowe Staplefordc Wickham Witherfelde Badburham Abbington
Horsheath
Hauerill
Sawsten Hildersham Lynton
Shedy campes Pamptworth
Castle Campes Hinkeston Chesterforde Hadstok LESSTRIÆ Strethall Elmeden Cressball Shall mag:
Chishall pua
PARS
NOR FOL:
PARS SVFFOL:
PARS ORIENS Freckenham Badlingham
Badlingham
Mildnall Islam Wormleighton

Scala Miliarium
2 4 6 8

Christophorus Saxton descrip:
Wilhelmus kip Sculpsit

A

CAMBRIDGE-SHIRE.

B

AMBRIGE-SHIRE, called in the Englisſh-Saxon Grantbrig-ſcyne lyeth more inward, and ſtretched out in length Northward. On the Eaſt it butteth upon Norfolke and Suffolk, on the South upon the Eaſt-Saxons or Eſſex, and Hertfordſhire, on the Weſt upon Bedford & Huntingdon ſhires, and Northward upon Lincoln-ſhire: being divided into two partes by the river Ouſe which croſſeth it overthwart from Weſt to Eaſt.

The lower and South-part is better manured, and therefore more plentifull, beeing ſome-what a plaine, yet not altogether levell, for the moſt part or all of it rather (ſaue onely where it bringeth forth ſaffron) is layd out into corne fields, and yeeldeth plentifully the beſt barly; of which ſteeped in water and lying wet therein untill it ſpurt againe, then, after the ſaid ſprout is full come, dried and parched over a kill, they make* ſtore of mault: By venting and ſending out whereof into the neighbour-countries, the inhabitants raiſe verie great gaine. The farther and Northren part, becauſe it is fenniſh ground, C by reaſon of the many flouds that the rivers cauſe, and ſo diſperſed into Iſlands, is called The Iſle of Ely, a tract paſſing greene, freſh and gay by reaſon of moſt plenteous paſtures: howbeit after a ſort hollow, by occaſion of the water that in ſome places ſecretly entreth in; yea and other while when it overfloweth, ſurroundeth moſt part of it.

*Byne. Mault.

Along the Weſt ſide of the lower part, runneth one of the two high waies made by the Romans, (Ely booke calleth it Ermingſtreet) which paſſeth forth right to Huntingdon through Roiſton, that ſtandeth in the verie edge and entry of the Shire, a towne well knowne, yet but of late built, whereof I haue already ſpoken: alſo by Caxton in times paſt the ſeat of the Baronie of Stephen de Eſchallers, and from whoſe poſterity in the reigne of king Henry the Third it deſcended to the Frevills, and from D them by the Burgoins to the Iermins. Neither is Camlinghay far diſtant from hence, where dwelt the Avenells, whoſe inheritance came by marriage to the ancient familie of Saint George, (out of which there flouriſhed many knights ſince the time of king Henry the Firſt) at Hatley, which of them is called Hatley Saint George. Aboue Caxton before mentioned is Elteſley, where was in elder ages a religious houſe of holie Virgines, among whom was celebrated the incertaine memory of Saint Pandionia a daughter of a Scotiſh king, as the tradition is. But long ſince they were tranſlated to Hinchinbroke. And againe aboue Elteſley was the Priorie of Swaſey founded for Black monkes by Alan la Zouch brother to the Vicount of Rohan in the Leſſer Britaine, and was the common ſepulture a long time for the familie of Zouch.

Roiſton. See in Hertfordſhire. Caxton. Hatley Saint George.

*

E More Weſtward a little river runneth through the middle of this part, which iſſuing downe out of Aſhwel, haſteneth from South to North with many turnings, to joine it ſelfe with the Ouſe, running by Shengay (where be the goodlieſt medowes of this Shire) a Commanderie in old time of the knights Templars; which Shengay, Sibyl the daughter of Roger Mont-gomerie Earle of Shrewsbury, and wife of I. de Raines gaue unto them in the yeare 1130. nor far from Burne Caſtle, in ancient times the Baronie of Picot Sheriff of this Shire, and of the Peverels, from whom by one of the daughters, this and other poſſeſſions came unto Sir Gilbert Pech: the laſt of whoſe houſe, after he had otherwiſe advanced his children by his ſecond wife, ordeined King Edward the F Firſt, to bee his heire. For, in thoſe daies the Noble men of England brought into uſe againe the cuſtome of the Romans under their Emperours, which was to nominate them their heires, if they were in any diſfauour with their Soveraignes.

Shengay. A Commandery. Burne. Barones de Burne. Barnwell Hiſtorie. The King heire to private perſons.

But in the Barons warre in King Henrie the Third his daies, this Caſtle was burnt downe, beeing ſet on fire by Ribald L' Iſle: At which time Walter de Cottenham a reſpectiue perſon, was hanged for rebellion.

By what name writers termed this river, it is a queſtion: ſome call it Granta, others Camus. And unto theſe I rather incline: both for that the courſe thereof is ſomewhat crooked; for, ſo much doth Cam in the Britiſh tongue ſignifie, whence a certaine crooked river in Cornwall is named Camel; and alſo becauſe that ancient towne CAMBORITVM, which Antonine the Emperour mentioneth in his third iourney of Britain, ſtood upon this river as I am well neere induced to beleeue, by the diſtance, by the name, and alſo by the peeces of Romane money found heere nigh unto the bridge in great ſtore. For, CAMBORITVM, ſignifieth A fourd at Camus, or a Fourd with crooked windings. For Rith in our Britiſh or Welſh tongue betokeneth A Fourd, which I note to this end, that the Frenchmen may more eaſilie perceive and ſee what is the meaning of Auguſtoritum, Darioritum, Rithomagus, and other ſuch like in France. Howbeit the Saxons choſe rather, to call our Camboritum, Grantceſter. Gpant-ceaſtep and Gpont-ceaſtep, which name it keepeth ſtill: but whence it was derived, I can not yet ſee. If I ſhould fetch it from Gron a Saxon word that ſignifieth a fenny place, I might perhaps goe wide: And yet Aſſerius termed, once or twice, certaine fenniſh and mariſh grounds in Somerſetſhire, by a mungrell name halfe Saxon and halfe Latine, Gronnas paludoſiſſimas: and verie well knowne it is, that a City in Weſt Friſland, which is ſituate in ſuch a ground is named Groningen. But let other hunt after the derivation of this name. About the yeare of Chriſt 700. this was a little deſolate City, as ſaith Bede, whiles hee reporteth, that neere unto the walles, there was found a little trough or coffin, very cunningly and finely wrought of marble, and covered moſt fitly with a lidde of the like ſtone. But now a ſmall village it is: one part whereof, Henrie Lacie Earle of Lincolne gaue unto his baſe ſonne Henrie, with this condition, that his ſonnes and their poſterity (which a good while ſince bee cleane worne out) ſhould haue no other Chriſtian name but Henry: the other part, Henrie the Sixth king of England comming out of the houſe of Lancaſter, into whoſe hands the patrimonie of Earle Lacie fell, granted unto his kings Colledge in Cambridge: which was either a part or elſe a plant of that ancient Camboritum, ſo nere it commeth unto it both in ſituation and name. Neither can I eaſily beleeue, that Grant was turned into Cam; for, this might ſeeme a deflexion ſome what too hardly ſtreined, wherein all the letters but one are quite ſwallowed up. I would rather thinke, that the common people reteined the terme of the ancient name of Camboritum, or of the river Cam, although writers uſed more often the Saxon name Grantbridge. This City which being the other Univerſity of England, the other eye, the other ſtrong-ſtaie, as it were, thereof, and a moſt famous mart & ſtore-houſe of good literature and Godlineſſe, ſtandeth upon the river Cam, which after it hath in ſporting wiſe beſprinkled the Weſt ſide thereof with many Iſlets, turning into the Eaſt, divideth it into two parts, and hath a bridge over it, whence aroſe this later name Cambridge. Beyond the bridge is ſeene a large & ancient Caſtle, which ſeemeth now to haue lived out his full time, & Maudlen College. On this ſide the bridge, where ſtandeth the greateſt part by far ſo the City, you haue a pleaſant ſight everywhere to the eye, what of faire ſtreets orderly raunged, what of a number of churches, and of 16. Colledges, ſacred manſions of the Muſes, wherein a number of great learned men are maintained, and wherein the knowledge of the beſt arts, and the skil in tongues ſo flouriſh, that they may be rightly counted the fountaines of literature, religion, & all knowledge whatſoever, who right ſweetly bedew and ſprinkle, with moſt holeſome waters the gardens of the Church and Common-wealth through England. Neither is there wanting any thing here, that a man may require in a moſt flouriſhing Vniverſitie, were it not that the ayre is ſomewhat unhealthfull ariſing as it doth out of a fenny ground hard by. And yet peradventure, they that firſt founded an Univerſity in that place, allowed of Platoes iudgement. For, he being of a verie excellent & ſtrong conſtitution of bodie choſe out the Academia, an unholſome place of Attica, for to ſtudie in, that ſo the ſuperfluous rankeneſſe of bodie which might overlaie the minde, might bee kept under by the diſtemperature of the place. Neverthelеſſe, for all this, our forefathers, men of ſingular wiſdome dedicated this place, Camboritum.

Rith what it ſignifieth in Britiſh and French.

Grantceſter.

Cambridge.

A B C D E F

and

A and not without divine direction unto learned Studies, and beautified it with notable workes and buildings.

And least we should seeme in the worst kind vnthankefull to those singular patrons of learning, or rather, that I may use the words of Eumenius, toward the parents of our children: let us summarily reherse both themselves, and the Colledges also which they founded and consecrated to good literature, to their honorable memory, and that out of the Cambridge Story. The report goeth, that Cantaber a Spaniard, 375. yeeres before the nativity of Christ, first began and founded this University; Also that Sebert King of the East-Angles restored it againe in the yeere after Christs birth 630. Afterwards being other whiles overthrown & destroied with the Danish storms, B it lay a long time forlorne and of no account, untill all began to revive under the Normans government. Colledges. John Caius.

And not long after, Innes, Hostels and Halles were built for scholers, howbeit endowed with no possessions. But Hugh Balsham Bishop of Ely in the yeere 1284. built the first Colledge called Peter-house, and endowed it with lands: whose example these ensuing did imitate and follow: Richard Badew with the good helpe and furtherance of Lady Elizabeth Clare Countesse of Ulster, in the yeere 1340. founded Clare Hall: Lady Mary S. Paule Countesse of Pembroch in the yeere 1347. Pembroch Hall: The Guild or Society of Corpus Christi Brethren, Corpus Christi Colledge, which is called also S. Bennet Colledge: William Bateman Bishop of Norwich, about the yeere C 1353. Trinity Hall: Edmund Gonevil in the yeere 1348. and Iohn Caius Doctor of Physicke in our time, Gonevil and Caius Colledge: Henry the Sixth King of England erected Kings Colledge in the yeere 1441. whereunto he joyned a Chapell, which may rightly be counted one of the faireſt buildings in the whole world. His wife Margaret of Anjou, in the yeere 1443. built Queenes Colledge: Robert Woodlark professor of Divinity in the yeere 1459. S. Katharines Hall: Iohn Alcocke Bishop of Ely in the yeere 1497. was the founder of Iesus Colledge: Lady Margaret Countesse of Richmond mother to King Henry the Seventh, about the yeere 1506. erected Christs Colledge, D and S. Johns, enlarged now in goodly maner with new buildings: Sir Thomas Audley Lord Chancellour of England, in the yeere 1542. built Maudlen Colledge; which Sir Christopher Wray Lord chiefe Iustice of England hath lately bewtified with new buildings, and endowed with greater possessions: And that most puissant King, Henry the Eight, in the yeere of our salvation 1546. made Trinity Colledge of three others, to wit, of S. Michaels House or Colledge, which Hervcie Stanton in the reigne of Edward the Second built, of Kings Hall founded by King Edward the Third, and of Fishwicks Hostell. Which Colledge, that the Students might inhabit more pleasantly, is now repaired, nay rather new built, with that magnificence, by the carefull direction of Thomas Nevill D. of Divinity, Master of the said Colledge, & Deane of Canterbury, E that it is become a Colledge for stately greatnesse, for uniforme building and beauty of the roomes, scarce inferiour to any other in Christendome: and he himselfe may be accounted in the judgement even of the greatest Philosopher Truly *ΜΕΓΑΛΟΠΡΕΠΗΣ, for bestowing so great cost in publike and not in his owne private uses. Also, wherein I congratulate our age, and our selues in the behalfe of good learning, that honourable and prudent man Sir Walter Mildmay Knight, one of the Privy Counsell to Queene Elizabeth, who founded a new Colledge in the honour of Emanuel: and Lady Francis Sidneie Countesse of Sussex, in her last will gave a legacy of 5000. pounds to the building of a Colledge, that should be called, Sidney-Sussex, which is now fully finished. * Decently magnificent.

I let passe heere little Monasteries and Religious houses because they were of small note, unlesse it were Barnwell Abbey, which Sir Paine Peverell a worthy and valiant F warriour, Standard-bearer to Robert Duke of Normandy in the holy warre against Infidels, translated, in the reigne of Henry the First, from S. Giles Church, where Picot the Shiriffe had ordained secular Priests, unto this place, and brought into it thirty Monkes, for that himselfe at that time was thirty yeeres of age. The reason of that name Barnwell, you may reade, if it please you, out of the private Historie Barnwell. Historia Barnwellensis.

Paganus. of that place, in these words: * Sir Payne Peverell obteined of King Henry the first, a certaine plot of ground without the Burgh of Cambridge? Out of the very middest of that place there sprung up certaine fountaines very pure and lively, which in English they called Barnwell in those daies, as one would say the wels of Barnes, that is, children; For that boies and youthes meeting once a yeere there on the even of Saint Iohn Baptists Nativity, after the English maner exercised themselves in wrestling and other sports & pastimes befitting their age, yea and merrily applauded one another with songs and minstralsie. Whence it came, that for the number of boies and girles running thether and there playing, grew to be a custome, that on the suddaine a multitude of buyers and sellers repaired thether. A

Neither was Cambridge, (albeit it was consecrated to the Muses) altogether free B from the furies of Mars. For, when the Danes robbed and spoiled up and downe, many times they wintered heere: and in the yeere of redemption 1010. when Sueno the Dane, by most cruell and terrible tyranny, bare downe all before him, they spared not the honour of the place, nor the Muses, (which we read that Sylla yet did at Athens) but pitifully burnt and defaced it all. Nevertheless, at the first comming in of the Normans, it was sufficiently peopled. For, thus wee read in the Domsday booke of King William the Conquerour. The Burrough of Grentbridge is divided into ten wards, and hath 387. mansion houses. But eighteene houses were destroyed for building of the Castle, what time, as the said King William the first determined to overawe the English every where (whom lately he had conquered) with Castles, as it were C with bridles of servitude. Afterwards in the Barons warre, it sustained great losse by the out-lawed Barons out of the Isle of Ely: therefore Henry the Third to represse their outrages caused a deepe ditch to be cast on the East side, which is still called Kings ditch.

Heere happily there is a secret expectation of some, that I should give mine opinion as touching the antiquity of this Vniversity. But I will be no dealer in this case: For, I meane not to make comparison betweene these two most flourishing Universities of ovrs, to whom I know none equall. Howbeit, I feare me, they have builded Castles in the aire and thrust upon us devises of their owne braines; who extolling the antiquity thereof far aboue any probability of truth, have written that this Cantaber of D Spaine streight after Rome was built, and many yeeres before the Nativity of Christ erected this university. True and certaine it is, that whensoever it was first ordeined, it was a seat of learning about the time of King Henry the First. For, thus we read in an old Additament of Peter Blessensis unto Ingulph. Abbot Ioffred sent over to his Manour of Cotenham neere Cambridge, Gislebert his fellow Monke, and professour of Divinity, with three other Monkes: who following him into England, being throughly furnished with Philosophicall Theoremes, and other primitiue sciences, repaired daily to Cambridge: and having hired a certaine publike barne, made open profession of their sciences, and in short space of time drew together a great number of scholers. But in the second yeere E after their comming, the number of their scholers grew so great, as well from out of the whole country as the towne; that the biggest house and barne that was, or any Church whatsoever sufficed not to receive them all. Whereupon sorting themselves apart in severall places, and taking the Vniversity of Orleance for their patern, earely in the morning, Monke Odo a singular Grammarian and Satyricall Poet read Grammer unto boies and those of the younger sort assigned unto him, according to the doctrine of Priscian and of Remigius upon him. At one of the clocke, Terricus a most witty and subtile Sophister taught the elder sort of youngmen, Aristotles Logicke, after the Introductions of Porphyrie and the Comments of Averroes. At three of the clocke Monke William read a Lecture in Tullies Rhetoricke & Quintilians Flores: But the great Master Gislebert, upon every sonday, and Holy-daies, preached Gods word unto the people. F And thus out of this little fountaine, which grew to be a great river, we see how the City of God now is become enriched, and all England made fruteful, by meanes of very many masters and Teachers proceeding out of Cambridge, in maner of the holy Paradise &c.

Ioffred made Abbot of Crowland. Anno 1109.

Studium Aurelianense.

But

A But at what time it became an Vniversity by authoritie. Robert de Remington shall tell you. Vnder the reigne (saith he) of Edward the first, Grantbridge of a Schoole was made an Vniversity, (such as Oxenford is) by the Court of Rome. But what meane I thus vnadvisedly to step into these lists? Wherein long since two most learned old men have encountred one with another: Unto whom verily, as to right learned men I am willing to yeeld up my weapons, and vaile bonnet with all reverence. The Meridian line cutting the Zenith just over Cambridge, is distant from the furthest West point twenty three degrees, and twenty five scruples. And the Arch of the same Meridian lying betweene the Aequator and Verticall point, is fiftie two degrees and
B 11. scruples.

Cam from Cambridge continuing his course by Waterbeach an ancient seat of Nuns, which Lady Mary S. Paul translated from thence to Denny somewhat higher but nothing healthfuller, when in a low ground he hath spread a Mere, associateth himselfe with the river Ouse. *

But to returne, hard under Cambridge Eastward neere unto Sture a little brooke is kept every yeere in the moneth of September, the greatest Faire of all England, whether you respect the multitude of buyers and sellers resorting thether, or the store of commodities there to be vented. Hard by, whereas the way was most comberous and troublesome to passengers to and fro, that right good and praise-worthy man
C G. Herui Doctor of the Civill Law and M. of Trinity Hall in Cambridge, made not long since with great charges, but of a godly and laudable intent, a very faire raised causey, for three miles or thereabout in length, toward Neumercat. Stourbridge Faire.

Neare unto Cambridge on the South-East side, there appeare aloft certaine high hilles, the Students call them Gogmagog-Hilles: Henry of Huntingdon tearmed them Amœnissima montana de Balsham, that is, The most pleasant mountaines of Balsham, by reason of a little Village standing beneath them, wherein, as he writeth, the Danes left no kinde of most savage cruelty unattempted. On the top of these hilles, I saw a fort intrenched, and the same very large, strengthned with a threefold rampire: an hold surely in those daies inexpugnable, as some skilfull men in feats of war
D be of opinion, were it not that water is so farre off. Gervase of Tilbury seemeth to call it Vandelbiria. Beneath Cambridge (saith he) there was a place named Vandelbiria, for that the Vandals wasting the parts of Britaine, with cruell slaughter of Christians, there encamped themselues: where, upon the very top of the hill they pitched their tents; there is a plaine enclosed round with a trench and rampire, which hath entrance into it but in one place, as it were at a gate. Gogmagog Hils. A militarie fort. Wandlesbury.

Touching the Martiall spectre, or spritethat walked heere, which he addeth to the rest, because it is but a meere toyish and fantasticall devise of the doting vulgar sort, I willing over-passe it. For it is not my purpose, to tell pleasant tales, and tickle eares. In the Vale under these hilles is Salston to be seene, which from the Burges of Burgh-
E Green, by Walter De-la-Pole and Ingalthorp, came unto Sir John Nevil Marquesse Mont-acute, and by his daughter and one of his heires, to the Hudlestones, who have lived heere in worship and reputation. Salston.

More Eastward, first we meet with Hildersham, belonging somtimes to the Bustlers and now by marriage to the Parises: Further hard by the woods, is Horsheath situate, the possession whereof is knowen by a long descent to have pertained unto the ancient families of the Argentons and Alingtons, of whom elsewhere I have written, and is now the habitation of the Alingtons. Adjoyning heereunto is Castle Camps, the ancient seat also of the Veres Earles of Oxford, which Hugh Vere held (as the old
F booke of Inquisition records) That he might be the Kings Chamberleine: whereas notwithstanding most true it is, that Henry the first King of England granted unto Aubrie de Vere that office, in these words: The principall Chamberlainesship of all England in fee and inheritance, with all the dignities, liberties, and honors thereto belonging, as freely and honorably, as Robert Mallet held the same, &c. The Kings notwithstanding ordeined sometimes one, & sometimes another at their pleasure to execute this office. Horsheath. See in Hertfordshire, Castle Camps Magistra Cameraria Angliæ. Lord Great Chamberlain.

* Inq.6.E.2. The Earles of Oxford alſo, that I may note it incidently, by the heire of R. Sandford held the Manours of Fingrey and Wulfelmeſton by ſerieanty of Chamberlainſhip to the Queenes at the Coronation of the Kings. A Ditches. Not farre from hence are ſeene heere and there thoſe great and long ditches, which certainly the Eaſt Angles did caſt, to reſtraine the Mercians, who with ſudden inrodes were wont moſt outragiouſly to make havocke of all before them. The firſt of theſe beginneth at Hinkeſton, runneth Eaſtward by Hilderſham toward Horſheath, about fiue miles in length. The ſecond neere unto this, called Brentditch goeth from Melborne by Fulmer.

Where D. Heruies cawſey which I mentioned, endeth, there appeareth alſo a third B forefence or ditch caſt up in old time: which beginning at the Eaſt banke of the river Cam reacheth directly by Fenn-Ditton, or more truly Ditch-ton (ſo called of the very Ditch) betweene great Wilberham and Fulburn, as farre as to Balſham. At this day this is called commonly Seaven mile Dyke, becauſe it is ſeven miles from Newmercate:

Fleamdyke. in times paſt, Fleam-dyke in old Engliſh, that is, Flight dyke, of ſome memorable flight there, as it ſeemeth. At the ſaid Wilberham ſometimes called Wilburgham, dwelt

De Inſula. De Rubeo monte.* in times paſt the Barons Liſle of Rong-mount*, men of ancient nobility: of whom, Iohn, for his martiall proweſſe was by King Edward the Third ranged among the firſt founders of the order of the Garter: & of that family there yet remaineth an heire male, a reverend old man and ful of children, named Edmund Liſle, who is ſtil L. of this place. C

More Eaſt from hence fiue miles within the country, is to be ſeene the fourth forefence or Dicth, the greateſt of all the reſt, with a rampier thereto; which the common people wondering greatly at, as a worke made by devils and not by men, uſe to call Devils-dyke: others, Rech-dyke, of Rech a little mercate towne, where it begin-

Divels Dyke. neth. This is, doubtleſſe, that, whereof Abbo Floriacenſis when he deſcribeth the ſite of Eaſt England, writeth thus. From that part whereas the ſunne inclineth Weſtward, the Province it ſelfe adjoineth to the reſt of the Iſland, and is therefore paſſable: but for feare of being overrunne with many invaſions and inrodes of enimies, it is fortified in the front with a banke or rampier like unto an hugh wall, and with a trench or ditch below in the ground. This for many miles together cutteth overthwart that Plaine which is D called Newmarket-heath, where it lay open to incurſions, beginning at Rech: above which the country is fennie, and therefore impaſſable: and it endeth neere to Cowlidge, where the paſſage by reaſon of woods was more cumberſome. And it was the limite as well of the Kingdome, as of the Biſhopricke of the Eaſt Angles. Who was the author of ſo great a peece of worke, it is uncertaine. Some later writers ſay it

Abbo died anno.1003. Canutus began his reign Anno.1018. was King Canutus the Dane: whereas notwithſtanding, the ſaid Abbo made mention of it, who died before that Canutus obtained the Kingdome of England: and the Saxon Chronicle, where it relateth the rebellion of Athelwolph againſt King Edward the Elder, calleth it ſimply Dyke; and ſheweth, That King Edward laid waſt whatſoever lieth betweene the Dyke and the river Ouſe, as farre as to the North Fennes: al- E
Anno.905. ſo that Aethelwold the rebell, and Eohric the Dane, were at that time ſlaine there in battaile. But they who wrote ſince Canutus times, termed it, Saint Edmunds limit, and Saint Edmunds dyke; and verily thinke, that King Canutus caſt it up, who being moſt devoted to Saint Edmund the Martyr granted unto the religious Monkes of Saint Edmunds Bury (for to make ſatisfaction for the wicked cruelty of Swan his father wrought upon them) very great immunities, even as farre as to this Dyke: whence it is, that William of Malmesbury in his booke Of Biſhops writeth thus, The Cuſtomers and Toll gatherers, which in other places make foule worke and outrage, without reſpect or difference of right and wrong, there in humble maner on this ſide Saint Edmunds Dike, ſurceaſe their quarrels and braules. And certaine it is that theſe two fore-fences laſt named F were called Saint Edmunds Dykes. For, Mathew Florilegus hath recorded, that the ſaid battaile againſt Aethelwolph, was fought betweene the two Dykes of Saint Edmund.

Burwell. Nere unto Rech, ſtandeth Burwel, a Caſtle in later times of the Lord Tiptoft, which, in thoſe moſt troubleſome times of king Stephen Geffrey Mandevill Earle of Eſſex,

who

A who by violent invasion of other mens possessions lost much honour, valiantly assaulted: untill that being shot through the head with an arrow, he delivered those countries from the feare they had stood in a long time.

Scarce two miles off, stands Lanheath, where for these many yeares the Cottons, right worshipfull gentlemen of knights degree haue dwelt: From which Wicken is not farre distant, which came to the familie of the Peytons by a daughter and coheire of the Gernons about Edward the Thirds time, as afterward Isleham descended to them by a coheire of Bernard in Hen. the Sixt time, which knightly family of Peytons flowred out of the same male-stock, whence the Vffords Earles of Suffolk descended, as appeareth by their Coate-armour, albeit they assumed the surname of Peyton ac-
B cording to the use of that age, from their Manour of Peyton-hall in Boxford in the Countie of Suffolke. Lanheath. Wicken. Isleham. Peyton.

Upon the same Dyke also, is seated Kirtling, called likewise Catlidg, famous in these daies by reason of the principall house of the Barons North; since Queene Marie honoured Sir Edward North, with that title for his wisdome: but in times past it was famous for a Synode held there, what time as the Clergy men were at hote strife among themselues about the celebration of the feast of Easter. 977. Kirtling. Barons North.

The higher and Northerly part of this Shire is wholy divided into riuer Isles: and beeing distinguished by many ditches, chanels, and draines, with a pleasant greene hew all Summer time contenteth the eyes of the beholders: but in winter wholy in C maner ouer-covered with water, farther every way than a man is able to ken, resembleth in some sort a verie sea. The Fennes and Isle of Ely.

They that inhabited this fennish Country and all the rest beside, (which from the edge and borders of Suffolke, as farre as to Wainflet in Lincolnshire conteineth three score and eight miles, and millions of acres lying in these foure Shires, Cambridge, Huntingdon, North-hampton and Lincolne) were in the Saxons time called Girvij, that is, as some interpret it, Fen-men, or Fen-dwellers. A kinde of people according to the nature of the place where they dwell rude, uncivill, and envious to all others whom they call Vpland-men: who stalking on high upon stilts, apply their mindes, to grasing, fishing, and fowling. The whole region it selfe, which in winter season
D and sometime most part of the yeare is overflowed by the spreading waters of the rivers Ouse, Grant, Nen, Welland, Glene, and Witham, having not loades, and sewers large enough to voide away: But againe when their streames are retired within their owne chanels, it is so plenteous and ranke of a certaine fatte grosse and full hey, (which they call Lid) that when they haue mowen downe as much with the better as will serve their turnes, they set fire on the rest and burne it in November, that it may come up againe in greater abundance. At which time a man may see this fenniish and moist tract on a light flaming fire all over every way, and wonder thereat. Great plenty it hath besides of turfe and sedge for the maintenance of fire: of reed also for to thatch their houses, yea and of alders, beside other wate-
E rie shrubs. But chiefly it bringeth forth exceeding store of willowes both naturally and also for that being planted by mans hand they haue served in good steed, and often cut downe, with their manifold encrease, and infinit number of heires (to vse Plinies word) against the violent force of the waters rushing against the bankes. Whereof also as well here, as in other places there be Baskets made, which seeing the Britans call Bascades, I for my part, that I may note so much by the way, doe not understand the Poet Martiall in that Distichon unlesse he meaneth these, among the Presents and Gifts sent to and fro.

F Barbara de pictis veni Bascauda Britannis,
Sed me jam mavult dicere Roma suam.
By barbarous name, a Baskaud I from painted Britans came,
But now Rome faine would call me hers, although I be the same.

Besides al this the herb, Scordiũ, which also is called Water Germãder, groweth plentifully Scordium.

fully here hard by the diches ſides: but as for theſe fenny Ilands, Fælix a writer of good antiquity hath depainted them forth in theſe words. There is a fen of exceeding great largenes which beginning at the banks of the river Gront, ariſing ſomwhere with ſedge plots in other places with blacke waters yeelding a duskiſh vapour, with woods alſo among the Iſles, and having many winding turnes of the banke, reacheth out in a very long tract, from South to Northeaſt as farre as to the Sea. And the very ſame fenne William a Monke of Crowland in the life of Guthlak hath thus deſcribed in verſe.

Eſt apud Angligenas à Gronta flumine, longo
Orbe per anfractus ſtagnoſos, & fluviales,
Circumfuſa palus, Orientaliſq; propinqua
Littoribus Pelagi, ſeſe diſtendit ab Auſtro
In longum verſus Aquilonem, gurgite tetro
Morboſos piſces vegetans, & arundine denſa
Ventorum ſtrepitus, quaſi quædam verba ſuſurrans.

A ſpatious Fen in England lies from Gront that rivers ſide,
Among the winding crankes of lakes and rivers far and wide,
Y' ſpred, and neere unto the banks of Eaſterne ſea doth ſtretch,
It ſelfe; and ſo from Southern ſide a long North Eaſtward reach.
In muddie gulfe vnwholſome fiſh it breeds: as reeds doe ſhake
There growing thick, of winds as words a whiſpering noiſe they make.

Ioyne heereunto if you pleaſe thus much out of Henry of Huntingdon: This Fenny country (ſaith he) is paſſing rich and plenteous, yea and beautifull to behold, watered with many rivers running downe to it, garniſhed with a number of meres both great and ſmall, trimly adorned likewiſe with many woods and Ilands. And for a finall concluſion of this matter, take with you alſo theſe few words of William of Malmeſbury ſpeaking of his time. So great ſtore there is heere of fiſhes that ſtrangers comming hither make a wonder at it, and the inhabitants laugh thereat, to ſee them wonder. Neither is Water foule leſſe cheape, ſo that for one halfe penny and under, five men at the leaſt may not onely eat to ſlake hunger and content nature, but alſo feed their fill of fiſh and foule.

As touching the drying up of this Fenny-country, what diſcourſe and arguing of-tentimes there hath bene either by way of ſound & holſome counſaile, or of a goodly pretence and ſhew of a common good, even in the High Court of Parliament, I liſt not to relate. But it is to be feared leaſt (that which often hath happened to the Pontine Mariſhes of Italie) it would come againe to the former ſtate. So that many thinke it the wiſeſt & beſt courſe according to the ſage admonition in like caſe of Apollo his Oracle. Not to entermeddle at all with that which God hath ordeined. Upon the naturall ſtrength of this place and plenty of all things there, ſeditious rebels have often preſumed; and not onely the Engliſh when they banded themſelues againſt William Conqueror, but the Barons alſo whenſoever they were out-lawed, from hence troubled and moleſted their Kings. But evermore they had ill ſucceſſe, albeit otherwhiles they built fortreſſes both at Eryth & alſo at Athered, at this day Audre, where the eaſieſt entrance is into this Iſle. And even yet, neere unto Audre is to be ſeene a military rampire of a meane height, but of a very large compaſſe, which they call Belſars-hils, of one Beliſar, I wot not who.

Pauſanias in Corinth.

Audre.

Part of this fenny country that lieth more South and is the greateſt by farre, which alſo is counted of this Shire, was named in the Engliſh Saxon tongue Elig, now The Iſle of Ely, of the chiefe Iland, which name Bede hath derived from Eeles, and thereupon ſome tearmed it Inſulam anguillariam, that is, The Iſle of Eeles. Polydore Virgil fetcheth the originall thereof from the Greek word Ελος, that ſignifieth Mariſh, others from Helig a Brittiſh word betokening Willowes or Sallowes, wherewith it doth moſt of all abound. Part of this region, we read that one Tombert a Prince of the Southern Girvij gave as a dowry to his wife Audrye, who after ſhe had left her ſecond husband

Ely.
Saint Ethel-dreda com-monly, S. Audrye.

A husband Egfrid, King of the Nordan humberland, being fully reſolued to ſerve Chriſt, built a Monaſterie for Nunnes Votaries in the principall Iland of theſe, properly called Ely, which was then reckoned at ſixe hundred Hides or Families; and of this Monaſtery, ſhe alſo her ſelfe the firſt Abbeſſe. Yet was was not this the firſt Church in the Fenny countrie. For, the booke of Ely recordeth, that Saint Auſten of Canterbury founded a Church at Cradiden; which, Penda the Mercian afterwards raſed: and William of Malmesbury reporteth, that Fælix Biſhop of the Eaſt Engliſh had his firſt See at Soham, which yet is within the Dioceſſe of Norwich. Soham, ſaith he, is a village ſituate neere unto a fenne, which was in times paſt dangerous for thoſe that would paſſe into
B Ely by water: now by reaſon of a way or cauſey made through the fenny ground overgrowen with reeds, men may goe over thither by land. There be remaining ſtill the tokens of a Church deſtroyed by the Danes, which with the ruines thereof overwhelmed the inhabitants, who were burnt together with it. At which time alſo that Monaſterie of Saint Audrie was overthrowen by the furious Danes: but Ethelwold Biſhop of Wincheſter reedified it: For hee, by a compoſition betweene the King and him, bought the whole Iland a new, and having caſt out the Prieſts thence, ſtored it with Monkes, unto whom King Edgar, as we read in his letters patents, granted within the Fennes, juriſdiction over the ſecular cauſes of two Hundreds, and without the Fennes, of two Hundreds and an halfe in Wichlaw, within the Province of the Eaſt Angels, which
C are called at this day, The liberties of Saint Audrie. Afterwards Kings and great noble men enriched it with large revenewes: and Earle Brithnoth eſpecially, Being now ready to ioine battaile with the Danes in the yeere 999. gave unto the Church of of Ely, Somerſham, Spaldwic, Trumpinton, Ratindum, Heisbury, Fulburn, Tinerſton, Tripleſtow, and Impetum, (for that the Monks had in magnificent maner entertained him) in caſe he ſhould looſe his life in that battaile. But, his fortune was to die at Maldun, after he had fought with the Danes 14. daies together. And ſo rich was this Monaſterie, that the Abbot thereof, as witneſſeth Malmesburie, laid up every yeere in his owne purſe a thouſand and foure hundred pounds. And Richard the laſt Abbot, ſonne to Earle Giſlebert, being ouer-tipled, as it were, with wealth, diſdaining to be under the D Biſhop of Lincoln, dealt with the King, what by golden words, as the Monkes write, and what by great ſuite and politicke meanes, that a Biſhops See might be erected heere: which, he prevented by death, obtained not. Yet ſoone after, King Henrie the Firſt having gotten allowance from the Pope, made Herveie, who had beene Biſhop of Bangor and by the Welſhmen caſt out of his owne ſeat, the firſt Biſhop of Ely: unto whom and to his ſucceſſors he laied for his Dioceſſe Cambridgeſhire, which had belonged before unto the Biſhop of Lincolne, and confirmed certaine Royalties in theſe Ilands. To the Biſhops of Lincolne, from whoſe iuriſdiction he had taken away this Iland and Cambridgeſhire, hee granted for to make amends, The Manour of Spaldwic: or as the booke of Ely hath, The Manour of Spaldwic was given unto the E Church of Lincoln for ever, in exchange for the Biſhops ſuperintendency over the County of Cambridge. Herveie being now made Biſhop, ſought by all meanes poſſible to augment the dignity of his Church.

Saint Audries Libertie.

Ely booke.

Hee obtained that it might be every where Toll-free (theſe are the very words of the booke of Ely): He ſet it free from the yoke of ſervice of watch and ward, that it owed to the Caſtle of Norwich: he made a way from Exning to Ely, through the fennes, ſix miles in length; he beganne the faire palace at Ely for his ſucceſſours, and purchaſed to it faire lands and not a few Lordſhips. And his ſucceſſours by abridging the number of Monkes) for, from threeſcore and ten they brought them downe to fortie) flowed with riches and wealth in great abundance even unto our time; and their
F feſtivall and ſolemne holidaies they celebrated with ſo ſumptuous proviſion and ſtately pompe, that they wonne the praiſe and prize from all the Abbaies in England: whereupon a Poet alſo in that age wrote theſe verſes not unproperly.

Præuiſis alijs, Elienſia feſta videre,
Eſt, quaſi præuiſa nocte, videre diem.

See,

See, after others, Ely feasts, and surely thou wilt say, A
That having seene the night before, thou seest now the day.

The Church likewise, which now beganne for age and long continuance to decay, they built up by little and little, and brought it to that ample statelinesse which now it hath: For, large it is, high, and faire, but somewhat defaced, by reason of Noblemens and Bishops tombes (not without most shamefull indignity) are broken downe. And now in stead of that great Covent of Monkes, there are established a Deane, Prebendaries, a Grammar schoole, wherein 24. children are maintained, and taught. Foure speciall things there are about this Church, that the common
The Lantern. people talke much off: The Lanterne on the very top thereof, just over the quire, supported with eight pillars, and raised upon them right artificially, by Iohn Hotham the Bishop. Under the Church towards the North, standeth Saint Maries Chapell a singular fine peece of worke, built by Simon Montacute, Bishop. On the South side, there is an huge heape of earth cast up round of a great heigth, which they call the Mount, having had a wind mill upon it. And lastly, a Vine bearing fruit in great plenty, which now is withered and gone. These foure, a Monke of this place in times past knit up within this Rhyme. B

Hæc sunt Eliæ, Lanterna, Capella Mariæ,
Atque molendinum,
Nec non dans vinea vinum. C

These things you may at Ely see,
The Lantern, Chapell of Saint Mary,
A wind-mill mounted up on hie,
A vine-yard yeelding wine, yeerely.

As for Ely it selfe, it is no small Citie, nor greatly to be counted off, either for beauty, or frequency and resort, as having an vnwholsome aire by reason of the fens round about, although it be seated somewhat higher. Neere to it is Downham where the Bishop hath his retiring house with a Parke: neere to Downham is Cowney the ancientest seat of the familie surnamed for their habitation heere, L'isle and De Insula, and D first planted heere by Nigellus the second Bishop of Ely their allies in the time of King Henrie the First, as is set downe in a Lieger booke of Ely. Chateries or Cheaterich is not farre hence Westward, were Alwena a deuout woman founded a Nunnery vpon a coppid ground encompassed with fennes, while her husband founded Ramsey. But higher Northward amidst the fennes, their stood another Abbay of very great Thorney. name, called Thorney, of thornes and bushes that grow thicke about it, but in times past Ankerige of Ankers or Eremites living there solitarily; where as we find in Peterborrough booke, Sexwulph a devout and religious man built a monasterie with little cels for Eremits: Which being afterwards by the Danes throwen downe Aethelwold E
Bishop of Winchester (that he might promote the Monasticall profession) reedified, stored it with Monkes, and compassed it round about with trees. The place, as writeth William of Malmesbury, Representeth a very Paradise; for that in pleasure and delight it resembleth heaven it selfe: in the very marishes bearing trees, that for their streight talnesse and the same without knots, strive to touch the starres; a plaine is there as even as the sea, which with greene grasse allureth the eie, so smooth and level, that if any walke along the fields they shal find nothing to stumble at. There is not the least parcel of ground that lies wast and void there. Heere shall you find the earth rising some where for apple trees, there shall you have a field set with Vines, which either creepe upon the ground, or mount on high upon poles to support them. A mutuall strife there is betweene Nature and husbandry, that what the one forgetteth, the other might supply and produce. What will be said of the faire and beautifull buildings, which it is a wonder to see how the ground amid those fennes and marishes, so firme and sound, doth beare with sure and stedfast foundations? A wonderfull solitary place is there afforded to Monkes for quiet life, that so much the more constantly settle their minds upon heavenly things for that they see men very seeldome, and so are they seene in there state more mortified and lower brought. A wonder it is to have a woman F

seene

A ſeene there: if come men thither; there is rejoicing as at ſo many Angels. In a word, I may truly ſay, that this Iſland is an Hoſtell of chaſtity, an harbour of honeſty, and a ſchole or colledge of divine Philoſophie.

Touching Wisbich, the Biſhop of Elies Caſtle, about 13. miles off, ſituate among the fennes, and rivers, and made of late a priſon to keepe the Papiſts in hold, I have nothing elſe to ſay, but that this towne togither with Walepole, was in old time given by the owner thereof unto the monaſterie of Ely, what time as he conſecrated Alwin his little ſonne there to live a monkes life: that King William the Firſt built a Caſtle there, when the outlawed Lords made rodes out of this fenny country: & that in the
B yeere of our ſalvation 1236. when the Ocean being diſquieted with violent winds, for two daies continually together had beaten upon the ſhore, made an exceeding wide breach and overwhelmed both land and people. But the Caſtle of bricke that now is ſeene there, Iohn Morton Biſhop of Ely built within the remembrance of our great grandfathers: who alſo drew as ſtreight as a line in this fenny country a ditch, which they call the Newleame for better conveiance and carriage by water, that by this meanes the towne being well frequented might gaine the more and grow to wealth. Which fell out quite contrary: For, it ſtandeth now in no great ſteed, & the neighbor inhabitants complaine that the courſe of Nen into the Sea by Clowcroſſe, is by this meanes altogether hindered and ſtopped.

Wisbich. Walepole. Newleame. Clowcroſſe.

C The firſt Earl of Cambridge that I can find, was William the brother of Ranulph Earl of Cheſter, as we read in a Patent or inſtrument of Alexander Biſhop of Lincoln, bearing date in the yeare 1139. Afterwards, thoſe of the royall bloud in Scotland that were Earles of Huntingdon, we may thinke to have beene Earles of Cambridge alſo: For that it appeareth certainly out of the Records of the realme, that David Earle of Huntingdon, received the third penny of the County or Earldome of Cambridge. Long time after King Edward the Third advanced Sir Iohn of Henault brother to William the third Earle of Holland and of Henault to this honor, for the love of Queene Philip his wife, who was coſin to the ſaid Iohn. For whoſe ſake alſo when Iohn was revolted from him and tooke part with the French, he honoured with the ſame title William D Marques of Iuliers, the ſaid Queene Philips ſiſters ſonne. After the death of theſe two Forainers, King Edward the third tranſlated this dignity to his fifth ſonne Edmund of Langley, which after he had held foure yeeres (my warrant I have out of an old manuſcript, being in the hands of that skilfull Antiquarie Francis Thinn) the Earle of Henault couſin to Qucene Philip, came into Parliament houſe, put in a claime for his right, and returned backe well contented. The ſaid Edmund of Langley, afterwards Duke of Yorke, had two ſonnes, Edward Duke of Yorke, who for a certaine time held the Earldome of Cambridge, and was ſlaine in the battaile of Agincourt: and Richard, by the grace and favour of King Henrie the Fifth, and conſent of his brother Edward, was E created Earle of Cambridge. But when he (ungratefull and ambitious man that hee was) contriued the deſtruction of that good and noble Prince, and ſo loſt his head; the title of Cambridge died the ſame day that he did, or lurked at leaſt wiſe among other titles of his ſonne Richard, who was afterwards Duke of Yorke and reſtored to his bloud and eſtate, as being couſen and heire to his Unkle Edward Duke of Yorke.

Earle of Cambridge.

This ſhire containeth Pariſhes 163.

F

HVNTING-

Septentrio

NORTH

THE

HAM

TO

NIÆ

PA

BEDFOR

RS

DIÆ

PARS

Occidens

Meridies

Vffordc Woodcroft
Widrington Eye Marham
Paston
Oxney Mylton
Thornhow
Vpton Peterburgh
Whitlesey
Sulylodge Walmsfordc
Sutton
Woodston
Clyff pk
Castor
Botle bridge Stangreund Flaton
Yarwell Stibbingtoñ Waternewton
Orton Longuill
Clyff Nassington
Allerton
Chery orton Fasset Emshhead Apthorpe
Newton
Elton Chasterton
Whitlesey mere Eotheringhay pk Haddon Yaxley
Suthwick Furtheringay Marbon Trandle mere Warmington Stilton Cotterstoke Tansouer
Fokworth Holme Lutton Glapthorn Cowcot
Denton
Youndle Cummyngton Benyfelde Pokbrok Hemmyngton Glatton
Stoke Sawter
St Andros chaple
Berwells Pilketon
Lyssordc Luddingtoñ
Gedding mag:
Woodwalton Reucley Achurch
Thurnyng
Gedding pua Wigesthorpe
Wiston
Thorpe
Steple gedding Copingsordc
Reucley pua
Clapton on the Woulde Winwick
Vpton Brought Tichmarshe Hammerton
Abbots ryton Oldweston
Weston Stuklye Bythorne
Burkworth Aukenbury
Saplye pk Thrapston Brynton Banham
Stucklye pua Moulsworth
Leighton
Herforde
Koston Wulle
Wabridge forest
HVNTINGDON
Catworth mag:
Spaldwick Hinchingbrook Rawndes
Stow
Ellington
Easton
Porte Mede Godmanchest Brampton
Kouington Grasham DOROSIP Hargraue Highamferries
Bugden
Tilbrook
Pirrye Kimbalton Didington
Offordes
Nether Shelton
Nether deane
Ouer deane Pertenhull Southhoe
Newton
Yeldon Swinshead
Paxton Grautley Paxton pua mag: Yelding
Melchborne
Stoughton m:
Higham pk
Stoughton pua Halowstone
Toseland Ryseley Ceyssoo Bushmead
St Neot Winteringham
Colmworth
Eaton Eynesbury Croxto
Boulne horst Barkforde Abotesley Wareslcy Grasden Rockesden Tetworth
Rauensden Wilden Temsforde Gamlingay Reynold Berforde Enerdon
Blunham Willyngton Potton
Sandye Bedforde
Cuphull
Sutton

HVNTINGDON Comitatus qui pars fuit ICENORVM

AN Whitlesey dike ILE OF ELY Ramsey mere Ramsey
Bury Warboyes
Fenton
Pidley
Somersham Oldchurst
Woodhurst
Bluntsham
Houghton
Holywell
Erith Owse flu:
Owre
Willingham
Hemmyngfordes
Fenny draton
Fenny stanton
Swafye Longstanton
Hilton Cunnington Lowlworth
Knapwell
Elsworth Caxton
Buene
Stowe
Hatley
Hatley mag:
Arrington Crowden
Erith causey
Audre causey
Sutton
Audre
Stretcham mere Denny Cotenham
Ramton Rothe Orrens Chaters Mepole
Ely TABRI GIÆ CAMBRIDGE
PARS
Scala Miliarium

Christophorus Saxton descripsit
Wilhelmus Kip Sculpsit

A

HVNTINGDON-SHIRE.

B

Ext unto Cambridge-ſhire, lieth HVNTINGDON-SHIRE, in the Saxon tongue hunedunepcyne; ſo ſituate, that Southward it confineth upon Bedfordſhire, Weſtward upon Northampton-ſhire: like as Northwards, where by the river * Avon it is parted; and Eaſtward, upon Cambridge-ſhire, a country good for corne and tillage: and toward the Eaſt, where it is fenny, verie rich and plentiful for the feeding of cattaile: elſewhere right pleaſant, by reaſon of riſing hils and ſhady groues: For, the inhabitants report, that in ancient times, it was throughout beſet with woods: and certaine it is, that it was a Foreſt, untill that king Henry the Second, in the beginning of his reigne diſforeſted it, (as wee finde in an old Perambulation) all ſaue Waybridge, Sapple and Herthei, which were woods of the Lords demaine, and remaine ſtill foreſts.

*Or Auſon. i. Nen.

The South part thereof, the river Ouſe (that I haue ſo often ſpoken of) runneth by, & bedecketh with floures. On which river among other of leſſe note, there ſtand ſome
C townes of good note. Firſt, after it hath left Bedfordſhire, & is entred into this County, it viſiteth Saint Neots, commonly called Saint Needs, ſo named of one Neotus, a man both learned and holy; who travailed all his life time in propagating of Chriſtian religion, whoſe body was tranſlated from Neotſtok in Cornwal hither, and in honor of him, Alfrick converted the palace of Earle Elfride unto a monaſtery. The which, Dame Roiſia wife to Richard Lord of Clare, ſhortly after the comming in of the Normans enriched with many faire poſſeſſions: But before it was named Ainulphsbury of one Ainulph likewiſe an holy and devout man, which name continueth ſtill alſo in one part of it. A little beneath this, at Aileweſton a verie ſmall village, there are two little ſprings, the one freſh, the other ſomewhat brackiſh: of which the neighbours
D giue out, that this is good againſt ſcabs and leproſie, the other againſt the dimneſſe of the eye-ſight. From thence not farre, Ouſe paſſeth to Bugden a proper faire houſe of the Biſhops of Lincolne, and ſo by Hinchingbrok, a religious houſe ſometimes of Nuns whom king William the Conquerour tranſlated hither from Eltoſley in Cambridge-ſhire, and now the dwelling houſe of the Cromwells, knights; commeth to Huntingdon, in the Engliſh Saxon tongue, as Marianus reporteth, Huntandun, in the publicke ſeale Hunterſdune, that is, the hil or downe of Hunters, as Henry Archdeacon of this place, who flouriſhed 400. yeares ſince, interpreteth it: whence it uſed in their ſeale, an Hunter; and Leland our countriman alluding thereunto, hath coined a new Latin word for it, namely Venantodunum. This is the chiefe towne of all this ſhire, (to which E it hath given alſo the name) farre excelling all the townes about it, the ſame Archdeacon ſaith, as well for light ſome and pleaſant ſituation, as for the beauty and faire ſhew that it hath it ſelfe: as well alſo for the vicinity of the Fens as for great ſtore of Deere and fiſh. In K. Edward the Confeſſour time, (that I may note ſo much out of Domeſday booke) There were in this Borrough foure Ferlings, that is, quarters or wards: In two of them were 116. Burgeſſes, paying cuſtom and gelt, and under them 100. Bordarij; in the other two 111. Burgeſſes for al cuſtomes & the kings gelt. It is ſeated upon the North-banke of Ouſe, ſomewhat high, ſtretching out in length Northward, adorned with 4. Churches: and it had a little Abbay founded by Maude the Empreſſe and Euſtace
F Lovetoft: the ruines whereof Eaſtward I haue ſeene hard under the towne. By the river nere unto the bridge which is faire built of ſtone, the mount & plot of a Caſtle, is to be ſeene, which in the yeare of our redemption 917. K. Ed. the Elder built a new: & David the Scotiſhman, unto whom, as an ancient hiſtoriographer writeth K. Stephe had given the Burrough of Huntingdon for an augmentation of his eſtate, enlarged with many new buildings & bulwarks: but in the end K. Henry the 2. both becauſe it

Saint Needs.

Ainsbury.

Holſome and medicinable wels.

Huntingdon.

was a place of refuge for ſeditious rebels, and for that the Scots and the Saint Lizes had oftentimes raiſed quarels and contention about it, to cut off al occaſions of ſtrife, laid it even with the ground; when as he, provoked with their unreaſorable variance ſwore an oth, that neither they of Saint Lizes nor the Scotiſhmen ſhould quarrel any more for it. From theſe Caſtle hils, where there is a goodly proſpect a great way off, a man may behold below a medow which they call Portſholme, environed round about with the river Ouſe, the ſame verie exceeding large, and of all others that the ſunne ever ſhone upon, moſt freſh and beautiful: whereof in the ſpring time this may be truely ſaid:

Ver pingit vario gemmantia prata colore:
The pleaſant Spring faire floures doth yeeld,
Of divers colours, in this field:

With ſuch a delectable variety of gaye colours it pleaſeth and contenteth the eye. On the hither banke over againſt Huntingdon, ſtandeth the mother as it were thereo, from whence it had his originall, called in Domeſday booke Godmundceſter, and at this daie Good-man-cheſter, for Gormoncheſter: A verie great country towne, and of as great name for tillage; ſituate in an open ground, of a light mould, and bending to the ſunne. Neither is there a towne againe in all England that hath more ſtout and luſty husbandmen, or more ploughs agoing: For, they make their boaſt that they haue in former time received the kings of England as they paſſed in their progreſſe this waie, with nine ſcore ploughs, brought forth in a reſticall kinde of pompe for a gallant ſhew. Verily, of our nation, there be none that apply their mindes ſo ſeriouſly as they doe to husbandry (which Columella termeth the nere couſin of Wiſdome) whether you reſpect their skill therein, or their ability to beare the expenſes, and their willing minde withall to take the paines. Henrie of Huntingdon before named, calleth it a Village, in his daies, not unlovely: and truely writeth, that in times paſt it had beene a noble City. For, to ſay nothing of Romane peeces of coine oftentimes there ploughed up, nor of the diſtance in the old Itineracie, the verie ſignification of the name may probably proue, that this was the verie ſame City, which Antonine the Emperour termed DVROLIPONTE, amiſſe, inſteed of DVROSIPONTE. For Duroſi-ponte (pardon mee I pray you for changing one letter) ſoundeth in the Britiſh tongue, A Bridge over the water Oſe. And that this river is named indifferently and without diſtinction, Vſe, Iſe, Oſe and Ouſe, all men confeſſe. But when this name was under the Danes quite aboliſhed, it beganne to be called Gormonceſter, of Gormon the Dane, unto whom after agreement of peace king Aelfred graunted theſe Provinces. Hereto, this old verſe giveth teſtimonie.

Gormonis a caſtri nomine, nomen habet.
Gormoncheſter, at this houre,
Takes the name of Gormons towre.

This is that Gormon of whom Iohn Picus an old Author, writeth in this wiſe: King Aelfred conquered and ſubdued the Danes, ſo that they gaue what hoſtages hee would for aſſurance, either to bee packing out of the Land, or elſe to become Chriſtians. Which thing alſo was effected. For, their King Guthrum, whom they call Gormond, with thirtie of his Nobles and wel neere all his people was baptized; and adopted by Aelfred as his Sonne, and by him named Athelſtan. Whereupon hee remained heere: and the provinces of the Eaſt-Engliſh and of the North-humbrians were given to him: that continuning in his allegeance, under the Kings protection, he might cheriſh and alſo maintaine them as his inheritance, which he had formerly overrun with ſpoile and robberie. Neither would this be omitted, that ſome alſo of thoſe ancient writers haue termed this place Gumiceſter, and Gumicaſtrum, avouching withall, that Machutus a Biſhop had heere his Epiſcopall See. And by the name of Gumiceſter King Henry the Third graunted it to his ſonne Edmund Earle of Lancaſter.

Ouſe making haſt ſpeedily from hence, when he was about to enter into Cambridgeſhire, paſſeth through moſt delightſome medowes hard by a proper and faire towne, which ſometime in the Engliſh-Saxon tougue was called Slepe, and now S. Ives, of Godmanchester.

Ivo

Duroſiponte.

Saint Ives.

A Ivo a Perſian Biſhop, who, as they write, about the yeere of Chriſt 600. travailed through England, preached diligently the word of God, and to this towne, wherein he left this life, left alſo his name. From whence notwithſtanding ſhortly after the religious perſons tranſlated his bodie to Ramſeie Abbay.

Turning aſide from hence ſcarce three miles, we ſaw Somerſham a faire dwelling houſe, of late daies belonging to the Biſhops of Ely, which Earle Brithnot in the yeere 991. gave to Ely Church, and Iames Stanley, the laviſh, and expensfull Biſhop, enlarged with new buildings. A little above that moſt wealthy Abbay Ramſey was ſituate amiddeſt the fens, where the rivers become ſtanding waters, when they have once Somerſham.

B founda ſoft kinde of ſoile.

The diſcription of this place have heere if it pleaſe you, out of the private Hiſtory of this Abbay. Ramſey, that is, The Rams Iſle, on the Weſt-ſide (for on other ſides fen- Ramſey.
niſh grounds through which one cannot paſſe, ſtretch out farre and wide) is ſevered from the firme ground almoſt two bow-ſhots off by certaine uneven and quaggie miry plots. Which place being wont in times paſt to receive gently within the boſome and brinks thereof, veſ-ſels arriving there with milde ga'es of winde in a ſhallow river onely: now through great labour and coſt after the foule and durty quagmires aforeſaid were ſtopped up with heapes of wood, gravell and ſtones together, men may paſſe into on foote on the ſame ſide upon a drie cauſey: and it lieth out in length almoſt two miles, but ſpreadeth not all out ſo much in

C bredth: which notwithſtanding is beſet round about with beautifull rowes of Alder-trees, and reed plots, that, with freſh greene canes and ſtraight bulruſhes among, make a faire and pleaſant ſhew; and before it was inhabited, garniſhed and bedecked all over with many ſorts of trees, but of wild aſhes eſpecially, in great abundance. But now after longer tract of time, part of theſe groves and woods being cut downe, it is become arable ground of a very fat and plentifull mould, for fruite rich, pleaſant for corne, planted with gardens, wealthy in paſtures, and in the ſpring time, the medowes arraied with pleaſant floures ſmile upon the beholders: and the whole Iland ſeemeth embroidred, as it were, with variety of gay colours. Beſides that, it is compaſſed all about with Meres full of eeels, and pooles repleniſhed with fiſh of many ſorts, and with foule there bred and nouriſhed. Of which Meres,

D one is called after the name of the Iland Ramſey Mere, farre excelling all the other waters Ramſey Mere.
adjoyning, in beauty and fertility, on that ſide where the Iſle is counted bigger and the wood thicker, flowing daintily by the ſandy banke thereof, yeeldeth a very delectable ſight to behold: in the very gulfes whereof by caſting as well of great wide maſhed nets, as of other ſorts, by laying alſo of hookes baited, and other inſtruments deviſed by fiſhers craft, are caught oftentimes and drawen certaine pikes of an huge and wonderfull bigneſſe, which the inhabitants call Hakeds: and albeit the foulers doe continually haunt the place and catch Hakeds.
great ſtore of young water foule, yet there is abundance alwaies that remaineth untaken.
Furthermore that Hiſtorie ſheweth at large, how Ailwin a man of the bloud royall,

E and for the ſpeciall great authority and favour that he had with the King, ſurnamed Healf-Koning, that is, Halfe King, being admoniſhed and mooved thereunto by a Fiſhers dreame built it; how Oſwald the Biſhop furthered and enlarged it; how Kings and others endowed it with ſo faire revenewes, that for the maintenance of threeſcore Monkes it might diſpend by the yeere ſeven thouſand pounds of our Engliſh mony. But ſeeing it is now pulled downe and deſtroyed, ſome may thinke I have already ſpoken overmuch thereof. Yet heereto I will annexe out of the ſame authour the Epitaph of Ailwins tombe, for that it exhibiteth unto us an vnuſuall and ſtrange tile of a Dignity.

F

HIC REQVIESCIT AILWINVS INCLITI REGIS EADGARI COGNATVS, TOTIVS ANGLIÆ ALDERMANNVS, ET HVIVS SACRI COENOBII MIRACVLOSVS FVNDATOR.

HERE RESTETH AILWIN COSIN TO THE NOBLE KING EADGAR, ALDERMAN OF ALL ENGLAND, AND OF THIS HOLY ABBAY THE MIRACVLOVS FOVNDER.

A

From hence to Peterborough, which is about ten miles off, King Canutus, becauſe trauailing that way and finding it very comberſome by reaſon of ſwelling brooks and ſlowes, with great coſt and labour made a paued cauſey, which our hiſtorians call Kings-delfe, not farre from that great lake Wittleſmere. And as this Abbay did adorne the Eaſtſide of the ſhire, ſo, the middle thereof was beautified by Saltrie, which the ſecond Simon de Sancto Lizio Earle of Huntingdon built. From which not farre, is Cunnington, holden anciently of the Honour of Huntingdon: where, within a foure ſquare trench, are to be ſeene expreſſe remains of an ancient caſtle, which, as alſo Saltrie, was by the gift of Canutus, the ſeat of Turkill that Dane, who abode heere among the Eaſt Engliſh, and ſent for Sueno King of Denmarke to make ſpoile of England. After whoſe departure, Waldeof the ſonne of Siward Earle of Northumberland enjoied it, who married Iudith niece to William the Conqueror by his ſiſter on the mothers ſide: by whoſe eldeſt daughter it came to the royall family of Scotland. For ſhe, by a ſecond marriage, matched with David Earle of Huntingdon (who afterwards obtained the Kingdome of Scotland) being the younger ſonne of Malcolm Can-mor, King of Scots, and of Margaret his wife deſcended of the royall line of the Engliſh Saxons: For, ſhe was niece to King Edmond Iron-ſide by his ſonne Edward ſurnamed, The Baniſhed. David had a ſonne named Henrie, and Henrie had another named David Earle of Huntingdon, by one of whoſe daughters, Iſabell, Cunnington and other lands by right of marriage deſcended to Sir Robert Bruſe: from whoſe eldeſt ſonne Robert ſurnamed the Noble, IAMES King of great Britaine lineally deriveth his deſcent: and from Bernard his younger ſonne, unto whom this Cunnington with Exton fell, Sir Robert Cotton Knight is lineally deſcended; who over and beſide other vertues, being a ſingular lover and ſercher of antiquities, having gathered with great charges from all places the monuments of venerable antiquitie, hath heere begunne a famous Cabinet, whence of his ſingular courteſie, he hath often times given me great light in theſe darkſome obſcurities.

B

C

D

Kingſdelfe.

Sawtry, commonly. Cunnington. Saltrie. Turkill the Dane.

Edwardus Exul. Bruſe or Bruis.

But theſe quarters, conſidering the ground lying ſo low, and for many monethes in the yeere ſurrounded and drowned, in ſome places alſo floting (as it were) and hoven up with the waters, are not free from the offenſiue noiſomnes of meres and the unholeſome aire of the fennes. Heere for ſix miles in length and three in breadth that cleere deepe and fiſhfull Mere named Wittleſ-mere ſpreadeth it ſelfe, which as other Meres in this tract, doth ſometimes in calmes and faire weather ſodainly riſe tempeſtuouſly, as it were into violent water-quakes to the danger of the poore fiſhermen, by reaſon, as ſome thinke, of evaporations breaking violently out of the bowels of the earth. As for the unhealthineſſe of the place, whereunto onely ſtrangers, and not the natives there are ſubiect, who live long and healthfully, there is amends made, as they account it, by the commodity of fiſhing, the plentifull feeding, and the abundance of turfe gotten for fewell. For, King Cnut gave commandment by Turkill the Dane, of whom eare while I ſpake, that to every village ſtanding about the Fennes, there ſhould be ſet out a ſeverall Marſh: who ſo divided the ground, that each Village by it ſelfe ſhould have in proper vſe and occupation ſo much of the very maine Marſh, as the firme ground of every ſuch village touched the Marſh lying juſt againſt it. And he ordeined, that no Village might either digge or mow in the Marſh of another without licence, but that the paſture therein ſhould lie all in common, that is, Horne under horne, for the preſervation of peace and concord among them. But thus much of this matter.

Moſſes.

Wittleſmere Lake.

E

F

When the Sonnes and ſervants of the ſaid King Cnut, ſent for from Peterborough to Ramſey, were in paſſing over that Lake, There fell upon them, as they were cheere-

The little Hiſtory of Ely.

fully

A full under saile and lifting up their voices with joifull shoutings, most untoward and unhappie winds, wherewith a turbulent and tempestuous storme arose, that encloſed them on everie side, so that laying aside all hope, they were in utter despaire of their life, securitie, or any helpe at all. But such was the mercifull clemencie of Almighty God, that it forsooke them not wholy, nor suffered the most cruell gulfe of the waters to swallow them up all quite, but by his providence some of them hee delivered mercifully out of those furious and raging waues: but others againe according to his just and secret judgement hee permitted amideſt those billowes to passe out of this fraile and mortal life. And when the fame of so feareful a daunger was noiſed abroade and come to the kings eares, there B fell a mighty trembling and quaking upon him: but beeing comforted and relieved by the counsaile of his Nobles and friends, for to prevent in time to come all future mishaps by occasion of that outrageous monster, hee ordeined that his souldiours and servants with their swords and skeins should set out and marke a certaine ditch in the Marshes lying thereby, betweene Ramseie and Wittlesey, and afterwards that workemen and labourers should skoure and cleanse them: whereupon, as I haue learned of ancient predecessours of good credite, the said ditch by some of the neighbour inhabitants tooke the name Swerdesdelfe, upon that marking out by swords: and some would haue it to bee termed Cnoutſ-delfe according to the name of the same King. Yet commonly at this day they call it Steeds dike: and it is counted the limit and bound betweene this County and C Cambridge-shire.

The foundation of Salt-ry.

Swerdesdelf differing from Kings Delfe.

In the East side of this shire, Kinnibantum Castle, now called Kimbolton, the habitation in times past of the Mandevils, afterwards of the Bohuns and Staffords, and at this day of the Wingfelds, doth make a faire shewe. Under which was Stoneley a prety Abbay founded by the Bigrames. A little from hence is Awkenbury, which King Iohn gaue to David Earle of Huntingdon: and Iohn surnamed the Scot, his sonne, unto Sir Stephen Segraue: of whom I am the more willing to make mention, for that he was one of those Courtiers who hath taught us, That there is no power alwaies powerfull. Hardly and with much adoe he climbed to an eminent and high estate, with great thought and care he kept it, and as sodainely he was deiected from it: For,
D in his youth, of a Clerke he became a knight, and albeit he was but of meane parentage, yet through his industrie toward his later daies so enriched and advanced that being raunged with th' great Peeres of the Realme, he was reputed chiefe Iustice of England, & managed at his pleasure after a sort all the affaires of state. But in the end hee lost the kings favour quite, and to his dying day lay close in a cloister: and who before time from a clerkship betooke himselfe through arrogancy to secular service, returning againe to the office of a clerke, resumed the shauen crowne which he had forsaken without the counsel and advise of the Bishop. Not farre from hence is Leighton, where Sir Gervase Clifton knight, lately made Baron Clifton, beganne to build a goodly house, and close to it lieth Spaldwick, which king Henrie the First gaue unto the Church of Lincoln for amends
E of a losse, when hee erected the Bishoprick of Ely, taken out of the Dioceſe of Lincoln, as I haue before shewed.

Stephen Segraue. Math. Paris.

Leighton.

But where the river Nen entteth into this Shire, it runneth fast by Elton the seat of the ancient familie of the Sapcots, where is a private Chappel of singular workemanship and most artificial glasse windowes, erected by Ladie Elizabeth Dinham the widow of Baron Fitz-warin, married into the said familie. But a little higher, there stood a little City more ancient than all these, neere unto Walmsford: which Henrie of Huntingdon calleth Caer Dorm and Dormcaster upon the river Nen, and reporteth to haue beene utterly rased before his time. This was doubtlesse that DVROBRIVAE, that is, the river passage, that Antonine the Emperour speaketh of, and now
F in the verie same sense is called Dornford neere unto Chesterton, which beside peeces of ancient coine daily found in it, sheweth apparent tokens of a City overthrowne. For, to it there leadeth directly from Huntingdon a Roman Port way: and a little aboue Stilton, which in times past was called Stithilton, it is seene with an high banke, and in an ancient Saxon Charter termed Ermingstreat. This street now runneth here through the mideſt of a foure square fort, the North side whereof was fenced with Elton.

Walmsford.

Durobrivæ.

Stilton. Ermingstreet.

wals, all the other ſides with a rampire of earth onely. Neere unto which were digged up not long ſince cofins or ſepulchres of ſtone in the ground of R. Bevil, of an ancient houſe in this ſhire. Some verily thinke that this City tooke up both bankes of the river; and there be of opinion that the little village Caſter ſtanding upon the other banke was parcell thereof. Surely to this opinion of theirs maketh much the teſtoimny of an ancient ſtory, which ſheweth that there was a place by Nen called Dormund-caſter, in which when Kinneburga had built a little Monaſtery, it began to be called firſt Kinneburge-caſter, and afterwards ſhort Caſter. This Kinneburga the moſt Chriſtian daughter of the Pagan King Penda, and wife to Alfred King of the Northumberlands (changed her Princely ſtate into the ſervice of Chriſt, if I may uſe the words of an ancient writer) and governed this Monaſtery of her owne, as Prioreſſe or mother of the Nunnes there. Which afterwards, about the yeere of ſalvation 1010. by the furious Danes was made levell with the ground. But where this river is ready to leave this county, it paſſeth hard by an ancient houſe called Bottle-bridge (ſo is it now termed ſhort for Botolph-bridge) which the Draitons & Lovets brought from R. Gimels by hereditary ſucceſſion into the family of the Shirleies. And to this houſe adjoyneth Overton, now corruptly called Orton, which being by felony forfait and confiſcate, Neele Lovetoſt redeemed againe of King Iohn: and the ſaid Noeles ſiſter and coheire being wedded unto Hubert aliâs Robert de Brounford, brought him children, who aſſumed unto them the ſurname of Lovetoft.

Caſter in Northamptonſhire.

Bottle bridge.

* Nigellus.

This County of Huntingdon when the Engliſh-Saxons Empire began now to decline, had Siward an Earle by office, & not inheritance: For as yet there were no Earls in England by inheritance, but the Rulers of Provinces, after the cuſtome of that age were tearmed Earles, with addition of the Earledome of this or that Province whereof they had the rule for the time: as this Siward whiles he governed this County was called Earle of Huntingdon; whereas afterwards being Ruler of Northumberland, they named him Earle of Northumberland. He had a ſonne named Waldeof, who under the title of Earle had likewiſe the government of this Province, ſtanding in favour as he did with William the Conquerour, whoſe niece Iudith by his ſiſter of the mothers ſide, he had maried, but by him beheaded for entring into a conſpiracy againſt him. The eldeſt daughter of this Waldeof (as William Gemiticenſis reporteth) Simon de Senlys or S. Liz tooke to wife, together with the Earldome of Huntingdon, and of her begat a ſon named Simon. But after that the ſaid Simon was dead, David brother to Maud the Holy, Queene of England (who afterwards became King of Scots) married his wife by whom he had a ſonne named Henry. But in proceſſe of time, as fortune and Princes favour varied, one while the Scots, another while the Sent Lyzes enioyed this dignity: Firſt Henry the ſonne of David aforeſaid: then Simon S. Lyz ſonne of Simon the firſt: after him Malcolm King of Scots, ſonne to Earle Henry: and after his death Simon Sent Lyz the third who dying without iſſue, William King of Scots and brother to Malcolm ſucceeded: for, ſo wrot he that then lived, Raphe de Diceto in the yere 1185. When Simon (ſaith he) the ſonne of Earle Simon was departed without children, the King reſtored the Earldome of Huntingdon with the Pertinences vnto William King of the Scots. Then his brother David, and Davids ſonne Iohn ſurnamed Scot, Earle of Cheſter, who dying without iſſue, and Alexander the ſecond that had married the daughter of our King Henry the Third, having for a time borne this title, the Scots by occaſion of incident warres, loſt that honour, and with it a very faire inheritance in England. A good while after King Edward the Third created Sir William Clinton Earle of Huntingdon who died iſſueleſſe: And in his roome there was placed by King Richard the Second, Guiſeard of Engoliſme, a Gaskoin, who was his gouernour in his minority: and after his death ſucceeded Iohn Holland, Iohn his ſonne (who was ſtiled * Duke of Exceſter, Earle of Huntingdon and Ivory, Lord of Sparre & Admirall of England and Ireland, Lieutenant of Aquitaine, and Conſtable of the Tower of London) and his ſonne likewiſe Henry, ſucceſſiuely, who were Dukes alſo of Exceſter. This is that very ſame Henry Duke of Exceſter whom Philip Comines, as himſelfe witneſſeth, ſaw begging bare foot in the Low Countries, whiles he ſtood firme & faſt unto the houſe of Earles of Huntingdon.

See the Earles of Northampton.

In the laſt booke c. 16. Iohn Forden in Scotochronicol. 8. c. 3. 6. & 39.

Matth. Paris. 1243.

See Dukes of Exceſter. Pat. 26. H. 6.

A of Lancaſter, albeit he had married King Edward the Fourth his owne ſiſter. Then, Thomas Grey, who became afterward Marqueſſe Dorſet, a little while enjoied that honour. Alſo it is evident out of the Records, that William Herbert Earle of Pembroch brought in againe the Charter of creation, whereby his father was made Earle of Pembroch, into the Chancery for to be cancelled: and that K. Edward the Fourth in the ſeventeenth of his reigne created him Earle of Huntingdon, at ſuch time as hee granted the title of Pembroch to the Prince his ſonne. Afterward king Henry the Eighth conferred that honor upon George L. Haſtings: after whom ſucceeded his ſon Francis, and after him likewiſe his ſonne Henrie, a right honorable perſonage, commended both for true nobility and piety. But whereas he died without iſſue, his bro-
B ther Sir George Haſtings ſucceeded: and after him his grandchild Henrie by his ſonne, who at this day enjoieth the ſaid honour.

C

In this little ſhire are numbered Pariſhes. 78.

D

CORI-

E

F

CORITANI.

NOw must we passe on to the CORITANI, who beyond the ICENI dwelling further within the land, and spreadding themselves very farre through the mediterranean part of the Iland, inhabited as farre as to the German Ocean, to wit in these countries which now are commonly called NORTHAMPTON-SHIRE, LEICESTER-SHIRE, RVTLAND-SHIRE, LINCOLN-SHIRE, NOTTINGHAM-SHIRE, and DERBY-SHIRE. With the Etymologie of this their name I will not once meddle, for feare least putting downe incertainties for certaine and vndoubted truths, I may seeme to slip into an errour. For, although this people were spred farre and wide, which GVR-TATI signifieth in the British tongue, yet if I would boldly avouch, that these were thence called CORITANI, should I not play hazard at all aventure? Let them, for me, guesse more safely, who can more happily. As for me, I will in the meane time according to my purpose survey as diligently as I may these shires which I have now named, each one by it selfe orderly in their severall places.

NORTH-

OXFORDIÆ WARWICÆ P

PARS BVCKINGHAMIÆ

PARS BEDFORDIÆ

PARS

Banbury
Cropredie Cleydon Charwell flu.
Bodington Dunchurch
Badicot Aston Wulscote
Willy Hilmorton Adderbury Chalcomb Wardlenton Chippingwarden
Heblingdon
Clifton Werkworth
Bisfelde
Leme flu.
Ouencote
Barby Kingsutton Edgecote Catesby Stauerton
Braunston
Charwell flu.
Midleton cheny Cherwelton
Soulder Newhotle
Eidon
Legers Ashby
Auno Merston Dauentree Badby Charleton
Thorpe mandeuill
Woodforde Fermynghe
Culworth Ashby Croughton
Greke worth Welton
Hinton
Stene Rodston
Preston caues Neuenham Helmeden Soulgraue Euerton
Norton
Watforde Fmley Brackley
Morton
Asdon Forthunston Dodford Whitfelde
Weeden Lichboro Whilton Longbackby Aswell
Blakesley Maidforde Wedon Mixbury Wapenham Brockhole
Sisam Slapton Stow Nobotle Tulwell Bidleston Bredwin Floure Goldesburg Coldthigham Heiforde Brimton Fuimere Westbury
Althorp
Silston Biabrook Althorp
Raunsthorp Luffelde TRIPONTIVM
Towcester Grenesnorton Patishull
Holdenby
Harpole Teton Buckingham
Lillingston darrell Whitlebury Kislingbury
Ypton Brampton
Gaiton Dunston
Oxon PARS Thorpe
Sprotten Alderton Estow Lillingston Paulpery
Milton Kingsthorpe Bliswerth Loucll Wikins
Colling wigh Grafton
Stoke bruant Northamton Pisford
Potters pery Rode Denshanger
Ashton
Wotton
Boughton Abington Pashenham Cortenhal Hardingston
Moulton
Yardley gobion
Hartwell
Weston
Stonistretford
ISANAVARIA Quinton Houghtons Holcot Cossgraue Castlethorpe
Preston
Billing parva Wuluerton Hamslap Piddington Stiwell
Stoke golding
Brounfeld
Eaton
Ashby Horton Cogenhoe Berton
Turringham Deinton Hardwik Rauinston Whiston Wilby Harredon
Newport Paganell
Weston
Deddington ma.
Oulney pk
Castle Ashby
Harredon ma.
Wellingboro Yarlishastings Grindon
Auona
Wyre flu.
Oulney Easton
Walaston
Clyston
Stryxton
Archester Launden Boziaton Rushden Woodhill
Higham ferr
Higham yark Chelston
Newton
Bedforde
Tilbrok Swynsheaa
Scalamiliarium
Christophorus Saxton Descripsit
William Kip Sculpsit

NORTHAMTONIÆ COMITATVS DESCRIPTIO IN QVO CORITANI OLIM INSEDERVNT

NOMINA HVNDREDORVM IN HOC COMITATV

A Sutton
B Wardon
C Faluesley
D Goldesburgh
E Norton
F Toweester
G Cleyley
H Newbotle grouc
I Wimersley
K Spelhoo
L Hauforde
M Orlebery
N Ruthwell
O Higham Ferrers
P Huckeslow
Q Corby
R Nauesforde
S Polbrook
T Willibrook
V Nisaborow

ECES Luttervvorth Swineford
TRIÆ
S. Kilworth
PARS Welford Holdenby
Holmhorp Gibbesoft
Meliton Trussell
Clipston
Hasilbich Kelmarsh
N Farndon
Harborow
Bowdon mag.
Bowdon
Maidwell
Draughton Braybrok caſt.
Sutton
Dingley Welham
Harington Weston
Bramton
Daisbore Loddington
Flaxton Cransley Rothwell
Thorp
Rushton
Pipwell
Stoke Albone
Wilbaston
Carleton Weekley Cattingham
Ockley m.
Pinchley Isham Kettering
Newton
Rokingham ca Ockley gua Rokingham
Gretton
Borton segraue
Werton Geddington Boughton
Grafton
Burton latimer Corby Stanion Haringworth
Seyton
Cranford
Slipton
Weldon
Kirby Dene Forrest
Addington
Addington gua m.
Twiwell Brixstoke
Woodford Laxton
Wakerley Lewik Islipp Sudborow Benifeld Pencthorp Drate Denford
Lisden Bulwik Ringsted
Aldwinkle Madenho Bletherwik Emshead Duddington
Stanforde
Cliff Colliweſten Pilketon
Thapſton
Thorpe
Stoke Suthwik Aycthorpe Easton
Raundes Tichmarsh Glapthorne
Witering Hargraue
Achurch
Lyford Cotherſtock
Newton
Burghley
LINCOL Clopton on would Barnwell
Naſſington Thurnho Koſton Oundle Fording beyca Yarwell
Vfford
Bernak NIÆ Wigſthorpe Tanſaver Bythorne
Polbrok Waternewton
Walmeſford
Badington
W. Depping
Thurning
Luton Vpton Hemington
Oldweſton
Sutton
Helpſton
Maxey ca.
Allerton
Etton Luddington
Winwik Marham
Caſtor
Woodcroft
Northborogh Market Depping Glinton Milton
Cawcott
Cheriorton Widerington
Pekirk
Orton
Paſton
PARS Peterburgh
Yaxley
Fletton Oxney Stingleſak
Eyr Welland flu
White leſey mere CANTABRIGIÆ PA: Crowland RVTLAN
DIÆ PARS HVNTINGTO
PARS

A

NORTHAMPTON-SHIRE.

B THis Countie of NORTHAMPTON, in the Englisſh Saxon tongue Noꝛþ-aꝑendon-ſcipe, and Northanton-ſhire, commonly called Northamptonſhire, ſituate in the very middle and heart, as it were, of England, from the Southweſt ſide, where it is broadeſt, drawing it ſelfe narrower by little and little, reacheth out in length to the North-eaſt. On the Eaſt lie Bedford and Huntingdon-ſhires: on the South Buckingham & Oxford-ſhires: Weſtward Warwickſhire: and Northward Rutlandſhire, and Lincolnſhire, ſeparated from it by Avon the leſſe, and Welland, two rivers. The Eaſt ſide thereof, from Ouſe to Dowbridge, one of the Romane high waies which they call Watling ſtreat runneth through: The middle and Eaſt part the river Nen, which by writers is named alſo Aufona, with his gentle ſtreame parteth in twaine. A champian country it is, exceeding populous, and paſſing well furniſhed with Noblemens and Gentlemens houſes, repleniſhed alſo with townes and Churches, in ſo much as in ſome C places there are twenty, and in others thirty ſteeples with ſpires or ſquare towres within view at once. The ſoile very fertile both for tillage and for paſture, yet nothing ſo well ſtored with woods, unleſſe it be in the further and hither ſides. But in every place, as elſe where alſo in England, it is ouer-ſpread and as it were beſet with ſheepe: which according as that Hythodæus merrily ſaid, Were wont to be ſo gentle and fed with ſo little; but now in our daies, as the report goes, beginne to be ſo ravenous and wild, that they devour men, they waſt and depopulate fields, houſes, and townes. Vtopia of Sir Thomas More.

On the South border, where the river Ouſe ſo often mentioned firſt ſpringeth, in a place riſing with an eaſie aſcent, and out of which there walme ſprings in great plenD ty, ſtandeth Brakley, as one would ſay a place full of Brake or Ferne, in old time a famous market towne and ſtaple as it were for wool: which how large and wealthy it was, it maketh now demonſtration to travailers, onely by the ruins thereof; and by a Major, whom it hath for the chiefe magiſtrate. The Zouches Lords of the place, founded a Colledge there: from whom it came ſucceſſively as a poſſeſſion in marriage right unto the Hollands and the Lovels. But when L. Lovell in King Henrie the Seventh his time was attainted, the Stanleies became Lords of it by the Kings gift. But the Colledge there, at this day ruinous, belongeth to the ſtudents of Mawdlen Colledge in Oxford, who uſe it for a retyring place. Neither came this place to the leaſt name and reputation that it had, by occaſion of the memorie of Saint Rumbald E a young infant, who, as we find written in his life, being a Kings ſonne, ſo ſoone as ever he was borne, after he had ſpoken I know not what holy words, and profeſſed himſelfe to be a Chriſtian, was forthwith baptiſed, and ſo preſently died, & being canonized by the people amongſt the Saints, had his commemoration kept both heere and at Buckingham.

From hence Northward, when we had gone ſix miles forward, and all the way well wooded, firſt we ſaw Aſtwell, where Sir T. Billing ſometime Lord chiefe Iuſtice in the Kings Bench with great ſtate dwelt: from whom it deſcended hereditarily to the Shirleis by the ancient family of the Lovels: then Wedon and Wapiham, which the family of the Pinkeneys held by Baronie, untill that H. de Pinkney ordained King Edward the firſt his heire. Whom being a right good and excellent Prince many evill F men made their heire; whereas (according to Tacitus) a good father maketh no Prince, but a bad one, his heire. Then came we ſtreight waies to TRIPONTIVM, which Antonine the Emperour mentioneth, though not in due place: For I am of opinion, that this was the very ſame, which now we call Torceſter: and to prove it, there be ſome arguments of moment as yet remaining. If Trimontium in Thracia had that name of three hils, Triturrita in Tuskane of three towres, and Tripolis likeBaronie of the Pinkneys.

wiſe

wiſe of three Cities conjoined in one; I have no reaſon to doubt, that this TRIPONTIVM of ours, might be ſo called of three bridges. And heere at this Torceſter the Romane Port way which in many places moſt evidently ſheweth it ſelfe betweene it and Stony-ſtratford, is cut through by three ſpeciall chanels or ſtreames that the little river there devideth it ſelfe into; which in times paſt, like as at this day had of neceſſitie there ſeverall bridges over them. Now, if you aske a Britan, how he ſaith in Britiſh [Three bridges] you ſhall heere him by and by anſwere [Tair ponte]: and there be certaine honeſt men, from whom I have received heere peeces of Romane coine, that conſtantly avouch, the true name of this place to be Torceſter, and thinke it was ſo called of Towres. Howbeit Marianus nameth it Toueceſter, if the booke be not faulty, in whom we read, that this towne was ſo fortified in the yeere of our redemption 917. that the Danes by no meanes could winne it by aſſault: and that King Edward the Elder afterwards compaſſed it about with a ſtone wall; yet we with all our ſeeking could ſee no tokens of any ſuch wall. Onely there is a mount remaining caſt up with mens hands, they call it Berihill, now turned into private mens gardens, and planted on every ſide with cherie trees. And very time it ſelfe hath ſo conquered and ſubdued the towne, that beholden it is to the ſituation, to the name, and old coines other whiles heere found, for that eſteeme which it hath of antiquity. For, no memorable thing there is in it but one onely Church that it hath; and the ſame is a large and faire building, wherein D. Sponde ſometime the Parſon thereof, by report, a good benefactor to Church and towne both, lieth entombed within a tombe of fine and curious workmanſhip. But hard by, at Eſton-Neſſon, there is to be ſeene, a faire and beautifull dwelling houſe belonging to the Knightly family of the Farmors.

The river that watereth Torceſter, as it goeth from hence toward Ouſe, runneth beſide Grafton, which now is reputed an Honor of the Kings, but in times paſt was the ſeat of the family de Widdeuil: out of which came Richard, a man highly renowned for his vertue and valour: who for that he tooke to wife Iaquet the widow of Iohn Duke of Bedford, and daughter to Peter of Luxenburgh, Earle of Saint Paul, without the Kings licence, was by King Henrie the Sixth fined at a thouſand pounds of our money. Yet afterwards hee advanced the ſame Richard to the honorable title of Baron Widdeuil de Rivers. With whoſe daughter Dame Elizabeth, King Edward the Fourth ſecretly contracted marriage: and verily hee was the firſt of all our Kings ſince the Conqueſt that married his ſubject. But thereby, he drew upon himſelfe and his wives kinsfolke a world of troubles, as yee may ſee in our hiſtories. The ſaid Richard Wiadeuil Lords of Rivers, Grafton, & de la Mote, by King Edward the Fourth now his ſonne in Law, was erected (theſe be the very words out of the Charter of his creation) to be Earle Rivers, by cincture of the ſword, To have unto him and his heires, with the Fee of 20. pounds, by the hands of the Sherife of Northampton. And ſoone after he was with exceeding great honor ordained High Conſtable of England (I ſpeake out of the Kings Patent it ſelfe) To occupie, manage, and execute that Office, either by himſelfe, or by ſufficient Deputies for terme of life, receiving yeerely two hundred pounds out of the Exchequer, with full powre and authoritie to take examinations, and to proceede in cauſes of and concerning the crime of high treaſon, or the occaſion thereof: alſo to heare, examine, and in due time to determine the cauſes & buſineſſes aforeſaid, with all and ſingular matters ariſing from them, incident to them, or conjoined therewith, even ſummarily, and in any place whatſoever below, without noiſe or formall order of judgement, onely upon ſight of the truth of the fact, and with the Kings hand and power, if it ſhall be thought meete in our behalfe, without all appeale. Moreover about that time he was made Lord Treaſurer of England. But hee having enjoied theſe honors a ſmall while, was ſoone after in the quarell of the King his ſonne in law aforeſaid, taken in the battaile at Edgcote, and beheaded. And albeit, in his ſonnes this ofspring, as it were halfe dead, tooke an end, what time as Antonie Earle Rivers was by Richard the third made ſhorter by the head, Richard alſo and his other brethren dead without iſſue: yet from the daughters there did ſpred forth moſt faire and fruitfull branches. For, out of them flowred, the royall race and line of England, the Marqueſſes of Dorcet, the Earles of Eſſex,

Earles

Parliament 27. H. 6.

7. Edw. 4. Conſtable of England.

A Earles of Arundel, Earles of Worceſter, Earles of Derbie, the laſt Duke of Buckingham, and Barons of Stafford.

Iuſt behind Grafton lieth Sacy Forreſt ſtored with deere and fit for game. More Eaſtward, the country all over is beſprinkled with villages and little townes, among which, theſe are of greateſt name, Bliſworth, the habitation of the Wakes deſcended from that honorable race of the Barons of Wake and Eſtotevile: Pateſhull, which gave name to the moſt worſhipfull family in times paſt of the Pateſhuls: Greenes-Norton, ſo named of the Greenes men in the fore-going age right famous for their wealth: But it was called in foretime (if I be not deceiued) Norton Dany, which thoſe Greenes B held by Knights ſervice, as alſo a moitie of Aſheby Mares in this Countie, by ſervice To liſt vp their right hand toward the King vpon Chriſtmaſ-day euery yeare, whereſoeuer the King ſhal be in England. Alſo Wardon, an Hundred, which had Lords deſcended from Sir Guy of Reinbadcourt a Norman, whoſe inheritance came by the Folliots to Guiſcard Leddet, whoſe daughter Chriſtian bare unto her husband Henrie de Braibrooke many children: yet Guiſcard the eldeſt of them tooke to him the ſurname of Leddet from his mother. But ſhortly after, thoſe faire lands and poſſeſſions were by the femals parted betweene William and Iohn, both Latimers of Corby. From Iohn, the Griphins in this ſhire, and from William thoſe Latimers, Barons of good antiquity, in Yorkſhire, deduced their deſcent.

Sacy Forreſt. Foreſta de Salceto.

Fines 18. Rich. 2.

C Higher into the country Northward is the head of the river Auſona (for Avon in the Britiſh tongue is a generall name of all rivers) which the people dwelling thereby call Nen: and from the Weſt ſide of the ſhire, holdeth on his courſe with many reaches of his bankes, after a ſort through the middle part of this ſhire; and all the way along it doth comfortable ſervice. A notable river, I aſſure you, and if I have any ſight into theſe matters, fortified in times paſt with gariſons by the Romans. For, when as that part of Britaine on this ſide the river, was now in Claudius the Emperors time brought ſubject to the Romane government, ſo as the inhabitants thereof were called Socij Romanoram, that is, The Romans conſorts or aſſociats, & the Britans dwelling beyond the river oftentimes invaded this their country, and with great violence made D incurſions, and ſpoiled much: when as alſo that the Aſſociates themſelues who could better endure the Romans commands, than brooke their vices, otherwhiles conſpired with thoſe on the further ſide of the river: P. Oſtorius (as ſaith Tacitus) cinctos caſtris Antonam (Auſonas I would read if I might be ſo bold) & Sabrinam cohibere parat, that is, if I underſtand the place aright, He by placing forts and gariſons, hard by the rivers Antonæ, or Auſonæ rather, and Severn, determined to reſtraine and keepe in thoſe Britans on the further ſide; and theſe that were provincials and aſſociates, from conjoyning their forces together, and helping one another againſt the Romans. Now what river this ANTONA ſhould be no man is able to tell. Lipſius the very Phœbus of our age hath either driven away this miſt, or elſe verily a cloud E hath dimmed mine eie ſight. He pointeth with his finger to Northampton: and I am of opinion that this word Antona is cloſely crept into Tacitus, inſteed of Auſona, on which Northampton ſtandeth. For the very navill, heart and middle of England is counted to be neere vnto it, where out of one hill ſpring three great rivers running divers waies: Cherwell into the South; Leame, Weſtward, which as it maketh ſpeed to Severn, is ſtraight waies received by a ſecond Auſon; and this Auſona or Nen Eaſtward. Of which, theſe two Auſons ſo croſſe England overthwart, that whoſoever comes out of the North parts of the Iland muſt of neceſſity paſſe over one of theſe twaine. When Oſtorius therefore had fortified Severne, and theſe two Auſons, he had no cauſe to feare any danger out of Wales, or the North parts, to befall F unto his people, either Romans, or aſſociates; who at that time had reduced the nereſt and next part of the Iland onely into the forme of a Province: as elſewhere Tacitus himſelfe witneſſeth. Some of theſe forts of Oſtorius his making, may thoſe great fortifications and militarie fenſes ſeeme to be, which are heere ſeene at Gildsborough and Dantrey, betweene the ſpringheads of the two Auſons which runne divers waies, and where onely there is paſſage into the hither part of Britaine without any rivers

to

to hinder it. That fort at Gildsborough, is great and large, but this at Dantrey is greater and larger: For, being foure ſquare, upon an high hill from whence all the country beneath may be ſeene farre every way about, & having on the Eaſt ſide a mount, which they call Spelwell, it encloſeth within a banke caſt up by mans hand, more than one hundred acres of ground or thereabout. Within which the country people other whiles find coined peeces of money of the Roman Emperours, as proofes of the antiquitie thereof. Much deceived are they therefore, who will needs have it to be a worke of the Danes, and that of them, the towne under it, was named Dantrey: which being a through-fare well knowen at this day by reaſon of the Innes there, had a religious houſe of the Auſten Friers, that Sir H. de Faweſley founded, as I have read. A B

At the head of Aufona or Nen, ſtandeth Catesby that gave name to an ancient family, but now of foule tainted memorie, for a moſt horrible and damnable complot, never in any age exampled, which that Robert Cateſby of Aſhby S. Leger, the ſhame and indelible ſtaine of his houſe and name, deteſtably breathing forth ſauage cruelty in barbarous wiſe, and compaſſing impiouſly the deſtruction of Prince and Country, deviſed lately under a ſpecious pretext of religion.

Of whom, let all times be ſilent, leaſt by making mention of him, the foule ſtaine and blot of our age appeere unto poſterity; at the naming whereof we cannot chuſe but with horror grieue and grone againe, ſeeing the very dumbe and liveleſſe creatures ſeeme to be moved and troubled at ſo helliſh villanie imagined by him and his complices. C Hard by it, is Faweſley, where have dwelt a long time the Knightleies worſhipfull Knights deſcended from thoſe more ancient Knightleies of Gnowſhall in the County of Stafford: and more Eſtward hard by Nen, as yet very ſmall, there is Wedon in the ſtreet, ſometimes the royall ſeat of Wolpher King of the Mercians, and converted into a Monaſterie by his daughter Werburg a moſt holy Virgine: of whoſe miracles in driving away geeſe frō hence, ſome credulous writers have made many a tale. Verily I ſhould wrong the Truth, if I ſhould not thinke, (albeit I have thought other wiſe) that this Wedon is the very ſtation that Antonine the Emperour nameth BANNAVENNA, BENNAVENNA, BENNAVENTA, & once corruptly ISANNAVENTA: notwithſtanding there now remaine no expreſſe tokens of that name, conſidering how D Time changeth all, both names and things. For the diſtance from the next ſtations and baiting townes which were in ancient times, anſwereth juſt: and in the very name of BANNAVENNA, the name of the river Aufon, the head whereof is neere unto it in ſome ſort doth plainly diſcover it ſelfe. Likewiſe, the high port-way or Romane Street goeth directly from hence Northward with a bridge or cauſey oft broken and worne out; but moſt of all over againſt a Village named Creek, where it was of neceſſity that there ſhould be a bridge: but in other places the bridge ſheweth it ſelfe alſo as far as to Dowbridge, neere Lilborne moſt apparantly.

Bannavenna, which untruly is, called Iſannaventa and Iſanavatia.

Somwhat more Northward we ſaw Althorp, the habitation of the Spenſers knights, allied to very many and thoſe moſt honourable and worſhipfull families: out of which E houſe Sir Robert Spenſer the fifth Knight in a ſucceſſiue continued deſcent, a reſpectiue lover of vertue and learning, was by ovr moſt gratious Soveraigne King Iames advanced to the honour of Baron Spenſer of Wormeleighton. Hard by Althorp, Holdenby houſe, a faire patterne of ſtately and magnificent building maketh a faire glorious ſhew, which Sir Chriſtopher Hatton one of Queene Elizabeths privy Counſell, Lord Chancellour of England, and Knight of the Order of the Garter, built upon the lands and inheritance of his great grand mother, heire unto the family of the Holdenbeis, for the greateſt and laſt monument, (as himſelfe afterwards was wont to ſay) of his youth: A man, to ſay nothing of him but that which in truth is due, for religion and godlineſſe right devout, of approved faithfulneſſe to the State, of incorrupt equi- F tie: for almeſdeeds of all others moſt bountifull; and one, (which is not the leaſt part of his praiſe) that was moſt willing and ready to ſupport and maintaine learning. Who, as he lived a godly life, ſo as godly he ſlept in Chriſt: yet his commendation made knowne by the lightſome teſtimonie of letters, ſhall ſhine forth more cleerely than by that gorgeous monument right well beſeeming ſo great a perſonage, which Althorp, or Oldthorp. Baron Spenſer.

Sir Chriſtopher Hatton. He died anno 1591.

Sir

A Sir William Hatton, his adopted ſonne, conſecrated to his memory, in the Church of Saint Paule in London.

Beneath theſe places Nen paſſeth on forward with a ſtill and ſmall ſtreame, and anone taketh in a ſmall brooke from the North, and is thereby augmented: where, at the verie meeting and confluence of both, a City called after the river Northafandon, & ſhort, Northampton, is ſo ſeated, that on the Weſt ſide it is watered with the brooke, and on the South ſide with the foreſaid Nen. Which City I was of late eaſily induced to gheſſe, to haue beene that ancient BENNAVENTA; but if my conjecture miſſed the truth, the confeſſion of my errour may ſalue it. As for the B name, it may ſeeme to haue beene impoſed of the ſituation thereof upon the North banke of the river Aufon. The Citie it ſelfe which ſeemeth to haue beene built all of ſtone, is, I aſſure you, for houſes verie faire, for circuit of good largeneſſe, and walled about: and from the wall yee haue a goodly proſpect every way to a wide and ſpacious plaine country. Northampton.

On the Weſt ſide, it hath an old Caſtle, and the verie antiquity thereof giveth a grace unto it, built by Simon de Sancto Lizio, commonly called Senlyz, the firſt of that name Earle of Northampton: who alſo joyned unto it a beautifull church called Saint Andrews, for a place of his owne buriall: and, as men ſay, re-edified the towne: Simon alſo the younger, his ſonne, founded without the towne a Monaſtery C commonly called * De la prey, for Nunnes. During the Saxons Heptarchie, it ſeemeth to haue lien forlorne and of none account, neither haue writers made any where mention of it, in al thoſe depredations of the Danes, unleſſe it were when Sweno the Dane in a furious and outragious moode made moſt cruelly havock throughout all England: for then, as Henrie of Huntingdon recordeth, it was ſet on fire and burnt to the grounde. In the reigne of Saint Edward the Confeſſor, there were in it, as we finde in the ſurvey booke of England, LX. Burgeſſes in the Kings Domaine, having as many Manſions: Of theſe, in King William the Conquerours time, Foureteene laie waſt and voide, and fortie and ſeaven remained. Over and aboue theſe, there D were in the new burrough fortie Burgeſſes in the domaine of King William. After the Normans time, it valiantly withſtood the ſiege laied unto it by the Barons, when they diſquieted and troubled the whole Realme with iniurious wrongs and ſlaughters, beeing maliciouſly bent againſt king Iohn for private cauſes; which notwithſtanding they ſo cloked with pretenſes of religion and the common good, that they tearmed themſelues, The Armie of God and the holy Church: at which time, they ſay, that trench and rampier was made, which they call Hunſhil: but it ſtood not out with like ſucceſſe againſt Henry the Third their lawfull king, as it did againſt theſe Rebels: For, when thoſe Barons being nuzzelled up in ſedition, and rebellion, from hence diſplaied their banners & ſountled the battaile againſt him, hee made a breach through E the wall, and ſoone wonne it by aſſault. After this, diverſe times, like as before the kings held their Parliaments here, becauſe it ſtandeth very nere in the mideſt of England: and in the yeare after Chriſt was borne 1460. heere was a wofull and bloudy field fought; wherein (ſuch was the civil diviſion of England in it ſelfe) Richard Nevil Earle of Warwick, after many a noble man ſlaine, led away captiue that moſt unhappy king Henry the Sixth in a piteous ſpectacle who was now the ſecond time taken priſoner by his ſubiects. To conclude, the Longitude of Northampton our Mathematicians haue deſcribed by 22. degrees and 29. ſcruples: and the Latitude by 52. degrees and 13. ſcruples. From hence Nen maketh haſt away by Caſtle Aſhby, where Henry L. Compton began to build a faire ſightly houſe: cloſe unto which lieth Yardley Haſtings, ſo named of the Haſtings, ſometimes Earles of Pembroch, unto whom it F belonged. And to turne a little aſide, I may not omit Horton, when as K. Henry the 8. created Sir W. Par L. therof, vncle and Chamberlane to Q. Catharin Par, Baron Par of Horton, which honor ſhortly vaniſhed with him whē he left only daughters, who were maried into the families of Treſham, and Lane. But to returne: Nen goeth forward to Mercat Wellingborow, in old time Wedlingborough, and Wodlingborough, made a mercat by K. Iohn at the ſuit of the monks of Crowland; where there runneth into it a riveret comming down by Ruſhton and Newton, belonging to the Treſhams, by Geddington

1075. Regiſter of Saint Andrews.

* De Pratis.

Gods hoſt or Armie.

* Yardley. Lord Parr, of Horton.

alſo where the K. had a Caſtle, & where there remaineth yet a Croſſe erected in the honor of Q. Æleonor wife to King Edward the Firſt: by Boughton the ſeat of the Mont-acutes Knights: by Kettering a Mercat towne well frequented, neere unto which ſtandeth Rouwell much talked of for the horſe faire there kept: by Burton likewiſe the Barony (If I miſtake not the name) of Alane de Dinant: For, King Henry the Firſt gave unto him a Barony of that name in this ſhire, for that in ſingle fight he had ſlaine the French Kings champion at Gizors: and by Harrouden, the Lord whereof named Sir Nicolas Vaulx Captaine of Guines in Picardy, King Henry the Eighth created Baron Vaulx of Harrowden. A Kettering. The booke of Inquiſit. In the Exchequer.

Baron Vaulx.

From hence goeth the Aufon or Nen to Higham, a towne in times paſt of the Peverels, and after by them of the Ferrers, from whom it is named Higham Ferrers: who had heere alſo their Caſtle: the ruines and rubbiſh whereof are yet ſeene neere unto the Church. But, the excellent ornament of this place was Henry Chicheley Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who built All-ſoules Colledge in Oxford, and an other heere, wherein he placed ſecular Clerks, and Prebendaries, and with all an Hoſpitall for the poore. Then runneth it by Addington the poſſeſſion in old time of the Veres, and by Thorpſton commonly called Thrapſton, belonging likewiſe to them: and over againſt it Draiton, the houſe in the foregoing age of Sir H. Greene: but afterwards by his daughter, of Iohn and Edward Staffords, Earles of Wiltſhire; but now the habitation of the Lord Mordaunt unto whom it deſcended hereditarily from thoſe Greens noble Gentlemen and of right great name in this country in their time. B C

Higham Ferrers. Matthew Parker.

Then runneth it, in maner round about a proper little towne which it giveth name unto, Oundale they now call it corruptly in ſtead of Avondale: where there is nothing worth ſight, but a faire Church, & a free ſchoole for the inſtruction of children, and an Almeſhouſe for poore people, founded by Sir William Laxton, ſometime Major of London. Neere adjoyning to this, ſtands Barnewell, a little Caſtle, which now of late Sir Edward Mont-acute of the ancient family of the Mont-acutes, as may be collected by his Armes, hath repaired and beautified with new buildings. In times paſt it was the poſſeſſion of Berengary le Moigne, that is, Monke, and not, as ſome thinke, of Berengary of Aniou, the great Clerke, whoſe opinion of the Sacrament of the Lords ſupper, was condemned in a Sinode of an hundred and thirteene Biſhops aſſembled by the Biſhop of Rome. D

Oundale.

Barnwell.

After this, it paſſeth on by Fotheringhay Caſtle, environed on every ſide with moſt pleaſant Medowes, which in the raigne of Henry the Third, when the ſtrong holds encouraged the Lords and nobles to revolt, William Earle of Aumarl ſurpriſed upon the ſodaine, and laied all the Country about it waſt, as Matthew of Paris recordeth. At which time it belonged unto the Earles of Huntingdon who were of the royal race of Scotland. A good while after, K. Edward the third aſſigned it, as it were, for an inheritance or appennage as the French tearm it, unto his ſon Edmund of Langley, Duke of Yorke, who reedified the Caſtle, and made the higheſt fortification or Keepe thereof in forme of an horſe-fetter-locke, which both of it ſelfe, and with a Faulcon in it, was his Deuiſe, Empreſe, or Badge; as implying that he was locked up from all great hope, as a younger brother. His ſonne Edward Duke of Yorke in the ſecond yeere of Henry the Fift his reigne, and in the yeere of Chriſt 1415. (as appeareth by an inſcription there in rude and Barbarous verſes) founded a paſſing faire Collegiat Church, wherein himſelfe, when he was ſlaine in the battaile at Agincourt, as alſo Richard Duke of Yorke, his brothers ſonne, who loſt his life at Wakfield, and his wife Cecelie Nevil, had ſtately and ſumptuous tombes, which were profanely ſubverted together with the upper part of the Church, in King Edward the Sixth his time. Yet in memoriall of them, Queene Elizabeth comming thither commanded two Monuments to be erected in the nether part of the Church, that now ſtandeth: which notwithſtanding, (ſuch was their pinching and ſparing that had the charge of this worke) are thought ſcarce beſeeming ſo great Princes deſcending from Kings, and from whom Kings of England are deſcended. E F

Fotheringhay

Cecily Dutcheſſe of York.

* The forme of the Keepe beforeſaid built like a fetter-lock occaſioneth me to digreſſe a little, & I hope with your pardon, when the graveſt authours in as ſmal matters have done done the like: Edmund of Langley Duke of Yorke who built that Keepe, and garniſhed the glaſſe-windowes there with fetter-locks, when he ſaw his ſons being young ſcholers gazing upon the painted windows, asked them what was Latine for a fetter-lock? They ſtudying and looking ſilently one upon another, not able to anſwer: If you cannot tell me, ſaith he, I will tell you, Hic, hæc, hoc Taceatis, that is, Hic, hæc, hoc, be ſilent and qu et: and therewithall added, God knoweth what may happen hereafter. This King Edward the Fourth his Great-grand child reported publickly, when he having atteined the crown created Richard his younger ſonne Duke of Yorke, and then commanding that he ſh ould vſe for his Badge the Fetter-locke open to verifie the preſage of his Great-grand father. But this by the way.

Fetter-lock.

The ſaid Cecilie mother to King Edward the Fourth ſaw plainly within the compaſſe of a few yeares what diſports vnruly and powerfull Fortune (pardon the word, for I acknowledge that God ruleth all) maketh herſelfe out of the miſeries of the mighty. For ſhe ſaw Richard Duke of Yorke her huſband, even then when he thought himſelfe ſure of the Kingdome, and her ſonne the Earle of Rutland, ſlaine together in a bloudy fought field, and ſome few yeares after her eldeſt ſonne Edward the Fourth enioying the regall Crowne, deprived of the ſame, recovering it againe, and taken away by untimely death, when he had before made away her ſecond ſonne and his owne brother George Duke of Clarence. After that, ſhe ſaw her other ſonne Richard Duke of Gloceſter aſpiring to the crowne and making way to it by that lamentable murdering of his nephewes, and ſlandering of her his owne mother, (for he charged her openly with the greateſt diſhonor incident to a Lady:) and afterward ſhe ſaw him when he was poſſeſſed of the Kingdome, within a while ſlaine in battaile: And theſe her miſeries were ſo linked together, that the longer ſhe lived the greater ſorrow ſhe felt, and every day was more dolefull than other. As for that diſaſtre which even heere befell unto another moſt mighty Prince Mary Queene of Scots, I had leifer it ſhould be enwrapped up in ſilence, than once ſpoken of: Let it be forgotten quite, if it be poſſible: if not, yet be it hidden, as it may in ſilence. Under the beſt Princes ſome there are who being once armed with authority, know how by ſecret ſlights to ſet a goodly ſhew and faire pretenſe of conſcience and religion, therby to cloke their owne private deſignes: And there be againe, that ſincerely and from the heart tender true religion, their Princes ſecurity, yea and (which is the higheſt rule and law of all) the publike ſafety. Neither can it be denied, but that even the beſt Princes themſelues are otherwhiles violently caried away, as good Pilotes with tempeſts, againſt their wils whither they would not. But what they doe as Princes and Kings, let vs leave to God who onely hath powre over kings.

Durobriva.

Nen beeing now come unto the skirts of Huntingdon-ſhire, running under a faire ſtone bridge at Walmeſford, paſſeth by DVROBRIVAE, a right ancient City, which beeing called in the Engliſh Saxon tongue Dormanceſter, as I ſayd before, tooke up a great ſpace of ground on both bankes of the river in both Counties. For, the little village Caſter which ſtands a mile off from the river, may ſeem to haue beene a part of it, by the pauements there found, wrought checker wiſe with ſmall ſquare quarels; although on the Church wall wee reade this inſcription bearing date of a later time.

Caſter.

XV. KL. MAII DEDICATIO HVIVS ECCLESIAE MCXXIIII.

THE FIFTEENTH DAY BEFORE THE KALENDS OF MAIE, IN THE YEARE ONE THOVSAND ONE HVNDRED TWENTIE FOVRE, [WAS] THE DEDICATION OF THIS CHVRCH.

And doubtleſſe, of greater name and note it was: for, in the corne fields adjoyning, which in ſteede of Dormanton, they call Normanton fields, ſo many peeces of Romane coine are turned out of the ground, that a man would verilie thinke they had beene ſowed there: and two rode-waies, whereof the cauſeys are yet evident to bee ſeene, went from hence, the one called Forty-foot-way, Lollham-bridges.

Upton.

Peterborough.

becauſe it was forty-foot-broade, unto Stanford: the other named Long-ditch and High-ſtreat by Lollham-bridges, (bridges I aſſure you of great antiquity, whereof eleven arches are in ſight, now chinking and chawning for age) through Weſt Deeping, into Lincoln-ſhire. At the very diviſion and parting of theſe two Port-waies ſtandeth Vpton highly ſituate, whereupon it tooke alſo that name: where Sir Robert Wingfield Knight, deſcended from that ancient family of the Wingfields, which hath brought foorth ſo many worſhipfull and worthy Knights, hath a faire houſe with moſt louely walkes. A

From DVROBRIVAE the river Auſon or Nen paſſeth on to Peterburgh ſeated in the very angle or nouke of this ſhire, where writers report there hath beene a gulfe B or whirlpole in the river, of exceeding great depth, called Medeſwell, and a towne hard by it named thereupon Medeſwelhamſted and Medeſhampſted; which towne, as we read in Robert de Swapham, was built in an excellent fine good place, having of the one ſide fennes, and paſſing good waters, and of the other many goodly woods, medowes, and paſtures: faire and beautifull to the eie every way, and not acceſſable by land ſave onely on the weſt ſide. The river Nen runneth by at the South ſide of the Burrough; in the middle of which river, there is a place as it were a gulfe ſo deepe and cold withall, that even in ſummer no ſwimmer is able to ducke or dive unto the bothom. Yet is it never for all that frozen over in Winter: for there is a ſpring there, whence the water welleth out. This place they called in old time Meddeſwell; untill that Wolpher King of the Mercians built there a Monaſtery in honour of Saint Peter. And ſeeing the place was all a mariſh-ground, he laied the foundation, as that Robert writeth, with mighty huge ſtones, ſuch as eight yoke of Oxen would hardly draw one of them, which I ſaw with mine owne eyes, ſaith hee, when this Monaſterie was deſtroied. Afterward, of this Monaſterie dedicated to Saint Peter, it began to be called PETRIBVRGVS, or PETROPOLIS, that is, Peterborow or Burgh, and the ſaid Monaſtery was very famous and renowned. The originall occaſion, and the building whereof, I haue thought it worth my labour briefly to put downe, out of the ſaid Robert de Swapham, a writer of good antiquity. Peada, the ſonne of Penda, who was the firſt Chriſtian king of the Mercians, in the yeare of grace 546. for the propagation of Chriſtian religion, laid the foundation of a monaſtery at Medeſhamſted in the Girvians or Fen-country, which hee could not finiſh, for that by the wicked practiſe of his mother, he was made away. C D

After Peada ſucceeded his brother Wolpher, who beeing moſt averſe from Chriſtian religion, murdered Wolphald and Rufin his owne ſonnes with cruel and barbarous immanitie, becauſe they had devoted themſelues unto Chriſt, and embraced his religion. But himſelfe ſome few yeares after, embracing Chriſtian religion, for to expiat and waſh away the ſtaine of that his impiety with ſome good and godly worke, ſet in hand to build up this Monaſterie which his brother had begunne: which through the helpe of his brother Etheldred, of Kineburga alſo and Kineſwith his ſiſters, beeing fully finiſhed in the yeare of our Lord 633. hee E conſecrated unto Saint Peter, endowed it with ample revenewes, and ordeined Sexwulfi a right Godly and devout man (who principally adviſed him to this worke) the Firſt Abbat thereof.

This Monaſterie flouriſhed afterward, and had the name and opinion in the world of great holineſſe, for the ſpace of two hundered and foureteene yeares or thereabout, untill thoſe moſt heavy and wofull times came of the Danes, who made ſpoile and waſt of all: For, then were the monkes maſſacred, and the Monaſterie quite overthrowne lay buried, as one would ſay, many yeares together in the owne rubbiſh and ruines. At the laſt, about the yeare of our Lord 960. Ethelwold Biſhop of Wincheſter, who wholy gaue himſelfe to the furtherance of mona- F ſticall profeſſion began to re-edifie it, having the helping hand eſpeciall of K. Eadgar, and Adulph the kings Chancellor, who upon a prick of conſcience and deepe repentance, for that hee and his wife together lying in bed aſleepe had overlaied and ſmothred the little infant their onely ſon, laid upon the reedifying of this monaſterie all the wealth he had: and when it was thus rebuilt, he became Abbat thereof.

From

A From which time, it was of high eſtimation and name, partly for the great riches it had, and in part for the large priviledges which it enjoied: although in the reigne of William the Conquerour, Herward an Engliſhman being proclaimed traitour and outlawed, made a rode out of the Iſle of Ely and rifled it of all the riches that it had gathered together: againſt whom Turold the Abbot, erected the fort Mont-Turold: Yet was it eſteemed exceeding wealthy euen unto our fathers daies, when, king Henrie the Eighth thruſt out the Monkes in all places, alleaging that they declining from the ordinances, which thoſe holy and ancient Monkes held, waſted in riot and exceſſe the goods of the Church, which was the Patrimonie and inheritance
B of the poore; and in their places erected here a Biſhoprick aſſigning thereunto this county & Rutlandſhire for his Dœceſe: and placed withall a Deane and certaine Prebendaries. So that of a monaſterie it became a Cathedrall Church; which if you well conſider the building, is for the very antiquity thereof, goodly to behold. The fore-front carieth a majeſtie with it, and the Cloiſters are very large, in the glaſſe windowes whereof is repreſented the hiſtorie of Wolpher the founder, with the ſucceſſion of the Abbots. Saint Maries Chappel is a goodly large building, ful of curious worke, and the quire faire: wherein two as infortunate Queenes as any other, Katharine of Spaine repudiated by K. Henry the Eighth, and Marie Queene of Scotland being enterred, found reſt and repoſe there, from all their miſeries.

Mont-Turold.

C Beneath Peterburgh, the river Aufon or Nen, which by this time is gone from his ſpring-head much about forty fiue miles, and carrieth a long with him all rils, brookes, and land flouds occaſioned by raine, that hee hath taken into his chanels, is divided ſundry waies. And finding no way to cary his ſtreame, by ſpreading his waters all abroad in winter time, yea and other whiles moſt part of the yeare, overflowеth all the plaine country, ſo as it ſeemeth to bee nothing but a vaſt ſea lying euen and level, with ſome few Iſlands that beare up their heads and appeere aboue the water. The cauſe of ſuch inundation the people inhabiting thereby, alledge to bee this, for that of the three chanels or draines, by which ſo great ſtore of water was
D wont to be iſſued into the ſea, the firſt that went directly into the ſea by Thorney Abbay, and then a part by Clow Croſſe and Crowland: the ſecond alſo by the trench cut out by Morton Biſhop of Ely, called the New leam, and then by Wiſbich; haue along time beene forlet and neglected: and ſo the third which goeth downe by Horſey-bridge, Witleſmer, Ramſey-mere and Salters-load, is not able to receiue ſo much water: whereby it breaketh forth with more violence upon the flats adioyning. And the country complaineth for treſpaſſe done unto them, as well by thoſe that haue not ſcoured the ſaid draines, as by them that haue turned the ſame aſide to their private uſes: and as the Reatines ſaid ſome time, ſo doe they, That Nature herſelfe hath well provided for mans vſe; in that ſhee hath given all rivers their courſes, and iſſues; and aſwell their in-lets into the Sea, as their heads and ſpringes. But thus much of this matter
E may ſeeme to ſome over-much.

The Fennes.

In this place is the County leaſt in breadth: for, betweene Nen and the river Welland the one limite on the North ſide, there are ſcarce fiue miles. Upon Welland, which Aethelward an old writer called Weolod, neere unto the ſpring head, is Braibrok Caſtle, built by Robert May, aliàs, De Braybroke, a moſt inward minion of king Iohn: whoſe ſonne Henrie having married Chriſtian Ledet an inheritrice of a great eſtate, his eldeſt ſonne adopted himſelfe into the ſurname of the Ledet: from one of whoſe Nieces by his ſonne, as I ſaid before, it came unto the Latimers, and by them unto the Griphins, whoſe inheritance now it is. Neere unto it among the woods I ſaw ſome
F few reliques of a Monaſterie, called in times paſt De Diviſis, and afterward Pipwell; which William Buttevillein founded in the reigne of Henrie the Second for Ciſtertian monkes. From thence might Rockingham bee ſeene, were it not for the woods, a Caſtle ſometime of the Earles of Aumarle, built by king William Conqueror, at what time it was a waſt, (as wee finde in his Domeſday booke) fortified with rampier and Bulwarkes, and a duple range of battlements, ſituate upon the ſide of an hill within a woody foreſt, which thereupon is named Rockingham foreſt.

Braibroke. Lords of Braibroke.

Pipwell.

Rockingham.

Haring-worth. See Ashby De la-Zouch, in Leicester-shire.

After this it runneth beside Haringworth the seat in old time of the Cantlows and now of the Lord Zouch: who descended from Eudo a younger sonne of Alan de la Zouch, of Ashby De la Zouch, haue growne up to a right honorable familie of Barons; whose honour and state was much augmented by mariage with one of the heires of Cantlow*, as also with an other of Baron Saint Maur, who likewise drew his pedigree from the heire of the Lord Zouch de Ashby, and the Lovels Lords of Castel-Cary in Somerset-shire. A Barons Zouch *De Cante-lupo.

Peane.

Here also I saw Deane, belonging in ancient times to the Deanes, afterwards to the Tindals, which place is worth the remembrance, if it were but for this, that it is now a proper and faire dwelling house of the Brudenells: out of which familie Sir Edmund Brudenel, late deceased, was a passing great lover and admirer of venerable Antiquity. B

Barons de Engain.

The familie likewise of Engain, which was both ancient and honorable had their seat hereby at Blatherwic (where now the Stafords of knights degree inhabit, who descended from Ralph the first Earle of Stafford) and those Engaines chaunged their Castle named Humel before time, into a Monasterie called Finisheved. Their issue male failed about two hundred years since: but of their heires the eldest was wedded unto Sir Iohn Goldington, the second to Sir Laurence Pabenham, and the third to Sir William Bernak, al right worthy knights.

Or Hymell.

Apthorpe.

Here also is to bee seene Apthorp, the seat of a most worthy knight, Sir Anthonie Mildmay, whose father Sir Walter Mildmay, late one of Queene Elizabeths privie counsell, for his vertue, wisdome, piety, and bountie to learning and learned men, by founding Emanuel Colledge in Cambridge, hath worthily deserved to bee registred among the best men in this our age. C

Thornhaugh.

Hard by standeth Thornhaugh sometimes belonging to the familie De Sancto Medardo, contracted into Semarc, and now to the right honorable Sir William Russel, sonne to Francis Earle of Bedford descended from Semare, whom King Iames for his vertues and faithfull service in Ireland whiles hee was Lord Deputy there, advanced to the dignity of Baron Russel of Thornhaugh.

Welledon. Basset of Welledon.

Neither is the towne Welledon to bee passed over in silence, considering that it went in old time for a Baronie, which by Mawde the daughter and heire of Geffrey de Ridell (who together with king Henrie the First his sonne was drowned) did descend to Richard Basset sonne of Ralph Basset, Lord Iustice of England, in whose race it continued unto king Henry the Fourth his daies: For then, by the females it accrued to the Knevets and Alesburies. D

Slate-stones.

Welland beeing past Haringworth goeth to visit Colliweston, where Ladie Margaret Countesse of Richmond, king Henry the Seaventh his mother built a goodly faire and stately house: Under which, the neighbour inhabitants use to digge great plenty of sclate stones for their buildings. From whence Wittering Heath, a plaine, runneth out farre into the East, wherein the people there dwelling, report, that the Danes long since were discomfited in a memorable battaile and put to flight. Now by this time is Welland come to Burghley whereof the most prudent and right honorable Councellour Sir William Cecil, Lord high Treasurer of England, yea a singular treasure and supporter of the same, received the title of Baron Burghley, for his great good deserts, at the hands of Queene ELIZABETH. Which title hee adorned with the lustre of his vertues, and beautified this place with magnificent sumptuous buildings, adjoining thereto a large Parke encompassed about with a stone wall of a great circuite. Beneath it, there are ancient quarreis of stone at Bernack, out of which the Abbaies of Peterburgh and of Ramseie were built. For heere (to write the verie words out of the historie of Ramseie) The toyling strength of the Quarriers is often tried and held to worke: yet ever still there remaineth worke for them behinde, wherein they beeing refreshed betweene whiles with rest, may bee excercised and kept in ure. And thus wee reade in the Charter of king Edward the Confessour: In consideration of foure thousand Eeles in Lent, the Monkes of Ramsey shall have out of the Territorie of Saint Peter so much square astiler stone, as they neede, at Berneck, and of rough building stone for wals, at Burch. Under Berneck that high-way made E

Burghley. *

F

A made by the Romans, which the neighbour inhabitants, of the breadth that it carrieth, call The fourty foot-way, from Caſter to Stanford cutteth and divideth this ſhire, and is to be ſeene with an high cauſey, eſpecially by the little wood of Bernak, where it hath a beacon ſet upon the very ridge, and ſo runneth foorth along by Burghley Park wall toward Stanford. Fortifoot-way.

Some fiue miles hence, Welland running downe by Maxey Caſtle, belonging ſometime to the noble houſe of Wake, and by Peag-Kirke, (where, in the primitive Church of the Engliſh Nation, Pega an holy woman who gave name to that place, and ſiſter of S. Guthlak, with other Nuns and devout virgins by their life and example gave good B documents of piety and chaſtity; commeth to the Fennes ſo often mentioned. And for as much as the banke on the South ſide thereof is in many places neglected, the river lieth ſore upon the lands there about with great detriment: and thus being put out of his owne channell that before time went by Spalding, he entereth cloſely into Nen or Aufon, and over-chargeth it exceedingly. Maxey. Peag-Kyrk. Ingulfus.

Now the leſſe Avon, which is the other of the limits, as I ſaid, of this ſhire Northward, but ſerveth for a limit onely about fiue or ſix miles in length, breaking out of the ground at Avon-well by Naſeby, neere by the Spring-head of Welland, runneth Weſtward by Suleby ſometimes an Abbay of Black-Monkes, and by Stanford upon Avon, the habitation of the Caves family, out of which there is ſpread a notable of- C ſpring with many branches in all that tract adjoyning: alſo by Lilborne, the ſeat in times paſt of the Canvilles. Which, that it hath beene in old time a Manſion place or Station of the Romans, I am induced to thinke, by the ſite thereof hard by one of their Port-waies, by the ancient trenches there, and a little piked hill caſt up: into which when of late daies ſome digged in hope of old hid treaſure, in ſtead of gold they found coles. And when this river being as yet but ſmall is once gone under Dow-bridge, it leaveth Northampton-ſhire and entreth Warwick-ſhire. By thoſe coles digged foorth from under the ſaid hill, what if I ſhould conjecture that this hill was raiſed up for a limit or bound-marke, ſeeing Siculus Flaccus writeth, that either aſhes, or coles, D or pot-ſherds, or broken glaſſes, or bones halfe burnt, or lime, or plaſter, were wont to be put under land-markes and limits: and S. Auguſtine writeth thus of coles: Is it not a wonderfull thing (ſaith he) whereas conſidering coles be ſo brickle, that with the leaſt blow they breake, with the leaſt cruſhing they are cruſhed; yet no time, be it never ſo long conquereth them: in ſo much as they that pitch Land-markes and limits, were wont to couch them under-neath, to convince any litigious fellow whatſoever, that ſhould come never ſo long time after, and avouch that a limit was not there pitched. And ſo much the rather incline I to this my coniecture, becauſe they that have written of limits, doe write that certaine hillocks or piles of earth which they tearmed Botontines, were ſet in limits: ſo that I ſuppoſe moſt of theſe mounts and round hils which we every where ſee and call E Burrowes, were for this purpoſe raiſed, and that aſhes, coles, pot-ſherds &c. may be found under them, if they digged downe a good depth into the earth. Bounds or Meere marks in old time. Lib. de Civit. Dei 21. c. 4. Botontines. Hence peradventure come our Buttings.

The firſt Earle that this County had to my knowledge, was Waldeof (ſonne of that warlike Siward) who being alſo Earle of Huntingdon, for his diſloyall treachery unto William the Conquerour, loſt his head: leaving two daughters onely behind him, by Iudith the Conquerours niece by a ſiſter of his mothers ſide. Simon de Saint Liz, being skornfully rejected by Iudith the mother for that he was lame-legged, married Mawd the eldeſt daughter, and he built Saint Andrewes Church and the Caſtle at Northampton. After him ſucceeded his ſonne, Simon the Second, who a long time was in ſuite about his mothers poſſeſſions with David King of Scots his mothers ſecond husband: and having ſided with King Stephen, in the yeere of our Lord 1152. depar- F ted this life with this teſtimoniall that went of him: A youth full fraught with all vnlawfull wickedneſſe, and as full of all vnſeemely lewdneſſe. His ſonne Simon the Third, having gone to law with the Scots for his right to the Earledome of Huntingdon, waſted all his eſtate, and through the gratious goodneſſe of King Henry the Second, maried the daughter and heire of Gilbert de Gaunt Earle of Lincolne: and in the end having recovered the Earldom of Huntingdon, and diſſeized the Scots, died childleſſe Earles of Northampton. The life of Waldeof.

in

in the yeere 1185. Whereas ſome haue lately ſet downe Sir Richard Gobion to haue beene Earle of Northampton afterward; I finde no warrant thereof either in Record, or Hiſtory: Onely I finde, that Sir Hugh Gobion was a ringleader in that rebellious rable which held Northampton againſt King Henry the Third, and that the inheritance of his houſe came ſhortly after by mariage to Butler of Wood-hall, and Turpin &c. But this is moſt certaine that King Edward the third created William de Bohun a man of approved valour, Earle of Northampton: and when his elder brother Humfrey de Bohun, Earle of Hereford and of Eſſex, High Conſtable alſo of England, was not ſufficient in that Warlike age, to beare that charge of the Conſtable, he made him alſo High Conſtable of England. After him his ſonne Humfrey ſucceeding in the Earledome of Northampton, as alſo in the Earldomes of Hereford and of Eſſex, for that his unckle died with iſſue, begat two daughters; the one beſtowed in mariage upon Thomas of Woodſtock, the youngeſt ſonne of King Edward the Third; the other upon Henry of Lancaſter, Duke of Hereford, who afterwards attained to the crowne by the name of K. Henry the Fourth. The daughter of the ſaid Thomas of Woodſtock brought by her marriage this title of Northampton with others, into the family of the Staffords. But when they afterwards had loſt their honours and dignities, King Edward the Sixth honoured Sir William Parr Earle of Eſſex, a moſt accompliſhed Courtier, with the title of Marquiſſe of Northampton: who within our remembrance ended this life iſſuleſſe. And while I was writing and peruſing this worke, our moſt ſacred Soveraigne King Iames in the yeere of our ſalvation, 1603. vpon one and the ſame day advanced Lord Henry Howard brother to the laſt Duke of Norfolke, a man of rare and excellent wit, and ſweet-fluent eloquence, ſingularly adorned alſo with the beſt ſciences, prudent in Counſell, and provident withall, to the ſtate of Baron Howard of Marnehil, and the right honourable name, title, ſtile, and dignity of Earle of Northampton.

A Jo. B C D E

There belong unto this ſhire Pariſhes 326.

LEICES- F

LECESTRIÆ
COMITATVS. SIVE
Leicestershyre. PARS
OLIM CORITANORVM.

DARBIÆ PARS

LECESTRIÆ PARS

STAFFORDIÆ PARS

WARWICÆ PARS

NORTHAMPTONIÆ PARS

NOMINA HVNDREDORVM IN COMITATV LECESTRIÆ

A. West Gostcoate Hundred
B. Sparkenhoe Hundred
C. Guthlakeston Hundred
D. Gartery Hundred
E. Est Gostcoate Hundred
F. Framland Hundred

Trent flu.
Hemington Ratcliff Lockington
Castle Dunington
Melborne castle
Isley walton Wilston Keaworth
Kinston Remston
Bredon sup monte Dyseworth Normanton
Hatherne
Tong Langley
Stanforde
Santon harold Worthington
Merill grange Longwhatton Newbold
Belton
Dishley grange Thorpacre Knightsthorp
Collorton
Osgathorp Thrinkston
Ouerton sausy Shapshead Garenton
Cote Blackbrok Loughborow
Ashby dela zouch
Grace dieu Swannington
Alton grange Burley pk Charnwood Whitwike Packington Raunston Dunington
Bewmanor
Charley forrest
Stretton
Appleby pva
Normanton
Hugglescote
Barndon hill
Clifton
Thorpe
Smibston
Swepston Vlueseroft Woodhouse
Mount Sorrell
Horse poole grange Appleby Snareston
Newton
Nethercote Heather
Pickering grange Seckington
Newton
Tamworth
Shuttenton
Auste Hoggsnorton
Shaxton
Oddeston Ibston Markfelde Thorndon Bradgate Swithland
Orton sup monte Bilston
Bramcote Amington
Gopshill Cunston Nelson Bagworth
Whittington grange Cropston Thurcaston
Poole Poolesworth
Morebarne
Carleton Barlestone
Newtoune
Ansty Twicross
Whellesborow Osbasston Stanston Shepey
Willincote Grindon
Nanchy
Newbold verdon Groby Burstall
Coton Botchestone
Shepey pva Temple Bosworth Glenfelde Dessorde
Patby
Kirby Abbey gate
Holt Whitterton
Sence flu.
Ratcliff culy Sibsdon Shenton
Codeby
Barne pk
Brantingthorpe als Westcotts
Ypton
Peckleton
Leicester forrest
Atherston
Atterton
Sutton cheny Witherley
Kirby malory MANVESEDVM
Fenny Draton
Dadlington
Lubsthorpe Stapleton
Toly pva
Braunston
Nether Wheataker
Bentley
Lindley
Stoke Thurlaston Caucott
Over Wheataker Aunsley Barwell
Erlshilton
Normanton turvill
Enderby Elston
Knyghton
Higham
Wikin Elmsthorp Huncot Croft
Glen pua
Anker flu.
Hinckley
Potters marston Narborow
Whetston Shistoke
Nun Eaton Sketchley
Burbach
Stony stanton
Thorp pva
Blaby Wigston
Watling Street
Sence flu.
Asfley
Coton Sapcotte
Aston flamvill Cosby Countisthorp Ardbery
Burton
Sharnesford Button
Thorpe
Copston
Wigston
Braughton
Asfley
Willoughby waterles
Foston
High cross
VENONES Wybtoft Frolesworth
Leare
Dunton basset
Cloudesley bush
Vlstorp Clabroke
Asfby pva
Asfby mag:
Peatling
Peatling pua Wethibroke
Newnham
Byteswell
Grilmorton
Walton
Monks kirby Willey
Lutterworth
Kimcote
Swift Benford br:
Walcote
Misterton
Chester ouer
Church ouer
Cotesbach
Husband B.
Harborow
Shawell
Swynesforde
Cosford Brounsouer
Newton Cattorp Newbold
Clifton Lilborne
Stanford
Rugby Bilton
Hilmerton
Avon flu:
this Rom: Watling Street way

NOTTINGHAMIÆ PARS

Snyte flu.
Sutton
Normanton Bottesforde Granby Muston Langer
Redmell Barston
Beuer Plunger
Hickling
Stathern
Beuer Castle Willoughby
Over Broughton Harby Clauston
Wymeswold Dalby
Burton wood
Dalby on ye would Wartnaby
Nether Broughton Hoose Castwell
Deane flu.
Knipton
Harston Braunston
Eaton
Croxton
Walton
Holewell Grimston
Abketelby Wikeham Godeby
Scalforde Caudwell Stonesby Saltby Shauldby Segraue Saxilby Welby Ragdale Asorby
Goldsmiths grange Syleby
Hoby
Waltham on ye would Syroxton Thrussington Frisby
Sysonby
Thorp Arnold
Rateliffe
Kirkby bellers Cossou Sewsterne
Rotherby Eyketeby Wiuerby Fraby Cussinton Brokesby Brentingby
Garthorpe
Melton mowbray
Buckminster
Reasby
Gaddesby
Ey flu.
Saxby Wimondham
Byssou
Queniboro
Burton lazers
Thistleton
Dalby Chaulcomb
Staplefordc
Edmonthorpe
Barkby thorpe
Barkby Barsby
Margret ouerton
Ashby foliuile
Dalby ꝑva Leesthorpe
Whitsonden
Beby Crawston
Thorpesachfelde
Pickwell
Ashwell
Ttghe Baggraue Twiforde Burrow
Langham Humberston
Keame Crawston
Sotterby Colderton
Berkthorpe
Cotesmore
Hungerton
Markfeld Newbold Scraptoft
Queniby Loseby Owerton Bushby Burdett Newbold
Fluices pk Thurnby Tilton Knauston
Okeham
Engarsby Withcok
Halsted Braunston
Blisdon Haughton
Launde
Staughton Skeuington Broke Gaulby
Tugby Laddington Lyfeld Odeby Stretton ma:
Norton
Frisby
RVTLANDIÆ
Stretton pua Cathorp forrest
Glen mag:
Rolleston
Burton ouery Nosely
Godeby
Alexton
Belton
Ridlington
Newtonharton Ilston
Stokerston Wardlow
Carleton Curlew
Shankton
Hallaton
PARS Fleckney
Kibworthharcourt
Blason
Horninghold
Kibworthbeuchap
Westerby Stantonwiell
Bradley
Thur Langton
Church Langton Slauston
Holt Smiton Dryfton
Welland flu.
Sheasby Saddington
W. Langton
Gloweston
PARS
E. Langton Draiton
Easton
Knaptoft
Laughton Craunow Medborne
Gumley Foxton Thorplaugton Welham
Bringcast
Rokingham Cast: Mousley
Lubbenham
Weston
Bowdon mag:
Sutton
Thedingworth
Harburgh
Bowdon pua Howthorpe
Merston trussell Sibbertoft
LANTONIÆ

Scala Milliarium
Christophorum Saxton descrip:
William Kip Sculp:

A

LEICESTER-SHIRE.

B ON the Northside of Northampton-ſhire boundeth LEICESTER-SHIRE, called in that book wherin William Conqueror did ſet downe his ſurvey of England, Ledceſter-ſhire: a champian country likewiſe throughout, bearing corne in great plenty, but for the moſt part without woods. It hath bordering upon it on the Eaſt ſide, both Rutlandſhire and Lincolneſhire, on the North Nottingham & Derbieſhires, and Warwickſhire on the Weſt. (For, the high rode way made by the Romanes called Watlingſtreet, directly running along the Weſt skirt, ſeperateth it from Warwickſhire:) and on the South ſide, as I noted even now, lieth Northamptonſhire. Through the middle part thereof paſſeth the river Soar taking his way toward the Trent. but over the Eaſt part a little river called Wreke gently wandereth, which at length findeth his way into the foreſaid Soar.

On the South ſide, where it is divided on the one hand with the river Avon the leſſe, and on the other with the river Welland, we meete with nothing worth relation, unleſſe it be, on Wellands banke, (whiles he is yet but ſmall and newly come from his head) with Hauerburgh commonly called Harborrow, a towne moſt celebrate heereabout for a faire of cattaile there kept: and as for Carleton, as one would ſay, the huſband-mens towne, (that is not farre from it) wherein (I wote not whether it be worth the relating) all in maner that are borne, whether it be by a peculiar propertie of the ſoile, or the water, or elſe by ſome other ſecret operation of nature, have an ilfavoured, untunable, and harſh maner of ſpeech, fetching their words with very much adoe deepe from out of the throat, with a certaine kind of wharling.

Watling-ſtreet.

D That Romane ſtreete way aforeſaid, (the cauſey whereof being in ſome other places quite worne and eaten away, heere moſt evidently ſheweth it ſelfe) paſſeth on directly as it were by a ſtreight line Northward, through the Weſt ſide of this province. The very tract of which ſtreet I my ſelfe diligently traced and followed even from the Tamis to Wales, purpoſely to ſeeke out townes of ancient memorie: (laugh you will perhaps, at this my painfull and expenſſull diligence, as vainly curious:) neither could I repoſe my truſt vpon a more faithfull guide for the finding out of thoſe ſaid townes which Antonine the Emperour ſpecifieth in his Itinerary. This Street-way, being paſt Dowbridge, where it leaveth Northamptonſhire behind it, is interrupted, firſt with the river Swift, that is indeed but ſlow, although the name import ſwiftneſſe, which it maketh good onely in the winter moneths. The bridge ouer it now

E called Branſford and Benſford bridge, which heere conjoined in times paſt this way, having beene of long time broken downe, hath beene the cauſe that ſo famous a way for a great while was the leſſe frequented; but now, at the common charge of the country, it is repaired. Vpon this way lieth of the one ſide, Weſtward, Ceſter-Over, (but it is in Warwickſhire) a place worth the naming, were it but in regard of the Lord thereof Sir Foulke Grevill, a right worſhipfull and worthy Knight: although the very name it ſelfe may witneſſe the antiquity, for, our anceſtors added this word Ceſter to no other places but only Cities. On the other ſide of the way Eaſtward, hard by the water Swift which ſpringeth neere Knaptoft the ſeat of the Turpins a Knightly houſe deſcended from an heire of the Gobions, lieth Miſterton belonging to the an-

F cient family of the Poulteneis, who tooke that name of Poulteney a place now decaied within the ſaid Lordſhip. Neere to it is Lutterworth a mercate towne the poſſeſſion in times paſt of the Verdons, which onely ſheweth a faire Church which hath beene encreaſed by the Feldings of Knights degree and ancient gentrie in this ſhire. That famous Iohn Wickliffe was ſometime perſon of this Church, a man of a ſingular, polite, and well wrought wit, moſt converſant alſo in the holy Scripture: who for that he had ſharpned the neb of his pen againſt the Popes authority the Church of Rome, Ceſter-Over.

Ceſter.

Lutterworth.

Iohn Wickliffe died 1387

and

and religious men, was not onely in his life time moſt grievouſly troubled, but alſo A one and forty yeeres after his death, his dead corps was cruelly handled, being by warrant from the Councell of Siena turned out of his graue and openly burned. Nei-
A ſpring turning ſtrawes and ſtickes into ſtones. ther is it to be forgotten that neere to this towne is a ſpring ſo cold that within a ſhort time it turneth ſtrawes and ſtickes into ſtones.

From that Benſford bridge, the fore-ſaid old High way goeth on to High-croſſe, ſo called, for that thereabout ſtood ſometime a Croſſe, in ſteed of which, is erected now a very high poſt with props and ſupporters thereto. The neighbours there dwelling reported unto me, that the two principall high-waies of England did heere cut one another overthwart, and that there ſtood a moſt floriſhing Citie there, named Cley Ceſter. Cleyceſter, which had a Senate of Aldermen in it, and that Cleybrooke, almoſt a mile B Cleybrooke. off, was part of it: alſo, that on both ſides of the way, there lay under the furrowes of the corne fields great foundations and ground workes of foure ſquare ſtone: alſo that peeces of Roman money were very often turned up with the plough: although above the ground, as the poet ſaith, Etiam ipſæ periere ruinæ, that is, Even the very ruins are periſhed and gone. Theſe preſumptions together with the diſtance of this place from Bennones. BANNAVENTA or Weedon, which agreeth juſt, and withall the ſaid Bridge, leading hitherward, called Benſford, are inducements unto me to thinke verily, that the ſtati-on BENNONES, or VENONES, was heere, which Antonine the Emperour placeth next beyond BANNAVENTA, eſpecially ſeeing that Antonine ſheweth how the way divided it ſelfe heere into two parts, which alſo goeth commonly currant. For, North- C eaſtward, where the way lieth to Lincolne, the Foſſe way leadeth directly to RATAE and to VERNOMETVM, of which I will ſpeake anon: and toward the Northweſt, Watling ſtreet goeth as ſtreight into Wales by MANVESSEDVM, whereof I ſhall write in his due place in Warwickſhire.

Higher, yet neere the ſame ſtreetſide ſtandeth Hinkley, which had for Lord of it, Hugh Grantmaiſmill a Norman, high Steward or Seneſchall of England, during the reigns of King William Rufus, & Henrie the firſt. The the ſaid Hugh had two daughters, Parnell, given in marriage to Robert Blanch-mains (ſo called of his faire white hands) Earle of Leiceſter, together with the High-Stewardſhip of England; and Alice, wedded to Roger Bigot. Verily, at the Eaſt end of the Church, there are to be D ſeene trenches and rampiers, yea and a mount caſt up to an eminent height, which the inhabitants ſay was Hughes Caſtle. Three miles hence ſtandeth Boſworth, an ancient mercat town, which liberty together with the Faire S. Richard Harecourt obtained for it at the hands of King Edward the Firſt. Under this towne in our great grandfathers daies the kingdome of England lay hazarded upon the chance of one battaile:
For, Henrie Earle of Richmond, with a ſmall power encountred there in pitched field King Richard the Third, who had by moſt wicked means uſurped the kingdome:
and whiles he reſolved to die the more valiantly, fighting for the liberty of his country, with his followers and friends, the more happy ſucceſſe he had, and ſo overcame E and ſlew the vſurper: and then being with joyfull acclamations proclaimed King in the very mids of ſlaughtered bodies round about; he freed England by his happy valour from the rule of a Tyrant, and by his wiſdome refreſhed and ſetled it being ſore 1487. Richard the Third ſlaine. diſquieted with long civill diſſentions. Wherupon Bernard Andreas of Tholous, a Poet living in thoſe daies, in an Ode dedicated unto King Henrie the Seuenth, as touching the Roſe his Deviſe, writ theſe verſes, ſuch as they are:

Ecce nunc omnes poſuere venti
Murmuris, præter Zephyrum tepentem:
Hic roſas nutrit, nitidoſque flores
Veris amœni. F

Behold now all the winds are laid,
But Zephyrus that blowes full warme:
The Roſe, and faire ſpring-floures in mead
He keepeth freſh, and doth no harme.

Other

A Other memorable things there are none by this Street, unleſſe it be Aſhbye de la Zouch, that lieth a good way off: a moſt pleaſant Lordſhip now of the Earles of Huntingdon, but belonging in times paſt to the noble familiy De la Zouch, who deſcended from Alan Vicount of Rohan in Litle Britaine, and Conſtantia his wife daughter to Conan le Groſſe Earle of Britaine and Maude his wife the naturall daughter of Henrie the firſt. Of this houſe Alane De la Zouch married one of the heires of Roger Quincy Earle of Wincheſter, and in her right came to a faire inheritance in this Country. But when he had judicially ſued Iohn Earle of Warren, who choſe rather to try the title by the ſword point than by point of lawe, hee was ſlaine by him even in Weſtminſter Hall, in the yeere of our Lord 1269: and ſome yeeres after, the B daughters and heires of his grand ſonne transferred this inheritance by their marriages into the families of the Saint Maures, of Caſtle Cary, and the Hollands. Yet their father firſt beſtowed this Aſhby vpon Sir Richard Mortimer of Richards Caſtle his coſin, whoſe younger iſſue thereupon tooke the ſurname of Zouch, and were Lords of Aſhby. But from Eudo a younger ſonne of Alane who was ſlaine in Weſtminſter hall, the Lords Zouch of Harringworth branched out, and have beene for many deſcents, Barons of the Realme. Afterward in proceſſe of time Aſhby came to the Haſtings, who built a faire large and ſtately houſe there, and Sir William Haſtings procured vnto the town the liberty of a Faire in the time of King Henrie the Sixt. Heere I may not paſſe over the next neighbour Cole-Ouerton, now a ſeat of the Beaumontes deſcended from C Sir Thomas Beaumont Lord of Bachevill in Normandie, brother to the firſt Vicount. This place hath a Cole prefixed for the fore-name which Sir Thomas, as ſome write, was he, who was ſlaine manfully fighting at ſuch time as the French recouered Paris from the Engliſh in the time of K. Henry the Sixt. This place of the pit-coles, (being of the nature of hardned Bitumen, which are digged up to the profit of the Lord, in ſo great a number that they ſerve ſufficiently for fewell to the neighbour dwellers round about farre and neere.

* Barons Zouch. De Aſhby.

The family of the Hollands.

Pit-cole or ſtone cole.

I ſaid before that the river Soar did cut this ſhire in the middle, which ſpringing not farre from this Street, and encreaſed with many ſmall rils and brooks of running water, going a long Northward with a gentle ſtreame, paſſeth vnder the Weſt and D Northſide of the chiefe town or Citie of this County, which in writers is called Lege-Ceſtria, Leogora, Legeo ceſter, and Leiceſter. This towne maketh an evident faire ſhew both of great antiquity and good building. In the yeere 680. when Sexwulph at the commandement of King Etheldred divided the kingdome of the Mercians into Biſhoprickes, he placed in this an Epiſcopall See, and was himſelfe the firſt Biſhop that ſat there: but a few yeeres after, when the See was tranſlated to another place, this dignity had an end, & therewith the ſtately part of the towne by little and little was empaired, untill that Edelfleda a moſt vertuous and noble Lady in the yeere after our Saviours Nativity 914. repaired and ſtrongly walled it new about; in ſo much as Matthew of Paris in his leſſer Story wrote thus, Legeceſter is a right wealthy Citie and E notably well fenced with an indiſſoluble wall, which if it had a ſtrong foundation were inferiour to no Citie whatſoever. About the Normans entring into this land, it was well peopled and frequented, yea and had very many Burgeſſes in it; out of whom they were bound by an ancient cuſtome (as we read in William the Conquerours booke) To ſend twelue with the King ſo oft as he went in perſon to the warres: But if he made a voiage by ſea againſt his enimies, they ſent foure horſes to carry armour as farre as to London. This Citie payd yeerely to the King 30 pounds by tale, and twenty in ora, that is, * by weight, alſo 25. meaſures called Sextaries of hony. But in the time of King Henrie the Seconds reigne, it was ſore ouerpreſſed with a world of great and grievous calami- F ties, & the wals throwne downe, what time as Robert ſurnamed Boſſu, (that is, Crouch back) Earle of Leiceſter conſpired and rebelled againſt the King. Which Matthew of Paris ſheweth in theſe words: For the obſtinate ſtubborneſſe of Earle Robert ſpurning againſt the King, the Noble City of Leiceſter was beſieged and overthrowne by King Henry, and the wall which ſeemed indiſſobuble, was utterly caſt downe all round about. For, that I may adde thus much out of the leſſer hiſtorie abouesaid, when the wall of the Citie

Leiceſter.

* Or in ore.

Citie wanting a good foundation was undermined, and the props that sustained it at length burnt, the peeces and fragments of the wall fell down, which even to this day (such is the indissoluble tenacity and stiffnesse of the morter) remaine fast, and retaine the bignesse of sound rocks. Miserable also was the imposition of a fine upon the Citizens at that time, and their banishment as lamentable; who having obtained by paying summes of money licence to depart, tooke sanctuary for extreame feare in Saint Albans and Saint Edmundsbury. The castle likewise was dismantled of all fortifications, which verily was a large and strong peece Beneath which, there is a very faire Hospitall or house for receit of poore people, and a Collegiat Church wherein Henrie Earle of Lancaster, and Henrie of Lancaster his sonne, who was the first Duke of Lancaster, lie buried. For, the said Duke when he was now stepped farre in yeeres, of a pious minde built this hospitall for the maintenance of poore folke, and to that end dedicated it. Concerning which, Henrie Knighton of Leicester who lived in that age, writeth thus in his storie. Henrie the first Duke of Lancaster built a Collegiat Church and an hospitall without the South-gate of Leicester; wherein he ordained a Dean with 12. Canons prebendaries, as many Vicars, and other officers, an hundred poore and feeble people, & ten poore able women to give attendance upon the said feeble folke; and this hospitall he endowed with sufficient revenewes. As for this hospitall in continueth in some good state, as an other Bede-house in the towne built by W. Wigeston. But the Collegiat Church which was a magnificent worke, and the greatest ornament of Leicester was demolished when religious houses were granted to the King.

At the other side of the Citie among most goodly and pleasant medowes which the river Soar watereth, there was an Abbay, called of that place, De Pree: of which, the said Knighton hath written thus, Robert de Bossu Earle of Leicester (when he begun Gerondon Abbay for Cistertians) founded the Monasterie of S. Marie De Pratis, at Leicester, endowed it richly with lands, possessions and Revenews, and himselfe with the consent of * Amice his wife became a * Chanon Regular in the same, and, for the space of fifteene yeares, in habite of a Chanon served God there, and so slept in the Lord; That thus forsooth, he might make a mends by repentance in a Chanons weed of that offence; which beforetime hee had committed by rebelling with a traiterous minde against his liege Prince. What name Leicester had in the Romans time, it is not knowne; In the Catalogue of Ninnius, I thinke it to bee that, which is called Caer Lerion: But, that Leir a king, of whom there goe many tales, built it, they that will, may beleeue it for mee. But the situation thereof upon the Foss-way, and the distance both from BENNONES and VEROMETVM, agreeth so just with the description of Antonine, that I cannot but thinke it to bee that RATAE which Ptolomee nameth RAGAE, although there is neither tippe nor toe remaining in it of the name RATAE: unlesse peradventure it be in that old long dich and rampier which they call Rawdikes, scarce halfe a mile without the South gate.

* Amiciæ
* Or priest.

Or Road-dikes.

Here am I at a stand, and looke about mee what way to follow for the seeking out of ancient townes. Ranulph a Monke of Chester recordeth, that the ancient street way went through the wasts from hence to Lincolne, but hee telleth us not, through what Wasts. The common voice goeth that it went on still full North through Nottingham-shire: Antonine the Emperor (if I haue any in sight at all) seemeth to insinuate, that it passed North-east-ward through this County into Lincoln-shire. And verily, this way there are places of antique memorie that by some of their remaines and tokens shew themselues: but the other way, I could not my selfe ever as yet meete with any; what others haue done I know not, and would willingly learne.

Ferrers and Greys de Grooby.

North-west from Leicester, and not farre off is Grooby a large Lordship and Manour, which from Hugh Grantmaisnil whom King William the Conquerour had enriched with great possessions and revenewes, came by the Earles of Leicester, and the Quincies, unto the house of the Ferrers: out of which the Lord Ferrers of Grooby flourished a long time in the honourable state of Barons: and in the end, Isabell the only daughter remaining of the right line, brought it by her mariage into the name of the Greies, from whence it fell againe at the last by attainder into the Kings hands. But

whiles

A whiles I was reviſing of this worke, our ſoueraigne Lord King Iames reſtored Sir Henry Grey a worthy knight to the ancient honor of his noble progenitors, creating him Baron Grey of Grooby in the firſt yeare of his reigne.

Now let us returne to the river Soar, which being paſt Leiceſter, firſt giveth name to Montforell, or rather Mont-Soar-hill, a name compounded of Norman and Engliſh both: which now is famous onely for a mercate there kept: but in old time moſt renowned for the caſtle, ſeated upon a ſteepe and craggie hill, hanging over the river, which before time belonged to the Earles of Leiceſter, but after wards to Saer de Quincy Earle of Winchester in the Barons warre; at this daie nothing but a rude
B heape of rubbiſh: For, in the yeare 1217. the inhabitants of the towne, when after a long ſiege they had wonne it, raſed it downe to verie ground, as beeing the Devils neſt, and a Den of theeves, robbers, and rebells. Somewhat higher on, the other ſide of the river ſtandeth Barrow; where is digged lime, commended aboue all other for the ſtrong binding thereof. After, ſome few miles from thence, Soar while hee ſeeketh Trent, leaueth Leiceſter-ſhire, a little aboue Cotes now the habitation of the familie of Skipwith originally deſcended out of Yorke-ſhire, and enriched many yeares ſince with faire poſſeſſions in Lincolne-ſhire, by an heire of Ormesbie. On the oppoſite banke of Soar ſtandeth Lough-borrough a mercat towne, which adorned one onely man with the name of Baron, to witte, Sir Edward Haſtings; and that in the C reigne of Queene Marie. But when ſhee, of whom hee was moſt deerely loved, departed this life, hee taking a loathing to the world was not willing to liue any longer to the world; but wholy deſirous to applie him ſelfe to Gods ſervice, retired into that hoſpitall which hee had erected at Stoke Pogeis in Buckingham-ſhire; where with poore people hee lived to God, and among them finiſhed the courſe of his life devoutly in Chriſt. That this Lough-borrow is that towne of the kings named in the Saxon tongue Lieganburge, which as Marianus ſaith Cuthwulph tooke from the Britans in the yeare of Chriſt 572. the neere affinity of the name may yeeld ſome proofe. But now among all the townes of this ſhire it rightfully chalengeth the ſecond place next unto Leiceſter, whether a man regard either the bigneſſe
D or building thereof, or the pleaſant woods about it. For, within verie little of it, the foreſt of Charnwood or Charley ſtretcheth it ſelf out a great way, wherein is ſeene Beaumanour Parke, which the Lords of Beaumont (as I haue heard) fenſed round about with a ſtone wal. Theſe Beaumonts deſcended from a yonger ſon of Iohn County of Brene in France, who for his high honour, and true valor was preferred to marrie the heire of the kingdome of Ieruſalem, and with great pompe crowned king of Ieruſalem in the yeare of our Lord 1248. Hence it is that wee ſee the Armes of Ieruſalem ſo often quartered with thoſe of Beaumont in ſundrie places of England. Sir Henrie Beaumont was the firſt that planted himſelfe in England about the yeare 1308. who advanced to the marriage of an heire of Alexander Comine Earle of Boghan in Scot-
E land (whoſe mother was one of the heires of Roger Quincy Earle of Winchester) entred upon a verie goodlie and faire inheritance, and ſo a great familie was propagated from him. Hee in the reigne of Edward the Third, for certaine yeares was ſummoned to the Parliament, by the name of Earle of Boghan, and Iohn Lord Beaumont in the reigne of Henrie the Sixth was for a time Conſtable of England, and the firſt to my knowledge, that in England received at the Kings hands the ſtate and title of a Vicount. But when William the laſt Vicount was dead without iſſue, his ſiſter was wedded to the Lord Lovel, and the whole inheritance afterwards, which was rich and great, by attainder of Lovel fel into the hands of K. Henry the Seventh.

In this North part, wee meete with nothing at all worth the naming, unleſſe it be
F a little religious houſe, which Roiſe Verdon founded for Nunnes and called it Grace-Dieu, now belonging to a younger houſe of the Beaumonts: and where the Trent runneth, hard by, is Dunnington, an ancient Caſtle built by the firſt Earles of Leiceſter: which afterwards came to Iohn Lacy Earle of Lincolne, who procured unto it from King Edward the Firſt the priviledge of keeping a Mercat and Faire. But when as in that great proſcription of the Barons under King Edward the Second the hereditaments Mont-Sore-hill.

Hiſtoria Minor.

Skipwith.

Lough-borrough.

Charnwood foreſt.

De Bello monte. Beaumont.

The firſt Vicount of honor in England.

Dunnington.

taments of Thomas Earle of Lancaſter, and Alice Lacy his wife were ſeiſed into the King hands, and alienated in divers ſorts, the King enforced her to releaſe this Manour unto Hugh Le Deſpenſer the younger. A

The Eaſt part of this ſhire which is hilly and feedeth great numbers of ſheepe, was adorned with two places of eſpeciall note; VERNOMETVM or VEROMETVM, whereof Antonine the Emperour hath made mention, and Burton Lazers, both in the ages fore-going of very great name and reputation. VERNOMETVM, which now hath loſt the name, ſeemeth to have ſtood (for I dare not affirme it) in that place, which at this day men call Burrowhill and Erd-burrow: For, betweene VEROMETVM and RATAE, according to Antonine his reckoning are twelue Italian miles; and ſo many well neere there be, from Leiceſter to this place. B

Vernometum. or Verometum.

The name Burrow alſo that it hath at this day came from Burgh, which in the Saxon tongue ſignifieth, a place fortified, and vnder it is a towne called Burrough belonging to an old family of Gentlemen ſo ſurnamed. But, (that which maketh moſt for proofe) in that very place there riſeth up an hill with a ſteepe and upright aſcent on every ſide, but South Eaſtward: in the top whereof appeare the expreſſe tokens of a towne deſtroyed, a duple trench, and the very tract where the wals went, which encloſed about eighteene acres of ground within. At this day it is arable ground, and in nothing ſo famous, as in this, that the youth dwelling round about were wont yeerely to exerciſe themſelves in wreſtling and other games in this place. And out of the very name a man may conjecture, that there ſtood there ſome great Temple of the Heathen Gods. For, VERNOMETVM in the ancient Gauls language, which was the ſame that the old Britans tongue, ſoundeth as much as A great Temple; as Venantius Fortunatus in his firſt booke of his Songs plainly ſheweth, writing of Vernometum a towne of Gaule in theſe verſes. C

What Vernometum ſignifieth in the ancient language of the Gaullois.

Nomine Vernometum voluit vocitare vetuſtas,
Quod quaſi fanum ingens Gallica lingua ſonat.

In elder time this place they term'd by name of VERNOMET,
Which ſounds in language of the Gauls, as much as Temple Great.

As for Burton, ſurnamed Lazers, of Lazers (for ſo they uſed to tearme folke infected with the Elephantiaſie or Leproſie) was a rich Spittle-houſe, or Hoſpitall, under the Maſter whereof, were in ſome ſort all other ſmall Spittles or Lazer-houſes in England, like as himſelfe alſo was vnder the Maſter of the Lazers in Hieruſalem. It was founded in the firſt age of the Normans, by a common contribution over al England, and the Mowbraies eſpecially did ſet to their helping hands. At which time the Leproſie which the learned tearme Elephantiaſis, (becauſe the skins of Lepres are like to that of Elephants) in grieuous maner by way of contagion ran over all England. For, it is verily thought that this diſeaſe did then firſt creepe out of Aegypt into this Iland: which eſt-once had ſpread it ſelfe into Europe: firſt of all in Pompeius Magnus his daies: afterwards, under Heraclius, and at other times as we may ſee in the Hiſtories, whether by celeſtiall influence, or other hidden cauſes I leaue to the Learned. But ſo far as I could hetherto read it did never ſet foote in England before that time. Beſides theſe places before named of great name and marke, wee muſt not over paſſe neither Melton Mowbray neere unto this Burton, a Mercat towne bearing name of the Mowbraies ſometime Lords thereof, wherein is nothing more worth the ſeeing, than a faire Church; nor Skeffington, ſtanding farther off, which as it hath given name to a worſhipfull family, ſo againe it hath received worſhip and credit from the ſame. D E

Burton Lazers.

Leproſie in England.

Melton.

Skeffington.

The river that watereth this part of the Shire, is by the inhabitants about it called the Wreken, along which upon reſemblance of the name I have ſought VERNOMETVM, but in vaine. This Wreken gathereth a ſtrong ſtreame by many lively brookes reſorting unto it, whereof one paſſeth by Wimondham an ancient habitation of a younger branch of the houſe of the Lords Barckleis, well increaſed by an heire of Dela-Laund, and ſo on by Melton Mowbray before mentioned, by Kirkby Bellers, (where there was a Priory) having that addition of the Bellers, a reſpectiue, rich, and noble family in their time, by Brokesby a ſeat now of the F

Wimondham.

Pilliers

A Villirs of an old Norman race, and deſcended from an heire of Bellers: which Brokeſby imparted formerly the ſurname to the Brokesbyes of eſpeciall antiquity in theſe parts. Then the Wreken ſpeedeth by Ratcliffe high mounted upon a cliffe and within few miles conjoyneth it ſelfe to Soar, neere unto Mont-Soar-hill, before mentioned. Brookesby.

Whatſoever of this Shire lieth beyond the Wreken Northward, is not ſo frequently inhabited, and part of it is called the Wold, as being hilly without wood; wherein Dalby a ſeat of the old family of the Noels, of whom I ſhall ſpeake elſewhere, and Waltham on the Wold, a meane Mercat, are moſt notable. Through this part as I haue beene
B enformed paſſeth the Foſſe-way, made by the Romans from Lewing Bridge, by Segraue which gaue ſurname to the honourable family often mentioned, and the Lodge on the Wold toward the Vale of Beuer, but the tract thereof as yet I know not.

This Shire hath beene more famous from time to time by reaſon the Earles thereof haue beene notorious. And ſeeing it had under the Saxons gouernment Earles by inheritance, I will firſt reckon them up in order, as Thomas Talbot a skilfull Antiquary hath deliuered me a note of them out of the Kings Records. In the time of Æthelbald King of the Mercians, and in the yeare of our redemption 716. Leofrick was Earle of Leiceſter, whom there ſucceeded in direct line Algar the firſt, Algar the ſecond, Leofrik the ſecond, Leofſtane, Leofrick the third buried in Coventry, Algar the third,
C who had iſſue two ſonnes, Ædwin Earle of March, Morkar Earle of Northumberland, and a daughter named Lucie, firſt maried to Ivon Talboys of Anjou, afterwards to Roger of Romara, who begat of her William of Romara Earle of Lincolne. Now when as the iſſue male of this Saxon familie failed, and the name of the Saxons was troden (as it were) under-foot, Robert Beaumont a Norman Lord of Pont Audomar and Earle of Mellent, (after that Simon an officiary Earle of Leiceſter was dead) obtained his Earledome in the yeare of our Lord 1102. at the bountifull hand of King Henrie the Firſt: which Robert, a man for skill and knowledge excellent, faire ſpoken, ſubtile, wiſe, and witty, and by nature wily, who whi'e he lived in high and glorious eſtate, an other Earle
D caried away his wife from him: Whereupon in his old age being much troubled in minde, he fell into deepe melancholy. After him ſucceeded from father to ſonne three Roberts, the firſt ſurnamed Boſſu becauſe he was crook-backed, who after he had rebelled againſt King Henry the Firſt, weary of his looſe irregular life, became a Chanon Regular; the ſecond ſurnamed Blanch-maines of his lilie-white hands, who ſided with the young King againſt King Henry the Second, and died in the expedition of King Richard the Firſt to the Holy-land; the third ſurnamed Fitz-Parnell, becauſe his mother was * Parnell daughter and one of the heires to Hugh Grant-maiſmill the laſt, in whoſe right he was Seneſchall or Steward of England, and died iſſueles in the time of King Iohn.

Earles of Leiceſter.

The words of Henry Huntingdon in his Epiſtle de Contemptu mundi.

Petronilla.

E A few yeeres after, Simon Montfort deſcended from a baſe ſonne of Robert King of France, who had maried the ſiſter of Robert Fitz-Parnell, enjoied this honour. But after that he and his were expelled in the yeere 1200. as wholy deuoted to the French, Ranulph Earle of Cheſter attained unto this dignity, not in right of inheritance, but by his Princes favour. Howbeit, afterwards Simon Montfort ſonne of the fore-ſaid Simon obtained this honour, when Almarik his eldeſt brother ſurrendred up his right before King Henry the Third. This Simon, ſtood in ſo gratious favour with King Henrie the Third, that he called him home againe out of France when he was baniſhed, heaped upon him great wealth, admitted him to the Earledome of Leiceſter, graunted to him the Stewardſhip of England, and to honour him the more gave him his owne ſiſter in mariage. But he, thus over-heaped with honourable benefits, when F he had no meanes to requite them (ſuch is the perverſe wilfulneſſe of men) began hatefully to maligne him, yea & did moſt wickedly moleſt the good K. having ſo well deſerved, making himſelfe ringleader to the rebellious Barons, and with them raiſing horrible tempeſts of civill warre, in which himſelfe alſo at length was overthrowen and ſlaine.

Matth. Paris

See Eouesham in Worceſterſhire.

As for his honours and poſſeſſions, king Henrie the Third gaue and granted them to Edmund his owne younger ſonne Earle of Lancaſter. So afterward this honour lay as it were obſcured among the titles of the houſe of Lancaſter: and Mawde the daughter of Henrie duke of Lancaſter beeing married to Henrie Duke of Bauaria Earle of Henault, Holland, Zeland &c. added unto his other titles, this of Earle of Leiceſter alſo: For, in the Charter dated the fiue and thirty yeare of king Edward the Third, hee is in plaine termes ſtiled William Earle of Henhault and of Leiceſter: yea and, as wee finde in the Inquiſition made Anno 36. of the ſaid king Edward the Third, ſhee by the name of Dutcheſſe of Bauaria, held the Caſtle, Manour, and Honour of Leiceſter. After whoſe deceaſe without iſſue, that honor reverted to Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, who had wedded Blanch the other ſiſter of Mawd. From which time it became united to the Houſe of Lancaſter, vntill in our remembrance it reflouriſhed in L. Robert Dudley, who was by Queene Elizabeth girt with the ſword of the Earldome of Leiceſter, and extraordinarily fauoured: whereupon the States Generall of the united Prouinces in their great troubles choſe him triumphantly for their abſolute gouernour, and ſoone after as contemptuouſly reiected him, reſeruing all ſoueraignity to themſelves. But after a ſhort time he paſſed out of this tranſitorie life in the yeere 1588. leaving the fame onely of his greatneſſe behind him.

In the great Regiſter of the Duchie.

Within this Shire are 200. Pariſh Churches.

RVTLAND-

RVTLANDIÆ

Omnium in Anglia Comitatu: um minimus Pars olim.

CORITANORVM.

Melton mowbray
Garthorpe
Eic flu:
Segby
Wimondham
Staplefordc
Edmonthorpe
Thistleton
Margret-ouerton
Leesthorpe
Whitfonden Pickwell
Ashwell
Tighe
Barrow
Stratton
Somerby Langham Gretcham Cotesmore
Colderton
Berkthorpe
Newbold
Exton
Burley
Barnesdale pk Whitwell
Owston Knauston
Withcok
Okeham
Flitteres pk Braunston
Ealeton
The Hamilton Vale of Cattmouse
Normanton
Lound
Norton
Broke Lyfeldc forrest Lodge Loddington
Nidiweston Martinsthrpe Manton Ridlington Lindon Cathorpe
Alexton
Belton
Preston Wing Pilton Luffenham
Ticksouer Stokerston Wardlow
Ayston
Glaiston
Barodon Vppingham
Pisbroke Morcot Bliston Horninghold
Seyton
Stantonwell
Bradley Liddington
Slawston Holt
Drystoke Draiton
Cawcott
Easton
Medborne
Welham
Bringcast
Weston
Sutton
Rokingham cast:
Welland flu:
PARS ORTHAMTONIÆ
S. Witham
Holywell
Clipsham
Quebye Pickworth
Woodhead Essenden
Empingham Tickencote Briggcasterton GAVSENNÆ
Casterton
Riall Tinwell
Stanforde
N. Luffenham
Ketton
the Rom: way High Dike or Street
Waske flu:

NOMINA HVNDREDORVM IN COMITATV RVTLANDIÆ

1 Okham. Hundred
2 Alstowe Hundred
3 Martinsley Hundred
4 Wrandick Hundred 5 East Hundred

1/ 2 3 4 5

Scala Milliarium

W? kip Sculpsit

RVTLAND-SHIRE.

RVTLAND, in the old Englisſh Saxon tongue Roteland, is environed within Leiceſter-ſhire, unleſſe it bee on the South-ſide, where it lieth upon the river Welland, and on the Eaſt ſide where it butteth upon Lincoln-ſhire. A Countrie nothing inferiour to Leiceſter-ſhire either in fruitfull qualitie of ſoile, or pleaſantneſſe, but in quantity onelie, as beeing the leaſt Countie of all England. For, lying in forme almoſt round like a circle, it is in compaſſe ſo farre about, as a light horſeman will ride in one day. Whence it is, that the Inhabitants tell a tale of I wote not what king, who ſhould giue to one Rut ſo much land as hee could ride about in one day: and that hee, forſooth, rode about this ſhire within the time appointed, and ſo had it given him, and named it by his owne name Rutland. But let ſuch fables be packing: I would not haue the truth prejudiced with an extravagant tale.

And whereas the earth in this ſhire is every where red, and ſo red that even the ſheepes fleeces are thereby coloured red: whereas alſo the Englisſh-Saxons called Red in their tongue Roët and Rud; may wee not ſuppoſe that this Country was named Rutland, at one would ſay a Redland? for, as ſaith the Poet. The name of Rutland.

Conveniunt rebus nomina ſæpè ſuis.
The names, as often times we ſee,
With things them ſelues full well agree.

Now, that places in all nations have had their names of redneſſe, Rutlan Caſtle in Wales, built on a ſhore of red earth, Redbay, Redhill, Redland, The Red Promontory, The Red-Sea alſo betwixt Ægypt and Arabia, Erytheia in Ionia, and a number beſides may proove moſt evidently: So that there is no cauſe why we ſhould give credit to fables in this behalfe. As for this little County, it may ſeeme to have beene ordained a Shire or County but of late daies. For, in King Edward the Confeſſours time, it was counted a part of Northampton-ſhire, and our Hiſtoriographers who wrote three hundred yeeres agoe and upward, reckoned it not in the number of Shires.

Waſh or Guaſh, a little river, which runneth from the Weſt Eaſtward through the middle of it, divideth it in twaine. In the hithermore or South part riſeth Vppingham vpon an high aſcent, whence that name was impoſed, not memorable for any thing elſe, but becauſe it is counted a well frequented Mercat towne, and hath for to ſhew a proper ſchoole, which together with another at Okeham R. Ihonſon a Miniſter of Gods word, in a good and laudable intent, for the training up of children in good literature lately erected, with the mony that he had gotten together by way of collection. Under this ſtandeth Dryſtoke, which in no wiſe is to be paſſed over with ſilence, conſidering it hath beene the habitation from old time of a right ancient race of the Digbyes: which (I grieve to utter it, but all men know it) hath now caught a deepe ſteine by Sir Euerard Digby drawen into that curſed crew, who moſt horribly complotted with one deuiliſh flaſh of helliſh gunpouder to blow up both Prince, and Country. More Eaſtward upon the river Welland I ſaw nothing remarkble, vnleſſe it be Berohdon, now Barodon, which Thomas Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke held, with South Leffingham, now South Luffenham, and other Hamelets, by ſervice to to be the Kings Chamberlaine in the Exchequer. Uppingham. Fines 14. Edw. 3.

On the further part beyond the river, among the hils, there ſpreadeth below a verie pleaſant and fruitfull vale, named at this daie The vale of Catmoſe, happily of Coet maes, which ſignifieth in the Britiſh tongue a fieldful of woods. In the mideſt A whereof Okeham ſheweth it ſelfe, which by the like reaſon may ſeeme to haue taken the name from Okes: where, hard by the Church which is large and faire, remaine the crackt and decaying wals of an old Caſtle: which, Walkelin de Ferrarijs built in the firſt times of the Norman kings. And that it hath beene the dwelling place of the Ferrars, beſides the credit of writers, and generall report, the great horſe ſhoes, which in times paſt that familie gaue in their armes, faſtned upon the gate and in the hall, may ſufficiently proue. Afterwards it belonged to the Lords of Tatteſhall: But when King Richard the ſecond had promoted Edward, the duke of Yorkes ſonne, to the Earledome of Rutland, hee gaue unto him this Ca- B ſtle alſo. But within our fathers remembrance it befell unto Thomas Cromwel, and was reputed the ſeat of his Baronie: whom King Henrie the Eighth advanced to the higheſt pitch of dignity: and ſtreightwaies when by his plotting and attempting of many matters he had caſt himſelfe into the tempeſtuous ſtormes of envie and diſpleaſure, bereft him on a ſodaine both of life and dignity.

Barons Cromwell. See Earles of Eſſex.

Over againſt it Eaſtward, there ſtandeth Burly moſt daintily ſeated, and overlooking the vale: A ſtately and ſumptuous houſe now of the Haringtons, who by marrying the daughter and heire of Colepeper, became Lords of ſo faire an inheritance; that ever ſince they haue flouriſhed in theſe parts, like as before time the Colepepers had done, unto whom by N. Green the wealthy and goodly Livelod of the C Bruſes in part had deſcended. As for thoſe Bruſes, being men of the chiefe Nobility in England, they were engraffed into the roiall ſtocke and familie of Scotland: out of whom by Robett the eldeſt brother, the race roiall of Scotland are ſprung: like as by Bernard the yonger brother, the Cottons of Connington in Huntingdon ſhire (of whom I haue written already) and theſe Haringtons. In which regard and gratious reſpect king Iames advanced Sir John Harington branched from that ſtem that the ancient Lords Harington, to the title of Baron Harington of Exton, a towne adiacent, where hee hath alſo an other faire houſe.

Burly.

Baron Harington.

Moreover, on the Eaſt ſide, by the river Guaſh, ſtand Brigcaſterton, whereof I will ſay more afterward, and Rihall: where, when ſuperſtition had ſo bewitched our an- D ceſtours, that the multitude of their pety Saints, had well neere taken quite away the true God, one Tibba a pety Saint or Goddeſſe, reputed to bee the tutelar patroneſſe of hauking, was of foulers and faulkoners worſhipped at a ſecond Diana: Eſſendon alſo is neere adjoining; the Lord whereof Sir Robert Cecil, a good ſonne of a right good father (the ſtrength and ſtay of our common-wealth in his time) was by King Iames created Baron Cecil of Eſſendon in the firſt yeere of his reigne.

The Faulkoners Saint.

Baron Cecill de Eſſendon.

This little country K. Edward the Confeſſor, by his laſt wil & teſtament bequeathed unto his wife Eadith, yet with this condition, that after her death it ſhould come to Saint Peter of Weſtminſter. For, theſe be the very words of the ſaid teſtament. I will, that after the death of Queene Eadgith my wife ROTELAND with all the appertenances thereto, be given to my Monaſtery of the moſt bleſſed Saint Peter, and be yeelded up without delay for ever unto the Abbot and to the Monkes there ſerving God: yet king William the Conquerour cancelled and made voide this teſtament who reſerving a great part of it to himſelfe divided the reſt betweene Counteſſe Iudith, whoſe daughter was married to David king of Scots, Robert Mallet, Oger, Giſlebert of Gaunt, Earle Hugh, Aubrey the Clerk, and others: And unto Weſtminſter, firſt hee left the Tithes, afterwards the Church onely of Okeham and parcels thereunto appertaining. E Earles of Rutland.

This Countie hath not had many Earles. The firſt Earle of Rutland, was Edward, the firſt begotten ſonne of Edmund of Langley duke of Yorke, created by king F Richard the Second upon a ſingular favour that hee caſt unto him during his fathers life, and afterwards by the ſame king advanced to the honour of duke of Aumarle. This young man, wickedly projected with others a practiſe to make awaie king Henrie the Fourth, and ſtreight waies with like levity diſcovered the ſame: But after his fathers death, beeing duke of Yorke loſt his life fighting

courageouſly

A couragiouſly amid the thickeſt troupes of his enimies in the battaile of Agin-court. Long time after, there ſucceeded in this honour Edward the little young ſonne of Richard Duke of Yorke, and he together with his father, during thoſe deadly broiles of civill war, was ſlaine in the battaile fought at Wakefield.

Many yeares after, King Henrie the Eight, raiſed up Sir Thomas Mannours, to be Earle of Rutland, who in right of his Grand-mother Æleonor was poſſeſſed of a goodly and faire inheritance of the Barons Roos, lying in the countries round about, and elſwhere. In his roome ſucceeded his ſonne Henry, and after him likewiſe Edward his ſonne, unto whom if I ſhould ſay nothing elſe, that commendation of the Poet was moſt aptly and truly appliable.

B

——Nomen virtutibus æquat,
Nec ſinit ingenium nobilitate premi.

His name ſo great with vertues good, he matcheth equally,
Nor ſuffreth wit ſmuthring to lie under Nobility.

But he, by over haſty and untimely death, being received into Heaven, left this dignity unto Iohn his Brother: who alſo departing this life within a while, hath for his ſucceſſor, Roger his ſonne, anſwerable in all points to his ancient and right noC ble parentage.

D

This ſmall ſhire hath Pariſhe Churches 48.

E

LINCOLN.

F

PARTE OF YORKE SHIRE

PARTE OF NOTINGHAME SHIRE

PARTE OF LECESTER SHIRE

PARTE OF RVTLAND

ABVS ÆSTVARIV Humber

Howdon
Hull Hesell Burghe
Welton
N. Feribye
Melton
Wilwick Pateringto Blacktoft
Humber flumen
Whitton neese Goxhill
Barton
Barrowe
Thornton Colledge
Whitton Winteringham
Ankburne
W. Haulton Owse flu:
Wlett Whitgyft Redisf: Adlingfleete Swinfleet Gartborpe
Walcot Coulbye Wintrington
N. Feribye
Horstowe Thornton
Harleton
Kirlingham
Immyngham
Saxbye
Benbye
Wotton
Vlsbye Newshamab:
Hawdenbye Luddington
Rexbye
Rysbye
Burton
Apleby Worlaby Elsham Croxton Cotchamab: Stallingburgh
Cotes mag:
Clee Cattelhall Toste Canesbye Sewcliff
Thornham
Saneton Mordick Amcotes Meltonrose Kirmyngton Brokelsbye Helding Elixburgh Croule
Crosby Gokewell
Wraubye Barnetbye
Lymbergh pua Kelcbye
Cotes pua:
Searth
Dun flu:
Ealand Readbye
Broughton Frodingham
Manbye Gunneys Castborp Ketelbye
Bekebye
Lymbergh magna Bradlye Thourne
The ile of AXHOLME
Anthorp Burringham
Glamforde bridge
Somerbye
Rybye Alsbye Lasebye Waltham Howlton Homerston Bradcholme
Belcastle
E. Butterwick Botesworth Stanbye Ercbye Barnabye Bridgeslay Hatfelde
Santofte
Belton
W. Butterwick
Newsted
Otenby Grassbye Clysbye Swallowe Belsbye Hakelysse
Asbye Graunsbye Lyndholme Missingham
Malmcton Hybolstowe Howsham Caburne Cokeswowld
Rauendale
Thuancaſt Howardbye Epworth Fusworth Skettere
Burnham Elfelde Clytham Redeborne
Cadnye
N. Kelsye Ketleton ale caſtor Woulsnewton Bosbye
Wyſham
Ouſton
W. Wood Wildsworth Skotton
Kirton in lyndſey
S. Kelsye
Howton
Rothwell
Croxbye Thareway Tharganbye
Swynehop
N. Cressbye
Fatherdye
Killum
Haxey Laund
Gunthorp
Loughton
Northorpe Waddingham
Wyngall
Normanbye
Lreford ab:
Ekington Brakenburgh Beanton Aukeley Graitslound
Hokkeliffe flu:
Owresbye Osgodbye Cloxbye
Stanton in the hole
Binbrook
Fanthorpe Fenny flu:
Stokwith Blyton
Blyburgh Snetterbye Skelfturne Funnyngley
Warton
Pilham
Willyton Kirkbye
Walsbye
Kirmond in the myre
S. Elkington
Welton
Rosington Waltrith
Bussheps norton
Tauelbye
Kingerbye Mydlecrafen Markctrasin
Towes Halington Osterfelde
Mysterton
Thunnok Glentham
Ankham flu:
N. Willingham Ludford
Wikam Rathbye Walkingham
Coringham
Heinswell
Spithelm ſtrete
Normanbye
W. Rasin
Glayton Harworth
Euerton
Martin
Somerbye
Harpeswell
LINDE SEY Lyndwood Sixhill ab:
Burghe
Sixhill Tathwell
Beckingham
Springthorp Glentworth
Oxmbye
Loste Leſſington Leggesbye
Hayton
Biscathorpe
Dunmyngton
Gringlye super mount Saunbye
Graham
Ginburgh Eurbye
Oldsfelde Fuldingworth
Wickenby
Whitwater
Idle flu: Ellingham
Saxbye
Thurlsthorp
W. Tuttrington Beuyngworth
E. Barkworth
Matterſey
Bole
Knoth Veton
Ingham
Spridlington
Snarford Haulton
Houlsbye
W. Burton
Sturton
Willinghant
Cotes Hadsthorn Swinethorp Fenton
Ston Camaringham Gateburton
Stretton
Bratlebye Skampto
Welton
Hanworth
Snelland
W. Barkworth Panton Sotby Randby Lytleburgh Retford
Bramton
Thory Ashorpe
Dunham Stayton Reasby
Rando Wragbye
Sturton
Hemmyngbye
Cotes Torkſye Ingleby
N. Carleton
Scothorn Bullington
Hatton
Bambrughe
Trushwell
Brexholme
The Grange the lynge
Langworth Goultho Kirklington
Myntyng Edlington
Cotcham
S. Carleton
LINDYM Lyncolne
Nettcham
Repham
Berlynges
Gaunbye Sudbroke
Rampton
Keteſthorpe
Newton
Saxilbye
Eoſdike flu:
Bucton Willingham
Fiſberton
Stanfelde
Waddingworth Lipplngton
Thumbleby Horn Lanetham
Gretwell Wasſhenburgh Barlney Tuphan Bucknall
Largeton
Barduey Herſington
Palham Marſon
Skrekeſh
Dunetham
Bredcham Hertſholme
Brattſbye
Sheepwaſh Heghington
Houſted Roughton
Fledeboro
Thorney Skellingthorp
Harebye Bonſtham Doddington
Canwick Hanworth
Haerbothe
Newe Kirkbye Haulton
Clyſton
Normanton
Marham
Wiggeſley
N. Hikcham
Braunſton
Nockton Criſted ab:
Marchan Weſton
Girton
Wisbye
S. Hikcham
Mere hoſpitall
Lyndwood grange Merton
Tatershall chaſe
Tumbye
Greſthorp Aole Meringham Waddington Metheringham
Dunſton Blankney Timberland Cunesbye
Tatersh Ossington
Thorpe
Kirkbye
Harmyſton
Scaupwick Thorpe
The ferye
Sutton
Carleton
Willoughbye
Thulbye Luburgh Coulbye
Bathchye
Rowſton Walcote
Billingaye
Doddike Beſthorp
Swynerton
Somerton caſt:
Skimmande Aſhbye Digbye
N. Kyme Cellingham
Norton Baſſingham
diſney Morcland
Nauchy Wellingbor
Catlye
Holme
Derntborp
Carleton
Durington
Lagſforde Stapleford
Templecruce
Braunſwell
Bloxham Amwick
S. Kyme Winthorp Braunthroughton
Welborne KESTEVEN
Riſkington Brotherton Beckingham
Leddington
Dunſbye Roxham Haucram Barnbye Longcanham Cranwell
Newarke
Sutton
Stragilthorp
Madenhouſe Liſsingham
Auſthorp Baſacerton
Fenton
Fulbeck
Haddingham Cuceden Verbye
Howell
Stubton
Kirkbye
Hekington
Hawton
Clapole
Brandon Cathorpe
Roucebye Sleforde
Aſcerbye Loughto Hole pua Hough
Normanton Quarrington
Hok mag:
Cotham Doddington
Carleton
Sylk Willoughbye
Helpringham
Biker Galſton Fulbrok Wilforde
Burton
Swaton
Haughan Humington
Swarbye Aſerbye Skreckington
Benyngton
Barkſton Aſter
Aunsbye Oſburnbye
Spanbye Dunnington
Weſtbore
CROCOLANA Bridge end Flawboro Merſton Hather Skotwelloughby
Quodering
Killington
Belton
Horblyng
Faſton Loldonthorp Wilby
Dembleby
Newton
Erckingham Billingore Botteſworth
Manthorp
Brayſbye Hayſby Netlanhow Allington
Gunwarby
Grantham
Sapperton
Walcot Sempringh
Muſton Baroby Pickworth
Fokingham
Pointon
Wrightbolde Sidbrok Ropeſlye Leuington Aſlubye Mylthorp
Radnell Willſthorp
Houghton
Somerbye
Dowſby Beuer caſt:
Haclaxton
Ingelſbye
Keyſbye Grabye
Pounton p:
Denton
Bothbye paunell
Oſgarbye
Spal Pounton m: Hawthorp
Denesbye Harſton Straunſton Kirkby
Rippingale
Knipton
Bichfeld
Iernham Bullbye Hackumbye
Kirkſtake Baſingthorp
Croxton
Stillington
Eaſton
Burton
Corbye
Falldore Grimſthorp Dyke Sproxton Southorp Eglethorp Merton
Swafeld
Edenham Buckminſter
Stambye Couſterworth
Swinſted
Vaudy ab:
London etc:
Lobthorp Launde Borne
N. Witham Comthorp
Creteur Redder
Baſton straw
Gunsbye
S. Witham
Witham
Bew thorpe
Charleby
Baſton
Wimondham Edmondthorpe Thiſtleton
Clipſham Holywell
Carlebye
Wilſthorpe
Pickworth
Onebye
Braſford
Stow Longtoft
Gretford
Barham Merkadeping Caſterton Tallington
Deping
Valdrton hall
Maſſe way

LINCOLNIÆ
Comitatus vbi olim insederunt CORITANI

OCEA

N

Scala Miliarium Anglicorum

2 4 6 8 10

Christophorus Saxton descrip:
William Kip Sculp:

The Spurncheade

Saltfleete hauen

East saltfleetebye

Middle saltfleetebye

Mablethorp

Alforde

Waynflete

Boston

Wilberton Rode

METARIS ÆSTVARIVM

The Wassh

PARTE OF HOLLAND

Torrington

Walpole

Walton

Lyn

PARTE OF NORTHFOLKE

wisbich

PARTE OF CAMBRIDGE

A

LINCOLNE-SHIRE.

Pon Rutland on the East side, confineth the County of Lincolne, called by the English-Saxons Lincollscype, & by the Normans Nicol-shire after their first comming into the land, with some trāspoſition of letters, but vſually Lincoln-shire. A very large country, as reaching almoſt three ſcore miles in length, and carrying in ſome places above thirty miles in bredth: paſſing kind for yield of corne, and feeding of cattaile, well furniſhed and ſet out with a great number of townes, and watered with many rivers. Upon the Eaſtſide, where it bendeth outward with a brow fetching a great compaſſe, the German Ocean beateth on the ſhore: Northward it reacheth to Humber an arme of the ſea: on the Weſt ſide it butteth upon Nottinghamſhire: & on the South it is ſeuered from Northamptonſhire by the river Welland. This whole ſhire is divided into three parts, whereof one is called Holland: a ſecond Keſteuen, and the third Lindſey. Holland, which Ingulph termeth Hoiland lieth to the ſea, and like unto that Holland in Germanie, it is ſo throughly wet in moſt places with waters, that a mans foote is ready to ſinke into it, and as one ſtandeth upon it, the ground will ſhake and quake under his feet: and thence it may ſeene to have taken the name: unleſſe a man would with Ingulph ſay that Hoiland is the right name, and the ſame impoſed upon it, of Hay which our progenitours broadly called Hoy.

B C

This part throughout beareth upon that ebbing and flowing arme of the ſea, which Ptolome calleth Metaris, in ſteed of Maltraith, and we at this day, The Waſhes. A very large arme this is and paſſing well knowen, at every tide and high ſea covered all over with water, but when the ſea ebbeth, and the tide is paſt, a man may paſſe over it as on dry land, but yet not without danger. Which, King Iohn learned with his loſſe. For, whileſt he journied this way, when he warred upon the rebellious Barons, the waters ſuddenly brake in upon him, ſo that at Foſſe-dyke, and Welſtream he loſt all his carriage and princely furniture as Matthew of Weſtminſter writeth.

Metaris æſtuarium. The waſhes.

D

This Country which the Ocean hath laied to the land, as the inhabitants beleeue, by ſands heaped and caſt together, they it terme Silt, is aſſailed on the one ſide with the ſaid Ocean ſea, and in the other with a mighty confluence of waters from out of the higher countries, in ſuch ſort, that all the winter quarter the people of the country are faine to keepe watch and ward continually, and hardly with all the bankes and dammes that they make againſt the waters, are able to defend themſelves from the great violence and outrage thereof. The ground bringeth forth but ſmall ſtore of corne, but plenty of graſſe, and is repleniſhed abundantly with fiſh and water-foule. The ſoile throughout is ſo ſoft, that they uſe their horſes vnſhod: neither ſhall you meet ſo much as with a little ſtone there, that hath not beene brought thither from other places: nevertheleſſe, there be moſt beautifull Churches ſtanding there built of foure ſquare ſtone.

E

Certaine it is, that the ſea aforetime had entred farther up into the Country, and that appeareth by thoſe bankes formerly raiſed againſt the waterwaves then in-ruſhing, which are now two miles off from the ſhore, as alſo by the hilles neere Sulterton, which they call Salt-Hills. But, of freſh water there is exceeding great want in all places: neither have they any at all but raine water and that in pits, which if they be of any great depth, preſently become brackiſh, if ſhallow, they dry up as ſoone. Neither are there Quickſands wanting, which have a wonderfull force to draw to them and to hold faſt, as both ſhepheards and their poore ſheepe alſo find other whiles not without danger.

Salt-hilles.

F

Quickſands.

This Holland or Hoiland (whether you will) is divided into two parts. The Lower and the Higher: The Lower hath in it foule and ſlabby quavemires, yea and moſt troubleſome troublesome fennes, which the very inhabitants themselves for all their stilts cannot A stalke through. And considering that it lieth very low and flat, fensed it is of the one side against the Ocean, on the other from those waters which overwhelme the upper part of the Isle of Ely, with mighty piles and huge bankes opposed against the same. Of which, Southybanke is of greatest name; which least it should have a breach made throught it with that infinite masse of water that falleth from the South part, when the rivers swell, and all is overflowen by inundation, the people watch with great care and much feare, as against a dangerous enimie. And yet for the draining away of this water, the neighbour inhabitants at the common charges of the country be- B ganne to make a new chanell at Clowcrosse in the yeere 1599. Neere unto this banke Crowland. aforesaid, we saw Crowland, which also is called Croyland, a towne of good note among the Fenne-people, the name whereof soundeth, as Ingulph the Abbot of this place interpreteth it, as much as A raw and muddy land: A place, as they write, much hanted in times past with I wot not what sprits and fearefull apparitions, before that Guthlake a right holy and devout man led there an Eremits life. In whose memoriall Aethelbald King of the Mercians founded to the honor of God at his great charges, in the yeere of our Salvation 716. an Abbay very famous both for opinion of the religious life of the Monkes, & also for their wealth. Concerning which, take heere, if you C please, these verses of Fælix a Monke of good antiquity, out of the life of Guthlake.

Nunc exercet ibi se munificentia regis,
Et magnum templum magno molimine condit.
At cum tam mollis, tam lubrica, tam malè constans
Fundamenta palus non ferret saxea, palos
Præcipit infigi quercino robore cæsos,
Leucarumque nouem spatio rate fertur arena;
Inque solum mutatur humus, suffultáque tali
Cella basi, multo stat consummata labore.

His bounty now the King doth there bestow, D
An Abbay faire with much expense to reare.
But seeing that the waterish fenne below,
Those ground-workes laid with stone uneath could beare,
(So quaving soft and moist the Bases were)
He caused piles made of good heart of oke,
Pitch't downe to be with maine commanders stroke.
Then nine leagues off, men sand in barges brought,
Which once fast ramm'd by painfull workmans hand,
Of rotten earth good solide ground was wrought; E
On which for ay such workes might firmly stand:
And thus by this devise of new plantation,
The Church stands firme and hath sure foundation.

The Divels of Crowland. If I should exemplifie unto you out of that Monke, the divels of Crowland, with their blabber lips, fire-spitting mouths, rough and skaly visages, beetle heads, terrible teeth, sharpe chins, hoarse throats, blacke skinnes, crump-shoulders, side and gorbellies, burning loines, crooked & hawm'd legs, long tailed buttocks, & vgly mishapes, which heeretofore walked and wandered up and downe in these places, and very F much troubled holy Guthlake and the Monkes, you would laugh full merily; and I might be thought a simple sily-one full worthily. Howbeit, in regard of the admirable situation of this place, so farre different from all others in England, and considering the Abbay was so famous, I am well content to dwell a while in the description of these particulars. Amid most deepe fennes and standing waters in a muddy and miry ground this Crowland lieth so shut up & divided round about from all entrance, that there is no accesse to it, unlesse it be on the North and East side, and that by narrow causies. Seated it is for all the world, if I may resemble great and small things together,

A gether, like unto Venice. Three ſtreets it hath and thoſe ſevered one from another by water courſes betweene, planted thicke with willowes, and raiſed upon piles or poſts pitched and driven downe deepe into the ſtanding waters, having over them a triangle bridge of admirable workmanſhip, under which for to receive the fall of the waters meeting in one confluence, the inhabitants report there was a pit ſuncke of a mighty depth. Now, whereas beyond the bridge in ſolum mutatur humus (as that Monke ſaid) that is, The mould is chaunged, and is become firme and ſolid ground, there ſtood in times paſt that famous Abbay, and the ſame verily taking up but a ſmall plot of ground: about which, all (ſave where the towne ſtandeth) is ſo rotten and moo-
B riſh, that a man may thruſt a pole downe right thirty foote deepe: and round about it every way is nothing but a plot of reeds; and next unto the Church a place planted with alders. Howbeit, the towne is well enough peopled with inhabitants, who have their cattaile a great way from the towne, and when they are to milke them, they goe in little punts or boats that will cary but two apeece, (which they call Skerries:) yet the moſt gainfull trade they have is by taking fiſh, and catching of wa-ter foule; and that is ſo great, that in the moneth of Auguſt, they will ſpred a net and at once drawe three thouſand mallards and wild ducks and ſuch like together: and theſe pooles or watery plots of theirs, they uſe to terme their Corne fields: for, they ſee no corne growing in five miles any way. In regard of this their taking of fiſh and
C foule they paid yeerely in times paſt to the Abbat, as now they doe to the King, three hundred pounds of our money.

The private hiſtory of this Abbay I liſt not to relate (ſeeing it is commonly extant and to be ſeene) out of Ingulph now printed and publiſhed: yet my minde ſerves me well, briefely to record, that which Peter of Bloys Vice-chancellour to King Henrie the ſecond reported at large, as touching the new building of this Abbay in the yeere of our redemption 1112: to the end, that by this one preſident we may learne, by what meanes and helpes, ſo mighty, ſo huge, and ſo faire religious houſes were raiſed and built up in thoſe times. Ioffrid the Abbat obtained of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops in England, An Indulgence for a third part of penance enjoined for ſinnes com-
D mitted, unto every one that helped forward ſo holy a worke. With this Indulgence hee ſent out Monkes every way and all-about to gather money: wherewith when he was now ſufficiently furniſhed, to the end that he might have an happy beginning of this worke from ſome happy names of lucky preſage, he ſolemnly appointed the day of Saint Perpetua, and of Saint Felicity, on which hee would lay the firſt foundation. At which day there came flocking in great numbers, the Nobles, the Prelates, and Commons of all the Country thereabout. After the celebration of divine ſervice, and Anthems ſung in parts, Abbat Ioffrid himſelfe layed the firſt Corner ſtone Eaſtward; then the noble men and great perſons every one in their degree couched their ſtones, and upon the ſaid ſtones ſome laid money, others their ſealed Deeds of lands, aduou-
E ſons of Churches, of tenths of their ſheepe, and of the tithes of their Churches, of certaine meaſures of wheat, and of a certaine number of workmen, as maſons and Quarriers, whom they would pay. The Common ſort again and Townſhips for their parts, offred with cheerefull devotion, ſome money, others one daies labour every moneth untill the worke were finiſhed, ſome the building of whole pillars, others of the baſes to the ſaid pillars, and others againe to make certaine parts of the wals, ſtri-ving a vie who ſhould doe moſt. This done, the Abbat after hee had in a ſolemne ſpeech commended their deuout bounty to ſo holy a worke, granted unto every one of them the fraternity of his Abbay, and the participation beſides of all Spirituall benefits in that Church: as praiers, bleſſings &c, and ſo when hee had entertained
F them with a very ſumptuous feaſt, hee gave them his bleſſing and diſmiſſed them cheerefully euery man to his owne home. But I will dwell no longer in this matter. But heereby you may ſee how by ſmall contributions great workes aroſe. From Crow-land there goeth a Cawſey planted on both ſides with willowes, betweene the river Welland and the deepe mariſhes, Northward: upon which, two miles from Crowland, I ſaw the fragment of a Piramis with this Inſcription.

AIO ꝺANC PЄTRAM GVTꝺLACVS ꝺABET SI-BI MЄTAM.

I SAY, THAT SAINT GVTH-LAKE, THIS STONE HIS BOVND DOTH MAKE.

Spalding.

Higher yet upon the ſame river is ſeated Spalding, encloſed round about with riverets and drajnes, a fairer towne, I aſſure you than a man would looke to finde in this tract among ſuch ſlabbes and water-plaſhes: where Ivo Talbois, whom Ingulph elſewhere calleth Earle of Aujou, gaue an ancient Cell to the Monkes of Angiers in France. From hence as farre as to Deeping, which is ten miles off, Egelrick Abbot of Crowland, afterwards Biſhop of Durham, made for the eaſe of travailers, as ſaith Ingulphus, through the mideſt of a vaſt foreſt, and of moſt deepe fens, a ſound cauſey of wood and ſand, after his owne name called Elrich-road; which notwithſtanding at this daie is not to be ſeene.

In higher Hoiland that bendeth more into the North, firſt wee haue in ſight Kirkton, ſo named of the Church, which is paſſing faire: and then, where the river Witham hemnd in ſtrongly with bankes on both ſides runneth in a maine and ful ſtreame toward the ſea, flouriſheth Boſton, more truely named Botolphs-towne. For, it caried that name from one Botolph a moſt holy and devout Saxon, who at Icanhoe, as Bede witneſſeth, had a monaſterie. A famous towne this is, ſtanding on both ſides of the river Witham, which hath over it a wooden bridge of a great heigth; and well frequented by the meanes of a commodious haven unto it: the market place is faire and large, and the Church maketh a goodly ſhowe, as well for the beautifull building as the greatneſſe thereof: the towre-ſteeple of it, which riſeth up to a mighty heigth, doth, as one would ſay, ſalute paſſengers and travailers a great way off, and giveth direction alſo to the ſailers. A lamentable overthrow it ſuſteined in the reigne of Edward the firſt. For, when bad and ruffian-like behaviour rufled at that time over all England, certaine military luſty fellowes having proclaimed heere a Iuſts or running at Tilt, at a Faire-time, when there was much reſort of people thither, came apparelled in the habit of Monkes and Chanons, ſet fire on the towne in moſt places thereof, brake in upon merchants with ſodaine violence, tooke away many things by force, burnt a great deale more; in ſo much as our Hiſtorians write, that (as the ancient writers record of Corinth when it was deſtroied) molten gold & ſilver ran downe in a ſtreame togither. Their ring-leader Robert Chamberlan, after hee had confeſſed the act, and what a ſhamefull deed had beene committed, was hanged: yet could hee not bee wrought by any meanes to diſcloſe his complices in this foule fault. But happier times raiſed Boſton againe out of the aſhes, and a ſtaple for wooll here ſetled, did verie much enrich it, and drew thither merchants of the Hanſe Society, who had here their Guild. At this daie it is for building faire, and by good trade rich. For, the Inhabitants giue themſelues both to merchandiſe and alſo to graſing. Neere unto this was the Baronie de Croeun or de Credonio, out of which familie, Alan de Croeun founded the Priorie of Freſton; and at length Parnel heire of the familie being twice married transferred no ſmall inheritance, firſt to the Longchamps, which came the Pedwardins; and ſecondly to Iohn Vaulx, from whom the Barons Roos are deſcended. Beyond it ſcarce ſixe miles, reacheth Holland: all which Ivo Talboys of Anjou received at the bountifull hands of King William the Conqueror, but Boſton.

Robbers in Monkes habits.

Stiliard.

The Regiſter of Freſton.

Barons of Burton Croeun.

De vallibus.

Herward

A Herward an English man, of good hope and full of doutie courage, beeing sonne to Leofrick Lord of Brane or Burne not brooking his insolencie, when hee saw his owne and his Country-mens safetie now endangered; after hee had received the cincture with a militarie Belt by Brann Abbot of Peterborrough, whose stomacke rose also against the Normans, raised warre against him, oftentimes put him to flight, and at length carried him away captiue, and suffered him not to bee ransomed but with such conditions that hee might bee received into the kings favour, wherein hee died his liege man. For so deserved his valour, which is alwaies commended even in a verie enimie. His daughter beeing wedded to Hugh Enermeue B Lord of Deping enjoied his lands, which afterwards, as I understand, was devolued upon the familie of Wake, which beeing mightily enriched with the possessions of the Estotevills, was of right great honour in these parts, untill the reigne of Edward the Second: for then, by an heire Generall, their inheritance came by right of marriage unto Edmund of Woodstocke youngest sonne to king Edward the First, and Earle of Kent. But of a younger sonne, the ancient familie of the Wakes of Bliswarth in Northampton-shire yet remaining is descended.

Herwardus Anglus.

Ingulph of Crowland.

Barons de Wake.

The second part of this Country commonly called Kesteven, and by Aethelward an ancient author, Ceostefne wood, adjoyning to Hoiland on the West side; is for aire farre more holsome, and for soile no lesse fruitfull. Greater this is and larC ger than the other, yea and garnished everie where with more faire townes. At the entrie thereinto upon the river Welland standeth Stanford, in the Saxon tongue Stean-forð, built of rough stone, whence it hath the name. A towne well peopled and of great resort, endowed also with sundrie immunities, and walled about; It gaue Geld or Tribute, as wee reade in Domesday booke, for twelue hundreds and an halfe, in the armie, shipping, and Danegeld, and in it were six wards. What time as king Edward the elder fortified the South bankes of rivers against the Danes breaking by force into the land out of the North parts, Marianus recordeth, that hee built a verie strong Castle just over against this towne also on the South banke (which now is called Stanford Baron) yet there appeareth not any one Kesteven.

Stanford.

D token thereof at this daie: for, that Castle which in time of the civill warre Stephen strengthened against Henrie of Anjou, was within the towne, as both the generall report holdeth, and the verie plot also whereon it stood as yet remaining, sheweth. But soone after, the said Henrie, beeing now King of England, gaue the whole towne of Stanford, which was in his demaine, excepting the fees or Feifs of the Barons and knights of the same towne, unto Richard de Humez or Hometz, who was Constable to the king, his Soueraigne Lord, for his homage and service. And the same afterwardes, held William Earle of Warren by the will and pleasure of King Iohn.

See Burghley in the County of Northampton.

Under the reigne of Edward the Third, an Vniversitie, and publicke profession E of good learning beganne heere, which the Inhabitants count no small credit unto them. For, when there was such hote debate and contention betweene the Northren and Southren students at Oxford, a great number of scholers withdrew themselues hither: but after a small while they returned upon the kings Proclamation, to Oxford, and as they sodainelie beganne, so they ended as soone this new Universitie: And thence forward provided it was by oth, That no student in Oxford should publickly professe or reade at Stanford to the preiudice of Oxford. Nevertheless it flourished with fresh trading and merchandise, untill the civill warre, betweene the two houses of Lancaster and Yorke, grewe so hote, that the Northren soldiours breaking into the towne destroied all with fire and sword. Neither could it ever F since that time fully recover the ancient dignity. And yet now it is in good estate: and the civill government thereof consisteth of an Alderman and foure and twentie Burgesses his brethren. Beautified it is with seven parish Churches or there about, and sheweth an old Hospital & that a very faire house founded by William Browne a Burgesse there, besides another new one on this side of the Bridge lately built by that Nestor of Britaine, Sir William Cecill Baron Burghley, what time as hee raised that stately and sumptuous house at Burghley, whereof I have spoken already in Northampton-shire, who lieth enterred heere in a goodly and gorgeous tombe within the Parish Church of Saint George; a man (to say nothing else of him) who by course of nature, and for his owne glory lived long enough, but in regard of his country died ouer-soone. A

An Academy or Universitie begun at Stanford.

* Commonly called High. Dike.

Although some tokens remaining of antiquity, and *the High-street, made by the Romans, which so soone as you are without the towne leadeth you the direct way into the North, may sufficiently shew, that sometimes there was a Ferry or Water-fare heere. Yet that this towne should be that GAVSENNAE, which Antonine the Emperour placeth not far from hence, the said tokens of Antiquity doe not affoord sufficient proofe. But seeing that a mile from hence there is a little Village called Bridg-casterton (which very name carieth with it the marke of Antiquity) where the river Guash or Wash crosseth the said High-street; the affinity of this name Guash with Gausennæ, and the distance also making not against it, hath made me to thinke that Gausennæ was it which now is called Bridg-casterton, untill time bring truth to light. If I should thinke, that Stanford grew out of the ruines of this towne, and that this part of the shire was named Kesteven of GAVSENNAE, like as another part, Lindsey, of the City Lindum, let this I pray you, be but mine opinion, and judge ye thereof accordingly. It is supposed that this Gausennæ was overthrowen, when (as Henry Archdeacon of Huntingdon writeth) the Picts and Scots had spoiled all the country, as farre as to Stanford: where, Hengist and his English-Saxons with their unwearied force and singular prowesse hindered the passage of those furious nations, so that after many of them were slaine, and more taken prisoners, the rest betooke themselves to flight. But let us proceed to the rest.

Gausennæ.

Bridg-Casterton.

B

C

Deping.

On the East side of Kesteven which bendeth toward Hoiland, as wee goe Northward, these places stand in order: First, Deping, that is to say, (as Ingulph interpreteth it), Deepe Medow: Where, Richard de Rulos, Chamberlaine to William Conqueror, excluding the river Welland with raising up an high banke (for that it often overflowed) and building upon the said Banke many tenements, made a great Village. This Deping, or Deepe Medow, was very fitly so called, for, the plaine lying under it, and which taketh up in compasse many miles, is of all this fenny country the deepest, and the very receptacle of most waters. And that which a man would mervaile at, it lieth farre under the chanell of the river Glen, which being held in with forced bankes, passeth by from out of the West. Then have you Burne, well known by occasion that King Edmond was crowned and the Wakes had a Castle there, who obtained unto this towne, from King Edward the First, the liberty of a Mercat.

Deping fen.

Burne.

D

Lutterell. Sempringham.

More Eastward is Irnham, a seat of the Barony in times past of Sir Andrew Lutterell. Beyond it is Sempringham, famous in these daies by reason of that passing faire house, which Edward Lord Clinton, afterwards Earle of Lincolne built; but renowmed in old time for the religious order of the Gilbertines, instituted by Gilbert Lord of the place: for he, a wonderfull man, & in custodia mulierum gratiæ singularis, that is, of singular grace in taking charge of women, in the yeere after Christs nativity 1148. contrary to Iustinians Constitutions, which forbad Double Monasteries, that is to say, of men and women together; howbeit, well backed with the authority of Eugenius the third, Bishop of Rome, ordeined a Sect consisting of men and women; which so grew and encreased, that himselfe laied the foundations of thirteene religious houses of this Order, and whiles he lived had in them 700. Gilbertine Brethren, and eleven hundred Sisters; but no honester then they should be, if we may beleeve Niele, a scoffing Poet in those daies, who wrot thus of them.

E

Gilbertine Freers and Sisters.

F

Harum sunt quædam steriles, quædam parientes,
Virgineoque tamen nomine cuncta tegunt.
Quæ pastoralis baculi dotatur honore,
Illa quidem melius, fertiliúsque parit.

Vix

A Vix etiam quævis ſterilis reperitur in illis,
Donec eis ætas talia poſſe negat.
Some barrein are of theſe, ſome fruitfull bee,
Yet they by name of Virgins cover all:
More fertile ſure and better beareth ſhee,
Who bleſt is once with croyſier paſtorall:
Now, ſcarce of them is found one barrein Doe,
Till age debarre, whether they will or no.

Then ſee you Folkingham, which alſo is now a Lordſhip of the Clintons, the Barony
B in times paſt of the Gaunts, who were deſcended from Gilbert de Gaunt, nephew to Baldwin Earle of Flaunders, unto whom by the liberality of King William the Conquerour there fell great revenewes. For, thus we read in an old Manuſcript: Memorandum, that with William Conqueror there came in one Gilbert de Gaunt, unto whom the ſaid William gave the Manour of Folkingham, with all the appertenances and the Honour thereunto belonging: and they expelled a certaine woman named Dunmoch. Of the ſaid Gilbert came one Walter De Gaunt his ſonne and heire, and of the ſaid Walter came Gilbert de Gaunt his ſonne and heire, alſo Robert de Gaunt a younger ſonne. And from the ſaid Gilbert the ſonne and heire, came Alice his daughter and heire, who was eſpouſed to Earle Simon, and ſhe gave many tenements to religious men,
C and died without heire of her owne body. Then deſcended the inheritance to Robert de Gaunt aforeſaid her unkle: and of the foreſaid Robert came Gilbert his ſonne and heire, and of the aforeſaid, came another Gilbert his ſonne and heire, and of the aforeſaid, came another Gilbert his ſonne and heire, who gave the Manor of Folkingham with the appertenances to Edward the ſonne of Henry King of England. This Gilbert as we finde in the Plees, out of which this Pedigree is prooved, claimed ſervice againſt Wil. de Scremby. And at length it came by gift of the Prince to Sir Henry Beaumont: For, moſt certaine it is, that he held it in the reigne of Edward the Second.

Lords of Folkingham.

Pl. 27. H. 3. Rot. 13. Linc.

Neere unto this, is Screkingham, remarkable for the death of Alfrik the ſecond, Earle of Leiceſter, whom Hubba a Dane ſlew. Of which place, it ſeemeth that In-
D gulph ſpake, writing thus: In Keſteven were ſlaine three great Lords or petty Kings of the Danes, whom they buried in a Village which was called before, Laundon, but now for the Sepulture of three Kings, Tre-King-ham. And more into the Eaſt, is Hather, in this regard only to be mentioned, that the Buſſeis or Buſleis heere dwel, who deduce their race from Roger de Buſly in the Conquerours time. Then Sleford, a Caſtle of the Biſhops of Lincolne, built by Alexander the Biſhop: where Sir Iohn Huſſy the firſt and laſt Baron of that name created by King Henry the Eighth, built himſelfe an houſe: who having unwittingly and unadviſedly in the yeere 1537. engaged himſelfe with the common people in a tumultuous commotion, what time as the firſt diſſention brake out in England about religion, loſt his head. Not many miles from hence ſtan-
E deth Kime, which gave name to a noble family called De Kime: but the poſſeſſion of the place came at length to the Vmfranvils: of whom three were called to the Parliament by the name of the Earles of Anguſe in Scotland. But the firſt of them, the learned in our common lawes would not acknowledge to be Earle, (for that Anguſe was not within the limits of the realme of England) untill he produced openly in court the Kings writ, by vertue whereof he had beene ſummoned by the K. to the Parliament, under the title of Earle of Anguſe. From the Vmfravils this came unto the family of Talbois, of whom Gilbert was created by King Henry the Eighth Baron Talbois, whoſe two ſonnes dying without iſſue, the inheritance was by the females transferred to the F Dimocks, Inglebeies, and others. More Weſtward we ſaw Temple Bruer, that is, as I interpret it, Temple in the Heath. For it ſeemeth to have beene a Commaundery of the Templers: conſidering that the decaied broken walles of the Church there are ſeene in forme of the New Temple at London. Hard to it lieth Blankenay, the Barony in times paſt of the D'eincourts, who flouriſhed ſucceſſiuely a long time one after another from Inqui. 4. E. 2. Screkingham.

Buſſy. Sleford.

Baron Huſſy.

Kime.

Earles of Anguſe.

Temple Bruer.

Barons D'eincourt.

from the Normans comming in unto K. Henrie the Sixth his time: For then, their male line determined in one William, who had two sisters for his heires, the one married to Sir William Lovell, the other to Sir Ralph Cromwell. The more willingly have I made mention of this family, to give satisfaction in some measure unto the longing desire of Edmond Baron D'eincourt, who long since being carefull and earnest about the preservation of the memory of his name, as having no male issue, put up an humble petition to King Edward the Second, Whereas hee fore-saw that his surname and armes after his death would be quite forgotten, and yet hartily desired that after his decease they might bee still remembred, that hee might bee permitted to enfeoffe whom soever it pleased him, both in his Manours and Armes also. Which request hee obtained, and it was graunted under the kings letters Patents: yet for all that is this surname now quite gone (to my knowledge) and had it not beene continued by the light of learning, might haue beene cleane forgotten forever.

Inquis. 21. H. 6.

Patent. 10. Ed. 2.

In the West part of Kesteven and the verie confines of this shire and Leicestershire, standeth Belvoir, or Beauvoir Castle, so called of the faire prospect (what name so ever it had in old time) mounted upon the top of a good steepe hill, built by Robert de Todeneie a Norman Nobleman, who also beganne the little monasterie adjoining, from whom by the Albeneies out of little Britaine, and the Barons Roos, it came by inheritance to the Mannors Earles of Rutland: of whom the first, that is to say, Thomas, as I haue beene enformed, raised it up againe with new buildings from the ground, when as it had for many yeares lien buried as it were in his owne ruins. For, in despite of Thomas Lord Roos, who tooke part with King Henrie the Sixth, it was much defaced by William Lord Hastings, unto whom (after that the said Baron Roos was attainted) king Edward the Fourth had graunted it with verie faire lands. But Edmund Baron Roos sonne of the said Thomas, by the gratious favour of King Henrie the Seventh recovered this ancient inheritance againe. About this Castle are found the Stones called Astroites, which resemble little starres joyned one with another, wherein are to bee seene at everie corner fiue beames or raies, and in everie raie in the middest is small holownesse. This Stone among the Germans got his name of Victorie, for that, as George Agricola writeth in his Sixth booke of Mineralls, they are of opinion, that whosoever carrieth it about him shall winne his suite and get victorie of his enimies. But whether this stone of ours, as that in Germanie, beeing put in vineger, will stirre out of his place, and turne it selfe some-what round, I could never yet make triall. Under this Castle lieth a vale and presenteth a most pleasant prospect thereunto, whereupon it is commonlie called, the Vale of Belver, which is verie large and passing pleasantlie beautified with cornefields, and no lesse rich in pastures; lying stretched out in three shires, of Leicester, Nottingham and Lincolne.

Belvoir or Bever Castle.

Tony.

Stones Astroites.

The vale of Beaver.

If not in this verie place, yet hard by it, in all probabilitie, stood that MARGIDVNVM, which Antonine the Emperour placeth next after VERNOMETVM, as both the name and the distance also from VERNOMETVM and the towne PONT or Paunton, betweene which Antonine placeth it, may most plainely shew. It should seeme that ancient name Margidunum was borowed from Marga and the situation of it: For, Marga among the Britans is a kinde of earth named Marle wherewith they nourished and kept their grounds in heart: and DVNVM, which signifieth an hill, agreeth onelie to places higher mounted than others. And yet in this Etymologie of the name I am in a doubt, seeing that Marle in this place is verie geason or skant (happily because no man seeketh for it) unlesse the Britans by the name of Marga tearmed Plaster-Stone, which is digged uppe hard by, as I haue learned: the use whereof in white pargetting and in making of Images, was of especiall request among the Romans, as Plinie witnesseth in his Naturall Historie.

Margidunum.

Marga. i. Marle Dunum.

Witham a river plentifull in pikes but carring a small streame, watereth this part of the Shire and on the North-side encloseth it. It hath his beginning by a little River Witham.

A little towne of the same name, not farre from the ruins of Bitham Castle, which, as we find in an old Pedigree King William the first gave to Stephen Earle of Albemarle and Holderneſſe, that he might from thence have wherewith to feed his ſonne, as yet a little infant, with fine wheat bread (conſidering that in Holderneſſe they did eate in thoſe daies oten bread onely, although they uſe now ſuch kind of bread little or nothing at all.) But in the reigne of King Henrie the Third, when William de Fortibus Earle of Aumarle rebellioutly kept this Caſtle, and thence forraied and waſted the country about it, it was laid well neere even with the ground. Afterward, this was the capitall ſeat, as it were, if the Baronie of the Colvils, who a long time flouriſhed in very great honour: but the right line had an end under King Edward the Third: and B then the Gernons and thoſe notable Baſſets of Sapcot, in right of their wives entred upon the inheritance. Bitham. Matthew Paris. Colvill.

This river Witham preſently beneath his head hath a towne ſeated hard by it named Paunton, which ſtandeth much upon the antiquity thereof, where are digged up oftentimes pavements of the Romans wrought with checker worke: and heere had the river a bridge over it in old time: For, that this is the towne AD PONTEM, which Antonine the Emperour placed ſeven miles diſtant from MARGIDVNVM, the name Paunton, together with the diſtance not onely from Margidunum but alſo from Crococalana doth eaſily convince: for in Antonine, that town was called CROCOCALANA, which at this day is named Ancaſter, and is no more but a long ſtreet, through C which the High-way paſſeth: whereof the one part not long ſince belonged to the Veſcies, the other to the Cromwells. At the entrie into it on the South part, we ſaw a rampier with a ditch, and certaine it is, that aforetime it had beene a Caſtle: like as on the other ſide Weſtward, is to bee ſeene a certaine ſummer ſtanding campe of the Romans. And it may ſeeme that it tooke a Britiſh name from the ſituation thereof. For, it lieth under an hill: and Cruc-maur in Britiſh ſignifieth a Great hil, like as Cruc-occhidient, a mount in the Weſt, as we read in Giraldus Cambrenſis, and Ninnius: But what ſhould be the meaning of that Calana, let others looke. The memory of antiquity in this towne is continued and maintained by the Romane Coines, by the vaults under ground often times diſcovered, by the ſite upon the High-ſtreet, and by thoſe four-D teene miles that are betweene it and Lincolne through a greene plaine, which we call Ancaſter-Heath; for, juſt ſo many doth Antonine reckon betweene Croco-calana and Lindum. But now returne we to the river. Paunton. Ad Pontes. Crococalana. Ancaſter.

After Paunton, wee come to Grantham, a towne of good reſort, adorned and ſet out with a ſchoole built by Richard Fox Biſhop of Winchester, and with a faire Church, having a ſpire-ſteeple of a mighty heigth, whereof there goe many fabulous tales. Grantham.

Beneath it, neere unto Herlaxton a little village, a braſen veſſell in our fathers time was turned up with a plough, wherein a golden helmet of a moſt antique faſhion was found, ſet with precious ſtones: which was given as a preſent to Catherine of E Spaine, wife and Dowager to king Henrie the Eighth. From hence Witham paſſeth with a long courſe North-ward not farre from Somerton Caſtle: which Antonie Bece, Biſhop of Durham built, and gaue to king Edward the Firſt: but a little after it was beſtowed upon Sir Henrie de Beaumont, who about that time came into England and beganne the familie of the Lords Beaumont: which in the foregoing age in ſome ſort failed, when as the ſiſter and heire of the laſt Vicount was married to Iohn Lord Lovel de Tichmerſh: But of this houſe I haue ſpoken before in Leiceſter-ſhire. From thence, the river bending by little and little to the South-Eaſt, and paſſing through a fenny Country, diſchargeth it ſelfe into the German ſea beneath Boſton, after F it hath cloſed in Keſteven on the North. A golden Helmet. Somerton. Durham booke. Lords of Beaumont.

On the other ſide of Witham, lieth the third part of this ſhire, named Lindſey, which, of the chiefe Citie of the Shire Bede called Lindiſi: and beeing greater than Hoitland and Keſteven, butteth with a huge bowing front upon the Ocean, beating upon the Eaſt and North ſides thereof. On the Weſt part it hath the river Trent, and is ſevered from Keſteven; on the South by that Witham aforeſaid, and the Foſſe Dike ancient- Lindſey.

Foſſe dike. Hoveden.

ly caſt and ſcoured by King Henrie the firſt for ſeauen miles in length from Witham into Trent, that it might ſerve the Citizens of Lincolne for carriage of neceſſaries by water. A Torkſey.

Where this Dike entreth into Trent, ſtandeth Torkſey, in the Saxon language Turcepiz, a little towne, & in theſe daies of ſmall account, but in ancient times verie famous. For, before the Normans comming in, as wee finde in that booke where-

Domeſday booke.

in King William the Firſt ſet downe his ſurvey of England, there were numbered in it two hundred Burgeſſes, who enjoied many privileges, on this condition, that they ſhould tranſport the kings Embaſſadours whenſoever they came this way in their owne Barges along the Trent, and conduct them as farre as YORKE. But B where this Dike joyneth to Witham, there is the Principall City of this Shire placed: which Ptolomee and Antonine the Emperour called LINDVM, the Britans LIND-COIT, of the woods (for which wee finde it elſe where written amiſſe Luit-coit)

Lindum. Lincoln. Collis an hil.

Bede, LINDE-COLLINVM, and LINDECOLLINA CIVITAS, whether it were of the ſituation upon an hill, or becauſe it hath beene a Colonie, I am not able to avouch. The Saxons termed it Lindo-collyne, and Lind-cyllan-ceaſtep, the Normans moſt corruptly Nichol, wee Lincoln, and the Latine writers Lincolnia: whereupon Alexander Necham in his booke intituled, Divine wiſdome, writeth thus,

Lindiſiæ columen Lincolnia, ſive columna,
Mun ficâ fœlix gente, repleta bonis. C
Lincoln the ſtay or piller ſure of Lindſey thou maiſt bee,
Bleſt for they people bounteous, and goods that are in thee.

Others will haue it to take that name of the river Witham, which they ſay was called by a more ancient name Lindis, but they haue no authority to warrant them. Neither am I of their judgement: For, Necham is againſt it, who foure hundred yeares agoe called the ſaid river, Witham in this verſe.

Trenta tibi piſtes mittit Lincolnia, ſed te,
Nec dedigneris, Witham a parvus adit.
The Trent unto thee ſendeth fiſh, O Lincoln, well we ſee; D
Yet little Witham, ſcorne it not, a riveret comes to thee.

I for my part would rather derive it from the Britiſh word Lhin, which with the Britans ſignifieth a Lake. For, I haue beene enformed of the Citizens, that Witham below the Citie, by Swanpole was broader than now it is, and yet is it at this daie of a good breadth: and to ſay nothing of Lindaw in Germaine, by the Lake Acronius, and of Linternum in Italie ſtanding by a Lake; I ſee that in our Britaine, Tallhin, Glan-lhin, and Lhinlithquo, are townes by lakes ſides. This Citie it ſelfe beeing large, well inhabited and frequented, ſtandeth upon the ſide of an hill, E where Witham bendeth his courſe Eaſt ward, and beeing divided with three ſmall chanels, watereth the lower part of the Citie. That the ancient LINDVM of the Britans ſtood on the verie toppe of the hill, which had a verie hard aſcent uppe to it, and reached out beyond the gate called Newport, the expreſſe tokens of a rampier and deepe Ditches which are yet verie evident, doe plainelie ſhew.

In this Citie, Vortimer that warlicke Britan, who many a time diſcomfited the Saxons and put them to flight, ended his daies, and was heere, contrary to his owne commandement, buried. For, hee was in a full and aſſured hope perſwaded, that if hee were entered in the ſea ſhore, his verie ghoſt was able to protect F the Britans from the Saxons, as writeth Ninius, the diſciple of Elvodugus. But the Engliſh Saxons after they had raſed this old Lindum, firſt poſſeſſed themſelues of the South ſide of the hill, at the foote whereof they built, as it ſeemeth, the gate yet ſtanding compiled of vaſt ſtones; and with the ruines of that more ancient towne fortified it. Afterwards they went downe lower to the river ſide, built in a place that was called Wickanforde, and walled it about on that ſide which is not

A not fenſed by the river: At which time, as ſaith Bede, Paulinus preached the word of God unto the Province of Lindſey, and firſt of all converted unto the Lord, the Governour or Provoſt of Lincoln-city, whoſe name was Blecca, with his family. In which very City, he built alſo a Church of goodly ſtone-worke, the roofe whereof being either fallen for want of repaire, or caſt downe by the violent hand of enemies, the walles are ſeene ſtanding to this day. After this the Danes won it by aſſault once or twice: Firſt, thoſe troupes of ſpoiling mates, out of whoſe hands King Edmund Yronſide wreſted it by force: then Canutus from whom Ætheldred regained it, when upon his returne out of Normandy, he valiantly forced Canutus to abandon the town, and beyond all hope recovered England
B which before was loſt. In the reigne of Edward the Confeſſor, there were in it, as Domeſday booke recordeth, a theuſand and ſeventy Manſions, with lodgings to give entertainment, and twelue Lage men having Sac, and Soc. But in the Normans time, as ſaith William of Malmesbury, It was one of the beſt peopled Cities of England, and a place of trafficke and merchandiſe, for all commers by ſea and land: and as the ſame Domeſday booke ſaith, there were at that time counted and taxed in this City 900. Burgeſſes: and many Manſions were laied waſt, 166. for the Caſtle, and other 74. without the precinct of the Caſtle, not through the oppreſſion of the Sheriffe and his Miniſters, but by reaſon of miſhap, poverty, and caſualty by fire. The ſaid K. William the Conqueror for the ſtrengthning of it and terrour of the Citizens, raiſed a paſſing large and ſtrong Caſtle upon
C the brow of the hill: and almoſt at the very ſame time, Remigius Biſhop of Dorcheſter for to give credit and ornament thereto tranſlated hither his Epiſcopall ſeat from Dorcheſter, which was in the moſt remote corner of his diœceſſe and a ſmall towne. And when by this time that Church which Paulinus had built was quite gone to decay, the ſame Remigus having purchaſed certaine houſes with grounds lying unto them, in the very higheſt place of the City, neere unto the Caſtle (as Henry of Huntingdon ſaith) mounting up aloft with high and ſtately towers, built in a ſtrong place a ſtrong Church, in a faire plot a faire Church, and dedicated it to the Virgin of Virgins; notwithſtanding the Archbiſhop of Yorke was enraged thereat, who chalenged to himſelfe the propriety of the D ſoile: and in it ordeined 44. Prebendaries. Which Church afterwards being ſorely defaced with fire, as he ſaith, Alexander that moſt bountifull Biſhop of Lincolne repaired, with skilfull and artificiall workmanſhip. Of whom William of Malmesbury reporteth, becauſe for his little low ſtature he was a dwarfe among men, his minde laboured to riſe aloft and ſhew it ſelfe to the world, with outward workes. And as concerning his bounty a Poet of that time among other things wrot thus.

Qui dare feſtinans gratis, ne danda rogentur,
Quod nondum dederat, nondum ſe credit habere.

Who haſtning frankly for to giue, for feare that folke ſhould crave,
E He never thought that he had that which yet he never gave.

Beſides theſe two Biſhops already mentioned Robert Bloet who ſat there before Alexander, R. de Beaumeis, Hugh a Burgundian and their ſucceſſours, by little and little brought this Church, which could not be one Biſhops worke, to the ſtately magnificence that now it carrieth. Certes, as it is built, it is all throughout not onely moſt ſumptuouſly, but alſo paſſing beautifull, and that with rare and ſingular workmanſhip: but eſpecially that fore-front at the Weſt end, which in a ſort raviſheth and allureth the eies of all that iudiciouſly view it. In this Church, although there be divers Monuments of Biſhops and others, yet theſe onely ſeeme memorable: That of Copper wherein the bowels of that right noble and vertuous Queene Æleonor wife
F to King Edward the Firſt are beſtowed, who died at Hardby in this Shire: as alſo theſe following, wherein lie enterred Sir Nicoles Cantlow, one or two of the family of Burgherſh: Lady Catherine Swinford the third wife of Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter and mother of the houſe of Somerſet, with whom lieth buried Ioan her daughter, ſecond wife to Raulph Nevill the firſt Earle of Weſtmerland, who enriched her husband with many happy children.

The

Sidnacester. The Bishops Diœceſſe of Lincolne not content with thoſe ſtreit limits, where- A with the Biſhops of Sidnaceſter, who had Epiſcopall Iuriſdiction over this ſhire contented themſelves in the Primitive Church of the Engliſh Nation, conteined under it ſo many countries, as that the greatneſſe thereof was burdenous unto it: And although King Henry the Second tooke out of it the Province of Ely, and King Henry the Eighth the Biſhopricks of Peterbourgh, and of Oxford, yet ſtill at this day it is counted the greateſt Diœceſſe by farre of all England, both for juriſdiction and number of ſhires: and the Biſhop hath in his Diœceſſe one thouſand two hundred fourty ſeven Pariſh Churches.

Many and great Biſhops ſince Remigius his time have governed this See, whom to B reckon up is no part of my purpoſe. For, I will not inſiſt either upon Robert Bloet, from whom King William Rufus wrung 50000. pounds, for ſecuring his title in the very City of Lincolne it ſelfe, which was found defectiue: nor upon that prodigall and profuſe Alexander, who in exceeding ſtately buildings was ſo exceſſively delighted:
R. Houeden. ne yet upon Hugh the Burgundian Canonized a Saint, whoſe corps King Iohn, with his nobles and frindes about him, to performe (as mine authour ſaith) a dutifull ſervice to Groſthead, he died ann. 1233. God and that holy S. late Biſhop, carried upon their ſhoulders to his buriall. Howbeit, the memory of two Prelates I muſt needs renew afreſh: the one is Robert Groſteſt, a man ſo well ſeene both in literature and in the learned tongues, in that age, as it is Matth. Paris. Anonymus Chronographus. incredible: and to vſe the words of one then living, A terrible reproover of the Pope, an C aduiſer of his Prince and Soveraigne, a lover of veritie, a corrector of Prelates, a director of Prieſts, an inſtructor of the Clergy, a maintainer of ſcholers, a Preacher to the people, a diligent ſearcher into the Scriptures, a mallet of the Romaniſts &c. The other is mine owne Præceptor, whom in all duty I muſt ever loue and honour, that right reverend Father Thomas Cooper, who hath notably well deſerved both of all the learned and alſo of the Church, in whoſe ſchoole I both confeſſe and rejoice that I receiued education. The City it ſelfe alſo flouriſhed a long time: being ordeined by King Ed-
The Staple. ward the Third for the Staple, as they tearme it, that is, the Mart, of Wooll, Leather, Lead &c. Which although it hath not beene over laied with any grievous calamities, as being once onely ſet on fire, once alſo beſeeged in vaine by King Ste- D phen, who was there vanquiſhed and taken priſoner, forced alſo and won by King Henry the Third, when the rebellious Barons, who had procured Lewis of France to chalenge the Crowne of England, defended it againſt him, without any great dam-mage; yet incredible it is how much it hath beene empaired by little and little, conquered as it were with very age and time: ſo that of fifty Churches which it had ſtan-ding in our Great-grandfathers daies, there are now remaining ſcarce eighteene. It is remoued, that I may note this alſo, from the Æquator, 53. degrees and 12. Scruples: and from the Weſt point, 22. Degrees and 52. ſcruples.

Highdike. As that Street-way called Highdike goeth on directly from Stanford to Lincolne, ſo from hence Northward it runneth with an high and ſtreight cauſey, (though heere E and there it be interrupted) forward for tenne miles ſpace to a little Village called the Spittle in the Street, and beyond: By the which as I paſſed, I obſerved moreover, about three miles from Lincolne, another High-Port-way alſo, called Ould-ſtreet, to turne out of this High dike Weſtward, carrying a banck likewiſe evident to be ſeene, which, as I take it, went to AGELOCVM, the next baiting towne, or place of lodging, from LINDVM, in the time of the Romans. But I will leaue theſe, and proceed in the courſe that I have begun.

Barons of Trusbut. Witham being now paſt Lincolne, runneth downe not far from Wraghye, a member of the Barony called Trusbut, the title whereof is come by the Barons Roos unto the Mannours now Earles of Rutland. Then approcheth it to the ruines of a famous Ab- F
Bardney. bay in times paſt called BEANDENA, or Peartaneu, commonly Bardney; where, Bede
Oſwalds ban- ner. writeth, that King Oſwald was entombed, with a Banner of gold and purple hanged over his tombe. The writers in the foregoing age, thought it not ſufficient to celebrate the memory of this moſt Chriſtian worthy King Oſwald, unleſſe unto his glorious ex-ploites they ſtitched alſo ridiculous miracles. But that his hand remained heere uncorrupted

A uncorrupted many hundred yeeres after, our anceſtours have beleeved, and a Poet of good antiquity hath written in this wiſe,

Nullo verme perit, nulla putredine tabet
Dextra viri, nullo conſtringi frigore, nullo
Diſſolui feruore poteſt; ſed ſemper eodem
Immutata ſtatu perſiſtit, mortua viuit.

The mans right hand by no worme periſht is,
No rottenneſſe doth cauſe it putrifie;
B No binding cold can make it ſtarke, ywis,
Nor melting heat, diſſolve and mollifie;
But alwaies in one ſtate perſiſt it will
Such as it was: though dead, it liveth ſtill.

This Abbay, as writeth Peter of Bloys, being ſometime burnt downe to the ground by the Danes furious outrage, and for many revolutions of yeeres altogether forlorne, that noble and devout Earle of Lincolne Gilbert de Gaunt reedified, and in moſt thankfull affectionate minde aſsigned vnto it with many other poſſeſsions, the tithes of all his Manours whereſoever throughout England. Then, is Witham increaſed with Ban a little river, which In the Appendix of Ingulph.

C out of the mids of Lindſey runneth downe, firſt by Horne Caſtle, which belonged in times paſt to * Adeliza of Condie, and was laid even with the ground in the reigne of Stephen, afterwards became a capitall ſeat of the Baronie of Gerard de Rodes, and pertaineth now, as I have heard, to the Biſhop of Carlile: From thence, by Scriuelby, a Manour of the Dimockes who hold it hereditarily devolved upon them from the Marmions, by Sir I. Ludlow, and that by ſervice, (to uſe now the Lawyers words,) Of Grand Seriantie, viz. That whenſoever any King of England is to be crowned, then the Lord of this Manour, for the time being, or ſome one in his nam (if himſelfe be unable) ſhall come well armed for the warre, mounted upon a good horſe of ſervice, in preſence of

D the ſoveraigne Lord the King upon his Coronation day; and cauſe proclamation to be made, that if any man will avouch that the ſaid ſoveraigne Lord the King, hath not right to his kingdome and crowne, he will be preſt and ready to defend the right of the King, of his kingdome, of his crowne and dignity, with his body, againſt him, and all others whoſoever. Somewhat lower, The Ban at Tatteſhall a little towne ſtanding in a mariſh country, but very commodiouſly, well knowne by reaſon of the Caſtle, built for the moſt part of bricke, and the Barons thereof, runneth into Witham. They write that Eudo and Pinſo two noblemen of Normandie, loving one another entirely as ſworne brethren, by the liberall gift of King William the Conquerour received many Lordſhips and faire lands in this tract, which they parted ſo, as that Tatteſhall fell to Eudo, which he held by Baronie, from whoſe poſterity it came by Dryby and the Bernaks unto Sir

E Raulph Cromwell, whoſe ſonne bearing the ſame name, and being under King Henrie the Sixth Lord Treaſurer of England, departed out of this world without iſſue: but unto Pinſo fell Eresby, which is not farre of: From whoſe progenie, the inheritance deſcended by the Becks unto the Willoughbeys: unto whom there came alſo an encreaſe both of honor, and alſo of faire Livelods by their wives, not onely from the Vffords Earles of Suffolke; but alſo from the Lords of Welles, who brought with them very faire poſſeſſions and lands of the family de Engain Lords of ancient Nobility, and from the firſt comming in of the Normans of great powre in theſe parts. Among theſe Willoughbeis one excelled all the reſt in the reigne of Henrie the Fifth, named Sir Robert Willoughbey, who for his martiall proweſſe was created Earle of

F Vandoſme in France & frō theſe by the mothers ſide deſcended Peregrine Berty, Baron Willoughby of Eresby, a man for his generous minde & military valour renowned both in France, & the Low-countries. Witham now approching neere unto the Sea, entertaineth out of the North another ſmall nameleſſe river; at the ſpring head whereof ſtandeth Bollingbrooke Caſtle, ſituate upon a low ground, and built of a ſoft and crumbling ſtone by William de Romara Earle of Lincolne, taken from Alice Lacey by Horncaſtle. * Alice.

Dimockes. Inq. 23. E 3.

The kings Champion.

Fines Micha. Anno 1. H 6.

Tatteſhall.

Cromwell.

Eresby. Lords Willoughbey.

Lords Wels. Lords de Engain.

King

King Edward the Second, becauſe ſhe maried againſt his will; and ennobled in that A it was the Birth-place of King Henrie the Fourth, who thereof was named Henrie of Bollingbroke. At which time it beganne to be reckoned among thoſe Honorable Ma- Bollingbroke nours, which are termed Honours. And Witham, after it hath received this riveret, having paſſed through Boſton, as I have ſaid, diſchargeth it ſelfe at length into the German ſea.

From the mouth of Witham the ſhore ſhutteth forth with a mighty ſwelling bent into the German ſea, as farre as to Humber a great Arme of the Sea, being every where ſlaſhed and indented with many ſmall waſhes and places which the ſalt water breaketh into: and hath but few townes upon it, becauſe there be few havens B there: and the ſhelves or barres of ſand lie every where anenſt the land. Yet of theſe few townes which take up this coaſt, ſome be memorable: and Wainfleet eſpecially, Wainfleet. if it were but for this cauſe onely, that it bred William Wainfleet Biſhop of Wincheſter, a worthy Prelat, founder of Mawdlen Colledge in Oxford, a man that ſingularly well
Alford. deſerved of learning. Then Alford, which for the mercate is beholden to Lion Lord Baron Welles. Welles, who obtained for it this priviledge from King Henrie the Sixth. This family of Welles, was very ancient and honorable: and the laſt of that name had to wife a daughter of King Edward the Fourth, and being by King Henrie the Seventh created Vicount Welles, died having no iſſue. But the inheritance, by the Females came * to the Willoughbeys, Dimockes, De la Launds, Hoes, and others. More inward are Driby C and Ormesby neighbour townes, which gaue ſurnames to two great families in their times; from the Dribyes deſcended the elder Lords Cromwell, now determined, and from Ormesbyes the houſe of Skipwith, ſtil continuing. After this, ye have Louth a little mercate towne well frequented, which had the name of Lud a ſmall river, that runneth under Cokerington the capital place in times paſt of the Baronie of Scoteney. And Grimsby. then Grimsby, which our Sabins or conceited perſons dreaming what they liſt, and following their owne fanſies, will have to be ſo called of one Grime a merchant, who for that he had brought up a little foundling of the Danes roiall bloud named Haveloke, when it had beene caſt forth to periſh, or to take his lucke or fortune, is much talked of, together with Haveloke that lucky foſter-child of his: who having beene firſt a D ſkullen in the Kings kitchin, and afterwards promoted to the marriage of the Kings daughter for his heroycall valour in feats of armes, & I wot not what, worthy exploits. A narration right wel beſeeming and meeteſt for them that take pleaſure to paſſe out the long nights with telling of old wives tales. But the honour and ornament of this place was the right reverend Doctor Whitgift late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, a peerleſſe prelate for pietie, and learning in our daies.

Caſtor. Thong-caſter. Scarce ſix miles from hence, more within the country there ſheweth it ſelfe an ancient Caſtle, which at this day is called Caſtor, in the old Engliſh Saxons tongue Ðuanz-Byrſa. cap ꝥep, and Thong-caſter, in Britiſh Caer Egarry: in both languages it is aptly named ſo of the thing, to wit, of an hide cut into pieces, like as Byrſa, that Caſtle or Citadell of E the Carthaginians ſo well knowen. For, our Annales record, that Hengiſt the Saxon, after he had vanquiſhed the Picts and Scots, and received very large poſſeſſions in other places, obtained alſo in this tract of Vortigern, ſo much ground as he could compaſſe round about with an oxe hide cut out into very ſmal laners, that we call Thongs, wherin he founded and built this caſtle. Whence it is that one, who hath written in verſe a Breviarie of the Britiſh Hiſtorie, turned Virgils verſes in this maner.

*Accepit ꝯ ſolum facti de nomine * Thongum,*
*In Virgil, Byrſam. Taurino quantum poterat circundare tergo.
And ground he tooke, which Thong he cal'd when he did firſt begin, F
As much as he, a bull hide cut could well encloſe within.

Thornton Colledge. From Grimsby, the ſhore draweth in with a great reach to make way for to admit Humber, by Thornton a religious houſe in times paſt inſtituted for the worſhip of God, by William the Groſſe Earle of Aumarle: alſo by Barton, where there is a very notable

A notable Ferry or passage over into Yorkshire. Hard by, Aukam a little muddy river, and therefore full of Eeles, emptieth it selfe into Humber: neere unto the spring-head whereof is Merket-Rasin, so called of a mercate there well resorted unto. Somewhat higher stand Angotby, now corruptly called Osgodby belonging in times past to the family of Semare, from whom it descended hereditarily to the Airmins: also Kelsay, a Lordship in old time of the Hansards, men of great name in this shire, from whom in right of the wives it came to the family of the Ascoghs, Knights. But after this, Aukam hath a bridge over it, at Glanford, a small mercate towne, which the common people of the said bridge, so commonly call Brigg, that the true name is almost quite forgotten. Next unto it, within a Parke I saw Kettleby the seat of the worshipfull ancient family of the Tirwhits, Knights, descended from Grouil Oxenbridge, and Echingham. But in times past it was the habitation, as a man may gather by the name, of one Ketell (which was in the time of the Saxons and Danes an usuall name). For Bye in the English-Saxon language signifieth A dwellingplace, and Byan, To dwell: whence it is that so many places both elsewhere in England, and heere especially in this shire doe end in Bye.

Barton upon Humber.

Kettleby. Tirwhitt.

Bye what it is.

All this Tract-over at certaine seasons, good God, what store of foules (to say nothing of fishes) is heere to be found! I meane not those vulgar birds which in other places are highly esteemed and beare a great price, as Teales, Quailes, Woodcocks, Pheasants, Partridges &c. but such, as we have no Latin names for, the very delicate dainties, indeed, of service, meates for the Demigods, and greatly sought for by these that love the tooth so well, I meane, Puitts, Godwitts, Knotts, that is to say, Canutus or Knouts birds, (for, out of Denmarke they are thought to fly thither), Dotterells, so named of their dotish foolishnesse, which being a kind of birds as it were of an apish kind, ready to imitate what they see done, are caught by candle light according to foulers gesture: if he put forth an arme, they also stretch out a wing: sets he forward his legge, or holdeth up his head, they likewise doe theirs: in briefe, what ever the fouler doth, the same also doth this foolish bird untill it be hidden within the net. But these things I leave to their observation, who either take pleasure earnestly to hunt after Natures workes, or being borne for to pamper the belly delight to send their estates downe the throat.

Delicate foules.

Knotts. Dotterells.

More Westward, the river Trent also after he hath ended his long course, is received into the Humber, after it hath with his sandy banke bounded this shire from Fossedike hither; having runne downe first not farre from Stow, where Godiue the wife of Earle Leofricke built a Monasterie; which for the low site that it hath under the hills, Henrie of Huntingdon saith to have beene founded Vnder the Promontorie of Lincolne: Then, neere unto Knath, now the habitation of Baron Willoughby of Parrham, in times past of the family of the Barons Darcy, who had very much encrease both in honor and also of possessions by the daughter and heire of the Meinills. This family of the Darcyes proceeded from another more ancient, to wit, from one whose name was Norman de Adrecy or Darcy de Nocton, who flourished in high reputation under King Henrie the Third; and whose successours endowed with lands the little Nunnerie at Alvingham in this County. But this dignity is as it were extinct, for that the last Norman in the right line which is more ancient, left behind him onely two sisters: of which the one was maried to Roger Pedwardine, the other to Peter of Limbergh.

Stow.

Knath.

Darcy de Nocton and Knath.

Fines 29.E.3.

Then runneth the Trent down to Gainesborrow, a towne ennobled by reason of the Danes ships that lay there at rode, & also for the death of Suene Tiugs-Kege, a Danish Tyrant, who after he had robbed and spoiled the country, as Matthew of Westminster writeth, being heere stabbed to death by an vnknowne man, suffred due punishment at length for his wickednesse and villanie. Many a yeere after this, it became the possession of Sir William de Valence Earle of Pembroke, who obtained for it of King Edward the First, the liberty to keepe a Faire: From which Earle by the Scotish Earles of Athol, and the Percies, descended the Barons of Bourough who heere dwelt: concerning whom I haue written already in Surrie. In this part of the shire stood long since the City Sidnacester, which affoorded a See to the Bishops of this Tract, who were Gainesborrow.

Barons Borrough.

Sidnacester.

were called the Bishops of Lindisfarn: But this City is now so farre out of all sight and knowledge, that together with the name the very ruines also seeme to haue perished, for by all my curious enquirie, I could learne nothing of it. A

Neither must I overpasse, that in this quarter, at Melwood there flourished the familie of Saint Paul, corruptly called Sampoll, knights; which I alwaies thought to haue beene of that ancient Castilion race of the Earles of Saint Paul in France. But, the Coat-Armour of Luxemburgh, which they beare, implieth that they are come out of France since that the said Castilion stocke of Saint Paul, was by marriage implanted into that of Luxemburgh, which happened two hundred yeares since or there about.

Saint Paule.

B

Aboue this place the rivers of Trent, Idell and Dane doe so disport themselues with the division of their streames, and marshes caused by them and other springs, as they enclose within them the river-Island of Axelholme, in the Saxon tongue Eaxalholme, which is a parcell of Lincolne-shire. It carrieth in length from South to North ten miles, and in bredth not past halfe so much. The flat and lower part of it toward the rivers is marish ground, and bringeth forth an odoriferous kinde of shrub, which they tearme Gall. It yeeldeth also Pets in the mores, and dead rootes of fir-wood which in burning give a ranke sweet savour. There also haue beene found great and long firre trees while they digged for pet, both within the isle, and also without, at Laughton upon Trent banke, the old habitation of the family of D'alanson, now contractly called Dalison. The middle parts of this isle, where it riseth gently with some ascent, is frutefull and fertile, and yeeldeth flax in great aboundance: also the Alabaster-stone, and yet the same being not very solide but brittle, is more meet for pargetting and plaster-worke, than for other uses. The chiefe towne called in old time Axel, is now named Axey, whence, by putting to the Saxon word Holme, which they used for a River-Iland, the name no doubt was compounded. But scarce deserveth it to be called a towne, it is so scatteringly inhabited: and yet it is able to shew the plot of ground where a Castle stood, that was raised in the Barons warre, and which belonged to the Mowbraies, who at that time possessed a great part of the Isle.

Axelholme.

Galls, a shrub.

*

Alabastrites.

C

In the yeere 1173. as writeth an old Chronographer, Roger de Mowbraie forsaking his all geance to the Elder * King, repaired the Castle at Kirkard Ferry in the Isle of Axholme, which had beene of old time destroyed. Against whom a number of Lincolneshire men making head, when they had passed over the water in barges, laid siege to the castle, forced the Constable therof and all the souldiours to yeeld, and overthrew the said Castle. Somewhat higher is Botterwic, the Lord whereof Sir Edmund Sheffeld, King Edward the Sixth created the first Baron Sheffeld of Botherwic: who for his country spent his life against the rebels in Norfolke, having begotten of Anne Vere the Earle of Oxfords daughter, a sonne named Iohn, the second Baron, and father to Edmund now Lord Sheffeld, a right honorable Knight of the Garter, President of the Councell established in the North. But more into the North I saw Burton Stather standing upon the other side of Trent, whereof I have hetherto read nothing memorable.

D

* Henrie the second, in regard of his sonne whom he made King with him.

E

This Shire glorieth in the Earles which have borne title thereof. After Egga who flourished in the yeere 710. and Morcar both Saxons, and who were Earles by office onely, William de Romara a Norman, was the first Earle after the Conquest, in whose roome being dead (for neither his sonne, whereas he died before his father, nor his grand-child enjoied this title) King Stephen placed Gilbert de Gaunt. After whose decease Simon de Saint Lyz, the younger, the sonne of Earle Simon, (you read the very words of Robert Montensis, who lived about that time) Wanting lands, by the gracious gift of King Henrie the Second tooke his only daughter to wife, with her his honour also. After this, Lewis of France, who was by the seditious Barons brought into England girt a second Gilbert out of the family de Gaunt, with the sword of the Earldome of Lincolne: but when the said Lewis was soone after expelled the land no man acknowledged him for Earle, and himselfe of his owne accord relinquished that title. Then Ranulph the sixt Earle of Chester obtained this honor of King Henrie the Third, who Earles of Lincolne.

F

a little

A a little before his death gaue unto Hawiſe or Avis his ſiſter (the wife of Robert de Quincy) by Charter, the Earledome of Lincoln, ſo farre forth as appertained unto him, that ſhee might bee Counteſſe thereof: For in this tenor runne the verie words of the Charter. She likewiſe beſtowed it upon Iohn de Lacy Conſtable of Cheſter, and the heires whom hee ſhould beget of the bodie of Margaret her daughter. This Iohn had iſſue Edmund, who dying before his mother left this honour for Henrie his ſon to enjoy, who was the laſt Earle of that line: For when his ſonnes were taken away by untimely death, and he had but one little daughter onely remaining aliue named Alice, he affianced her, being but nine yeares old, to Thomas the ſonne of Edmund
B Earle of Lancaſter, with this condition, That if hee ſhould fortune to die without heires of her body, or if they happened to die without heires of their bodies, his Caſtles, Lordſhips, &c. ſhould in Remainder come to the heires of Edmund Earle of Lancaſter for ever. But the ſaid Alice had no child at all by her husband Thomas: But when Thomas her husband was beheaded, ſhee that by her light behaviour had not a little ſteined her good name, tooke Sir Eubul le Strange, with whom ſhe had lived before time too familiarly, for her husband, without the aſſent and privity of her Soveraigne; who being hereat highly offended, ſeized her poſſeſſions into his owne hands. Yet both Sir Eubul Strange, and Sir Hugh Frene her third husband, are in ſome Recordes named Earles of Lincolne. After Alice, now verie aged, was departed this life without iſſue, Hen-
C rie Earle of Lancaſter Nephew to Edmund aforeſaid by his ſecond ſonne, entred upon her large and faire patrimony by vertue of that conveiance (which I ſpake of before) and from that time it accrued to the Houſe of Lancaſter. Howbeit the Kings of England at their pleaſure haue beſtowed the name and honour of Earles of Lincolne, as, King Edward the Fourth gaue it to Sir Iohn De la Pole: and king Henrie the Eighth to Henry Brandon, both the ſonnes of the Dukes of Suffolke, who both ended this life without iſſue; the firſt ſlaine in the battaile at Stooke, and the other taken away by the ſweating ſickneſſe. Afterward Queene Elizabeth promoted Edward Baron Clinton Lord high Admirall of England, to the ſaid honor, which D his ſonne Henry enjoieth at this day.

lib. Monaſter. de Stanlow.

2. Edw. 2.

Eſcaet. 1. E. 3 N. 134.

See Dukes of Suffolk.

Anno. 14. Elizabetha.

There are in this Shire Pariſhes much about 630.

E

F

PARTE OF YORKE SHIRE

PARTE OF DARBY SHIRE

PARTE OF LECESTER SHIRE

SEPTENTRIO

OCCIDENS

Killum
Wart
W. Wood
Haver Graieslound Gunthorp
Branton
Aukley
Hokdik flu:
Trent flu:
Blyton
Finningley
Stokrith Rosington Mysterton
Waltrith
Osterfelde
Masson Walkingham
Morton
Bowtre
Euerton Beckingham
Ganesburgh Tickhill east Harworth
Idle flu:
Gringley
Supermont
Scrobye Saunbye
Sandbeck
Whitwater
Surlbye
Lea Matterscy Cleworth
Bole
Blyth Hayton
Burton
Furbeck
Sutton
N. Wheatley
W.
Barmbye on The more Tilney
Bolam
S. Wheatley
Sturton
Femton Letwell
Hodsocke
Wellam
Retford
N. Leuerton Lyttleburgh Elvethorp
Carleton
Woldingwell
Bilbey
Gringley
Cotes
S. Leuerton
Badworth
Ardsall
Thorp Gayrsforth
Groue Truswell
The Shire oke
Idleton Osburton
Radforth Gomston Headon
Rampton
Worksop
Elsley Askham
Stokesham Whitwell
Clumber
E. Draton Lancham Creswell
Walberton
Carberton
W.m Draton
Darleton Normeuton
Markham Reagnell
Clowne
Holbeck woodhouse Bothumsale
Houghton
Barcetes
Tuxford Fledbore
Elmeton Thewresbye Perlethorp
Walesbye
Normanton
Nortoncukney
Meaden flu:
Kirton
Weston
Langwith
Walley
Budbye
Bougheton
Egmanton Greisthorp Warsop Allerton Morehouse
Glapwell
Shenbrok
Sewcain Edenstow Laxton
Rowthorn
Clypston
Willaw
Ossington
Sutton
Neitleworth
Rughford
Carleton
Hardwick
Pleasley
Maunsfeldwoodhouse Willoughbye
Teuersall
Akringe Kuesall Cramwell Lyndhurst
wood Bellow Countom Norwell Tybshill
Skegbye
Maunsfeld Bisthorp kerfall Barleygrange Blackwell
Sutton
Hardwick Bledworth kirklyngton Musceimbs
Amber flu:
Kirkbye
Winkburn
Hockerton
Carleton
Normanton
Langton lodge Heddinoley
Kelham Pinxton Farnfelde
Vpton Hauerham
Newa Arwash flu:
Ansley
woodhouse
The forest of Sherwood
Halam
Rewlston
Balderton
Selston
Newsted
Suthwell
Farndon
Annsley Haulton
Morton
Hauton Wansley Papplewick
Eperston
Fiskerton Thorp
Stoke Cotes Cotcham
Codnor east Felley
Lynby Oxton Thurgarton Elston
Brusley Benall Hucknall
Beck Wood
Gunalston
Bleasbye
Fierston
Henor Eastwood Cast Graseley Colwerton Woodbre
Lewdham Huningham
Flintham
Stanton
Arnold Gunthorp
Knighton
Shilton
Shirley Whatnall Nirthall
Lanley Beucet Sibthorp
Elawberre Skollington
Burton
Bridgeford Hawkesworth
Cissall
Shelford
Skiverton Basforde
Gadling Thoraton
Ouston
W. Halam
Ilkeston
Stresley
Carleton
Shelforde
Coulston
Sharinton
Elton Bettisworth NOTTINGHAM
Bilbord
Stoke Aslakton
Kirkbalam
Radford Trawell Ratclyf Blaeham Whatton Stanton
Wallaton
Holme
Saxindale Waerham
Sutton
Stapleford
Lenton Bridgeforde
Tithbye Granby
Set Faker
Brameor Beston
Wilforde
Torlston
Burnston
Barton
Risley Edwalton
Codorene
Crepwell
Langer
Beuercs Attenton Slauforde
Clipston
Coulston basset Plunger
Longbarton
Clyston
Reddington
Plumbre
Owthorpe Set Ambrose
Harbye Sawley
Borton Bradmore
Stanuton
The ledge on the wewolde
Hose
Derwen flu:
Gotcham Kyworth Kynalton
Thrumpton Corthigstoke
Benye Widmerpole Clouston
Leckington
Radclyff
Wisshaw
Netherbroughton
Hemmington
Esterleak Ouerbroughton Dumington east Westerleak
Remston Willoughbye
Kynston
Sutton
Dalbye
Keoworth
Normanton
Wymeswowlde Heton Stanforde
Trent flu:
Hathern Cotes Diseley
Soure flu:
Lughborough MERI
Foss way

NOTINGAMIÆ comitatus olim
pars CORITANORVM

PARTE

OF

LINCOLNE

SHIRE

ORIENS

Villingham
Burton
Broxholme
Sovilbye
Burton
Lyncolne
Witham flu.
Fosdik flu.
Skellingthorp
Hortisholm
Harcbye Boultham Deddington
Aole Wisbye N.
Hikeham
Thorpe
Hikeham
Thurlbye
Auburgh Bassingtop
Somerton castle Nortonbyiney
Carleton
Morcland
Staplesford Branthroughton Beckingham
Sutton
Stragilthorp
Fenton
Clapole
Stubton
Deddington
Wisbom flu.
Easton
Allington Grantham

Scala
Milia rium
2 4 6 8 10

Christophorus Saxton descripsit
Wilhelmus Kip sculpsit

NOTTINGHAM-SHIRE.

Pon the West side of Lincoln-shire confineth the County of NOTTINGHAM, in the English-Saxon tongue Snottengaham-scyre, and in English Nottingham-shire, being far lesse in quantity; limited Northward with York-shire, Westward with Darby-shire, and in some parts with York-shire, and on the South side with Leicester-shire. The South and East parts thereof are made more fruitfull by the Noble and famous river Trent, with other riverets resorting unto it. The West part is taken up with the Forrest of Shirewood, which stretcheth out a great way. This part because it is sandy, the inhabitants tearme The Sand, the other, for that it is Clayish, they call the Clay: and so have divided their Country into these two parts.

The river Trent, in the old English-Saxon tongue Tpeontа (which some Antiquaries of small note and account have called Triginta in Latine, for the affinity of the French word Trent that signifieth that number Triginta, that is, Thirty,) having gone a long journey, so soone as he is entred into this shire, & hath ren first by Stamford, where I have learned there be many tokens remaining of old antiquity, and peeces of Roman money oftentimes found; and then by Clifton, which hath given both habitation and surname also to the ancient family of the Cliftons, much inriched by one of the heires of Cressy, taketh in from the West the little river Lin, which rising neere unto Newsted, that is, New place, where sometime King Henry the Second founded a small Abbay, and which is now the dwelling house of the ancient family of the Burons, descended from Ralph de Buron, who at the first comming in of the Normans flourished in great state, both in this conntry and also in Lancashire; runneth hard by Wallaton rich in veines of cole, where Sir Francis Willoughby a Knight nobly descended from the Greis Marques Dorset, in our daies built out of the ground with great charges (yet for the most part levied out of his Cole-pits) a stately house with artificiall workmanship, standing bleakely, but offering a very goodly prospect to the beholders far and neere.

The river Trent.

Lin a riveret.

Byron. *

Wollaton.

Then runneth it by Linton or Lenton, much frequented and famous in old time for the Abbay there of the Holy Trinity, founded by William Peverell, the base sonne of King William the Conqueror; but now all the fame is onely for a Faire there kept. Where, on the other banke at the very meeting well neere of Lin and Trent, the principall towne that hath given name unto the Shire is seated upon the side of an hill now called Nottingham, (by softning the old name a little) for Snottengaham; for, so the English-Saxons named it of certaine caves and passages under the ground, which in old time they hewed and wrought hollow under those huge and steepe cliffes, which are on the South side hanging over the little river Lin, for places of receit and refuge, yea and for habitations. And thereupon Asserius interpreteth this Saxon word Snottengaham in Latine Speluncarum domum, that is, An house of Dennes or Caves, and in the British Tui ogo hauc, which signifieth the very selfesame. The towne for the naturall site thereof is right pleasant: as where, on the one hand lie faire and large Medowes by the rivers side, on the other, rise hils with a gentle and easie ascent: & is plentifully provided of all things beside, necessary for mans life. On the one side Shirwood yeeldeth store of wood to maintaine fire, although many use for that purpose stinking pit cole digged forth of the ground: on the other, Trent serveth it aboundantly with fish. And hence hath been taken up this od barbarous verse.

Lenton.

Nottingham.

Limpida sylua focum, * Triginta dat mihi piscem.

*Trent.

Shire-wood yeelds me fuell for fire,
As Trent yeelds fish, what I require.

At a word, for largenes, for building, for 3. faire Churches, a passing spacious & beutiful mercat place, and a most strong Castle, it maketh a goodly shew. The said Castle, is mounted upon a huge & steepe worke on the West side of the City, in which place it is thought that Castle stood in times past upon whose strength the Danes presuming held out against the siege of Aethered and Aelfrid so long, untill they frustrat of their purpose brake up their siege, trussed up bagge and baggage and dislodged. For when the Danes had taken this Castle, Burthred king of the Mercians (as mine author Asserius writeth) and the Mercians, addresse their messengers to Aethered king of the West Saxons and to Aelfred his brother, humbly beseeching them to come and aide them, that so they might give battaile unto the fore-named armie, which request they also easily obtained. For, those two brethren slacking no whit their promise, having levied from all partes a mighty armie, assembled their forces, entred Mercia, and seeking with one accord jointly to encounter the enimy, come as farre as to Snottenga-ham. And when the Painims keeping themselues within the defense of the Castle refused to give battaile, and the Christians with all their force could not batter the wall, after peace concluded betweene the Paganes and Mercians, those two brethren with their bands returned home. But after this, king Edward the elder, built the village Bridgeford just over against it, and compassed the towne about with a wall, which now is fallen downe; and yet the remaines thereof I haue seene on the South side. And within very few yeares after, in King Edward the Confessors time, as wee reade in Domesday booke, there were numbered in it one hundred and seventy three Burgesses, and from the two Minters, there were paid forty shillings to the King. Also the water of Trent, the Fosse dike, and the waie toward Yorke were warded and kept, that if any man hindered the passage of vessels, hee was to make amends with the payment of foure pounds.

As for the Castle which now wee see, it may bee well of great name in regard both of the founder, and the worthinesse also of the worke: for William of Normandie built it to bridle the English; and so strong it was, as William of Neuborough writeth, as well by naturall situation as hand-labour, that it is held impregnable (if it may haue sufficient men to defend it) vnlesse it be by famine. Afterward also King Edward the Fourth bestowed great cost in the repairing of it, and beautified it with faire buildings: whereto King Richard also the Third set to his helping hand. Neither for all the changes and alterations of times, hath it vndergone the common condition or destiny incident to such great Castles, being never forced and won by assault. Once was it in vaine besieged by Henry of Anjou, at which time the soldiers lying in garison set fire upon the buildings joyning unto it. Once also it was suddenly surprised by Earle Robert de Ferrarijs in the Barons war, who spoiled the inhabitants of all their goods. The Castellanes report many stories of David King of the Scots prisoner in it, and of Roger Mortimer Earle of March, taken here in a hollow secret passage under the ground, who because he prised his faith & loialty to his country lighter than Scotish gold, & with a vast minde designed other mischiefes, was afterwards hanged. Certes, in the first base court of the Castle wee went downe by many steps or staires with candle light into a vault under the ground and certaine close roomes wrought out of the verie rocke; in the walles whereof are engraven the stories of Christs passion and other things, by the hand (as they say) of David the second, King of Scots, who was there imprisoned. But in the upper part of the Castle which riseth up aloft upon a rock, we came also by many staires into another caue likewise under the ground, which they cal Mortimers Hole, for that in it the foresaid Roger Mortimer lay hidden, when as being guilty to himselfe of wickednesse hee stood in feare of his life.

1175 Reg. Hoveden. Pag. 307.

Mortimers hole.

As for the position of Nottingham, it seeth the North Pole elevated fifty three degrees, and hath the Meridian two and twenty degrees and foureteene minutes distant from the utmost point of the West, whence Geographers beginne to measure the Longitude.

Pier pount. *De Petra ponte.

From hence the Trent runneth with a milde streame and passeth forward by Holme, called of the Lords thereof Holme * Pierpount, whose family is both ancient and noble, and out of which Robert Pierpount was summoned by king Edward the Third unto the high Court of Parliament, among the Barons of the kingdome; unto Shelford where Ralph Hanselin founded a Priorie, and the Lords Bardolph had a man-

Baronie of Shelford.

A a manſion but now the ſeat of that worſhipfull ſtocke of the Stanhopes, knights; whoſe ſtate in this tract hath growne great and their name renowned ſince they matched with an heire of Mallovell. From whence he runneth downe with a rolling ſtreame to Stoke, a little village, but well knowne for no ſmall overthrow and ſlaughter that there happened: when Sir Iohn Delapole Earle of Lincoln, who beeing by king Richard the Third declared heire apparent to the Crowne, ſeeing by the comming of King Henry the Seventh himſelfe debarred of the hope of the kingdome, here in behalfe of a counterfeit Prince rebelliouſly oppoſed himſelfe againſt a lawfull king, and ſo reſolutly with his friends and followers loſt his life. Not farre from hence is Thurgarton where Sir Ralph D'eincourt founded a Priorie, and ſomewhat higher B Southwell ſheweth it ſelfe aloft, with a Collegiat Church of Prebendaries conſecrated to the bleſſed Virgin Marie, a place not verie faire in outward ſhew, I muſt needes ſay, but ſtrong, ancient, and of great fame. Which, as they write, Paulinus the Firſt Archbiſhop of Yorke founded, after hee had baptiſed the inhabitants of this ſhire in the river Trent, and ſo regenerated them to Chriſt. Since which time, the Archbiſhops of Yorke haue had here a very faire and ſtately palace and three parkes ſtored with Dere adjoyning thereto. That this is the City which Bede calleth Tio-vul-Finga-ceſter, I doe the more ſtedfaſtly beleeue, becauſe, thoſe things which hee hath reported of Paulinus baptizing in the Trent nere unto Tio-vul-Finga ceſter, the priC vate Hiſtory of this Church conſtantly avoucheth to haue beene done in this very place. From thence out of the Eaſt, Snite a little brooke runneth into Trent, which being but ſmall and ſhallow watereth Langer, a place of name in regard of the Tibetots or Tiptofts Lords thereof, who afterwards became Earles of Worceſter: alſo Wiverton, which from Heriz a worſhipfull man long ſince in theſe parts, came by the Erets and Caltoſtes unto the Chaworthes, who fetch their name out of the Caaurci in France, and derive their pedigree from the Lord of Walchervill.

Battaile of Stoke.

Suthwell.

Tio-vul-Fingaceſter.

Tiptofts.

Chaworths.

*Cahors in Quercy.

Now doth Trent divide it ſelfe, nere Averham or Aram an ancient habitation of the Suttons gentlemen of reſpectiue worth, and runneth hard under a good great towne called Newark, as one would ſay, The new work, of the new caſtle, which caſtle ſo freſh & of ſo beautifull building, as Henry of Huntingdon tearmeth it, Alexander that bountifull D minded Biſhop of Lincoln built: which Prelate, that I may uſe the words of an ancient Hiſtorian, carrying a moſt braue and gallant minde, builded both this caſtle and another alſo with moſt profuſe and laviſh expenſe. And becauſe ſuch manner of ſumptuous buildings little became the gravity and dignity of a biſhop, hee to take awaie the envie and hard conceit of the world for ſuch building and to expiat, as it were, the offence that grew thereby, founded as many monaſteries and filled them with religious Bretheren. Nevertheleſſe, this vaine prodigality and laviſh ſpending that was in a militarie Biſhop, was purſued afterwards with condigne puniſhment. For, king Stephen, who laboured nothing more than to eſtabliſh his tottering eſtate in his kingdome by ſeizing into his hands all the ſtrongeſt holds thereof, brought this Prelate, what with hard impriE ſoning, and, in a ſort, with famiſhing him, to that paſſe, that will'd hee nill'd hee, at length he yeelded up unto him both this Caſtle, and that other at Sieford in Lincolnſhire. Neither is there any other memorable matter here to be related, but that king Iohn finiſhed in this place the moſt weariſome courſe of his troubleſome life; and king Edward the Sixth incorporated it of one Alderman, and twelue Aſſiſtants. From hence the river gathering himſelfe againe into one chanell, runneth directly Northward, beſet on both ſides with villages; neither affoordeth it any matter worth remembrance before it come to Littleborrough, a little towne in deed and truely anſwering to the name, where, as there is at this day a Ferrie much uſed, ſo F there was in times paſt that ſtation, whereof Antonine the Emperour once or twice made mention, and which according to ſundry copies is called AGELOCVM or SEGELOCVM.

1216.

Littleborough.

Agelocum or Segelocum.

This towne haue I heretofore ſought for in vaine, about the Country adjoyning: but now I am verily perſwaded and aſſured that I haue found it out, both for that it ſtandeth upon the old port High-waie, and alſo becauſe the field lying to it ſheweth expreſſe tokens of walles ; and beſides affordeth unto plowmen every A day many peeces of the Roman Emperours coine ; which becauſe ſwine many times rooting into the ground turne up with their ſnouts, the country people call Swineſ-penies. Who alſo according to their ſimple capacity are of opinion, that their fore-fathers in times paſt fenſed and mounded that field with a ſtone-wall a-gainſt the water of Trent that uſeth in Winter-time to overflow and make great flouds.

In the Weſt part of this Shire, which they tearme The Sand, and where Erwaſh a little riveret hieth a pace into Trent, Strelley, in old time Strellegh ſheweth it ſelfe, a place that gave both ſurname and habitation to the family of the Strelleies, com- B monly called Sturleyes, Knights ; one of the moſt ancient houſes in all this Coun-Shirewood. try. More inward, the Foreſt Shirewood (which ſome expound by theſe Latine names Limpida Sylva, that is, a Shire or Clecrewood ; others Præclara Sylva, in the ſame ſence and ſignification) in ancient times over-ſhadowed all the Country over with greene leaved branches, and the boughes and armes of trees twiſted one within another, ſo implicated the woods together, that a man could ſcarcely goe alone in the beaten pathes: But now the trees grow not ſo thicke, yet hath it an infinite number of fallow Deere, yea and Stagges with their ſtately branching heads feeding within Mansfield. it. Some townes alſo : among which Manſfield carrieth away the name, as maintaining a great Mercat paſſing well ſerved, and aſwell frequented. The name of C which towne, they that delineat the pedegree of the Graves of the great family of Manſfield in Germany, uſe as an argument to prove the ſame, and ſet downe that the firſt Earle of Manſfield was one of King Arthurs Knights of the Round Table, borne and bred at this Manſfield. Indeed our Kings uſed in old time to retyre themſelves hether for the love of hunting: and, that you may read the very words out of an ancient Inquiſition, W. Fauconberge, tenebat Manerium de Cukeney in hoc Comitatu in Sergientia, per Servitium ferrandi Palfredum Regis quando Rex veniret ad Manſ-field, that is, W. Fauconberge held the Manour of Cukeney in this County in Sergiencie, by ſervice to ſhooe the kings palfrey when the king came to Mansfield. And the he-
* reditarie Forreſters or Keepers of this forreſt of Shirewood were men in their times of D high eſtimation, vz. Sir Gerarde de Normanvile in the time of the Conqueſt, the L. Everinham. Cauzes and Birkins, by whoſe heire it came to the Eueringhams. Of which family Sir Adam Eueringham was ſummoned to Parliaments in the reignes of king Edward the Second, and king Edward the Third: At which time they were ſeated at Laxton, anci-
Lexinton. ently called Lexinton, where alſo flouriſhed a great family ſo ſurnamed, whoſe heires were maried into the houſes of Sutton of Auerham and Markham.

Out of this wood there ſpring many riverets that runne into the Trent : but Idle is Idle the river. thought to be the cheife: upon which nere unto Idleton in the yeare 6 1 6. that felicity and proſperous ſucceſſe which for a long time had accompained Ethered that moſt puiſſant king of the Northumberland, was overtaken and forſooke him quite. For, E whereas before time hee had alwaies fought his battailes moſt fortunatly, heere (fortune turning her wheele) hee was by Redwald king of the Eaſt Angles vanquiſhed and ſlaine, who in his roome made Edwin then baniſhed from the kingdome, due unto him from his anceſters, ſoveraigne ruler over the Northumbers. This little river Idle Ma kham. runneth downe not farre from Markham, a village verily but ſmall to ſpeake of, yet gaue it name to the familie of the Markhams, which for worth and antiquity hath bin verie notable, being deſcended from one of the heires of Creſſy, & formerly from an heire of Lexinton, as I lately ſhewed. The greateſt ornament of this family was Sir Iohn Markham, who ſitting Lord chiefe Iuſtice of England, guided the helme of Iuſtice with ſo even an hand and ſo great equity (a thing that I would haue you to F read in the Engliſh hiſtories) that his honor and glorie ſhall never periſh. Six miles Worken ſop. Liquorice. from it Weſtward, is Worken ſop, a towne well knowne for the liquorice that there groweth and proſpereth paſſing well : famous alſo for the Earle of Shrewsburies houſe which within our remembrance George Talbot Earle of Shrewsburie built with that magnificence, as beſeemeth ſo great an Earle, and yet ſuch as was not to bee envied

A envied. This Workenſop from the Lovetofts firſt Lords thereof, under the Normans reigne, deſcended by the Furnivalles and Nevil, unto the L. Talbots with a very goodly inheritance. Of which Lovetofts, G. Lovetoft in the time of King Henry the Firſt, founded heere an Abbay, the ruines whereof I have ſeene toward the Eaſt ſide of the towne, amidſt moſt pleaſant and plentifull paſtures: and the Weſt part of the Church ſtandeth ſtill paſſing faire to be ſeene with two tower ſteeples. A little higher upon the ſame river I ſaw Blithe a famous Mercat towne, which Bulley or Buſly, a Noble man of the Normans blood, forfeited with a Caſtle: but now the very rubbiſh thereof is hardly to be ſeene, time ſo conſumeth all things. But the Abbay there, was founded by Roger Buſly and Foulke De Liſieurs: and this is the fartheſt towne almoſt B in Nottinghamſhire, Northward, unleſſe it be Scroby a little towne of the Archbiſhops of Yorke, ſituate in the very confines and frontires of York-ſhire,

S. Mary of Radford.

Blithe.

William ſurnamed the Conqueror appointed over this ſhire William Peverell his baſe ſonne, not with the title of Earle, but of Lord of Nottingham: who had a ſonne that died before his father; and he likewiſe had a ſonne of the ſame name, whom King Henry the Second diſinherited, for that hee went about to poiſon Ranulph Earle of Cheſter. Much about this time Robert de Ferrarijs, who rifled and ranſacked Nottingham, in a Donation which he made unto the Church of Tuttesbury, ſtiled himſelfe thus, Robertus Comes iunior de Nottingham, that is, Robert the younger Earle of Nottingham. But afterwards King Richard the Firſt gave and confirmed unto his bro- C ther Iohn the Earledome and Caſtle of Nottingham with all the Honour of Peverell. Many yeeres after, K. Richard the Second honored Iohn L. Mowbray with this title of Earle of Nottingham; who dying a young man without iſſue, his brother Thomas ſucceeded after him: He being by King Richard the Second created Earle Mareſhall and Duke of Norfolke, and ſoone after baniſhed, begat Thomas Earle Mareſhal, whom King Henry the Fourth beheaded; and Iohn Mowbray, who, as alſo his ſonne and Nephew, were likewiſe Dukes of Norfolke and Earles of Nottingham. But when as their male iſſue failed, and that Richard the young ſonne of King Edward the Fourth, being Duke of Yorke had borne this title with others by his wife the heire of the Mowbraies, but a ſmale while, King Richard the Third honored William Vicont Barkley de- D ſcended from the Mowbraies with this title of Earle of Nottingham: and whereas he died without iſſue; King Henry the Eight beſtowed the ſame honour vpon his illegitimate ſonne H. Fitz-roy, when he created him Duke of Richmond; but he departed this life in the flower of his age, leaving no child. Afterward this title lay extinct, vntill in the yeere of our Lord 1597. Queene Elizabeth by ſolemne inveſtiture adorned therewith Charles Lord Howard of Effingham, and High Admiral of England, deſcended from the Mowbraies, in regard of his ſervice (as appeareth in the Charter of his Creation) right valiantly and faithfully performed againſt the Spaniſh Armado in the yeere 1588. as alſo at the winning of Caliz in Spaine, where he was Lord Generall of the forces by ſea, like as the Earle of Eſſex, of thoſe by land.

Lords and Earls of Nottingham. Lib. M. Linton. Matth. Paris p. 126. See Earles of Darby. Matth. Paris p. 204. Hoveden. pag. 373. b.

Inq. 6. Rich. 2. See Dukes of Norfolke.

E

There are in this Country Pariſh Churches 168.

F

DARBY-

UNIVERSI
Digitale Sammlungen der Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München

LANCAS:

PARS

CESTRIÆ

PARS

VNIVERSI

Derbiensis Comitatus qui olim Coritanorum, fuit descriptio

EBORACENSIS PARS

NOT:

ING:

LMIÆ

PARS

LECES:

TRIÆ PARS

Maunsfeld

Sheafeld

Chesterfeld

Wirkesworth

Ashborne

Darby

Burton sup trent

Ashbye de la zouche

Scala Miliarium

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

Christo: Saxton descrip: Gulielmo Hole sculpsit

A

DARBY-SHIRE.

DARBY-SHIRE, called in old English-Saxon Deorby-ſcire, lieth cloſe to Nottingham-ſhire Weſtward, confining with Leiceſter-ſhire upon the Southſide, like as with Staffordſhire on the Weſt, and Yorkſhire in the North, reſembling, as it were, the forme of a Triangle, but not with equall ſides. For, whereas about the point of it lying Southward it is ſcarce ſix miles broad, it ſo enlargeth and ſpreadeth it ſelfe on both ſides, that where it looketh into the North it carrieth much about thirty miles in breadth. The river Derwent that runneth along the middeſt of it, diuideth it after a ſort in two parts, which river breaking out of the North limit thereof and taking his courſe Southward, ſometimes with his blacke waters ſtained with the ſoile and earth that it paſſeth by, rumbleth downe apace into the Trent: For, Trent overthwarteth the ſaid narrow point, that I ſpake off, lying Southward. The Eaſt ſide and the South parts are well manured, not unfruitfull, and beſides, well ſtored with parkes: The Weſt part beyond Derwent which they call the Peake being all of it hilly, or a ſtony and craggie ground, is more barraine: howbeit rich in lead, yron, and coles, which it yeeldeth plentifully, and alſo feedeth ſheepe very commodiouſly.

B

C

In the South corner the firſt place worth the naming that offreth it ſelfe to ſight, is Greiſely caſtle, more than broken downe, which together with a little Monaſterie was founded in times paſt in honor of Saint George, by the Greiſeleies Lords thereof, who fetching their deſcent from William the ſonne of Sir Niele of Greiſeley, about the very Conqueſt of England by the Normans, have flouriſhed vnto theſe daies in great worſhip, the which they have not a little augmented long ſince by marrying with the daughter and heire of the ancient family of Gaſteneys. Upon the river Doue, which untill it entreth into Trent divideth this country from Staffordſhire, we meete with nothing in this ſhire but ſmall country villages, and Aſhburne a mercate towne, where the houſe of the Cokains flouriſhed a long time; and Norbury, where the right ancient family of the Fitz-Herberts haue long inhabited: out of which, Sir Anthonie Fitz-Herbert hath deſerved paſſing well of the knowledge and profeſſion of our Commons law: Not farre from which is Shirley an ancient Lordſhip of the well renowned family of the Shirleys, who derive their pedigree from one Fulcher: unto whom, beſide the antiquity of their houſe, much honor and faire lands have accrued by marriage with the heires of the Breoſes, the Baſſets of Brailesford, the Stantons, Lovets &c. And heere ſtand round about many places which have given name and habitation to worſhipfull families: as Longford, Bradburne, Kniveton, from whence came thoſe Knivetons of Mercaſton and Bradley: of which houſe Saint Lo Kniveton is one, to whoſe iudicious and ſtudious diligence I am deeply endebted: alſo Keidelſton, where the Curſons dwelt, as alſo at Crokhall. But whether Sir Robert Curſon Knighted by King Henrie the Seventh, made a Baron of the Empire by Maximilian the Emperor in the yere 1500. for his ſingular valour, and therupon by King Henrie the Eighth made a Baron of England with a liberall penſion aſſigned, was deſcended from theſe Curſons, I date not affirme. Heereby is Radborn, where Sir Iohn Chandos Knight, Lord of the place, laid a goodly foundation of a great and ſtately houſe: from whom by a daughter it came by hereditarie ſucceſſion unto the Poles, who dwell heere at this day. But theſe particularities I leave for him who hath undertaken the full deſcription of this ſhire.

D

E

F

Greiſly Caſtle.

The familie of the Greiſleys.

The family of the Shirleys.

*

Baron Curſon.

But upon Trent, ſo ſoone as ever he hath taken to him the river Doue, is Repandunum to be ſeene, for ſo doe our Hiſtorie-writers call it, the Saxons named it Hpepandun, and we at this day Repton, which from a great and faire towne is become a poore ſmall village. For, in old time very famous it was, by reaſon both of the buriall of Aethelbald Repton.

Aethebald that good King of the Mercians, who through the treachery of his owne people loſt his life, and of the other Kings of Mercia: as alſo for the unfortunate calamity of Burthred the laſt King of the Mercians, who when hee had enjoied his kingdome partly by way of entreaty and partly by meanes of briberie, full twenty yeeres, was heere deprived of his Kingdome by the Danes, or rather freed and exempted from the glittering miſerie of princely State, and ſo became an example to teach men in how tickliſh and ſlippery a place they ſtand which are underpropped onely with money. Then not farre from Trent is Melborn a Caſtle of the Kings now decaying, wherein Iohn Duke of Burbon taken priſoner in the battaile of Agincourt was detained 19. yeeres under the cuſtodie of Sir Nicolas Montgomerie the younger. Scarce five miles hence Northward, the river Derwent hath his walke; who in the utmoſt limit, as I ſaid before, of this ſhire Northward deriving his head out of the Peak hils, being one while ſtreitned betweene crags, and ſometimes another while watering and cheriſhing the freſh greene meddows, by moſſie and moriſh grounds holdeth on his courſe for thirty miles or there about directly, as it were, into the South. Howbeit in ſo long a courſe hee paſſeth by nothing worth looking on, except Chatteſworth, a very large, faire and ſtately houſe, which Sir William Candiſh, or Cavendiſh, deſcended out of that ancient houſe of Gernon in Suffolk, began, and which his wife Elizabeth, and after Counteſſe of Shrewsbury, hath of late with great charges fully finiſhed.

King Burthred.

Melborn.

Chatteſworth. Cauendiſh.

But where Derwent turneth ſomewhat Eaſtward, when it is once paſt Little Cheſter, that is, Little City, where old peeces of Roman money are often times gotten out of the ground, Darby ſheweth it ſelfe, in the Engliſh-Saxon tongue named Northwoprhiz, and by the Danes (as Athelward that ancient writer witneſſeth) Deoraby, the chiefe towne of all this ſhire: which name, being taken from the river Derwent and contracted from Derwentby, it hath beſtowed upon the whole County. A proper towne it is, none of the leaſt, not without good trade and reſort unto it. On the Eaſt ſide of it, the river Derwent making a verie faire ſhew, runneth downe carrying a full and lofty ſtreame under a beautifull ſtone bridge, upon which our devout forefathers erected a faire Chappell, which now is neglected and goeth to decay: Through the South part thereof runneth a pretie cleere riveret which they call Mertenbrooke. Fiue Churches there bee in it: Of which the greateſt named All Hallowes, dedicated to the memorie of All-Saints, hath a tower ſteeple that for height and ſingular fine workemanſhip excelleth. In which Church, the Counteſſe of Shrewsburie, of whom erewhile I ſpake, truſting her ſelfe better than her heires, providently erected a ſepuchre for her ſelfe, and as religiouſly founded an Hoſpitall hard by, for the maintenance of twelue poore folke, eight men and foure women.

Memorable in old time was this place, becauſe it had beene a lurking hole and a Rendevous for the Danes, untill Ethelfleda that victorious Lady of the Mercians, by a ſuddaine forceable ſurpriſe, made a ſlaughter of the Danes and became Miſtreſſe of it. In the time of King Edward the Confeſſor, as we find in Domeſday booke, it had 143. Burgeſſes, whoſe number notwithſtanding decreaſed ſo, that in William the Conquerours reigne there remained onely an hundred: And theſe paid unto the king at the feaſt of Saint Martin 12.* Trabes of Corne. But now all the name & credit that it hath, ariſeth of the Aſſiſes there kept for the whole ſhire, & by the beſt nappie ale, that is brewed there: a drinke ſo called, of the Daniſh word Oela ſomewhat wreſted, and not of Alica, as Ruellius deriveth it: The Britans termed it by an old word Kwrw, in ſteede whereof Curmi is read amiſſe in Dioſcorides; where hee ſaith, that the Hiberi (perchance he would have ſaid Hiberni, that is, The Iriſhmen) in lieu of wine uſe Curmi, a kind of drinke made of Barly. For, this is that Barly-wine of ours, which Iulian the Emperor, that Apoſtata, calleth merrily in an Epigramme, Πυρογενῆ, ϗ Βε'ϊον ὑ Βρόμιον. This is the ancient and peculiar drinke of the Engliſhmen and Britans, yea and the ſame very wholſome, howſoever Henrie of Aurenches the Norman, Arch-poet to King Henrie Third, did in his pleaſant wit merrily jeſt upon it in theſe verſes.

* Thraves of corne, as it ſhould ſeeme.

Ale.

Cerviſia in latin, Curmi in Dioſcorides: Ale in Engliſh, of Oel, a Daniſh word.

Neſcio

A Nescio quod Stygiæ monstrum conforme paludi,
Ceruisiam plerique vocant: nil spissius illa
Dum bibitur, nil clarius est dum mingitur, vnde
Constat, quòd multas fæces in ventre relinquit.
Of this strange drinke, so like to Stygian lake,
(Most tearme it Ale) I wote not what to make:
Folke drinke it thicke, and pisse it passing thin,
Much dregges therefore must needs remaine within.

B Howbeit, Turnebus that most learned Frenchman maketh no doubt, but that men using to drinke heereof, if they could avoid surfetting, would live longer than those that drinke wine: and that from hence it is, that many of us drinking Ale live an hundred yeeres. And yet Asclepiades in Plutarch ascribeth this long life to the coldnesse of the aire, which keepeth in and preserveth the naturall heat in bodies, when he made report, that the Britans lived untill they were an hundred and twenty yeeres old. Turnebus de Vino.

But the wealth of this towne consisteth much of buying of corne and selling it againe to the mountaines: for all the inhabitants be as it were a kind of huckſters, or badgers. Not farre from hence doth Derwent carry his streame, where by Elwaston Sir Raulph Montjoye had lands, in the time of Edward the first: from whence came
C Sir Walter Blunt, whom King Edward the Fourth aduanced to the honor of Baron Montjoye with a pension: whose posterity have equalled the nobility of their birth with the ornaments of learning: and principally among them, Charles, late Earle of Deuonshire, Baron Montjoy, Lord Lieutenant generall of Ireland, and Knight of the order of the Garter. Beneath this Elwaston, Derwent disburdeneth himselfe into the chanell of Trent, which within a while admitteth into it the river Erewash, that in this part serveth as a limit to divide this country from Nottinghamshire. Nere unto this river standeth Riseley, a possession of the Willoughbies: of which family was that Sir Hugh Willoughby, as I have heard say, who whils he endevored to discover the Frozen Sea nere unto Wardhous in Scandia, was frozen to death together with his company, in the D same ship. Hard by it also is Sandiacre, or as others will have it, Sainct Diacre, the seat of the family of the Greies of Sandiacre: whose inheritance Sir Edward Hilary in right of his wife was first possessed of; and whose sonne became adopted into the name of the Greies: and a few yeeres after, the one of his daughters and heires wedded to Sir Iohn Leake, and the other to Iohn Welsh. Barons Montjoye. Greies of Sandiacre.

On the East side of this shire there follow in order Northward these places, Codenor in old time Coutenoure Castle, which belonged to the Barons Grey, called thereupon Lords Grey of Codenor; whose inheritance in the foregoing age came to the Zouches by the marriage that Sir Iohn de la Zouch the second sonne of William Lord
E de la Zouch of Haringworth, contracted with Elizabeth the heire of Henrie Greie the last Lord of Codenor. Then, Winfeld, a very great and goodly Manour, where Raulfe Lord Cromwell in the reigne of Henrie the Sixth built a sumptuous and stately house, for those daies. After it, you see Alffreton, which men thinke to have beene built by King Alfred, and of him to have taken that name: which towne had also Lords, entituled thereupon, de Alfreton: of whom the second named Robert, the sonne of Ranulph, built in the most remote angle and nouke of this shire the little Abbay De Bello capite, commonly called Beau-chiefe; but a few yeeres after for default of heires males the family of Chaworth and the Lathams in Lancashire possessed their inheritance, by two daughters. These bare for their Armes, Two Cheverons, as they tearme
F them, Or in a shield Azur: which very same coat the Musards, that is, The doubters and delaiers who were called Barons of Staveley in this County, changing the colours only gave, who during the reigne of King Edward the First had an end in Sir Nicolas Musard: and his eldest sister was married to Ancher Freschevill, whose posterity flourisheth heere still at this day. Higher yet in the very East frontier of this county, upon a rough and a craggie soile standeth Hardwic, which gave name to a family in Codenor castle. Barons Grey of Codenor. Alfreton. The Barons of Alfreton coat of armes. Staveley. Freshwell commonly.

which

which possessed the same: out of which descended Lady Elizabeth Countesse of Shrewsbury, who beganne to build there two goodly houses joining in maner one to the other, which by reason of their lofty situation shew themselves, a farre off to be seene, and yeeld a very goodly prospect. This now giveth the title of Baron to Sir William Cavendish her second sonne, whom King Iames of late hath honored with the honor of Baron Cavendish of Hardwic. A Baron Cavendish.

More inward in the Country, is seated Chester-field in Scardale, that is, in a Dale compassed in with cragges and rockes: For, such rockes the Englishmen were wont to tearme Scarres. Both the new name it selfe, and the ruines of the old Walls doe prove, that this Chester-field was of good antiquity: but the ancient name thereof is by continuance of time worne out and quite lost. King Iohn made it a free Burrough when he gave it to William Briewer his especiall favourite. In writers it is famous only by occasion of the war betwixt King Henry the Third and his Barons, wherein Robert Ferrars the last Earle of Darby of that name, being taken prisoner and deprived of his honour by authority of the Parliament, lived afterwards as a private man: and his posterity flourished with the title onely of Barons. Hard to this Chesterfield Westward lieth Walton, which from the Bretons came hereditarily by Loudham to the Foliambs men of great name in this tract: and Eastward Sutton, where the Leaks held a long time a worshipfull port, in Knights degree. B

Walton.

Sutton.

A little from hence is Bolsover an ancient Castle, situate somewhat with the highest: which belonged to the Hastings Lords of Abergavenney, in right of exchange with King Henry the Third: who being altogether unwilling that the Earledome of Chester, unto whom this Castle had appertained, should be divided and bestowed among distaves, assigned here and there other possessions unto the sisters of Iohn Scot the last Earle. C

The West part beyond Derwent, which throughout riseth high and peaketh up with hils & mountaines, whence in old time it was called in the old English tongue Peac-lond, and is at this daie, haply for that cause, named the Peake (for, that word among us signifieth to appeare aloft) is severed from Stafford-shire by the Done a most swift and cleere river, of which I shall speake hereafter. This part although in some place it hath craggy, rough and bare scarres, and cragges; yet by reason that under the upper crust of the earth there is limestone which supplieth a batling fruitfull slugh, or humour, there bee in it greene grassie hils and vales, which bring forth full oates, and feed safely both droues of greater beasts, and also many flockes of sheepe: For, there is no more danger now from wolues which in times past were hurtfull and noisome to this Country; and for the chasing away and taking of which some there were that held lands here at Wormhil, who therupon were surnamed Wolvchunt, as appeareth plainely in the Records of the Kingdome: But so plentifull it is of lead, that the Alchymists, who condemne the Planets as convict of some crime unto the mettall mines, haue upon a ridiculous error written, that Saturne, whom they make the Lord and Dominatour of lead, is liberally affected to England, in granting lead; but displeased with France, to which hee hath denied the same. And verily, I thinke that Pliny spake of this Country when he said this, In Britaine in the verie crust of the ground, without any deepe mining, is gotten so great Store of lead, that there is a law expressely made of purpose, forbidding men to make more than to a certaine stint. For, in these mountaines, fertile lead stones are daily digged up in great aboundance, which upon the hill tops lying open to the West winde, neere unto Creach and Workes-Worth (which hereupon tooke name of the lead-workes) when the Westerne winde beginnes to blow (which winde of all others they haue by experience found to hold longest) they melt with mighty great fires of wood into lead, in troughes or trenches which they digge of purpose for it to runne into, and so make it up into Sowes. Neither onely lead, but Stibium also called in the Apothecaries shops Antimonium, is heere found by it selfe in veines: which minerall the women of Greece used in old time to colour their eye-browes with, whereupon the Poet Ion, in Greeke tearmeth it ἀνθιμονιόχρουν. Milstones likewise are heere hewed out, as also grindle- D E F

The Peake.

Wolves.

Ing. 2. Ed 2.

Lead.

Brodæus.

Antimonie.

Milstones.

A grinde-ſtones and whetſtones, to giue an edge unto iron tooles: and ſometimes in theſe mines or quarries is found a certaine white Fluor (for ſuch ſtones comming out of Mines, that bee like unto precious ſtones, learned minerall men call Fluores) which for all the world reſembleth Chriſtall. Grindſtones. Whetſtones. Fluores. Chryſtall.

Beſides Workes-worth, lately mentioned, wee meet with never another place worth the remembrance, unleſſe it be Haddon by the river Wie, the ſeat for many yeares togither of the Vernons, who as they were very ancient ſo they became no leſſe renowned in theſe parts, in ſo much as Sir George Vernon knight, who lived in our time, for his magnificent port that hee caried, the open houſe that hee kept, and his commen- Vernon.
B dable hoſpitality, gat the name among the multitude of a Pety King in the Peak. By his daughters and heires a goodly and great inheritance was transferred unto Sir Iohn Mannours ſonne of Thomas Earle of Rutland, and to Sir Thomas Stanley ſonne of Edward Earle of Darby. There adjoyneth unto this, Bakewell upon the ſame riveret, which among theſe hils maketh it ſelfe way into Derwent. This was by the Saxons called Baddecanwell: And Marianus writeth, that king Edward the Elder erected there a Burrough. Now whether it borrowed this name or no of the Buxton.
hote waters, which the ancient Engliſhmen, as alſo the Germans in their language termed Bade and Baden, whence came Baden in Germany and Buda in Hungarie, I know not. Certes, at the ſpring head of Wie not farre from hence, there riſe and walme
C up nine fountaines of hote waters, the place at this day is called Buxton well: which being found by experience holſome for the ſtomach, ſinowes, and the whole bodie, George Earle of Shrewsbury lately beautified with buildings, and ſo they are begunne againe to bee reſorted unto, by concurſe of the greateſt gentlemen and of the nobility. At which time that moſt unfortunate Lady, Mary Queene of Scots bad farewell unto Buxton with this Diſtichon, by a little change of Cæſars verſes concerning Feltria, in this wiſe.

Buxtona quæ calidæ celebrabere nomine lymphæ,
Fortè mihi poſthac non adeunda, vale.

D Buxton, that of great name ſhalt be, for hote and holſome baine,
Farewell, for I perhaps ſhall not thee ever ſee againe.

But that theſe hote waters were knowne in old time, The port-way or High paved ſtreet named Bath-gate, reaching for ſeven miles togither from hence unto Burgh a little village doth manifeſtly ſhew. Neere unto this Burgh there ſtandeth upon the top of an hill an old Caſtle ſometimes belonging to the Peverels, called The Caſtle in the Peake, and in Latin De Alto Pecco, which King Edward the Third togither with 46. Ed. 3.
a Manour and an Honour, gaue unto his ſonne Iohn duke of Lancaſter, what time as hee ſurrendered the Earledome of Richmond into the Kings hands. Under which,
E there is a caue or hole within the ground, called, ſaving your reverence, The Devils Arſe, that gapeth with a wide mouth, and hath in it many turnings and retyring roomes: wherein, for ſooth, Gervaſe of Tilbury, whether for want of knowing the truth, or upon a delight hee had in fabling, hath written, that a Shepheard ſaw a verie wide and large Country with riverets and brookes running here and there through it, and huge pooles of dead and ſtanding waters. Notwithſtanding, by reaſon of theſe and ſuch like fables, this Hole is reckoned for one of the wonders of England: neither are there wanting the like tales of another caue, but eſpecially of Elden hole. that which is called Elden Hole, wherein there is nothing to bee wondered at, but that it is of an huge wideneſſe, exceeding ſteepe, and of a meruailous depth. But
F whoſoever haue written that there ſhould bee certaine tunnels and breathing holes, out of which windes doe iſſue, they are much deceived: Neither doe theſe verſes of Alexander Necham, which hee wrote as touching the Mervailes of England agree to any of theſe two holes.

Eſt ſpecus Aeolijs ventis obnoxia ſemper,
Impetus é gemino maximus ore venit.

Cogitur iniectum velamen adire ſupernas
Partes, deſcenſum impedit aura potens.

A Cave, to ſtrong Æolian winds alwaies enthrald there is,
From two-fold tunnell maine great blaſts ariſe and never miſſe:
A cloth or garment caſt therein, by force a loft is ſent,
A mighty breath, or pourfull puffe doth hinder all deſcent.

But all the memorable matters in this high and rough ſtony little country, one hath compriſed in theſe foure verſes.

Mira alto Pecco tria ſunt, barathrum, ſpecus, antrum;
Commoda tot, plumbum, gramen, ovile pecus.
Tot ſpecioſa ſimul ſunt, Caſtrum, Balnea, Chatsworth:
Plura ſed occurrunt, quæ ſpecioſa minùs.

There are in High Peake wonders three,
A deepe hole, Cave and Den:
Commodities as many bee,
Led, Graſſe, and Sheepe in pen.
And Beauties three there are withall
A Caſtle, Bath, Chatſworth:
With places more yet meet you ſhall
That are of meaner worth.

A ſtrange well. Th. Fitz-Herbert. p. 223.

To theſe wonders may be added a wonderful well in the Peake Forreſt not far from Buxtons which ordinarily ebbeth and floweth foure time in the ſpace of one houre or there about, keeping his iuſt tides: and I know not whether Tideſwell a Mercat town heereby hath his name thereof.

Lords and Earles of Darby. Simon Dunelm. Hovenden. Matth. Paris 304.

The Peverels who I have ſaid before were Lords of Nottingham are alſo reported to have beene Lords of Darby. Afterward King Richard the firſt, gave and confirmed unto his brother Iohn the Counties and Caſtles of Nottingham, Lancaſter, Darby &c. with the Honours thereto belonging, with the honour alſo of Peverell. After him theſe were Earles of Darby out of the family of Ferrars (ſo far as I am able to gather out of the Regiſters of Tutbury, Merival, and Burton Monaſteries) William Ferrars, ſon to the Daughter and heire of Peverell, whom King Iohn with his owne hand, (as we finde in an ancient Charter) inveſted Earle of Darby: William his ſonne who bruſed with a fall out of his Coach died in the yeere 1254. And this Williams ſonne, Robert; who in the Civill war loſt this title and a great eſtate by forfaiture, in ſuch ſort as that none of his poſterity, although they lived in great port and reputation, were ever reſtored to that honour againe: But moſt of this Roberts poſſeſſions King Henry the Third paſſed over unto Edmund his owne younger ſonne: and King Edward the Third (I write out of the very Originall Record) by authority and adviſe of the Parliament, ordeined Henry of Lancaſter, the ſonne of Henry Earle of Lancaſter, Earle of Darby, to him and his heires, and withall aſſigned unto him a thouſand markes yeerely during the life of his father Henry Earle of Lancaſter. From that time this title was united to the line of Lancaſter, untill King Henry the Seventh, beſtowed the ſame upon Thomas L. Stanley, who before had wedded Margaret the Kings mother, to him and the heires males of his body. He had for his ſucceſſor his grandſon Thomas begotten by George his ſonne of Ioan the heire of the Lord Strange of Knocking: this Thomas had by the ſiſter of George Earle of Huntingdon, Edward, the third Earl of this family, highly commended for hoſpitality and affability, who by the Lady Dorothy daughter to the firſt Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolke, begat Henry the fourth Earle, efts-once honorably employed, who left by Lady Margaret daughter of Henry Earle of Cumberland, Ferdinand, and William ſucceſſiuely Earles of Darby. Ferdinand Chart. antiq. t. Iohan.

A nand died in ſtrange maner, in the flower of his youth, leaving by Margaret his wife daughter of Sir Iohn Spenſer of Althorp three daughters, Anne married to Grey Bruges Lord Chandos, Francis wife to Sir Iohn Egerton, and Elizabeth wife to Henry Earle of Huntingdon. William the ſixth Earle now enioyeth that honour having iſſue by Elizabeth daughter to Edward late Earle of Oxford.

B

AND thus much of the Counties of Nottingham and Darby: of which they inhabited a part who in Bedes time were called Mercij Aquilonares, that is, The Northren Mercians, for that they dwelt beyond the Trent northward: and they held, as he ſaith, the land of ſeven thouſand families.

Northren Mercians.

C

This County holdeth in it Pariſhes 106.

D

E

F

A

B

CORNAVII.

Neighbours bordering.

Having now travailed in order through the Countries of the ancient CORITANI, I am to survey the regions confining, which in ancient time the people called CORNABII or CORNAVII inhabited: The derivation or Etymologie of whose name let others sift out. As for my selfe, C I could draw the force and signification of that word to this & that diversly; but seeing none of them doth aptly answere to the nature of the place, or disposition of the people, I chuse rather to reject them, than here to propound them. According therefore to my purpose, I will severally runne over those Provinces which after Ptolomees description the CORNAVII seeme to have possessed, that is to say, Warwick-shire, Worceſter-shire, Stafford-shire, Shrop-shire and Cheshire. In which, there remaineth no footing at this day, of the name Cornavij, although this name continued even untill the declining state of the Romane Empire. D For, certaine Companies and Regiments of the CORNAVII served in pay under the later Emperours, as wee may see in the Booke of Notitia Provinciarum.

E

WARWICK-

F

WARWICI Comitatus a cor: nauiis olim inha: bitatus

HVNDREDORVM NOMINA

A Hemlingforde
B Knightlowe
C Barlichway
D Kyneton
E Libertas ciuitatis Couentriæ

STAFFOR

PARS

VIGORNIÆ

PARS

SALOPIÆ PARS

GLOCESTRIÆ

PARS

Aldridge Rushall
Perry barr
Tame flu Hemsted
Sandwall
Handesworth
Bermichams aston
Witton
Smethwick
Wortley hall
Rea flu
Bromicham Vulgo Bermicham
Dudson hall Eadgchaston
Hales owen
Harborne
Mousley
Rea flu Kingsnorton
Coston
Arowe flu
Withe chapell
Alchurch Tardbick
Howell grange
Beley Skilties
Feckenham forrest
Ipsley
Morton bagot
Olde barow
Sparkall
Studley Feckenham
Samburie
Aune lodge
Coughton
Inckbarowe
Beauchamps Co
Auncster
Kinnc
Morton
Arowe Exhall
Wethley Wigsford Grafton Rousbinch Bewinton
Merchall
Bitforde
Abbots merton Brome
Auon flu
Sawesforde Harrington
Cleue
Deffin Pelive Marte
Auon flu
Charleton
N Litleton
Vffington
Brode Bengworth
Eueſholme Mic Campden

Scala Miliarium

Chris Kophorus Saxton deſcripſitt
William Kip Sculpſitt

LECESTRIÆ PARS

NORTHAMTONIÆ PARS

OXONIÆ PARS

Tamcworth Comberforde
Thorpe
Appleby mag:
Appleby gua Snreston
Shaxton
Newton
Stikington Shuttenton
Amington
Anstrei Braunceste Hogsnorton Twicross
Orton
Pooley
Polesworth
Grendon Hallende Morcharn
Shepey
Sibesden
Ratcliff culey
Merrivale
Mith Vpton Witherley
Drayton
Dadlington
Barwell
Stoke Wiken Higham
Lindley Cawcot Manvesedym
Manceter Atherston
Baxterley Whatley
Badesley cnefer
Kinsbury
Wishewe
Newhall
Cotton br
Mimworth Dunton
Leat Flanders
Hurley
Bentley
Hal laton
Curdworth
Ouer Wheatacre
Nether Wheatacre Hartshill old bury Bretes hall Weddington Stockingforde Auntley
Bourne flu:
Lame flu:
Water orton
Ward end
Park hall
Castle Bromewich Kingshurst
Shistoke
Arley Arbury Coton Nonleaton
Helborne
Horeston
Hinckley
Sketchley
Burbach
Aston flauile
Burton
Asley Bedworth Hastinges
Sherforde
Wigston
Eccles hall
Weston in arden Wulvey shill Sharnforde Bulkington
Wulvey Copston
Wibtoft
High cross
Froleworth
Cloudesley hush
Clabroke
Ashby gua Wethibroke
Byteswell
Hoppesforde
Newenham Lutterworth
Swift flu:
Misterton
Willey
Pailton Monkskirby
Brinklow
Calendon Sowe Anstey
Folkes hull
Whitmore pk
Barnacle Shilton
Alesley Corley Meriden
Packington mag:
Packington gua
Sheldon Colshill
Makestoke castle
Makestoke Fylongley
Marson culy
Elmedon Bickenhull
Escote
Hampton in Arden Solihull
Blith flu:
Barston
Henwood
Langdon hall
Knoll Bals hall
Ridsen Barcksiwell Fleckamstede
Sherborne flu:
Carsley
Wiken
Stoke Coventre
Stichall
Whitley Binley
Winhall
Combe abby Chesterouer
Benfordebri
Cotesbach
Churchouer
Shawell
Swinford
Brownsouer
Newton
Coltherp
Auon flu: Stanford
Lilborne
Rugby
Clifton
Hilmerton
Dunsmere heath
Bilton
Princethorp Wapenbury Stoneleygh:
Milverton
Weston under Edmondescote
Weithley
Huniton
Francton
Borcton
Causton hall
Cobbington
Lillington
Lemington hastings
Leame flu:
Dunchurch
Thurleston
Birbury
Lemington priors
Marton
Granborowe
Longe Itchington
Stocton
Willoughby
Barby
Legere Ashby
Kilsley
Creeke
Southam
Wulfencote
Branston
Welton
Norton Brockhole
Dauentre
Dodforde
Flowre
Wedon Cateshy
Helledon
Napton
Fleckno
Ouencote
Ladbroke
Ouer Shugbury
Nether Shugbury
Hodnell
Priors Marston
Knightcote
Gaidon
Priors Hardwick
Chadson
Kyneton
Cumbroke
Goldecotes pck
Compton mordock
Bisshops itchington
Leightborne
Morton marell
Walton
Aulston
Auon
Super Stretford
Bilsley
Drayton Luddington
Loxley
Binton
Chifford
Milcote
Welforde
Atherston
Preston
Alder marsto
Butlers Marston
Northend
Wormleighton
Fenny Compton
Burton dasset
Baldington
Ouer Eatenton
Eatenton
Nether Pillerton
Ouer Pillerton
Rodway
Ame dasset
Farnborow
Claidon
Watemington
Shotteswelt
Molington
Ratley
Oxhull
Whatcote Tredinton
Hawforde
Newbolde
Quenton
Whitchurch
Tysoes
Vpton Armscote
Idlecote
Ilminton
Blackwell
Hunton
Compton in the hole
Glo. pars
Hornton
Horley
Darlingscote
Barcheston
Shenington
Ebberton
Shipton Berdes
Winterton
Ankerton
Tidmington
Paxforde
Stretton
Glocestr pars
Sutton
Epwelt Burmington
Cherriton
Sibbardes
Steure flu:
Banbury
Todenham
Weston in the Thistles
Wutforde
Barton on the heath
Lemington
Wichforde
Long Compton
The 4 Shire stones
Compton pua
Castleton
Oxf pars
Glocestr pars
Vigor pars
Midleton cheny
Packwood
Nuthurst
Lapworth
Vnt bersley
Kingswood
Baddesley clinton
Honiley
Queenes pk
Thickhase
Kenelworth
Stoneley
Ashowe
Gedrestlodge
Wedgenock pk
Woodlow pk
Rowington
Roxhall
Haseley
Hatton
Preston Lagot
Pinley
Budbrook
Claverdon
Grooc pk
Henley in Arden
Hampton
Curley
Wulverdington
Norton limsey
Edson
Wotton
Bearley
Aston Cantlow
Snitterfeld
Clopton
Wasperton
Bishopton
Bishophampton
Sherborne
Warwick
Ofchurch
Radford semeley
Whitnish
Barforde
Tachbrook
Vfton
Thorpe
Harberbury
Newbolde
Ashborne
Chesterton
Wellesborne
Fosseway
Charlcote
Guy cliffe
Wedgenock
Woodlow Edmondescote
Lillington
Lemington hastings
Weithley
Huniton
Cobbington
Francton
Borcton
Causton hall
Dunchurch
Thurleston
Birbury
Lemington priors
Marton
Granborowe
Longe Itchington
Stocton
Willoughby
Barby
Legere Ashby
Kilsley
Creeke
Southam
Wulfencote
Branston
Welton
Norton Brockhole
Dauentre
Dodforde
Flowre
Wedon Cateshy
Helledon
Napton
Fleckno
Ouencote
Ladbroke
Ouer Shugbury
Nether Shugbury
Hodnell
Priors Marston
Knightcote
Gaidon
Priors Hardwick
Chadson
Kyneton
Cumbroke
Goldecotes pck
Compton mordock
Bisshops itchington
Leightborne
Morton marell
Walton
Aulston
Auon
Super Stretford
Bilsley
Drayton Luddington
Loxley
Binton
Chifford
Milcote
Welforde
Atherston
Preston
Alder marsto
Butlers Marston
Northend
Wormleighton
Fenny Compton
Burton dasset
Baldington
Ouer Eatenton
Eatenton
Nether Pillerton
Ouer Pillerton
Rodway
Ame dasset
Farnborow
Claidon
Watemington
Shotteswelt
Molington
Ratley
Oxhull
Whatcote Tredinton
Hawforde
Newbolde
Quenton
Whitchurch
Tysoes
Vpton Armscote
Idlecote
Ilminton
Blackwell
Hunton
Compton in the hole
Glo. pars
Hornton
Horley
Darlingscote
Barcheston
Shenington
Ebberton
Shipton Berdes
Winterton
Ankerton
Tidmington
Paxforde
Stretton
Glocestr pars
Sutton
Epwelt Burmington
Cherriton
Sibbardes
Steure flu:
Banbury
Todenham
Weston in the Thistles
Wutforde
Barton on the heath
Lemington
Wichforde
Long Compton
The 4 Shire stones
Compton pua
Castleton
Oxf pars
Glocestr pars
Vigor pars
Midleton cheny
Packwood
Nuthurst
Lapworth
Vnt bersley
Kingswood
Baddesley clinton Honiley
Queenes pk
Thickhase
Kenelworth
Stoneley
Ashowe
Gedrestlodge
Wedgenock pk
Woodlow pk
Rowington
Roxhall
Haseley
Hatton
Preston Lagot
Pinley
Budbrook
Claverdon
Grooc pk
Henley in Arden Hampton
Curley
Wulverdington
Norton limsey
Edson
Wotton
Bearley
Aston Cantlow Snitterfeld
Clopton
Wasperton
Bishopton Bishophampton
Sherborne
Warwick
Ofchurch
Radford semeley
Whitnish
Barforde
Tachbrook
Vfton
Thorpe
Harberbury
Newbolde
Ashborne
Chesterton
Wellesborne
Fosseway
Charlcote
Guy cliffe
Wedgenock
Woodlow Edmondescote
Lillington
Lemington hastings
Weithley
Huniton
Cobbington
Francton
Borcton
Causton hall
Dunchurch
Thurleston
Birbury
Lemington priors
Marton
Granborowe
Longe Itchington
Stocton
Willoughby
Barby
Legere Ashby
Kilsley
Creeke
Southam
Wulfencote
Branston
Welton
Norton Brockhole
Dauentre
Dodforde
Flowre
Wedon Cateshy
Helledon
Napton
Fleckno
Ouencote
Ladbroke
Ouer Shugbury
Nether Shugbury
Hodnell
Priors Marston
Knightcote
Gaidon
Priors Hardwick
Chadson
Kyneton
Cumbroke
Goldecotes pck
Compton mordock
Bisshops itchington
Leightborne
Morton marell
Walton
Aulston
Auon
Super Stretford
Bilsley
Drayton Luddington
Loxley
Binton
Chifford
Milcote
Welforde
Atherston
Preston
Alder marsto
Butlers Marston
Northend
Wormleighton
Fenny Compton
Burton dasset
Baldington
Ouer Eatenton
Eatenton
Nether Pillerton
Ouer Pillerton
Rodway
Ame dasset
Farnborow
Claidon
Watemington
Shotteswelt
Molington
Ratley
Oxhull
Whatcote Tredinton
Hawforde
Newbolde
Quenton
Whitchurch
Tysoes
Vpton Armscote
Idlecote
Ilminton
Blackwell
Hunton
Compton in the hole
Glo. pars
Hornton
Horley
Darlingscote
Barcheston
Shenington
Ebberton
Shipton Berdes
Winterton
Ankerton
Tidmington
Paxforde
Stretton
Glocestr pars
Sutton
Epwelt Burmington
Cherriton
Sibbardes
Steure flu:
Banbury
Todenham
Weston in the Thistles
Wutforde
Barton on the heath
Lemington
Wichforde
Long Compton
The 4 Shire stones
Compton pua
Castleton
Oxf pars
Glocestr pars
Vigor pars
Midleton cheny

A

WARWICK-SHIRE.

THe County of Warwick, which the old Englisſh Saxons as well as we called Warwick-ſhire, being bounded on the Eaſt-ſide with Northampton ſhire, Leiceſter-ſhire and the Watling-ſtreet way, which I ſpake of: on the South with Oxford-ſhire and Gloceſter-ſhire, on the Weſt, for the greateſt part with Worceſter ſhire, & on the North-
B ſide with Stafford-ſhire, is divided into two parts, the Feldon and Woodland, that is, into a plaine champian, and a woody country: which parts, the river Avon running crooke-lie from North-eaſt to South-weſt, doth after a ſort ſever one from the other.

The Feldon, lieth on this ſide Avon Southward, a plaine champian country, and Feldon.
being rich in corne and greene graſſe, yeeldeth a right goodly and pleaſant proſpect to them that looke downe upon it from an hill which they call Edge-hill. Where this hill endeth neere unto Wormington, wee ſaw a round fort or militarie fenſe caſt up of a good bigneſſe, which, as others of that kinde, wee may well thinke to haue
C beene made for the preſent, and not long to continue, by occaſion of ſome enemies that in times paſt were readie to invade thoſe parts. Of the redy ſoile heere, The vale of Redhorſe. Shipſton in Worceſter-ſhire.
come the names of Rodway and Rodley: yea and a great part of the verie Vale is thereupon termed The vale of Red-horſe, of the ſhape of an horſe cut out in a red hill by the Country people hard by Pillerton.

In this part the places worth naming are Shipſton and Kinton, the one in times paſt Kinton.
a mercat of Sheepe, the other of Kine, whereupon they gat thoſe names: alſo Comp- Compton.
ton in the Hole, ſo called for that it lieth hidden in a valley under the hils; yet hath it delights and pleaſures about it, and from thence a noble familie hath taken the name: out of which the moſt excellent Prince Queene Elizabeth advanced Sir Hen-
D ry Compton to the honour of a Baron in the yeare of our redemption 1572. Likewiſe Wormeleighton, ſo highly commended, and notorious for good Sheep-paſture, but now much more notable ſince that King Iames created that moſt right worſhipfull Sir Robert Spenſer, of whom I haue already ſpoken, Baron Spenſer of Wormleighton. Shugbury.
Moreover, Shugbury, where the ſtones called Aſtroites, reſembling little ſtarres, are Stones Aſtroites Sigſlean.
found, which the Lords of the place ſurnamed thereupon Shugbury, haue long ſhewed in their Coat Armour: Southam a mercat towne well knowne: as alſo Leamington See in Lin-(ſo called of Leame a ſmall brooke that wandereth through this part of the ſhire) coln-ſhire.
where there boileth out a ſpring of ſalt water: and Vtrhindon, now Long Ichingdon, and Harbury. Neither verily are theſe two places memorable for any o- Leamington.
E ther cauſe, but for that Fremund ſonne to King Offa was betwixt them villanouſly in times paſt ſlaine by thoſe that forelaied him, a man of great renowne and ſingular piety to God ward, unto whom nothing elſe procured envie and euil will, but becauſe in an unhappie time hee had by happie conduct quelled the audacious courage of his enemies. Which death of his notwithſtanding turned to his greater glorie. For, beeing buried at his fathers Palace, now called Off-Church, hee Off-Church.
liveth yet unto poſterity, as who beeing raunged in the Catalogue of our Saints hath among the multitude received divine honours: and whoſe life is by an ancient writer ſet out in a good Poeme, out of which let it bee no offence to put downe theſe
F few verſes following touching the murderer, who upon an ambitious deſire of a kingdome, ſlew him.

Non ſperans vivo Fremundo, regis honore,
Optato ſe poſſe frui, meliuſque in eius

Immeritam tacitò mortem, gladioq; profanus
Irruit exerto ſeruus, Dominique iacentis
Tale nihil veritum ſæuo caput amputat ictu.
Talis apud *Wydford Fremundum palma coronat,
Dum ſimul & ſontes occîdit, & occidit inſons.

*In some copies Radford.

Paſt hope, whiles Fremund liv'd, to ſpeed of wiſhed regalty,
All ſecret and unworthy meanes he plots to make him die.
With naked ſword, prophane ſlaue he, aſſaileth cowardly
His Lord unwares, and as he lay beheads him cruelly.
At Widford thus Prince Fremund did this glorious crowne attaine, Whiles ſlaying guilty folke, at once, himſelfe is guiltleſſe ſlaine.

Foſſe-way.

Thus much of the Feldon, or champion part, which, that ancient Foſſe-way (a thing that would not bee overpaſſed) cutteth overthwart: the ridge whereof is ſeene in paſtures lying now out of the way, neere unto Cheſterton the habitation of that ancient familie of the Peitoes, out of which was that William Peito, a Franciſcane Frier, whom Paul the Fourth, Pope of Rome, of ſtomach to worke Cardinall Pole diſpleaſure (would you thinke theſe heavenly wights were ſo wrathfull) created, though in vaine, Cardinall and Legate of England having recalled Cardinal Pole to Rome before, to bee accuſed and charged as ſuſpected corrupt in religion: But Queene Marie, albeit ſhee were moſt affectionatly devoted to the Church of Rome, interpoſed or rather oppoſed her ſelfe ſo, that Peito was forbidden to enter into England, and the powre Legatine left entier and whole to Cardinall Pole. Heere I wot not whether it would bee materiall to relate, how in the reigne of Edward the Fourth certaine writers in bookes of purpoſe penned made complaint of Covetouſneſſe, how that ſhee having aſſembled heere about flocks of ſheepe as a puiſſant powre of armed forces, beſieged many Villages well peopled, draue out the husbandmen, wonne the ſaid villages, deſtroied, raſed, and depopulated them in ſuch miſerable ſort heere about, that one of the ſaid writers a learned man in thoſe daies cried out with the Poet in theſe termes.

Peito.

Roſſe and T. B. againſt the deſtroiers of villages.

Quid facerent hoſtes capta crudelius urbe?
What could more cruelly be done,
By enemies, to Citties wonne?

But neere unto the river Avon, where carrying as yet but a ſmall ſtreame he cloſely entereth into this County, firſt offereth it ſelfe Rugby having a Mercat in it ſtanding chiefely of a number of Butchers. Then Newenham Regis, that is, Kings Newenham ſtanding upon the other ſide of the river, where three fountaines walme out of the ground ſtreined, as it ſhould ſeeme, through a veine of Alum; the water whereof carrying both colour and taſt of milke, is reported to cure the ſtone: Certes, it procureth urine abundantly, greene wounds it quickly cloſeth up and healeth, being drunke with ſalt it looſeth, and with ſuger, bindeth the belly.

Newenham Regis. Holſome wells.

After it, Bagginton, which had a Caſtle to it, and belonged ſometime to the Bagottes, as noble a familie then, as moſt other. Within a little whereof ſtandeth Stoneley, where King Henrie the Second founded an Abbay; and juſt over againſt it ſtood in old time a Caſtle upon Avon called Stoneley-holme, built in Holmeſhul, which was deſtroied when the flaming broiles of Daniſh warres under King Canutus caught hold of all England.

Bagginton.

Stoneley. Regiſter of Stoneley Abbay.

Then runneth Avon unto the principall towne of the whole ſhire, which wee call Warwicke, the Saxons Wappÿnȝ-wÿc, Ninnius and the Britans Caer Guaruic, and Caer Leon. All which names, conſidering they ſeeme to haue ſprung from Guarth a Britiſh word which ſignifieth a Gariſon, or from Legions, that were Warwick.

A were set in certaine places for guard and defence thereof, have in some sort perswaded mee (although in these Etymologies I love rather to be a Scepticke than a Critick) that this is the very towne of Britaine, which the Romans called PRAESIDIVM, where, as we finde in the Noticia, or Abstract of Provinces, the Captaine of the Dalmatian horsemen abode under the command of Dux Britanniæ. This Cohort or band was enrolled out of Dalmatia; and (to note thus much by the way) such was the provident wisdome and forecast of the Romans, that in all their Provinces they placed forraine souldiers in garison, who by reason of their diversity as well of maners as of language from the naturall inhabitants, could not joyne with them in Præsidium.

B any conspiracy: for (as he writeth) Nations not inured to the bridle of bondage, easily otherwise start backe from the yoake imposed upon them. Heereupon it was that there served in Britaine, out of Africke the Moores; out of Spaine the Astures and Vettones; out of Germany the Batavi, Nervij, Tungri, and Turnacenses; out of Gaul the Lingones, Morini; and from other remoter places, Dalmatians, Thracians, Alani &c. as I will shew in their proper places: But now to the matter. Neither let any man thinke that the Britans got that word Guarth from the Frenchmen, seeing the originall is an Hebrew word (if we may beleeue Lazius) and in that Originall most Nations doe accord.

Florus lib. 4. c. vlt.

Forraine Soldiors in Provinces.

But that this was PRAESIDIVM, that is, The Garison towne, both the Author-

C rity of our Chronicles teacheth, which report that the Romane Legions had their aboad heere; and the site also it selfe in the very navel and mids almost of the whole Province doth imply. For equally distant it is of the one side from the East Coast of Norfolke, and on the other side from the West of Wales, which kind of situation PRAESIDIVM a towne of Corsica, had, standing just in the middest of the Iland.

And no marvaile is it that the Romans kept heere Garison and a standing company of souldiers, seeing it standeth over the river Avon upon a steepe and high rocke, and all the passages into it are wrought out of the very stone. That it was fortified with a wall and ditches it is apparent; and toward the South West it sheweth a Castle passing strong, as well by Nature as handy-worke, the seat in times past of the Earles

D of Warwicke. The towne it selfe is adorned with faire houses, and is much bound to Ethelfled, Lady of the Mercians, who repaired it (when as it was greatly decaied) in the yeere 911. In very good state also it was upon the Normans entring into this land, and had many Burgesses, as they tearme them: and twelue of them, as we finde written in King William the Conquerors Domesday booke, were bound to accompany the King of England into his warres. Hee that upon warning given went not, paied an hundred shillings to the King: but if the King made a voyage by sea against his enemies, they sent either foure Boteswans, or foure pound of Deniers. In this Burgh the King hath in his Demeines one hundred and thirteene Burgesses, and the Kings Barons have an hundred and twelue. Roger the second, of the Normans bloud, Earle of

E Warwicke, built afterwards in the very hart of the towne a most beautifull Church to the blessed Virgin Mary: Which the Beauchamps that succeeded adorned with their tombes: but especially Richard Beauchamp, Earle of Warwicke, and Governour of Normandy, who died at Roan in the yeere 1439. and after a sumptuous funerall solemnized, in this Church lieth entombed in a magnificent tombe with this Inscription.

F

Pray

A

Pray deuoutly for the ſoule whom God aſſoile of one of the moſt worſhipfull Knights in his daies of manhood and cunning, Richard Beauchampe late Earle of Warwicke, Lord Deſpenſer, of Bergauenny, and of many other great Lordſhips, whoſe body reſteth heere under this tombe, in a full faire vault of ſtone, ſet in the bare Roche. The which viſited with long ſickneſſe in the Caſtle of Rohan, therein deceaſed full Chriſtianly the laſt day of Aprill, in the yeere of our Lord God 1439. hee being at that time Lieutenant Generall of France, and of the Duchie of Normandy, by ſufficient authority of our Soueraigne Lord King Henry the ſixth. The which body by great deliberation and worſhipfull conduct by ſea & by land, was brought to Warwick the fourth of October, the yeere aboueſaid, and was laied with ful ſolemne exequies in a faire cheſt made of ſtone in the Weſt dore of this Chappell, according to his laſt will and teſtament, therein to reſt till this Chappell by him deviſed in his life were made: the which Cappell founded on the Roche, and all the members thereof his executors did fully make and apparel, by the authority of his ſaid laſt will and teſtament. And thereafter by the ſaid authority they did tranſlate worſhipfully the ſaid body into the vault aforeſaid. Honored be God therefore.

B

C

D

Blacklow hill, which others call Gaverſden.

Neere vnto Warwicke Northward is Blaclow hill to be ſeene, on which Piers de Gaueſton, whom King Edward the Second had raiſed from a baſe and low eſtate to be Earle of Cornwall, was by the Nobles of the Kingdome beheaded: who preſuming of the Kings favour and fortunes indulgence, tooke unto him ſo great and licencious liberty, that when he had once corrupted the Kings heart, he deſpiſed all the beſt men, and proudly ſeized upon the eſtates of many, and as he was a crafty and old beaten fox ſowed diſcords and variance betweene the Prince and the Peeres of the Realme.

Guy-cliffe.

Under this hill, hard by the river Avon ſtandeth Guy-cliffe, others call it Gib-cliffe, the dwelling houſe at this day of Sir Thomas Beau-foe deſcended from the ancient Normans line, and the very ſeat it ſelfe of pleaſantneſſe. There have yee a ſhady little wood, cleere and criſtall ſprings, moſſy bottomes and caves, medowes alwaies freſh and greene, the river rumbling here and there among the ſtones with his ſtream making a milde noiſe and gentle whiſpering, and beſides all this, ſolitary and ſtill quietneſſe, things moſt gratefull to the Muſes. Heere, as the report goes, that valiant Knight and noble Worthy ſo much celebrated, Sir Guy of Warwick, after he had born the brunt of ſundry troubles, and atchieved many painful exploits, built a Chappell, led an Eremits life, and in the end was buried. Howbeit, wiſer men doe thinke, that the place tooke that name of later time by far, from Guy Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke; and certaine it is, that Richard Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke built Saint Margarets Chappell heere, and erected a mighty and giantlike ſtatue of ſtone, reſembling the ſaid Guy.

E

F

I. Roſſe of Warwicke. Guy of Warwicke.

Charle-cot.

Avon now runneth downe from Warwicke with a fuller ſtreame by Charle-cot, the habitation of the renowned ancient family of the Lucies Knights, which place long agoe

A goe descended hereditarily to them from the Charlcots: who upon a pious and devout minde founded a religious house at Thellisford, for entertainment of poore folke and pilgrims: For, that little river was called Thelley, which by Compton Murdacke, the possession sometime of the Murdackes, and now of the Vernaies, Knights, and by this, Thellisford goeth into Avon, which within a while runneth hard by Stratford, a proper little mercate town, beholden for all the beauty that it hath to two men there bred and brought up, namely, Iohn of Stratford Archbishop of Canterburie, who built the Church; and Sir Hugh Clopton Major of London, who over Avon made a stone bridge supported with foureteene arches, not without exceeding great B expenses. This Hugh was a yonger brother, out of that ancient family which from Clopton a Manour adjoining borrowed this surname, since the time that Walter de Cocksfeld called Knight Mareschall setled and planted both himselfe and his successours at Clopton. The inheritance of these Cloptons is in our time descended to two sisters coheires: the one of which is married to Sir George Carew Knight, Vicechamberlaine to our most gracious Lady Queene Anne: whom King Iames hath entituled Baron Carew of Clopton, and whom I am the more willing to name with honour in this respect, if there were none other, for that he is a most affectionat lover of venerable antiquity. Neither seeth Avon any other memorable thing upon his bankes, but Bitford a mercate towne, and some country villages being now ready to enter into Worcestershire.

Stratford upon Avon.

Baron Carew of Clopton.

C Now let vs enter into the Woodland, which beyond the river Avon spreadeth it selfe Northward much larger in compasse than the Feldon: and is for the most part thicke set with woods, and yet not without pastures, corn-fields, and sundry mines of Iron: This part, as it is at this day called Woodland, so also it was in old time knowen by a more ancient name Arden, but in the selfesame sense and signification, as I thinke. For, it seemeth that Arden among the ancient Britans and Gaules signified a Wood; considering that we see a very great wood in France named ARDEN, a towne in Flanders hard by another wood, called Ardenburg, and that famous wood or forest in England by a clipped word likewise cleped DEN: to say nothing of that DIANA, D which in the ancient inscriptions of Gaule is surnamed ARDVVENA and ARDOINA that is, if I doe not mis-conceive, Of the wood; and was the same Diana which in the inscriptions of Italy went under the name of NEMORENSIS. Of this forest, Turkill of Arden, who flourished heere in all honor under King Henrie the first, tooke his name: and his ofspring which was of great worship and reputation, spred very much over all England for many yeeres successively ensuing. In the West side of this country, the river Arrow maketh hast to joine himselfe in society with Avon, by Studly castle; belonging some time to Iohn the sonne of Corbutio. But whether this river Arrow tooke name of swiftnesse, as Tigris in Mesopotamia (for Arrow with us, like as Tigris among the Persians, betokeneth a shaft) or contrariwise, of the still streame and E slow course, which Ar in the old French and British tongue implied, let other men looke who have better obserued the nature of this river.

Woodland.

Arden.

Diana Ardvvena.

Studly.

Vpon this river standeth Coughton, the principall Mansion house of the Throckmortons a family of Knights degree, which being spred into a number of faire branches, and fruitfull of fine wits, flourished in this tract especially, ever since they matched in marriage with the daughter and heire of Speney. Not farre from hence is Ousley, which also was in ancient time well knowne by the Lords thereof, the Butlers, Barons of Wem; from whom it was devolved hereditarily to the Ferrars of Ousley. Whose inheritance, within a short time, was divided betweene Iohn Lord of Greistocke and Sir Raulph Nevill. Beneath it, upon Arrow, standeth Beauchamps-Court so named of F Baron Beauchamp of Powicke, from whom by the onely daughter of Edward Willoughbey, sonne to Robert Willoughbey Baron Broke, it came to Sir Foulque Grevill a right worshipfull person both for his Knights degree, and for kind courtesie: whose onely sonne, carrying likewise the same name, hath consecrated himselfe so to true Vertue and Nobility, that in nobility of minde he farre surmounteth his parentage and unto whom for his exceeding great deserts toward me, although my heart is not able ei-

Coughton. Throckmorton.

Ousley.

Beauchamps Court.

Grevills.

ther

ther to expreſſe or render condigne thankfulneſſe, yet in ſpeech will I ever render A thankes, and in ſilence acknowledge my ſelfe moſt deeply endebted.

Under this towne there runneth into Arrow, the river Alne, which holding on his Henley. courſe through the woods, paſſeth under Henley a prety mercate towne; a Caſtle joining whereunto belonged to the family of the Mont-forts, being noble men of great name, which for the pleaſant ſituation among the woods they called by a French name Bell-deſert, but this together with the ruins is now buried quite and ſcant to be ſeene at all. Theſe were deſcended not from the Almarian family of the Montforts of France, but from Turſtan de Baſtanberg a Norman: whoſe inheritance paſſed away at length by the daughters unto the Barons of Sudley, and to the Frevills. In the very B Aulceſter. place where Arrow and this Alne doe meete together, we ſaw Aulceſter, by Matthew Paris called (and that more rightly) Allenceſter, which the inhabitants affirme to have beene a moſt famous and ancient towne, and thereupon they will have the name to be Ouldceſter. This, (as we read in an old Inquiſition) was a Frank-burogh of our Lord King Henrie the Firſt, & the ſame King gave that Burogh to Robert Corbet for his ſervice, and when the ſaid Robert died, it came by deſcent to Sir William of Botereux, and to A booke in the Exchequer. Sir Peter Fitz-Herbert: and when William of Botereux died, the moity of that Burogh fell by deſcent into the hand of Sir Reginald of Botereux as to the heire, who now holdeth it: and when Peter Fitz-Herbert died, that moity deſcended into the hand of Herbert, the ſonne of Peter: which Herbert gave it to Sir Robert de Chaundoys: But now it is decaied and of C a very great towne become a ſmall mercate of wares and trade. Howbeit exceeding * much frequented for the Corne-faire there holden. This hath for a neere neighbour Arrow. Burdet. Arrow according to the name of the river, whoſe Lord Tho. Burdet for his dependence vpon George Duke of Clarence, words vnaduiſedly vttered, and hardly conſtrued through the iniquitie of the time, loſt his life. But by his grand daughter married to Edward Conway brother to Sir Hugh Conway of Wales a gracious fauorit of King Henrie the Seventh, the Knightly family of the Conwaies have ever ſince flouriſhed and laudably followed the profeſſion of Armes.

But Eaſt from the river, and higher among the woods, which now begin to grow
Wroxhall. Badeſley. Balſhall. thin, ſtand theſe townes under-named, Wroxhal, where Hugh de Hatton founded a little D
Regiſter of the Templars, and order of Sir Iohn of Ieruſalem. Priorie; Badeſley belonging in times paſt to the Clintons, now to the Ferrars: Alſo Balſhall, ſometimes a Commandery of the Templars, which Roger de Mowbray gave unto them; whoſe liberality to the order of Templars was ſo great, that by a common conſent in their Chapiter they made a decree, that himſelfe might remit and pardon, any of the brotherhood whomſoever, in caſe he had treſpaſſed againſt the ſtatutes and ordinances of that order, and did withall before him acknowledge the crime:
yea and the Knights of the order of Saint Iohn of Ieruſalem, unto whom the Templars poſſeſſions in England were aſſigned over (for our anceſtours in thoſe daies held it a deadly ſinne to prophane things conſecrated to God) granted in token of thankful-See the Statute of Templars. neſſe unto Iohn Mowbraie of Axholme, the ſucceſſour of the foreſaid Roger, that E himſelfe and his ſucceſſours in every of their Covents and aſſemblies ſhould be received and intertained alwaies in the ſecond place next unto the King.

Kenelworth commonly Killingworth. More North-eaſt, where wild brookes meeting together make a broad poole among the parkes, and ſo ſoone as they are kept in with bankes runne in a chanell, is ſeated Kenelworth, in times paſt commonly called Kenelworde, but corruptly Killing- worth: and of it taketh name a moſt ample, beautifull and ſtrong Caſtle, encompaſſed all about with parkes, which neither Kenulph, nor Kenelm, ne yet Kinegliſe built, as ſome doe dreame, but Greffrey Clinton Chamberlaine unto King Henrie the Firſt, and his ſonne with him (as may be ſhewed by good evidences) when he had founded there before a Church for Chanons Regular. But Henrie his nephew in the ſecond de- F gree, having no iſſue, ſold it unto King Henrie the Third, who gave it in franke marriage to Simon Montfort Earle of Leiceſter together with his ſiſter Aeleonor. And ſoone after when enmity was kindled betweene the King and Earle Simon; and hee ſlaine in the bloudy warres which he had raiſed vpon faire pretexts againſt his Soveraigne, it endured ſix months ſiege, & in the end was furrendred up to the King afore-ſaid,

A ſaid, who annexed this Caſtle as an inheritance to Edmund his ſonne Earle of Lancaſter. At which time, there went out and was proclaimed from hence an Edict, which our Lawyers uſe to call Dictum de Kenelworth, whereby it was enacted, That whoſoever had tooke armes againſt the King ſhould pay every one of them five yeeres rent of their lands &c. A ſevere, yet a good and wholſome courſe, without effuſion of bloud againſt rebellious ſubiects, who compaſſing the deſtruction of the State, built all their hopes upon nothing elſe but diſſentions. But this Caſtle through the bountifull munificence of Queene Elizabeth, was given and granted to Robert Dudleie Earle of Leiceſter, who, to repaire and adourne it, ſpared for no coſt: in ſo much as if a man conſider either the gallant building, or the large parkes, it would ſcorne (as it were) to be
B ranged in a third place amongſt the Caſtles in England.

Next after this, to keepe on the journey that my ſelfe made, I ſaw Solyhill: but in it, ſetting a ſide the Church, there is nothing worth ſight: Then, Bremicham, full of inhabitants, and reſounding with hammers and anvils, for the moſt of them are Smiths. The lower part thereof ſtandeth very wateriſh: the upper riſeth with faire buildings: for the credite and praiſe whereof, I may not reckon this in the laſt place, that the Noble and martiall family of the * Bremichams Earles of Louth &c. in Ireland fetched their originall and name from hence. Then, in the utmoſt skirt of this ſhire North-weſt ward, Sutton Colfeild ſtanding in a woddy and on a churliſh hard ſoile, glorieth of Iohn Voiſy Biſhop of Exceſter there borne and bred: who in the C reigne of King Henrie the Eighth, when this little town had lien a great while as dead, raiſed it up againe with buildings, priviledges, and a Grammer ſchoole. As I went downe from hence Southward I came to Coleſhull, a towne ſometime of the Clintons, and to Maxſtocke Caſtle neighbouring to it, which acknowledged by a continuall line of hereditarie ſucceſſion for his Lords, the Limſies, who were alſo Lords of Wolverley, the Odingſells that came out of Flanders, and the Clitons, men of greateſt worth and worſhip in their times.

Bremicham.

* Or Birmighams.

Lower yet, in the mids of this Woodland ſtandeth Coventrey ſo called, as we take it, of a Covent of Monkes, conſidering that we tearme in our tongue ſuch a brotherhood, a Covent and Covenn: and it is oftentimes in our Hiſtories and Pontificall Decrees na-
D med Coventria: as for example in this one paſſage: Vel non eſt compos ſui Epiſcopus Conventrenſis, vel nimis videtur à ſe ſcientiam repulliſſe.* Yet there be, that would have this name to be taken from that little brooke that runneth within the Citie at this day called Shirburn, and in an ancient Charter of the Priorie, is written Cuentford. Well, whence ſo ever it was ſo called; in the foregoing age, growing wealthy by clothing and making of caps, it was the onely mart and Citie of trade in all theſe parts, frequented alſo and peopled more than ordinarily a midland place: as being a Citie very commodiouſly ſeated, large, ſweet, and neat, fortified with ſtrong walles, and ſet out with right goodly houſes: among which there riſe up on high two Churches of rare workmanſhip, ſtanding one hard by the other, & matched, as it were, as concur-
E rents, the one conſecrated to the Holy Trinity, the other to Saint Michaell. Yet hath it nothing within it, that one would ſay is of great antiquity. And the moſt ancient monument of all, as it may ſeeme, was the Monaſterie or Priory, the ruins whereof I ſaw neere unto thoſe Churches: which Priory King Canutus founded firſt for religious Nunnes, who when they were within a while after throwen out, in the yeere 1043. Leofricke Earle of the * Mercians enlarged, and in maner built a new, with ſo great a ſhew and bravery of gold and ſilver (theſe be the very woods of William Malmeſbury) that the wals ſeemed too narrow for to receive the treaſure of the Church, & the coſt beſtowed there was wonderfull to as many as beheld it: for, out of one beame were ſcraped 50. markes of ſil-
F ver. And he endowed it with ſo great livings, that Robert de Limſeie, Biſhop of Lichfield and Cheſter tranſlated his See hither, as it were to the golden ſand of Lydia: to the end (for ſo writeth the ſaid Malmesbury) that out of the very treaſure of the Church he might by ſtealth convey, wherewith to fill the Kings hand, wherewith to avoid the Popes buſineſſe, and wherwith to ſatisfie the greedineſſe of the Romaniſts. But this See, few yeeres after was removed againe to Lichfield: yet ſo, as that one and the ſelfeſame Biſhop, carried Honorius 3. cap. 14. Decret.

* The Biſhop of Coventrie is either beſide himſelfe, or ſeemeth to have reiected knowledge and learning, too too much.

* Of midle England.

carried the name both of Lichfield and of Coventry: The first Lord of this Citie, so farre as I can learne, was this Leofricke, who being very much offended and angrie with the Citizens, oppressed them with most heavy tributes, which he would remit upon no other condition, at the earnest suite of his wife Godiva, unlesse she would her selfe ride on horse-backe naked through the greatest and most inhabited street of the Citie: which she did in deed, and was so covered with her faire long haire, that (if we may beleeue the common sort) she was seene of no bodie, and thus she did set free her Citizens of Coventry from many payments for ever. From Leofricke it came into the hands of the Earles of Chester, by Lucie his sonne Algars daughter: for, she had beene married to Ranulph the first of that name, and the third Earle of Chester out of this line: who granted unto Coventrie the same liberties that Lincolne had, and gave a great part of the Citie unto the Monkes: the rest and Chilmore, which is the Lords Manour hard by the Citie, hee reserved to himselfe and to his heires. After whose death, when for want of issue male, the inheritance was divided betweene the sisters, Coventry came at length mediately by the Earles of Arundell unto Roger Mont-hault, whose grand sonne Robert, passed over all his right, for default of issue male of his body begotten, unto Queene Isabell mother to King Edward the third: To have and to hold during the whole life of the Queene herselfe, and after her decease to remaine unto Iohn of Eltham the said Kings brother, and to the heires of his body begotten, and for default, the remainder to Edward King of England &c. For thus is it to be seene in the Fine, in the second yeere of King Edward the Third. Now, the said Iohn of Eltham was afterwards created Earle of Cornwall, and this place became annexed to the Earldome of Cornwall. From which time it hath flourished in great state: Kings have bestowed sundry immunities upon it, and King Edward the Third especially, who permitted them to chuse a Major and two Bailifes, and to build and embatle a wall about it: also King Henrie the Sixth, who laying unto it certaine small townes adjoining, granted, That it should be an entier County corporate by it selfe, (the very words of the Charter runne in that sort) in deed and name, and distinct from the County of Warwicke. At which time in lieu of Bailifes he ordained two Sherifes, and the Citizens beganne to fortifie their Citie with a most strong wall: wherein are beautifull gates: and at one of them called Gosford gate, there hangeth to be seene a might great Shield bone of a wild Bore, which any man would thinke that either Guy of Warwicke or else Diana of the Forest (Arden) slew in hunting, when he had turned up with his snout that great pit or pond, which at this day is called Swansewell, but Swinsewell in times past, as the authority of ancient Charters doth prove.

Lords of Coventry. 1050. Florilegus.

A B C D

As touching the longitude of this Citie, it is 25. degrees, and 52. scruples: and for the latitude it is 52. degrees, and 25. scruples. Thus much of Coventry: yet have you not all this of me, but (willingly to acknowledge by whom I have profited) of Henrie Ferrars of Baddesley, a man both for parentage, and for knowledge of antiquity very commendable; and my especiall friend: who both in this place and also else where hath at all times courteously shewed me the right way when I was out, and from his candle, as it were, hath lightned mine.

E

Auſley. Brand. Caledon.

Neere unto Coventry North-west ward are placed Ausley castle the habitation in times past of the Hastings, who were Lords of Abergevenney: and Brand, the dwelling place in old time of the Verdons: Eastward standeth Caloughdon, commonly Caledon; the ancient seat of the Lords Segrave, from whom it descended to the Barons of Berkly, by one of the daughters of Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolke. These Segraves since time that Stephen was Lord chiefe Iustice of England, flourished in the honorable estate of Barons, became possessed of the Chaucombes inheritance, whose Armes also they bare, viz. A Lion rampant, Argent crowned Or, in a shield Sable. But Iohn the last of them maried Margaret Duchesse of Northfolke, daughter of Thomas Brotherton; and begat Elizabeth a daughter, who brought into the Family of the Mowbraies the dignity of Marshall of England, and title of Duke of Norfolke. Brinklo also is not farre from hence, where stood an ancient Castle of the Mowbraies, to which many possessions and faire lands thereabout belonged: But the very Barons Segrave.

Segraves Coat of Armes.

Brinklo Castle.

F

rubbish

A rubbish of this Castle time hath quite consumed; as Combe Abbay is scant now apparent which the Camvills and Mowbraies endowed with possessions, and out of the ruines and reliques whereof, a faire house of the Lord Harringtons in this very place is now raised. As you goe East-ward, you meet anon with Cester-Over, whereof I spake incidently before, belonging to the Grevills: neere unto which the High part-way watling-street, dividing this shire Northward from Leicester-shire, runneth on forward by High-crosse, whereof also I haue already written, neere unto Nun-Eaton, which in ancient time was named Eaton. But when Amice wife to Robert Bossu Earle of Leicester, as Henry Knighton writeth, had founded a Monastery of Nunnes, B wherein her selfe also became professed, it beganne of those Nunnes to bee called Nun-Eaton. And famous it was in the former ages by reason of those religious Virgines holinesse, who deuoting themselues continually to praiers, gaue example of good life.

Combe Abbay.

A little from this there flourished sometimes Astley-Castle, the principall seat of the familie of Astley out of which flourished Barons in the time of King Edward the First, Second, and Third: the heire whereof in the end was the second wedded wife of Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthin; from whome came the Greies Marquesses of Dorset: some of whom were enterred in a most fine and faire Collegiat Church which Thomas Lord Astley founded with a Deane and C Secular Chanons.

Astley, or Estley. Baron Astley.

Somewhat higher, hard by Watling-street (for so with the common people wee call the High-waie made by the Romans) where as the river Anker hath a stone bridge over it, stood MANDVESSEDVMA verie ancient towne, mentioned by Antonine the Emperour, which beeing not altogether deprived of that name is now called Mancester, and in Ninnius his Catalogue Caer Mancegued. Which name, considering there is a stone-quarry hard by, I may ghesse was imposed upon it, of the stones digged forth and hewed out of it. For, out of the Glossaries of the British tongue, wee finde, that Main in the British language signified a Stone, and Fosswad in the Provinciall Rome to digge out: which D beeing joyned together, may seeme verie expressely to import that ancient name MANDVESSEDVM. But what, how great, or how faire soever it hath beene in old time, a verie small village it is at this daie, conteining in it scarce foureteene dwelling houses and those but little ones, and hath no monument of antiquity to shew, beside an ancient mount which they call Old-burie. For on the one side, Atherstone a mercate towne of good resort, where there stood a Church of Augustine Friers, now turned into a Chappell (which nevertheless acknowledgeth Mancester Church for her mother) and Nun-Eaton on the other side, by their vicinity haue left it bare and emptie. Close unto Atherstone standeth Mery-Vale, where Robert Ferrars erected a Monastery to God and the blessed Virgin Ma- E ry, wherein himselfe enwrapped in an Ox-hide for a shrouding sheet was interred.

Mandúessedum. Mancester.

Merivall.

Beyond these, Northeastward is Pollesworth, where Modwena an Irish virgin, of whom there went so great a fame for her holie life, built a religious house for Nunnes, which R. Marmion a noble man repaired, who had his Castle hard by at Stippershull. Neere unto this place also there flourished in the Saxons daies, a towne that now is almost quite gone, called then SECANDVNVM, and at this day Seckinton, where Aethelbald King of the Mercians in civill warre about the yeere of our Lord 749. was stabbed to death by Beared: and soone after Offa slew Beared, so that as by bloudy meanes he invaded the kingdome, of Mercia, hee likewise lost the same so dainely.

Pollesworth.

Seckinton.

F It remaineth now that wee reckon up the Earles of Warwick: for, to passe over Guare, Mirind, Guy of Warwick, of whose actes all England resoundeth, and others of that stampe, whom pregnant wits haue at one birth bred and brought forth into the world: Henrie the sonne of Roger de Beau-mont, and brother to Robert Earle of Mellent, was the first Earle descended of Normans bloud: who had married Margaret the daughter of Ernulph de Heſdin Earle of Perch, a moſt mighty and puiſſant man. A

Earles of Warwick.

Out of this family, there bare this honourable title, Roger the ſonne of Henry, William the ſonne of Roger, who died in the thirtieth yeere of King Henry the Second, Walleran his brother, Henry the ſonne of Walleran, Thomas his ſonne, who deceaſed without iſſue in the 26. yeere of King Henry the Third, leaving behind him Margery his ſiſter, who being Counteſſe of Warwicke, and barraine, departed this life: yet her two husbands, firſt, John Mareſchal, then John de Pleſſetis or Pleſſy, in their wives right and through their Princes favor mounted up to the honorable dignity of Earles of Warwicke. B Placita E. 3. Rotulo 234.

Now when theſe were departed without any iſſue by that Margery, Wallerand uncle unto the ſaid Margery ſucceeded them: After whom, dying alſo childleſſe, his ſiſter Alice enjoyed the inheritance: Afterwards her ſonne William, called Malduit and Manduit of Hanſlap, who left this world and had no children. Then Iſabel the ſaid William Malduits ſiſter being beſtowed in marriage upon William de Beauchamp Lord of Elmeſly, brought the Earldome of Warwicke into the family of the Beauchamps; who, if I deceive not my ſelfe, for that they came of a daughter of Vrſus de Abtot, gave the Beare for their cogniſance, and left it to their poſterity. Out of this houſe there flouriſhed ſix Earles and one Duke; William the ſonne of Iſabell, John, Guy, Thomas, Thomas the younger, Richard, and Henry, unto whom King Henry the Sixth graunted this preheminence and prerogatiue without any precedent, to be the firſt and chiefe Earle of England, and to carry this ſtile, Henricus Præcomes totius Anglia, & Comes Warwici, that is, Henry chiefe Earle of all England, and Earle of Warwicke: he nominated him alſo King of the Iſle of Wight, and afterwards created him Duke of Warwicke, and by theſe expreſſe words of his Patent, granted, That he ſhould take his place in Parliaments and elſwhere next unto the Duke of Norfolke and before the Duke of Buckingham. One onely daughter he had named Anne, whom in the Inquiſitions we finde entituled Counteſſe of Warwicke, and ſhe died a child. After her ſucceeded Richard Nevil who had married Anne ſiſter to the ſaid Duke of Warwicke, a man of an undaunted courage, but wavering and untruſty, the very tenniſſe-ball, in ſome ſort, of fortune; who although he were no King, was above Kings, as who depoſed King Henry the Sixth (a moſt bountifull Prince to him) from his regall dignity, placed Edward the Fourth in the royall throne, and afterwards put him downe too, reſtored Henry the Sixth againe to the Kingdome, enwrapped England within the moſt wofull and lamentable flames of civill war, which himſelfe at the length hardly quenched with his owne bloud. After his death Anne his wife by act of Parliament was excluded and debarred from all her lands for ever, and his two daughters, heires to him, and heires apparant to their mother, being married to George Duke of Clarence, and Richard Duke of Gloceſter, were enabled to enioy all the ſaid lands, in ſuch wiſe as if the ſaid Anne their mother were naturally dead. Whereupon the name, ſtile and title of Earle of Warwicke and Sarisbury was granted to George Duke of Clarence, who ſoone after was unnaturally diſpatched by a ſweet death in a Butt of Malueſey by his ſuſpicious brother King Edward the Fourth: His yoong ſonne Edward was ſtiled Earle of Warwicke, and being but a very child was beheaded by King Henry the Seventh to ſecure himſelfe and his poſterity.

Rot. Parl. 23. H. 6.

24. H. 6.

An. 12. Ed. 4. Dead by Parliament.

C D E

The death of this Edward our Anceſtors accounted to be the full period, and finall end of the long laſting war between the two royall houſes of Lancaſter and Yorke. Wherein, as they reckoned, from the twenty eighth yeere of Henry the Sixth unto this, being the fifteenth of Henry the Seventh, there were thirteene fields fought, three Kings of England, one Prince of Wales, twelue Dukes, one Marques, eighteene Earles, with one Vicont, and twenty three Barons, beſides Knights and Gentlemen, loſt their liues. From the death of this yoong Earle of Warwicke this title lay aſleepe, which King Henry the Eighth feared as a fire-brand of the State, by reaſon of the combuſtion which that Richard Nevil, that whip-king (as

Period of the civill war betweene Lancaſter and Yorke.

F

A (as ſome tearmed him) had raiſed, untill that King Edward the Sixth conferred it upon Iohn Dudley, that derived his pedigree from the Beauchamps, who, like unto that Richard abouesaid, going about in Queene Maries daies to turne and tranſlate Scepters at his pleaſure, for his traiterous deepe ambition loſt his head. But his ſonnes, firſt Iohn, when his father was now Duke of Northumberland, by a curteous cuſtome uſually received held this title for a while: and afterwards Ambroſe a moſt worthy perſonage, both for warlike proweſſe and ſweetneſſe of nature through the fauour of Queene Elizabeth received in our remembrance, the honour of Earle of Warwicke to him and his heires males, and for defect of them, to Robert
B his brother, and the heires males of his body lawfully begotten.
This honour Ambroſe bare with great commendation, and died without children in the yeere one thouſand fiue hundred eighty nine, ſhortly after his brother Robert Earle of Leiceſter.

***

C

In this County there be Pariſh Churches 158.

D

E

F

A (as some tearmed him) had railed, until that King Edward the Sixth conferred it upon John Dudley, that derived his pedigree from the Beauchamps, who, like unto that Richard aboue-said, going about in Queene Mary dayes to ruine and undiate Secretaries at his pleasure, for his traiterous deepe ambition lost his head. But his sonne, Iohn, when his father was now Duke of Northumberland, by a curteous cutome ufually received held this title for a while: and afterwards (whereof a most worthy perfonage, both for warlike prowesse and sweetnesse of nature through the fauour of Queene Elizabeth receiued in our remembrance, the honour of Earle of Warwicke to him and his heires males, and for defect of them, to Robert his brother, and the heires males of his body lawfully begotten.

This honour (whereof bare with great commendation,) and died without children, in the yeare one thousand fiue hundred eighty nine, shortly after his brother Robert Earle of Leicester.

***

C

In this County there be Parish Churches 158.

Wiccij.

Salt-pits.

Kings Norton.

Pyrry.

Kiddermin-ter.
Beawdley.

VIGORNIENSIS

(VVLGO WORCESTERSHIRE) COMITATVS DESCRIPTIO, CONTINENS IN SE (PRÆTER CIVITATEM VIGORNIAE) OPPIDA MERCATORIA NOVEM, ECCLESIASQ. PAROCHIALES CLII.

NOMINA HVNDREDORVM IN HOC COMITATV.

A. Hundredor. dim Com.
B. Dodingtree Hundred.
C. Parshore Hundred.
D. Blakenhurſt Hundred.
E. Oſwaldeslow Hundred.

SEPTENTRIO.

STAFFORDIÆ PARS.

SALOPIÆ PARS.

WARWICIÆ PARS.

HEREFORDIÆ PARS.

GLOCESTRIÆ PARS.

OXONIÆ PARS.

OCCIDENS.

ORIENS.

MERIDIES.

Scala milliarium Anglicorum.

LOCORVM SIGNIFICATIONES.

LAT.	ANG.
Oppida Mercatoria.	Markett Townes.
Caſtella.	Caſtells.
Eccleſiæ Parochiales.	Parish Churches.
Nobilium ædes.	Gentlemens houſes.
Villæ.	Villages.

London printed and ſould by P. Stent

WORCESTER-SHIRE.

THe ſecond region of the ancient CORNAVII, having now changed the name, is called in Latin Wigornienſis Comitatus, in the Engliſh Saxon tongue Wiꝛe-ceaꝛꝛep-ſcỹꝛe, & now commonly of the principall towne in it WORCESTER-SHIRE: the inhabitants whereof, togither with thoſe who joyning unto them round about in Bedes daies, before that England was divided into Shires, were termed Wiccij. Which name, if it were not given them of the river having ſo many windings, which they dwell by (for ſuch turnings and curving reaches of a river, the Engliſh Saxons, as I haue already ſaid, called Wic) may ſeeme to haue beene derived of thoſe Salt pits, that the old Engliſhmen in their language named Wiches. For, there bee here very notable Salt-pits, and many ſalt ſprings often times haue beene found, which notwithſtanding are ſtopped up, becauſe it was provided (as wee read) that for the ſaving of woods ſalt ſhould not be boiled but in certaine places. Neither let it ſeeme ſtrange, that places haue their names given them from Salt-pits, conſidering that we may meet with many ſuch here and there in every Country, and our Anceſtors the Germans, as Tacitus writeth, had a religious perſwaſion and beliefe, that ſuch places approch neereſt to heaven, and that mens praiers were no where ſooner heard of the Gods.

Wiccij.

Salt-pits.

This County, on which Warwick-ſhire confineth on the Eaſt, Gloceſter-ſhire on the South, bounded Weſt-ward with Hereford-ſhire and Shrop-ſhire, North-eaſt with Stafford-ſhire, to ſay all in one word, hath ſo temperate an aire and ſoile ſo favourable, that for healthfulneſſe and plenty, it is not inferior to their neighbour countries, and in one part for deinty cheeſe ſurpaſſeth them: yeelding ſuch ſtore of peares, as none other the like; and albeit they are not ſo pleaſing to theſe deinty and delicate mouthes, yet out of their winiſh juice, they make a baſtard kinde of wine called Pyrry, which they drinke very much, although it bee (as other drinkes of that kinde) both cold and full of winde. Neither is it if you reſpect waters, leſſe pleaſant and commodious: for, in every place there be paſſing ſweet rivers, which affoord in great abundance the moſt delicate kinds of fiſhes. And to let thoſe run by that are of leſſe account, Severn that noble and renowned river carieth his ſtreame along, through the mideſt of the ſhire, from North to South: and Avon, that commeth downe out of Warwick-ſhire to meet with Severn, watereth the South part thereof.

Kings Norton.

Pyrry.

Severn, firſt of all at his verie entry, paſſeth betweene Kidderminſter, and Beawdley. This Beawdley worthily ſo called for the Beautifull ſite thereof, ſtandeth moſt pleaſantly upon the hanging of an hill, and hovereth over the river on the Weſt ſide: of late daies well knowne for the admirable tallneſſe of trees growing in the foreſt of Wyre adjoining, which now in manner bee all gone. Whence our Poet and Antiquarie Leland wrote thus.

Kidderminſter.

Beawdley.

Delicium rerum Bellus Locus, undiq; floret
Fronde coronatus Virianæ temporæ Sylvæ.
Beawdley a fine and deinty thing, is goodly to be ſeene,
All dight about with guirland freſh of Wire that foreſt greene.

But now is this little towne in ſpeech and requeſt onely for the pleaſantneſſe and beauty of it ſelfe; and withall for the Kings houſe Iken-hall: which King Henry the Seventh built to bee a retyring place for Prince Arthur, at which time hee granted ſome liberties to Beawdley. But farther from the river banke, Eaſtward is Kidderminſter over againſt it, called alſo Kidelminſter, a faire towne and hath a great Mercate of all commodities, well frequented, parted in twaine by the little river Stowre that runneth through it: and the greateſt ornaments now belonging thereto are first, a passing beautifull church, wherein some of the worshipfull family of the Corkseis lie buried, and the goodly gallant house of the Blounts of Knights degree, descended from those of Kinlet: but in old time this place was of most note for the Lords therof, the Bissets, men in their time right honorable: whose rich possessions being at length dismembred and divided among sisters, came partly to the Barons of Abergevenney and in part to a Lazarhouse of women in Wilt-shire, which one of the said sisters, being her selfe infected with the Leprosie built for them that had the same disease, and enriched it with her owne patrimony and childs part Afterwards it came to haue a Baron, for king Richard the Second created Sir Iohn Beauchamp Steward of his household, Baron Beauchamp of Kidderminster, by letters Patents; and is accounted the first Baron so created. But hee soone after by the Barons (who togither with the Commons rose, and contemning the Kings authority, called as many as were most deere unto the King to giue an account for their misgovernment of the Commonweale) was with other right worthy persons, in malice to the King, condemned and beheaded.

Baron Beauchamp of Kidderminster.

Severn turning his course somewhat awry from thence, saluteth Hertlebury a Castle of the Bishops of Worcester not far distant, & goeth amaine to Holt Castle, so called of a very thick wood there, belonging sometime to the Abtots; after, to the Beauchamps; who springing from William Beauchamp surnamed the Blinde Baron, grew up afterwards to be a most honorable family; the inheritance whereof descended at length to Gyse and Penyston: from hence runneth Severne downe, feeding such a number of fresh water Lampries, as that Nature may seeme in this place to haue made a very pond or Stew for them: such as the Romans deuised in ancient times when they grew lauish in roiotous excesse. These fishes we call Lampries of the Latin word Lampetra, as one would say of licking the rocks, are like to Eeles, slippery and blakish, howbeit beneath on their bellies, somewhat blew: on either side of their throates they receive and let in water at seven holes, for that they want gils altogither. Most commendable they are in the spring time, as being then very sweet: for, in Summer, the inner nerve or string, which stands them in steed of a back bone, waxeth hard. The Italians make them more delicate in tast, by a speciall and peculiar seasoning: For they take a Lamprie and in Malvesy kill it, the mouth they close up with a nutmeg, fill all the holes with as many cloues: and when it is rolled up round, putting thereto filbard-nut kernels stamped, crums of bread, oile, malvesey, and spices, they boyle it with great care and certeine turnings over a soft and temperate fire of coles in a frying pan. But what haue I to doe with such cookery and Apicius?

Hertlebury.

Holt, in old English, woods.

Lampreies.

Beneath Holt, Severn openeth his East banke to let in the river Salwarp comming a pace toward him. This hath his first veines out of Lickey hill most eminent in the North part of this Shire, neare unto which at Frankeley the family of the Litletons was planted by Iohn Litleton, aliàs Westcote the famous Lawier, Iustice in the Kings Bench in the time of King Edward the Fourth, to whose Treatise of Tenures the students of our Common Law are no lesse beholden, than the Civilians to Iustinians Institutes. But to returne: This Salwarp which we speake of runneth downe by Bromesgroue a mercate towne not of the meanest reckoning and not farre from Grafton the seat of a yonger familie of the Talbots, since K. Henry the Seventh gaue it to Sir Gilbert Talbot, a yonger son of Iohn, the Second Earle of Shrewsbury: whom also for his martiall valour and singular wisdome hee admitted into the society of the Order of the Garter, and made Governor of Callis. Then runneth Salwarp downe to Droitwich (Durt-wich some terme it, of the salt pits and the wettish ground on which it standeth, like as Hyetus in Bœtia tooke name of the durty situation) where three fountaines yeelding plenty of water to make salt of, divided a sunder by a little brooke of fresh water passing betweene, by a peculiar gift of nature spring out: out of which most pure white salt is boiled for sixe moneths every yeare, to wit, from Midsommer to Midwinter, in many set fornaces round about. Wherewith what a mighty deale of wood is consumed, Fekenham forest (where trees grew sometime thicker) and the woods round about, if men hold their peace, will by their thinnesse, make manifest more Lideton.

Grafton.

Durt-wich.

Salt springs.

Fekenham-forest.

A more and more. But if I ſhould write that the learned Canoniſt Richard de la Wich Biſhop of Chicheſter, here borne, obteined with his fervent praiers theſe ſalt ſprings out of the bowells of the earth; I feare mee, leaſt ſome might thinke me both over injurious to the providence of God, and alſo too credulous of old wiues traditions. Yet were our anceſtours in their pious devotion ſo haſty of beleefe, that they did not onely give credit hereto, yea and record it in their writings, but in conſideration alſo heereof, yeelded unto that Prelate in ſome ſort divine honour, when Pope Vrban the fourth had for his ſanctity, and ſincere integrity of life canonized him a Saint. But before that evet this Richard was borne, Gervaſe of Tilbury wrot thus of theſe ſalt B ſprings, though not altogether truely. In the Biſhopricke of Worceſter there is a country towne not farre from the City named Wich, in which at the foot of a certaine little hill, there runneth a moſt freſh water: in the banke whereof are ſeene a few pits or wels, of a reſonable depth, and their water is moſt ſalt. When this water is boiled in Caudrons, it becommeth thick and turneth into paſſing white ſalt, and all the Province fetcheth and carrieth it, for that betweene Chriſtmas and the feaſt of S. Iohn Baptiſts Nativity, the water floweth moſt ſalt: The reſt of the yeere it runneth ſomewhat freſh, and nothing good for to make ſalt: and that which I take to be more wonderfull, when this ſalt water is runne ſufficiently for the vſe of the country, ſcarcely overfloweth it to any waſt: Alſo when the time is once come of the ſaltneſſe, the ſame is nothing at all allaied for all the vicinity of the freſh river water, neither is it found in any place neere unto the ſea. Moreover in the very Kings book which C we call Domeſday, we read thus. In Wich the King and Earle have eight ſalt pits, which in the whole weeke wherein they boiled and wrought, yeelded on the Friday ſixteene Bullions.

* Richard de la Wich.

Salwarp having now entertained a ſmale brooke deſcending from Chedeſley, where anciently the family of Foliot flouriſhed, as afterward at Longdon, maketh haſt to Severne which hath not paſſed foure miles farther, before he runs hard by WORCESTER the principall City of this Shire; where he ſeemeth to paſſe with a ſlower ſtream, as it were, admiring, and wondering thereat all the while he paſſeth by: and worthy it is I aſſure you of admiration whether you reſpect either the Antiquity, or the beauty thereof. Certes, for antiquity the Emperour Antonine hath made mention of it D under the name of BRANONIVM, and Ptolomee (in whom through the negligence of the tranſcribers it is miſplaced) under the name of BRANOGENIVM, after which name the Britans call it yet Caer Wrangon. In the Catalogue of Ninnius, it is named Caer Guorangon, and Caer Guorcon, the old Engliſh-Saxons afterward called it Weogaпe-ceaſtep, and Wiре-ceaſtep; I dare not ſay of Wire that woody forreſt which in old time ſtretched farre. Since the Conqueſt, the Latin writers named it Vigornia and Wigornia. Which name Ioſeph the Monke of Exceſter a right elegant Poet in thoſe daies was one of the firſt that uſed (if my memory faile me not:) I meane him that is publiſhed under the name of Cornelius Nepos, in theſe his elegant verſes unto Baldwin E Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Worceſter.

Brangenium.

In numerum iam creſcit honor, te tertia poſcit
Inſula, iam meminit Wigornia, Cantia diſcit,
Romanus meditatur apex, & naufragâ Petri,
Ductorem in mediis expectat cymba procellis.

A mitre third now waits for thee, for ſtill thine honour growes,
Thee Wigorne ſtill remembreth, now Canterbury knowes:
The See of Rome doth thinke of thee, and Peters ſhip in feare
Of wracke, amid the boiſtrous ſtormes expects thee for to ſteare.

Probable it is, that the Romans built it, what time as they planted cities at certain F ſpaces and diſtances along the Eaſt banke of Severn, to keepe in the Britans beyond Severn, like as they did in Germany on the South banke of Rhene to repreſſe the incurſions of the Germans. It ſtandeth, in a place riſing ſomewhat with a gentle aſcent, by the rivers ſide that hath a faire bridge with a tower over it: prowdly bearing it ſelfe in old time, as I finde it written in an ancient Manuſcript roule, of the Romans wall: and even now alſo it is well and ſtrongly walled. But the fame and reputation that it now hath hath, ariseth from the Inhabitants, who are many in number, courteous and wealthy A by the trade of clothing; from their faire and neat houses; from the number also of Churches, but most of all from the bishops See, which Sexwulph Bishop of the Mercians erected there in the yeere of Christ 680. having built a Cathedrall Church at the Southside of the City, which hath beene often repaired, and which the Bishops and Monkes by little and little have drawen out in length Westward, almost to the very brinke of Severn. Truly it is a passing faire and stately building adorned with the Monuments and Tombes of King Iohn, Arthur Prince of Wales, and divers of the Beauchamps; and in these daies, it is no lesse notable by the Deane and Chapter, whom they call Prebendaries placed therein, than it was in times past for the Monkes, or the B Cloister Priests: For, presently upon the first foundation, like as in other religious houses of England, maried Priests were placed heere, who carrying a long time a Maried Priests. great opinion of holinesse governed the Churches, vntill that Dunstane Archbishop Register of Worcester Church. of Canterbury had decreed in a Synode, That from thence forward the religious men in England should liue a single life. For then Oswald Bishop of this City who promoted the

Ann. 964. Monasticall life as busily as any whosoever, remooved the Priests, and brought in Monkes. Which King Eadgar testifieth in these words. The Monasteries as well of Monkes, as of Virgins have beene destroied, and quite neglected throughout England, which I have now determined to repaire to the glory of God, for my soules health, and so to multiply the number of Gods servants and hand-maides. And now already I have set up seven and C forty Monasteries with Monkes and Nunnes in them; and if Christ spare me life so long, I am determined in offering my devout munificence to God, for to proceed to fifty, even the just number of a Iubilee. Wherupon, at this present, that Monastery which the reverend Bishop Oswald in the Episcopall See of Wipe-ceaster-ep amply enlarged to the honour of Mary the holy mother of God, and by casting out those Clerks &c. hath with my assent and favour appointed there Monkes the religious servants of God; I my selfe doe by my royall authority confirme, and by the counsel & consent of my Peeres and Nobles, corroborat and consigne to those religious men living a sole and single life &c. Long time after when the state of the Church and Clergy here, partly by the Danes incursion, and in part by civill dissentiD ons, was so greatly weakened and brought upon the very knees, that in lieu of that multitude of religious persons whom Oswald had heere placed, skarce twelue remai-
S. Wolstan. ned: Wolstan Bishop of this Church about the yeere of the worlds redemption 1090. put to his helping hand, raised it up againe, & brought them to the number of 50. yea and built a new Church for them. Wolstan I say, a man not so learned (the times then were such) but of that simple sincerity without all hypocrisie, so severe also and austere of life, that as he was terrible to the wicked, so he was venerable to the good, and after his death the Church registred him in the number of Saints. But King Henry the Eighth suppressed and expelled the Monks after they had in all plenty and fulnesse lived more than 500. yeeres, and in their roomes he substituted a Deane and Prebendaries, and withall erected a Grammar-schoole for the training up of youth. E
Hard by this Church the bare name and plot of a Castle remaineth, which (as wee read in William of Malmesburies booke of Bishops) Vrsus appointed Sheriffe of Worcestershire by William the Conqueror, built under the very nose and in the mouth well neare of the Monkes, in so much as he cut away from them a part of their Church-yard. But this Castle through the iniquity of time and casualty of fire was consumed many yeeres ago. The City it selfe also hath been burnt more than once: as being set one fire in the yeere of Marianus Huscarles. Christ 1041. by Hardy-Cnute, who exceedingly incensed against the citizens, because they had slaine his Huscarles (for so they tearmed those domesticall gatherers of the Danes tribute) did not onely set fire on the City, but slew the Citizens every mothers sonne, unlesse it were those that saved themselves in Beuerlez an Iland compasF sed in with the river. Howbeit, as we finde written in King William the Conquerors booke, in King Edward the Confessours time, It had many Burgesses, and for fifteene Hides discharged it selfe: when the Mint went, every Minter gave twenty shillings at London for to receive coyning stamps of mony. In the yeere 1113. a skarfire that came no man knew how, burnt the Castle, caught also with the flames to the roofes of the Church.

A Church. Likewiſe in the reigne of Stephen, in the time of civill wars it was twice on fire: but moſt dangerouſly when King Stephen, who had to his owne damage given this City unto Waller and Earle of Mellent, ſeized it into his owne hands: howbeit he was not able at that time to win the Caſtle. Nevertheleſſe it raiſed it ſelfe up againe out of the aſhes in a goodlier forme alwaies than it had before: & flouriſhed in a right good ſtate of civill government, governed by two Bailifes choſen out of 24. Citizens, two Aldermen, and two Chamberlaines, with a Common counſell conſiſting of 48. Citizens. As touching the Geographicall poſition of this Citie, it is diſtant in Longitude from the Weſt Meridian 21. degrees and 52. Minutes: and the B North pole is elevated 52. degrees and 12. Minutes. Anno 15. Stephen R.

From Worceſter the river Severn running on ſtill Southward, paſſeth beſide Powicke, the ſeat in times paſt of Sir Iohn Beauchamp, whom King Henrie the Sixth raiſed up to the ſtate of a Baron: and within a ſmall time, the ſemall heires brought the inheritance to the Willoughbies of Broke, the Reads, and the Lygons: then runneth it through moſt rich and redolent medowes by Hanley Caſtle, belonging ſometimes to the Earles of Gloceſter, and by Vpton a mere cate towne of great name: where peeces of Romane money are often times found. Not farre from hence upon the banke on the right hand, the Severn beholdeth Malvern-Hills, hills in deed or rather great and high mountaines, which for the ſpace of ſeven miles or thereabout, doe as it
C were by degrees riſe higher and higher, dividing this ſhire from the County of Hereford. On the brow of which Hills, Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloceſter did caſt a ditch in times paſt, to make a partition betweene his poſſeſſions & the lands of the Church of Worceſter; a peece of worke which is at this day ſeene not without wonder. Over againſt thoſe hils, and in like diſtance almoſt from the other banke, Bredon Hills being far leſſe, yet in emulation, as it were, to match them, mount aloft: among which Elmſley Caſtle belonging ſometimes to Vrſus or Vrſo D' Abtot maketh a goodly ſhew: by whoſe daughter and heire Emeline, it came hereditarily to the Beauchamps. At the foote of theſe hils lieth Bredon a village, concerning the Monaſterie whereof Offa King of the Mercians ſaith thus: I Offa King of the Mercians will give land containing D ſeven times five acres of Tributaries unto the Monaſterie that is named Breodun in the Province of the Wiccij, and to the Church of bleſſed Saint Peter Prince of the Apoſtles there and in that place ſtanding, which Church Eanwulph my grandfather erected to the praiſe and glory of the everliving God. Barons de Powicke. Hanley. Vpton. Malvern-hilles. Bredon hilles. Elmeſley caſtle. Bredon. The booke of Worceſter.

Under theſe Bredon hils Southward you ſee two villages named Waſhborns (whence came the ſurname to a very ancient and worſhipfull family in this tract) ſtanding in a parcell of this province diſmembred as it were from the reſt of the bodie: of which kind there be other parcels heere and there ſkattering all about. But what ſhould be the cauſe, I am not able to reſolve, unleſſe haply thoſe that in old time were governours, adjoined to their government their owne lands that lay neere unto the regi-
E on which they then governed. Now Avon, from above runneth downe and ſpeeds himſelfe to Severn, who in this ſhire watereth Eoveſham, ſo called, as the Monkes write, of one Eoves, Swinheard to Egwin Biſhop of Worceſter, whereas before time, the name of it was Eath-home and Heath-field. A very proper towne ſituate upon an hill ariſing from the river: in the Suburb, as it were, whereof, was ſometime Bengeworth Caſtle at the bridge head; which Caſtle William de Audevili the Abbot recovered by law againſt William Beauchamp, utterly raſed it, and cauſed the place to be hallowed for a Church-yard. A towne this is, well knowen by reaſon of the Abbay, which that noble Egwin, with the helpe of King Kenred the ſonne of Wolpher King of the Mercians founded about the yeere of our Lord 700: knowen likewiſe for the vale un-
F der it, named thereof, The vale of Eueſham, which for plentifull fertilitie hath well deſerved to be called the Garnary of all theſe countries; ſo good and plentifull is the ground in yeelding the beſt corne abundantly. But moſt knowen in elder time by occaſion of the great overthrow of the Barons and our Catiline, Simon Montfort, Earle of Leiceſter. For, this man being of a lewd diſpoſition and profound perfidiouſneſſe, hath taught us that which another truly ſaid, That good turnes are ſo long acceptable, as they

Waſhborne. Parcels of ſhires ſevered from the reſt of the body. Eoueſham. The booke of Eveſham monaſtery. About the yeere 1157. The vale of Eveſham. Simon Montfort, they may be requitable. For, when King Henrie the Third had with full hand heaped upon him all the benefits he could, yea and given him his owne sister in marriage, what other fruit reaped he of his so great bounty, but most bitter and deadly hatred; For, he raised a most dangerous warre, hee spoiled shamefully a great part of England; under pretense of restoring the common-wealth and maintaining liberty: neither left he any thing vndone, to bring the King under, to change the State, and of a Monarchie to bring in an Oligarchie. But in the end, after that fortune had for a good while favourably smiled vpon him, he was slaine at this place with many others of his complices by the prowesse of Prince Edward: and forthwith, the stinke of lawlesse rebels, being as it were pumped and emptied out of the common-weale, joifull peace which hee had banished, shone againe most comfortably on every side. Upon the same river hard by, standeth Charleton, the possession sometime of the ancient familie of Hansacres, Knights, but now of the Dinleies or Dingleies, who being descended from that ancient stocke of the Dinleies in Lancashire, came vnto this by hereditary succession. More beneath, in the primitive Church of our English nation, there was another place wherein religious men lived to God, then called Fleobanbyrig, now, Flatbury: and neere unto it Pershor, in the English Saxons language, Pepincopan, taking the name from Peares: which, as we read in that worthy Historiographer William of Malmesburie, Egelward Duke of Dorset, a man bearing no nigardly mind, but exceeding liberall, founded and finished in King Eadgars time. But what detriment hath it sustained? one part of it the ambition of the rich seised upon, another part oblivion hath buried; but the greatest portion King Edward the Confessour, and King William bestowed upon the Church of Westminster.

Charleton.

Flatbury. Pershor.

Then receiveth Avon a riveret from the North, vpon which standeth Hodington, a seat of the Winters, out of which were Robert Winter and his brother Thomas, who when as they were of the hellish damned crew in the Gunpouder treason, let their memory lie damned. From thence Avon running gently downe by Strensham the habitation of the Russels, Knights by degree, of ancient descent, in the end out-lades his owne streame into Severn.

Neere to these places, on this South-side, is Oswaldslaw Hundred, so called of Oswald Bishop of Worcester, who obtained it for himselfe of King Eadgar. The immunity whereof, when William Conquerour made a survey and taxation of all England, was registred in the Domesday booke, after this maner: The Church of Saint Mary of Wircester hath the Hundred called Oswaldslaw wherein lie 300. Hides, out of which the Bishop of the same Church by ancient order and custome hath all the revenewes of Soches and all customes or duties there, appertaining to the Lords victuall, and the Kings service and his owne: so that no Sherife may hold there any action or suit, neither in any plea nor in any other cause whatsoever. This witnesseth the whole Countie.

Oswaldslaw Hundred.

A place there is about this shire, but precisely where it should be, is not certainly knowen, called Augustynes-ac, that is, Augustines oke, at which Austine the Apostle of the Englishmen & the Bishops of Britaine met, and after they had disputed and debated the matter hotely for a good while, touching the celebration of Easter, preaching Gods word also to the English nation, and of administring Baptisme according to the rites of the Romane Church, in the end when they could not agree they departed on both sides with discontented minds, vpon their dissenting opinions.

Augustines oke.

Anno Christi 603.

This Province since the Normans comming in, had for the first Sheriffe, Vrsus or Vrso de Abtot, unto whom and his heires, King William the Conquerour granted that office together with faire and large possessions. After him succeeded his sonne Roger, who (as William of Malmesbury the Historiographer reporteth) enioying his fathers possessions, through the high displeasure and indignation of King Henrie the first was disseized thereof, because in a furious fit of anger he had commanded one of the Kings officers to be killed. But this Sherifedome was by Emeline this Rogers sister, translated hereditarily into the family of the Beauchamps. For, she was married to Walter Beauchamp, whom King Stephen, after he had put downe Miles of Gloceſter, ordained Constable of England. Within some few yeeres King Stephen created Walleran Earle of Mellent Earles of Worcester. Or, D'abtot.

twin-brother

A twin-brother to Robert Bossu Earle of Leicester, the first Earle of Worcester, having given unto him the Citie of Worcester: who afterwards became a Monke and died at Pratellæ in Normandie, in the yeere 1166. As for his sonne Robert, who had wedded the daughter of Reginald Earle of Cornwall, and advanced the Standard of rebellion against King Henrie the second, and Peter his sonne, who in the yeere 1203. revolted to the French, neither of them vsed the title of Worcester, but onely of Mellent, so farre as ever I could yet read. For King Henrie the Second who succeeded Stephen, would not easily suffer that any under him should enjoy the honors received from Stephen an vsurper, and his enimie. For (as I find in the Annales of Waverley Abbay) hee put downe those imaginary and counterfait Earles, among whom King B Stephen had inconsideratly distributed, and given away all the revenewes pertaining to the Exchequer. Neither to my knowledge, was there any one that bare the title of the Earldome of Worcester, untill the daies of King Richard the Second. For he bestowed it upon Sir Thomas Percy, who, when he conspired against King Henrie the Fourth, was taken at the battaile of Shrewsbury, & there beheaded. Then Sir Richard Beauchamp descended from the Abtots, received afterward this honor at the hands of King Henrie the Fifth. Who shortly after in the French warre lost his life at the siege of Meaux in Brye, leaving one onely daughter married to Sir Edward Neuil, from whom descended the late Lords of Abergevenny. Afterward King Henrie the Sixth created Iohn Tiptoft, Earle of Worcester: But when he presently taking part with C King Edward the Fourth, had applied himselfe in a preposterous obsequiousnesse to the humor of the said King, and being made Constable of England plaied the part, as it were, of the butcher in the cruell execution of diverse men of qualitie, himselfe, when as King Henry the Sixth was now repossessed of the crowne, came to the block. Howbeit, his sonne Edward recovered that honor when King Edward recovered his Kingdome: But after that this Edward died without issue, and the inheritance became divided among the sisters of the said Iohn Tiptoft Earle of Worcester, of whom one was married to the Lord Roos, an other to Sir Edmund Ingoldesthorpe, and the third to the Lord Dudley; Sir Charles Somerset naturall sonne to Henrie Duke of Somerset, Lord Herbert, & Lord Chamberlaine to King Henrie the Eighth, was by him created Earle of Worcester. After whom succeeded in lineall descent, Henrie, William, and Edward who now flourisheth, and among other laudable parts of vertue and nobility, highly fauoureth the studies of good literature. D

Robert de Monte.

Orig. 1. H. 7. R. 36.

There are in this Shire Parishes 152.

E

STAFFORD-

F

A Edwin brother to Robert Earle of Leicester, the ninth Earle of Worcester, having Robert de Meulent.
given unto him the Citie of Worcester: who afterwards became a Monke and died at Pratell in Normandie, in the yeere 1166. After him Robert, who had wedded the daughter of Reginald Earle of Cornwall, and advanced the Standard of rebellion against King Henrie the second, and Peter his sonne, who in the yeere 1205.
revolted to the French, neither of them vsed the stile of Worcester, but onely of Meulen, to farre as ever I could yet read. For King Henrie the Second who fuc-ded Stephen, would not easily suffer that any vnder him should enioy the honors received from Stephen an vsurper, and his enimie. For (as I find in the Annales of Waverley Abbay) before that time they had many iarres and contentions betweene King
B Stephen and him, vntill that, and euen after all the yeeres of reigning to the Excellent. Neither to my knowledge, was there any one that bare the title of the Earldome of Worcester, vntill the daies of King Richard the Second. For he bestowed it vpon Sir Thomas Percy, who, when he conspired against King Henrie the Fourth, was taken at the battaile of Shrewsbury, & there beheaded. Then Sir Richard Beauchamp deriended from the Berkeys, received afterward this honor at the hands of King Henrie the fifth. Who shortly after in the French warre lost his life at the Siege of Meaux in Brie, leaving one only daughter married to Sir Edward Nevil, from whom deriended the late Lords of Abergavenny. Afterward King Henrie the Sixth created Iohn Talbot, Earle of Worcester: But when he prelently after losing part with C King Edward the Fourth, had applied himselfe in a preposterous sort vnto the vnfortunate humor of the said King, and being made Constable of England plaied the part, as it were, of the butcher in the cruell execution of diverse men of qualitie, himselfe, when as King Henry the Sixth was now restalled of the crowne, came to the block.
Howbeit, his sonne Edward recovered that honor when King Edward recovered his Kingdome: But after that this Edward died without issue, and the inheritance became divided among the sisters of the said John Talbot Earle of Worcester, of whom Ong. Hal. 7. R. 3.
one was married to the Lord Awdley, another to Sir Edward Ingelthorpe, and the third to the Lord Dudley, Sir Charles Somerset afterwards Sonne to Henrie Duke of Som-D set Lord Herbert, & Lord Chamberlaine to King Henrie the Eighth was by him created Earle of Worcester. After whom succeeded in like all decent, Henrie, William, and Edward who now flourisheth, and among other laudable parts of vertue and nobility, highly fauoureth the studies of good literature.

Occiden

SALOPIÆ PARS

Sabrina flu:

Bridgenorth

Severn flu:

Worvile

Newport

Morf flu:

Morf forrest

Shifnall

Woodcote

Sherifshales

Burlaton

Stocton

Aucley

Gattaker

Clauerley

Baningall

Areley

Shipley

Albrighton

Wotton Vnder Lizard

Highbon

Shitterforde

Compton

Euill

Tong ca

Blimhill

Churchcat

Beaudleau

Bublington

Pattes hill

Pepper hill

Kinver

Season

Ligh

Overley

Patingham

High

Stour flu:

A

B

Pink flu:

Whittenton

Warttsley

Houghton

Sturton cast

Trisull

Trescot

Parton

Aston cha

Hilton

Kiddermister

Codsall

Brindley

Henley

Nether Pen

Stafford ca

Churchill

Wamborne

Tetnall

Chillington

Capley

Billington cha

Burton

Prestwood

Ouer Pen

Penforde

Brewood

Ingleton

Sturbridge

Kingswinforde

Bishbury

Cotten

Dunston

Bromc

Russell

Wolver hamton

Sharshull

Penbridge

Acton

STAFFORDIÆ PARS

Sedgley

Hilton hall

Pillaton hall

Boswich

Dudley

Bilston

Esington

Worley m

Cank Wood

Bednoll

Dudley cast:

Wilnall

Tipton

Weddsbury

Worley parua

Rowley

Cank

Brocton

Halesowen

W Bromewich

Bloxwich

Morton

Shugborow

Oldbury cha:

Sandwall

Pelsall chap:

Haddensforde

Weley

Wartley hall

Smethik

Hemsted

Walsall

Lacraft

Beaudesert

Honsworth

Barr chapell

Aldidge

Hamerwich

Charley

Owsley br:

Bishton

Harborne

Aston

Perry hall

Fowderley

Riddsley

Chestall

Edial

Longon

Bruerton

Coulton

Eghaston

Brimingham

Aston yua

Chesterfelde

Farwell

Armitage

Hill ridware

Hamstell Ridware

Broughton hill

Wall

Handsaker

Varnton

Shenton

Sutton Cofelde

Lichfelde

Kings bramley

Piperidware

Thickbrome

Swinfeldehall

Newhall

Wisshaw

Weforde

Orgrave

Stretley hall

Yoxhall

Colshull

Midleton

Hintes

Longer

Whittenton

Fisshrike

Need

Alderwas

Wichnor

Maxtoke cast:

Brayton hassett

Hopwas

Borton und needwood

Elsforde

Holt

Watling Street

Tamworth

Cumberforde

Croxhall

Newholde

Catnell

Harlaston

Haunton

Branston

Cliston

Drakelow

Stotfelde

Childecote

Burton

Thorp

Sekington

Hoggsnorton

Scala Miliarium

1 2 3 4 5 6

William kip Sculpsitt

Anker flu:

LECESTRIÆ PARS

Orien

STAFFORDIÆ COMITATVS PARS olim Cornauiorum

Nomina hundredorum
In hoc comitatu
A Seisdon Hundred.
B Cudlston Hundred.
C Pirchill Hundred.
D Offlow Hundred.
E Totmonslow Hundred.

CESTRIÆ PARS

IÆ PARS

Septentrio

A

STAFFORD-SHIRE.

THE third region of the old CORNAVII, now called STAFFORD-SHIRE, in the English Saxons language Staurono-rcyne, the inhabitants whereof because they dwelt in the middest of England, are in Bede termed Angli Mediterranei, that is, Midland Englishmen, having on the East Warwick-shire and Darby-shire, on the South side Worcester-shire, and Westward Shropp-shire bordering upon it, reacheth from South to North in forme of a Lozeng, broader in the middest and growing narrower at the ends. The North part is full of hils and so lesse fruitfull: the middle being watered with the river Trent is more plentifull, clad with woods and embrodered galantly with corne fields and medowes: as is the South part likewise, which hath coles also digged out of the earth and mines of Iron. But whether more for their commoditie or hinderance, I leaue to the inhabitants who doe, or shall best understand it.

Midland Englishmen.

B

Iron.

C

In the South part in the verie confines with VVorcester-shire upon the river Stour standeth Stourton Castle, sometimes belonging to the Earles of VVarwicke, the natall place of Cardinall Pole; and then Dudley Castle towereth up upon an hill built and named so of one Dudo, or Dodo an English Saxon, about the yeere of our salvation 700. In King VVilliam the Conquerors daies, as we finde in his Domesday Booke, William Fitz-Ausculph possessed it: afterwards it fell to noble men surnamed Somery; and by an heire generall of them to Sir Richard Sutton knight descended from the Suttons of Nottingham-shire: whose posterity commonly called from that time Lords of Dudley, but summoned to Parliament first by king Henry the Sixth, grew up to a right honorable familie.

Dudley castle.

D

Under this lieth Pensneth chace, in former times times better stored with game; wherein are many cole-pits, in which, as they reported to me, there continueth a fire begunne by a candle long since through the negligence of a grover or digger. The smoke of this fire, and sometime the flame is seene, but the savour oftener smelt: and other the like places were shewed unto me not farre off. North-west-ward upon the confines of Shropshire, I saw Pateshull a seat of the Astleis descended from honorable progenitours; and Wrotesley an habitation of a race of Gentlemen so surnamed, out of which Sir Hugh Wrotesley, for his approved valor, was chosen by K. Edward the Third knight of the Garter, at the first institution, and so accounted one of the founders of the said honorable Order. Next after this, the memorable places that we meet with in this tract, more inwardly, are these, Chellington, a faire house and mannour of the ancient familie of the Giffards: which in the reigne of Henry the Second Peter Corbuchin gaue to Peter Giffard, upon whom also Richard Strongbow, that Conquerour of Ireland, bestowed in free gift Tachmelin and other possessions in Ireland. Theotenhall, which is by interpretation, The habitation of Heathens, or Pagans, at this day Tetnall embrued with Danish bloud in the yeere 911. by king Edward the elder in a bloudy battaile. Vlfrunes Hampton, so called of Wulfruna a most godly and devout woman, who enriched the town (called before simply Hampton) with a religious house: and so for Wulfrunes-hampton it is corruptly called Wulver Hampton: The greatest name and note whereof, ariseth by the Colledge there, annexed to the Deane of Windsor. Weadesbury, in these daies Weddsborrow fortified in old time, by Aethelfled Lady of the Mercians: and Walshall a mercate towne, none of the meanest. Neere into which the river Tame carrieth his streame, which rising not farre off, for certaine miles wandereth through the East part of this shire seeking after Trent, neere into Drailon Basset, the seat of the Bassets, who springing out from

E

Chellington. Giffards.

*

Tetnall.

Wolverhampton.

F

Weddsborrow.

Tame river.

Drailon Basset.

Basſets. Turſtan Lord of this place in the reigne of Henrie the firſt, branched forth into a great and notable familie. For, from hence as from a ſtocke flouriſhed the Baſſets of Welleden, of Wiccomb, of Sapcot, of Cheddle, and others. But of this of Drayton, Raulph was the laſt, who beeing a right renowned Baron had married the ſiſter of Iohn Mont-fort duke of Britain, and in the reigne of Richard the Second died without iſſue. A

Tamworth. Then Tame paſſing through the bridge at Falkeſley (over which an ancient high way of the Romans went) runneth hard under Tamworth, in the Saxon tongue Tamaweopð, Marianus calleth it Tamawordia, a towne ſo placed in the confines of the two ſhires, that the one part which belonged ſometime to the Marmions, is counted of Warwick-ſhire, the other which perteined to the Haſtings, of Stafford-ſhire. As for the name, it is taken from Tame the river running beſide it, and of the Engliſh Saxon word Weorð, which ſignifieth a Barton, Court, or Ferme-houſe, and alſo, an Holme or River-yland, or any place environed with water: ſeeing that Keyſerwert and Bomelſwert in Germanie, betoken as much as Cæſars Iſle and Bomels Iſle. Whiles the Mercians kingdome ſtood in ſtate, this was a place of their Kings reſiance and as wee finde in the Lieger Booke of Worceſter, a towne of very great reſort and paſſing well frequented. Afterward, when in the Danes warre it was much decaied, Aethelfled the Lady of Mercia repaired and brought it againe to the former ſtate: alſo Edith King Eadgars daughter, who refuſing marriage, for the opinion that went of her for holineſſe was regiſtred in the roll of Saints, founded here a little houſe for Nuns or veiled Virgins, which after ſome yeeres, was tranſlated to Polleſworth by the Marmions of Normandie, Lords hereof; at what time they erected heere a Colegiat Church, wherein are ſeene ſome of their ſepulchres; and builded a faire Caſtle, which from them by the Frevills came to the houſe of thoſe Ferrars, that deſcended from a younger brother of the Barons Ferrars of Groby. Thoſe Marmions as wee finde written, were by inheritance the kings Champions of England. For whenſoever any new King of England is crowned, the heire of this familie was bound to ride armed in complet harneis upon a barbd horſe into the Kings hall, and in a ſet forme of words challenge to combat with whoſoever durſt oppoſe himſelf againſt the Kings right and title. And verily it appeareth upon Records, that Alexander Frevil, under King Edward the Third, by the ſame ſervice, held this Caſtle. Howbeit at the Coronation of king Richard the Second, when Baldwin Frevil exhibited his petition for the ſame, it was ajudged from this familie to Sir Iohn Dimock his competitor, deſcended alſo from Marmion, as producing better Records and evidences. B

The Kings Champion.

See in Lincoln-ſhire.

Inqui. 2. E. 3. C D

Watling ſtreet. At Falkeſley bridge aforeſayd (that I may retyre a little) that Romane High way Watling ſtreet, of which I haue already ſpoken and muſt often ſpeake, entreth into this ſhire, and cutting it through (as it were by a ſtreight line) goeth Weſtward into Shropp-ſhire. Which ſtreete I haue I aſſure you throughly viewed and peruſed, to finde out that ETOCETVM which Antonine the Emperour ſetteth downe for the next ſtation from MANVESSEDVM or Manceſter in Warwick-ſhire: and ſurely by good happe I haue now found it; and freely confeſſe that heretofore I was farre wide and quite out of the way. For, juſt at the ſame diſtance that Antonine ſetteth betweene MANVESSEDVM, and ETOCETVM, I lighetd upon the carkaſſe of an old little towne upon the ſaid High way, and ſcarce a mile Southward from Lichfield, a Biſhops See right well knowne. The name of the place at this daie is in our common language, Wall, of the reliques of an old wall there remaining and taking up much about two acres of ground, which they call, Caſtle croft, as one would ſay the Caſtle field. Over againſt which on the other ſide of the ſtreete the inhabitants relate by a tradition from their forefathers, that there ſtood an ancient towne, deſtroied long before the Conqueſt. And they ſhewe the verie place, where by the maine foundation they gheſſe the Temple there ſtood, and with all they produce peeces of money, coined by the Romane Emperors and found there, as moſt certaine teſtimonies in this behalfe. But (that which maketh moſt for the proofe hereof) from hence leadeth the Romane way called Watling ſtreete, with a faire

Etocetum. E

Wall. F

A a faire, apparent, and continued cauſey, in maner, throughout, untill it bee broken off with the river Penck, and hath upon it a Stone-bridge at PENNOCRVCIVM, ſo named of the river, juſt at the ſame diſtance that Antonine ſetteth downe. Which hath not yet laied away ſo much as the name, for in ſteed of PENNOCRVCIVM it is now called Penck-ridge. But at this day it is little better than a village, famous for an horſe faire which the Lord of the place Hugh Blunt, obtained of King Edward the Second. From hence, that way hath nothing memorable upon it in this ſhire, but a little way off is Brewood a mercat towne, where the Biſhops of this Dioceſe had an habitation before the Conqueſt: and then neere unto Weſton is
B a cleere poole ſpred very broad, by which that notable way holdeth on a direct courſe to Oken-Yate in Shrop-ſhire. Penck-ridge.

Now are wee to viſite the middle part of this ſhire which Trent watereth: in the deſcription whereof, I purpoſe to follow the courſe and windings of the river, from the very ſpring and head thereof, as my beſt guide. Trent that by his due right cha- The river Trent.
lengeth to himſelfe the third place among all the rivers of England, runneth out of two fountaines beeing neere neighbours together in the North part of this ſhire among the moores. Certaine unskilfull, and idle headed, haue dreamed that it was ſo named of Trent a French word that ſignifieth Thirty, and thereupon alſo haue feigned, that thirty rivers runne into it, and as many kindes of fiſhes liue therein, the
C names whereof the people dwelling thereby were wont to ſing in an Engliſh rhime: neither make they doubt to aſcribe that unto this Trent, which the Hungarians avouch of their river Tibiſcus, namely, that two parts of it are water, and the third fiſh.

From thoſe moores Trent trickleth downe firſt Southward fetching many a compaſſe, not farre from New caſtle under Lime, ſo called of another more ancient Caſtle New caſtle under Lyme.
that flouriſhed in times paſt hard by at Cheſterton under Lime: where I ſaw tottered and torne the walls of a Caſtle; which by the gift of King Iohn, belonged firſt unto Ranulph Earle of Cheſter, and afterwards by the bounteous favour of king Henrie the Third, unto the houſe of Lancaſter. Thence by Trent-ham, ſometime Trentham.
Tricing-ham, a little monaſterie of that holy virgin Saint Werburg of the bloud roi-
D all, hee haſteneth to Stone a mercat towne, which having the beginning in the Stone.
Saxons time, tooke that name of the Stones, that our Anceſters after a ſolemne ſort had caſt on a heape to notifie the place where Wolpher that heatheniſh king of the Mercians, moſt cruelly ſlew his two ſonnes Wulfald and Rufin, becauſe they had taken upon them the profeſſion of Chriſtianity.

In which place when poſterity in memoriall of them had conſecrated a little Church, ſtreight waies there aroſe and grew up a towne, which of thoſe ſtones, had the name Stone given unto it, as the Hiſtorie of Peterborrough hath recorded. Beyond Stone runneth Trent mildly by Sandon, the ſeat in times paſt of the Staffords, moſt worthie knights, but lately by inheritance from them, of Sampſon Erdeſ- Erdeſwick.
E wick, a verie great lover, and diligent ſearcher of venerable Antiquity, and in this regard no leſſe worthy of remembrance than for that he is directly in the male line deſ- Names altered according to divers habitations.
cended from Sir Hugh Vernon Baron of Shipbroc, the name beeing changed, by the uſe of that age according to ſundrie habitations, firſt into Holgraue, and afterwards into Erdeſwicke.

Heere Trent turneth his courſe aſide Eaſtward, and on the South hath Canocwood, commonly called Cankwood, ſpred farre and wide, and at length inter- Cankwood.
teineth the river Sow, which breaketh out in a hard country neere Healy Caſtle, built by the Barons of Aldalegh, or Audley, unto whom Hervey Lord Stafford gaue L L. Audley.
that place; like as Theobald Verdon, gaue Aldelegh it ſelfe.

F This hath beene a familie of high reſpect and great honour, and of the ſame ſtem out of the which the Stanleies Earles of Darby deriue their deſcent. Strange it is to read, what lands King Henry the Third confirmed unto Henry Audeley, which were beſtowed upon him by the bountie of the Peres, yea & private Gentlemen, not onely in England but alſo in Ireland, where Hugh Lacy Earle of Ulſter gaue him lands with the Conſtableſhip of Ulſter. So that doubtleſſe he was either a man of rare vertue, or A a gracious fauourite, or a great Lawyer; or elſe all iointly. His poſteritie matched in mariage with the heires of the Lord Giffard of Brimsfeild, of Baron Martin Lord of Kei- meis, and Barſtaple; and a younger brother of this houſe with one of the heires of the Earle of Gloceſter, and was by King Edward the Third created Earle of Gloceſter.

About which time Iames Lord Audley flouriſhed in chiualrie, who (as the French write) being grieuouſly wounded in the battaile at Poitiers, when the blacke Prince with many comfortable commendations had given him 400. markes of yeerely revenues; he beſtowed the ſame forthwith vpon his foure Eſquiers, who alwaies valiantly attended him, and ſatisfied the Prince, doubting that his gift was too little for ſo great B ſervice, with this anſwere, dutifully acknowledging his bountie: It is meete that I doe well for them who deſerved beſt of me. Theſe my Eſquiers ſaued my life amidſt my enemies:
And God be thanked, my anceſtors haue left me ſufficient reuenues to maintaine me in your ſervice. Whereupon the Prince approving this prudent liberality, both confirmed his gift to his Eſquiers, & aſſigned him moreover lands to the valew of ſix hundred Marks yeerely. But by his daughter one of the coheires to her brother, the title of Lord Audley came afterward to the Touchets, and in them continueth. Neither muſt I heere paſſe over in ſilence an houſe in this tract called Gerards Bromley, both for the magnificence thereof, and alſo becauſe it is the principall ſeat of Sir Thomas Ge- rard, whom King Iames in the firſt yeere of his reigne created Baron Gerard of C Gerards Bromley.

This Sow as it were a parallel river unto Trent runneth even with him, & keeping an equall diſtance ſtill from him, by Chebſey, which had in times paſt for Lords thereof Haſtange. the Haſtangs reputed among the prime Nobilitie in the time of King Edward the firſt; nor farre from Eccleſhall the habitation of the Biſhop of Lichfeld, and Ellenhall
Noel. which was ſometime the ſeat of the Noels a worſhipfull houſe, who founded heere a Harcourt. Monaſterie at Raunton, and from whom it deſcended hereditarily to the Harcourts, who being of the ancient Norman nobility, flouriſhed a long time in great dignitie.
But yet of the male heires of the Noels there remaine ſtill Sir Edward Noel of Dalby in Leiceſter-ſhire, and the Noels of Wellesborow in Leiceſter-ſhire, with others. Then run- D
Stafford. neth Sow under Stafford, in times paſt called Statford, and before time Betheney, Cap graue. where Bertelin reputed a very holy man led in ancient times an Eremits life in ſer-ving God. And King Edward the Elder built on the South banke of the river a Ca-Marianus. ſtell in the yeere of Chriſt 914. What time as King William the Conquerour regiſtred the ſurvey of all England, as we read in his Domeſday Booke, The King had in it onely 18. Burgeſſes in his owne domaine, and 20. manſions of the honor of the Earle: it paid for all cuſtomes nine pounds of deniers, and had thirteene Chanons, Præbendaries who held in franke Almoine: and the King commanded a Caſtle to bee made, which now is deſtroy-
ed. But then, as now alſo, it was the head towne of the whole Shire: howbeit the greateſt credite and honor thereof came from Stafford Caſtle adjoining, which the E Barons of Stafford, of whoſe progenie were the Dukes of Buckingham, built for their owne ſeat, who procured of King Iohn that it was made a Burrough with ample liberties, cauſed it to be partly fenſed with a wall, and erected a Priorie of Blacke chanons to the honor of Saint Thomas of Canterbury: Beneath which, the riveret Penke, which gave name to Pennocrucium or Penkridg, whereof I have already ſpoken, joineth with that Sow aforeſaid. And neere unto the confluence of Sow and Trent ſtandeth Ticks hall, the dwelling place of the Aſtons, a family which for anti-Ticks hall. quity, kinred and alliance, is in theſe parts of great name.

Trent having harboured theſe rivers in his chanell, paſſeth now through the mids
Chartley. of the Shire with a gentle ſtreame, taking a view of Chartley Caſtle ſtanding two F miles aſide from the banke on the left hand: which Caſtle came from Raulph
Earle of Cheſter, who built it, unto the Ferrars by Agnes his ſiſter, whom L.L. Ferrars William Ferrars Earle of Darby had married: out of whoſe race the Lords of Chartley. Ferrars of Chartley flouriſhed: and Anne the daughter of the laſt of them brought

A brought this honour as her dowry unto Sir Walter D' Eureux her husband: from whom Robert D' Eureux Earle of Essex and Lord Ferrars of Chartley is lineally descended.

On the right side of the river about the same distance, standeth most pleasantly among the woods, Beaudesert, the lodge in times past of the Bishops of Lichfield, but now the house of the L. Paget. For Sir William, Paget, who for his approved wisdom both at home and abroad, stood in high favour with King Henrie the Eighth, & King Edward the Sixth, and obteined at their hands faire possessions, was by the said King Edward the Sixth created Lord Paget of Beaudesert. He was (that I may note so much B out of his Epitaph) Secretarie, and privie Counsellour to King Henry the Eighth, and appointed by his Testament Counsellour and aidor to king Edward the Sixth, during his minority. To whom he was Chauncellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster, Controller of the house, and by him made, as I said, Baron, and knight of the Garter, as by Queene Marie Lord Privy Seale: Whose grandsonne William is now the fourth Baron Paget: and for his vertue and studies of the best arts, is an honour to his house, and in this respect deserveth to be honorably remembred.

Beaudesert. L. L. Paget.

From thence may you descrie Lichfield, scarce foure miles from this right-side bank of Trent. Bede calleth it Licidfeld, which Rosse of Warwick interpreteth, Cadaverum campus, that is, The field of dead bodies, & reporteth that a number of Christians were there C martyred under the persecutor Diocletian. This City is low seated, of a good largenes and faire withal, divided into two parts with a shallow poole of cleere water: which parts notwithstanding joyne in one by the meanes of two bridges or causeies made over, that haue their sluces to let out the water. The South part, which is on the hither side is the greater, consisting of divers streets, hath in it the schole, & an hospital of S. Iohn, founded for reliefe of the poore. The farther part is the lesse, but beautified with a very goodly Cathedrall Church, which beeing round about compassed with a faire wall castle-like, and garnished beside with faire houses of Prebendaries, and with the Bishops palace also, doth mount up on high with three pyramids or spires of stone making an excellent shew, and for elegant, and proportionall building yeeld- D deth to few Cathedrall Churches.

Lichfield.

In this place many ages past, a bishops See was established, for in the 606. yeere after the worlds redemption, Oswie King of Northumberland, having vanquished the Mercians, as then Pagans, for the propagation of Christs true religion, built heere a Church, and ordeined Duina the first bishop: whose successours found such favour at their Princes hand, that they had not onely the prehemince among all the bishops of the Mercians, and the greatest possessions given unto them for their use, as Cankwood or Canock a very great wood, and other faire lands and Lordships; but also this Church had an Archbishop that sat in it, namely Eadulph, unto whom Pope Adrian granted an Archiepiscopall Pall, and subjected under him all E the Bishoppes of the Mercians and East Angles; mooved thereunto with golden reasons by Offa King of the Mercians, to spite Lambert the Archbishop of Canterbury, who had promised to aide Charles the Great, if hee would invade England. But this Archiepiscopall dignity died together with Offa and Eadulph. But, among all the Bishops of this See * Chadd was of greatest fame, and canonized a Saint for his holinesse, who, as Bede saith, when riotous excesse had not yet possessed the hearts of Bishops, made himselfe a mansion house standing not farre remote from the Church, wherein hee was wont secretly to pray and reade, together with a few, that is to say, seven or eight religious men, as oft as hee had any vacant time from painefull preaching and ministery of the word unto the people. In those daies, Lichfield was a small F towne farre short of the frequency of Cities; the Country about it full of woods: and a little river runneth hard by it. The Church was seated in a narrow roome, evidently shewing the meane estate and abstinence of our ancestours. When as in the Synode holden in the yeere of our Lord 1075. it was forbidden that Bishops Sees should lie obscure in meane and small townes, Peter Bishop of Lichfield translated his See to Chester: but Robert Linsey his successour removed the same unto Coventry.

About the yeere. 779. History of Rochester. * Cedda.

Wil. Malmesbur. A.

A little after, Roger Clinton brought it backe againe to Lichfield, and beganne to build in the yeere of Christ 1148. this most beautifull Church in the honour of the blessed virgin Mary at Saint Ceda, or Chad: and repaired the Castle which now is vtterly vanished. As for the towne, it was made first an Incorporation in our fathers remembrance by king Edward the Sixth, by the name of Baliffs & Burgesses. It seeth the Pole Artick elevated two and fiftie degrees and two and fortie minutes; and from the farthest point of the West counteth one and twenty degrees and twenty minutes. This Poole of Lichfield beeing by and by kept and restreined within bankes, and spreading broader the second time, but gathering againe into a chanell is quickly swallowed into Trent, who continueth his course East-ward, untill hee meeteth with the river of Tame from the South: with whom Trent being now coupled, turneth aside his streame Northward through places that yeeld great store of Alabaster, that hee might the sooner entertaine Dow, and so almost insulateth or encompasseth Burton, a towne in times past of name, by reason of workers in Alabaster, a Castle of the Ferrars built in the Conquerors time, an ancient Abbay founded by Vlfrick Spot Earle of Mercia, and the retyring place of Modwen that holy Irish woman, who there dedicated her selfe first to the service of God. Concerning which Abbay, the Leger-Booke of Abingdon recordeth thus. A certaine servitour of King Ætheldred named Ulfrick Spot, built the Abbay of Burton, and gaue unto it al the inheritance that came by his father, esteemed worth seaven hundred pounds, and that this his donation might stand good and sure, he gaue unto King Ætheldred three hundred Mankus of gold for his confirmation, and to every Bishop fiue mankus, and beside to Alfrick Archbishop of Canterbury, the towne Dumbleton. Whereby we may understand, that there was a golden world then, and that gold swaied much yea in Church matters, and among church men. In this Abbay, the said Modwen, whose holinesse was much celebrated in this tract, lay buried, and upon her tombe were engraven for an Epitaph these verses.

Alabaster. Burton upon Trent.

Who also it named Modwen.

1004

Ortum Modwennæ dat Hibernia, Scotia finem.
Anglia dat tumulum, dat Deus astra poli.
Prima dedit vitam, sed mortem terra secunda,
Et terram terræ tertia terra dedit:
*Auffert Lanfortin quam * terra Conallea profert,*
Fœlix Burtonium virginis ossa tenet.

* Tir Conell.

In Ireland Modwen who began, in Scotland tooke her end, England on her a tombe bestow'd, to heaven God did her send:
The first of these lands gaue her life, the second wrought her death,
And earth to earth in decent sort, the third land did bequeath.
Lanfortin taketh that away, which once Tir-Conell gaue,
Burton blest, whose hap it is this virgines bones to haue.

Nere unto this Burton, betwixt these three rivers Dove, Trent & Blith the which watereth and nameth Blithfield a faire house of the ancient and worthy family of the Bagots; Needwood a very large wood and full of parks spreadeth it selfe. Wherein the nobility and gentlemen dwelling there about, take their joily pleasure and disport themselues in hunting. Thus much of the places in the midle part of this shire.

The river Blith. Needwood forest.

Mooreland.

The North part riseth up and swelleth somewhat mountainous, with moores and hilles, but of no great bignesse, which beginning here, runs like as Apennine doth in Italie, through the midest of England with a continued ridge, rising more and more with divers tops and cliffs one after another even as far as to Scotland, although oftentimes they change their name. For here they are called Mooreland, after a while the Peak, Blackstone edge, then Craven, anon as they go further Stanmore, and at length being parted diversly, as it were into hornes, Cheviot. This Mooreland, so called for that it riseth higher into hils and mountaines, and is withall lesse fruitfull (which kinde of places we cal in our language Moores) is a smal country verily, so hard, so comfortlesse, bare, & cold, that it keepeth snow lying upon it a long while: in so much as that of a little country village named Wotton lying here under Weverhil the neighbor inhabitants haue this rime rife in their mouth, as if God, forsooth, had never visited that place.

Wotton

A Wotton under Wever, Where God came never.

Yet in so hard a soile it breedeth and feedeth beasts of large bulke, and faire spread. The people heere dwelling observe, that when the winde sitteth West, it is alwaies raine; but the East and South wind, which in other places brew and broach raine, bring faire weather, unlesse the winde turne from West into the South: and this they ascribe unto the vicinity of the Irish sea. Out of these Moores most rivers in this shire doe spring, but the chiefe are, Dove, Hanse, Churnet, Teyn, Blith, and Trent himselfe who receiveth every one of them, and conveieth them all to the sea. Dow or The river Dove.
B Dove, whose bankes are reared out of solid hard lime stone, which they burne and use for compast to manure and enrich their fields withall, doth swiftly run along the most part of the East side of this County and separateth it from Darby-shire, holding on his course in a Cleyish channell without any beds or shelves of mudde, through a soile consisting of the said Lime-stone: from whence it sucketh out such fertility, that in the very middest of Winter, the Medowes on both the bankes sides carry a most pleasant and fresh greene hew: but if it chance to swel above the bankes and overflow the Medowes in April, it battelleth them like another Nilus, and maketh them so fruitfull that the inhabitants use commonly to chant this joyfull note.

In Aprill Doves floud,
Is worth a Kings good.

C This river in twelue houres space useth so to rise, that it harieth and carrieth away with it sheepe and other cattaile, to the great terrour of the people dwelling thereby: but within the same time againe it falleth and returnes within his owne bankes: whereas Trent being once up and over his bankes floweth upon the fields fower or fiue daies together: but now come we to the rivers that run into it. The first is Hans, Hans. Churnet. De-la-cres.
which being swallowed up under the ground, breaketh up againe three miles off. Then admiteth he the fellowship of the river Churnet, who passeth by De-la-Cres Abbay, built by Ranulph the third of that name Earle of Chester: by Leike also a well knowen Mercat towne, and by Aulton a Castle in times past belonging to the Barons Aulton.
D Verdon (who founded heere the Abbay of Croxden) from whom by the Furnivals it descended to the Talbots Earles of Shrewsbury. A little below runneth Teyn a small Teyn.
brooke into Dove, which having his head not far from Cheddle the ancient seat of the Bassets, who derive their pedigree from the Bassets of Draiton, creepeth on in such a winding and crooked chanell that within one mile I was faine to passe over it foure times. Neere unto it in Checkly Church-yard, there stand three stons upright erected in Checkley.
maner of Pyramides; two of them have little images engraven upon them: but that in the middest is highest. The inhabitants report by tradition, that a battaile was fought there between two hosts, of which the one was armed, the other vnarmed; and that in it were three Bishops slaine, in memorial of whom these stons were set up. But what Historical truth indeede lieth heerein enfolded, I know not as yet: As for Blith, *
E it hath in this Moreland Car swell a Castlet situate upon it which Sir William Caresnell built with great ponds having their heads made of square stones, and Draicot, which gave surname to a family of great antiquity in this County.

But Dove after it hath received Tine having a faire bridge made over it of most hard-stone, and defended with piles runneth under Vtceter, in the Saxons tongue Vtceter.
Vttokcejtvep, an Vttoxather, situate upon the side of an hill with a gentle ascent: a towne more rich in gay flowring medowes, and in cattaile, than faire built; which before I saw it (the name was so favourable to my conjecture) I thought, in vaine, to have beene the ancient Etocetvm. But now, time hath taught me more certeinty. After this, when Dove is now come neerer unto Trent, it visiteth Tutbury Ca- Tutesbury.
F stle, in times past a large and stately thing, which also is called Stutesbury, and from an Alabaster hill top on which it stands, threatneth, as it were, the whole country vnderneath. It was built together with a little Monastery by Henry de Ferrars a Noble man of Normandy, unto whom King William the First had given great lands and revenewes in this shire: all which Robert de Ferrars Earle of Darby lost after he had revolted volted a second time from King Henry the Third. For, this Robert, when, after many troubles which he had raised in the Barons war, he was received into the Kings favour, and had bound himselfe with a corporall oth in expresse and formall words that he would continue ever after loiall to his liege Lord, yet was the man of such a stirring and restlesse spirit, that to breake and knap in peeces quit that fortune which he could not bend, he put on armes against his Soveraigne, and being at length taken prisoner (that I may use the very words of the Record, according to the forme of his obligation) made this great forfaiture both of his fortunes and dignities. There is in some place of this shire a lake, if Alexander Necham deceive vs not, into which no wild beast will in any wise enter: but since the place is uncertaine and the thing it selfe more uncertaine, I will onely put downe underneath these his verses, before which he prefixed this Title.

In his booke entituled the praises of Divine wisdom.

De Lacu in Staffordia.

Rugitu Lacus est eventus praco futuri,
Cujus aquis fera se credere nulla solet.
Instet odora canum virtus, mors instet acerba,
Non tamen intrabit exagitata lacum.

Of a Lake in Staffordshire.

A Lake there is that roreth loud, whereby things are fore-showne,
The water whereof once to take wild beasts were never knowne.
Let hounds, let death pursue apace them for to overtake,
For all this chase and hot pursuite, none enter will the Lake.

Of another Poole or Lake also in this Country thus writeth Gervase of Tilbury in his Otia Imperialia, unto Otho the fourth. In the Bishopricke of Coventry and County of Stafford, at the foot of an hill, which the inborne people of the Country have named Mahull, there is a water spred abroad in maner of a Meere, in the territory of a Village which they tearme Magdalea. In this Meere or Marsh there is a most cleere water (and an infinite number of woods beside joyning one unto another) which hath such an effectuall vertue in refreshing of bodies, that so often as hunters have chased Stagges and other Deere untill their horses be tired, if in the greatest heat of the scortching sunne they tast of this water, and offer it unto their horses for to drinke, they recover their strength of running againe which they had lost, and become so fresh, as one would thinke they had not run at all. But whereabout this is I cannot yet learne by all my diligent inquiry.

Gervase of Tilbury.

As for the title of Stafford, it remaineth ever since Robert de Stafford, whom King William of Normandy enriched with great possessions, even untill our time in his line and progeny. A family as noble and ancient as any other: but upon which fortune hath otherwhiles by turnes both frowned and favoured. For, first they were Barons of Stafford, then five of them Earles of Stafford, Ralfe created, by King Edward the Third, Earle of Stafford, who married the heire of Sir Hugh Audley Earle of Glocester, Hugh his sonne who died in Pilgrimage at Rhodes, and his three sonnes successively, Thomas, and William, both issulesse, and Edmund who married the daughter and heire of Thomas of Woodstock Duke of Buckingham. Afterward three of them were Dukes of Buckingham and Earles of Stafford, &c. as is before shewed. By the attainder of the last of them, those so great inheritances which their most honourable mariages brought unto them, floted away as it were, and scattered heere and there. In lieu whereof hath ensued a more secure quietnesse, which can never cohabite with Greatnesse.

Earles and Barons of Stafford.

See Dukes of Buckingham.

There are accounted in this shire Parishes 130.

SHROPP.

CESTRIÆ PARS

DENBIGH

PARS

FLYNT PARS

MONTGOM:

PARS

PARS

RADNOR PARS

Christophorus Saxton descripsit

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8

Gulielmus Hole sculpsit

Montgomerye

Wesshipoolly

Hockstow Forest

Balum Wood forest

Cunetoreit

Olwestre

Coedigare forest

Frenchcoob forest

Leangollen

Llanelhyn

Llansenfride

Llansenfride

Llandrenog

Myddletonhala

Withall

Bettus

Knighton

Deefluv:

Merlas fluv:

Kericke fluv:

Tannot fluv:

Dynmyry fluv:

Severna fluv:

Onie fluv:

Temde fluv:

Bradfield fluv:

Clune fluv:

Ranikles

Chad

Marlm

Wormall

Hynton

Allbe magna

Allmton

Tilsloe

Haulton

Whicksoe

Horton

Sleave

Burleton

Middle

Newton

Merton

Walford

Allrighton

Leaton

Onslow

Wood cote

Nobill

Hauwood

Brethon hill

Buttington chap:

Prees

Whitchurch

Ightfield

Bolas

Cloverley

Hodnet

Wem

Prees

Whitchurch

Ightfield

Bolas

Cloverley

Hodnet

Wem

SALOPIÆ
Comitatus quem CORNA-UII olim incoluerunt descriptio.

STAFF

FORDLÆ

PARS

WORC

CESTRIÆ

PARS

PARS

Cumbermere
Audlem
Ouse Beeston
Tilley Ruskington
Shenton
Adderley
Belaport
Norton
Muckleston
Clauerley
Betton
Amyton
Blore Draton
Albaston
Moreton Chipnall
Chesuerdine Prees Wullerton Warchamley
Hodnet
Pickstock
Pellton
Hynstoke
Allerton
Childes arcoll Peplow
Eaton Forton Meare
Stockton
Newport
Wodcote
Burlaton
Chatwall Wellington Charleton
Orleton
Aston
Stretton
Wike Bonnyngale
Hatton
Pepper hill Wrokesley
Codsall
Abbots Bromley
Bilston
Madeley
Shipley
Norton
Bayer Acleton
Hilton
Clauerley
Shutterfield
Baryton Kynulet
Ouer Arley
Trimple Haulchath Thorton Bewdley
Bromfield
Middleton chap:
Henley
Coreley Milson Neneſalers Ludlow Ledwiche
Conam
Whitton
Dean pk:
Great chap:
Brigwood
Richards castle
Burrington Brimfield
Cauberton Bockleford
Tenbury
Teme flu:
Severn flu:
Halesowen
Compton
Tresill Fauall Bubbinton
Gattaker
Briefsenorth
Dudmaston
Quat Glayesley Farlow
Worfe flu:
Lopie pars

A

SHROPP-SHIRE.

B

THe fourth country of thoſe, which, as it ſeemeth, the CORNAVII in times paſt inhabited, the Engliſh-Saxons called Scipyp-ſcýne and Sꝺꝛobbe-ſcýne, wee Shropp-ſhire, and the Latiniſts Comitatus Salopienſis, is farre greater than the reſt in quality, and not inferiour to them either for plenty or pleaſure. On the Eaſt ſide it hath Staffordſhire, on the Weſt Montgomery-ſhire, and Denbighſhire, on the South ſide Worceſter, Hereford, and Radnor-ſhires, and on the North Cheſhire. It is repleniſhed with townes and Caſtles ſtanding thicke on every ſide, by reaſon that it was a Frontier country, or (that I may uſe the terme of Siculus Flaccus) Ager arcifinius, in regard of repelling and repreſſing the Welſhmen in the marches bordering heereupon: whereupon our Anceſtours by an ancient word, named the Confines of this Shire toward Wales the Marches, for that they were bounds and limits betweene the Welſh and Engliſh, and divers noble men in this tract were called Barons of the Marche, and

C Lords Marchers, who had every one in their territorie a certaine peculiar iuriſdiction, and in their owne Courts miniſtred law unto the inhabitants, with ſundry priviledges and immunities, and this among other, that writs out of the Kings Courts, ſhould in certaine caſes have no place nor runne among them. Nevertheleſſe, if any controverſie aroſe about a Lordſhip it ſelfe, or the limites of Lordſhips, they were to reſort unto the Kings Courts of iuſtice. Theſe alſo were in times paſt named in Latin Records Marchiones de Marchia Walliæ, as Marqueſſes of the Marches of Wales, or Lords Marchers, as appeareth evidently by the Red booke in the Kings Exchequer, where we read, how at the Coronation of Queene Aeleonor, wife to King Henrie the Third, Marchiones de Marchia Walliæ &c. that is, The Marqueſſes of the Marches of Wales, (or D Lord Marchers) Iohn Fitz-Alane, Raulph Mortimer, Iohn of Monmouth, and Walter Clifford, in the name of the Marches, ſaid it was the right of the Marches to find ſilver ſpeares and to bring them for to ſupport the foure ſquare purple ſilke cloth at the Coronation of kings and Queenes of England. But the happy tranquility of peace betweene Wales and England, and the Kings authority hath by little and little abrogated all thoſe royalties, prerogatiues, and priviledges, which the Lords Marchers enioied, and inſolently exerciſed over the poore inhabitants in the Marches.

Neither yet doe I thinke (I thought good to ſay ſo much afore-hand) that all this Country belonged anciently to the CORNAVII, but that part onely which is on this ſide Severn: as for that on the farther ſide of Severn, it pertained to the ORDOVICES,

E who inhabited heere a great country in this tract: a parcell wherof, as alſo ſome little territories on this ſide Severn, which belonged unto the Lords Marchers, were not long ſince laid to this Shire by authority of the Parliament. For, into theſe two parts the whole Shire may be fitly divided, ſeeing that the river Severn cutteth it through in the mids from the Weſt to the South-eaſt.

In that part beyond Severn, the river Temd, in Britiſh Teſidiauc, for ſome ſpace maketh the South limite, into which at length the river Colun, in Britiſh Colunwy, and called contractly Clun, iſſueth it ſelfe. This river Clun breaking forth farther within

F the country, not farre from a prety towne well frequented, named Biſhop's Caſtle, (becauſe it belonged to the Biſhops of Hereford whoſe Dioceſe and iuriſdiction is large in this Shire) giveth name to * Clun Caſtle: which, the Fitz-Alans deſcended from one Alan the ſonne of Flaold a Norman (who were afterwards Earles of Arundell) built, when they were Lords Marchers againſt the Welſhmen, & annoyed them with continuall inrodes into their country. But, where it meeteth with Temd, among divers doubtfull fourds, there mounteth up an hill of a very ancient memorie, which they

The Marchers. L. Marchers. Marchiones in old hiſtories.

The Canopy.

27. Hen. 8.

Clun river

Biſhops caſtle.

* Coluno caſtrum. Clun caſtle.

Caer Caradoc. King Caratacus, Tacitus,

they call Caer Caradoc, becauſe about the yeere of our Salvation 53. Caratacus a moſt noble and renowned Britiſh King, raiſed in the front of it a mighty wall or rampier of Stone, and with his people reſolutely made it good againſt Oſtorius Lieutenant for the Romanes and the Legionarie Roman ſouldiers. Vntill the Romans having forcibly broken through that fence of ſtones ſo rudely laid, (the remaines whereof are to be ſeene at this day) forced the vnarmed Britans to quit the place, and flie up to the mountains. Caratacus himſelfe notwithſtanding eſcaped by flight, but his wife, daughter, and brethren were taken priſoners: And he afterwards, (as adverſity in no place findeth ſafety) being delivered into the hands of Oſtorius by Queene Cartiſmandua (unto whoſe protection he had committed himſelfe) was carried away to Rome, after he had vexed and wearied the Romanes in a long and troubleſome war. Where he obtained pardon for himſelfe and his, of Claudius the Emperour, not by way of any baſe ſuppliant entreaty, but by a generous and honorable liberty of ſpeech. For the winning of this hill and taking of this King captive, it was decreed, that Oſtorius ſhould have Triumphall ornaments: neither did the Senate judge the taking of Caratacus leſſe honorable, than when Publius Scipio ſhewed Siphax, and L. Paulus preſented Perſes, two vanquiſhed Kings in triumphant maner at Rome. And although the compiler of our Hiſtorie hath made mention neither of this warre, nor of this worthy Britaine, yet the memorie thereof is not quite gone with the common people. For, they confidently give out by tradition, that a King was diſcomfited and put to flight upon this hill: and in the Britiſh booke entituled Triades, among three of the moſt renowned Britans for warlicke exploits, Caradauc Vrichfras* is named firſt; ſo that, as I think, we ſhold make no doubt, but that he was this very Caratacus. Then Ludlow, in Britiſh formerly named Dinan, & in later ages Lys-twyſoc, i. the Princes Palace, ſtandeth upon an hill at the meeting of the ſame Temd with the river Corve, a towne more faire than ancient. Roger Montgomerie firſt laid unto it a caſtle no leſſe beautifull, than ſtrong, which hangeth over Corve, and then raiſed a wall about the towne that taketh about a mile in compaſſe. But when his ſonne Robert was attainted, King Henrie the Firſt kept it in his owne hands: and afterwards, when it was beſieged, it valiantly endured the aſſaults of King Stephen: and during that ſtrait ſiege, Henrie ſonne of the King of Scots, being plucked from his ſaddle with an yron hooked engine, had like to have beene haled violently within the towne wals, had not Stephen in perſon reſcued him, and with ſingular valour delivered him from ſo great a danger. After this, King Henrie the Second gave this caſtle together with the vale underneath along Corve, which commonly is called Corveſ-dale, to Sir Fulke of Dinan. Afterwards it belonged to the Lacies of Ireland, and by a daughter fell to Sir Geffrey de Ienevile a Poictevin; or, as ſome will have it, of the houſe of Lorain: from whoſe heires it deſcended againe by a daughter to the Mortimers, and from thence hereditarily to the Crowne. Then the inhabitants in proceſſe of time, built in the very boſome of the towne, and on the higheſt ground a very faire Church, and the onely Church they have. And ſo it beganne to be of great account and to excell other neighbour townes adjoining. And although by King Stephen, Simon Montfort, and King Henrie the Sixth it ſuffred much damage in the civill warres, yet it alwaies flouriſhed againe: and now eſpecially, ever ſince that King Henrie the Eighth ordained the Councell of the Marches, not unlike to thoſe Parliaments in France: the L. Preſident wherof doth for the moſt part keepe Courts and Terme here: which a man could hardly have ſeene at any time without Suits, whether it were for the great ſtate and authority that it carried, or becauſe the Welſhmen and Marchmen are ſo forward and hote to goe to law. This Councell conſiſteth of the Lord Preſident, ſo manie counſellers as it ſhall pleaſe the Prince to appoint, a Secretarie, an Attorney, a Solicitour, and the foure Iuſtices of the Counties in Wales.

See the 43. and 44. page.

*With the ſtrong arme.

Ludlow.

Iron hookes. 1139.

Ienevile.

The Councell in the Marches.

Burford.

Somewhat lower, upon the river Temd, is ſeene Burford, which from Theodoricke Saie and his poſterity, came unto Robert Mortimer, and from his poſterity likewiſe unto Sir Geffrey Cornwaile, who derived his deſcent from Richard Earle of Cornwall and King of the Alemans: and his race even unto theſe daies hath flouriſhed Cornwaile.

A risshed under the name of Barons of Burford (but not in the dignity of Parliamentarie Barons) whereas it is holden (as we read in the Inquisition) of the King, for to find five men for the Armie of Wales, and by service of a Baronie. As for those (that I may note thus much by the way) who held an entier and whole Baronie, they were commonly in times past reputed Barons; and as some learned in our Common lawes are of opinion, Baron and Baronie, like as Earle and Earldome, Duke and Dukedome, King and Kingdome, were Conjugata, that is, Originally yoke fellowes. When Temd now is leaving Shroppshire behind it, not farre from the bankes thereof, there raise themselves up Northward certaine hils of easie ascent, Cleehill they call them, much B commended for yeelding the best barly in great plenty, neither are they without yron mines: at the descent whereof, in a village called Cleybury, Hugh Mortimer built a castle, which King Henrie the Second forthwith so rased (because it was a noursery of sedition) that scarce there remaine any tokens thereof at this day: also hard by standeth Kinlet where the Blunts flourished. Their name in this tract is very great, so surnamed at first of their yellow haire; the family noble and ancient, and the branches thereof farre spread. Then saw we on the right-hand banke of Severn, Brug Morfe (commonly, but corruptly called Bridg-North,) so called of Burgh or Burrough, and Morfe, a forest adjoining, whereas before time it was named simply Burgh. A towne fortified, with wals, a ditch, a stately Castle, and the Severn, which betweene the rockes runneth downe with a great fall: seated also upon a rocke, C out of which the waies leading into the upper part of the towne were wrought out. Achelfleda Lady of the Mercians first built it, and Robert de Beleſme Earle of Shrewsburie walled it: who, trusting to the naturall strength of the place rebelled against King Henrie the First, like as afterward Roger Mortimer against King Henrie the Second: but both of them with ill successe; for they were both forced to yeeld, and submit themselves, absolutely to the Kings commaunde. At the siege of this Castle, (as we read in our Annales) King Henrie the Second being leuelled at with an arrow, had beene shot therewith quite through the body, had not Sir Hubert Syncter a noble and trusty servitour to the King interposed himselfe, and to save the King received both the arrow and his deaths wound withall. De Sancta Clara

D Before time also Sir Raulph de Pichford bare himselfe so valiantly heere, that King Henrie the First gave unto him the little Burgh hard by, To hold by service, for to find dry wood for the great chamber of the castle of Burgh against the comming of his soveraign Lord the King. Willeley or Willey is not farre from hence, the habitation in old time of Sir Warner de Willeley, from whose posterity by the Harleis and Peshall, it came to the notable family of Lacon; advanced by marriage long since with the heire of Passelew, and of late by the possession of Sir I. Blunt of Kinlet. Lib. Inquis. Willey or Willeley.

There be in like maner other townes and castles heere and there in this tract, as Newcastle, Hopton castle, Shipton, and upon the river Corve, Corvesham, which Walter E Clifford had by the gift of King Henrie the Second, also Brancroft and Holgot, commonly Howgate: which belonged sometime to the Manduits, then, to Robert Blunt Bishop of Bath, and afterwards to the Lovells. More higher, are Wenlocke, now knowen for the lime, but in King Richard the Seconds time for a mine of copper there: But much more knowen in the Saxons daies for a most ancient Nunnerie, where Milburga that most holy Virgin lived in great devotion, and was entombed: the which Nunnerie Earle Roger de Montgomerie repaired and repleniſhed with Monkes. In later times Sir John Winell, called also Wenlocke because he heere inhabited, for his faithfull service to King Henrie the Sixt, was by him aduanced to the state and honor of Baron Wenlocke, and elected Knight of the Garter; in whose cause hee F manfully lost his life in the battaile of Tewkesbury, leaving no issue: but from his cosin and heire generall the Lawleys of this County are lineally descended. A little more West is Acton Burnell, a castle of the Burnels, and after of the Lovells, made famous by the Court of Parliament there held in the time of King Edward the First. This family of the Burnells was in old time of great name and antiquity, very much enriched also by that Bishop aforenamed. But it failed and had an end in the reigne Inquis. 40. Ed. 3. Baron and Baronie Coniugata. Cleehill. Blunt in the Norman language signifieth yellow haire of the head. Bridg North. Wenlock. William Malmesbury. Or Winell. * Lord Wenlocke. Clauſ. 17. Edw. 4. Acton Burnell.

of

of Edward the second, when Mawde the heire was married unto Iohn Lovell first, and A secondly to Iohn Handlow, whose sonne Nicolas assumed to himselfe the name of Burnell: from whom the Ratcliffes Earles of Sussex and others draw their pedigree.

Langley. Scarce a mile from hence standeth Langley, seated very flat and low in a parke full of woods, the dwelling place of the Leas, which may well challenge to be ranged a-Condover. mong the families that are of the better worth and greater antiquitie in this tract.
Next unto these is Condover, a manour sometime of the Lovells, but of late, the possession of Thomas Owen, Iustice of the Common pleas and a very great lover of learning.
But he now hath taken his quiet sleepe in Christ, and left his sonne Sir Roger Owen, for his manifold learning, a right worthy sonne of so good a father. This is holden of B the King, as we read in the Records, In chiefe, to find two footmen one day in the armie of Wales, in time of warre. Which I note heere once for all, to this end, that I may give to understand, that gentlemen and noble men heere about held their inheritances of the Kings of England by this tenure to be ready in service with souldiers for defence of the Marches, whensoever there should be any warre betweene England and Pichford. Wales. Neere unto this, there is a little village named Pichford, that imparted the
A fountaine of pitch, or Bitumen. name in times past to the ancient family of Pichford: now the possession of R.
Oteley, which our ancestours (for that they knew not pitch from Bitumen) so called, of a fountaine of Bitumen there in a private mans yard; upon which there riseth and swimmeth a kind of liquid Bitumen daily, skumme it off never so diligently, even as C it doth in the lake Asphaltites in Iewrie, in a standing water about Samosata, and in a spring by Agrigentum in Sicilie. But whether this be good against the falling sick-nesse, & haue a powerfull property to draw, to close up wounds &c. as that in Iewrie, none that I know as yet hath made experiment. More Westward, you may see Pou- Pouderbach. derbach castle, now decaied and ruinous, called in times past Pulrebach the seat of Sir Raulph Butler a younger sonne of Raulph Butler Lord Wem, from whom the But- lers of Woodhall in Hertfordshire are lineally descended. Beneath this, Huckstow fo-
Stipperstons. rest, spreadeth a great way among the mountaines: where, at Stipperstons hill there
* Or Welsh-men. be great heapes of stones, and little rockes as it were, that rise thicke together: the D * Britans call them Carneddau tewion. But whereas as these seeme naturall I dare not with others so much as coniecture, that these were any of those stones which Giraldus Cambrensis seemeth to note in these words: Harald in person being himselfe the last footeman in marching with footemen, and light armours, and victualls answerable for service in Wales, valiantly went round about and passed through all Wales, so as that he left but few or none alive. And for a perpetuall memory of this victorie, you may find very many stones in Wales erected after the antique maner upon hillockes, in those places wherein he had beene conquerour, having these words engraven.

HIC FVIT VICTOR HARALDVS. E

Heere was Harald conqueror.

Caurse. More Northward, Caurse castle standeth, which was the Baronie of Sir Peter Cor- Routon. bet; from whom it came to the Barons of Stafford: and Routon castle neere unto it, the most ancient of all the rest, toward the West borders of the shire, not farre from Severn, which castle sometimes belonged to the Corbets, and now to the ancient familie of the Listers. Before time it was the possession of Iohn le Strange of Knocking;
F in despite of whom Lhewellin prince of Wales laid it even with the ground, as we read in the life of Sir Fulke Fitz-Warin. It flourished also in the Romans time under the Rutunium. same name, tearmed by Antonine the Emperour, RVTVNIVM. Neither can we mistake heerein, seeing both the name and that distance from VRICONIVM a towne full well knowen, which he putteth downe, doe most exactly agree. Neere unto this are Abberbury Castle and Watlesbury, which is come from the Corbets to the notable family

A familie of the Leightons Knights. As for the name, it ſeemeth to haue taken it from that high port-way called Watlingſtreet, which went this way into the fartheſt part of Wales (as Ranulph of Cheſter writeth) by two little townes, of that ſtreete called Strettons: betweene which in a valley, are yet to bee ſeene the rubbiſh of an old caſtle called Brocards Caſtle, and the ſame ſet amideſt greene medowes, that before time were fiſh-pooles. But theſe caſtles with others which I am ſcarce able to number and reckon up, for the moſt part of them are now ruinate not by the furie of warre, but now at length conquered even with ſecure peace, and proceſſe of time. Brocards Caſtle.

Now croſſing over Severne unto that part of the ſhire on this ſide the river, which
B I ſayd did properly belong to the ancient CORNAVII. This againe is divided after a ſort into two parts by the river Terne running from the North Southward: ſo called, for that it iſſueth out of a very large poole in Stafford-ſhire, ſuch as they of the North-partes call Tearnes. In the hither part of theſe twaine, which lieth Eaſt, nere to the place where Tern diſchargeth his waters into Severn ſtood the ancient URICONIVM (for ſo Antonine the Emperor termeth it) which Ptolomee calleth VIROCONIVM, Ninnius Caer Vruach, the old Engliſh Saxons Wreken-Ceaſtep, wee Wreckceter and Wroxceſter. This was the chiefe City of the CORNAVII, built as it ſeemeth by the Romans, what time as they fortified this banke of Severn in this place where the river is full of fourds, as it is not elſewhere lower toward the mouth thereof. But this bee-
C ing ſore ſhaken in the Saxons warre, fell to utter decay in the Daniſh broiles: and now it is a verie ſmall country towne of poore husbandmen, and preſenteth often times to thoſe that aire the ground, Roman coines, to teſtifie in ſome ſort the antiquity thereof. Beſides them I ſaw nothing of antiquitie but in one place ſome few parcels of broken walles (which the common people cal The old Worke of Wroxceter) This wall was built of rough ſtone diſtinguiſhed outwardly with ſeven rowes of Britiſh brickes in equall diſtance, and brought up with arched worke inwardly. Uriconium. Wroxceſter.

I conieƈture, by the uneven ground, by the rampires and the rubbiſh of the wall here and there on either ſide, that the Caſtle ſtood in that very place where theſe ruines remaine. But where the plot of the City lay (and that was of a great com-
D paſſe) the ſoile is more blackiſh than elſewhere, and plentifully yeeldeth the beſt barly in all this quarter. Beneath this City that port-way of thoſe Romanes, knowne by the name of Watling-ſtreet, went, as I haue heard ſay, direƈtlie (albeit the ridge thereof now appeareth not) either through a fourd or over a bridge (the foundations whereof were of late, a little higher, diſcovered, when they did ſet a weare in the river) unto the Strattons, that is to ſay, Townes upon the ſtreete, whereof I ſpake even now. The ancient name of this decaied VRICONIVM, ſheweth it ſelfe verie apparantly in an hill loftily mounting neare thereunto, called Wreken hill (ſome writers terme it Gilberts hill) from the top whereof, which lieth in a plaine pleaſant levell, there is a verie delightfull proſpect into the countrie beneath on everie ſide. Strattons. Wreken-hill.

E This hill runneth out in his high length a good ſpace, as it were attired, on the ſides, with faire ſpread trees. But under it, where Severn rolleth downe with his ſtreame, at Buldewas, commonly Bildas, there flouriſhed a faire Abbay, the Sepulture in times paſt of the noble familie of the Burnels, Patrons thereof. Higher into the Country there is a Manſion or Baiting towne named Watling-ſtreet of the ſituation upon the foreſaid Rode way or ſtreete. And hard by it are ſeene the reliques of Caſtle Dalaley, which after that Richard Earle of Arundell was attainted, King Richard the Second by authority of the Parliament annexed to the Principality of Cheſter, which hee had then erected. Bildas. Dalaley.

And not farre from the foote of the foreſaid Wreken, in an hollow valley, by that
F high ſtreete before mentioned, Oken-yate, a little village well knowne for the plentifull delfe there of pit-cole, lieth ſo beneath, and juſt at the ſame diſtance as Antonine placeth VSOCONA both from VRICONIVM and alſo from PENNOCRVCIVM that no man needs to doubt, but that this Oken-yate was that Vs-ocona. Neither doth the name it ſelfe gaineſay it: for, this word Ys, which in the Britiſh tongue ſignifieth Lowe, may ſeeme added for to note the low ſituation thereof. On the other ſide Uſocona. Oken-Yate.

Charleton. beneath this hil, appeareth Charleton Caſtle, in ancient times belonging to the Charle- A Tong. tons, Lords of Powis: and more Eaſtward next of all unto Stafford-ſhire, Tong-Caſtle, called in old time Toang, which the Vernons not long ſince repaired, as alſo the Colledge within the towne, which the Pembridges, as I haue read, firſt founded. Neither haue the inhabitants any thing here more worth ſhewing, than a bell for the bigneſſe thereof verie famous in all thoſe parts adjoining. Hard to this, lieth Albrighton, which in the reigne of King Edward the Firſt, was the ſeat of Sir Rauſph de Pichford, but now of the Talbotts, branched from the familie of the Earles of Shrewsbury. But aboue Tong was Lilleſhul Abbay in a woodland countrie, founded by the familie of Beaumeis, whoſe heire was married into the houſe of De La Zouch. But ſeeing there B is little left but ruines, I will leaue it and proceed forward.

Draiton. Beyond the river Terne, on the brinke thereof ſtandeth Draiton, where in the civill warres betweene the houſes of Lancaſter and Yorke, a field was fought that coſt many 1459. a gentleman of Cheſ-ſhire his life. For they, although the battaile was given up almoſt on euen hand, when they could not agree among themſelues but tooke part with both ſides, were ſlaine by heapes and numbers on either ſide. Beneath this Draiton, and nere enough to Terne, lieth Hodnet, wherein dwelt ſometimes Gentlemen of the Inq.2.10.E.2. ſame name, from whom hereditarily it is come by the Ludlows unto the Vernons. It was held in times paſt, of the Honour of Mont-Gomery, by ſervice, to bee ſeneſchall or Steward of the ſame honour. After this, Terne, having paſſed hard by certaine little C rurall townes, taketh in unto him the riveret Roden, and when hee hath gone a fewe miles further, neere nnto Vricovium, of which I ſpake even now, falleth into the Severn. Upon this Roden, whiles hee is but new come from his ſpring head, ſtandeth
Wem. Wem, where are to be ſeene the tokens of a Caſtle long ſince begun there to be built.

This was the Baronie, after the firſt entrie of the Normans, of William Pantulph, from whoſe poſterity it came at length to the Butlers, and from them by the Ferrars of Ouſley, and the Barons of Greyſtock, unto the Barons D'acre of Gilleſland. Within a little of this, upon an high hill well wooded, or upon a cliffe rather which ſometime was called Radcliffe, ſtood a Caſtle mounted aloft, called of the reddiſh ſtone Redcaſtle. Red-caſtle, and in the Normans language Caſtle Rous, the ſeat in old time of the Aud- D leies, through the liberall bountie of Lady Maude Le Strange. But now there remaineth no more but deſolate walles, which yet make a faire ſhew. Scarce a mile from hence lieth all along the dead carcaſſe, as it were, of a ſmall City now well neere conſumed. But the peeces of Romane money, and thoſe brickes which the Romanes uſed in building there found, doe teſtifie the antiquity, and founders thereof. The neighbour inhabitants uſe to call it Bery, as one would ſay Burgh, and they report that it was a moſt famous place in King Arthurs daies, as the common ſort aſcribe whatſoever is ancient and ſtrange to King Arthurs glory.

Morton Corbet. Then, upon the ſame river Morton Corbet, anciently an houſe of the familie of Turet, afterward a Caſtle of the Corbets, ſheweth it ſelfe, where within our remem- E brance, Robert Corbet, carried away with the affectionate delight of Architecture, began to build in a barraine place a moſt gorgeous and ſtately houſe, after the Italians modell: But death prevented him, ſo that hee left the new worke unfiniſhed and the old caſtle defaced. Theſe Corbets are of ancient nobility in this ſhire, and held Lordſhips by ſervice, of Roger Montgomery Earle of this county, about the comming Corbet, a forename. in of the Normans, for Roger the ſon of Corbet held Huelebec, Hundeſlit, Acton, Fernleg &c. Robert, the ſonne of Corbet, held land in Vleſtanton, Rotlinghop, Branten and Vdecot. And in later ages this family farre and fairely propagated received encreaſe L both of revenue & great alliance by the marriage of an heire of Hopton. More Southward ſtandeth Arcoll the habitation of the Newports knights of great worſhip, deſ- F cended from the Barons Grey of Codnor, and the Lords of Mothwy: and nere unto it is Hagmond Abbay, which the Lords Fitz Alanes if they did not found, yet they moſt eſpecially endowed.

Not much lower upon Severn ſtandeth moſt pleaſantly, the famouſeſt Citie (for ſo it was called in Domeſday Booke) of this ſhire (riſen by the ruine of Old Vriconium)

which

A which wee at this day call Shrewsbury and Shrowsbury, having mollified the name, whereas our Anceſtours called it Scꝛobbeꝛ-bẏꝛiꝯ, for that it was anciently a very thicket of ſhrubs upon an hill. In which ſenſe both the Greekes tearmed their Beſſa, and our Welſh-Britans named this alſo Pengwerne, that is, The high plot planted with Alders, and a Palace ſo named continued here a long time. But whence it is that it is called now in the Britiſh tongue Ỽmwithig, and by the Normans Scropesbery, Sloppesbery, and Salop, and in the Latin tongue Salopia, I am altogither ignorant unleſſe it ſhould bee the ancient name Scobbes-beng diverſely diſtorted and disjointed. Yet ſome skilfull in the Britiſh tongue, thinke verily it is called Ỽmwithig, as one would B ſay Placentia or Plaiſance, of a Britiſh word Mewithau, and that their Poets the Bardi ſo named it, becauſe of all others, it beſt pleaſed the Princes of Wales in times paſt. It is ſeated upon an hill of a reddiſh earth, and Severn, having two verie faire bridges upon it, gathering himſelfe in manner round in forme of a circle, ſo compaſſeth it, that were it not for a ſmall banke of firme land, it might goe for an Iſland. And thence it is that Leland the Antiquarian Poet wrote thus. Shrewsbury.

Edita Penguerni latè faſtigia ſplendent,
Vrbs ſita lunato veluti mediamnis in orbe,
Colle tumet modico, duplici quoq; ponte ſuperbit,
C Accipiens patriâ ſibi linguâ nomen ab alnis.

The buildings hie of Shrewsbury do ſhine both farre and nere,
A towne within a river ſet, an Iland as it were,
Mounted upon a prety hill, and bridges hath it twaine,
The name it tooke of Alder trees in Britiſh tongue, &c.

Neither is it ſtrengthned only by nature, but fortified alſo by art: for Roger of Montgomery, unto whom by the Conquerors gift it was allotted, pulling downe 50. houſes or there about, built a ſtrong ſtately caſtle on the Northſide upon a riſing rocke, and Robert his ſon when he revolted from K. Henry the firſt, walled it about, on that ſide D where it was not fenſed with the river, which notwithſtanding never, that I know of, ſuffered aſſault or hoſtility but once in the Barons war againſt King Iohn. At the firſt entring of the Normans it was a city well inhabited and of good trade. For, as we read in Domeſday Booke, In King Edward the Confeſſors time it paied gelt according to an hundred Hides: In the Conquerours time, it paied yeerely ſeven pounds and ſixteene ſhillings de Gablo: They were reckoned to bee two hundred and fifty two Citizens: whereof, twelue were bound to watch about the Kings of England when they lay at this City, and as many to accompany them when they went forth on hunting. Which I would verily thinke to have beene ordained, becauſe not many yeeres beE fore Edricke Streona Duke of the Mercians, a man notoriouſly diſteined with wickedneſſe, lay in wait heere for Prince Athelm, and ſlew him as he rode on hunting. At which time (as that booke ſheweth) the cuſtome was in this Citie, That a woman taking, howſoever it were, a husband, if ſhe were a widdow, gave unto the King 20. s. if a maid, tenne, in what maner ſoever ſhe tooke a man. But to returne unto our matter, the ſaid Earle Roger not onely fortified it, but alſo adorned it with other buildings both publicke and private, yea and founded a very goodly Abbay to the honour of Saint Peter and Saint Paule, unto which he granted many poſſeſſions, and therewith, Saint Gregories Church, And namely in that tenour, (I exemplifie the words out of the private hiſtory of the ſaid Abbay) That when the Chanons who held Prebends therein ſhould F any of them die, the ſaid Præbends ſhould come unto the demaine and poſſeſſion of the Monkes. Whereupon aroſe no ſmall controverſie: For, the ſonnes of the ſaid Chanons ſued the Monkes at law, that they might ſucceede in their fathers Præbends. For, at that time, the Chanons and Prieſts in England were married, and it grew to be a cuſtome, that Eccleſiaſticall livings ſhould deſcend by inheritance to the next of the bloud. But this controverſie was decided under King Henrie the Firſt, and Prebends paſſing hereditarily.

concluded it was, that the heire ſhould not ſucceede in Eccleſiaſticall livings; yea and about that time lawes were enacted touching the ſingle life of Prieſts. Soone after in proceſſe of time, other Churches alſo were heere erected. For, to ſay nothing of the houſes or Frieries of Dominicans, Franciſcans, and Auguſtine Freers, which the Charltons, Ienevills, and Staffords founded, there were two Collegiat Churches erected, Saint Chadds with a Deane and tenne Præbendaries, and Saint Maries with a Deane likewiſe and nine Præbendaries. And even at this day, a faire and goodly Citie it is well frequented and traded, full of good merchandiſe, and by reaſon of the Citizens painfull diligence, with cloth making and traffique with Welſhmen, rich and wealthy. For, hither, almoſt all the commodities of Wales, doe conflow as it were to a common Mart of both nations. Whereupon it is inhabited both with Welſh and Engliſh ſpeaking both languages: who among other things deſerve eſpeciall commendation for this, in that they have ſet up a Schoole for the training up of children, wherein were more ſchollers in number, when I firſt ſaw it, than in any one ſchoole throughout all England againe: unto which Thomas Aſton the firſt head Schoolmaſter a right good man procured by his meanes a very honeſt Salarie and Stipend for the teachers. It ſhall not now I hope be impertinent to note, that when diuerſe of the Nobilitie conſpired againſt King Henrie fourth with a purpoſe to advance Edmund Mortimer Earle of March to the Crowne, as the vndoubtfull and right heire, whoſe father King Richard the Second had alſo declared heire apparent: and Sir Henrie Percy called Hote-ſpurre then addreſſed himſelfe to giue the aſſault to Shrewsbury: upon a ſoudaine all their deſignes were daſhed, as it were, from aboue. For the King with ſpeedie marches was upon his backe before hee imagined. To whom yet the young Hote-ſpurre with courageous reſolution gaue battaile, and after a long and doubtfull fight, wherein the Scotiſhmen, which followed him, ſhewd much manly valour, (when the Earle of Worceſter his vnckle, and the Earle of Dunbar were taken) he deſpairing of victorie ranne vndaunted upon his owne death amideſt the thickeſt of his enemies. Of this battaile the place is called Battailefield. Where the king after victory erected a chappell and one or two prieſts, to a praie for their ſoules, who were there ſlaine. As for the poſition of this Shrewſbury, it is from the Iſlands Azores twenty degrees, and ſeven and thirty minutes diſtant in Longitude, and from the Æquinoctial line two and fiftie degrees and three and fity minutes in Latitude.

* Battaile of Shrewsbury. 1463.

Battailefield.

From out of this City (I wot not whether it may be thought worth my labour, or pertinent to my purpoſe to relate ſo much) brake forth the laſt time, namely in the yeere of our ſalvation 1551. that diſmal deſeaſe The Engliſh ſweat, which preſently diſperſed over the whole realme, made great mortality of people eſpecially thoſe of middle age: for, as many as were taken ſodainly with this ſweat, within one foure and twenty houres either died or recovered. But a preſent remedy was found, namely that ſuch as in the day time fell into it, ſhould preſently in their clothes, as they were, goe to bed; if by night and in bed, ſhould there reſt, lie ſtill and not ſtirre from thence for foure and twenty houres: provided alwaies, that they ſhould not ſleepe the while but by all meanes be kept waking. Whereof this diſeaſe firſt aroſe, the learned of Phyſicians know not for certaine. Some ſtrangers aſcribe it to the ground in England, ſtanding ſo much upon plaſtre (and yet it is but in few places of that nature.) In certaine moiſt conſtitutions of weather (ſay they) it happeneth that vapours riſe out of that kinde of ſoyle, which although they bee moſt ſubtile, yet they are corrupt, which cauſe likewiſe a ſubtile contagion, and the ſame is proportionate either unto the ſpirits or to the thinne froth that floateth upon the bloud. But what ſo ever the cauſe is, no doubt there is an Analogie betweene it and the ſubtile partes of bloud: by reaſon whereof within one daie the patient either mends or ends. As for the cauſe let other ſearch: for mine owne part, I haue obſerved that this maladie hath runne through England thrice in the age aforegoing; and yet I doubt not, but long before alſo, it did the like (although it were not recorded in writing:) firſt, in the yeere of our Lord 1485. in which King Henrie the Seventh began his reigne, a little after a great conjunction

The Britiſh ſweat, or ſweating ſickneſſe.

Hieronymus Fracaſtorius.

A conjunction of the ſuperior planets in Scorpio. A ſecond time yet more mildly, although the plague accompanied it, in the thirtieth three yeere after, anno 1518. upon a great oppoſition of the ſame planets in Scorpio and Taurus, at which time it plagued the Netherlands and high Almaine alſo. Laſt of all, three and thirtie yeeres after that, in that yeere 1551. when another conjunction of thoſe planets in Scorpio tooke their effects. But perhaps I haue inſiſted too long herein; for, theſe may ſeeme vaine toies to ſuch as attribute nothing at all to celeſtial influence, and learned experience.

Neere unto this citie, Severne fetcheth many a compaſſe, turning and winding
B in and out, but ſpecially at Roſſall, where hee maketh ſuch a curving reach that hee commeth well nere round and meeteth with himſelfe. Here about is that moſt ancient kinde of boat in very great uſe which in the old time they called in Latine Rates commonly, to wit, Flotes, certaine peeces of timber joined together with rough plankes and rafters running overthwart, which ſerue to convey burdens downe the river with the ſtreame: the uſe and name whereof our countrimen haue brought from Rhene in Germanie, and tearme them as the Germans doe Flotes. By the river ſide, ſtand Shrawerden, a Caſtle ſometime of the Earles of Arundell, but afterwards, belonging to Sir Thomas Bromley, late Lord Chancellor of England: Knocking Caſtle, built by the Lords Le Strange, from whom it deſcended hereditarily unto the
C Stanleies Earles of Darbie; and neere unto it Neſſe, over which there mounteth up right a craggie cliffe, with a caue much talked of: which togither with Cheſwarden, King Henrie the Second gaue unto John Le Strange; from whom by divers branches are ſprung the moſt honorable families of the Stranges de Knocking, Avindelegh, Elleſmer, Blickmere, Lutheham and Hunſtanſton in Norfolke. Now from thoſe of Knocking, when as the laſt died without any iſſue male, the inheritance deſcended by Joan a ſole daughter, and the wife of George Stanley, unto the houſe of Darby. Farther from the river, even upon the Weſt frontier of the ſhire, lieth Oſweſtre, or Oſwaldſtre, in Britiſh Croix Oſwalds, a little towne encloſed with a ditch and a wall, fortified alſo with a pretie caſtle: and in it there is great trafficke, eſpecially of D Welſh cottons of a ſlight and thinne webbe, which you may call in Latin Leviденſas, whereof there is bought and ſold heere every weeke great ſtore. It hath the name of Oſwald King of the Northumbers (whereas before time it was called Maſerfield) whom Penda the Pagan Prince of the Mercians both ſlew heere in a bloudy battaile, and after hee had ſlaine him, with monſtrous cruelty tare in peeces. Whence a Chriſtian Poet of good Antiquity verſified thus of him.

Flotes.

Shrawerden.

Knocking.

Neſſe.

Barons Le Strange.

20. Ed. 4.

Oſweſtre.

Welſh Cottons.

642.

Cujus et abſciſſum caput, abſciſſoſq; lacertos;
Et tribus affixos palis pendere cruentus
E Penda jubet: per quod reliquis exempla relinquat
Terroris manifeſta ſui, regemq; beatum
Eſſe probet miſerum: ſed cauſam fallit utramq;.
Victor enim fratris minimè timet Oſwius illum,
Imò timere facit: nec Rex miſer, imò beatus
Eſt, qui fonte boni fruitur ſemel et ſine fine.

Oſwald ſlaine.

Whoſe head and limbs diſmembred thus, that bloudy Penda takes,
And cauſeth to be hanged up, faſt fixed on three ſtakes:
His meaning was here by to ſtrike a terror to the reſt,
F And make him ſeeme a wretched wight, who was a king much bleſt.
But this his purpoſe fail's in both. Oſwy, his brother deare,
In his revenge was not affraid but rather makes him feare:
Nor miſerable is this Prince, but happy we may ſay,
Who now enjoy's the ſpring of good, and ſhall enioy for aye.

See in Northumberland.

This towne seemeth to haue had the first originall from devotion and religion: for, A the Christians of that age, counted it a most holy place; and Bede hath recorded, that here where Oswald was slaine, strange miracles haue beene wrought. But Madoc brother of Mereduc (as Caradoc of Lancarvan writeth) built it, and the Norman Fitz-Allans, who were Lords afterwards thereof, and Earles of Arundell, walled it about. The Eclipses in Aries.

Eclipses of the sunne in Aries haue beene most dangerous unto it: for, in the yeeres of our Lord 1542. and 1567. when the Eclipses of the sunne in Aries wrought their effects, it suffered very grievous losse by fire. And namely after this later eclipse, the fire spred it self so far, that there were burnt within the towne and suburbes about two hundred houses. A little beneath this Northwestward there is an hill entrench- B ed round about with a threefold ditch (they call it Hen-Dinas, that is, The old palace) The neighbour dwellers say confidently, it hath beene a citie: but others there bee that thinke it was the Campe of Penda, or Oswald. Scarce three miles from hence standeth Whittington, a castle not long agoe of the Fitz-Guarins, who deduced their pedigree from Sir Guarin de Metz, a Lorainois: but he tooke to wife the daughter and

Whittington

heire of William Peverell, who is reported to haue built Whittington, and begat Fulke

The life of Fulke, written in French.

the father of that most renowned Sir Fulke Fitz-Warin, of whose doubtfull deedes and variable adventures in the warres our ancestours spake great wonders, and Poemes were composed. In the reigne of Henry the Third, I finde that licence was granted unto Foulk Fitz-Warin to strengthen the Castle of Whittington, in competent C manner, as appeareth out of the Close rolles in the fifth of King Henry the Third.

Barons Fitzwarin.

The dignity of these Barons Fitz-Warins, had an end in an heire female, and in the age aforegoing passed by Hanford unto the Bourchiers now Earles of Bath. Beneath this Whittington, one VVrenoc sonne of Meuric held lands, who for his service

Latimer what it signifieth.

ought to be Latimer, that is, Truchman or Interpreter, betweene the English and the Welshmen. This note I out of an old Inquisition, that men may understand what the said name Latimer importeth: which no man almost knew heretofore, and yet it hath beene a surname very currant and rife in this kingdome. At the North-west border of this shire, there offer themselues to bee seene, first Shenton the seat of the respective familie of the Needhams; Blakemere an ancient Manour of the Lords D le Strange; and then Whitchurch, or Album Monasterium, where I saw some monuments of the Talbots, but principally of that renowned English Achilles Sir Iohn Talbot the first Earle of Shrewsbury out of this house: whose Epitaph, that the reader may see the forme of the Inscriptions, according to that age, I will here put downe, although it is little beseeming so worthy and heroicall a knight.

VVhite-Church, Album Monasterium.

ORATE PRO ANIMA PRAENOBILIS DOMINI, DOMINI IOANNIS TALBOTT QVONDAM COMITIS SALOPIAE, DOMINI TALBOTT, DOMINI FVRNIVALL, DOMINI VERDON, DOMINI STRANGE DE BLACK-MERE, ET MARESCALLI FRANCIAE, QVI OBIIT IN BELLO APVD BVRDEVVS. VII. IVLII, M. CCCC. LIII. E

That is:

Pray for the soule of the right Noble Lord, Sir Iohn Talbot, sometimes Earle of Shrewsburie, Lord Talbot, Lord Furnivall, Lord Verdon, Lord Strange de Black-Mere, and Mareshall of France: Who died in the battaile at Burdews. VII. IVLII, M. CCCC. LIII. F

Vnto this family of the Talbots there accrewed by marriage-right the inheritance of the Barons Le Strange of Blackmere, who were surnamed Le Strange commonly, and Extranei in Latin Records, for that they were strangers brought hether by King Henrie the Second, and in short time their house was farre propagated. These of

Black-

A Blackmere were much enriched by an heire of W. de Albo-monaſterio, or this Whit-Church, and alſo by one of the heires of Iohn Lord Giffard of Brimsfeild, of ancient nobility in Gloceſter-ſhire, by the onely daughter of Walter Lord Clifford.

More Weſtward lieth Elleſmer a little territorie, but rich and fruitfull, which, as the Chronologie of Cheſter teſtifieth, King Iohn gaue with the Caſtle, to Lhewellin Prince of North-Wales in marriage, with Ioane his baſe daughter. Afterwards in the time of King Henrie the Third it came to the family of the Stranges. But now it hath his Baron Sir Thomas Egerton, a man whom for his ſingular wiſdome and ſincere equity Queene Elizabeth choſe to be Lord Keeper of the great Seale, and King Iames making him Lord Chancellour advanced to the higheſt honour of the long B roabe, and withall adorned with the honorable title of Baron of Elleſmer.

Elleſmer, 1205.

Baron of Elleſmer.

Now let us briefely adde ſomewhat of the Earles of Shrewsbury: Roger de Beleſmo, otherwiſe, Montgomerie, was created the firſt Earle of Shrewsbury by King William the Conquerour, unto whom he alotted alſo the greateſt part of this Shire. After him ſucceeded firſt, his eldeſt ſonne Hugh, ſlaine in Wales without iſſue. Then Robert another of his ſonnes, a man outrageouſly cruell toward his owne ſonnes and hoſtages, whoſe eies with his owne hands he plucked out and gelded. But afterwards being convict of high treaſon, hee was kept in perpetuall priſon by King Henrie the Firſt, and ſo ſuffred condigne puniſhment for his notorious wickedneſſe. Then was his Earldome made over unto Queene Adeliza for her dowry. Many ages after, C King Henrie the Sixth in the 20. yeere of his reigne, promoted to this honor Iohn Lord Talbot, whom both Nature bred, and his diſpoſition inured unto warlicke proweſſe. And in the 24. yeere of his reigne hee beſtowed moreover upon the ſame Iohn, whom in the Patent he calleth Earle of Shrewsbery, and of Weisford, the title of Earle of Waterford, the Baronie of Dongarvan, and the Seneſchalſie or Stewardſhip of Ireland. But when he was ſlaine at Caſtilion vpon Dordon neare Burdeaux together with his younger ſonne Sir Iohn Talbot Vicount L'iſle, after he had foure and twenty yeeres together marched with victorious armes over a great part of France; his ſonne Iohn by the daughter and one of the heires of Sir Thomas Neuill Lord Furnivall, ſucceeded: who ſiding with the houſe of Lancaſter was ſlaine fighting valerouſly in the D forefront of the battell of Northampton. From him by a daughter of the Earle of Ormond came Iohn the third Earle of Shrewsbury, & Sir Gilbert Talbot captaine of Callis, from whō the Talbots of Graſton deſcended. This third Iohn had by his wife Katharin daughter to H. Duke of Buckingham, George the fourth Earle, who ſerved King Henrie the Seventh valiantly and conſtantly at the battaile of Stoke. And he by Anne his wife, daughter of William Lord Haſtings, had Francis the fifth Earle who begat of Marie daughter to Th. Lord Dacre of Gilleſland, George the ſixt Earle a man of approved fidelity in weighty affaires of State, whoſe ſonne Gilbert by his wife Gertrud daughter to Th. Earle of Rutland, the ſeventh Earle maintaineth at this day his place left unto him by his anceſtours, with right great honor and commendati-E on for his vertues.

Earles of Shrewsbury.

H. Huntingdon in his booke of the miſeries of life.

See in Ireland.

who now 1618 came to ye Earledome.

In this region there are Pariſhes much about 170.

F CHES-

[

CESTRIÆ COMITATVS PALATINVS, (PRAETER CIVITATEM CESTRIAE) CONTINET IN SE OPPIDA MERCATORIA XII. ECCLESIASQVE PAROCHIALES LXXXVI.

SEPTENTRIO.

EBORACENSIS PARS.

MARE HIBERNICVM.

LANCASTRIÆ PARS.

DARBIÆ PARS.

STAFFORDIÆ PARS.

SALOPIÆ PARS.

FLINT PARS.

DENBIGH PARS.

OCCIDENS.

ORIENS.

MERIDIES.

Halsall
The moss
Barton
Alker chap.
Formby
Alt flu.
Ince
Crosby parua
Crosby magna Letherland
Bankhall
Kirkdale Lirpoole
Lirpoole haven
The black rock
Wallasee
Pooton Seacomb Bidston
The ferry
Meales mag.
Morton
Claghton
Tranmole
Helbree insula
Salgal massy
Vpton
Oxton
Newton
Ouer Bebington
Grassley
Meales pua
Wood church
Bebington
W. Kirkby
Calday m.
Calday Laudecon
Prenton Brombro Irby Thingwall
Pooton lanceld
Estam Thurstanton Branston
Oldfeld Brinston Hooton Haselwall
Gaton
Thornton
Raby
Poole
Leighton
Childer thornton
Stanney Willaston
Whethy
Stoke
Neston m.
Ness
Sutton court Ledsom
Burton
Podington
Capenhurst
Shotwik Lea Charlton Mullinton Crabwall
Blacon
Basmgwark Abbay Cornish
Holiwell
Flint Haulkm
Northorp
Dee fluuius Yowley cast.
Harden cast.
Breiton Hall
Broughton Marlsjon
Hondbridge
Dodleston Eccleston
Eaton Pulton Pulford
Kinarton
Burton
Darland Merford
Horsheath
Greesford
Abenbury
Wrixham
Markwell
Dee flu.
CHESTER
Lach Rowton
Warton
Boughton
Huntington Churton heath
Lea hall
Salton
Huxley Golborn
Tatnall
Broxton
Hanley
Aldford
Aldersey
Harthill chap.
Alen Churton
Coddington
Buckley
Farnton
Chuley
Clutton
Dokinton
Barton
Cgerton Edge Norbury Streton
Holt pk
Holt Grafton Tilston
Malpas
Shocklach
Cappel Iscoid
Kidnalton
Old castle Worthenbury
Penketh
Curdley
Apleton
Hut Garston
Hale wood
Speak hall
Hale Runkorn
Norton
Halton
Stockham
Rocksauage
Weston
Sutton
Aston
Aston grange
Preeny
Dutton
Warrington
Frodsham
Ince Stanlow
Netherton
Woodhouses
Newton
Thornton
Elton Helsby
Kingsley
Norley
Croton
Acton Werchm.
Hartford
Cuddington
Vale royall
Whetgate
Over Weever
Darnal grange
Barrow
Ashton
Olton
Stanford Vekenton
Kelsall
Wetnall ch.
Cholmston
Minshull
Aston
Poole
Worleston
Alpram
Calveley
Wardley
Bonbury
Spurstow
Stoke Acton Dickarton
Faddeley
Walshrow
Baddeley
Brindley
Barderton
Wrenbury
Ridley
Sandford bridge
Marbury
Coisley
Worfwall
Combermere
Blakemere
Whitchurch
Hinton
Burland
Tiley Bearston
Wibonbury
Wrine hill
Hatherton
Duddington
Hankylow
Audleym
Wore ch.
Healy cast.
Madeley
Annaley chap.
Knighton
Blore Heath
Muckleston
Newcastell
Betley
Audley
Audley end
Talk
New chap
Lawton
Mowcopp hill
Rodehall
Asbury Wheelock
Beachton
Haslington
Crew
Okehanger mere Hassall
Algier
Copnall
Mokskopnall
Leighton
Wheelock flu.
Minshullvernon
Yardswik
Wimbaldsley
Tetton
Bradwall
Arcliud
Smethwik
Sandbach
Elton Moston
Ocleston
Warmichm
Middlewich
Kinderton
Sproston
Cotton
Hulms ch.
Damport
Completon
Walhill
Dane Inch
Morton
Rushton
Bidulph
Harton
Swithamley Grange
Shutlingslo Hill
Warmford
Marbroke
Dane flu.
Doue flu.
Churnet flu.
Trent flu.
Tarporley
Wirwin
Monley
Stony Dunham
Bridge Trafford
Moulsworth
The Pyle
Barrow
Ashton
Darby
Delamere forrest
Marton
Sandyway
Whetgate
Over Weever
Darnal grange Cliff Stanthorn
Lea Wimbaldsley
Heton
Bostock
Warton
Cranage
Armitage
Carincham
Somerford
Swetnam
Rauenscroft
Craxton
Eaton
Bosley
Whatcroft
Rudheath
Gosetree
Marton
North rode Shipbroke
Allostock
Lostock flu.
Lestwich
Dancham
Peuer flu.
Milnthorse
Siddington ch.
Capeston
Henshaw
Henbury
Pexhull
Chelford ch.
Snelston
Ollerton
Ouer Peuer
Nether Peuer
Lostock
Holford
Bartherton
Lea ch.
Barton
Northwich
Wincham
Marbury
Toft
Pickmer
Nether Tabley
Bouthes
Knutsford
Chap. in y fitrete
Budworth mag.
Grymsdich
Darsbury
Preston
Norton
Runkorn
Kelsall
Halton
Streiton ch.
Ardley
Ouer Tabley
Tatton
Mere Bradley Lachford
High high Goppenhall
Thelwall
Limme
Marsey flu.
The Pede
Rixton
Warburton
Dunham
Bollin flu.
Altrincham
Bowdon
Carington
Ashton, on Marsey bank
Partington
Redgrave
Sale Timperley
Baguley
Northenden
Witchamshaw
Chedle
Bromhall
Dudsbury
Barlow
Marsey flu.
Stopford
Offerton
Pointon
Bramton
Marpul ch.
Narbury
Goyt flu.
Set flu.
Outerset
Heathfeld Berdhall
Firth flu.
Chapell firth
Marsh hall
Shaleross
Goyt flu.
Ouerton
Pot ch.
Falinbrome
Butley
Bollinton
Goyt houses
The 3. Shire mere Buxton well
Doue head
Doue flu.
The chamber
Sutton
Tideington
Ranow
Maxfeld forrest
Ridge Gaseworth Henshaw
Capeston
Milnthorse
Peuer flu.
Lostock flu.
Withington
Siddington ch.
Ouer Peuer
Toft Snelston
Ollerton
Chelford ch.
Pexhull
Henbury
Burtells
Maxfeld Mottram
Falinbrome
Butley
Bollinton
Pot ch.
Newton chap.
Ouerton
Goyt flu.
Goyt houses
The 3. Shire mere Buxton well
Doue head
Doue flu.
The chamber
Sutton
Tideington
Ranow
Maxfeld forrest
Ridge
Gaseworth
Shutlingslo Hill
Warmford
Marbroke
Dane flu.
Swithamley Grange Rushton
Bidulph
Harton
Dane Inch Completon
Walhill
Asbury
Morton
Mowcopp hill
Rodehall
Lawton
New chap
Talk
Audley end
Audley
Betley
Newcastell
Healy cast.
Madeley
Annaley chap.
Knighton
Blore Heath
Muckleston
Trent flu.
Bearston
Tiley
Burland
Combermere
Blakemere
Whitchurch Hinton
Worfwall
Marbury
Sandford bridge
Bromley
Hankylow
Audleym
Wore ch.
Wrenbury
Ridley Barderton
Wibonbury
Wrine hill
Hatherton
Duddington
Faddeley
Walshrow
Baddeley
Brindley
Barderton
Dickarton
Woolfry
Bickerton flu.
Stoke
Acton
Spurstow
Bonbury
Wardley
Calveley
Alpram
Flavards
Terton
Howfeld
Beeston cast.
Tatnall
Golborn
Broxton
Hanley
Aldford
Aldersey
Harthill chap.
Alen Churton
Coddington
Buckley Farnton
Chuley
Clutton
Dokinton
Barton
Cgerton Edge Norbury
Streton
Holt pk
Holt Grafton Tilston
Malpas
Shocklach
Cappel Iscoid
Kidnalton
Old castle
Worthenbury
Abenbury
Greesford
Wrixham
Markwell
Dee flu.
Penketh
Curdley
Apleton
Hut Garston
Hale wood
Speak hall
Hale Runkorn
Norton
Halton
Stockham
Rocksauage
Weston
Sutton
Aston
Aston grange Preeny
Dutton
Warrington
Frodsham
Ince Stanlow
Netherton
Woodhouses
Newton
Thornton
Elton Helsby
Kingsley
Norley
Croton
Acton Werchm.
Hartford
Cuddington
Vale royall
Whetgate
Over Weever
Darnal grange
Barrow
Ashton
Olton
Stanford Vekenton
Kelsall
Wetnall ch.
Cholmston
Minshull
Aston
Poole
Worleston
Alpram
Calveley
Wardley
Bonbury
Spurstow
Stoke Acton Dickarton
Faddeley
Walshrow
Baddeley
Brindley
Barderton
Wrenbury
Ridley
Sandford bridge
Marbury
Coisley
Worfwall
Combermere
Blakemere
Whitchurch
Hinton
Burland
Tiley Bearston
Wibonbury
Wrine hill
Hatherton
Duddington
Hankylow
Audleym
Wore ch.
Healy cast.
Madeley
Annaley chap.
Knighton
Blore Heath
Muckleston
Newcastell
Betley
Audley
Audley end
Talk
New chap
Lawton
Mowcopp hill
Rodehall
Asbury Wheelock
Beachton
Haslington
Crew
Okehanger mere Hassall
Algier
Copnall Mokskopnall
Leighton
Wheelock flu.
Minshullvernon
Yardswik
Wimbaldsley
Tetton
Bradwall
Arcliud
Smethwik
Sandbach
Elton Moston
Ocleston
Warmichm
Middlewich
Kinderton
Sproston
Cotton
Hulms ch.
Damport
Completon
Walhill
Dane Inch
Morton
Rushton
Bidulph
Harton
Swithamley Grange
Shutlingslo Hill
Warmford
Marbroke
Dane flu.
Doue flu.
Churnet flu.
Trent flu.
Tarporley
Wirwin
Monley
Stony Dunham
Bridge Trafford
Moulsworth
The Pyle
Barrow
Ashton
Darby Delamere forrest
Marton
Sandyway
Whetgate
Over Weever
Darnal grange Cliff Stanthorn
Lea Wimbaldsley
Heton
Bostock
Warton
Cranage
Armitage
Carincham
Somerford
Swetnam
Rauenscroft
Craxton
Eaton
Bosley
Whatcroft
Rudheath
Gosetree
Marton
North rode Shipbroke
Allostock
Lostock flu.
Lestwich
Dancham
Peuer flu.
Milnthorse
Siddington ch.
Capeston
Henshaw
Henbury
Pexhull
Chelford ch.
Snelston
Ollerton
Ouer Peuer
Nether Peuer
Lostock
Holford
Bartherton
Lea ch.
Barton
Northwich
Wincham
Marbury
Toft
Pickmer
Nether Tabley
Bouthes
Knutsford
Chap. in y fitrete
Budworth mag.
Grymsdich
Darsbury
Preston
Norton
Runkorn
Kelsall
Halton
Streiton ch.
Ardley
Ouer Tabley
Tatton
Mere Bradley Lachford
High high Goppenhall
Thelwall
Limme
Marsey flu.
The Pede
Rixton
Warburton
Dunham
Bollin flu.
Altrincham
Bowdon
Carington
Ashton, on Marsey bank
Partington
Redgrave
Sale Timperley
Baguley
Northenden
Witchamshaw
Chedle
Bromhall
Dudsbury
Barlow
Marsey flu.
Stopford
Offerton
Pointon
Bramton
Marpul ch.
Narbury
Goyt flu.
Set flu.
Outerset
Heathfeld Berdhall
Firth flu.
Chapell firth
Marsh hall
Shaleross
Goyt flu.
Ouerton
Pot ch.
Falinbrome
Butley
Bollinton
Goyt houses
The 3. Shire mere Buxton well
Doue head
Doue flu.
The chamber
Sutton
Tideington
Ranow
Maxfeld forrest
Ridge
Gaseworth
Shutlingslo Hill
Warmford
Marbroke
Dane flu.
Swithamley Grange Rushton
Bidulph
Harton
Dane Inch Completon
Walhill
Asbury
Morton
Mowcopp hill
Rodehall
Lawton
New chap
Talk
Audley end
Audley
Betley
Newcastell
Healy cast.
Madeley
Annaley chap.
Knighton
Blore Heath
Muckleston
Trent flu.
Bearston
Tiley
Burland
Combermere
Blakemere
Whitchurch Hinton
Worfwall
Marbury
Sandford bridge
Bromley
Hankylow
Audleym
Wore ch.
Wrenbury
Ridley Barderton
Wibonbury
Wrine hill
Hatherton
Duddington
Faddeley
Walshrow
Baddeley
Brindley
Barderton
Dickarton
Woolfry
Bickerton flu.
Stoke
Acton
Spurstow
Bonbury
Wardley
Calveley
Alpram
Flavards
Terton
Howfeld
Beeston cast.
Tatnall
Golborn
Broxton
Hanley
Aldford
Aldersey
Harthill chap.
Alen Churton
Coddington
Buckley Farnton
Chuley
Clutton
Dokinton
Barton
Cgerton Edge Norbury
Streton
Holt pk
Holt Grafton Tilston
Malpas
Shocklach
Cappel Iscoid
Kidnalton
Old castle
Worthenbury
Abenbury
Greesford
Wrixham
Markwell
Dee flu.
Penketh
Curdley
Apleton
Hut Garston
Hale wood
Speak hall
Hale Runkorn
Norton
Halton
Stockham
Rocksauage
Weston
Sutton
Aston
Aston grange Preeny
Dutton
Warrington
Frodsham
Ince Stanlow
Netherton
Woodhouses
Newton
Thornton
Elton Helsby
Kingsley
Norley
Croton
Acton Werchm.
Hartford
Cuddington
Vale royall
Whetgate
Over Weever
Darnal grange
Barrow
Ashton
Olton
Stanford Vekenton
Kelsall
Wetnall ch.
Cholmston
Minshull
Aston
Poole
Worleston
Alpram
Calveley
Wardley
Bonbury
Spurstow
Stoke Acton Dickarton
Faddeley
Walshrow
Baddeley
Brindley
Barderton
Wrenbury
Ridley
Sandford bridge
Marbury
Coisley
Worfwall
Combermere
Blakemere
Whitchurch
Hinton
Burland
Tiley Bearston
Wibonbury
Wrine hill
Hatherton
Duddington
Hankylow
Audleym
Wore ch.
Healy cast.
Madeley
Annaley chap.
Knighton
Blore Heath
Muckleston
Newcastell
Betley
Audley
Audley end
Talk
New chap
Lawton
Mowcopp hill
Rodehall
Asbury Wheelock
Beachton
Haslington
Crew
Okehanger mere Hassall
Algier
Copnall Mokskopnall
Leighton
Wheelock flu.
Minshullvernon
Yardswik
Wimbaldsley
Tetton
Bradwall
Arcliud
Smethwik
Sandbach
Elton Moston
Ocleston
Warmichm
Middlewich
Kinderton
Sproston
Cotton
Hulms ch.
Damport
Completon
Walhill
Dane Inch
Morton
Rushton
Bidulph
Harton
Swithamley Grange
Shutlingslo Hill
Warmford
Marbroke
Dane flu.
Doue flu.
Churnet flu.
Trent flu.
Tarporley
Wirwin
Monley
Stony Dunham
Bridge Trafford
Moulsworth
The Pyle
Barrow
Ashton
Darby Delamere forrest
Marton
Sandyway
Whetgate
Over Weever
Darnal grange Cliff Stanthorn
Lea Wimbaldsley
Heton
Bostock
Warton
Cranage
Armitage
Carincham
Somerford
Swetnam
Rauenscroft
Craxton
Eaton
Bosley
Whatcroft
Rudheath
Gosetree
Marton
North rode Shipbroke
Allostock
Lostock flu.
Lestwich
Dancham
Peuer flu.
Milnthorse
Siddington ch.
Capeston
Henshaw
Henbury
Pexhull
Chelford ch.
Snelston
Ollerton
Ouer Peuer
Nether Peuer
Lostock
Holford
Bartherton
Lea ch.
Barton
Northwich
Wincham
Marbury
Toft
Pickmer
Nether Tabley
Bouthes
Knutsford
Chap. in y fitrete
Budworth mag.
Grymsdich
Darsbury
Preston
Norton
Runkorn
Kelsall
Halton
Streiton ch.
Ardley
Ouer Tabley
Tatton
Mere Bradley Lachford
High high Goppenhall
Thelwall
Limme
Marsey flu.
The Pede
Rixton
Warburton
Dunham
Bollin flu.
Altrincham
Bowdon
Carington
Ashton, on Marsey bank
Partington
Redgrave
Sale Timperley
Baguley
Northenden
Witchamshaw
Chedle
Bromhall
Dudsbury
Barlow
Marsey flu.
Stopford
Offerton
Pointon
Bramton
Marpul ch.
Narbury
Goyt flu.
Set flu.
Outerset
Heathfeld Berdhall
Firth flu.
Chapell firth
Marsh hall
Shaleross
Goyt flu.
Ouerton
Pot ch.
Falinbrome
Butley
Bollinton
Goyt houses
The 3. Shire mere Buxton well
Doue head
Doue flu.
The chamber
Sutton
Tideington
Ranow
Maxfeld forrest
Ridge
Gaseworth
Shutlingslo Hill
Warmford
Marbroke
Dane flu.
Swithamley Grange Rushton
Bidulph
Harton
Dane Inch Completon
Walhill
Asbury
Morton
Mowcopp hill
Rodehall
Lawton
New chap
Talk
Audley end
Audley
Betley
Newcastell
Healy cast.
Madeley
Annaley chap.
Knighton
Blore Heath
Muckleston
Trent flu.
Bearston
Tiley
Burland
Combermere
Blakemere
Whitchurch Hinton
Worfwall
Marbury
Sandford bridge
Bromley
Hankylow
Audleym
Wore ch.
Wrenbury
Ridley Barderton
Wibonbury
Wrine hill
Hatherton
Duddington
Faddeley
Walshrow
Baddeley
Brindley
Barderton
Dickarton
Woolfry
Bickerton flu.
Stoke
Acton
Spurstow
Bonbury
Wardley
Calveley
Alpram
Flavards
Terton
Howfeld
Beeston cast.
Tatnall
Golborn
Broxton
Hanley
Aldford
Aldersey
Harthill chap.
Alen Churton
Coddington
Buckley Farnton
Chuley
Clutton
Dokinton
Barton
Cgerton Edge Norbury
Streton
Holt pk
Holt Grafton Tilston
Malpas
Shocklach
Cappel Iscoid
Kidnalton
Old castle
Worthenbury
Abenbury
Greesford
Wrixham
Markwell
Dee flu.

Scala milliarium Anglicorum.
1 2 3 4 5 6

NOMINA HVNDRED. IN HOC COMITATV.

A. Bucklow Hundred.
B. Werrall Hundred.
C. Maxfeld Hundred.
D. Northwich Hundred.
E. Nantwich Hundred.
F. Edsbury Hundred.
G. Broxton Hundred.

LOCORVM SIGNIFICATIONES.

LAT.	ANG.
Oppida Mercatoria.	Markitt townes.
Castella.	Castells.
Ecclesiæ Parochiales.	Parish churches.
Nobilium ædes.	Gentlewens houses
Villæ.	Villages.

London printed and sould by P. Stent

A

CHES-SHIRE.

B THE fifth and laſt of thoſe countries, which in old time the CORNAVII held, is the County of Cheſter; in the Saxon tongue Ceaſtep-ſcýpe, commonly Chesſhire, and The Countie Palatine of Cheſter (for that the Earles thereof had Roialties and princely priviledges belonging to them; and all the inhabitants owed alleagance and fealty to them, as they did to the King.) As for this tearme Palatine, that I may reherſe againe, that which I haue ſaid before of this name, was in times paſt common to all thoſe, who bare any Office in the Kings court or palace: and in that age Comes Palatinus, was a title of dignitie conferred upon him who before was Palatinus, with authoritie to heare and determine cauſes in his owne territorie; and as well his Nobles, whom they called Barons, as his Vaſſals were bound to repaire unto the Palace of the ſaid Count, both to give him adviſe and alſo to giue their attendance, and furniſh his Court with their preſence.

Countie Palatine.

Petr. Pithæus in the deſcription of Campaine.

C This country (as William of Malmesbury ſaith) Is ſcarce of corne, but eſpecially of wheat, yet plentifull in cattaile and fiſh. Howbeit Ranulph the Monke of Cheſter, affirmeth the contrary: Whatſoever Malmesbury dreamed (ſaith he) vpon the relation of others, it aboundeth with all kind of victuals, plenteous in corne, fleſh, fiſh, and ſalmons eſpecially, of the very beſt: it maintaineth trade with many commodities, and maketh good returne. For why, in the confines thereof it hath ſalt pits, mines, and mettals. And this moreover will I adde: the graſſe and fodder there, is of that goodneſſe and vertue, that cheeſes be made heere in great number of a moſt pleaſing and delicate taſt, ſuch as all England againe affourdeth not the like; no, though the beſt dayriwomen otherwiſe and skilfulleſt in cheeſe making be had from hence. And whiles I am writing

Ioh. Tilius.

The moſt commendable cheeſes.

D this, I cannot chuſe but meruaile by the way at that which Strabo writeth, That in his time ſome Britans could not skill of making cheeſe: and that Plinie afterwards wondered: That barbarous nations, who lived of milke, either knew not or deſpiſed, for ſo many ages, the commodity of cheeſe, who otherwiſe had the feat of crudding it to a pleaſant tartneſſe, and to fat butyr. Whereby it may be gathered, that the deviſe of making cheeſe came into Britaine from the Romans. But howſoever this region in fertility of ſoile commeth behind many countries in England, yet hath it alwaies bred and reared more Gentry than the reſt: For, you have not in all England againe any one province beſide, that in old time either brought more valerous Gentlemen into the field, or had more families in it of Knights degree. On the Southſide it is hemmed

E in with Shroppſhire, on the Eaſtſide with Staffordſhire, & Darbyſhire, on the North with Lancaſhire, and on the Weſt, with Denbigh and Flint ſhires. Toward the North-weſt it runneth far into the ſea with a long cantle * or Promontory, which being encloſed within two Creekes receiveth the Ocean on both ſides entring into the land: into which two Creekes alſo all the rivers of this Shire doe diſcharge themſelves. Into that creeke which is more Weſterne paſſeth the river Dee that divideth the country from Denbighſhire: into that on the Eaſt-ſide, both Wever, which runneth through the mids of the Shire, and Merſey alſo, that parteth it from Lancaſhire, iſſue themſelves. Neither ſee I any better way of deſcribing this County, than if I follow the very tracts of theſe rivers. For, all the places of greateſt note, are ſituate by

* Wirrall.

F the ſides of them. But before I enter into any particular deſcription, I will firſt propoſe out of Lucian the Monke, thus much in commendation of Chesſhire: for he is a rare author and lived a little after the Conqueſt. If any man be deſirous (ſaith he) either fully, or as neere as may be, to treat of the inhabitants, according to the diſpoſition of their maners, in reſpect of others that live in ſundry places of the realme. They are found to be partly different from the reſt of Engliſh, partly better, and partly equall unto them.

Lucian the Monke, of the praiſe of Cheſter.

But

But they ſeeme eſpecially (the beſt point to be conſidered in a generall triall of maners) in A feaſting friendly, at meat cheerefull, in giving entertainment liberall, ſoone angry but not much, and as ſoone pacified, lauiſh in words, impatient of ſeruitude, mercifull to the afflicted, compaſsionate toward the poore, kind to their kinred, ſpary of their labour, void of diſſimulation and doubleneſſe of heart, nothing greedy in eating, farre from dangerous practiſes, yet by a certaine licentious liberty, bold in borowing many times others men goods. They abound in woods and paſtures, they are rich in fleſh and cattaile, confining on the one ſide vpon the Welſh Britans, and by a long entercourſe and transfuſion of their maners, for the moſt part like vnto them. This alſo is to be conſidered, in what ſort the Country of Cheſter encloſed vpon one ſide with the limite of the wood Lime, by a certaine diſtinct pri- B viledge from all other Engliſhmen is free, and by the Indulgences of Kings and excellencies of Earles hath beene wont in aſſemblies of the people to attend vpon the Earles ſword rather than the Kings Crowne: and within their precinct to heare, and determine the greateſt matters with more liberty. Cheſter it ſelfe is a place of receit for the Iriſh, a neighbour to the Welſh, and plentifully ſerued with corne by the Engliſh: Finely ſeated, with gates anciently built, approued in hard and dangerous difficulties. In regard of the river and proſpect of the cie together, worthy according to the name to be called a Citie: garded with watch of holy and religious men, and, through the mercy of our Saviour, alwaies fenced and fortified with the merciſull aſsiſtance of the Almighty.

Deva. * The river Dee.

The river * Dee, called in Latin Deva, in Britiſh Dyffyr-dwy, that is, the water of C
Dwy, breeding very great plenty of Salmons, ariſeth out of two fountaines in Wales; and thereof men thinke it tooke the name: for Dwy in their tongue ſignifieth Two. Yet others, obſeruing alſo the ſignification of the word, interpret it Black-water, others againe, Gods water, or Diuine water. But although Auſonius noteth that a Spring hallowed to the Gods was named Diuvona in the ancient Gaules tongue (which was all one with the Britiſh) and in old time all rivers were reputed, Διόπετες, that is, Deſcending from Heaven, yea and our Britans yeelded divine honour unto rivers, as Gildas writeth, yet I ſee not why they ſhould attribute Divinitie to this river Dwy above all others. The Theſſalians, as we read, gave to the river Pæneus divine honor, for the pleaſantneſſe thereof; the Scithyans to Danubius for the largeneſſe; the Germans to D
Rhene becauſe it was counted a judge in the queſtion of true and undefiled wedlock: But wherefore they ſhould impoſe a divine name, vpon this river I ſee no reaſon, as I ſaid before; unleſſe peradventure, becauſe now and then it changed the chanell, and thereby foreſhewed a ſure token of victorie to the inhabitants upon it, when they were in hoſtility one with another, according as it inclined more to this ſide or to that, after it had left the chanell: for, thus hath Giraldus Cambrenſis is recorded, who in ſome ſort beleeved it: Or elſe, becauſe they obſerved that contrarie to the wonted maner of other rivers, upon the fall of much raine it aroſe but little, and ſo often as the South wind beateth long upon it, it ſwelleth and extraordinarily overfloweth the grounds adjoining. Peradventure alſo the Chriſtian Britans thought the water of E this river to be holy: For, it is written, that when they ſtood ready to joine battaile with the Engliſh Saxons and had kiſſed the earth, they dranke alſo very devoutly of this river, in memoriall of Chriſts moſt ſacred and pretious bloud. But, Dee which ſeemeth to ruſh rather than to run out of Wales, no ſooner is entred into Cheſhire but he paſſeth more mildly with a ſlower ſtreame by BONIVM, in ſome written copies of Antonine, BOVIVM, a Citie that had beene of great name in that age, and afterward a famous Monaſterie. Of the Chore or quire whereof, it was called by the Bonium.

Banchor.

Britans Bon-chor and Banchor, of the ancient Engliſh Bancopna-bỳpiȝe, and Banchor, and among many good and godly men, it foſtered and brought up (as ſome write) that moſt wicked Arch-heretick Pelagius, who iniuriouſly derogating from the grace F of God, troubled along time the Weſt Church with his peſtiferous Doctrine. Proſper Aquitanus in this verſe of his, termeth him the Britiſh adder, or Land-ſnake.

Peſtifero vomuit coluber ſermone Britannus.
A Britiſh ſnake, with venemous tongue,
Hath vomited his poiſon ſtrong.

Neither

Divona.

A Neither have I made mention of him for any other reason, but because it is behoveable to each one to know vices and venims. In this Monasterie, as saith Bede, there was such a number of Monkes that being divided into seven portions, which had everie of them a severall head and ruler over them, yet every one of these had no fewer than three hundred men who were wont to live all of their handy labour. Of whom Edilfred King of the Nordan-humbers slew 12. hundred, because they had implored in their prayers Christs assistance for the Christian Britans against the English-Saxons, then infidels. The profession of this Monasticall life (that I may digres a little) began, when pagane Tyrans enraged against Christians pursued them with bloudy persecutions. For then good devout men, that they might serue God in more safety and securitie, B withdrew themselves into the vast wildernesses of Ægypt, and not (as the Painims are wont with open mouth to giue it out) for to enwrape themselves willingly in more miseries because they would not be in miserie. Monkery. Rutilius Claudius.

Where they scattered themselves among mountaines and deserts, living in caues and little cells heere and there in holy meditations. At first solitarie and alone, whereupon in Greeke they were called Monachi, that is, Monkes: but after they thought it better (as the sociable nature of mankind required) to meete together at certaine times to serue God, and at length they beganne to cohabite and liue together for mutuall comfort, rather then like wilde beasts to walke up and downe in the deserts. Their profession was to pray, & by the labour of their own hands to get living C for themselves, and maintenance for the poore, and withall they vowed pouertie, obedience, and chastity. Athanasius first brought this kind of Monkes consisting of laymen into the West Church. Whereunto after that Saint Austen in Afrike, Saint Martin in France, and Congell in Britaine and Ireland had adioined the function of regular Clergy. It is incredible, how farre and wide they spred, how many and how great Cœnobies were built for them, so called of their communion of life; as also Monasteries, for that they kept still a certaine shew of solitarie living: and in those daies none were more sacred and holy than they, and accordingly they were reputed; considering how by their praiers to God, by their example, Doctrine, labour, and industry, they did exceeding much good not onely to themselves, but also to all mankind. But as the world grew worse and worse, so those their holy maners, as one said, D rebus cessere secundis, that is, Gave backward in time of prosperity. Now let me returne unto my matter, craving your pardon for this short digression.

After these daies, this Monasterie fell utterly to ruin; for, in the time of William of Malmesbury who lived presently after the Normans comming in, There remained heere, as he saith, so many tokens of Antiquity, so many walles of Churches half-downe, so many windings and turnings of gates, such heapes of rubbish and rammel, as hardly a man should have found elsewhere. But now is left to be seene scarcely the face and outward shew of a dead Citie or Monasterie, and the names onely remaine of two gates Port Hoghan and Port Cleis, which stand a mile asunder, betweene which are found E very oft peeces of the Romanes money. But, that I may tell you of one thing, this BONIVM or Banchor is not reckoned within this County but in Flintshire; a peece whereof severed (as it were) from the rest lieth here betweene Chesshire and Shroppshire. That Banchor of which Saint Bernard speaketh in the life of Malachie was in Ireland. Bonium or Banchor is of Flintshire.

Dee, where he entreth first into this shire seeth above him not farre from his banke, Malpas, upon an high hill: which had in it a Castle; and for the bad, narrow, and combrous way was tearmed in Latin Mala platea, that is, Ilstreet, & thence also tooke this later name Mal-pas from the Normans, whereas in times past the Englishmen, almost in the very same sense, called it Depenbach. The Baronie hereof Hugh Earle of Chester gave to Robert Fitz-Hugh: In the reigne of Henrie the second, William Patricke the sonne of William Patricke held the same: of whose line Robert Patricke F standing outlawed, lost it. After some few yeeres David of Mal-pas by * a writ of Recognisance, gat the one halfe of that towne which was Gilbert Clerkes: But a great part of this Baronie went afterwards hereditarily to those Suttons that are Barons of Dudley: and a part also thereof came to Urian Sampier. And from Philip a younger sonne of David of Mal-pas, is descended that worshipfull family of the Egertons, who Out of the Roll of Domesday of Chesshire. Barons of Malpas. * Per breve recognitionis.

who tooke this name from the place of their habitation: like as from other places, A diverſe Gentlemen of this race received the ſurnames Cotgrave, Overton, Coaington, and Golborn. As touching the name of this place, give me leave before I depart hence, in this ſerious worke, to inſert a prety jeſt out of Giraldus Cambrenſis. It happned, ſaith he, in our daies, that a certaine Iew travailing towards Shrewsbury, with the Archdeacon of this place, whoſe ſurname was Peche, that is, Sinne, and a Deane named Devill; when he heard by chance the Archdeacon telling, That his Archdeaconry began at a place called Il-ſtreet, and reached as farre as to Mal-pas toward Cheſter: He conſidering and underſtanding withall as well the Archdeacons ſurname as the Deanes, came out with this pleaſant and merry conceit, Would it not be a wonder (quoth he) and my fortune very good, if ever I get ſafe againe out of this country, where Sinne is the Archdeacon, and the Devill the Deane; where the entrance into the Archdeaconry is Il-ſtreet, and the going forth of it, Mal-pas. B

Itinerar. lib. 2. cap. 13.

From hence Dee runneth downe amaine by Shoclach, where ſometime was a Caſtle, by Aldford, belonging in times paſt to the Arderns; by Pouleſourd, where in the reigne of Henrie the third, Sir Raulph of Ormesby had his Caſtle, and by Eaton the ſeat of the famous family of Groſ-venour, that is, The great Hunter, whoſe poſterity now corruptly goe under the name of Gravenor.

Shoclach.

Groſvenour.

Somewhat higher, upon the ſame river neere unto Dee-mouth, which Ptolomee calleth SETEIA for Deia, ſtandeth the noble Citie which the ſaid Ptolomee named DEVNANA, Antonine the Emperour DEVA, of the river, the Britans Caer-Legion, Caer-Leon Vaur, Caer-Leon ar Dufyr Dwy, and by way of excellencie Caer, like as our anceſtours, the Engliſh Saxons Legea-ceaſtep, of The Legions campe, and we more ſhort, Weſt-Cheſter, of the Weſt ſituation, and ſimply Cheſter, according to the verſe. C

Deunana. Deva.

Cheſter.

Ceſtria de caſtris nomen quaſi Caſtria ſumpſit.
Cheſter of Caſtra tooke the name,
As if that Caſtria were the ſame.

For, theſe Britiſh names, without all doubt were derived from the Twentieth Legion named Victrix: This legion in the yeere that Galba the Emperour was the ſecond time Conſull, together with Titus Vinius, was tranſported over into Britaine, which being out of awe and therefore dreaded of the Lieutenants, as well thoſe which had beene Conſuls as Pretours, had Iulius Agricola appointed Lieutenant over it by Veſpaſian the Emperour; was at length placed and ſeated in this City which I ſuppoſe was not built many yeeres before, and ſet as one would ſay at the backe of the ORDOVICES, to reſtraine them: although there are ſome, who avouch it to be of greater antiquity, as they ſay, than the moone: as founded forſooth by Leon-Vaur the Giant, I know not how many hundred yeeres before. But the very name it ſelfe might giue the checke unto theſe triuiall antiquaries, and withhold them from ſo groſſe an errour. For, they cannot deny, but that Leon-Vaur in Britiſh ſignifieth a great Legion. Now, whether it ſtands more with reaſon and equity, that a Citie ſhould take name of a Great Legion, than of Leon a Giant, let the learned judge; ſeeing, that in the part of Spaine called Tarraconenſis, there is a realme now called Leon of the ſeventh Legion Germanica; conſidering alſo, that the twentieth Legion, which they tearmed Britannica, Valens Victrix, and ſome falſely Valeria Victrix, abode in this Citie, as Ptolomee, Antonine, and the ancient coine of Septimius Geta doe proue: by which, it appeareth for certaine, that this Citie alſo was a Colonie: For, in the reverſe or back-ſide thereof ſtandeth this Inſcription COL. DIVANA LEG. XX. VICTRIX. But to teſtifie the Romanes magnificence, there are remaining indeede at this day very few tokens, beſide pavements of foure ſquare checker worke: howbeit in the former ages it preſented many: which, Ranulph a Monke of this Citie ſhall tell you out of his Polychronicon in theſe his owne words. There be waies heere under the ground vaulted maruelouſly with ſtone worke, chambers having arched roufes over head, huge ſtones engraven with the names of ancient men: heere alſo are ſometimes digged uppeeces of money coined by Iulius Cæſar and other famous perſons, and ſtamped with their inſcriptions D E F

Cheſter, a Colonie of the Romans.

A inscriptions. Likewise Roger of Chester in his Policraticon, When I behold (saith he) the groundworke of buildings in the streets laid with monstrous big stones, it seemeth that it hath beene founded by the painfull labour of Romans or Giants, rather than by the sweat of Britans. This Citie built in forme of a quadrant, foure square, is enclosed with a wall that taketh up more than two miles in compasse, and hath eleven parishes. But that of Saint Iohns without the Northgate was the faireſt, being a stately and solemne building, as appeareth by the remaines, wherein were anciently Prebendaries, and, as some write, the Bishops See. Neere unto the river standeth the Castle upon a rockie hill, built by the Earles: where the Courts Palatine, and the Assises, as they call them, are kept twice a yeere.

B The houses are very faire built and along the chiefe streets are galleries or walking places, they call them Rowes having shops on both sides, through which a man may walke dry from one end unto the other. But it hath not continued evermore in one tenor of prosperity. First it was rased by Egfrid K. of Northumberland, then by the Danes, yet reedified againe by Aedelfled Lady of the Mercians: and soone after it saw King Eadgar in magnificent maner triumphing over the British Princes. For, sitting himselfe in a barge at the fore-decke, Kennadie King of the Scots, Malcoline K. of Cumberland, Macon King of Mann and of the Ilands, with all the Princes of Wales brought to do homage, and like watermen working at the Ore, rowed him along the river Dee, in a triumphant shew, to his great glory and joy of the beholders.

The Rowes.

Marianus, Scotus.

About the yeere. 960.

C Certaine yeeres after, and namely about the yeere of our redemption 1094. when as in a devout and religious emulation, as one saith, Princes stroue avie, that Cathedrall Churches and Minsters should bee erected in a more decent and seemelie forme, and when as Christendome rouzed as it were her selfe, and casting away her old habilimentes, did put on everiewhere the bright and white robe of the Churches; Hugh the first of the Norman bloud, that was Earle of Chester, repaired the Church which Earle Leofrick had formerlie founded in honour of the Virgin Saint Werburga, and by the advise of Anselm, whom hee had procured to come out of Normandie granted the same unto monkes. And now, it is notorious for the tombe of Henrie the Fourth, Emperour of Almaine, who as they say gaue over his empire and lived heere an Eremites life; and for the Bishops See, therein established. Which See immediatly after the Normans conquest, Peter bishop of Lichfield, translated from Lichfield hither: but when it was brought to Coventrie, and from thence into the ancient seat againe, West-chester lay a long time bereft of this Episcopall dignity, untill in our fathers daies King Henrie the Eighth, having thrust out the monkes, ordeined Prebendaries, and restored a Bishop againe, under whom for his Diocese hee appointed this Countie, Lancashire, Richmond &c. and appointed the same to bee within the Province of the Archbishop of Yorke. But returne wee now to matters of greater antiquity. When as now the said Cathedrall church was built, the Earles that were of the Normans line, fortified the citie both with walles and castle. For as the Bishop held of the King that which belongeth to his Bishopricke (these are the words of Domesday-booke made by King William the Conquerour) so the Earles with their men held of the King wholy, all the rest, of the Citty. It paide Geld or tribute for fifty hides: and foure hundred thirty and one houses were thus Geldable: and seaven Mint-maisters. When the King himselfe in person came thither every Carrucata yeelded unto him two hundred Hesthas, and one tun full of Ale, and one Rusca of butyr. And in the same place, for the reedification of the City wall and the bridge, the Provost gaue warning by an edict, that out of every Hide in the County one man should come: and looke whose man came not his Lord or Maister was fined in fortie shillings to the King and the Earle. If I should particulate the scuffling and skirmishes hereabout betweene the Welsh and English in the beginning of the Normans time, their inrodes and outrodes, the often scarfyres of the Suburbs of Hanbrid beyond the bridge, whereupon he Welshmen call it Treboeth, that is, The burnt towne, as also the wall made there of Welsh mens sculls that went a great length, I should seeme to forget my selfe and thrust my sicle into the Historians harvest.

Churches repaired. Rodulphus Glaber.

D

E

F

But ever since the said time, hath Chester notablie flourished, and king Henry the Seventh made it a County by it selfe incorporate. Neither wanteth any thing there that may be required in a most flourishing City, but that the Ocean being offended and angrie (as it were) at certaine Mills in the very chanell of the river Dee, hath by little withdrawne himself backe, and affoordeth not unto the citie the commoditie of an haven, as heretofore. The Longitude of this place is twentie degrees and three and twentie scruples: the Latitude three and fiftie degrees and eleven scruples. If you desire to know more touching this citie, haue here these reports out of Lucian that monke abouesaid, who lived almost fiue hundered yeeres agoe. First, it is to bee considered, that Chester is built as a Citie, the site whereof inviteth and alloureth the eye, which beeing situate in the VVest partes of Britaine, was in times past a place of receipt to the Legions comming a farre off to repose themselues, and served sufficientlie to keepe the keies, as I may say, of Ireland, for the Romans, to preserue the limite of their Empire. For, beeing opposite to the North-east part of Ireland, it openeth waie for passage of ships and mariners with spred saile passing not often but continuallie to and fro, as also for the commodities of sundrie sortes of merchandise. And whiles it casteth an eye forward into the East; it looketh toward not onelie the See of Rome and the Empire thereof, but the whole world also: so that it standeth forth as a kenning place to the view of eyes: that there may bee knowne valiant exploites, and the long traine and consequence of things; as also whatsoever throughout the world hath beene done by all persons, in all places, and at all times: and what ever hath beene yll done may also bee avoided and taken heed of. VVhich Citie having foure gates from the foure cardinall windes on the East side, hath a prospect toward India, on the VVest toward Ireland, North-Eastward the greater Norway, and Southward that streit and narrow Angle, which diuine severity, by reason of civill and home-discords, hath left unto the Britans. VVhich long since by their bitter variance haue caused the name of Britaine to bee changed into the name of England. Over and beside, Chester hath by Gods gift a river to enrich and adorne it; the same faire and fishfull, hard by the Citie walles: and on the South side a rode and harbour for shippes comming from Gascoine, Spaine, and Germanie, which with the helpe and direction of Christ, by the labour and wisdome of merchants, repaire and refresh the heart of the City with many good things: that wee beeing comforted every waie by our Gods grace, may also drinke wine often, more frankelie and plentuouslie: because those Countries enjoy the fruite of the Vineyards aboundantlie; Moreover the open sea ceaseth not to visite it everie daie with a tide, which according as the broad shelues and barres of sands are opened or hidden by tides and ebbes incessantlie, is wont more or lesse either to send or exchange one thing or other, and by his reciprocall flowand returnes, either to bring in or to carrie out somewhat.

From the Citie, Northwestward, there shooteth out a languet of land, or promontorie of the maine-land into the sea, enclosed on the one side with Dee mouth, on the other side with the river Mersey: wee call it Wirall: the Welsh Britans, for that it is an angle, terme it Kill-gury. In old time it was all forest and not inhabited, as the dwellers report, but King Edward the Third disforested it: Yet now, beset it is with townes on everie side: howbeit more beholden to the sea than to the soile: for, the land beareth small plentie of corne, the water yeeldeth great store of fish. At the entrie into it on the South side standeth Shotwich a castle of the Kings, upon the salt water: Vpon the North standeth Hooten, a mannour, which in King Richard the Second his time, came to the Stanleies, who fetch their pedigree from Alane Sylvestre upon whom Ranulph the first of that name, Earle of Chester, conferred the Bailly-wick of the Forest of Wirall, by delivering unto him an horne. Close unto this is Poole, from whence the Lords of the place that haue a long time flourished, tooke their name: and hard by it, Stanlaw, as the monkes of that place interpret it, a Stony hill: where, Iohn Lacy Conneſtable of Chester founded a little monasterie, which afterwards by reason of inundations was translated to Whaley in Lancashire.

Wirall.

Law, what it is.

1173.

In the vtmost brinke of this Promontorie, lieth a small, hungrie, barren and sandie

Isle

A Isle, called Il-bre, which had sometime a little cell of monkes in it. More within the Country and Eastward from Wirall, you meet with a famous forest, named the Forest of Delamere, the Foresters whereof by hereditary succession, are the Dawns of Vrkinton, descended of a worshipfull stocke, from Ranulph de Kingleigh, unto whom Ranulph the First, Earle of Chester gaue that Forestership, to bee held by right of inheritance. In this forrest Aedelfled, the famous Mercian Lady, built a little citie called Caer-bure, that is, by interpretation, Happy towne, which now having quite lost it selfe hath likewise lost that name, and is but an heape of rubbish and rammell, which they call, The Chamber in the Forrest. And about a mile or two from hence, are to be seene the ruines of Finborrow, another towne built by the same La-
B dy Aedelfled.

Il-bre.

Finborrow.

Through the upper part of this forest, the river Wever runneth, which ariseth out of a Poole in the South side of the shire at Ridly, the dwelling house of the respective and ancient familie of the Egertons: who flowered out of the Barons of Malpas, as I haue said. Nere hereunto is Bunbury contractly so called for Boniface Bury, for Saint Boniface was the patron Saint there, where the Egertons built a Colledge for priests. Over against which is Beeston which gaue surname to an ancient familie, & where upon a steepe rising hil, Beeston Castle towereth aloft with a turretted wall of a great cir-
C cuit. This castle the last Ranulph Earle of Chester built: whereof Leland our countrie man being rapt both with a Poeticall and Prophetical fury, writeth thus.

Ridly.

Beeston.

Assyrio rediens victor Ranulphus ab orbe,
Hoc posuit Castrum terrorem gentibus olim
Vicinis, patrieque sua memorabile vallum.
Nunc licet indignas patiatur fracta ruinas,
Tempus erit quando rursus caput exeret altum,
Vatibus antiquis si fas mihi credere vati.

When Ranulph from Assyria return'd with victorie;
As well the neighbour Nations to curbe and terrifie,
D As for to fense his owne country, this famous Fort he raif'd,
Whilom a stately thing, but now the pride thereof is raz'd.
And yet though at this present time, it be in meane estate
With crackes and breaches much defac'd, and foulie ruinate;
The day will come when it againe the head aloft shall heaue,
If antient prophets I my selfe a prophet, may beleeue.

But to returne to the river, Wever first holdeth his course Southward, not farre from Woodhay, where dwelt a long time that family of the Wilburhams knights in great
E reputation; also by Bulkeley and Cholmondley which imparted their names to worshipfull houses of knights degree; not farre off on the one hand from Baddeley the habitation in times past of the ancient familie de Praerijs: of the other, from Cumbermer, in which William Malbedeng founded a little religious house. Where this river commeth to the South limit of this shire, it passeth through low places; wherein, as also elsewhere, the people finde often times and get out of the ground, trees that haue lien buried, as it is thought, there, ever since Noahs floud. But afterwards, watering fruitful fields, he taketh to him out of the East a riveret by which standeth Wibbenbury, so called of Wibba, king of the Mercian. Hard to it lie, Hatherton, the seat in old time of the Orbeies, then of the Corbetts, but now of the Smithes; Dodinton,
F the possession of the Delveses; Batherton, of the Griphins; Shavinton of the Wodenoths (who by that name may seeme to haue descended from the English-Saxons) beside the places of other respective families wherewith this County everywhere abounded. From thence runneth Wever downe by Nant-wich, not farre from Middlewich, and so to Northwich. These are verie famous Salt-wiches, fiue or sixe miles distant asunder, where brine or salt water is drawne out of pittes, which they Woodhay.

Bulkley.

1134.

Trees under ground.

Salt pits.

powre not upon wood while it burneth; as the ancient Gaules and Germans were A wont to doe, but boile over the fire, to make salt thereof. Neither doubt I, that these were knowne unto the Romans, and that from hence was usually paied the Custome for salt called Salarium. For, there went a notable high way from Middlewich to Northwich, raised with gravell to such an hight, that a man may easilie acknowledge that it was a worke of the Romans, seeing that all this coun-trie over, gravaile is so scarce: and from thence at this daie it is carried to private mens uses.

Mathew Paris writeth, that King Henrie the Third stopped up these Salt-pits, B when in hostile manner hee wasted this shire: because the Welshmen, so tumultuous in those daies, should not haue any victuals or provision from thence. But when the faire beames of peace beganne once to shine out, they were opened a-Nantwich. gaine. Nantwich, which the river Wever first visiteth, is reputed the greatest and and fairest built towne of all this shire after Chester, the Britans call it Hellath wen, that is, The white Wich or Salt pitte, because the whitest salt is there boiled: and such as writ in Latine named it Vicus Malbanus, haplie of one William named Malbe- deng and Malbanc, unto whom, at the Normans Conquest of England, it was allotted. It hath one onelie salt pitte, they call it the Brine pitte, about some foure-teene foote from the river, out of which they convey salt water by troughes of wood into houses adioyning, wherein there stand little barrels pitched fast in the C ground, which they fill with that water, and at the ringing of a bell, they beginne to make fire under the leades; whereof they haue sixe in everie house, and therein seeth the said water: then certaine women, they call them Wallers with little wooden rakes fetch up the salt from the bothom, and put it in baskets, they call them Salt barowes, out of which the liquor runneth, and the pure salt remaineth.
The Church (and but one they haue) is passing faire, and belonged, as I haue heard, unto the Abbay of Cumbermer: from hence, Wever holding on his course crooked now doubted against to that name. enough, is augmented with a brooke comming out of the East, which runneth down from Crew, a place inhabited in old time by a notable familie of that name. And far-Calveley. ther yet from the West side of the river, Calveley sheweth it selfe, which gaue D both habitation and name to the worthie familie of the Calveleys, out of which in the reigne of Richard the Second, Sir Hugh Calveley knight, was for his chivalrie in France so renowned, that there occurred no hardie exploit but his proweesse would goe through it. From thence Wever hieth apace by Minshull, the house of the Vale roiall. Minshulls, and by Vale Roiall, an Abbay founded by King Edward the First in a most Northwich. pleasant valley, where now dwelleth the ancient familie of the Holcrofts, unto North- wich, in British called Hellath Du, that is, The Black salt pitte: where also verie neere the brinke of the river Dan, there is a most plentifull and deepe Brine-pit, with staires made about it, by which they that draw water out of it in lether buckets, ascend halfe naked into the troughes, and powre it thereinto, by which it is carried into the E wich houses, about which there stand on everie side many stakes and piles of wood.
Here Wever receiveth into his chanell the river Dan, whose tract and streame I will now follow.

This Dan or more trulie Daven, flowing out of those hils which on the East side sever Stafford-shire from Chesshire, runneth along to CONDATE a towne mentioned by Antonine the Emperour, now called corruptly Congleton, the middle whereof the little brooke Howty, on the East side Daning-show, and Northward Dan it selfe, watereth. And albeit this towne for the greatnesse and frequency thereof, hath deserved to haue a Maior and six Aldermen, yet hath it but a chappell and no more: and the same made of timber, unlesse it be the quire and a little Towre-steeple, which ac- F knowledgeth Astbury about two mile off, her mother-Church: which verily is a very faire Church, the West-porch whereof is equall in height to the very Church as high as it is, and hath a spire steeple adioining thereto. In the Church-yard lie two portraictures of Knights upon sepulchres, in whose shields are two Barres. But for that they be without their colours, hardly can any man say, whether of the Breretons, Manwarings,

A Manwarings or Venables, which are the most noble families in those parts, and in deede such Barres doe they beare in their coates of armes, but in divers colours.

Then commeth Daven to Davenport, commonlie Damport, which hath adopted into her owne name a notable familie: and Holmeschappell, a towne well knowne to waifairing men: where within the remembrance of our Grandfathers, I. Needham built a bridge: Neere unto which, at Rudheath there was sometime a place of refuge and Sanctuary as well for the inhabitants of this shire as strangers, who had trespassed against the lawes; that there they might abide in security for a yeere and a day. Then runneth it under Kinderton the old seat of the ancient race of the Venables; who ever
B since the first comming in of the Normans haue bin of name and reputation here, & commonly are called Barons of Kinderton. Beneath this, Southward, the little river Croco runneth also into Dan, which flowing out of the Poole called Bagmere passeth by Brereton: which, as it hath given name to the worshipfull, ancient and numerous familie of the Breretons knights; so Sir William Brereton knight, hath of late added verie much credit and honour to the place, by a magnificent and sumptuous house that hee hath there built. A wonder it is that I shall tell you, and yet no other than I haue heard verified upon the credit of many credible persons, and commonlie beleeved: That before any heire of this house of the Breretons dieth, there bee seene in a poole adjoining, bodies of trees swimming for certaine daies together. Like unto that which Leonardus Vairus reporteth from the testimonie of Cardinal Gran-
C vell, namely, that neere unto the Abbay of Saint Maurice in Burgundie, there is a fish pond, in which are fishes put according to the number of the monkes of that place: And if any one of them happen to bee sicke, there is a fish seene also to floate, and swimme aboue the water halfe dead: and if the monke shall die, the said fish a few daies before dieth. Lib. 2. de Fascino.

As touching these matters, if they bee true, I wote not what to say: for, I am no Wisard to interpret such strange wonders: But these and such like things are done either by the holie tutelar Angels of men, or else by the devils who by Gods permission might ilie shew their power in this inferiour world. For, both the sorts of them
D being intelligent natures, upon a deliberate purpose and to some certaine end, and not for nought, worke strange things. The Angels seeke after and aime at the safetie and health of man-kinde: the devils contrariwise plot to mischieue, vexe, or else to delude them. But all this may seeme impertinent to our purpose. Angels. Devills.

Croke the riveret aforesaid, being past Brereton, within a while after visiteth Middlewich, neere unto his confluence with Dan, where there bee two wells of salt water parted one from the other by a small brooke; Sheathes they call them: the one stands not open, but at certaine set times, because folke willingly steale the water thereof, as beeing of greater vertue and efficacie. From hence runneth Dan to Bostoke, in times past Botestoc, the ancient seat of the familie of E the Bostokes knights, which by the marriage with Anne onelie daughter of Raulph, sonne and heire to Sir Adam Bostoke knight, passed together with a verie great liuelode unto Sir Iohn Savage. Out of this ancient house of the Bostoks, as out of a stock, sprung a goodlie number of the same name, in Ches-shire, Shropp-shire, Barkshire and elsewhere. Middlewich. Bostock.

When as Dan now, beneath Northwich that I spake of, hath united his streame with Wever, then Wever runneth forthright, and taketh in from the East, Pever, that floweth hard by Pever and giveth it the name: where, that ancient notable familie of Meinilwarin, commonlie Manewaring is seated; out of which Raulph married the daughter of Hugh Kevelioc Earle of Chester, as appeareth by an F old Charter in the custodie of Ranulph the heire now of the same house. Pever.

From thence speedeth Wever by Winington, which gaue both habitation and name to the ancient familie of the Winingtons; and not farre from Merbury, which being so called of a Mere under it, conferred likewise the name upon that respectiue ancient familie of the Merburies. Hence the river holdeth on his course neere unto Dutton, the inheritance of that great and worthie familie of Duttons, who Dutton.

derive their deſcent from one Hudard, allied to the Earles of Cheſter: and who by an old order and cuſtome haue great authority over all the pipers, fidlers, and minſtrels of this province, ever ſince that one of the Duttons a young gentleman full of ſpirit and actiue withall, having haſtily gathered a tumultuary power of thoſe kinde of people, valiantly delivered Ranulph the laſt Earle of Cheſter from danger when hee was beſet with Welſh enemies. Neither muſt I paſſe over in ſilence Nether Whitley in this tract, out of which came the Tuſchetts or Towchetts, who are now Barons Audley. By this time Wever aforeſaid flowing betweene Frodeſham a Caſtle of ancient note and Cliſton, now Rock-Sauage, an houſe of the Savages new built, who here by marriage attained to rich and faire revenewes; entreth at length into Merſey mouth. And this is ſo called of the river Merſey, which running as a bounder betweene Cheſ-ſhire and Lancaſhire, is there at length diſcharged into the ſea, after it hath among other ſmall townes of meaner note watered Stockport, which had ſometime a Baron, of the Earles of Cheſter, and Warburgton ſo named of S. Werburgh, the habitation of a familie thereof ſurnamed, but branched from the Duttons: Hereby it interteineth the river Bollin out of that ſpatious foreſt of Maclesfield. Upon this Bollin ſtandeth Maclesfield one of the faireſt townes of this Countie, which gaue name unto that Forreſt: where T. Sauage, firſt, Biſhop of London, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Yorke, built a Colledge, wherein ſome of that race of the Savages lie entombed: alſo Dunham, which from Sir Hamon of Maſcy, by the Fittones and Venables deſcended hereditarily unto the familie of Booth. From thence Merſey commeth to Thelwall before it bee farre paſt Knotsford, that is, Canutus his foord; which is divided into the uper and the nether: alſo to Lee; from whence there is a familie bearing the ſame ſurname, that is not onely of gentle bloud and of eſpeciall note, but alſo farre and fairely propagated into a number of branches. As for Thelwall, now it is an obſcure village, but in times paſt a large towne, built by King Edward the elder, and ſo called, as Florilegus witneſſeth, of bodies of trees the boughes being cut off, firmely faſtened in the ground wherewith hee walled it round. For the Saxons in their tongue called the Trunkes and bodies of Trees, Del, and a Wall, as wee doe now.

Chronicle of Walles.

Towchet.

Rock-Savage

Maclesfield.

Thelwall.

A B C D

At the verie mouth of the river ſtandeth Runkhorne, founded in the ſame age by Lady Edelfiede commonly called Elfled, and brought now by the mutability of Time to a few cotages. This Lady Edelfleda (to tell you at once, of whom I haue oft made mention) ſiſter to king Edward the elder, and wife to Ethelred a pety king of the Mercians, after her husbands death, governed the Mercians in moſt dangerous & troubleſome times, for eight yeeres, with high commendation: touching whom theſe laudatory verſes in praiſe of her, we read in the hiſtory of Henry of Huntingdon.

Runkhorne. Elfled or Ethelfled.

E

O Elfleda potens, o terror virgo virorum,
Victrix naturæ, nomine digna viri.
Te, quo ſplendidior fieres, natura puellam,
Te probitas fecit nomen habere viri.
Te mutare decet, ſed ſolam, nomina ſexus,
Tu regina potens, Rexque trophæa parans,
Iam nec Cæſarei tantum meruere triumphi,
Cæſare ſplendidior virgo virago, Vale.

O mighty Elfled, virgin pure, that men d'oeſt terrifie,
And nature paſſe, right worthy you in name a man to be.
To grace thee more, dame Nature once thee ſhap'd a maiden braue, F
But vertue thee hath cauſed now the name of man to haue.
It thee becom's, but thee alone, the name of Sex to change:
Of Great Queenes and triumphant Kings thou ſtandeſt in the range.
From Cæſars triumphes for deſert thou bear'ſt away the bell,
No Cæſar ever was thy match: Thus, Manly-maide, fare well.

Beneath

A Beneath Runckhorne, somewhat within the country, Haulton, the towne and Castle both shew themselves; which Hugh Lupus Earle of Chester gave unto Niel a Norman, to be by tenure & service constable of Chester: by whose posterity, through the variable change of times, it is come unto the House of Lancaster. Neither would this be over passed in silence, that William the said Nieles sonne, founded the Abbay adjoining, at Norton, which now appertaineth to the Broks of ancient descent. Whether I should place in this Shire, nor elsewhere the CANGI, an ancient nation of Britaines, that have beene so much and so long sought for, I have as long and as much doubted: For continuance of time hath now so obscured them, that hitherto
B by no footings they could be traced and found out. And albeit Iustus Lipsius that Floure of exquisite learning taketh me for a Iudge heerein, I frankly confesse, I know not what judgement to give, and rather would I commend this office of judging to any other man, than assume it to my selfe. Yet nevertheless, if CEANGI and CANGI were the same, as why not? it may be probable enough, that they were seated in this tract. For, whiles I perused these my labours, I understood by some of good credit, that there were heere upon the very shore gotten out of the ground twenty sowes of lead long in forme, but foure square: On the upper part whereof in an holow surface is to be read this inscription.

C

IMP. DOMIT. AVG. GER. DE CEANG.

But on the other.

D

IMP. VESP. VII. T. IMP. V. COSS.

In the yeere of Christ 78.

Which monument seemeth to have beene erected for a victorie over the Cangi. Heereto maketh also the very site upon the Irish sea: For, thus writeth Tacitus in the 12. booke of his Annales. Whiles Nero was Emperor, There was an armie led by Ostorius against the Cangi: the fields were wasted, booties raised every where, for that the enimies durst not come into the field: but if they attempted closely and by stealth to cut off the armie
E as it marched, they paid for their deceitfull cunning. Now were they no sooner come neere unto the Sea-coast toward Ireland, but certaine tumults and insurrections among the Brigantes, brought the Generall backe. But by the inscription a bove said, it should seeme that they were not subdued before Domitians time: and then by computation of the times; when as that most warlicke Iulius Agricola was Propretour in Britaine. Ptolomee likewise placed the Promontorie KATTANΩN, that is, of the Cangi on this shore. Neither dare I seeke elsewhere than in this tract that Station CONGANII, where, in the declining estate of the Roman Empire, a Company or band called Vigiles, that is, Watchmen, with their Captaine under the Dux Britanniæ, kept watch and ward. Notwithstanding I leave to every man for me his owne judgement heerein, as in F all things else of this nature. Anno 51.

Touching the Earles, that I may passe over the English-Saxons, Earls only by office & not by inheritance: K. William the first created hugh surnamed Lupus, son to the Vicount of Auranches in Normandy the first hereditary Earle of Chester & Count-Palatine, & gave unto him & his heires all this county to be holden as freely by his sword, as the King himselfe held England by his Crowne (For these are the words of the Donation:) Earles of Chester.

who

who forthwith appointed under him these Barons, viz. Niele Baron of Haulton, whose posterity afterwards tooke the name of Lacies, for that the Lacies inheritance had fallen unto them, and were Earles of Lincolne: Robert Baron of Mont-hault, Seneschall of the Countie of Chester, the last of whose line, having no issue, ordained by his last will Isabell Queene of England and Iohn of Eltham Earle of Cornwall, his heires: William Malbedeng Baron of Malbanc, whose nephewes daughters, by mariage brought the inheritance to the Vernons and Bassets: Richard Vernon Baron of Shpbroke, whose inheritance for default of heires males in the end came by the sisters unto the Wilburhams, Staffords, and Littleburies: Robert Fitz-Hugh Baron of Malpas, who, as it seemeth, died, as I said before, without issue: Hamon de Masey, whose possessions descended to the Fittons of Bollin: Gilbert Venables Baron of Kinderton, whose posterity in the right line have continued and flourished unto these our daies: N. Baron of Stockeport; to whom at length the Warrens of Pointon, budded out of the honorable family of the Earles of Warren and Surrie, in right of marriage succeeded. And these were all the Barons of the Earles of Chester that ever I could hitherto find: Who, as it is written in an old booke, Had their free Courts of all Plees and Suits or Complaints, except those Plees which belong unto the Earles sword. And their office was, To assist the Earle in Counsell, to yeeld him dutifull attendance, and often times to repaire unto his Court for to doe him honor, and, as we find in old parchement records, Bound they were in time of warre in Wales, to find for every Knights fee, one horse with caparison and furniture, or else two without, within the Divisions of Chesshire: Also, that their Knights and Freeholders should have Corslets and * Haubergeons, and defend their * Foees by their owne bodies.

Barons to the Earles of Chester.

* Haubergella.
* Lands and possessions.

After Hugh the first Earle beforesaid, succeeded Richard his sonne, who in his tender yeares perished by ship-wracke, together with William the onely sonne of King Henrie the First, and other noble men betweene Normandie and England in the yeere 1120. After Richard, succeeded Ranulph de Meschines, the third Earle, sonne to the sister of Earle Hugh: and left behind him his sonne Ranulph, named de Gernonijs, the fourth Earle of Chester, a warlicke man, and who at the siege of Lincolne tooke King Stephen prisoner. Hugh surnamed Keuelioc, his sonne was the fifth Earle, who died in the yeere 1181. and left his sonne Ranulph named de Blundevill the sixth Earle; who after he had built the Castles of Chartley and Beeston, and the Abbay also De la Cresse, died without children, and left foure sisters to be his heires, Maude the wife of David Earle of Huntingdon, Mabile espoused to William D' Albeney Earle of Arundell, Agnes married to William Ferrars Earle of Darby, and Avis wedded to Robert de Quincy. After Ranulph the sixt Earle, there succeeded in the Earldome Iohn surnamed the Scot, the sonne of Earle David by the said Maude the eldest daughter. Who being deceased likewise without any issue, King Henrie the Third casting his eie upon so faire and large an inheritance, laid it unto the Domain of the Crowne, and assigned other revenewes elsewhere to the heires: not willing, as the King himselfe was wont to say, that so great an estate should be divided among distaves. And the Kings themselves, in person, after that this Earldome came unto their hands, for to maintaine the honor of the Palatineship, continued here the ancient rights & Palatine Priviledges, and Courts, like as the Kings of France did in the County of Champan. Afterward, this honor of Chester was deferred upon the Kings eldest sonnes, and first unto Edward, King Henrie the Third his sonne; who being taken prisoner by the Barons and kept in ward delivered it up for his ransome unto Simon Montford Earle of Leicester: But when Simon was soone after slaine, it returned quickly againe unto the bloud Royall; and King Edward the Second summoned his eldest sonne, being but a child, unto the Parliament by the titles of Earle of Chester, and Flint. Afterwards, K. Richard the Second by authority of the Parliament, made it of an Earldome a Principality, & to the same Principality annexed the Castle of Leon with the territories of Bromfield and Yale, Chircke Castle with Chircke land, Oswalds-street Castle, the whole hundred & eleven towns belonging to that castle, with the castles of Isabell & Delaley, & other goodly lands, which, by reason that Richard Earle of Arundel stood

then

A then proscript and outlawed, had bin confiscate unto the Kings Eschequer: and King Richard himselfe was stiled Prince of Chester: but within few yeeres after, that title vanished away, after that King Henrie the Fourth had once repealed the lawes of the said Parliament, and it became againe a County or Earldome Palatine: and at this day retaineth the jurisdiction Palatine: and for the administration thereof, it hath a Chamberlaine who hath all iurisdiction of a Chancellour within the said Countie Palatine, a Iustice for matters in Common plees, and plees of the Crowne, to be heard and determined in the said County, two Barons of the Exchequer, Sergeants at Lawe, a Shiriffe, an Attourney, an Eschetour &c. And

B the inhabitants of the said County for the enioying of their liberties were to pay at the change of every owner of the said Earldome a summe of money (about 3000. markes) by the name of a Mize, as the Countie of Flint being a parcell thereof about 2000. markes, if I haue not bin mis-informed.

C

This County containeth about 68. Parishes.

D

SILVRES.

Now

E

F

The Kingdome of the Mercians.

NOw have I superficially surveied the regions of the CORNAVII, which together with the CORITANI, DOBVNI, and CATVELLANI, made that Kingdome in the Saxons Heptarchie, which they called Myncnapic, and Meanc-lond, the Latine writers Mercia of Meanc, an old English word, that signified a Limite; for, all the other Kingdomes bordered and confined upon it. This was the largest Kingdome by farre of all the rest, begun by Crida the Saxon, about the yeere of our Lord 586, augmented by Penda, who extended the marches thereof every way, and within a while after instructed in Christian religion. But having come to the full period, within the revolution of 250. yeeres, fell at last, into the dominion of the West-Saxons, after that the Danes had spoiled, weakned, and wasted it many yeeres in all maner of barbarous hostility.

SILVRES.

SILVRES.

I Thinke it now my best way, before I treat of the other parts of England, to digresse a while and turne a little aside toward Wales, called in Latin Cambria, or Wallia, where the ancient Britans have yet their seat and abode: neither shall I in so doing, as I thinke, digresse, but directly follow the order of nature. For, it lieth adiacent to the CORNAVII and seemeth, as it were, of right and equity to demand, that it may be spoken of in due course and place: especially seeing the Britans or Welsh, the inhabitants thereof, enjoy the same lawes and rights that we doe, and have long since beene engraffed and incorporate with vs into our Common-wealth.

Wales.

WALES therefore, which name comprised in times past before the Conqueſt, the whole country beyond Severn, but afterward reached not so farre, was when the Romanes ruled in Britaine, inhabited by three sorts of people, the SILVRES, DIMETAE, and ORDOVICES. For, these held not onely the twelue shires, as they call them, of Wales, but those two also beyond Severn, Hereford-shire, and Monmouth-shire, which haue beene now long reckoned among the Counties of England. And to beginne first with those that we first come unto and which lie next unto vs: the SILVRES, according to Ptolomees description, inhabited those regions which in Welsh are called by one name Deheubarth, that is, the Southpart, and at this day by new names, Herefordshire, Radnorshire, Brecknockshire, Monmouthshire, and Glamorganshire, wherein are as yet some remains also of the name SILVRES. As for the derivation of that name, I haue nothing that sorteth with the nature of the nation. But touching the originall of the people, Tacitus gheſſeth by their coloured faces, their countenances, their curled haire, and their situation over against Spaine, that they had their originall from the Spaniards: But Florianus del campo a Spaniard flatly affirmeth it, who troubleth and toileth himselfe exceedingly to find the Silures in Spaine, and thrusts upon us, I know not what, of Soloria and Siloria in Biscaie. But to speake of the nature of these Silures: they were a nation very great (for as we may gather out of Plinie and Tacitus they seeme to haue possessed all South-wales) fierce, valiant, given to war, impatient of seruitude, forward to adventure with a resolution (the Romanes call it Pervicacia) and who would not be brought in either with faire meanes or foule; in all and every of which qualities their posterity haue in no point as yet degenerated Silures. Dimetæ. Ordovices.

Tacitus.

rated from their anceſtors. When the Romanes upon an ambitious deſire of rule did A ſet upon them, they truſting to the proweſſe & ſtrength of King Caratacus, pro- voked alſo and exaſperated with a word that Claudius the Emperour let fall, who had ſaid, Theſe were ſo to be deſtroied, and their name to be extinguiſhed as the Sugambri had beene rooted out aforetime, annoied the Romanes with ſo dangerous a warre, by intercepting their bands of auxiliarie forces, by putting to flight that Legion over which Marius Valens was captaine, and by waſting the lands of their Aſſociates; that P. Oſtorius Prætor of Britaine being tired B with travaile and with the ſenſe of theſe griefes and troubles gave up his ghoſt. Veranius alſo governour under Nero, aſſailed them in vaine: For, whereas we read in Tacitus; illum modicis excurſibus ſylvas populatũ eſſe, that is, That he made ſpoile and forraied the woods with ſmall outrodes; read in lieu of Sylvas, that is, woods, Siluras, that is, The Silures, as our friend that moſt learned Lipſius doth, and you ſhall read aright. Yet was not this warre huſht and finiſhed before the time of Veſpaſian. For then, Iulius Frontinus ſubdued them by force, and kept them under with bands of Legionarie ſouldiours. But whereas a C countryman of ours hath wreſted this verſe of Iuvenall againſt Criſpine, to theſe SILVRES.

magnâ qui voce ſolebat,
Vendere municipes fractâ de merce Siluros.

Siluros miſtaken for Siluros.

who with lowd voice, was wont, and knew full well,
Of broken ware, his country fiſh, the Sturgeons for to ſell.

As though our Silures being taken priſoners were ſet to ſale at Rome: upon my credite he hath not attained to the right and proper ſenſe of the Poet: For by that word Siluros he that will read the place and weigh it well, ſhall eaſily perceive he ſpake of D fiſhes, and not of men.

HEREFORD. E

F

HEREFORDSHIRE described
With the true plot of the Citti Hereford. as alsoe the Armes of thos Nobles hat ar heire intituled with the Dignitye.

NORTH

EAST

SOUTH

WEST

PART OF SHROP SHIRE

PART OF WORCES TER SHIRE

PART OF GLOCESTER SHIRE

PART OF MOUNMOTH SHIRE

PART OF HEREFORD

Part of Breknoke Shire

Part of Radnor Shire

Part of Hereford S.

Part of Hereford

Part of Mounmouth Huntingdon shire

Malluern Hills

Hatterell Hylls

Ludlow

Bringwood chase

WIGMORE HUND.

Dereford Forest

Prestayne

Pembridge

Kyneton

STRETFORDE HUN.

Webley

HUNTINGTON HUND.

EWIAS LACY

WEBTREE HUND.

Hay

Hardwick HUND.

WOLSEY HUNDRED

Lemster

BROXASHE HUNDRED

Hawood Forest

ARCONIUM

HEREFORD

GRIMSWORTH

RADLOWE HUND.

Lidbury

GREYTREE

WORMELOWE HU.

HUNDRED

Newent

Archenfeilde

Lytton

Auldon

Marlow

Kynton

Wiston

Tripleton

Downton

Ludford

Bradfeld flu.

Bucknell

Walford

Buckton

The Grange

Lanwardyne

Wyston

Brompton brian cast.

Stan Lyche

Lytton

Pedwardin

Lyngan

Lymbrok

Kensham

Byton

Stepleton cast

Lug flu.

Comb

Discoyde

Knyll

Nashe

Walds flu.

Stimbache

Staunton

Milton

Fulis

Aro flu.

Noke

Munkland

Burton

Hardwick

Barron

Lenals

Marsten

Luntley

Wyston

Great Delves the Nunnery

Broxwood

Haryast

Glasbre

Huntington

Pentland

Bullingham

Kynnersley

Erdesley

Willersley

Brilley

Winforton

Letton

Whitney

Broberye

Stanton

Monyngton

Sarnesfield

Almeles

Sarnesfield Coffen

Wormesley

Morton

Kings Pom

Wellinton

Cannon Pom

Lattons

Bearley

Wynsley

Hope

Hampton

Overhill

Little Dil

Stretford

Eyton chap

Kingsland

Shobdon

Onny flu.

Chorlesfire

Stoghache

Arland

Lawton

Eyton

Luston

Yarpull

Croft cast.

Yelton

Shirley

Elmysse

Luckton

Aston

Stockton

Whyle

Padleston

Brocknanton

Eaton

Stoke

Byerley

Evington

Warton

Norton

Overhill

Bickleton

Thornbury

Grafield

Dockley

Wacken chap

Humber

Rysbury

Grendis

Marston

Tincombs

Boddenham

Little Cowarne

Sukeley

Bulmgwick

Mordesfield

Bromyeardle

Avenbury

Bishops Stanford

Suckley

Time flu.

Kingswick

Whitborne

Tedston wafers

Tedston De'lamere

Nether Sapye

Clyston

Shelp welsshe

Orbar

Rocheford

Timbury

Burford

Little Hereford

Birriton

Brimmild

Camberton

Orleton

Middleton

Ashton

Morton

Birriton

Layestas chap

Kyre

Stokebury

Nether

Upper Sapye

Cley

Nethwood

Yetton

Croft cast.

Yarpull

Eye

Luston

Aston

Luckton

Elmysse

Shirley

Kensham

Byton

Lytton

Part of Hereford S.

A

HEREFORD-SHIRE.

THe County which wee call HEREEORD-SHIRE, and the Britains name Ercinue, lying in compaſſe round, as it were a Circle, is bounded on the Eaſt-ſide with VVorceſter and Gloceſter-ſhires, on the South with Monmouth-ſhire, on the Weſt ſide with Radnor, & Brecknor-ſhires, and on the North with Shrop-ſhire; This Countty beſides that it is right pleaſant, is for yeelding of corne, and feeding of cattaile, in all places moſt fruitfull, and therewith paſſing well furniſhed with all things neceſſary for mans life: In ſo much, as it would skorne to come behinde any one country throughout all England for fertility of ſoile, and therefore ſay that for three W. W. W. wheat, woll, and water it yeeldeth to no ſhire of England. And verely, it hath alſo divers notable rivers, namely VVye-Lug and Munow, which after they haue watered the moſt flowring meddowes and frnitfull corne fields, at length meet together and in one chanel paſſe on to the Severn ſea.

B

Munow ſpringing out of Hatterell hilles, which reſembling a chaire doe riſe aloft, and fenſe this ſhire on the Southweſt, as it deſcendeth downe, firſt ſtrugleth to paſſe through by the foote of the ſaid hilles to BLESTIVM, a towne which Antonine the Emperour ſo placeth that for ſituation and diſtance it can be no other then that, which ſtanding by the ſide of this river is in Britiſh called Caſtle Hean, that is, The Old Caſtle, and in Engliſh, The Old Towne: A poore ſmall Village now, but this new name is a good proofe for the antiquity thereof: for, in both tongues it ſoundeth as much as an Old Caſtle or towne. Next unto this Old towne, Alterynnis lieth in maner of a river-Iſland, inſulated within waters: the ſeat in old time of that ancient family of the Sitſilts or Cecils, knights, whence my right honorable Patron, accompliſhed with all the ornaments of vertue, wiſdome, and Nobility, Sir William Cecil, Baron of Burghley, and Lord high Treaſurer of England derived his deſcent.

C

The river Munow.

Bleſſium.

Old towne.

Alterynnis.

The ſeat of the Cecils.

D

From hence, Munow turning Eaſtward, for a good ſpace ſeparateth this country from Monmouth-ſhire and at Caſtle Map-harald, or Harold Ewias, is encreaſed with the river Dor. This Ewias Caſtle (that I may ſpeake out of K. William the firſt his booke) was repaired by Alured of Marleberg. Afterwards it pertained to one Harold a Gentleman, who in a ſhield argent bare a Feſſe Geules betweene three Eſtoiles Sable for his armes: of whom it beganne to bee called Harold Ewias: But Sibyll his neice in the ſecond degree & one of the heires, by her matriage transferred it to the Lords of Tregoz, from whom it came at length to the Lords of Grandiſon deſcended out of Burgundie. But of them elſe where. Now the ſaid Dor, which running downe from the North by Snodhil, a Caſtle, and the Barony ſometime of Robert Chandos (where is a quarie of excellent marble) cutteth through the mideſt of the Vale, which of the river the Britans call Diffrin Dore: but the Engliſh men, that they might ſeeme to expreſſe the force of that word termed it the Gilden Vale, which name it may by good right and juſtly haue, for the golden, wealthy and pleaſant fertility thereof. For, the hils that compaſſe it in, on both ſides are clad with woods; under the woods lie corne fields on either hand, and under thoſe fields moſt gay & gallant medowes: then runneth in the mideſt betweene them a moſt cleere and cryſtal river, on which Robert Lord of Ewias placed a faire monaſtery, wherein moſt of the nobility and Gentry of theſe parts were enterred.

Haroald Ewias.

The family of Ewias.

Their coat of Armes.

Tregoz and Grandiſon. Pag. 286.

Snod hill.

E

Marble.

Gilden vale.

Part of this ſhire, which from this Vale declineth and bendeth Eaſt ward, is now called Irchenfeld, in Domeſday booke Archenfeld, which, as our Hiſtorians write was, laied waſt with fire and ſword by the Danes in the yeere 715. at what time Camalac alſo a Britan Biſhop was caried away priſoner. In this part ſtood Kilpeck a Caſtle of great name and the ſeat it was of the noble familie of the Kilpecks, who were as ſome ſay the Champions to the Kings of England in the firſt age of the Normans: And I my ſelfe alſo will eaſily aſſent unto them. In the reigne of Edward the Firſt, there

F

Irchenfeld.

Kilpeck.

dwelt heere Sir Robert Wallerond, whose nephew Alane Plugenet lived in the honorable state of a Baron. In this Arcenfeld likewise, as we read in Domesday booke, A certaine revenewes by an old custome were assigned to one or two Priests, on this condition that they should goe in Embassages for the Kings of England into Wales, and to use the words out of the same booke, The men of Arcenfeld, whensoever the army marcheth forward against the enimy by a custome make the Avantgard, and in the returne homward, the Rereward.

The river Wy. Clifford Castle.

As Munow runneth along the lower part of this shire, so Wy with a bending course cutteth over the middest; upon which river in the very West limit Clifford Castle standeth; which, William Fitz-Osbern Earle of Hereford built upon his owne Wast (as it B is in King William the Conquerors booke) but Raulph de Todenay held it. Afterward it seemeth to haue come unto Walter the sonne of Richard Fitz-Punt a Norman; for he was surnamed De Clifford, and from him the right honorable family of the Earles of Cumberland doe truly deduce their descent. But in the daies of King Edward the first, Iohn Giffard who maried the heire of Walter L. Clifford had it in his hands. Then Wy with a crooked and winding streame rolleth downe by Whitney, which hath given name to a worshipfull family, and by Bradwardin Castle, which gave both originall and name to that famous Thomas Bradwardin Archbishop of Canterbury, who for his variety of knowledge, and profound learning, was in that age tearmed The Profound Doctour: and so at length commeth to Hereford the head City of this C County.

The Clifford. Inquis. 26. E. 1.

The Profound Doctour.

How farre that little region Arcenfeld reached I know not, but the affinity betweene these names, Ercinuc, Arcenfeld, the towne ARICONIVM, of which Antonine in the description of this tract maketh mention, and Hareford or Hereford, which now is the chiefe City of the Shire, have by little and little induced me to this opinion, that I thinke euery one of these was derived from ARICONIVM. Yet doe I not thinke that Ariconium and Hereford were both one and the same: but like as Basil in Germany chalenged unto it the name of Augusta Rauracorum, and Baldach in Assyria the name of Babylon, for that as the one had originall from the ruines of Babylon, so the other from the ruines of Augusta: even so this Hariford of ours, (for D so the Common people call it) deriued both name and beginning, in mine opinion, from his neighbour old ARICONIVM, which hath at this day no shape or shew at all of a towne: as having beene by report, shaken to peeces with an earth-quake. Onely it reteineth still a shadow of the name, being called Kencheſter, and sheweth to the beholders some ruines of walles, which they tearme Kencheſter walles; about which are often digged up foure square paving stones of Checker-worke, British-brickes, peeces of Romane mony and other such like remaines of Antiquity. But Hereford, her daughter, which more expresly resembleth the name thereof, standeth East-ward scarce three Italian miles from it, seated among most pleasant medowes and as plentifull corne fieldes, compassed almost round about with rivers, on the E North side and the West with one that hath no name, on the South side with Wy, that hastneth hither out of Wales. It is thought to have shewed her head first what time as the Saxons Heptarchy was in the flowre and prime, built as some write by King Edward the elder: neither is there, as farre as I haue read, any memory thereof more ancient. For, the Britans, before the name of Hereford was knowne, called the place Trefawith, of Beech trees: and Hereford of an Old way; and the Saxons themselues Fern-leg of ferns. The greatest encrease, if I be not deceived, that it had, came by religion and by the Martirdom of Ethelbert King of the East England. Who when he wooed himselfe the daughter of Offa K. of the Mercians, was villanously forlaid and murdered by the procurement of Quendred, Offaes wife, respecting more the F countries of the East England, than the honest and honorable match of her daughter: which Ethelbert being registred in the Catalogue of Martires, had a church here built and dedicated unto him by Milfrid a pety K. of the Country, wherein when a Bishops See was established, it grew to great welth, first, through the devout liberality of the Mercians, and then of the West Saxons kings: for they at length were possessed

Hereford.

Kencheſter.

793. S. Ethelbert Martyr.

of

A of this City, as may bee gathered out of William of Malmesbury, where he writeth, That Athelſtan the West Saxon brought the Lords of Wales in this City to ſo hard paſſe, that by waie of Tribute they were to pay everie yeere (beſide hounds and haukes) twenty pounds of gold, and three hundred pound of ſilver by weight. This citie as farre as I can reade, had never any misfortune, unleſſe it were in the yeare of our Lord 1055. wherein Gruffith Prince of South Wales, and Algar an Engliſh man, rebelling againſt King Edward the Confeſſour, after they had put to flight Earle Ralph, ſacked the citie, deſtroied the Cathedrall church, and led away captiue Leofgar the Biſhop. But Harold ſtreight waies after that hee had daunted their audacious courage,
B fenſed it, as Floriacenſis ſaith, with a broade and high rampier. Hence it is, that Malmesbury writeth thus in his treatiſe of Biſhops, Hereford is no great Citie, and yet by the heigth of thoſe ſteepe and upright bankes caſt up, it ſheweth that it hath beene ſome great thing: and, as wee reade in the Domeſday booke of king William the Conquerour: there were in all but an hundered and three men within the walles and without.

The Normans afterwards neere the Eaſt end of the church along the ſide of Wy, built a mighty great and ſtrong caſtle: the worke, as ſome report, of Earle Miles, which now yeeldeth to Time, and runneth to ruine. After this, they walled the citie about. Biſhop Reinelm, in the reigne of Henry the Firſt founded that beautifull
C Cathedrall church, which now we ſee there, whoſe ſucceſſours enlarged it by adioining thereto a proper Colledge for prieſts, and faire houſes for the Prebendaries. For, beſides the biſhop who hath 302. churches in his Diœceſe, there are in this church, a Deane, two Archdeacons, a Chaunter, a Chauncellour, a Treaſurer and eight and twenty Præbendaries. In the church, I ſaw in manner no monuments, but the Biſhops tombes. And I haue heard that Thomas Cantlow the Biſhop, a man of noble birth, had here a verie ſtately and ſumptuous ſepulcher, who for his holineſſe being canonized a Saint, went within a little of ſurmounting that princely Martir King Ethelbert, ſuch was the opinion of ſingular piety and devotion. Geographers meaſure the poſition or ſite of this City by the Longitude of twenty degrees and foure
D and twenty ſcruples: and by the Latitude of two and fiftie degrees and ſix ſcruples.

Wy is not gone full three miles from hence, but he intercepteth by the way the river Lug, who running downe a maine out of Radnor hils, with a ſtill courſe paſſeth through the mids of this country, from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt. At the firſt entrance, it ſeeth a farre off, Brampton Brian Caſtle, which, a famous family named heereof de Brampton, wherein the forname was uſually Brian, held by continuall ſucceſſion unto the time of King Edward the Firſt: but now, by the female heires it is come to R. Harleie: neerer at hand it beholdeth Wigmore, in the Engliſh Saxons tongue Wynginga-mepe, repaired in elder times by King Edward the elder, afterward, fortified by William Earle of Hereford with a Caſtle, in the waſt of a ground (for ſo E read wee in Domeſday booke) which was called Mareſt-un, in the tenure of Radulph de Mortimer, from whom thoſe Mortimers that were afterwards Earles of March lineally deſcended, of whom, you may read more in Radnorſhire. Three miles off, there is, another neighbour caſtle, called Richards Caſtle, the poſſeſſion firſt of the Sayes then of the Mortimers, and afterwards of the Talbots by hereditary ſucceſſion. At length, by the heires of Sir Iohn Talbot, the inheritance was divided betweene Sir Guarin Archdeacon and Sir Matth. Gurnay. Beneath this caſtle, Nature, who no where diſporteth her ſelfe more in ſhewing wonders, then in waters, hath brought fourth a pretie well, which is alwaies full of little fiſh bones, or as ſome thinke, of ſmall frog-bones, although they be from time to time drawne quite out of it, whence it is F commonly called Bone well. And not farre off, is placed Croft Caſtle, the poſſeſſion of that very ancient family of the Crofts Knights, who haue there now a long time flouriſhed in great and good eſteeme.

Brampton Brian.

Wigmore.

Baron Mortimer.

Richards Caſtle. Lords of Richards Caſtle.

Bone well.

Thence paſſeth Wy to Lemſter, which alſo was called Leon minſter, and Lions Monaſtery, of a Lyon that appeered to a religious man in a viſion (as ſome haue dreamed) But whereas the Britans call it Lhan Lieni: which ſignifieth a Church of Nunnes, Lemſter.

and that it is certainely knowne, that Merewalc a king of the Mercians, built here a church for Nunnes (that afterwards became a Cell belonging to the Monaſtery of Reading) to ſeeke any other original of the name, than from thoſe Nunnes: what were it elſe but to hunt after the windes? Yet there want not ſome, who deriue it from Line, whereof the beſt kinde groweth here. The greateſt name and fame that it hath at this day is of the wool in the territories round about it, (Lemſter Ore they cal it) which ſetting aſide that of Apulia and Tarentum all Europe counteth to bee the verie beſt. So renowned alſo it is for wheat, and bread of the fineſt floure, that Lemſter bread and VVeabley Ale (a towne belonging to the noble familie D' Eureux) are growne unto a common proverbe. By reaſon of theſe commodities the mercates at Lemſter were ſo frequented, that they of Hereford and Worceſter complaining that the confluence of people thither impaired their mercates, procured that by roiall authority the mercat day was changed. Now haue I nothing more concerning Leinſter, but that William Breoſa Lord of Brecknock, when hee revolted from King Iohn, did ſet it on fire and defaced it. As for that Webley aforeſaid, it is ſituate more within the country and was the Baronie of the Verdons: the firſt of which houſe named Bertram de Verdon came into England with the Normans; whoſe poſterity by marriage with and inheretrice of Laceies of Trim in Ireland, were for a good while hereditary conſtables of Ireland: and at laſt the poſſeſſions were by the daughters devolved to the Furnivalls, Burgherſh, Ferrars of Groby, Crop-hulls, and from the Crophulls by the Ferrars of Chartly, unto D' Eureux Earles of Eſſex. Nere neighbours unto Webley, more Weſtward are theſe places, Huntingdon Caſtle, the poſſeſſion in times paſt of the Bohuns Earles of Hereford and of Eſſex: Kinnerſley, belonging to the ancient familie De la-bere, and Erdſley: where the ancient familie of the Baskervills, have long inhabited, which bred in old time ſo many worthy Knights, who deduce their pedigree from a neice of Dame Gunora that moſt famous Lady in Normandy, and long agoe flouriſhed in this county and Shropſhire adjoyning, and held, (that I may note ſo much by the way) the Hamelet of Lanton in chiefe, as of the Honour of Montgomery, by the ſervice of giving to the King a barbd-headed arrow, whenſoeuer he commeth into thoſe parts to hunt in Cornedon Chace.

Lemſter Ore
The beſt wool.
Lemſter bread and Webley Ale.
Webley.
Barons Verdons.
Baſſervile. See Gemition. lib. vlt.
Fin. Hilarij. 20 Ed. 3.

Lugg haſteneth now to Wy, firſt by Hampton, where that worthy knight Sir Rouland Lenthal, who (beeing maiſter of the Wardrobe unto King Henry the Fourth had married one of the heires of Thomas Earle of Arundel) built a paſſing faire houſe, which the Coningesberes (men of good worſhip and great name in this tract) haue now a good long time inhabited: then, by Marden, and Southton, or Sutton: of which twaine, Sutton ſheweth ſome ſmall remaines of King Offaes palace, ſo infamous for the murdring of Ethelbert: and Marden is counted famous for the tombe of the ſaid Ethelbert, who had lien heere a long time without any glorious memoriall, before that hee was tranſlated to Hereford.

Marden.
Sutton.

Neere unto the place where Lug and Wy meet togither, Eaſtward, a hill which they call Marcley hill, in the yeere of our redemption, 1571. (as though it had wakened upon the ſodaine out of a deepe ſleepe) rouſed it ſelfe up, and for the ſpace of three daies togither mooving and ſhewing it ſelfe (as mighty and huge an heape as it was) with roring noiſe in a fearefull ſort, and overturning all things that ſtood in the way, advanced it ſelfe forward to the wonderous aſtoniſhment of the beholders: by that kinde of earthquake which as I deeme naturall philoſophers call Braſmatias. And not farre from this hill, toward the Eaſt alſo, under Malvern hills (which in this place bound the Eaſt part of this ſhire) ſtandeth Ledbury upon the river Ledden, a towne well knowne, which Edwin the Saxon, a man of great powre, gaue unto the church of Hereford, being aſſuredly perſwaded that by Saint Eltheberts interceſſion he was delivered from the palſey. Touching the militare fort on the next hill, I need not to ſpeake, ſeeing that in this tract which was in the marches, and the ordinary fighting ground plot, firſt betweene the Romans and Britans, afterwards betweene the Britains and the Engliſh, ſuch holds and entrenchments are to be ſeene in many places. But Wy now carying a ful ſtreame, after it hath enterteined Lug runneth

Marcley hill.
A mountaine mooving.

downe

A downe with more bendings and bowings, first by Holm Lacy, the seat of the ancient and notable familie of Scudamore unto which accrewed much more worship by marriage with an heire out of the race of Ewias in this shire, and Huntercombe &c. elsewhere. From hence passeth Wy downe betweene Rosse, made a free Burrough by king Henry the Third, now well knowne by reason of iron Smiths and Wilton over against it, a most ancient castle of the Gruis, whence so many worthy Barons of that name haue drawne their originall. This was built as men say by Hugh de Long-champ, but upon publick and certaine credit of Records it appeareth, that King Iohn gaue Wilton with the Castle to H. de Longchamp; and that by marriage it fell to William Fitz-
B Hugh, and likewise not long after to Reinold Grey in the daies of King Edward the first. Now, when Wy hath a little beneath saluted Goderick Castle, which King Iohn gaue unto William Earle Mareschall, and was afterward for a time the principall seat of the Talbots, hee speedeth himselfe to Monmouth shire, and biddes Hereford-shire Fare-well.

Scudamore or Escudamor.

Wilton. Baron Grey de Wilton.

Goderich Castle.

When the state of the English-Saxons was now more than declining to the downe-fall, Ralph sonne to Walter Medantinus by Goda King Edward the Confessours sister, governed this Countie, as an officiall Earle: But hee infamous for base cowardise, was by William the Conquerour removed, and William Fitz-Osbern of Crepon a martiall Norman who had subdued the Isle of Wight, and was nere allied
C to the Dukes of Normandy, was substituted in his place: When hee was slaine in assistance of the Earle of Flanders, his sonne Roger surnamed De Bretevill succeeded, and soone after for conspiracie against the Conquerour was condemned to perpetuall prison, and therein died leaving no lawfull issue. Then King Stephen granted to Robert Le Bossu Earle of Leicester who had married Emme or Ita (as some call her) heire of Bretevill (to use the words of the Graunt) the Burrough of Hereford, with the Castle, and the whole County of Hereford, but all in vaine. For Maude the Empresse who contended with King Stephen for the Crowne, advanced Miles the sonne of Walter Constable of Glocester unto this honour, and also granted to him Constabulariam Curiæ suæ, i. The Constableship of her Court, whereupon his posteritie
D were Constables of England, as the Marshalship was granted at the first, by the name of Magistratus Mareschalsiæ Curiæ nostræ. Howbeit, Stephen afterwards stript him out of these honours which he had received from her.

* Earles of Hereford.

Constables of England.

This Miles had fiue sonnes; Roger, Walter, Henrie, William, and Mahel, men of especiall note, who were cut off every one issueless by untimely death, after they had all but William, succeeded one another in their fathers inheritance. Unto Roger King Henry the Second among other things gaue, The Mote of Hereford with the whole Castle and the third penie issuing out of the revenewes of Plees of the whole County of Hereford, whereof hee made him Earle. But after Roger was deceased, the same King, if wee may beleeue Robert Abbot De Monte, kept the Earledome of E Hereford to himselfe.

The eldest sister of these named Margaret, was married to Humfrey Bohun the third of that name, and his heires were high Constables of England, namely, Humfrey Bohun the Fourth; Henry his sonne, unto whom King Iohn granted twenty pounds yeerely to bee received out of the third penny of the County of Hereford, whereof hee made him Earle. This Henrie married the sister and heire of William Mandevil Earle of Essex, and died in the fourth yeere of Henrie the Third his reigne: Humfrey the Fifth his sonne, who was also Earle of Essex: whose sonne Humfrey the Sixth of that fore-
F name died before his father, having first begotten Humfrey the Seventh by a daughter and one of the heires of William Breos Lord of Brecknock: His sonne Humfrey the Eighth was slaine at Burrowbrig, leaving by Elizabeth his wife, daughter unto K. Edward the First and the Earle of Holland's widow, among other children namely, Iohn Bohun, Humfrey the Ninth, both Earles of Hereford & Essex, & dying without issue: & Willi. Earle of Northampton, unto whom Elizabeth a daughter and one of the heires of Giles L. Badlesmer, bare Humf. Bohun the tenth and last of the Bohuns who was 1156.

2. Par. Chart. an. 1. Reg. Ioan. Matth. Paris Ioan. The booke of Walden. The booke of Lanthony monastery.

Earle of Hereford, Essex, and Northampton, Constable besides of England: who left two daughters, Æleonor the wife of Thomas of Woodstock duke of Gloceſter, & Mary, wed- A ded to Henry of Lancaſter Earle of Darby, who was created Duke of Hereford, and af-Henry the Fourth king of England. terwards crowned K. of England. But after this, Edward Stafford laſt duke of Buckingham was ſtiled Earle of Hereford, for that he deſcended from Thomas of Woodſtock his daughter, who was after remarried to Sir William Bourchier called Earle of Ew. And in our memorie, King Edward the Sixth honored Walter D' Eureux, the Lord Ferrars of Chartley deſcended by the Bourgchiers from the Bohuns, with the title of Vicount Hereford, whoſe grand-ſonne Walter Vicount Hereford, Queene Elizabeth created B afterwards Earle of Eſſex.

C

There are contained in this County Pariſhes 176.

D

RADNOR.

E

F

RADNOR
Comitatus quem
SILVRES
Olim Incoluerunt

SEPTEN RIO

MONTG
PARS

Sabrina flu.

Llanydlos

Llangeryk

Wye fluuius

Darnol flu.

St Harmon

Combe hire

Clowedok flu.

Dulas flu.

Llansanfraid

Eland flu.

Rayader gowy

Nantmel

Llyngwyn

Llanyhangle religan

Clarwen flu.

Llanuthel

Llanner

BREKNOK

Wye flu.

Llestinan

CARDI GAN
PARS OCIDENS

Kethitalgarth

Dyssant

Fruon flu.

Camarch flu.

Weuery flu.

Capel Llanihangel
prinpabon

Delas fluuius

Llanauonuawre

Llanganten

Llenauan uachan

Mayfmyn

Porthreys

Capel Cynnok

Fruon flu.

Capel defrune

CAR MAR:

Homby flu.

Dyfer flu.

Brane flu.

Merter kynok

SCALA MILIARIVM

PARS

1 2 3 4 5

PARS

Christophorus Saxton deserip:
Wilhelmus kip Sculpsit.

MERIDIES

RIO

MERIONETH

SALOPIA PARS

HEREFORDIÆ PARS

ORIENTALIS

VLLEVM

Whithall
Teme flu:
Bettus
Begildye
Llanuarwaterden Dyndbod
the forest of Knukles Knukles Skibborray
Stow
Weston
Teme flu:
Hyop Llannano
Lug flu:
Standisshe
Branton bryan
Monoghtee
Knyghton
Llangunllo
Pilleth
Weston hall Llanbister
Llanddwyc
Whitton
Norton
Llyngan
Lug flu: Belthuagh
the forest of blethuagh Litton
Stepleton
Llanyhangle redithon
Caseop
Fuldibrok
Ednall Discoyde
New caste Angop Prestayne
Kinerton
Radnor forest
Comaron flu:
New RADNOR
Knyll
Somergil flu:
Llandeglay
Harton
old Radnor Magnos
Arro flu:
Castle Ceuenlles
Llanthangel nantmelan
kyneton
Hargast
Gwithel flu:
Bettus chap:
Arro flu:
Glaſcombe
Gloſtre
Huntingdon caſt:
Colway chap:
Cregrena
Rulen Newchurch
Llanhadern
Bryngwyn
Llanihangelarro
Bryllay
Castle Payne
Machaway flu:
Whitney
Llanuareth
Aberedway
Wye flu:
Llynhoghlen
Bettus
Llanhedder
Llandewye chap:
Clero
Clyfford caſt:
Altemawre Llandilo
Hay Kewsop Llowas
Llanſtephan
Llanygon
Craſwal Glaiesbury Capelbrengoran
Llangoyd
Bughrud Aberlleuenye
Hatterel hill
Wye flu:
Pipton
Llyſwen Porthamble
Llandeuathley
Broynelyr caſt:
Talgarth
Capel a fyne
Talachdyc Garthbrenayc Llanuillen
Castle Dynas
Hothny flu:
Llangouiley
Breknoke Llagors
y fothok
HEREFO: PARS

HERE FORDLE
PARS

A

RADNOR-SHIRE.

B

WPon Hereford-ſhire, on the North-Weſt joineth Radnor-ſhire, in the Britiſh tongue, Sire Maiſeueth; in forme three ſquare, and the farther Weſt it goeth, the narrower ſtill it groweth. On the South-ſide, the river Wy ſeperateth it from Brecknock-ſhire, and on the North part, lieth Montgomery-ſhire. The Eaſt & South parts therof be more fruitful than the reſt, which lying uneven and rough with mountaines, is hardly bettered by painfull husbandry: yet it is ſtored well enough with woods, watered with running rivers, and in ſome places with ſtanding meres. The Eaſt-ſide hath to beautifie it, beſides other caſtles of the Lords Marchers, now all buried well neere, in their owne ruins, Caſtle Paine, built and ſo named of Paine a Norman; and Caſtle Colwen, which, if I be not deceived, was ſometime called the Caſtle of Mawd in Colewent. For, a very famous caſtle that was, and Robert de Todeney a great noble man, in the reigne of Edward the ſecond was Lord of it. It is verily thought, that it belonged aforetime to the Breoſes, Lords of Brechnoc, and to have taken the name from Maude of Saint Varleric, a very ſhrewd, ſtout, and malapert ſtomack-full woman, wife to William Breos, who diſcovered a rebellious minde againſt King Iohn. Which caſtle being caſt downe by the Welſh, King Henrie the Third in the yere 1231, reedified ſtrongly with ſtone, and called it in deſpight of Lhewellin Prince of Wales Maugre Lhewellin. But of eſpeciall name is Radnor the principall towne of the whole Shire, in Britiſh Maiſeueth, faire built, as the maner of that country is, with thatched houſes. In times paſt it was firmely fenſed with a wall and caſtle: but after that Owen Glendowerdwy that notable rebell had burnt it, it beganne by little and little to decreaſe, and grow to decay, taſting of the ſame fortune that the mother thereof did before, I meane Old Radnor, called in Britiſh Maiſeueth hean, and for the high ſituation Penorag; which in the reigne of King Iohn, Rheſe Ap Gruffin had ſet on fire. If I ſhould ſay, that this Maiſeueth or Radnor was that ancient Citie MAGI, which Antonine the Emperor ſeemeth to call MAGNOS, where, as we find in the booke of Notices, the cõmander of the Pacenſian regiment lay in garriſon, vnder the Lieutenant, or L. General of Britaine, in the reigne of Theodoſius the younger; in mine own opinion ſurely, and perhaps in other mens conceit alſo, I ſhould not vary from the Truth. For, we read in writers of the middle age, of inhabitants of this coaſt called MAGESETAE; alſo of Earles Maſegetenſes and Mageſetenſes: and the diſtance, if it be counted, both from Gobannium or Abergevenny, and alſo from Brangonium or Worceſter, differeth ſcarce an haire bredth from Antonines computation. Scarce three miles Eaſtward from hence, you ſee Preſtaine, in Britiſh Lhan Andre, that is, Saint Andrews Church; which of a very little village within the memorie of our grand fathers, is by the meanes of Richard Martin Biſhop of Saint Davids, growne now to be ſo great a mercate towne and faire withall, that at this day it dammereth and dimmeth the light in ſome ſort of Radnor. From whence alſo ſcarce foure miles off, ſtands Knighton, a towne able to match with Preſtaine, called in Britiſh, as I have heard ſay Trebuclo, in ſteed of Trefyclaudh, of a famous ditch lying vnder it, which Offa King of the Mercians with admirable worke and labour, cauſed to be caſt from Dee-Mouth unto Wy-mouth, by this towne, for the ſpace of foureſkore and ten miles, to ſeparate the Britans from his Engliſhmen: whereupon, in Britiſh it is called Claudh Offa, that is Offaes ditch. Concerning which, Iohn of Salisbury in his Polycraticon writeth thus. Harald ordained a law, that what Welſhman ſo ver ſhould be found with a weapon, on this ſide the limite which he had ſet them, that is to ſay, Offaes Dike, he ſhould have his right hand cut off by the Kings officers.

When yee are paſt this place, all the ground that lieth toward the Weſt and South

Caſtle Colwen, or Mauds Caſtle in Colwent.

Matth. Paris.

Radnor.

Owen Glendour.

Mageſetæ.

Preſtaine.

Knighton.

Offa dike.

South limits, being for the moſt part baren, leane, and hungry, is of the inhabitants A called Melienith, for that mountaines be of a yellowiſh colour. Yet remaine there many footings as it were of caſtles, to be ſeene heere and there, but eſpecially Ke- venles and Timbod, which ſtanding upon a ſharpe pointed hill, Lhwellin Prince of Wales overthrew in the yeere 1260.

This Melienith reacheth as farre as to the river Wy, which cutteth overthwart the Weſt corner of this ſhire, and being hindered in his ſtreame with ſtones lying in his way, upon a ſudden for want of ground to glide on, hath a mighty and violent downfall: whereupon the place is tearmed, Raihader Gowy, that is, The fall or Flud- gats of Wy: And I cannot tell, whether thereupon that Britiſh word Raihader, the B Engliſhmen forged this name firſt for the whole ſhire, and afterwards for the chiefe towne. By this Floudgate or fall of the water there was a Caſtle which Rheſe Prince of Southwales (as we read) repaired under King Richard the firſt. Hard by, there is in ſome ſort a vaſt and wide wilderneſſe, hideous after a ſort to behold, by reaſon of the Vorigern. turning and crooked by-waies and craggy mountaines, into which as the ſafeſt place of refuge, Vortigern that peſtilent wretch and bane of his native country, odious both to God and man, and (whoſe memorie the Britans may wiſh damned) withdrew himſelfe, when after he had called the Saxons into this Iland and in horrible inceſt married his owne daughter. And heere he fell at length too too late into ſerious conſideration of the greatneſſe of his vile and wicked acts. But by revenging fire from C heaven, the flying dart of God above, he was burnt with his Citie Caer Guortigern, Lewellin. which he had heere built for his refuge. And not farre from hence, as if the place had beene fatall, not onely this Vortigern the laſt Monarch of Britiſh bloud, but alſo Lhe- wellin the laſt Prince of Wales of the Britiſh race being forelaid, was ſlaine by Adam Francton in the yeere of our redemption 1282. Of the ſaid Vortigern, Ninnius nameth a little country heere Guortiger-maur: neither is that name as yet altogether loſt:
but of the Citie, there remaineth no memorie at all, but out of writers. Some are of opinion, that Guthremion Caſtle aroſe out of the ruins and rubbiſh thereof, which in the yeere 1201. the Welſh for malice they bare to Roger L. Mortimer and in ſpight of Guarthenion. him laid even with the ground. Moreover, this part of the country was in old time D called Guarthenion, as Ninnius teſtifieth, who wrote, that the ſaid wicked Vortigern, when he was plainly and ſharply reproved by that godly Saint German, did not onely not turne from his lewd and licentious life to the worſhip and ſervice of God, but al-Guarſh in Britiſh, ſlander and Eniawn, iuſt. ſo let flie ſlanderous ſpeeches againſt that moſt holy man: Wherefore, Vortimer the ſonne of Vortigern, as Ninnius ſaith, for the ſlander which his father had raiſed of Saint German, decreed, that he ſhould have the land as his owne for ever, wherein he had ſuffe-red ſo reprochfull an abuſe: whereupon, and to the end that Saint German might be had in memorie, it was called Guarthenion, which ſignifieth in Engliſh, A ſlander iuſtly retorted.

Earles of March. The Mortimers, deſcended from the niece of Gonora wife of Richard the firſt, Duke of Normandie, were the firſt Normans that having diſcomfited the Engliſh Saxon E Edricke Sylvaticus, that is, The wild, wonne a great part of this little country to themſelves: And after they had a long time bin eminent above all others in theſe parts, at length King Edward the Third about the yeere of Salvation 1328. Created Roger Mortimer Lord of Wigmore, Earle of this Welſh limite, or, according to the common ſpeech, Earle of March, who ſoone after was ſentenced to death, becauſe he had inſul-ted upon the Common-wealth, favoured the Scots to the prejudice of England, converſed over familiarly with the Kings mother, and contrived the deſtruction and
The booke of Lanthony Abbay. death of King Edward the Second, the Kings father. He by his wife Ioan Ienevell, (who brought him rich revenewes, as well in Ireland as in England) had Edmund his F ſonne who felt the ſmart of his fat hers wickedneſſe, and loſt both patrimonie and title of Earle. Howbeit, his ſonne Roger was fully reſtored, recovered the title of Earle of March and was choſen a fellow of the order of the Garter, at the firſt inſtitu-See Earles of Vlſter. tion thereof. This Roger begat of Philip Montacute, Edmund Earle of March: and he tooke to wife Philip the onely daughter of Leonell Duke of Clarence the third ſonne of King Edward the Third, wherby came unto him the Earldome of Vlſter in Ireland &

the

A the Lordſhip of Clare. After he had ended his life in Ireland where he governed with great commendation; his ſonne Roger ſucceeded being both Earle of March and Vlſter, whom King Richard the ſecond declared heire apparent, and his ſucceſſour to the Crowne, as being in right of his mother the next and vndoubted heire. But he dying before King Richard, left iſſue, Edmund and Anne. Edmund, in regard of his royall bloud and right to the Crowne ſtood greatly ſuſpected to Henrie the Fourth, who had uſurped the Kingdome; and by him was firſt expoſed unto dangers, in ſo much as he was taken by Owen Glendour a rebell, and afterward wheras the Percies purpoſed to advance his right, he was conveied into Ireland, kept almoſt twenty yeres priſoner in the Caſtle of Trim ſuffering all miſeries incident to Princes of the bloud
B while they lie open to every ſuſpicion; and there through extreame griefe ended his daies; leaving his ſiſter Anne his heire.

She was married to Richard Earle of Cambridge, in whoſe right, his heires and poſterity were Earles of March, and made claime to the Kingdome, which in the end alſo they obtained, as we will ſhew in another place. In which reſpect King Edward the Fourth created his eldeſt ſonne being Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall &c. Earle of March alſo, for a further augmentation of his honor. As for the title of Radnor, no man ever bare it to my knowledge.

See in Yorkſhire, toward the end.

C

In this are Pariſhes 52.

D

BRECHNOCK-

E

F

A

SEPTENTRIO

CARDI GAN PARS

RADNOR PA

CARMAR DEN

OGIDEN'S

PARS

GLAMORG

MERIDIES

Llansanfraid

Rayader dowy

Eland flu.

Dulas flu.

Clarwen flu.

Llanuthel

Llanner

Clarthy flu.

Wye flu.

Llestinan

Kethitegarth

Dyf

Duas flu.

Camarch flu.

Towy flu.

Llanyhangle aber gwessen

Capel Llanihangle prinpabon

Llanauan nawre

Llanthewye aber gwessen

Llanganten

Llanynnie

Llanurtyd

Portheroyes

Mayssmynis

Trausenant flu.

Llanllowenuel

Capel pylyn

Istrodefyne

Capel

Llanganiarch

Cruon flu.

Capel de honethy

Hornby flu.

Merterkynok

Kilcombe

Towy flu.

Brane flu.

Capelnewith

Llanbrayne

Llanhangle nantbrane

Llandiloruayn

Llanuaierarbryn

Istradwalter

Llywel

Gart

Battel chap

Llaynhowel

Tre caſtl

Llanymthfrey

Gwetherik flu.

Aberbrayu

Capel widerne

Llanſhit

Talilughay

Llanurdo

Capel bettu

Lanſadurn

Abermarlas

Muthuey flu.

Llanyhangle nmuthuey

Oſke flu.

Cray flu.

Deuinok

Camlas flu.

Touremaltwa

Capel ylldyt

Dulas flu.

Llangadok

Cledath flu.

Oſke flu.

Capel ſenny

The black mountayn

Sawthey flu.

Llouthewyeſan

Llandilouawre

Neath flu.

Traugath flu.

Melta flu.

Hepſy flu.

Taue uaure flu.

Capel Callwen

Deueuer caſtl

Capel Gwenuye

Tauy flu.

Capel Ceyelbryn

Istradwelthye

Turch flu.

Llandebea

Lough flu.

Neath vachan flu.

Penederyn

Istradgunles

Amnoul flu.

Aberpirgum

BRECKNOC
comitatus pars olim SILVRVM

R S

HEREFORDIÆ ORIENS PARS

HEREFORDIÆ MONVMETHENSIS PARS

GLAMORGEN PARS

Camaron flu.
Llanbadern
Castle Cuculles
Llanyhangel
Llanadrindod Bettus chap:
Edwy flu.
Llansanfraid
Colwin east
Llanelwy Llanboderu BVLLEVM Llanuareth
Aberedway
Wye flu.
Llanthewycomb
Altmawre
Llandilo
Gwendor Creccaderne Llanstephan Glaisebury
Llangoyd
Boughrud
Llysswen
Wye flu.
Llandeuathley
Llyhangle Vachan
Talachdye
Brynelys east:
Llanyllo east:
Talgarth
Llangouilog
Llanthew east:
BRECKNOKE Llanyhangle
Tallyn Llangors
Llyn safathan
Llanwarne Llanhamlogh Ketheden Aberkinurik
Skethrog
Penketh east:
Llanohflye
Cantreffe
Blaynllynuye east:
Llanuranach
Llanuygan Tretowre
Gilston Llanddettye
Usk flu.
Llangomder Llanhdennye
Hill
Taue vechan flu.
Capel nantye
Capel tauc echan
Vaynor
Morlashe east:
Porthamble
Castle Dynas
Llanyhangle Comdye
Llansonfrayd east:
Crecowell
Llangattok Llanlye Planagwent
Romney flu.
Brecknoke flu.
Llantony
The fothok
HEREF PARS Comyoye Hothny flu.
Pertrisso
Peter church
Llangenye
Llangroynye
Abergeuenny
Llanuenarth
Hatterel hill
Capelasync Capelbrengoran
Craswel Llanygon
Dulas flu.
Llowas
Clyfford east:
Lewsoy
Hay Clero
Castle Payne Llynboglen
Llanbeder
Landewye chap:
Machnway flu.
Bettus
Wye flu.
Scala Miliarium
1 2 3 4 5
Christophorus Saxton descripsit
Wilhelmus Kip, Sculpsit

A

BRECHNOCK-SHIRE.

B Beneath Radnor-ſhire Southward lieth Brechnock-ſhire, in the Britiſh Brechineau ſo named, as the Welſhmen relate, of a Prince named Brechanius, whom they report to have had a great, and an holy ofspring, to wit, twenty foure daughters all Saints. Farre greater this is than Radnor-ſhire, but thicker ſet with high hils; yet are the valleies fruitfull every where. On the Eaſt ſide it is bounded with Hereford ſhire. On the South with Monmouth, and Glamorgan ſhires: and on the Weſt with Caermardenſhire. But ſeeing there is nothing memorable or materiall to the deſcription of this ſmall province, which is not ſet downe by the curious diligence of Giraldus Cambrenſis who was an Archdeacon heereof above 400, yeeres ſince. I thinke I may doe well for my ſelfe to hold my peace a while, and to admit him with his ſtile into the fellowſhip of this labour.

C Brecknocke, ſaith he, in his booke called Itinerarium Cambriæ, is a country having ſufficient ſtore of Corne; and if there be any defect thereof, it is plentifully ſupplied out of the fruitfulneſſe of England bordering ſo neere upon it; a country likewiſe well ſtored with paſtures and woods, with wild deere and heards of cattaile, having abundance beſide of freſh water fiſh, wherewith Vske on the one ſide and Wy on the other ſerveth it: For, both theſe rivers are full of Salmons and Trouts, but Wy of the twaine is the better, affording the beſt kind of them which they call Vmbras. Encloſed it is with high hils on every ſide, unleſſe it be on the North part. In the Weſt it hath the mountaines of Canterbochan: On the South- ſide likewiſe the Southern mountaines, the chiefe whereof is called Cadier Arthur, that is, Arthurs Chaire, of the two tops of the ſame (for it is διθέιρος that is, ſhaped with two D capes) reſembling the forme of a Chaire. And for that the Chaire ſtandeth very high and upon a ſteepe downfall, by a common tearme it was aſsigned to Arthur the greateſt and mightieſt King of the Britans. In the very pitch and top of this hill, there walmeth forth a ſpring of water: And this fountaine in maner of a well is deepe, but foure ſquare, having no brooke or riveret iſſuing from it, yet are there trouts found therein. And therefore having theſe barres on the South ſide, the aire is the colder, defendeth the country from the exceſſive heat of the Sunne, and by a certaine naturall wholſomneſſe of the aire, maketh it moſt temperate. But on the Eaſt ſide the mountaines of Talgar and Ewias doe as it were forefenſe it.

On the North ſide, as he ſaid, it is more open and plaine, namely where the river Wy ſevereth it from Radnorſhire, by which ſtand two townes well knowen for their
E antiquity, Buelth and Hay. Buelth is pleaſantly ſituate with woods about it, fortified alſo with a Caſtle, but of a later building, by the Breoſes and Mortimers, when as Rheſe ap Gruffin had raſed the ancient Caſtle. Now, the market much reſorted unto maketh it more famous thereabout, but in times paſt it ſeemeth to have beene for the owne worth of great name, becauſe Ptolomee obſerved the poſition thereof according to the Longitude and Latitude: who called it BVLLEVM Silurum. Of this towne the country lying round about it, being rough and full of hils, is named Buelth: wherein, when as the Saxons were now ſpoiling and harrying the whole Iland, and Vortigern had withdrawen himſelfe into theſe parts, Paſcentius his ſonne ruled all as F Lord, by the permiſſion of Aurelius Ambroſe, as Ninnius writeth, who in his chapter of Mervails, reporteth I wot not what wonderous thing heere, of a heape of ſtones, wherein, for ſooth, was plainly to be ſeene the footing of King Arthurs hound. And as for Hay, which in Britiſh is called Trekethle, that is, The towne in a grove of Haſel trees, in the very utmoſt skirt of the ſhire next unto Herefordſhire, it ſtandeth hard by the river Wye: well known, as it ſeemeth to the Romans, whoſe coines is often digged up there, and it ſheweth alſo by the ruins that in old time it was walled. But Bulleum.

Hay.

being being now as it were decaied it complaineth of that moſt lewd rebell Owen Glendowerdwy for his furious outrages, who in waſting and ſpoiling all thoſe countries, moſt villanouſly did depopulate it and ſet it on fire. A

As this river Wy waſheth the North ſide of this ſhire, ſo doth Vske a notable river likewiſe runne through the middeſt thereof, which Vske ſpringing out of the Blacke-Mountain, paſſeth a long with a ſhallow ſtreame, beſide Brechnock the ſhire towne, ſtanding in the very hart in maner of the country, which the Britans call Aber-Hodney, becauſe the two rivers Hodney and Vske doe meet in that place. That this town was inhabited in the Romans time, appeareth by the coines of Romane Emperours now and then digged up heere. Bernard Newmarch, who conquered this little ſhire, built heere a goodly great Caſtle, which the Breoſes and Bohuns repaired: and in our fathers remembrance King Henry the Eight in the friery of the Dominicans appointed a Collegiat Church of fourteene Prebendaries, which he tranſlated hither from Aberguilly in Caer-Marden-ſhire.

Brecknock. B

Two miles hence Eaſtward, there ſpreeds it ſelfe abroad a large poole, which the Britans call Linſavethan and Linſavathen, that is, A lake of ſtanding water: Giraldus tearmeth it Clamoſum, that is, Clamourous, or Crying loud, becauſe it maketh a ſtrange noiſe like thunder, as often as the Yce thereon doth thaw. In Engliſh we name it Brecknock-Meere. Two miles it is in length and as much in bredth: breeding in times paſt many Otters, now full of Pearches, Tenches, and Eeles, which the Fiſhers rowing in ſmall pliant botes doe take.

Linſavethen Meere.

Brecknock Meere. C

Leueney a little river, after it is run into this Poole keepeth his owne hew and colour ſtill by himſelfe; as diſdayning to be mingled therewith, (which the very colour ſheweth) is thought to carry out his owne water entertained a while there by the way, and no more than he brought in with him. It hath beene a currant ſpeech of long continuance among the neighbours there about, that where now the Meere is, there was in times paſt a City, which being ſwallowed up in an earth quake, reſigned up the place unto the waters. And beſide other reaſons, they alleage this for one, that all the high waies of this ſhire come directly hither on every ſide. Which if it be true, what other City ſhould a man thinke ſtood by the river Leveney, than LOVENTIVM, which Ptolomee placeth in this tract: and in no place hitherto could I finde it (albeit I ſearched diligently for it) either by the name, or ſituation, or ruines remaining. Marianus Scotus (which I had almoſt forgotten) ſeemeth to call this Lake Bricenau Meere, who recordeth that Edelfled the Mercian Lady, in the yeere 913. entred into the land of the Britans to win by aſſault a Caſtle at Bricenau-Meere; and that ſhe tooke there the King of the Britans wife priſoner. Whether this Caſtle were Brechnock it ſelfe or Caſtle Dinas, which ſtandeth over it upon a rockey hill, and which the higher it riſeth the ſlenderer and ſmaller it becommeth, it is not certainly known. But that Blean Leveney Caſtle hard by, was the chiefe place of the Barony, that Petre Fitz-Herbert the ſonne of Herbert Lord of Dean-foreſt by Lucy the daughter of Miles Earle of Hereford held, appeareth evidently upon Record.

Loventium. D

Bricenaw Meere. Brecknock.

Blean Leveney. E

In the reigne of King William Rufus, Bernard Newmarch the Norman, a man both hardy and politicke withall, having leavied a great army of Engliſhmen and Normans together, was the firſt that entred into this territory by force and armes, won it and wreſted it out of the Welſhmens hands by bloudy encounters, raiſed fortreſſes heere for his fellow ſouldiers (among which the chiefe were the Aubreeis, Gunters, Hauerds, Waldbeofes and Prichards) allotted lands and Lordſhips, and that he might ſet ſure footing, and eſtabliſh his ſeat among the Welſh, who repined maliciouſly at him, he tooke to wife Neſta the daughter of Gruffin: who being a woman of a ſhamleſſe and revengefull ſpirit, both bereft her ſelfe of her owne good name, and alſo defeated her ſonne of his inheritance. For, when Mahel the ſaid Bernards onely ſonne, did ſhake up in ſome hard and ſharp termes a young Gentleman, with whom ſhe uſed more familiarly than was beſeeming: ſhe, as the Poet ſaith, iram atque animos a crimine ſumens, growing angry and ſtomackfull upon this imputation, tooke her corporall oath before King Henry the Second, and proteſted that her ſonne Mahel was

Lords of Brechnock. F begotten

BEATI PACIFICI

MONUMETHENSIS
COMITATUS, QUEM
OLIM INCOLUERUNT
SILURES

BRECKNOK
PARS

GLAMOR
GAN

PARS

Christophorus Saxton descripsit. Gulielmus Hole sculpsit

Boulston
Llanstony
Cledoc
Llansilio
Hothney flu.
Munow flu.
The olde cast.
Walterstow
The Bothock HEREFORDLE
PARS Altyrynis Trewin
Pentrysso
Stanton chap.
Michaelchurch
Llangattocke
Crucorne
Bettus chap.
Skiriduacre hill
Llanafring
Trylay
Llanthew
Peterchurch
Pennaieb hill
Llandl Nobarthole
The chap.
Warnde Llanvapley Llangroyney
Abergeuenny
Vske flu.
Coldbrook
Wargoch chap.
Llanwenarth
Llanfoyst Llantheuyrther.
Llaueley
Hardwich chap.
Llangattock Iuxta Vsk
Llanhileth
Llanover
Blorench hill
Ebinthuach flu.
Auon flu.
Goytre
Comaund Blainaguent
Capelneuith
Mamhilad
Birthin flu.
Llannehangel pontemoil
Tretthuen Llanhilthe
Panteage Capellrathe Bidwelthye
Kethlygaer Ferestent
Llatheruell chap.
Llanyhangle
Quenock chap.
Monethsley
Lumbe clow hill Penrose Heulles ISCALE-Malpas
GIO II
Biseley
Kirten becon Bettus chap.
Crudye
Sct Seliar
Rochestone cast.
New Bedwes
Maughen
Grenefeld cast.
Caersilye cast.
Ridwrae Bassaleg Gwarneaolepa
Tredeager
Llanihangel Vedds
Sct Bryde Keuenmabley Coydkirne Marshfeld Llanedern
Sct Melens
Peterston Lloynigrant
Rompney
Rothe
The sslat Cardyf

HEREFOR:
PARS GLOCES: TRIÆ
PARS ESTUARIUM SABRINÆ SOMER:
SETENSIS PARS
MONUMETENSIS PARS
Kynchurch Treneraren
Garway
Gothrige east:
Llannoyth
Skenfrith east:
Huntisham
Norton Llanruthall Welshtowne
Whitchurch
Welsh-bicknor
Genaren Englishbicknor
Sct Mought
Llanuaner chap
Perthire
Sct Mickaell
Dicton
Monmouth Llangattock Rockefelde
Trothy flu:
Llanyhangell
Stanton
Gracedue Troy Wonastow
Traowy
Mich eltroye Pennalith Newland Peuresc
the Threargate Dingestow
Wiesbrook Comearuan Tryleghchase Peneclawith
Penclase
Ragland east
Sct Breuels
Llandogo Langouen
Olwye flu:
Lanmessen Trileghgrange
Tintern mua Breckwere
Llandenye Gwernessenye
Tintern ab:
Chapelhill
Llansoye
Llanihangle terremenyth Parcassick
Llangenye
Wolfeneuto
Penterye cha Llangommes
Kilgoruck
Sct Arua
Llanecinte chap:
Chepstow pk
Newchurch chap
Llanllowell
The grange Tydnam Llantrisse Howick Chepstow
Erles wood
Strogle east Shirenewton
Strigulia
Monton ch:
Matherne
Dynham
Runston
Marthellye chap:
Sct Pere Bettesley
Kemes VENTA Crehe Caierwent SILURV
Sct Treacle chap
Aust Llanmaghes Poreskevet Llanhenago Penhow
Dewsto
Sug hrok Llanbed
Caldycot
Trenytie chap:
Sct Bride
Ilston
Pennecoyt Llannebangell
Llanmerten
Llangston
Charston rock
Magor Woundi
Chefell pill
Byssheton east:
Llanwarn Redwick more Wytston Kings rode Goldcliff
Goldcliff poynt
The dennye sland
Porshut poynt Auon flu:
BRISTOL

A begotten in adultery, and not by Bernard her husband: whereupon Mahel being disinherited, Sibyl his sister entred upon that faire inheritance, and with the same enriched her husband Miles, Earle of Hereford. But after that fiue sons of Miles died without issue, this Brechnock-shire in the partition of the inheritance fel to Bertha his daughter: who by Philip de Breos had a sonne William de Breos Lord of Brechnock, upon whom the seditious spirit and shrewd tongue of his wife drew a world of calamities. For when shee had with her intemperate and unbridled language contumeliously abused king Iohn, the king thereupon (because her husband William was very deepely indebted unto him) fell to bee quick and rigorous in demanding the debt: But he, not able to make paiment, after hee had shifted it off many times, and by breaking B daie, still made default, in the end mortgaged unto the King three of his castles; namely Haie, Brecknock and Radnor and put them into his hands. But soone after, levying certaine forces, such as hee could muster up in hast, upon a sodaine surprised them, slew the garison souldiors and wrested the said peeces perforce from them, burnt the towne of Lemster, and thus killing, slaying and driving away booties, hee made foule worke and havook every way, withall such outrages as rebells doe commonly commit. But when the King pursued him, hee conveied him selfe and all that he had into Ireland, complotted and combined with the Kings enemies there: yet under a colour, as if he would make submission, he came unto the King upon pro- C tection & assurance given of safety when he was upon his returne into Ireland. And notwithstanding many goodly promises of the contrary, hee raised new stirres and troubles eftsoones in Wales: But forced in the end to leaue his natiue Country, hee died a banished man in France. As for his wife being taken prisoner, and famished in prison (the extremest miserie that can befall unto man or woman) shee paied most deerely for her wicked and malapert tongue. His sonne Giles, Bishop of Hereford, by the favour and consent of King Iohn, having recovered his fathers inheritance neglecting his nephew the right heire, left it unto his brother Reginald, whose sonne William, Lhelin Prince of Wales having taken him in wel with his wife, hanged. But by the daughters of that William, the Mortimers, Cantelows, & Bohuns Earles of Hereford D entred upon a great and goodly inheritance. And this Brechnock fell in partition unto the Bohuns, and in the end by them unto the Stafords: and when Edward Stafford duke of Buckingham was attainted, many very goodly revenewes fell unto the King in this shire, and else-where.

Called also Braus and Breus.

Red-booke in the Exchequer.

E

It reckoneth parishes. 61.

F

A

Called Ap Brays and Bryse.

Red books in the Exchequer.

B

C

D

A

MONMOVTH-SHIRE.

BEneath Brechnock and Hereford-ſhire Southward, lieth the County of Monmouth, commonly called in Engliſh Monmouthſhire, in times paſt Went-ſet and Wents-land, in Britiſh Guent, of an ancient City ſo called. It is encloſed on the North-ſide with the river Munow that ſepareteth it from Hereford-ſhire: on the Eaſt ſide with Wy running betweene it and Gloceſter-ſhire: on the Weſt with the river Remneie, which ſevereth it from Glamorgan-ſhire, and on the South with the Severn ſea, where into the ſaid rivers togither with Vske, that cutteth through the mideſt of the Country, are diſcharged. As for commodities neceſſary to mans life, it hath not only ſufficient for it ſelf, but alſo affordeth them in plentifull manner to the neighbours adjoining. The Eaſt part is full of graſſe and woods: the Weſt is ſomewhat hilly and ſtony, yet not unthankfull to the husbandman. The people, as ſaith Giraldus writing of his owne age, moſt inured to martial conflicts, is in feats of ſtrength and valour right commendable, and for skill of archery and ſhooting farre ſurpaſſing any country in Wales.

B

C In the utmoſt angle called Ewias toward the Northweſt, not farre from the river Munow, among Hatterell hils which becauſe they riſe up in heigth like a chaire, they call Munith Cader, there ſtood Lanthony a little ancient Abbay, which Walter Lacy founded; unto whom William Earle of Hereford gaue faire lands heere, and from whom are deſcended thoſe renowned Lacies, worthily reputed among the moſt noble Conquerours of Ireland. The ſituation of which Abbay Giraldus Cambrenſis, who knew it better than I, ſhall penſile it out unto you for mee. In the moſt deepe valley of Ewias, ſaith hee, which is about an arrow-ſhoote over, ſtandeth a Church of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, encloſed on everie ſide in a round compaſſe, with hilles mounting up into the ayre, covered with lead, and built ſightly, as the Nature of the place would permit, with an arched roofe of ſtone, in a place where had ſtood aforetime a poore Chappel of Saint D David the Archbiſhop, adorned onelie with wild moſſe, and wreathes of claſping Ivie. A fitte place for true religion, and of all the monaſteries in the Iſland of Britaine moſt convenient for Canonicall diſcipline, beeing founded firſt by two Eremits in the honour an Eremits, farre remooved from all ſtirres and noiſe of people, in a certaine deſert and ſolitarie nouke, ſeated upon the river Hodney running along the botome of the vale, Whereof and of Hodney together, it is called Lanhodeny: For, Lhan ſignifieth, a Church or Eccleſiaſtical place. But if we will ſpeake more exquiſitely, it may bee ſaid, that the proper name of that place is in Welſh Nanthodeny: For even to this day, they that dwell there about call it Lhan Devi Nanthodeny. That is, Davids Church upon the river E Hodeney. Now, the raine, which mountaines breed, falleth here verie often, the windes blow ſtrong, and all winter time almoſt it is continuallie cloudy and miſty weather. And yet notwithſtanding (ſuch is the healthfull temperature of the ayre, which the groſſer it is, the gentler and milder it is) and verie ſeldome there are any diſeaſes heere. The cloiſterers ſitting heere in their cloiſtures, when to refreſh and breath them ſelues they chance to looke up, they ſee on everie ſide of them, over the high roufes and ridges of their houſes, the tops of the hilles touching as it were the skie, and the verie wilde Deere for the moſt part, whereof there is heere great ſtore, feeding aloft (as one would ſay) in the fartheſt Horizon or kenning of their ſight. And it is betweene one and three of the clocke, or there about in a faire cleere daie, ere they can ſee heere the bodie of the ſunne, ſo F much adoe hee hath to get aboue the hille toppes by that time. And a little after. The fame that went of this place drew Roger Biſhoppe of Salisbury hither, beeing then the cheife governour of the Realme under the King, who when hee had a good while conſidered with admiration, the Nature of the place, the deſert ſolitarineſſe, the eremiticall ſtate and condition of the religious men there ſerving God without complayning, together with their conuerſation in every reſpect without murmuring and grud-ging, returned home to the King, and making report unto him of ſuch things there as were worth relation, when he had ſpent the moſt part of the day in commendation of the foreſaid place; at length knit up al the praiſes thereof in this one word: What ſhould I ſay more, quoth he, Al the Treaſure both of King and Kingdome, will not ſuffice to build this cloiſture: when as therefore he had held a good while as wel the King as the whole Court in ſuſpenſe, wondering as they did at this ſpeech, at length hee expounded the darke riddle of his words, by meaning the cloiſtures of thoſe hills, wherewith it is encloſed on every ſide. But hereof enough, if not too much. A Groſſemont. Skinffrith.

Ewias Lacy. Lanthony. Barons Lacy.

Saint Iohn Baptiſt.

Hodney.

By the river Munow are to be ſeene Groſſemont and Skinffrith Caſtles belonging in times paſt by the grant of King Iohn to the Breoſes, afterwards to Hubert de Burgh, Earle of Kent, who, that hee might calme the Court-tempeſts of diſpleaſure and for the renewing of peace and recovering former favour, reſigned both theſe and withall Blanc-Caſtle and Hanfield into the hands of King Henry the Third. B

Hiſtoria Minor Matth. Paris.

In the other corner North-eaſt-ward, Munow and Wy at their confluence doe compaſſe almoſt round about the chiefe town of the ſhire, & giue it the name. For in the Britiſh tongue it is called Mongwy, and in ours Monmouth. On the Northſide, where it is not defended with the rivers, it was fortified with a wall and ditch. In the mideſt of the towne hard by the mercate place ſtandeth a caſtle, which, as it is thought, Iohn, Baron of Monmouth built, from whom it came to the houſe of Lancaſter, after that King Henry the Third had taken from him all his inheritance; for that hee had ſided with the Barons and ſtood rebelliouſly againſt him, or rather, as wee read in the Kings prærogatiue, becauſe his heires had given their faith & allegeance to the Earle of Britaine in France. And ever ſince that time, the towne hath flouriſhed and bin of name in regard of their priviledges and immunities granted unto them by the family of Lancaſter. But for no one thing is it ſo much renowned, as for this, that it was the birth place of King Henry the Fifth that triumpher over France, and the ſecond ornament of Engliſh Nation. That Henry I ſay, who by force of armes and militarie proweſſe maugre the French, conquered France and brought Charles the Sixth King of France to that extemity, that after a ſort he ſurrendred up his crown unto him. In regard of whoſe ſucceſſe and fortunate exploits in warre, Iohn Seward a Poet in thoſe daies not of the loweſt ranke, in a joily lofty verſe thus ſpeaketh to the Engliſh. Monmouth. C D

Ite per extremum Tanain, pigroſque Tirones,
Ite per arentem Lybiam, ſuperate calores
Solis, & arcanos Nili deprendite fontes,
Herculeum finem, Bacchi tranſcurrite metas;
Angli iuris erit quicquid complectitur orbis.
Anglis rubra dabunt pretioſas æquora conchas,
Indus ebur, ramos Panchaia, vellera Seres:
Dum viget Henricus, dum noſter viuit Achilles,
Eſt etenim laudes longè tranſgreſſus auitas. E

Paſſe on to Tanas faire remote, to frozen Northren coſt:
Through Libye drie, beyond the line where Sunnes heat parcheth moſt.
On forth and finde where all the ſprings of Nilus hidden lie,
Thoſe pillers fixt by Hercules, and bounds that mount on hie
Surpaſſe; the Limit-markes alſo which father Bacchus pight;
For why? what all the earth containes is under Englands right.
To Engliſh ſhall the Red-ſea yeeld the pretious pearely wilke
Indy yvory, ſweet frank-incenſe Panchæa, Seres ſilke; F
So long as Henry flouriſheth and our Achilles liues
For he the praiſes farre ſurmounts of all that liv'd before.

Geffrey Ap-Arthur, or of Monmouth.

Monmouth glorieth alſo that Geffrey Ap Arthur or Arthurius biſhop of Aſaph the compiler of the Britiſh hiſtory was borne & bred there: a man, to ſay a truth wel skilled in

A in antiquities, but, as it seemeth, not of antique credite, so many toies and tales hee every where enterlaceth out of his owne braine as hee was charged while hee lived, in so much as now he is ranged among those writers, whom the Roman church hath censured to be forbidden.

From hence Wy with many windings and turnings runneth downe Southward, yeelding verie great plenty of delicate Salmons from September to April. And is at this day the bound betweene Glocester-shire and Monmouth-shire, in times past betweene the Welsh and Englishmen, according to this verse of Nechams making.

Inde vagos vaga Cambrenses, hinc respicit Anglos.

B By wales on this side runneth Wy,
And of the other England he doth eye.

Who, when he is come almost unto his mouth, runneth by Chepstow, that is, if one interprete it after the Saxons tongue, a Mercat: The Britans call it Castle-went. A famous towne this is and of good resort, situate upon the side of an hill, rising from the verie river, fortified round about with a wall of a large circuite, which includes within it both fields and or-chyards. It hath a verie spatious castle situate over the river: and just against it stood a Priory: the better part whereof beeing pulled downe, the rest is converted into a Parish Church. As for the bridge that standeth over Wy, it is of timber and verie high built, because the river at every tide riseth to C a great heigth. Chepstow.

The Lords hereof were the Earles of Pembroch out of the familie of Clare, who of Strighull Castle their seat a little way off, were commonly called Earles of Strighull and of Pembrock. The last of whom named Richard, a man of an invincible courage, and having wonderfull strong armes and long withall, surnamed Strongbow, because he shot in a bow of exceeding great bent, and did nothing but with strong arme, was the first that by his valour made way for the English into Ireland. By a daughter of his it came to the Bigots &c. but now it belongeth to the Earles of Worcester. This towne is not verie ancient to speake of. For, many there be that constantly affirme, and not without good reason, that not many ages agoe it had his D beginning from VENTA a verie ancient citie, that in the daies of Antonine the Emperour flourished about foure miles hence Westward and was named VENTA SILVRVM, (as one would say) the Principall citie of the Silures: Which name neither hostile fury nor length of time hath as yet discontinued: for it is called even as this day Caer went, that is, The City went. But, as for the citie it selfe, either time or hostility hath so caried it away, that now were it not only for the ruinate wals, the checker worke, pavements, and peeces of Roman money, it would not appeere there was such a city. It tooke up in compasse aboue a mile: on the South side a great part of the wal standeth, and there remaine little better than the rubbish of three bulwarks. And yet of how great account it was in ancient times, wee may gather, if it were but by this, E that before the name of Monmouth once heard of, all this whole country was of it, called Guent, Went-set and Wents-land. Moreover, as we read in the life of Tathaius a British Saint; it was an Academie, that is to say, a place dedicated to the studie of good letters, which the said Tathaie whom King Caradock the son of Inirius procured to come thither out of the desert wildernesse, governed with great commendation, and there founded a church. Earles of Strigul or Pembrock. Venta. Caer-went. The Booke of Landaffe church.

Five miles from hence Westward, is seated Strighul Castle, at the foote of the mountaines, we cal it at this day Strugle, the Normans named it Estrighill: which as we read in K. William the First his Domesday booke, William Fitz-Osbern Earle of Hereford built: and afterwards it became the seat of the Earles of Pembrock out of the F house of Clare. Whereupon they were usually called Earles of Strighul, as I even now intimated. Strighul castle.

Beneath these places upon the Severn sea, nere unto Wy-mouth, standeth Portskewith, which Marianus nameth Potescith: who hath recorded, that Harald in the yeere 1065. erected a fort there against the Welshmen, which they streightwaies under the conduct of Caradock, overthrew. And adioining to it is Sudbrok, the church wherof called Portskewith. Sudbroke.

Trinity Chappell ſtandeth ſo neere the ſea, that the vicinity of ſo tyrannous a neighbour, hath ſpoiled it of halfe the Church-yarde, as it hath done alſo of an olde fortification, lieng thereby, which was compaſſed with a triple ditch and three rampiers as high as an ordinary houſe, caſt in forme of a bowe, the ſtring whereof is the ſea-cliffe. That this was a Romane worke the Britaine brickes, and Roman coynes there found are moſt certaine arguments, among which, the Reverend father in God Francis B. of Landaff (by whoſe information I write this) imparted unto mee of his kindneſſe one of the greateſt peeces that ever I ſaw coined of Corinthian copper by the City of Elaia in the leſſer Aſia to the honour of the Emperour Severus with this Greeke inſcription ΑΥΤ. ΚΑΙ. Α. CEΠΤΙ. CEBΗΡΟC ΠΕΡ. that is, THE EMPEROVR CAESAR. LVCIVS SEPTIMIVS SEVERVS PERTINAX. And in the Reverſe, an horſeman with a Trophæe erected before him, but the letters not legible, ſaue vnder him ΕΛΑΙΤΩΝ. that is, Of the Elaians, which kinde of great peeces the Italians call Medaglioni, and were extraordinary coines, not for common uſe, but coined by the Emperours either to bee diſtributed by the waie of Largeſſe in triumphes, or to be ſent for tokens to men well deſerving, or elſe by free cities to the glorie and memory of good Princes. What name this place anciently had, is hard to be found, but it ſeemeth to haue beene the port and landing place for Venta Silurum when as it is but two miles from it.

Coine of Severus.

Medailes.

A B

Then Throgoy, a little river neere unto Caldecot entreth into the Severn ſea, where we ſaw the wall of a caſtle that belonged to the high Conſtables of England: and was holden by the ſervice of Conſtableſhip of England. Hard by, are ſeene Wondy and Penhow, the ſeats in times paſt of the noble family of Saint Maur, now corruptly named Seimor. For, G. Mareſhall Earle of Pembrock about the yeere of our Lord 1240. was bound for the winning of Wondy out of the Welſh mens hands, to aide William Seimor. From him deſcended Roger de Saint Maur knight, who married one of the heires of I. Beauchamp of Hach, a very noble Baron, who derived his pedegree from Sibyl heire unto William Mareſhall, that moſt puiſſant Earle of Pembrock, from William Ferrars Earle of Derby, from Hugh de Vivon, and William Mallet, men in times paſt moſt highly renowned.

Inq. 3. E. 1.

Woundy.

The family of Saint Maur or Seimor.

C D

The nobilitie of all theſe and of others beſides, as may bee evidently ſhewed, hath met togither in that right honorable perſonage Edward Saint Maur or Seimor, now Earle of Hartford, a ſingular favorer of vertue and good learning, worthy in that behalfe to be honored and commended to poſterity.

The Moore.

An Inundation in Ianuary. 1607.

Gold-cliffe.

E F

Beneath this, lieth ſpred for many miles togither a merſh, they call it the Moore, which, when I lately reviſed this worke, ſuffered a lamentable loſſe: For when the Severn ſea at a ſpring tide in the change of the Moone what beeing driven backe for three daies together with a Southweſt winde, and what with a verie ſtrong pirrie from the ſea troubling it, ſwelled and raged ſo high, that with ſurging billowes it came rolling and in-ruſhing amaine upon this tract lying ſo low, as alſo upon the like flates in Somerſet-ſhire over againſt it, that it overflowed all, ſubverted houſes and drowned a number of beaſts, and ſome people with all. Where this merſh coaſt bearing out by little and little runneth forth into the ſea, in the verie point thereof ſtandeth Goldclyffe aloft, that is, as Giraldus ſaith, A Golden cliffe, ſo called, becauſe the ſtones there, of a golden colour, by reverberation of the Sunne ſhining full upon them, glitter with a wonderfull brightneſſe: neither can I bee caſilie perſwaded (ſaith hee) that Nature hath given this bigneſſe in vaine unto the ſtones, and that there ſhould bee a flowre heere without fruit, were there any man that would ſerch into the veines there, and uſing the direction of Art enter in the inmoſt and ſecreteſt bowels of the Earth.

River Uske.

Neere to this place there remaine the reliques of a Priorie, that acknowledge thoſe of Chandos for their founders and patron. Paſſing thence by the meriſh country, wee came to the mouth of the river Iſca, which the Britans name Vsk and Wiſk, and ſome writers terme it Oſca. This river as it runneth through the mideſt, as I ſaid before, of this County, floweth hard by three townes of eſpeciall antiquity.

The

A The first, in the limite of the shire North-west, Antonine the Emperour calleth GOBANIVM, at the very meeting of Vske and Geveny: whereof it had the name: and even at this day, keeping the ancient name, as it were, safe and sound is tearmed Aber-Gevenny, and short Aber-genny, which signifieth the confluents of Gevenny or Gobanny. Fortified it is with wals and a Castle, which as saith Giraldus of all the Castles in Wales hath beene most defamed and stained with the foule note of treason. First, by William, Earle Miles his sonne, afterwards by William Breos: for both of them after they had trained thither, under a pretense of frendship, certain of the Nobles and chiefe gentlemen of Wales, with promise of safe conduct, vilanously slew B them. But they escaped not the just judgement and vengeance of God. For, William Breos, after he had beene stripped of all his goods, and lost his wife and some of his children, who were famished to death, died in banishment: the other William, being brained with a stone, whiles Breulais Castle was on fire, suffred in the end due punishment for his wicked deserts. The first Lord to my knowledge of Aber Gevenny was one Sir Hameline Balun who made Brien of Wallingford or Brient De L'isle called also the Fitz-Count his heire. He having built heere a Lazarhouse for his two sonnes that were Lepres, ordained Walter the sonne of Miles Earle of Hereford, heire of the greatest part of his inheritance. After him succeeded his brother Henrie, slaine by the Welshmen, who seized upon his lands, which the Kings Lieutenants and Captaines could not defend without great perill and danger. By a sister of this Henrie it C descended to the Breoses, & from them in right of marriage, by the Cantlowes to the Hastings, which Hastings being Earles of Penbroke enioied it for diverse descents, and Iohn Hastings having then no child borne deuised both it, and the Earldome of Penbroke as much as in him lay to his cosin Sir William Beauchamp, conditionally that he should beare his Armes. And when the last Hastings ended his life issuelesse, Reginald Lord Grey of Ruthin being found his heire, passed over the Baronie of Abergeuenny to the said William Beauchamp who was summoned afterward to Parliament by the name of W. Beauchamp de Abergeuenny. He entailed the said Baronie, reserving an estate to himselfe and his wife, and to the lawfull issue masle of their bodies; and D for default of such issue, to his brother Thomas Beauchampe Earle of Warwicke and his heires masles. This William Beauchampe Lord of Abergeuenny, had a sonne named Richard, who for his Martiall valour was created Earle of Worcester, and slaine in the French-warres, leaving one onely daughter, whom Sir Edward Neuill, tooke to wife. Since which time the Neuills have enioyed the honorable title of the Barons of Abergeuenny (howbeit the Castle was by vertue of the entaile aforesaid detained from them along time.) The fourth Baron of this house dying in our remembrance, left one onely daughter Marie, married to Sir Thomas Fane Knight, betwixt whom being the heire generall: and Edward Nevil the next heire male (unto whom by a will and the same ratified by authority of the Parliament, the Castle of Abergeuenny E and the greatest part of the lands was fallen) there was great competition, for the title of Abergevenny argued in the high Court of Parliament in the second yeere of King Iames; and their seuerall claimes debated seven severall daies by the learned counsell of both parts, before the Lords of the Parliament. Yet when as the question of precise right in law was not sufficiently cleered, but both of them in regard of the nobility and honour of their family were thought of every one right worthy of honorable title; and whereas it appeared evidently by most certaine proofes, that the title as well of the Baronie of Abergevenny, as of Le Despenser appertained hereditarily to this family. The Lords humbly and earnestly be sought the King, that both parties might be enobled by way of restitution, who gratiously assented thereunto. Heere- F upon the Lord Chancellour proposed unto the Lords, first whether the heire male should have the title of Abergevenny or the heire female: & the most voices carried it, that the title of the Baronie of Abergevenny should be restored unto the heire male. And when he propounded secondly, whether the title of the Baronie Le Despenser should be restored unto the female, they all with one accord gave their full consent. Which being declared unto the King, he confirmed their determination Abergevenny.

Lords of Abergevenny.

Clause 49. Edw. 3.

with

with his gratious approbation and royall assent. Then was Edward Nevill by the Kings writ called unto the Parliament by the name of Baron Abergevenney, and in his Parliament Robs betweene two Barons, as the maner is, brought into the house, and placed in his seat above the Baron Audley. And at the very same time, were the letters Patents read, whereby the King restored, erected, preferred &c. Mary Fane, to the state, degree, title, stile, name, honour, and dignity of Baronesse Le-Despenser, To have and to hold the foresaid State and unto the above named Mary and her heires, and that her heires, successively should bee Barons Le-Despenser &c. And upon a new question moved, unto whether the Baronie of Abergevenny, or the Baronie Le-Despenser, the priority of place was due. The Lords referred this point to the Commissioners for the Office of the Earle Mareschall of England, who after mature deliberation and weighing of the matter, gave definitive sentence for the Baronie Le Despenser, set downe under their hands and signed with their seales, which was read before the Lords of the Parliament, and by order from them entered into the Iournall Booke, out of which I have summarily thus much exemptified: Iohn Hastings (for I haue no reason to passe it over in silence) held this Castle by homage, Wardship, & Mariage when it happened (as we read in the Inquisition) and if there should chance any warre betweene the King of England and the Prince of Wales, he was to keepe the country of Over-went at his owne charges in the best maner he can, for his owne commodity the Kings behoofe, and the realme of Englands defense.

Baronesse Le Despenser.

6. Ed. 2.

Burrium.

The second little Citie which Antonine named BVRRIVM, and setteth downe twelve miles from Gobannium, standeth where the river Birthin and Vske meete in one streame. The Britans at this day, by transposing of the letters, call it Brunebegy for Burenbegie, and Caer Vske: Giraldus tearmeth it Castrum Oscæ, that is, The Castle of Vske, and we Englishmen, Vske. At this day it can shew nothing but the ruins of a large and strong Castle, situate most pleasantly betweene the river Vske, and Oilwy a riveret, which beneath it runneth from the East by Ragland, a faire house, of the Earle of Worcesters, built castle-like.

Vske.

Isca Legionis Caer Lheon ar Vske.

The third Citie which Antonine nameth ISCA, and LEGIO SECVNDA, is on the other side of Vske twelve Italian miles just distant from BVRRIVM, as he hath put it downe. The Britans call it Caer Leon, and Caer LEON ar Vske, that is, The Citie of the Legion upon Vske, of the second Legion Augusta, which also is called Britannica Secunda. This Legion being ordained by the Emperour Augustus, and translated by Claudius out of Germaine into Britaine, under the conduct of Vespasian, being ready at his commande, when hee aspired to be Emperour, and which procured the Legions in Britaine to take his part, was heere at last placed in garrison by Iulius Frontinus (as it seemeth) against the Silures. How great this ISCA was in those daies listen unto our Girald out of his booke called Itinerarium Cambriæ who thus describeth it out of the ruins. It was an ancient and Authenticke Citie excellently well built in old time by the Romanes with bricke wals. Heere may a man see many footings of the antique nobility and dignity it had, mighty and huge palaces with golden pinacles in times past, resembling the proud stateliness of the Romans, for that it had bin founded first by Roman Princes, and beautified with goodly buildings. There may you behold a giantlike towre, notable and brave baines, the remaines of Temples, and Theatres, all compassed in with faire wals, which are partly yet standing. There may one find in every place, as well within the circuit of the wall, as without, houses under ground, water pipes and Vaults within the earth, and (that which you will count among all the rest worth observation) you may see every where hote houses made wondrous artificially, breathing forth heat very closely at certaine narrow Tunnells in the sides. Heere lie enterred two noble Protomartyrs of greater Britaine, and next after Alban and Amphibalus the very principall heere crowned with Martyrdome namely Iulius and Aaron: and both of them had in this Citie a goodly Church dedicated unto them. For, in ancient times there had beene three passing faire Churches in this Citie: One of Iulius the Martyr, beautified with a choire of Nunnes devoted to the service of God: A second founded in the name of blessed Aaron his companion, and ennobled with an excellent order of Chanons. Amphibalus also, the Teacher of

Saint

A Saint Alban and a faithfull informer of him unto faith was borne heere. The ſite of the Citie is excellent, upon the river Oske, able to beare a prety Veſſell at an high water from the Sea, and the Citie is fairely furniſhed with woods and medows: Heere it was that the Roman Embaſſadours repaired unto the famous Court of that great King Arthur. Where Dubritius alſo reſigned the Archiepiſcopall honor unto David of Menevia, when the Metropolitane See was tranſlated from hence to Menevia.

Thus much out of Giraldus. But for the avouching and confirming of the antiquity of this place, I think it not impertinent to adioin here thoſe antique inſcriptions latly digged forth of the ground, which the right reverend father in God Francis Godwin Biſhop of Landaffe, a paſſing great lover of venerable Antiquity and of all good
B Literature, hath of his courteſie imparted unto me. In the yeere 1602. in a medow adjoining, there was found by ditchers a certaine image of a perſonage girt and ſhort truſſed, bearing a quiver (but head, hands and feete were broken off) upon a pavement of ſquare tile in checker worke: alſo a fragment of an altar with this inſcription engraven in great capitall letters three inches long, erected by Haterianus the Leiutenant Generall of Auguſtus and Propretour of the Province Cilicia.

C

D

E

The next yeere following, hard by, was this table alſo gotten out of the ground, which proveth that the foreſaid image was the perſonage of Diana: and that her Temple was repaired by Titus Flavius Poſthumius Varus, an old ſouldier happly of a band of the ſecond Legion.

These Inſcriptions are to be ſeene at Mathern in the Biſhop of Landaffes houſe.

F

T. FL. POSTVMIVS VARVS
V. C. LEG. TEMPL. DIANÆ RESTITVIT.

Veteranus Cohortis.

Alſo,

Alſo, a votive Altar, out of which GETA the name of Cæſar may ſeeme then to have beene raſed, what time as he was made away by his brother Antonine Baſsianus, and proclaimed an Enimie, yet ſo, as by the tract of the letters it is in ſome ſort apparent: A

PRO SALVTE AVGG. N. N.
SEVERI ET ANTON- B
NI ET GETÆ CAES.
P. SALTIENVS P. F. MÆ-
CIA THALAMVS HADRI.
PRÆF. LEG. II. AVG.
C. VAMPEIANO, ET C
LVCILIAN.

In printed copies, Claudius Pompeianus and Lollianus Avitus Coſſ. Anno Chriſti 210.

This moſt beautifull Altar alſo though maimed and diſmembred, was there found, which I thinke is thus to be made up.

IMP. D
M AVRELIO ANTONINO
AVG E SEVER. LVCII
FILIO
LEC. II AVG. P. F

A

Alſo theſe fragments.

*7. VECILIANA.

*Centurio.

B

VIII.

7. VALER.
MAXSIMI.

Moreover a little before the comming in of the Engliſh Saxons, there was a Schoole heere of 200. Philoſophers, who being skilfull in Aſtronomie and all other arts, diligently obſerved the courſe and motion of the ſtarres, as wrote Alexander Elſebienſis, a rare Author and hard to be found; out of whom Thomas Iames of Oxford (a learned man and a true lover of bookes who wholy addicted to learning, and now laboriouſly ſearching the Libraries of England, to the publicke good purpoſeth that (God bleſſe his labour which will be to the great benefit of all Students) hath copied out very many notes for me. In the reigne of Henrie the ſecond (what time Giraldus wrote) it ſeemeth that this Citie was of good ſtrength. For Yrwith of Caer Leon a courageous and hardly Britan, defended it a great while againſt the Engliſh, untill he was vanquiſhed by the King, and ſo diſſeized of the poſſeſſion thereof. But now, that it may ſerve for an enſample, that as well Cities have fatall periods of their flouriſhing ſtate, as men of their lives; it is decaied, and become a very ſmall towne, which in times paſt was of that greatneſſe & reaching out ſo farre in length on both ſides of the river, that Saint Iulians, an houſe of the late Sir William Herbert Knight, was, by report, ſometime within the very Citie, where Saint Iulius the Martyrs Church ſtood, which now is much about a mile out of the towne. Alſo, out of the ruins thereof a little beneath, at the mouth of Vske, grew up Newport, which Giraldus nameth in Latin Novus Burgus, a towne of later time built, and not unknowne, by reaſon of the Caſtle and commodiouſneſſe of the harbour: in which place there was in times paſt ſome one of theſe Roman high waies or ſtreets, whereof Necham hath made mention in theſe verſes,

Thomas Iames.

Newport.

C

D

E

Intrat, & auget aquas Sabrini fluminis Oſca,
Præceps, teſtis erit Iulia Strata mihi.

Vske into Severn headlong runnes and makes his ſtreame to ſwell, Witneſſe with me is Iulia ſtreet, that knoweth it full well.

This Iulia Strata, was no doubt ſome Port-highway and (if we may be allowed to make a conjecture) what great abſurdity were it to ſay, that it was caſt up and made by Iulius Frontinus the vanquiſher of the Silures? There creepeth, ſaith Giraldus, in the bounds of this New-burgh or Newport a little river named Nant Pencarn, which cannot be waded and paſſed over but at certaine Fourds, not ſo much for any depth that the water is of, as for the hollowneſſe of the Chanell, and the oaſy mud in the botome: and it had of old a fourd named Rydpertarn, that is, The fourd under the top of a rocke. Which when Henrie the ſecond King of England chanced at a venture to paſſe over, even then then when it was almoſt growen out of remembrance, the Welſhmen, who were A over credulous in beleeving of Propheſies, as if now all had beene ſure on the Kings ſide, and themſelves hopeleſſe of all helpe, were quite out of heart and hope of good ſucceſſe, becauſe Merlin Silveſter, the Britiſh Apollo, had propheſied, that then the Welſhmens powre ſhould be brought under, when a ſtout Prince with a freckled face (and ſuch a one was King Henrie the Second) ſhould paſſe over that foord.

F

Under the Saxons Heptarchie, this region was ſubject to the mountaine Welſh-Dun-ſettan. men (whom the Engliſh called Dun-ſettan) who notwithſtanding, as the ancient lawes doe ſhew, were under the commaund of the Weſt Saxons. But at the firſt comming in of the Normans, the Lords Merchers moſt grievouſly plagued and an- B noied them, but eſpecially Hamelin Balun, of whom I ſpake, Hugh Lacy, Walter and Gilbert, both ſurnamed of the houſe of Clare, Miles of Gloceſter, Robert Chandos, *Pain
Fitz-Iohn*, Richard Fitz-Punt, and Brien of Wallingford: unto whom after that the Kings had once given whatſoever they could get and hold in this tract by ſubduing the Welſh, ſome of theſe before named by little and little reduced under their ſubjection the upper part of this ſhire which they called Over-went:
others the lower part which they tearmed Nether-went.
And this ſhire is not accounted among the Shires of Wales. C

D

This ſhire containeth Pariſh Churches 127.

E

GLAMORGAN- F

GLAMORGAN
Comitatus, qui olim pars Silurum

CARMAR: DEN

PARS

MARE

Christophorus Saxton descripsit.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Gulielmus Hole sculpsit.

Chapel coilbryn
Strad Cynfeg
Dulych flu.
Cynfeg flu.
Beims
Capel brenant Llanfuge
Llineddye
Llandilo talabont
Llangenarche
Capel gundlo Llanelythe
Bachhamus insul.
Llegor east: LEUCARUM
Whitford poynt Llanmyrempere
Penguerne
St kenetes chapel
Webley
Llanmidok Llandridian
The holme Cheriton Parkbrewis
Rynolston Llangenyth
Penmaen Knolston
Rossilye
Penrise
Llandeiry east
Oxwiche Porthcrwen
W. orme shead poynt
Oxwich poynt Nicholastowne Bisshopston
Oystermouth east
Penmarth
Penmarth east
Mumbles poynt Backenston Cadoxtowne Llansamlid
Neath ab.
Llanyfied NIDUM
Neath Langoyuelach
Sct Johns
Forrest coidfranck Britonferie Bagland Michaelchurch
Swanfey Aberauon
Margam
Cynfeg flu.
Dulych flu.
Kenfig flu.
Thu flu.

BRECNOK PARS

MONMETHENSIS PARS

BRINIANVM

Melka flu:
Tyf flu:
Taffachan flu:
Neath vachan flu:
Chapelnanty
Caynor Penderyn
Cunnion flu
Morlaybe caſtle Marterhdull
Rumney flu:
Chapellrathteare Bedwelthye
Aberdare
Cledaugh flu:
Chapelglodie Kethligayer
Tereſcent
Faldray Llanwnmye Eſtrydiwodok Llanmabor
Bedwes
Maughen
Rumney flu:
Llangynewar
Beitus chap:
Llandowodok
Euenny flu
Llanyliduandray Eglyſſylian
Carſily caſtle
Theum
Peterſton ſuper mont
Arthors buttes hill
Llantriſſent
Caſt coche Reuenmable
Llanedarn Llanyſſen
Sct Melans
Llaniſtan
Sct Brides ſuper more Llanbayrne
Pentreche Llyſtalbont
Coſhie caſt
Treer caſt
The reader
Whit church
Coſhchurche
Caſt: meneche
Tilcot Llamlyd Llanharve
Sſtradlowerdan flu
Coidmerchan
Sct Fagan
Sct bride
Llaleſten
Nolton
Sct Maries hill
Llan ſanor
Llangan
Tallanant caſt Ulanbaderwarn ILAN-DAF Car-dif
New caſt Bridgend
Kethligarne caſt
Welſh newton
Penley Llanmihangle
Llandydock
Penum caſt
Welſh Sct donetes
Sct georges Marthermawr
Wenny Cowbridge
Sct Nicholas
Kayrey
Llandough
Newton
notage Coulſton
Sct Lothans Llyſworney
Llanquian caſt Llantrithed
Winſton Llanbanal
Ogmore caſt Llanblethion
Sct Hilarye
Dreen hills
Worleſton caſt
Cogan pl
Pleuarth poynt
Clemes town
Sct Brides water
Nash pva
Bao Carnlloyde
Denni pouns caſt
Cogan
Penmarth bay Llandough
Landogh
Sct Andros
Eglwſſeild
Coſton
Llimerock poynt
Wyke Llanmihangle
nuctu cowbridge
Sct Marychurch Llanlleithen
Merther louan
Dumcruen
Nash magna Penmark Cadoxton Egloſſbrues Dredruckan
Llanmaes
Lanc adle
Barrye
Marcroes
Sylve
Sylve ſnſul Llanwyt
Funmun caſt
Gilſto
Sct Donetes caſt
Bouiū
Sct Athan
Barrye ſnſul
Bouerton
Nash poynt Aberthan
Barrye caſt

A

GLAMORGAN-SHIRE.

B He laſt Country of the Silures was that, I thinke, which wee at this day call Glamorgan-ſhire, the Britans Morganuc, Glath-Morgan, and Glad Vorganuc, that is, The Region of Morganuc: ſo named, as moſt ſuppoſe, of one Morgan a Prince, as others thinke of Morgan an Abbay. But if I derived it from Mor, which in the Britiſh tongue ſignifieth The ſea; I know not verily whether I ſhould dally with the truth or no? Howbeit, I haue obſerved that a towne in little Britaine ſtanding upon the ſea-coaſt, now called Morlaïs, was of Ptolomee and the ancient Gaules termed Vorganium or Morganium (for M. and V. conſonant are often changed one for another in this tongue) and whence I pray you but from the ſea? And this our Morganuc alſo lieth upon the ſea: for, ſtretching out directly more in length, than it ſpreadeth in bredth, on the South-ſide it is accoſted with the Severn ſea. But where it looketh toward the Land, it hath on the Eaſt-ſide Monmouth-ſhire, on the North Brechnoch-ſhire, & on the Weſt Caermardenſhire bordering upon it.

Whence came the name of Glamorgan.

C The North part by reaſon of the mountaines is rough and unpleaſant, which as they bend downe Southward by little and little become more mild and of better ſoile; and at the foote of them there ſtretcheth forth a plaine open to the South-Sunne, in that poſition of ſituation which Cato judged to bee the beſt, and for the which, Pliny ſo highly commendeth Italy. For, this part of the Country is moſt pleaſant and fruitfull, beautified alſo on every ſide with a number of townes.

Ieſtine a great Lord in the reigne of William Rufus, after he had rebelled againſt Rheſe his Prince, and not able to make his part good with him, very raſhly, and inconſideratly (which hee afterward repented too late) ſent Enion a noble man to whom he had affianced his daughter; to procure Robert Fitz-Haimon ſonne to Haimon Dentatus Lord of Corboil in Normandy, to come out of England and aide him againſt Rheſe: who forthwith having muſtered certaine forces, and taking for to aſſociate him in this journey twelue knights, firſt gaue Rheſe Battaile and ſlew him, and afterwards being allured with the fertility of the Country, whereof beforehand hee made full account to be Lord, turning his powre upon Ieſtine him ſelfe, becauſe hee had not kept touch with Enion nor performed his promiſe, eaſily thruſt him out of his ancient inheritance, and ſhared the Country among his companions. The hard and baraine hill Country hee granted to the ſaid Enion, the more fertile parts hee devided betweene him and thoſe twelue knights whom hee termed Peres, on this condition, that they ſhould hold them in fee, and vaſſallage of him as their cheiſe Lord, to maintaine one another in common with their aides and auxiliary forces; to defend every one his owne ward in his Caſtle of Caerdiff, and to be preſent and aſſiſt him in his courts in the adminiſtration of Iuſtice. It ſhall not bee amiſſe to put downe their names out of a little pamphlet, which Sir Edw. Stradling or Sir Edw. Maunſel both knights men of ancient deſcent & moſt skilful in Antiquity, I wot not whether (for it goeth abroad under both their names) wrote concerning this matter. And theſe be their names.

The Subduing of Glamorganſhire.

Robert Fitz-Haimon.

12. Knights.

Caerdiff.

D

E

F

William of London, or de Londres.
Richard Granvil.
Pain Turbervill.
Oliver Saint-Iohn.
Robert de Saint Quintin.
Roger Bekeroul.
William Eaſterling, for that he was borne in Germanie, whoſe heires are now called Stradlings.
Gilbert Humfranvill.

Richard Siward.
Iohn Fleming.
Peter Soore.
Reinald Sully.

The river Remnie falling from the mountaines, is the limite on the East side, whereby this Country is divided from Monmouth-shire; and Remni in the British tongue signifieth to Divide.

Caer Philli. Not farre from it where the river holdeth on his course through places hardly passable, among the hills, in a marish ground are to bee seene the tottering wals of Caer-philli Castle, which hath beene of so huge a bigneſſe, and such a wonderfull peece of worke beside, that all men wel nere say, it was a garison-fort of the Romans. Neither will I denie it, although I cannot as yet perceiue by what name they called it: and yet it may seeme to haue beene re-edified a new, considering it hath a chappell built after the Christians maner (as I was enformed by Iohn Sanford a man singular well learned, and of exact judgement) who diligently tooke view of it. In later ages it was the possession of the Clares Earles of Gloceſter descended from Fitz-Haimon aforesaid; neither do any of our Chronicles make mention thereof before K. Edward the Seconds time. For then, after that the Spensers by underhand practises had set the King, Queene, and Barons at debate, the Barons besieged a long time Hugh Spenser the yonger whom they called Hugolin herein, & could not prevaile. By this river also (but the place, is not certainely knowne Faustus a very good sonne, as Ninnius writeth, of Vortigern so bad a father, built a great Place; where, with other holy men hee praied daily unto God, that him selfe, whom his father, committing most abominable incest had begotten of his owne daughter might not be punished grievously for his fathers faults, also that his father might at length repent heartily, and his natiue Country be eased from the bloudy wars of the Saxons. A little beneath, hath Ptolamee placed the mouth of RATOSTABIVS or RATOSTABIVS, using a maimed word in steed of Traith-Taff, that is, The sandy Trith of the river Taff. For, there the said river Taff, sliding downe from the hilles, runneth toward the sea by Landaff, that is, the Church by Taff, a small Citie and of small reputation, situate somewhat low, yet a Bishops See, having within the Diœceſſe 154. parishes, and adourned with a Cathedrall Church consecrated to Saint Telean Bishop of the same: which Church German and Lupus, French Bishops, then erected, when as they had suppressed the hæresie of Pelagius that was dangerously spred all Britaine over, and preferred Dubricius a most holy man to be the first Bishop there, unto whom Meuricke a British Lord freely gave all the land that lieth betweene the rivers Taff and Elei. From hence goeth, Taff, to Caer diff, called of the Britans Caerdid a proper fine towne (as townes goe in this country) and a very commodious haven: which the foresaid, Fitz-Haimon, fortified with a wall and Castle, that it might bee both a seat for warre and a Court of Iustice: wherein, beside a band of choise soldiers those twelve Knights were bound to keepe Castle-gard. Howbeit a few yeeres after, Yuor Bach a British Mountainer, a little man of person but of a great and resolute courage, marching with a band of men by night, without any sturre suddenly suppriſed, tooke prisoner William Earle of Gloceſter, Fitz-Haimons daughters sonne, together with his wife and young sonne, and detained them in hold with him, untill he had made him full satisfaction for all wrongs and losses. But how, Robert Curthose, William the Conquerours eldest sonne, a man over venterous and foole hardy in Warlicke exploits, quite put by his hope of the Crowne of England by his younger brethren and bereft of both his eies, lived untill hee was an old man in this Castle, you may see if you please in our Historians, and understand with all, that roiall parentage is neuer assured either of ends, or safe securitie.

The mouth of Ratostabius Traith Taff. Landaff. Historie of Landaff. Caerdiffe. Robert Curthose Duke of Normandy.

Sully, haply so called of the Silures. Scarce three miles from the mouth of Taff, in the very bending in of the shore, there lie aflote as it were two small, but pleasant Ilands, separated one from another and from the maine land with narrow in-lettes of the sea. The hithermore is called Tullie, of the towne right over against it, which tooke the name,

A name, as it is thought, of Robert Sully (for it fell to his part in the diuision) if you would not rather haue him to take his name of it. The farthermore is named Barry, of Baruch an holy man buried there, who as hee gaue name to the place, so the place gaue the surname afterwards to the Lords thereof. For that noble familie of Vicounts Barries in Ireland had their originall from hence. In a rocke, or cliffe hereof by the sea side, saith Giraldus, there appeereth a very little chinck into which if you lay your eare you shall heere a noise as it were of Smithes at worke, one while the blowing of bellowes, another while the striking of sledge and hammer, sometime the sound of the grindstone and iron tooles rubbing against it, the hissing sparkes also B of steele-gads within holes, as they are beaten, yea and the puffing noise of fire burning in the furnace. Now, I should easilie bee perswaded that such a sound may come of the sea-water closely getting into the rocke, were it not the same continued as well when the sea ebbeth at a low water when the shore is bare, as it doth at an high water when it is full sea. Not unlike to this was the place which Clemens Alexandrinus maketh mention of in the seuenth booke of his Stromata in these words. They that haue written histories doe say, that in the Isle of Britaine, there is a certaine hole or caue under the bottome of an hill, and on the toppe thereof a gaping chaune or chinke: And whensoeuer the winde is gathered into that hole, and tossed too and fro in the wombe or concauity thereof, there is heard aboue a sound of cymballs. For, the winde driuen backe giues the stronger sound.

Barry.

A wonderfull caue or hole.

C Beyond these Islands, the shire runneth directly westward, and giveth entrance and passage to one river, upon which more within land, standeth Cowbridge (the Britans, of the Stone-bridge call it Pont-van) a mercate towne, and the second of those three which Fitz-Haimon the Conqueror kept for himselfe. Now, whereas Antonine the Emperor in this very coast, at the same distance from ISCA, placed BOVIVM, which also is corruptly red BOMIVM, my conjecture liked me so well, that I haue beene of opinion, this towne was the said BOVIVM: but seeing that three miles from hence there standeth Bouerton, which fitly accordeth in sound with Bovium, so loue me truth, I dare not seeke for BOVIVM elsewhere. And that it is no D strange and new thing that places should be fitted with names from Kine & Oxen, I report mee to Bosporus in Thacia, Bovianum in Samnium, and Bauli in Italie, as it were, Boalia, if wee may beleeue Symmachus. But let this one argument serue for all; fifteene miles from BOVIVM, hath Antonine placed, euen with a latine name the towne NIDVM, which although our Antiquaries haue beene this great while a hunting after in vaine: yet, at the verie same distance there sheweth it selfe Neath, a towne very well knowne, retaining still the old name, in manner whole and sound: and here at Lantwit, that is, The Church of Iltut, that joyneth close thereto, are seene the foundations of many houses, for it had divers streetes in old time. A little from hence in the very bout well neere of the shore standeth Saint Donats Castle, a E faire habitation of the ancient and notable familie of the Stradlings: neere unto which, were very lately digged up, antique peeces of Roman money, but those especially of the thirty Tyrants, yea and some of Aemilianus and Marius, which are seldome found. The river Ogmor somewhat higher, maketh him selfe way into the sea, falling downe from the mountaines by Coitie, which belonged sometimes to the Turbevills, afterwards to the Gamages, and now to Sir Robert Sidney Vicount Lisle, in right of his wife: also by Ogmor Castle, which came from the familie of London to the Duchy of Lancaster. Some few miles, from hence there is a well at Newton (as Sir Iohn Stradling a verie learned knight hath signified unto mee) a little towne, on the banke of the river Ogmor Westward, an hundred paces well neere from Severn F side, in a sandie plaine. The water thereof is none of the cleerest, yet pure enough and good for use: It never springeth and walmeth up to the brinke, but by certaine staires folke goe downe into the well. At any flowing of the sea (in summer time) you shall hardlie gette up a dish full of water: Whereas if you come anon when it ebbeth, you may well lade uppe water with a good bigge bucket or paile. The like instability remaineth also in Winter time, saving that it is nothing so euident, by rea-

Cowbridge.

Bovium.

Neath.

Saint Donats. Stradling.

Antique peeces of coine.

Ogmor river.

A fountaine ebbing and flowing.

Sandfords well.

ſonne of the veines of water comming in from aboue by ſhewres, and otherwiſe. Many of A the inhabitants there about men of good credite conſtantly avouched thus much unto mee.
But I, diſtruſting Fame, that often time doth but prate, went my ſelfe of late once or twice to the ſaid well. For even then had I great deſire to write thus much unto you. When I was firſt come unto the place, and had ſtaied the third part of an houre vewing and conſidering every thing (while Severn ſurged and roſe high, and no body came thither to draw) the water was fallen about three ynches. I goe my waies. And not long after when I was returned againe, I finde it to be riſen a foote higher. The compaſſe of this well beneath within the walles is almoſt ſix foote. Concerning which my Muſe alſo enditeth this Ditty. B

Te Noua-Villa fremens, odioſo murmure Nympha
Inclamat Sabrina: Soloque inimica propinquo,
Euomit infeſtas ructu violenter arenas.
Damna pari ſentit vicinia ſorte: ſed illa
Fonticulum cauſata tuum. Quem virgo, legendo
Littus, ad amplexus vocitat: latet ille vocatus
Antro, & luctatur contra. Namque æſtus vtrique eſt
Continuo motu refluus, tamen ordine diſpar.
Nympha fluit propiùs: Fons defluit. Illa recedit.
Iſte redit. Sic linor ineſt & pugna perennis. C

With troublous noiſe and roaring loud, the Severn Nymph doth cry,
New-towne, on thee; and bearing ſpite unto the ground thereby,
Caſts up and ſends with violence maine drifts of hurtful ſand.
The neighbour-parts feell equall loſſe, by this her heavy hand:
But on thy little well ſhe laies the weight, which ſhe would woo
And faine embrace, as Virgin ſhe along the ſhore doth goe.
Call'd though he be, he lurkes in den, and ſtriveth hard againe,
For, ebbe and flow continually by tides they keepe, both twaine
Yet diverſly: for as the Nymph doth riſe, the ſpring doth fall. D
Go ſhe back, he com's on, in ſpite and fight continuall.

A fountaine at Cales or Cadis.

The like fountaine Polybius reporteth to bee at Cadys, and this reaſon hee giveth thereof, namely that the winde or aire, when it is deprived of his wonted iſſues, returneth within forth, and ſo by ſhutting and ſtopping up the paſſages and veines of the ſpring, keepeth in the waters, and contrariwiſe when the ſurface thereof is voide and empty of water the veines of the ſource or ſpring are unſtopped and ſet free, and ſo the water then boileth up in great abundance. From hence coaſting along the ſhore, you come within the ſight of Kineſeage, the caſtle in old time of Fitz-Haimon him ſelfe; alſo of Margan, hard by the ſea ſide, ſometime an Abbay founded by William Earle of Gloceſter, but now E the habitation of the worſhipfull family of the Maunſells, knights. Neere unto this Margan, in the very top of an hill called Mynyd Margan, there is erected of exceeding hard grit, a monument or graue-ſtone, foure foote long, and one foote broad with an Inſcription, which whoſoever ſhall happen to read, the ignorant common people dwelling there about, giue it out upon a credulous error, that hee ſhall be ſure to die within a little while after. Let the reader therefore looke to him ſelfe, if any dare read it; for, let him aſſure himſelfe that he ſhall for certaine die after it. F

Thoſe

A

B

C

Thoſe latter words I read thus, Aeternali in domo, that is, In an eternall houſe: For, Sepulchres in that age, were termed AETERNALES DOMVS, that is, Aeternall habitations. Moreover, betweene Margan and Kingſeage by the high way ſide, there lieth a ſtone foure foote long with this Inſcription. Aeternal habitations.

D

E

Which the Welſh Britans by adding and changing letters, thus read and make this interpretatiō, as the right reverend Biſhop of Landaff did write to me, who gaue order that the draught of this Inſcription ſhould bee taken likewiſe for my ſake. PIM BIS AN CAR ANTOPIVS, that is, The fiue fingers of friends or neighbours killed us. It is verily thought to be the Sepulchre of Prince Morgan, from whom the Country tooke name, who was ſlaine, as they would haue it, eight hundred yeeres before Chriſts nativity. But Antiquaries know full well, that theſe Characters and formes of letters be of a farre later date.

After you are paſt Margan, the ſhore ſhooteth forth into the North-eaſt, by Aber-Auon, a ſmall mercatetown upon the river Avons mouth (whereof it tooke the name) to the river Nid or Neath infamous for a quick-ſand, upon which ſtands an ancient town of the ſame name, which Antonine the Emperour in his Itinerary called NIDVM. Which, when Fitz-Haimon made himſelf Lord of this Country, fell in the partition to Richard Granvills ſhare, who having founded an Abbay under the very townes ſide, and conſecrated his owne portion to God and to the Monkes, returned againe to his

F Nidus flu. i the river Neath. Nidum the towne Neath.

owne ancient and faire inheritance, which he had in England. A Loghor. Gower.

Beyond this river Neath, whatsoever lieth betweene it and the river Loghor, which boundeth this shire in the West, wee call Gower: the Britans and Ninnius, Guhir: wherein, as he saith, the sonnes of Keian the Scot planted themselues, and tooke up a large roome, untill that by Cuneda a British Lord they were driven out. In the reigne of Henrie the first, Henrie Earle of Warwick wonne it from the Welsh, but by a conveiance and composition, passed betweene William Earle of Warwick and King Henrie the Second, it came to the crowne. Afterward King Iohn gaue it unto William Breos who had taken Arthur E. of Britaine prisoner, to be held by service of one knight for all service: and his heires successiuely held it not without troubles unto King Edward the Seconds daies: for then, William Breos, when hee had alienated and sold this inheritance to many, and in the end by mocking and disapointing all others, set Hugh Spenser in possession thereof, to curry favour with the King. And this was one cause, among other things, that the Nobles hated the Spensers so deadly, and rashly shooke off their allegiance to the King. Howbeit this Gower came to the Mowbraies by an heire of Breos. This is now divided into the East part and the VVest. In the East part Swinesey, is of great account, a towne so called by the Englishmen, of Sea-Swine: but the Britans Aber-Taw of the river Taw running by it; which, the foresaid Henry, Earle of Warwick fortified. But there is a towne farre more ancient than this by the river Loghor, which Antonine the Emperor called LEVCARVM, and we, by the whole name, Loghor. Where, a little after the death of King Henry the First, Howel Ap Meredic invading the Englishmen on a sodaine, with a powre of the mountainers slew divers men of quality and good account. Beneath this, lieth West-Gower, and by reason of two armes of the sea winding in, on either side one, it becommeth a Biland, more memorable for the fruitfulnesse, than the townes in it, and in times past of great name, in regard of Kined canonized a Saint, who lived heere a solitarie life: of whom if you desire to to know more read, our country man Capgraue, who hath set out his miracle with great commendation.

Booke of Neth Monastery. Ioh. R. 5.

Swinsey.

Leucarum Loghor.

Since this Country was first conquered by the English. The Lords thereof were those that lineally descended from Fitz-Haimon, as Earles of Gloecester, Clares, Spensers, Beauchamps, and one or two Nevills: and by a daughter of Nevill, who came likewise of the Spensers bloud, Richard the Third K. of England: But when he was slaine K. Henry the Seventh entred upon the inheritance of this Country, and gaue it to his unkle Iaspar Duke of Bedford: and when hee died without issue, the King resumed it unto his owne hands, and left it to his Sonne King Henrie the Eighth: whose sonne King Edward the Sixth sold the greatest part thereof to Sir William Herbert, whom hee had created Earle of Pembrock and Baron of Cardiff. But of the race of those twelue Knights there remaine onely in this shire the Stradlings, a notable house and of long continuance, the Turbervills, and some of the Flemings: the greatest man of which house dwelleth at Flemingston, now corruptly called Flemston, as one would say, Flemingstone which tooke the name of them. And in England, there are remaining yet the Lord Saint Iohn of Bletso, the Granvills in Devonshire, and the Sewards, as I am enformed, in Somerset-shire. The issue male of all the rest is long since extinct and worne out, and their lands by daughters passed over to divers houses with sundrie alterations.

Lords of Glamorganshire.

A

B

DIMETAE.

C PLinie was of opinion that the SILVRES inhabited alſo the other part beſide of this country, which bearing out farther Weſtward, is called in Engliſh by ſome, Weſt-wales, & containeth Caermarden-ſhire, Pembrock-ſhire, and Cardiganſhire: But Ptolomæe, who knew Britaine farre better, placed heere another people, whom he called DIMETAE, and DEMETAE. Gildas likewiſe and Ninnius both, have uſed the name of DEMETIA for this tract. Whereupon, the Britans that inhabit it, changing M. into F. according to the propriety of their tongue commonly call it at this day Difed. Weſt Wales.

If it would not be thought ſtrained curioſity, I would derive this denomination of the Demetæ, from Deheu Meath, that is, A plaine champion toward the D South: like as the Britans themſelves have named all this South-wales, Deheu-barth, that is, The South part: yea and thoſe verily who inhabited another champion country in Britaine were called in old time, Meatæ. Neither, I aſſure you, is the ſite of this region diſagreeing from this ſignification: For, when you are come hither once, by reaſon that the high hilles gently ſetle downward, and grow ſtill lower and lower, it ſpreadeth by little and little into a plaine and even champion country.

E

CAERMARDEN-

F

DIMETIAE

CAERMARDĪ
Comitatus in quo
DIMETÆ
olim habitarunt

CARD

PARS

Llanumnet

Capel Llantisiliod

Llanwenok

Capel Llanfra

Llandyssil

Llanlloyc

Llanyhangel yaroth

Llanuaterollgerne

Llandcureeg

Hanllandyry

Banger

Capel gencader

Penbayre

Penwc

Llanllanthog

Llanypimsent

Canweleluet

Egloſnewith

Comgwilye

Istradwc

Glawranet

Ebernant

St. Nicholas

MARIDVNVM

CARMARDEN

Capel Llanlloch

Llangayne

Capel Llangeit

Llanginog

Llandilogbercowen

Istradmerther

Llanuaier

Llansant

St. Ismael

Hawton

Llanſtephan

Llacharne

Llandach

Llanſadurnen

Egloſkemen

Marras

Amarth

Crunwaier

Keffig

Llanhangelabercowen

Clare

Cardyth forest

Egleswaier

Llandowror

Whit lanl

Llanginnin

Llangan

Llanualtg

Llanſilio

Castle derain

Llandemye

Llanbederuelfray

Llanbedye

Henllanamgode

Kilimaynlloyd

Egleswaier acherig

Llanwenyo

Kilſant

Talacouth

Treleghy bettus

Capel bettus

Llanurnach

Llanglud wen

Kilgaren

Kennarth

Llangeler

Manerdyue

Reach flu.

Kilridden

Wrenyuawre hill

Newport

Cardigan

Verwick

Mounte

Bettuſcuan

Treſraier

Brayngwin

Llangoidmore

Llandogway

Oſcoid mortimer

Capel Llangbrid

Penneralt

St. Dogmels

Keuenbryn

Kilgwyn

Newcaſtemenlyn

Capelcuen

Llanllawer

Llanſadurnen

Pendyne

Penbray point

Whitford

Teify flu.

Dettor flu.

Keyſ flu.

Gwyrlye flu.

Couen flu.

Taf flu.

Marlais flu.

Gath kenny flu.

Caire flu.

Teify haven

St. Ismael point

Caſcote point

PEN

BROKE

PARS

BRECK NOC.

GAN PARS

GLAMORGAN

LEVCARVM PARS

Llanthewy breuye
Llanuayr eledogye
Kellan
Llanbeder
Mathern flu:
Llanacroys
Targhe flumus
Capel Llanpymsent
Cenwelgaio
Cothy flu:
Kilcombe
Tawy flu:
Brane flu:
Capel newith
Llanbrayne
Llanuaierarbryn
Llanimthefry
Llanhowel Istradwalter
Lliwell
Gwetherik flu:
Llansawel
Tathlughay Llanurdg Abergorlech
Lansadurn Abarmarlas
Dulas flumus
Cothye flumen
Llanuryeth
Llanyhangle kiluargen
Newton
Llandilouawre
Llandouison
Denecuer caſtle
Llangathan caſtle Llanegwood Goldengroue
Drusllone caſtle Llanarthney
Caſtle Carreg Llantharog
Capel Llanthithagyne
Llandebeg
Parkreame
Llanddyc
Llanuon
Morlas flu:
Capel duthoye Prenagorris
Capel Gunllo
Llanelthye Penbray
Dulas flu:
Bachhanus Insul
Teithia flu:
Resceb forest
Pescotter flu:
Trousnant flu:
Capel pylyn
Istrodefyne
Llanuyd
Llanhangle aber bithigh
Capel Gwenuye
Llangadok
Cledagh flu
Sawthye flu:
Llanthewyesant
Llanyhangel muthucy Muthucy flu:
Llandilo talabont
Llangenarch
Loghor caſtle
Bettus
Llanguge
Amond flu:
Loughor flu:
Taff flu:
Tauy flu:
Istradgunles
The black mountayn
Roske flu:
Gwendreth Vaure
Combenythye flu:
Scala Miliarium
Christophorus Saxton deſcripſit
Wilhelmus Kip Sculpſit

A

CAERMARDEN-SHIRE.

CAERMARDEN-SHIRE, is plenteous enough in corne, ſtored abundantly with cattaile and in ſome places yeeldeth pit cole for fewell. On the Eaſt ſide it is limited with Glamorgan, and Brecknock-ſhires, on the Weſt with Pembrockſhire, on the North with Cardigan-ſhire ſevered from it by the river Tivie running betweene, and on the South with the Ocean, which with ſo great a bay or creeke getteth within the land, that this country ſeemeth as it were for very feare to have ſhrunke backe, & withdrawne it ſelfe more inwardly. Caer Marden-ſhire.

B

Upon this Bay, Kidwelly firſt offreth it ſelfe to our ſight, the Territorie whereof, Keiani the Scot his ſonnes held for a time, untill they were driven out by Cuneda the Britan. But now it is counted part of the inheritance of the Dutchy of Lancaſter by the heires of Maurice of London or De Londres: who making an outroad hither out of Glamorgan-ſhire, after a dangerous war made himſelfe Lord heereof, and fortified old Kidwelly with a wall and Caſtle to it, which now for very age is growen to decay and ſtandeth, as it were, forlet and forlorne. For, the inhabitants having paſſed over the little river Vendraeth Vehan, built a new Kidwelly, entiſed thither by the commodity of the haven; which notwithſtanding being at this day choked with ſhelves and barres, is at this preſent of no great uſe. Whiles Mauric of London invaded theſe parts, Guenliana the wife of Prince Gruffin, a ſtout and reſolute woman in the higheſt degree, to recover the loſſes and declining ſtate of her husband, came with diſplaied banner into the field and fiercely aſſailed him, but the ſucceſſe not anſwerable to her courage, ſhe with her ſonne Morgan, and other men of eſpeciall note (as Girald recordeth) was ſlaine in battaile. By Hawis or Avis the daughter and heire of Sir Thomas of London: this paſſing faire and large patrimonie, together with the title of Lord of Ogmor and Kidwelly came unto Patricke Chaworth, and by his ſonne Patrickes daughter, unto Henrie Earle of Lancaſter. Now the heires of the ſaid Maurice of London (as we learn out of an old inquiſition) for this inheritance, were bound to this ſervice, that if their Soveraigne Lord the King, or his chiefe Iuſtice came into the parts about Kidwelly with an armie, they ſhould conduct the foreſaid armie with their banners and their people through the mids of Nethland as farre as to Loghar. A few miles beneath Kidwelly, the river Tovie, which Ptolomee calleth TOBIVS falleth into the the Sea, after he hath paſſed through this region from North-eaſt to South, firſt by Lanandiffry, ſo called, as men thinke, of rivers meeting together; which Hoel the ſonne of Rheſe overthrew for malice that he bare unto the Engliſh: then by Dinevor, a princely caſtle, ſtanding a loft upon the top of an hill, and belonging unto the Princes of South-wales whiles they flouriſhed: and laſt of all, by Caer-Marden, which the Britans themſelves call Caer-Firdhin, Ptolomee, MARIDVNVM, Antonine MVRIDVNVM, who endeth his Iourneies there, and through negligence of the tranſcribers is in this place not well uſed. For they have confounded the Iourneys from Galena to Iſca, and from Maridunum to Viriconium. This is the chiefe Citie of the country, for medowes and woods pleaſant, and in regard of antiquity to be reſpected; Compaſſed about very properly, as Giraldus ſaith, with brick-walls, which are partly yet ſtanding upon the famous river Tovy, able to beare ſmall ſhips, although there be now a barre of ſand caſt up againſt the very mouth thereof. In this Citie was borne the Tages* of the Britans, I meane Merlin: For like as Tages being the ſonne of an evill Angell taught his countrimen the Tuſcans the art of Sooth ſaying, ſo this Merlin the ſonne of an Incubus Spirit, deviſed for our Britans propheſies, nay rather meere phantaſtical dreames. Whereby, in this Iland he hath beene accounted among the credulous and unskilfull people a moſt renowned Prophet. Straight after the Normans entring into

C

D

E

F

Kidwelly.

Guenliana, a woman of manly courage.

Lords of Ogmor and Kidwelly.

River Tovie.

Dinevor.

Maredunum. Caer merdin.

Merlin.
Divinour* or Propher.

into Wales, this Citie was reduced (but I wote not by whose conduct) under their subjection, and for a long time sore afflicted with many calamities and distresses, being oftentimes assaulted, once or twice set on fire, first by Gruffin ap Rise, then by Rise the said Gruffins brother: at which time, Henrie Turbervill an Englishman succoured the castle, and heawed downe the bridge. But afterwards by the meanes of Gilbert de Clare, who fortified both the walles thereof, and the castles adjoining, it was freed from these miseries: and being once eased of all grievances, and in security, endured afterwards more easily from time to time the tempests of warre and all assaults: And the Princes of Wales of the English bloud, I meane the first begotten sonnes of the Kings of England, ordained heere their Chauncery and Exchequer, for all South-wales. A B

Cantred Bitham. Cantred.

Neere unto this Citie on the East side lieth Cantred-Bichan, that is, The lesse Hundred (for the Britans terme, a portion of land that containeth 100. villages a Cantred) in which, beside the ruins of Careg Castle situate upon a rocke, rising on every side steepe and upright, there are many under-mines or caves of very great wideness within the ground, now covered all over with green-sord and turfe, wherein it is thought the multitude unable to beare armes hid themselves, during the heate of warre, there is also heere a fountaine, that as Giraldus writeth, Twice in foure and twentie houres ebbing and twice flowing resembleth the unstable motions of the maine Sea.

Caves under the ground.

C

Cantred maur.

But on the North-east side, there stretcheth it selfe a great way out, Cantredmaur, that is, The great hundred, a most safe refuge for the Britans in times past, as being thicke set with woods, combersome to travaile in, by reason the waies are intricate by the windings in and out of the hils Southward stand Talcharn and Lhan-Stephan Castles upon rockes of the Sea, which are most notable witnesses of martiall valour and proesse as well in the English as in the Welsh. Beneath Talcharn, Taff sheddeth it selfe into the Sea, by the side whereof was in times past that famous Twy Gwin ar Taf, that is, The white house upon the river Taf, because it was built of white hazels for a summer house: where, in the yeere of our redemption, 914, * Hoel, surnamed Dha, that is, Good, Prince of Wales, in a frequent assembly of his States (for there met there beside others, of the Cleargie one hundred and fortie) abrogated the ancient ordinances, and established new lawes for his subjects, as the Procœme to the very lawes themselves doe witnesse: In which place afterward, a little Abbay named White land, was built. Not farre from whence is Killmayn Lhoyd; where, of late daies certaine country people hapned upon an earthen vessell, in which was hourded a mighty deale of Romaine coine, of embased silver: from the time of Commodus the Roman Emperour who first embased silver, unto the fifth Tribuneship of Gordian the third, which fell just with the yeere of Christ 243. Among these, were certaine pieces of Helvins Pertinax, of Marcus Opellius, of Antoninus Diadumenianus, of Julius Verus Maximus the sonne of Maximinus, of Celius Balbiuus, of Clodius Pupienus, of Aquilia Severa the wife of Elagabalus and of Sall. Barbia Orbiana, which among Antiquaries are of greatest price and estimation, as being most rare of all others. Now it remaineth that I should relate, how upon the river Tivy, that separateth this County from Cardigan-shire, there standeth New-castle (for so they call it at this day) which Sir Rhise ap Thomas that warlicke Knight who assisted Henrie the seventh when he gat the Crowne, and was by him right worthily admitted unto the Societie of the Knights of the Garter, renewed: whereas before time it was named Elmelin. VVhich name, if the Englishmen gave unto it of Elme-trees, their conjecture is not to be rejected, who will have it to be that LOVENTIVM of the DIMETAE, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention: For, the Britans call Elmes Llwiffen. But when as I can find by no record in histories, which if the Normans first wrested this country out of the hands of the Princes of VVales, I am to proceed now orderly to the description of Pembrok-shire.

Talcharn. Lhan-Stephan.

Taff river.

* Hælius.

Whiteland.

Pecces of Roman coine.

New castle.

Loventium.

D E F

It hath Parishes 87.

PENBROCK-

PENBROK
Comitatus olim
Pars DEMETARVM

MARE

ISIBER

NICVM

SIVE

VERGIVIVM

MARESBRI

Penkemont

Dynas head

Strumble head

Pencaer point

Dynas

the Cowe & the castle

Brynhenllan

Mihangelichoy

Lanshawarn

Manernawon

Fishguard

Kelvkarthed

St Nicholas

St Katherins

Lanstinan

Lanvchaith

Trekone

Iurdanston

Marthry

Marlais flu

Treuins

Porthskily woos

Cleahewen

Dogwells

Laurian

St Edryns

Selvham

DEWISLAND

Lancaclor

Harfcastle

Mass y cal

Lanheavel

HV

Bromeston

Teugarn

Gory chap

Ricardeston

Plumston

Rock

Dauids head

Porth mawer

Browdye

Whitchurch

St Ailwyns

Rock cast

Cauros

Saint Dauids

Symston

Treuran

ROWSE

Yoden

Lanstan

Harfordwest

Harrestonwest

Denuant

Ramsey

Porthclasse

OCTOPITARVM

Promontorium

Broad hauen

Waltonwest

Sadbury

Loustan

Walwynscast

Robertonwest

Lashenny

Sike

Priory Pill

Hatton

Brides

Sandyha

Harbranston

Hubberston

Gulliwel

Yardlandstone

Wiltock

Warlos

St Ismacl

Bicton

The Stack

Scalmey

Midlan Iland

SYLIMNOS

Insula

Dale

Nangle

Gatcholme

Wallys Iland

Sckockholme

St Annes head

Freshwater

west shipp Iland

Lynny point

Milford haven

ARDIGAN PARS

CARMAR

THEN

PARS

Cardigan
Dogmaels
Henaref Parkyrrat
Bridell Kilgarren
Manerchin
Kilmanys
Rydyr ynhaan
Kiwer flu:
Lanteed Meiforene
KEMEIS Kyrioc KILGARAN
Lanuhangel penbedo Dulois flu:
Cogah flu:
Cleyley Kuran Kilreayn Penrith HV: Penkelly
Bayuell
St Metgans
Egloskerow
Castelhan
Trenncy Nawr
hill Taue flu
Whitchurch
Banon flu Pentrefcuan
Kilgwyn
Lanuryngan
Carnegid
VIA FLANDRICA
Kilgetty flu:
Lanwnnio Menaghloadhy
Percele hill
Eggleuair a Chirck
Langoelman
Llanglo Lanoloduen
Lanheidy Castlehigh
Brevnan shy flu
Mote Cylyuran
Lanrkeuen Blatherston
Lanstiffe Henllhanamgoed Kilymaenllwid
Lanoan
Whitland
Ambleston Castelderam Lanualtego
Walton
Clarbeston Egremont
DYNGLEDY Landewyvelfel Eglwrfuair Landyfriog
Wiston
Lauhaden
Marlais flu:
Raseiton n'athgin
Narberth
Lanfeder ycfrye
Ctyntow
Stebere
Cronwer
Lydchurch
Amroth Marres Erweare Muncton
Templeton
Mynwer Picton NARBERTH
Coedraeth
Osmeston
Martelwy
Equeston
Bryely
Harolston Boulston
Festroy Lanam Laurenny
St Ishells
Williamston clays
Benton caſt:
Williamston park
Redbart Rosmarkett
Burton
Milton Ashridge Carew Gumfreston Tenbye
St Katherins
Coliston Hawarden
Saint Florens
Trelbein
Caldey Insul Lanckadwell
Newton
PENBROCH Paterchurch
Penalw
Nerchard
MARTIN Lanſer
Ludsey Muncton
St Dawels
Alesten Lamston Manerhier
Little Caldey
Ludsey point Polberechon Henllan
Hedgeston
Porthkiew
Bdrieſten
St Petrocks
Feſkiwater caſt Creamaharen
Iecweni
St Twinels Stackpole
Stackpole
Caſtle quartin
Weriam HV Meriam Trepricarde
South Carew
Lynny houſe Bethſton
St Gowen
Elemſton
Gowens point
Scala Mi[illegible]arium
1 2 3 4 5
Georgius Owen D. Kemeis
deſcripſit
Wilhelmus Kip ſculpſit

A

PENBROKE-SHIRE.

THe Sea now retyring South-ward, and with a mighty compaſſe and ſundry baies incurving the ſhores, preaſſeth on every ſide upon the Countie of PENBROKE, commonly called Penbrockſhire, which in the old bookes is named The lawfull County of Pembroch*, and of ſome, Weſt-wales; unleſſe it be in the Eaſt ſide, vvhere Caermardenſhire, and on the North, where a part of Cardiganſhire boundeth upon it. A country plentifull in corne ſtored with cattaile, and full of marle, and ſuch kind of fatty earth to make the ground fertile, and not deſtitute of pit cole. This Land, as ſaith Giraldus, is apt to beare wheat, plentifully ſerved with ſea-fiſh and ſaleable wine, and (that which is farre above the reſt, by reaſon that Ireland confineth ſo neere upon it) of a very temperate and wholſome aire.

B * Legalis Comitatus.

Firſt and formoſt upon the ſhore deſcending Southward, Tenby a proper fine towne well governed by a Major, and ſtrongly walled toward the land, looketh down into the ſea from a drie cliffe, very famous becauſe it is a commodious road for ſhips, and for abundance alſo of fiſh there taken; whereupon in the Britiſh tongue it is called Tenby-y-Piſcoid, and hath for Magiſtrates a Maior and a Bailiffe. From thence the ſhore giving backe VVeſtward, ſheweth the reliques of Manober Caſtle, which Giraldus calleth the manſion of Rythus, in whoſe time, as himſelfe writeth, It was notably fortified with towres and bulwarkes, having on the Weſt ſide a large haven, and on the Northweſt and North under the very walles, an excellent fiſh-poole, goodly to behold, as well for the beauty thereof, as the depth of the water.

C Tenby.

Manober Caſtle.

From hence runneth the ſhore along not many miles continuate, but at length the land ſhrinketh backe on both ſides giving place unto the ſea, which encroching upon it a great way, maketh the haven which the Engliſhmen call Milford haven, than which there is not another in all Europe more noble or ſafer, ſuch variety it hath of nouked bayes, and ſo many coues and creeks, for harbour of ſhips, wherewith the bankes are on every ſide indented, and that I may uſe the Poets words:

D Milford Haven.

Hic exarmatum terris cingentibus æquor,
Clauditur & placidam diſcit ſervare quietem.

The ſea diſarmed heere of winds, within high banke and hill,
Encloſed is, and learnes thereby to be both calme and ſtill.

For, to make uſe of the mariners words and their diſtinct termes, there are reckoned within it 16. Creekes, 5. Baies, and 13. Rodes, knowen every one by their ſeverall names. Neither is this haven famous for the ſecure ſafeneſſe thereof more, than for the arrivall therein of King Henrie the Seventh a Prince of moſt happy memory, who from hence gave forth unto England then hopeleſſe the firſt ſignall to hope well, and raiſe it ſelfe up, when as now it had long languiſhed in civill miſeries and domiſticall calamities within it ſelfe. Upon the inner more and Eaſt creeke of this haven, in the moſt pleaſant country of all Wales, ſtandeth Penbroke the Shire-towne, one direct ſtreet vpon a long narrow point all rock, & a forked arme of Milford haven ebbing and flowing cloſe to the Towne walles on both ſides. It hath a Caſtle but now ruinate, and two Pariſh-churches within the walles, and is incorporate of a Maior, Baliues and Burgeſſes. But heare Giraldus who thus deſcribeth it, A tongue of the Sea ſhooting forth of Milford haven, in the forked end, encloſeth the principall towne of the whole country, and chiefe place of Dimetia ſeated upon the ridge of a certaine craggy and long ſhaped rocke: And therefore, the Britans called it Penbro, which ſignifieth as much as a head of the Sea, and we in our tongue Penbroke. Arnulph of Montgomery brother to Robert Earle of Shrewsbury, firſt in the time of King Henrie the firſt fortified

E

F

this

this place with a Caſtle, a very weake and ſlender thing, God wote, of ſtakes and turfes, which afterwards he returning into England delivered unto Girald of Windeſor, his Conſtable and Captaine, to be kept with a gariſon of few ſoldiers: and immediatly, the Welſhmen of all Southwales laid ſiege unto the ſaid Caſtle. But ſuch reſiſtance made Girald and his companie, more upon a reſolute courage than with any forcible ſtrength, that they miſſed of their purpoſe and diſlodged. Afterwards, the ſaid Girald fortified both towne and Caſtle; from whence hee invaded the countrie, round about it, far and neere: and at length, that as well his owne eſtate, as theirs that were his followers and dependants, might the better grow to greatneſſe in theſe parts he tooke to wife Neſta ſiſter to Gruffin the Prince, of whom he begat a goodly faire Progeny, by the which (as ſaith that Giraldus who deſcended from him) the Engliſhmen both kept ſtill the Sea-coſts of South-wales, and wonne alſo the walles of Ireland. For, all thoſe noble families of Giralds or Giraldines in Ireland, whom they call Fitz Gerald, fetch their deſcent from the ſaid Girald. In regard of the tenure of this caſtle and towne, of the Caſtle and towne likewiſe of Tinbigh, of the Grange of Kinges wood, of the Commot of Croytarath, and of the Manors of Caſtle Martin and Tregoire, Reinold Grey at the Coronation of King Henrie the Fourth made ſuit to carry the ſecond ſword: but in vaine: for, anſwere was made, that thoſe Caſtles and poſſeſſions were in the Kings hands, as Penbroke towne ſtill is.

The beginning of the Giralds famille in Ireland.

The Roll of Services.

Vpon another creeke alſo of this haven, Carew Caſtle ſheweth it ſelfe, which gave both name and originall to the notable family de Carew, who avouch themſelves to have beene called aforetime, de Montgomery; and haue beene perſwaded, that they are deſcended from thar Arnulph de Mont-gomery, of whom I ſpake erewhile.

Carew caſtle.

Into this haven there diſcharge themſelves with their out-lets joined almoſt in one, two rivers, which the Britans tearme Gledawh, that is if you interpret it, Swords: whereupon themſelves uſe to tearme it Aber dugledhaw, that is, The out let of two ſwords. Hard by the more Eaſterly of them ſtandeth Slebach, a Commandery in times paſt of Saint Iohns Knights of Ieruſalem, which with other lands, Wizo and Walter his ſonne, gave in old time unto that holy order of Knighthood, that they might ſerve as Gods Knights to recover the holy Land. That part of this country which lyeth beyond the haven, and hath onely theſe two rivers to water it, the Britans doe call Ros, making the name anſwerable to the thing, for that it lieth for the moſt part all low on a flat, and greene plaine.

Gledawgh.

This tract was inhabited by Flemings out of the Lowcountries, who by the permiſſion of King Henrie the Firſt were planted heere, when the Ocean by making breaches in the bankes had overwhelmed a great part of the ſaid Low-countries. Theſe are diſtinctly knowen ſtill from the Welſh, both by their ſpeech and manners, and ſo neere joined they are in ſociety of the ſame language with Engliſhmen, who come nigheſt of any nation to the low Dutch tongue, that this their little countrie is tearmed by the Britans Little England beyond Wales. A nation this is, as ſaith Giraldus, ſtrong and ſtout, and continually enured in warres with the Welſh: a nation moſt accuſtomed to ſeeke gaine by clothing, by trafficke alſo and merchandiſe by ſea and land, undertaking any paines and perills whatſoever. A nation of very great powre, and as time and place requireth, ready by turnes to take plough in hand and till the ground, as ready alſo to goe into the field and fight it out: And that I may adde thus much moreover; a nation moſt loyally devoted to the Kings of England, and as faithfull to Engliſhmen: and vvhich in the time of Giraldus, was wonderfull skilfull in Sooth-ſaying by the Inſpection of Beaſts inwards: vvhoſe vvorke alſo is heere ſeene (as they are a people paſſing induſtrious) namely The Flemiſh Highway reaching out a great length. The Welſhmen have many a time banded all their forces in one, and to recover this country belonging ſometimes unto their anceſtors, haue violently ſet upon theſe Flemings and overrunne their lands, ſpoiling and vvaſting where ever they went: yet they moſt courageouſly have alwaies from time to time defended their eſtates, their name, and life. Whereupon concerning them, and King William Rufus, the Hiſtorian Malmesbury writeth thus. Many a time and often King William Rufus had but Flemings in Wales.

Little England beyond Wales.

ſmall

A small successe against the Welsh men: which any man may wel merwaile at, considering that alwaies otherwise, hee spred most fortunately in all adventures of warre. But I take it, that as the unevennesse of the ground, and sharpnesse of the aire maintained their rebellion, so the same empeached his valour: But King Henry who now reigneth, a man of an excellent wit found meanes to frustrate all their devises, by placing Flemings in their Country, who might bee alwaies ready to represse and keepe them in. And in the fifth booke, King Henry with many a warlike expedition went about to force the Welsh men, who ever and anon rose up in rebellion, for to yeeld and submit them selues: and resting in the end upon this good and holsome pollicy, for to take downe and abate their swelling pride, hee
B brought over thither all the Flemings that dwelt in England. For, a number of them who in those daies, in regard of his mothers kinred by her fathers side flocked thither, were closely shrowded in England, in so much as they for their multitud seemed burdensome unto the realme. Wherfore, he sent them altogither with their substance, goods, wives, and children unto Ros a country in Wales, as it were into a common auoidance, therby both to purge and cleanse his owne Kingdome, and also to quaile and represse the rash bouldnesse of his enimies there. By the more westward of these two rivers, is Harford West, called by the Englishmen in times past Haverford, and by the Britans Hulphord, a faire towne and of great resort, situat upon an hil side, having scarce one even street, but is steepe one way or other, which being a County by it self, hath for Magistrates, a Major, a Sheriff, C and two Bailiffs. The report goeth, that the Earles of Clare fortified it with rampier and wall on the North side, and wee read that Richard Earle of Clare made R. Fitz-Tancred, Castellan of this Castle.

Harford west.

Filium Tancredi.

Beyond Ros, there shooteth out with a mighty front farre into the West Ocean, a great Promontorie, which Ptolomee called OCTOPITARVM, the Britans Pebidiauc, and Cantred Deui; we, Saint Davids land. A stony, barraine, and unfruitfull ground, as Giraldus saith, Neither clad with woods, nor garnished heere and there with rivers, ne yet adorned with medowes, lying alwaies open to winds onely and stormes. Yet a retyring place for most holy men, and a nurserie of them. For, Calphurnius a Britaine
D his wife Concha sister to Saint Martine of Tours, Patricke the Apostle of Ireland and Deui a most religious Bishop translated the Archiepiscopall see from Isca Legionum into the most remote and farthest angle heereof, even to Menew, or Menevia: which afterwards the Britans, of his name called Tuy Dewy, that is, Devi his house, the Saxons Dauy's-Mynster, the Englishmen at this day Saint Davids; and was for a long time an Archbishops See. But by occasion of a pestilence that contagiously raged in this country, whereby the Pall was translated into little Britaine in France, to Dole, and this Archiepisco pall dignity had an end. Yet in the foregoing ages the Welshmen commenced an action heere about against the Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitane of England and Wales, but they were cast in the law. What this
E Saint Davids was and what maner of thing in times past, a man can hardly tell, considering it hath beene so often by pirates rased: but now it is a very small and poore Citie, and hath nothing at all to make shew of, but a faire Church dedicated to Saint Andrew, and David: which, having beene many times overthrowen, Petre the Bishop, in the reigne of King Iohn, and his successours, erected in that forme which now it sheweth, in the vale (as they tearme it of Ros) under the towne: and hard by it standeth the Bishops pallace, and faire houses of the Chaunter (who is next unto the Bishop, for there is no Dean heere) of the Chauncellor, Treasurer, and foure Archdeacons who be of the number of the XXII. Canons, all enclosed round within a strong and seemely wall, whereupon they call it the Close.

Octopitarum.

Saint Davids Land.

Saint Patrick.

Saint Davids.

F This Promontorie thrusteth it selfe so far Westward, that in a cleere Sunshine day a man may from thence see Ireland, & from hence is the shortest cut to Ireland: & by Plinies measure, which he tooke false, was frō the Silures (for, he thought that the Silures reached thus far) thirty miles. But that this land ran out farther, and that the form of the promontory hath bin changed, it may bee gathered out of these words of Giraldus. What time (saith he) as King Henry the Second made his abode in Ireland, by reason of an extraordinary violence of stormes, the sandy shores of this coast were laide bare

Bodies of trees in the sea.

as farre as to the very hard ground, and the face of the earth which had lien couered many A ages before was discouered. Also the trunkes of trees standing in the very sea, that had afore time bin lopped on e very side, yea and the strokes of axes, as if they had bin given but yester day were seene apparently. Yea and the earth shewed most black, and the wood withall of the said trunkes like in all the points to Hebenie: so as it seemed now no shore but a lopped groue:
as well empaired through the wonderfull changes of things; either haply from the time of Noahs floud, or long after; but, doubtlesse, long ago, as worne by little and little and so swal- lowed up with the rage of the sea getting alwaies more ground & washing the earth away.
Neither were these two lands severed here with any great sea betweene as may appeere by a word that K. William Rufus cast out: who when he kenned Ireland from B the rocks and cliffs of this Promontory, said (as we read in Giraldus) that he could easily make a bridge with English ships, on which he might passe over sea on foote into Ireland.

Falcons.

A noble kinde of falcons haue their Airies here and breed in the rocks, which King Henry the Second, as the same Giraldus writeth, was wont to prefer before al others. For, of that kinde are those, if the inhabitants thereby doe not deceiue mee, which the skilful faulconers call Peregrines: for, they haue (that I may use no other words than the verses of Augustus Thuanus Esmerius that most excellent Poet of our age in that golden booke entituled HIERACOSOPHIOY.

Depressus capitis vertex, oblongáq; toto
Corpore pennarum series, pallentia crura, C
Et graciles digiti ac sparsi, nareſq; rotundæ.

Head flat and low, the plume in rewes along
The body laid: legges pale and wan are found.
With sclender clawes and talons there among
And those wide spred: the bill is howked round.

Keimes Barony, Fisgard.

But from this Promontorie, as the land draweth backward, the sea with great violence and assault of waters intrusheth upon a little region called Keimes, which is reputed a Barony. In it standeth, First, Fishgard, so called in English of the taking of fish, in British Aber-gwain, that is, the mouth of the river Gwain, situate upon a steepe cliff,

New-port.

where there is a very commodious harbour and rode for ships: then, Newport at the D foote of an high mountaine by the riuer Neverns side, in British Tref-draeth, i. the towne upon the sands, and in Latine Records Nouus Burgus; which, Martin of Tours built, his posterity made an incorporation, adorned with priuiledges, and set over it for government a Portgreve and Bailiue: erected also for themselues a Castle ouer the towne, which was their principall seat. Who founded likewise Saint Dogmaels Abbay

Saint Dogmael the Welsh call him Saint Tegwel.. Lords of Keimes. Martins.

according to the order of Tours, by the riuer Tiuy low in a vale environed with hils, unto which the Borrough adjoyning (as many other townes unto Monasteries) is beholden for the original thereof. This Barony, Martin of Tours first wrested out of the Welshmens hands by force & armes, from whose heires successiuely called Martins, it came by marriage to the Barons of Audley, who held it a long time, untill that in E the reigne of Henry the 8. VVilliam Owen that derived his pedigree from a daughter of Sir Nicolas Martin knight, after long suite in law for his right, in the end obtained it, and left it to his sonne George: who being a singular lover of venerable antiquity hath enformed mee, that in this Barony over and aboue three Borroughs, Newport, Fishgard, and Saint Dogmaels, there are twenty knights fees, and twenty sixe parishes.

Kilgarran.

More inward, vpon the river Tiuy aforesaid is Kilgarran, which sheweth the reliques of a castle built by Girald: but being at this day reduced unto one only street, it is famous for nothing else but the most plentifull fishing of Salmon. For there, Salmons leap.

haue you that notable Salmon Leap, where the river from on high falleth downright, F and the Salmons from out of the Ocean coueting to come up further into the river, when they meet with this obstacle in the way, bend backe their taile to the mouth, other whiles also to make a greater leap up, hold fast their taile in the mouth, and as they unloose themselues from such a circle, they giue a jirke, as if a twig bended into a rondle were sodainly let go, and so with the admiration of the beholders mount & whip themselues aloft from beneath, as Ausonius hath most elegantly written.

Net

A Nec te paniceo rutilantem viscere Salma,
Transierim, latæ cujus vaga verbera caudæ
Gurgite de medio summas reseruntur in undas.
Nor can I thee let passe, all red within,
(Salmon) that art, whose jerkes and friskes full oft,
From mids of streame and chanell deepe therein
With broad taile flirt, to floating waues a loft.

There haue beene divers Earles of Penbroke out of sundry houses. As for Arnulph of Montgomery, who first wonne it, and was afterwards outlawed, and his Castellan Girald, whom King Henry the First made afterward President over the whole Earles of Penbrok.
B Country, I dare scarcely affirme that they were Earles. The first that was stiled Earle of Penbroke was Gilbert, surnamed Strongbow sonne of Gislebert de Clare, in the time of King Stephen. And he left it unto his sonne Richard Strongbow, the renowned Conqueror of Ireland, who as Giraldus saith, was descended ex clara Clarensium familia, that is, out of the noble family of Clare, or Clarence. His onely daughter Isabell brought the same honour to her husband William named Mareschal (for that his ancestours had beene by inheritance Mareschals of the Kings Palace) a man, most glorious both in war & peace, and protector of the kingdome in the minority of K. Henry the Third. Concerning whom this pithie Epitaph is extant in Rodburns Annales.

C Sum quem Saturnum sibi sensit Hibernia, Solem
Anglia, Mercurium Normannia, Gallia Martem.
Whom Ireland once a Saturn found, England a Sunne to be, Whom Normandie a Mercury, and France Mars, I am he.

After him his fiue sonnes were successiuely one after another Earles of Penbroke, viz, William called the younger; Richard, who after he had rebelled against King Henry the Third went into Ireland, where he was slaine in battaile; Gilbert, who in a tournament at Ware was unhorsed and so killed; Walter, and Anselm, who enioyed the honor but a few daies, who every one dying in a short space without issue, King Henry the Third invested in the honor of this Earledome, William de Valentia, of the house of Lusignian in Poictou his brother by the mother side, who had to wife Ioan the daughter of Gwarin de Mont-chensy: by the daughter of the foresaid William D Mareschal. After William of Valence, succeeded his sonne Aimar, who under King Edward the first was Regent of Scotland: whose eldest sister Elizabeth, and one of his heires wedded unto Iohn Lord Hastings, brought this dignity unto a new family: for, Laurence Hastings his grandson, L. of Weisford and Abergevenny was made Earle of Penbrock by vertue of K. Edw. the Third his brieffe. The copie wherof I thinke good to set downe here, that we may see what was the right by heires generall in these honorary titles. Rex omnibus ad quos &c. salutem. The King, to all unto whom &c. Greeting. Know yee, that the good præsage of circumspection & vertue, which we haue conceiued by the towardly youth & happy beginnings of our most welbeloved Cousin Laurence
E Hastings, induce us worthily to countenance him, with our especiall grace & favor, in those things which concerne the due preservation and maintenance of his honor. Whereas therfore, the inheritance of Aimar of Valence sometime Earl of Penbrok (as he was stiled) deceased long since without heire begotten of his body, hath beene devolved unto his sisters, proportionably to be devided among them and their heires: because we know for certaine, that the foresaid Laurence who succeedeth the said Aimar in part of the inheritance, is discended from the elder sister of Aimar aforesaid, and so by the avouching of the learned with whom we consulted about this matter, the prerogatiue both of name & honor is due unto him. We deeme it just and due, that the same Laurence claiming his title from the elder sister, assume
F & haue the name of Earle of Penbroke, which the said Aimar had whiles hee lived. Which verily wee, as much as lieth in us, confirme, ratifie, and also approue unto him: willing and granting, that the said Laurence, haue and hold the prerogatiue & honor of Earle Palatine in those lands which he holdeth of the said Aimars inheritance, so fully and after the same maner, as the same Aimar had & held them, at the time of his death. In witnesse the King, at Mont-Martin, the thirteenth day of October, and in the thirteenth of our reigne.

See Pag. 407.

After Laurence ſucceeded his ſonne Iohn, who beeing taken priſoner by the Spaniards in a battaile at ſea, and in the end ranſomed, died in France in the yeere 1375. After him followed his ſonne Iohn, who in a running at Tilt at Wodſtock was ſlaine by Sir Iohn Saint Iohn caſually in the yeere 1391. And it was obſerved that for fiue generations together in this family (I know not by what deſtinie) the father never ſaw his ſonne. Now, for default of his iſſue, there fell very many poſſeſſions and faire revenewes into the Kings hands, as our Lawiers uſe to ſpeake: and the Caſtle of Penbrock was granted unto Francis At-Court, a courtier in eſpeciall great favour, who thereupon was commonly called Lord of Penbrock. Not long after, Humfrey ſonne to King Henry the Fourth before he was Duke of Gloceſter, received this title of his brother King Henry the Fift, and before his death King Henry the Sixth granted the ſame in reverſion (a thing not before heard of) to William De-la-Pole Earle of Suffolk, after whoſe downefal, the ſaid King, when he had enabled Edmund of Hadham, and Iaſper of Hatfeild, the ſonnes of Queene Katharin his mother to bee his lawfull halfe brethren; created Iaſper, Earle of Penbroke, and Edmund, Earle of Richmond with præheminence to take place aboue al Earls. For kings haue abſolute authority in diſpenſing honours. But King Edward the Fourth depriving Iaſper of al his honors by attaindour and forfeiture, gaue the title of Penbrok to Sir William Herbert for his good ſervice againſt Iaſper in Wales, but he ſhortly after loſt his life at the battaile of Banbury. Then ſucceeded his ſonne, bearing the ſame name, whom king Edward the Fourth when he had recovered the kingdome, inveſted in the Earldome of Huntingdon, and beſtowed the title of Penbrok, being ſurrendred, vpon his eldeſt ſonne and heire Edward Prince of Wales.

Some write that Iohn Duke of Bedford was firſt for a ſhort time Earle of Penbroke.

*

A long time after King Henry the Eighth inveſted Anne Bollen (to whom he was affianced) Marchioneſſe of Penbroke with a mantle & coronet in regard both of her nobility, and alſo her vertues (for ſo runne the words of the Patent). At length King Edward the Sixth adorned Sir William Herbert Lord of Caerdiffe with the title of Earl of Penbroke: after whom ſucceeded his ſonne Henry who was Lord Preſident of Wales under Queene Elizabeth. And now his ſonne William richly accompliſhed with all laudable endowments of body and minde enioyeth the ſame title. This familie of the Herberts in theſe parts of Wales is honorable, and of great antiquity. As lineally propagated from Henry Fitz-Herbert Chamberlaine to king Henry the Firſt, who married the ſaid kings Paramor, the mother of Reginald Earle of Cornwal, as I was firſt enformed by Robert Glover a man paſſing skilfull in the ſtudy of Geneologies, by whoſe untimely death that knowledge hath ſuſteined a great loſſe.

There are in this ſhire Pariſhes 145.

CARDIGAN.

CARDIGAN
Comitatus pars
Olim DIMETARUM

CARDIGAN
comitatus pars olim DIMETARVM

MAR

HIBERN

CVM

Capel-k

Aberystuw

Llan

Llanri

Aberath

Capel-Christ

Henuenyn

Llanynay

Llanareh

Llanllohayrne

Llantisilio

Bidder

Pennobadelth poynt

Llaurannok

Capel kenou

Penbryn

Dator flu:

Kery flu:

Aberporth

Cardigan
Insula
Penkemmas
Poynt

Mounte

Blaynport

Verwick

Tremayne

Bettus cuan

Capel Llanstra

Tredraier

Capel

CARDIGAN

Tyuy flu:

Llangoidmore

Broyngwin

Llanuaier
treligon

Llanginllo

Llandyssil

Pennerall

Oscoid

Mortimer

Capel

Llangbrid

Llandogway

Kilgwyn

Llanuaier ol Lloyne

Llandeuog

Llangllandyny

St Dogmels

Keuenbryn

Kilgarren

PEN: BROK PARS

Manerdyne

New castle emelyn

Kennarth

Llangler

Bonger

MERIONETH PARS

MONTGO: PARS

RADNOR PARS

BRECKNOC PARS

CAR MAR: DEN PARS

Machenlleth

Dowy flu:

Eynon flu:

Leuenant flu:

Kimer flu:

Plinillimon hill

Llangunuelyn

Clettur flu:

Sabrina flu:

Lery flu:

Llanyhangel east: gualter

Massalak flu:

Salck flu:

Rydal flu:

Wye flu:

Combeystoyth

Gagirthan

Vnmaboiva

Spittyc kimyen

Llanbadarnuawr

Istwyth flu:

Ridol flu:

Llanyhangle ycrothen

Llanmachairne

Llanauon

yspittyc Istwidh

Clarwen fluuius

Llanyller

Llanunnes

Istradmyrik

Rosse faire

Llyn tyuy

Llanyhangel rostea

Llanihangel llerod

Weray flu:

Clarthy flu:

Llyn legnant

Istradflere

Istradfleet

Mirk flu:

Blaynpennell

chaple

Llyn gonon

Lansanfrayde

Llanbadern odyn

Ayron flu:

Brenny flu:

Llyn Verwyn

Arth flu:

Llangytho

Tregaron

Kilkennyn

Nantgunlle

Tauye flu:

Treuilan

Capel bettus lekye

Llanthewybreuye

Trausnant flu:

Talaserne

Capel Garthelye

Tothea flu:

Llangybye

Llanlleir

Llanuaircledogye

Rescobe forest

Pescotter flu:

Istrad

Betterbletherus

Capel pylyn

Sylian

Istrodefyne

Kellan

the forest

Mathern flu:

Llangeroys

Cothy flu:

Llanbeder

Taigle flu:

Capel Llanpymsent

Pencarok

Llanumbether

Scala

1 2 3 4 5

Llanllonye

Llansawel

Abergorlech

Capelpencader

Christophorus Saxton Descripsit

Wilhelmus kip Sculpsit

CARDIGAN-SHIRE.

FRom Saint Davids Promontorie the shore beeing driven backe a slope Eastward, letteth in the sea within a vast and crooked baye, upon which lieth the third region of the Dimetæ, in English called CARDIGAN-SHIRE, in British Sire Aber-Tivi, by old Latin writers Ceretica (if any man thinke) of King Caratacus, this may seeme a conjecture proceding out of his owne braine, and not grounded upon any certaine authority; and yet we read that the worthy Caratacus, so worthily renowned was the soveraigne ruler in these parts. A plaine and champion Country it is Westward, where it lieth to the sea, as also on the South side, where the river Tivy seperateth it from Caermarden-shire: But in the East and North sides, which bound upon Brecknock and Montgomerie-shires, there is a continued range, or ridge of hills that shoot along, yeelding goodly pasture ground, under which there bee spred sondrie large pooles. That in ancient times this shire, as the rest also of Wales, was not planted and garnished with Cities but with little cottages, it may bee gathered by that speech of their Prince Caratacus, who being taken prisoner, when hee had throughly viewed the glorious magnificence of Rome, What meane you (saith he) when yee haue these and such like stately buildings of your owne, to covet our small cotages? Howbeit, the places here of most antiquity let us briefly view over.

The river Tivy, which Ptolomee calleth TVEROBIVS, but corruptly, in steed of Dwr-Tivius, that is, the river Tivy, issueth out of the poole Lin-Tivy, beneath the hils whereof I spake before: first combred, as it were, with stones in the way, and rumbling with a great noise without any chanel, and so passeth through a very stony tract (nere unto which at Rosse, the mountainers keepe the greatest faire for cattaile in all those parts, untill it come to Strat-fleur, a monastery long since of the Cluniack monkes, compassed about with hils. From thence, being received within a chanel, it runneth downe by Tregaron, and Lhan-Deui-breui, built and so named in memoriall of David Bishop of Menevia, where he in a frequent Synode refuted the Pelagian heresie springing up againe in Britaine, both by the holy scriptures and also by a miracle, while the earth whereon hee stood as he preached, arose up under his feete, by report, to an hillock. Thus farre and somewhat farther also Tivy holdeth on his course Southward to Lan-Beder a little mercate towne. From hence Tivie turning his streame Westward carieth a broader chanell, and neere unto Kilgarran falleth downe right headlong (as it were) from a left, and maketh that Salmons Leape, whereof I spake ere while. For, exceeding great store of Salmons it yeeldeth, and was in times past the onely British river, as Giraldus Cambrensis was of opinion, that had Bevers in it. This Beaver is a creature living both on land & water, footed before like a dog and behinde like a goose, with an ash-coloured skin somewhat blackish, having a long taile, broad and gristly, which in his floting he useth in lieu of a sterne. Concerning the subtile wilinesse of which creatures, the said Giraldus hath observed many things, but at this daie none of them are here to be seene.

Scarce two miles from hence standeth upon a steepe banke Cardigan, which the Britans name Aber-Tivy, that is, Tivy-mouth, the shire towne, strongly fortified by Gilbert the sonne of Richard de Clare, which afterwards being by treason yeelded up, Rhise Ap Gruffin rased; when hee had taken prisoner Robert Fitz-Stephen, whom some call Stephanides: who (after hee had stood a long time at the devotion of the Welshmen, his heavy friends for his life, beeing at length delivered on his condition, that he should resigne up into their hands all his possessions in Wales) was the first of the Norman race that with a small powre of men, fortunately set foote in Ireland, and by his valour made way for the Englishmen to follow, and second him for subduing Ireland under the crowne of England.

The river Suecia.

Ystwith.

Cardigan-shire.

King Caratacus.

The river Rideol.

Lords of Cardigan-shire.

Zonaras.

Tuerobius the river.

Rosse.
Stratfleur.

Kilgarran.
The Salmons leap.

Castores Bevers.

Cardigan.

Fitz-Stephens.

From Tivy mouth, the ſhore gently giveth back, and openeth for it ſelf the paſſage A
The river Stuccia. of many riverets; among which in the upper part of the ſhire, STVCCIA, wherof Ptolomee maketh mention, is moſt memorable, when as the name of it continueth after Yſtwith. a ſort, whole at this day, being called in common ſpeech, Yſtwith: at the head wherof are veines of lead, and at the mouth the towne Aber-yſtwith, the moſt populous and plentuous place of the whole ſhire; which that noble Gilbert de Clare alſo fenſed with walles, and Walter Bec an Engliſhman defended a great while againſt the Welſhright manfully. Hard hereunto lieth Lhan Badern vaur, that is, The Church of Patern the great, who being borne in little Britaine, as we read in his life, both governed the Church by feeding, and fed it by governing. Unto whoſe memorie the poſteri- B ty conſecrated here as well a church, as alſo an Epiſcopall ſee. But the Biſhoprick, as Roger Hoveden writeth, quite decayed many yeares ſince when the people had wickedly ſlaine their paſtour.

The river Ridol. At the ſame mouth alſo the river Ridol diſchargeth it ſelf into the Iriſh ſea. This river, deſcending out of Plinlimon, an exceeding ſteepe and high hill, that encloſeth the North part of the ſhire, and powreth out of his lap thoſe moſt noble rivers Severn and Wy, whereof I haue already often ſpoken. And not much aboue Y-ſtwith mouth, the river Deui that ſerveth in ſteed of a limite betweene this and Merionith-ſhire, is lodged alſo within the ſea.

Lords of Cargidan-ſhire. Scarce had the Normans ſetled their kingdome in Britaine, when they aſſailed C this coaſt with a fleete by ſea, and that verily with good ſucceſſe. For, by little, and little, in the reigne of K. William Rufus, they wreſted the maritime coaſts out of the Welſhmens hands: but the greateſt part thereof they granted unto Cadugan Ap Blethin, a right wiſe and prudent Britain: who was highly eſteemed, and of great powre throughout all Wales, and evermore ſhewed much favour and friendſhip to the Engliſh. But when his ſonne Oën, a furious and heady yong man, who cold at no hand away with peace, infeſted the Engliſhmen and Flemings newly come thither with continuall invaſions, the unhappy father was fined with the loſſe of his lands, and puniſhed for the offenſes of his ſonne, who was himſelfe alſo conſtreined to relinguiſh his natiue Country and to flie into Ireland. Then this Cardigan- D ſhire was given by K. Henry the Firſt unto Gilbert de Clare, who placed gariſons and fortified Caſtles there. But Cadugan with his ſonne Oën received into favour againe by the Engliſh, recovered alſo his owne lands and inheritance. But Oen returning to his old bias and rebelling afreſh, was ſlaine by Girald the Caſtellan of Penbrock, whoſe wife Neſta he had carried away and raviſhed. And his father being had away into England, long expected for a change of better fortune, and at length in his old age being reſtored to his owne home and friends, was upon the ſodaine by Madoc his nephew ſtabbed through his body. After this, Roger de Clare through the liberality of King Henry the Second had Cardigan-ſhire beſtowed upon him: but when Richard of Clare, his nephew, if I bee not deceived, whiles hee came hither by E land was ſlaine by the Welſh, Rhiſe Prince of Southwales, having made a great maſſacre of Engliſh and driven them out, at length with his victorious army became Lord thereof: nevertheleſſe it fell againe by little and little into the hands of the Engliſh without any bloudeſhed.

There are in this ſhire pariſhes. 64. F

ORDEVICES.

ORDEVICES.

THese countries of the Silures and Dimeta, which wee have hitherto travailed over, the Posteritie, when Wales was subject to three Princes, called in their tongue Deheu-barth, that is, The part lying on the right hand: and Englishmen, South-wales, as hath beene said before. The other two principalities, which they terme Guineth and Powis, wee North-wales and Powisland, were inhabited in ancient times by the ORDOVICES, who also be named ORDEVICES, ORDOVICAE, and in some places although most corruptly, Ordolucæ. A puissant and courageous nation, by reason they keepe wholly in a mountanous country, and take heart even of the soile; and which continued the longest free from the yoke both of Romans and also of English dommion: neither was it subdued by the Romanes, before the daies of the Emperour Domitiane: (For, then Iulius Agricola conquered almost the whole nation) nor brought vnder the English before the daies of King Edward the First. For a long time they lived in a lawlesse kind of libertie, as bearing themselves bould both upon their owne valour, and the strength of the country, hard to be wonne: and which may seeme after a sort naturally accomodated for ambushments, and to prolong warres. Ordovices.

To lay out and limite the bounds of the ORDEVICES in a generalitie, is not so hard a matter; but to set downe the true Etymologie and reason of their name, I thinke it very difficult. Yet haue I conceived this coniecture, that seeing they were seated over the two rivers Deui, that arising from two springs neere together, take their course divers waies; and considering that Oar-Deui in their British tongue signifieth Vpon, or, aboue Deui, they were thence named Ordevices: like as the Aruerni had that name, because they dwelt upon the river Garumna, the Armorici their name, for that they inhabited upon the Sea-side, and the Horesci theirs, because their inhabitation was upon the river Eske. Neither is the very name of Ordevices quite vanished without any remaines therof, in this tract: For, a great part of it which lieth to the Sea-side, is yet by the inhabitants usually called Ardudwy, whereof it may seeme the Romanes have made these tearmes Ordouic and Ordevices carrying a softer and gentler sound. But, the whole country (excepting one small shire) is called of the Latin writers by one name of a later stampe, Guinethia, and Venedotia, and of the Britans Guineth, and the same,

from

Veneti. Guineth. * Vannes.

from the * Veneti of Armorica as some thinke, who, as Cæsar writeth, Were A wont very oft to saile unto Britaine. But if I might be allowed to change one onely letter, I would suppose, that this name was knowen to the Greekes, and to Pausanias, who in his Arcadica recordeth, that Antoninus Pius the Emperour grieuously punished the Brigantes, for that they had made inrodes into GENOVNIA a province of the Romanes in Britaine. Certes, if it might be lawfull to read Genouthia, for Genounia, so neere in sound commeth that word to Guinethia, and this Guinethia bordereth so neere to the Brigantes, that unlesse B
Pausanias ment this region, let Sibylla her selfe declare where it was, and what it

Genounia. should bee. But these Countries belonged to the old ORDEVICES which are now called in English by new names, Montgomeryshire, Merioneth-shire, Caernaruon-shire, Denbigh-shire, and Flintshire.

C

D

E

F

MONTGOMERY-

MONGOMERY Comitatus qui olim pars ORDOVICVM.

MERI:

ONETH

PAR S

CARDIGAN

PARS

OCIDENS

Bala
Clyn Tegit
Pennant mc lan gil Tanot flu:
Vurn way flu:
Llanum mothyve
Dovy flu:
Caddorydric hill
Clowedoc flu:
Turgh flu:
Garthpi
Dynas mothuc
Maynlleyd
Angel flu:
Varnucy g Tallyllyn
Remis
Towyn myn flu:
Berg flu:
Mathauern Llanworing
Dorowen
Llanbrin maure
Talgarth
Gwedall flu:
Pencgos
Pennalt
Moyluodian hill
Bacho flu Machenllet magnetic Dulas flu:
Llyn glasllyn
Dungum flu:
Llyn begelyn
Llewenant flu:
Lloyd flu:
Plymllymon hill
Biga flu:
Llangunuellyn
Sabrina flu:
Brughan flu:
Rydall flu:
Wye flu:
Dornol fl
MER

TENTRIO

DENBIGH PARS

SALOPIA

Riader flu:
Llanarmon
Clanet flu: Place ycha
nriader amoughnant Llangedwyn Abertanat Llanumledwall Llanummothuayc
Hyrnaut Llansanfraid
Llanueghen
Melverley Llanuilling
Sabrina flu:
Llandrenio Brethenhill
Abberbury
Willeston
Willeston hall
Llanyhangel
Myuot Lloydyerd Kegiduay Heldray Cause caſt:
Mathraual hall
Walop Maiſmaure
Welſhe poole Buttinton
chap:
landaguan Llangunnewe
Leding flu Worthen
Gogh caſt:
Llanyriil
Llanuaier inkremon Engerrimon caſt:
Leghton Treucleſton
Shelue Mannauen
Cap: fordon
Agaire
Hyſſynton
Berrewe Llanlltegan
Chirburye Llanweddlan Sabrina flu:
Ruu flu:
Llandiſſel
Tregunnon
Bechan flu:
Churchſtok
Snyd
Bettus
Cregynog hall MONTGOMERY
Dolevoren caſt:
Hawes flu:
Llanllohairne Llanmerewig
Llyddum Llanwenog
Myddleton hall
Aberhawes
Caerſuſe ca:
Bisſhopes caſtle
Newtowne
Penprice Penſtrowed
Kery
PARS Moghtre Treucgloyes
Whit hall
Llandynan
Duias flu:
Llanidios
Llandbadern ucnyth
Llynbarre RADNOR Scala
Milia rium
1 2 3 4 5
PARS
Sc: Harmon
Chriſtophorus Saxton deſcripſit
Wilhelmus Kip, ſculpſit.

A

MONTGOMERY-SHIRE.

B MONTGOMERY-SHIRE, in Britiſh Sire Tre-Faldwin, ſo called of the principall towne therein, bounded on the South-ſide with Cardigan and Radnor-ſhires, on the Eaſt with Shropſhire, on the North with Denbigh-ſhire, and on the Weſt with Merionith: although it hath many an high hill in it, yet by reaſon of plentifull Valleis, it is a good country as well for corne as paſture: and in old time a fruitfull breeder of the beſt kind of horſes, which, as Giraldus ſaith, by natures workmanſhip pourtraying, as it were, in a picture their noble ſhapes, were very commendable as well for the Majeſtie of their making and big limmes, as for their incomparable ſwiftneſſe.* In the utmoſt corner of this ſhire Weſtward, where it endeth point wiſe in maner of a cone or pine apple, ſtandeth Machleneth, haply that which the Romans called MAGLONA: where under the Generall of Britaine in the time of the Emperour Theodoſius the Younger lay in Garizon the Captaine of the regiment of the Solenſes, for to repreſſe and keepe under the mountainers: and two miles from hence neere unto Penall, there is a place to be ſeene, named Keven Caer, that is, The backe or ridge of a Citie, where peeces of Romane coine are other whiles digged up, and a circular forme of walles of no ſmall circuit, are apparently ſeene by the remaines.

* Membroſa ſua maieſtate.

C

Five miles hence, the Hil Plinlimon whereof I ſpake, raiſeth it ſelfe up to a wonderfull height, and on that part where it boundeth one ſide of this ſhire, it powreth forth SABRINA, the greateſt river in Britaine next to Thamis, which the Britains tearme Haffren, and Engliſhmen Severn. Whence the name was derived I could never read. For, that ſeemeth to ſmell of a fable, which Geffrey hath deviſed of the Virgin Sabrina therein drowned, and which a late Poet following his ſteps hath delivered thus in verſe.

The head of Severn.

Severn.

D

In flumen præcipitatur Abren,
Nomen Abren fluuio de virgine, nomen eidem
Nomine corrupto, deinde Sabrina datur.

Into the ſtreame was Abren headlong caſt;
The river then taking that Virgins name,
Hight Abren, and thereof Sabrin at laſt,
Which tearme in ſpeech corrupt implies the ſame.

E

This river immediatly from his ſpring head maketh ſuch a number of windings in and out in his courſe, that a man would thinke many times he returns againe to his fountaine: yet for all that hee runneth forward, or rather ſlowly wandereth through this Shire, Shropſhire, Worceſterſhire, and laſt of all Gloceſter-ſhire, infuſing a certaine vitall moiſture into the ſoile every where as he paſſeth, untill at length hee mildely diſchargeth himſelfe into the Severn ſea. But in this ſhire it being overſhadowed with woods, after much ſtrugling hee getteth out Northward by Lanidlos, Trenewith, or Newtowne, and Caer-fuſe, which, as they ſay, is both ancient, and enioieth alſo ancient priviledges; and not farre from his Eaſt banke, leaveth behind him the Caſtle, and towne of Montgomery upon the riſing of a rocke, having a pleaſant plaine under it. The Engliſhmen named the Caſtle Montgomery, and the Latins Mons Gomericus, of Roger de Montgomery Earle of Shrewsbury; who winning much land heereabout from the Welſh, built it, as we find in Domeſday booke. But when his ſonne Robert was attainted for rebellion, King Henrie the Firſt gaue this Newtowne.

F

Caſtle,

Caſtle, & the honor of Montgomery to Baldwin Bollers in marriage with Sibill of Falais his niece. According to whoſe name the Welſhmen cal the town ſtanding a litle from the Caſtle, Tre-Faldwin, that is, Baldwins towne. From this Baldwin deſcended Vital Engain who claimed this Honor as right heire in the time of K. Henrie the Third. About which time, the ſaid King Henrie the Third raiſed it up againe out of the very aſhes: For', the Welſh had ſlaine the gariſon ſoldiers and overthrowen it; and ſo it lay deſolate for many yeeres, and Florilegus fableth, That he, of the ſituation of the place then firſt named it Montgomery. Certaine it is, that the ſaid King then granted by his Patent, That the Burrough of Montgomery ſhould be a free Burrough, with other Liberties. Now the Herberts are heere ſeated, branched out from a brother of Sir William Herbert the firſt Earle of Penbroke of that name.

Anno xj.

Hard by this, Corndon Hill mounteth up to a very great height, in the top whereof are placed certaine ſtones in a round circle like a coronet, whence it taketh that name, in memoriall as it ſhould ſeeme of ſome victorie. A little higher, Severn glideth downe by Trellin, that is, The towne by a poole, whereupon it is called Welch Poole in Engliſh. It hath a Caſtle joining unto it on the South-ſide, called Caſtle Coch of a kind of reddiſh ſtone wherewith it is built, which within the compaſſe of one wall, containeth two Caſtles: the one belonged to the Lord of Powis, the other to the Baron Dudley. Cadugane the ſonne of Blethin, that renowned Britan, of whom I ſpake, whiles he was buſie about the building of this Caſtle, was, as we find in the Epitome of Lancarbanenſis, ſlaine by his nephew Madocke. Right over againſt this Caſtle on the other ſide of the river, ſtandeth Buttington, well knowen by reaſon of the Danes wintering there; out of which, Adhered Earle of the Mercians expelled them in the yeere of Chriſt 894. as Marianus writeth. Severn being paſt theſe places, turneth by little and little Eaſtward, that he may the ſooner entertaine the ſmall river Tanet, which being once received into his ſociety, he goeth on forward to Shropſhire.

Corndon hil.

Welch poole.

Red caſtle.

That MEDIOLANVM a towne of the Ordovices, which both Antonine the Emperour, and Ptolomee ſpeake of, ſtood in this ſhire, I am in a maner perſwaded, vpon probabilitie. The footings whereof, I have ſought after with all diligence, but little or nothing have I found of it; For time conſumeth the very carcaſſes even of Cities. Yet if we may ground any conjecture upon the ſituation, ſeeing the townes which Antonine placeth on either ſide, be ſo well knowen, to wit, BONIVM, now Bangor by Dee on the one ſide, and RVTVNIVM, now Rowton caſtle on the other ſide (for he ſetteth it twelve Italian miles diſtant from this, & from the other twenty) The lines of Poſition, if I may ſo tearme them, or of the diſtance rather, doe cut one another croſſe betweene Matrafall and Lan-vethlin, which are ſcarce three miles aſunder, and ſhew as it were demonſtratively the ſite of our Mediolanum. For, this cannot chuſe but be an infallible way to find out the ſituation of a third place, by two others that are knowen, when as there are neither hils interpoſed, nor any troublous turnings of the waies. As for this Matrafall, which ſtandeth five miles Weſtward from Severn, although it be now but a bare name, was ſome time the regall ſeat of the Princes of Powis (which may bee an argument thereof) and the ſame much ſpoken of by writers, who record, that after the Princes had once forſpoken it, *Robert * Vipont* an Engliſhman built a Caſtle. But Lan-vethlin, that is, Vethlius Church, being a little mercate towne, although it be ſomewhat farther off from the croſſe-meeting of the ſaid lines, yet commeth it farre neerer in reſemblance of name to Mediolanum. For, of Methlin, by the propriety of the Britiſh tongue, is made Vethlin, like as of Caer-Merden, is come Caer Verden, and of Ar-mon, Arvon. Neither doth Methlin, more jarre & diſagree in ſound from Mediolanum, than either Millano in Italie, Le Million in Xantoigne, or Methlen in the Low-countries, which cities no man doubteth were all in times paſt knowen by the name of Mediolanum. Which of theſe conjectures commeth neerer to the truth, judge you: for me it is enough to give my gueſſe. If I ſhould ſay, that either Duke Medus, or Prince Olanus built this Mediolanum of ours, and thoſe cities of the ſame name in Gaule, or that whiles they Matrafall.

* De veteri Ponte.

Lan-vethlin.

were

A were a building Sus mediatim Lanata, that is, That a ſow halfe fleeced with woole, was digged up, might I not be thought (thinke you) to catch at clouds, and fiſh for Niſles. Yet notwithſtanding the Italians write as much of their Mediolanum. But ſeeing that moſt true it is, that theſe Cities were built by nations of the ſame language (and that the Gaules and Britans ſpake all one language I have proved already) it is probable enough, that for one, and the ſame cauſe they had alſo one and the ſame denomination. Howbeit, this our Mediolanum, in nothing ſo farre as I know, agreeth with that of Italie, unleſſe it be, that both of them are ſeated upon a plaine betweene to riverets: and a learned Italian derived the name of their Mediolanum hence, be-
B cauſe it is a Citie ſtanding in the mids betweene Lanas, that is, little rivers, according to his owne interpretation. But this may ſeeme overmuch of MEDIOLANVM, which I have ſought heere, and abut Alceſter not farre off.

This Countie hath adourned no Earle with the name, title, and honor thereof untill of late, our Soveraigne King Iames created Philip Herbert, ſecond ſonne of Henrie Earle of Penbroke by Marie Sidney, for the ſingular love and affectionate favour toward him, and for the great hope that he conceived of his vertues, both Baron Herbert of Shurland, and alſo Earle of Montgomery, vpon one and the ſame day at Greenwich in the yeere 1605. But, the Princes of Powis, deſcended from the third ſonne of Rotherike the great, held this ſhire with others in a perpetuall line of ſuc-
C ceſſion (although Roger and Hugh of Montgomery, had encroched upon ſome part thereof) untill the daies of King Edward the Second. For then Oen ap Gruffin, ap Guenwinwyn, the laſt Lord of Powis of the Britiſh bloud (for the name of Prince had long before beene worne out of uſe) left one onely daughter named Hawiſe, whom Sir Iohn Charleton an Engliſhman, the Kings * Valect married, & in right of his wife, was by King Edward the Second made Lord of Powiſe; who (as I have ſeene in very many places) gave for his Armes, a Lion Geules Rampant, in a ſhield Or, which he receaued from his wifes Progenitours. Of his poſterity there were foure males that bare this honorable title, untill that in Edward, the ſucceſſion of males had an end: for he, the ſaid Edward, begat of Aeleonor the daughter and one of the heires of Tho-
D mas Holland Earle of Kent, Iane, wife to Sir Iohn Grey Knight, and Ioice married unto Iohn Lord Tiptoft, from whom the Barons of Dudley and others derive their deſcent. The ſaid Sir Iohn Grey, for his martiall proeſſe, and by the bountifull favour of King Henrie the fifth, received the Earldome of Tanquervill in Normandie, to have unto him and his heires males, by delivering one Baſsinet at the Caſtle of Roan every yeere on Saint Georges day. This Iohn had a ſonne named Henrie, Lord of Powis, in whoſe race the title of Powis with the honour thereof continued vntill Edward Grey died well neere in our time, leaving no iſſue lawfully begotten.

Earle of Montgomery

Princes of Powiſe.

Lords of Powiſe.

* Servitour or Gentleman of the privy Chamber.

Dupli. Norm. 6. Henr. 5.

Earle of Tanquervill.

E

This ſhire hath Pariſhes 47.

F MERIONETH-

Earle of Montgomery

Prince of Powis.

Lords of Powis.

* Servitour or Gentleman of the privy Chamber.

Dugdal. Norm. & Hen. 7. Earle of Tauquervill.

a

CARNARVEN
PARS

Therin

Syntye cuan

Bethkelert

Earlee flu:

Festeniog

Druryd flu:

Llyn Conwy

Llyn troweryn

Cunnel flu:

Llanwrothe

Mayntorog

Penmoruay

Kenhay ern chap:

Tracthmaiwen

Vchenryd flu:

Trawsfynydh

Llyn teckyn

Llandeckwyn

Mothuaye flu:

Derye flu:

Cayn flu:

Treuelis

Tracth hichan

Llanyhangel

Ystrath

Llyn ycombe

Harlech

Llynnæ cithye

Llanbeder flu:

Artro flu:

Llandanog

Llanumer

Benrose wood

Llanuaghreth

Llanbeder

Llanenthowin

Skethy flu:

Nanna

Llanyltyd

Kemmer ab:

Corsegeddal

Llanthoy war

Llanaber

Dolgelhe

MARE

HIBERNICVM

Caddrydric hill

Barmouth

Llyngoruy flu:

Desunny flu:

Talyllyn

Llangilynyn

Llanyhangel apennant

Desunny flu:

Castle thchery

Borg flu:

Llanegryn

Pennalt

Towen merioneth

Machenl

Aberdouye

Llewenant flu:

Llanguuicllyn

Sarnabugh point

CARDIGAN

MERIONITH Comitatus olim
pars ORDOVICVM.

Chr: Saxton descrip:

Wm Kip sculp:

Scala Miliarium
1 2 3 4 5

DEN BIGH

PARS

MON

GOMERY

PARS

Llanychangel
Bettus
Girow flu:
Llangum Gowyddelwern Llansanfraid
Dee flu:
Alwen fluuius
Keuenrcage Llandisilio
Corwen
Dole
Irn flu:
Dowcryn flu:
Monachdoure flu:
Dee flu:
Llangar Llandderuelgadern
Llandrillo
Rulace
Llanuaier
Parduvaure hill
Bala
Cleton flu:
Llanctkil Rucdok Tanot flu:
Llyn Glanlintegid Tegit
Riader flu:
Llangower
Llanullyn
Llangunog
Funnoudouerduwy
Pennant melangil Llanuilling
Tanot flu:
Llanuthin
Vurnway fluuius
Llanum mothwyc
Douyc flu:
Clowedok flu:
Llanuenllyd
Remis
Dorowen
Gwedal flu:
Llanbrin moure
Moyluadian hill
Llyn glasslyn
Llyn Vogilyn
Dungum flu:
Lloid flu:
Biga flu:
Bache flu:

MERIONETH-SHIRE.

FRom the backside of Montgomery-shire, Merioneth-shire, in British Sire-Verioneth, in Latin Mervinia, & as Giraldus calleth it Terra filiorum Canani, that is, Canans sons Land, reacheth to that crooked Bay, I spake of, and to the maine sea, which on the West side beateth so sore upon it, that it is verily thought to haue carried away by violence some part thereof. Southward, for certaine miles together it is severed from Cardigan-shire, by the river Dovy; on the North it boundeth upon Caer-narvon, and Denbigh-shires. As for the in-land part, it so riseth with mountaines standing one by another in plumps that, as Giraldus saith, it is the roughest and most unpleasant Country to see to, in al Wales. For, it hath in it mountaines of a wonderfull height, yet narrow and passing sharpe at the top in manner of a neidle, and those verily not scattering, here and there one, but standing very thicke together, and so even in height that shepheards talking togither, or railing one at another on the tops of them, if happely they appoint the field to encounter & meet together, they can hardly doe it from morning till night. But let the reader herein relie upon Giraldus credit. Great flockes of sheepe graze all over these mountaines, neither are they in danger of wolues, who were thought then to haue beene ridde quite out of all England and Wales, when King Eadgar imposed upon Ludwall Prince of these Countries to present three hundred wolues yeerly unto him by way of Tribute. For, when, as William of Malmsbury writeth, hee had for three yeeres performed this, at the fouth yeere, he gaue over, upon his protestation, that hee could finde no more. Yet long time after this, there remained some still, as appeereth for certaine, by irreprovable testimonies of Record.

Mountaines exceeding high.

Wolues in England destroied.

See Derby-shire and Yorke-shire.

The inhabitants, who for most part wholy betake themselues to breeding & feeding of cattaile, and liue upon white meates, as butter, cheese &c. (how ever Strabo mocked our Britans in times past, as unskilfull in making cheese) are for stature, cleere complexion, goodly feature, & lineaments of body, inferiour to no nation in Britain: but they haue an ill name among their neighbours, for being to forward in the wanton loue of women, and that proceeding from their idlenesse. They haue but few townes: Eastward where Douy runneth, standeth Mouthwy a Commot very well knowne, which fell for a childes part of inheritance to William, alias Wilcock of Mouthwy, a yonger sonne of Gruffith Ap Gwenwynwin Lord of Powis: and by his sons daughter it came unto Sir Hugh Burgh, and by his sonnes daughters likewise unto the families of Newport, Leighton, Lingein, and Mitton, of especiall respect in these parts. Where the river Avon runneth downe more Westward, there is Dolegethle a little mercat town, so called of the vale wherein it is built. Hard by the sea in the little territory named Ardudwy, the castle Arlech, in times past, named Caer Colun standeth advanced upon a very steepe rock, & looketh down into the sea from aloft, which being built, as the inhabitants report, by King Edward the First, tooke name of the situation. For, Arlech in the British tongue signifieth as much, as upon a Stony rocke. Whiles England was disiointed, and lay torne with civil broiles, David Ap Ienkin Ap Enion a noble gentleman of Wales, who tooke part with the house of Lancaster, defended it stoutly against K. Edward the Fourth: until that Sir William Herbert Earle of Penbrock making his way with much adoe through the midest of these mountains of Wales, no lesse passable than the Alpes; assaulted this castle in such furious thundering manner, that it was yeelded up into his hands. Incredible it is almost what a cumbersom journy he had of it, and with what difficulty, he gat through, whiles he was constreined in some places to climbe up the hils creeping; in others, to come downe tumbling, both hee and his company together. Whereupon, the dwellers thereabout call that way at this day Le Herbert.

Mouthwy.

Dolegethle.

Herberts way.

A little higher, in the verie confines of the ſhires, two notable armes of the ſea enboſom themſelues within the land, Traith Maur, and Traith Bachan, that is, the Greater waſh, and the Leſſe. A Faſtineeg. And not farre from hence, neere unto a little village called Faſtineog, there is a ſtreet or Port-way paved with ſtone, that paſſeth through theſe comberſome and in manner, unpaſſable mountaines. Which, conſidering that the Britans name it Helens ſtreet. Sarn Helen, that is, Helens ſtreet, it is not to bee thought, but that Helena mother to Conſtantine the Great, who did many ſuch like famous workes throughout the Roman Empire, laied the ſame with ſtone. Neither ſtandeth farre from it Caer-Gai, that is, the Caſtle of Caius, built by one Caius a Roman, touching whom the common B people dwelling thereby report great wonders.

In the Eaſt ſide of the ſhire, the river Dee ſpringeth out of two fountaines, whence The Sources of Dee. ſome thinke it tooke the name, for, they call it Dwy, which word importeth alſo among them the number of two (although others would needes haue it ſo termed of ſome Divinity, other of the blacke colour) and forthwith paſſeth entier and whole through Lhintegid, in Engliſh Pimble-Meare, and Plenlin meare; a lake ſpreding far Pimble-meare. in length and bredth: and ſo runneth out of it with as great a ſtreame as it entred in. For, neitheir ſhal a man ſee in Dee the fiſhes called Guiniad, which are peculiar to Guiniad fiſhes. the Meare, nor yet Salmons in the Meare, which nevertheleſſe are commonly taken in the river. But ſee if you pleaſe the deſcription of this Lake or Meare, in verſe by the C Antiquarian Poet.

Hiſpida quà tellus Merviniareſpicit Eurum,
Eſt locus antiquo Penlinum nomine dictus,
Hic lacus illimeis in valle Tegeius alta
Latè expandit aquas, & vaſtum conficit orbem,
Excipiens gremio latices, qui fonte perenni
Vicinis recidunt de montibus, atque ſonoris
Illecebris captas demulcent ſuauiter aures:
Illud habet certè lacus admirabile dictu D
Quantumuis magna pluuia non æſtuat: atqui
Aere turbato, ſi ventus murmura tollat,
Excreſcit ſubitò rapidis violentior vndis,
Et tumido ſuperat contemptas flumine ripas.

On th' Eaſt ſide of Merioneth, a Country rough that is,
A place there lies by ancient name cleped Penlin, ywis.
Whereas, within a valley deepe, there ſpreadeth farre a lake
With waters cleere without all mud, which compaſſe huge doth take.
Receiving ſundry pirles to it and many a running rill,
That ſpring and fall continually from every neighbour hil. E
And with ſhrill noiſe and pleaſant ſounds allured eares doe fill
And verily a wonder 't is, of this lake ſtrange to tell,
Although the raine powre downe a maine, the waters never ſwell.
But if the aire much troubled be, and windes aloft doe blow,
It ſwells at once, no ſtreame ſo much, and bankes doth overflow.

Bala. On the browe, or edge hereof ſtandeth Bala a little towne, endowed with many immunities, but peopled with few inhabitants, and as rudely and unhandſomely built, nevertheleſſe it is the chiefe mercate towne for theſe mountainers.

Hugh Earle of Cheſter was the firſt of the Normans that tooke this Country, and F held it with planting garriſons, what time as he kept Gruffin Ap Conan, that is, the Son of Conan priſoner: But Gruffin afterwards recovered it with the reſt of his principality, and left it unto his heires, untill it came unto the fatall Periode, and ſo ended in Lhewellin.

It reckoneth Churches. 37.

MARE

HIBERNI:

CUM

SIUE VERGI:

VIUM

MONA

INSV:

PARS

Menai flu.

Llanvaer ifgar

Caer Caruon

Llanbeblig

SEGONTIVM

Llanvaglan

Llanvnda

Abermenay ferye

Carnarg flu.

Gwerye flu.

Dinas dinlle

Llandurgog

Glynllyvon

Llivan flu.

Caer ierig enrode

Llenvny flu.

Nevlle

Clynnogvaure

Llanlleuny

More flu.

Rynnil hill

Llanny Llavrne

Carnynoth chap.

Llangelvy

Llanvon

Nevin

Pistill

Bodvean

Bodvill

Edarne

Rudco

Capel Llangenni

Carndinbit rock

Llandidvni

Gerthen

Tudvalen

Madryn

Llanbadle mawr

Kaeanno Tebe

Llanbedrog

Pencaer poynt

Penllech

Llandvane

Llanvaelrine

Llanvon

Middrine

Llallavuny

Nanvnoth

Bodvrin chapell

Bennvgo

Llanvenoan

Sarnbach flu.

Mowthrug hill

Seathwell Insul.

Brynrevs

Rne

Llanvaelrvfe

Merarys Insul.

Brachypult poynt

Gwelvn Insul.

Pennenlede poynt

LANGANVM promontorium

Bardsey Insul.

ADROS INSVLA

Clistephens

FLYNT
PARS

DENBIGH

PARS

MERIONETH

PARS

CAERNARVO
Comitatus pars olim
ORDOVICVM

Ormeshead pont.
CONOVII flu: ostium
Prestholme insul:
Llandudno Penryn Llandrillo
Eglwysbach Bettwsyn
Llanrhos
Abergonuy
The east of Snowden pennanbichan Bathkaithdan Llandullas
Llysdian
Llansanfraid
Penmen maur
Penmen bychan
Dowre bychan
Guitryne
Bedhellyn
Llanvair vadhan
Llanolwin Llanaber
CONOVIVM Pertbathurfery
Gefftan flu:
Caerhean
Eglos ewith
Castle flu:
Llanbedr kenyn Llandhobill
Llan dhewi
Llyn kegoin Llanvihangel
Llandinam
Llanvair
Llanvihangel flu:
Glyn flu:
Llanrwst
Trenerian
Llyn cowlwyd
Gurider
Conwy flu:
Llanrwsbwen
Capel kerig Llandelhadren
Llanbiris
Llyn mumber Llegovey flu:
Betus yrion vthon
Capelgarmon
Llyn llanberis
Bennoyle
Funen Llyglyr flu:
Capel pentre indeg
Snowdon hill Dolwyddelan
Llan penmachno
Tiber teu Spitceual
Llyn dolbadhelan
Bedhkelart
Llyn conwy
Dwrid flu:
Eglwys eg Llanwrthwn Maintwrog
Penmorvaur yam chap:
Llan Skerfen insul:
Traith mawr
Traith bychan
Llanvihangel ystraithe
Harlech
Llanbedr flu:
Llanvair
Llandanwg Llanbedr
Arwe flu:
Llanaberberis
Llanbedrgoch
Barmouth
10 Gulielmus Hole sculpsit

A

CAERNARVON-SHIRE.

Boue Merionith-ſhire, lieth that Country which the Britans call Sir Caer-ar-von, and Engliſhmen CAER-NAR-VON-SHIRE, of the principall towne therein; and before that Wales was laied out into ſhires, they termed it, by the name of Snowden-Foreſt, and the Latin hiſtorians
B Snaudonia, of that Foreſt, and Ar-vonia, out of the Britiſh name becauſe it hath Mona, that is, Angleſey juſt over against it. The North ſide and the Weſt butteth upon the Iriſh ſea: the South-ſide is encloſed with Meri-oneth-ſhire, and the Eaſt with Denbigh-ſhire, from which it is ſevered by the river Conwy. On that part which looketh toward the ſea, eſpecially where it ſhooteth forth a great way Southweſt with a Promontorie and ſtretcheth out the ſhores with crooked turning full againſt OCTOPITARVM, or Saint Davids Land, it is of a verie fruitfull ſoile and garniſhed all a long with prety townes. Conway river.

As for the more in-land part of the ſhire, Nature hath loftily areared it up farre
C and nere with mountaines ſtanding thick one by another, as if ſhe would here haue compacted the joints of this Iſland within the bowells of the earth: and made this part thereof a moſt ſure place of refuge for the Britans in time of adverſitie. For, there are ſo many roughes and rocks, ſo many vales full of woods, with pooles heere and there croſſing over them, lying in the way betweene, that no armie may not ſo much as thoſe that are lightly appointed, can finde paſſage. A man may truely, if hee pleaſe, terme theſe mountaines, the Britiſh Alpes: for, beſides that they are the greateſt of the whole Iſland, they are no leſſe ſteepe alſo with cragged and rent rockes on every ſide than the Alpes of Italie, yea and all of them compaſſe one mountaine round about, which over-topping the reſt ſo towreth up with D his head aloft in the aire, as hee may ſeeme not to threaten the skie, but to thruſt his head up into heaven. And yet harbour they the Snow, for, all the yeere long, they bee hory with ſnow, or rather with an hardened cruſt of many ſnowes felted together. The Alpes of Britany.

Whence it is, that all theſe hilles are in Britiſh by one name termed Craig Eiriy, in Engliſh Snow-don, which in both languages, ſound as much as Snowye Mountaines: like as Niphates in Armenia, and Imaus in Scythia, tooke their names, as Plinie witneſſeth of Snow. Neverthleſſe, ſo ranke are they with graſſe, that it is a very common ſpeech among the Welſh, That the mountaines Eriiy will yeeld ſufficient paſture for all the cattaile in Wales, if they were put upon them together. Snow don hilles.

E Concerning the two Meare on the toppe of theſe, in the one of which floteth a wandering Iſland, and in the other is found great ſtore of fiſhes, but having all of them but one eye a peece, I will ſay nothing leſt I might ſeeme to foſter fables: although ſome confident upon the authority of Giraldus, haue beleeued it for a verity. Yet certaine it is that there bee in the very top of theſe mountains pooles indeed and ſtanding waters: whereupon Gervaſe of Tilbury in his booke entituled Otia Imperialia, writeth thus.

In the land of Wales within the bounds of great Britain, there be high hilles that haue laied their foundations upon moſt hard rockes, and in the toppe thereof the earth is cruſted over with ſuch a coate of wateriſh moiſture, that whereſoever a man doe but
F lightlie ſtrike his foote, hee ſhall perceiue the ground to ſtirre the length of a ſtones caſt from him: whereupon when the enemies came, the Welſh with their agility and nimbleneſſe lightly leaping over that boggie ground, either avoide the enemies aſſaults, or to their loſſe reſolutely expect their forces. Theſe mountainers Iohn Salisbury in his Polycraticon, by a new forged Latin name termed Nivicollinos, that is, Snow-down inhabitants of whom in King Henry the Second his daies he wrote thus. Nivicollini.

The Snow-downe Britans make inrodes, and beeing now come out of their Caves and lurking holes of the woods, enlarge their borders, poſſeſſe the plaines of the noble men: and whiles themſelues looke on, they aſſault, they winne, and overthrow them, or elſe keepe the ſame to their owne behoufe; becauſe our youth, which is ſo deintily brought up, and loues to be houſe-birds and to liue lazie, in the ſhade, beeing borne onely to devour the fruits of the earth and to fill the belly, ſleepes untill it be broad day light &c. A

But come we downe now from the mountaines into the champian plaines, which becauſe wee finde no where elſe but by the ſea ſide, it may ſuffice to coaſt onely along the ſhore. The Promontory which I ſaid before ſhooteth out toward the South-weſt, is in Ptolomee called according to the diverſity of copies, CANGANVM, IANGANVM, and LANGANVM. Which is the trueſt name I know not, but LANGANVM it may ſeeme; conſidering that the inhabitants name it at this day Lhein, which runneth forth with a narrow and even by-land, having larger and more open fields than the reſt of the Country, and the ſame yeelding barley moſt plentuouſly. Two little townes it ſheweth and no more, that are memorable. Farther within upon the creeke, is Pullhely, that is, that ſalt Meare or Poole: more outward, by the Iriſh ſea (that beateth upon the other ſide of the Biland) is Nevin, a village having a mercate kept in it: wherein the Nobility of England in the yeere of our Lord 1284. in a triumph over the Welſh did celebrate the memory of Arthur the great, as Florilegus writeth, with Iuſtes, Tournaments and feſtivall pomp. If any other townes flouriſhed here, then were they deſtroied, when Hugh Earle of Cheſter, Robert of Rudland, and Guarin of Salop, entring into this Country firſt of all the Normans, ſo waſted this promontory, that for the ſpace of ſeven whole yeeres, it lay diſpeopled and deſolate.

Canganum. B Lhein.
Pulhely.
Nevin.
C
The life of Gruffin.

From Nevin, the ſhore pointed and endented with one or two elbowes lying out into the ſea tendeth Northward, and then turning afront North-eaſt, by a narrow ſea or Frith (they call it Menai) it ſevereth the Iſle Angleſey from the firme land. Upon this ſtraight or narrow ſea ſtood SEGONTIVM, a City which Antonine the Emperour maketh mention of: ſome reliques of the walles I ſaw neere unto a little Church built in honour of Saint Pulblicius. It tooke the name of a river running by the ſide of it, which yet at this day is called Seiont, and iſſueth out of the poole Lin-Peris. In which, there is a kinde of fiſh peculiar to that water, and ſeene no where elſe, called by the dwellers there Tor-coch; of the bellie that is ſomewhat red. Now, ſeeing that in an ancient copie of Ptolomee, SETANTIORVM PORTVS is here placed, which according to other copies is ſet farther of, if I ſhould reade in ſteed of it, SEGONTIORVM PORTVS, that is, the haven of the Segontians, and ſay it ſtood upon the mouth of this river, I ſhould perhaps aime at the truth: if not, yet ſhould I obtaine pardon for my conjecture of a courtuous reader.

Menai.
Segontium.
Lhan Beblin. D
Tor-coch fiſhes.

This Citie Ninnius called Caer Cuſtenith; and hee that wrote the life of Gruffin the ſonne of Conan, recordeth, that Hugh Earle of Cheſter built a Caſtle in Hean Caer Cuſtenith, that is, as the Latin Interpreter tranſlateth it, in the ancient Citie of Conſtantine the Emperour. And Mathew of Weſtminſter writeth (but let him make it good if hee can) that the bodie of Conſtantius, father to Conſtantine the Great was heere found in the yeare of our Lord 1283. and honourably beſtowed in the Church of the new Citie by the commandement of King Edward the Firſt. Who out of the ruines of this towne, at the ſame time raiſed the Citie Caer-narvon ſome what higher, upon the rivers mouth, ſo, as that on the Weſt and North-ſides it is watered therewith. Which, as it was called Caer-narvon becauſe it ſtandeth right over againſt the Iſland Mona (for ſo much doth the word import) ſo, it hath communicated that named unto the whole Country; for, heereupon the Engliſh men call it Caer-narvon-ſhire. This is encompaſſed with a verie ſmall circuite of walles about it and in manner round, but the ſame exceeding ſtrong, and to ſet it the better out, ſheweth a paſſing faire Caſtle which taketh up the whole Weſt ſide of it. The private buildings (for the manner of that Country) are ſightly enough, and the inhabitants for their courteſie much commended, who thinke it a point of their glorie,

E Caer-narvon
F

A glorie, that King Edward the First, founded their City; that his sonne King Edward the Second was heere borne and surnamed of Caer-narvon; who also was of the English line the first Prince of Wales; and also the Princes of Wales had heere their Chaunterie, their Exchequer, and their Iustice for North-Wales. About seven miles hence by the same narrow sea standeth Bangor or Banchor low seated, enclosed on the South side with a mountaine of great heigth, on the North with a little hill: so called A choro pulchro, that is, of a faire quire, or as some would haue it, quasi Locus Chori, that is, as if it were the place of a quire. Which beeing a Bishops See, hath within the Diocese thereof 96. parishes. The Church, was consecrated unto Daniel sometime Bishop thereof: but that which now standeth is of no especiall faire building: for, Owen Glendoverdwy that most notorious rebell, who had purposed utterly to destroy all the Cities of Wales, set it on fire, for that they stood for the King of England, & defaced, the ancient Church, which albeit of Henry Deney Bishop of the same repaired about the time of King Henry the Seventh, yet it scarcely recovered the former dignity. Now the towne is small, but in times past so large, that for the greatnesse thereof it was called Banchor Vaur, that is, Great Banchor and Hugh Earle of Chester fortified it with a Castle, whereof I could finde no footings at all, though I sought them withal diligent inquiery: But that castle was situate upon the verie entry of the said narrow sea. Over the Menay, or streight hereby, King Edward the First, that hee might transport his army into Mona, or Anglesey (whereof I must treat anon in due order) went about with great labor to make a bridg, but al in vaine. Albeit, Suetonius Paulinus conveighed over his Romane soldiors long before into Mona, his horsemen at a fourd, and the footemen in little flat botomed boates, as we read in Tacitus. From hence the shore raising it self with a bending ascent, runneth on by Penmaen-maur, that is, the great stony head, a very exceeding high & steepe rock, which hanging over the sea when it is floud, affourdeth a very narrow path way for passengers, having on the one side huge stones, over their heads, as if they were ready to fall upon them, on the other side the raging Ocean lying of a wonderfull steepe depth under it. But after a man hath passed over this, together with Pen-maen bychan, that is, the lesser stony head, he shall come to an open broad plaine, that reacheth as farre as to the the river Conwey, which limiteth this shire on the East side. This river in Ptolomee after a corrupt manner of writing Greeke, is called TOISOVIVS, for CONOVIVS. It issueth out of a poole of the same name in the South border of the shire, and beeing pent in, and, as it were, strangled runneth apace with in a very narrow chanell, as farre almost as to the mouth thereof, breeding certaine shelfishes, which being conceived of an heavenly deaw, bring forth pearles; and thereof giveth hee name unto the towne CONOVIVM which Antonine mentioneth. And although it now lie al along, & that name there be utterly extinct, yet by a new name it doth covertly implie the antiquity. For a very smal and poore village standing among the rubbish thereof is called Caer hean, that is, the ancient City. Out of the spoile and ruines whereof, King Edward the First built a new towne at the very mouth of the river, which thereupon they call Aber-Conwey, that is, the Mouth of Con-wey; which place Hugh of Chester had before time fortified. But this New Conovium, or Aber-Conwey, being strongly situated and fensed both with wals, & also with a very proper castle by the rivers side, deserveth the name rather of a prety City than of a towne, but that it is not repleni shed with inhabitants.

Banchor as one would say Penchor that is, a principall Quire as others thinke.

The life of Gruffin.

Pen. maen maur.

Conwey river.

Perles.

Conwey towne.

Opposite unto this towne, and yet on this side of the river which is passed by ferry, and not by bridge, reacheth out a huge Promontory with a bending elbow (as if nature purposed to make there a road and harbour for ships) which is also counted part of this shire, and is named Gogarth: wherein stood Diganwy, an ancient City just over the river Conwey, where it issueth into the sea: which was burnt many yeeres ago with lightning. And I am of opinion, that it was the City DICTVM; where, under the later Emperours the Captaine over the band of the Nervians Dictenses kept their gard. And for that, afterwards it was called Diganwy, who seeth not that the said Ganwey came of Conwey, and from thence the English name Ganoc?

Gogarth.

Dictum.

Diganwy. Ganoc.

For, ſo was that Caſtle called, which afterwards King Henry the Third built in that A place to bridle the Welſh.

Streight after the Normans comming into this Iſland, Gruffin Ap Conan, governed this Country, who being not able to repreſſe the Engliſh troupes who ſwarmed into Wales, yeelded otherwhiles unto the tempeſt: and at length when with his integrity and uprightneſſe he had regained the favour of King Henry the Firſt, he eaſily alſo recovered his owne lands of the Engliſh, and left them to his heires ſucceſ-ſiuely, untill the time of Lhewelyn ap Gruffith, who when he had provoked his owne brethren with wrongs, and the Engliſhmen with inrodes, was brought to this paſſe, that hee held this hilly Country together with the Iſle Angleſey of King Edward B the Firſt as Tenant in Fee, and paied for it yeerely a thouſand Markes. Which conditions afterward when hee would not ſtand unto, and following rather his owne and his brothers ſtubburne wilfulneſſe, than any good hope to prevaile, would needes put all once againe to the hazard of warre, he was ſlaine, and ſo both ended his owne life and withall the Britiſh government in Wales.

C

It hath in it pariſh Churches . 68.

D

Conwey river.

THE Tydes.

Conwey
towne.

E

Cogarth.

F

Diganwy.

Diganwy Caſtle.

THE IRISH SEA.

MONA INSVLA Vulgo ANGLESEY.

TALYBOLLION HUNDRED TWRKESYN HUND.
LLYFON HUNDR.
MALL TRAETH HUND.
MENEY TYNDAYTHWY HUN.
BAN GOR HUNDR.
Newburgh Caiernarvan
Milliaria Anglica.
Milliaria Germanica.

MONA INSVLA: Vulgo THE ISSE OF MAN.

THE IRISH SEA.
Milliaria Anglica.
Milliaria Germanica.

PART OF ENGLAND.

THE IRISH SEA.

THE OCEAN

THE EAST MEDYNE
THE WEST MEDYNE

VECTIS INSVLA Anglice THE ISSE OF WIGHT.

Milliaria Anglica.
Milliaria Germanica.

Amstelodami
Apud Ioannem Iansonium.

A

THE ISLE MONA, or of ANGLESEY.

B THE county of Caer-Nar-von, which I last ranne through, tooke name as I said erewhile, of the chiefe towne therin: and the said towne, of the Isle Mona which lieth over against it: and requireth, as it were of right, that I should treat of it in his due place, which unwillingly heeretofore (I confesse) I referred to the out Ilands: whereas, by right it is to be placed among the Shires. This Isle called of the Romans MONA, of the Britans Mon, and Tir-Mon, that is, the land of Mon, and Ynis Dowil, that is, A shadowy or darke Island, of the ancient Anglo-Saxons Monez, and at last, after that the Englishmen became Lords of it Englefea, and Anglesey, as one would say, The Englishmens Iland, being severed from the continent of Britaine with the small narrow streight of Menai, and on all parts besides beatten upon with that surging and troublous Irish sea, C lieth in forme unequall; in length from East to West reaching out twenty miles, in bredth scarce 17. And albeit, as Giraldus saith, the ground may seeme dry and stony nothing sightly and unpleasant, and for the outward quality resembleth wholy the land Pebidiauc, that lieth hard unto Saint Davids: yet for the inward gift of nature, it is far unlike. For, above all the coasts of Wales it is without comparison most plentifull of wheat, in so much as by way of a Proverbe they are wont to say of it in the Welsh language, Mon Mam Cymbry, which is as much in English, As Mon is the mother of Wales: because when all other countries round about doe faile, this alone with the exceeding fat soile, and plentifull encrease of corne was wont to sustaine all Wales. In cattaile also it is passing D rich, and sendeth out great multitudes. It yeeldeth also grind-stones, & in some place an earth standing upon Alum; out of which some not long since beganne to make Alum and Coperose. But when they saw it not answerable to their expectation at first, without any farther hope they gave over their enterprise.

Mona. Angleffey.

This is that most notable Isle MONA, the ancient seat of the Druides, attempted first by Paulinus Suetonius, and brought under the Roman Empire by Iulius Agricola. This Suetonius Paulinus under the reigne of Nero, as Tacitus writeth, made all preparation to invade the Isle Mona inhabited by strong and stout nation, & then the receptable of fugitives. He built Flat-bottom vessels, because the sea is shalow, the landing-shore uncertaine. Thus their footmen passed over, and after them the horsemen following by the shallow fourd, or swimming where the waters were deepe with their horses. Against them stood the enemies armies on the shore thicke set in aray, well appointed with men and weapon, and women also running in, too and fro among them, like furies of hell, in mourning attire, their haire about their eares, and with firebrands in their hands. Round about them also were the Druides, who lifting up their hands to heaven and powring out dreadly curses, with the strangenesse of the sight, so daunted the souldours, as they stood stark still, and not able to stire their joints presented their bodies unto wounds. At length, what with the exhortation of their Captaine, and what with encouraging and animating one another not to feare a flocke of frantick women, and fanaticall persons, they displaied and advanced forward their Ensignes: Downe they goe with all in their way, and thrust them within their owne fires. Which done, garisons were placed in their townes, and the groves consecrated to their cruell superstitions cut downe: For they accompted it lawfull to sacrifice with the bloud of captives, and by inspection of mens intrailes and howells to know the will of their Gods. But as Paulinus was busie in these exploits, newes came unto Druides.

him

him of a ſudden revolt through the whole province, which ſtayed his enterpriſe. After- A wards, as the ſame Tacitus writeth, Iulius Agricola, purpoſed with himſelfe to ſub- due the Iland Mona, from the poſſeſſion whereof, as I ſaid before Paulinus was revoked by a generall rebellion of all Britaine: But (as in a purpoſe not prepenſed before) veſſells being wanting, the policie and reſoluteneſſe of the Captaine diviſed a paſſage over, cau-ſing the moſt choiſe of the Auxiliaries, to whom all the ſhallowes were knowen, and who after the uſe of their country were able in ſwimming to governe themſelves with their armour and horſes; laying aſide there carriage, to put over at once and ſuddenly to invade them. Which thing ſo amazed the enemies who ſuppoſed they would paſſe over by ſhipping and therefore attended for a fleet, and the tide, that they beleeved verily nothing could bee hard or invincible to men that came ſo reſolute to warre. Whereupon they B humbly entreated for peace and yeelded the Iland. Thus by this ſervice Agricola became famous indeed, and of great reputation.

Many ages after, it was conquered by the Engliſhmen, and tooke their name, as being called in old time in the Saxons language Englej-ea, now commonly Angleſey, as one would ſay, The Engliſhmens Iland. But ſeeing that Humfrey Lhuid in a very learned Epiſtle to that learned Ortelius, hath reſtored this Iland to the due name and dignity, there is no reaſon that any man heere ſhould require my diligence. Yet thus much will I adde unto the reſt. When the Empire of the Romans in Britaine now was in declining and going downward, ſome out of Ireland, entred in by ſtealth into this Iſle alſo and neſtled there. For, beſides certaine mounts of earth entrenched C about, which they call the Iriſhmens cotages, there is a place alſo, named Yn Hericy Gwidil of the Iriſhmen, who as we find it recorded in the booke of Triades, under the leading of Sirigus, put the Britans to flight in that place.

Neither was it grievouſly infeſted onely by the Engliſhmen, but alſo by the Norvegians. Likewiſe in the yeere of our redemption 1000. King Aethelreds fleet having skoured the ſeas round about the ſaid Iſle, waſted it in all hoſtile maner. After this, the two Norman Hughes, the one Earle of Cheſter, and the other Earle of Shrewsburie greatly afflicted it, and built Caſtle Aber-Llieniog for to reſtraine and keepe under the Inhabitants. But Magnus the Norwegian arriving heere at the D very ſame time, ſhot the ſaid Hugh Earle of Shrewsbury through with an arrow, and after hee had ranſacked the Iland, departed. The Engliſhmen moreover afterward from time to time invaded it, untill that King Edward the firſt brought it wholly under his ſubjection. There were in ancient time reckoned in it 363. Villages, and even at this day it is well peopled. The principall towne therein at this time is Beaumariſh, which King Edward the firſt built in the Eaſt-ſide of the Iſle upon a mariſh ground, and for the ſituation thereof gave it this goodly faire name, whereas before time it was called Bonover, who alſo fortified it with a caſtle, which notwithſtanding may ſeeme never to have beene finiſhed: the governour whereof is E the right worſhipfull Sir Richard Bulkley Knight, whoſe courteſie toward me when I came to viſite theſe places, I cannot chuſe but evermore acknowledge with moſt hearty thankfulneſſe.

Lhan-vays. Hard unto Beau-Mariſh, lieth Lhan-vays, a famous religious houſe in times paſt of the Friers Minors, unto whom the Kings of England ſhewed themſelves very bountifull Patrons, as well in regard of the Friers holineſſe, who there converſed, as alſo becauſe there (that I may ſpeake out of the publicke records of the Kingdome) 2. Pars Pat. anno 2. H. 5. were buried, a daughter of King Iohn, a ſonne of the King of the Danes, the bodies alſo of the Lord Clifford, and of other Lords, Knights, and Squires, who in the time of the noble and renowned Kings of England, were ſlaine in the warres againſt the Welſh. F

Newburg. The next town in name to Beau-Mariſh, is Newburg called in Britiſh Roſſur ſtanding ten miles off Weſtward, which having bin a long time greatly annoyed with heaps of ſand driven in by the ſea, complaineth that it hath loſt much of the former ſtate that it had. Aber-fraw. Aber-fraw is not far from hence, which is now but an obſcure & meane towne,

A towne, yet in times past it excelled all the rest farre in worth and dignity, as having beene the Royall seat of the Kings of Guineth, or North-wales. And in the utmost Promontorie Westward, which wee call Holy-head, there standeth a little poore towne, in British Caer-Guby so named of Kibie a right holy man, and a disciple of S. Hilarie of Poitiers, who therein devoted himselfe to the service of God, and from whence there is an usuall passage over into Ireland. All the rest of this Iland is well bespred with villages, which because they have in them nothing materially memorable, I will crosse over into the Continent, and view

Holy-head.
Saint Kibie.

As touching the Ilands adjoining to Anglesey, See among the British Iles.

B Denbigh-shire.

C

D In this County there are reckoned Parishes 74.

DENBIGH-

E

F

town, yet in these parts it excelled all the rest here in worth and dignity, as having been the Royall seat of the Kings of Gwineth, or North-wales. And in the time of Promontorie Wetlwad, which we call Holy-head, there flanded a little poore towne, in Irish Caer-Gybi so named of Abbe a right holy man, and a disciple of S. Hilare of Poitiers, who therein devoted himselfe to the service of God, and from whence there is an usuall passage over into Ireland. All the rest of this Iland is well peopled with villages, which because they have in them nothing materially memorable, I will crosse over into the Continent, and view Denbigh-shire.

DENBIGH-

VIRGIVVM SIVE HIBERNICVM

MARE

SEPTENTRIO

FLINT

Ormshedd point

Penrin

Llandrighlo

Llandidno

Eglos rosse

Llangustennyn

Llanddlas

Dasart

Llasanfraid

Llanelian

Aberconwy

CAR

Conovium

Caierheanc

Llanbederkethyn

Eglos

Melendyder flu:

Vagh

NARYNYDULYN

Manaich

Llangirnew

Llathiged

Llanrust

Treuerue

Llyn coulwid

Gwider

Llanrughwen

Llyngerioneth

OCCIDENS

VAN

Llegoyc flu:

Capel bettus Frion ython

Capelgarmon

Llanpen maghno

PARS

Conwy flu:

Llyn Conwy

Cloyd flu:

Hendray

Abergele

Llansannan shore

Cap Funhownuaier

Bottas

Elwy flu:

Foxholes

DENBIGH

Llanusyd

Llanuaier

Aled fluuius

Llansannan

Barrog

Gwetheryn

Llyn aled

Nanclin

Strad flu:

Llanrwst

Bach

Clawdock fluuius

Capel k

Alwen fluuius

Clwyd flu:

Llankeridgedredion

Llanyhangle

Ncog flu:

Capel pentreuidog

Holyn

Tiberion

Ysspity cuan

Llanaum

Grrow flu:

MERIONETH

Llanderuel gadern

Bala

Dee flu:

Llyn tegid

Scala Miliarum

Christophorus Saxtō descripsit

Wihelmus Lip Sculpsit

MERIDIES

DENBIGH
Comitatus pars
Olim
ORDOVICVM

CES: TRIÆ Chester
DEVA LE:
IO XX Caicrwis Skiftinen Wheler flu:
Dee flu:
Eckleston
Eaton
PARS Nannarch
Kilken
PARS
Broughton Sodleston
Pulford
Aldforde
Clwyd flu:
Llanganhaual:
Llanuerres
Llanhichan
Moythmille hill
Llanbeder
Bathauern
Llanruth Llanarmon
Trethyn
Llanuaier
Veneghtid Llanelidan Broyngloys
Llangwaft ab:
Gowyced delwern Llansanfraid
Dote Corwen
Llanger
Llanarmon defrune keriog
Keriog flu:
Llanarmon
Ryader flu:
Llanriader Amoughnant
Tauot flu:
MONTGO:
PARS
Abbey Cwmhir
The Molde Darlandgrene
Alen Pulton chap:
Trewyglen
Almere
Fernton
Capel Nergoyes
Merford
Greseford
Holt pk:
Holt castle
Tilston
Shokledge
Trethyn
Pentrocken
Whrexham
Capel Iscoid Gwenurow flu:
Abenburye
Bers
Capel Moynglath
Hauotawern
Worthenbury
Clawdok flu:
Place Cadogan Markwell
Banger
Egluyseg
Castle denas brayn
Christionedh flu:
Byfiok
FLINT Ruabon
Orton madok
Llangollen
PARS
Didleston chap:
Pengwerne
Newhall
Chirk
Chirk cast
Martyn
Llansanfraid inglyn Morlas flu:
SALO: Selattyn Llansyllyn Llancadwalater
PIÆ Oswestre
Plate ycha
PARS Llangedwin ORIENS

A

DENBIGH-SHIRE.

ON this side of the river Conwey, DENBIGH-SHIRE, in Welch Sire Denbigh, retyreth more within the country from the Sea, and shooteth Eastward in one place as farre as to the river Dee. On the North North-west, first the the Sea for a small space, and then Flintshire, on the West Merionith and Montgomery shires, on the East Cheshire, and Shropshire incompasse it. The West part is barraine, the middle, where it lieth flat in a vally, most fruitfull. The East side when it is once past the valley, hath not nature so favourable unto it, but next unto Dee, it findeth her farre more kind.

B

The West part, but that it is somewhat more plentifull and pleasant toward the sea side, is but heere and there inhabited, and mounteth vp more with bare and hungry hils: but yet the painfull diligence and witty industrie of the husbandmen hath begunne a good while since to overcome this leanesse of the soi'e, where the hils settle any thing flattish, as in other parts of Wales likewise. For, after they have with a broad kind of spade pared away the upper coat, as it were, or ford of the earth,
C into certaine turfes, they pile them up artificially on heapes, put fire to them and burne them to ashes, which being throwen upon the ground so pared, and flayed, causeth the hungry barainnesse thereof so to fructifie, that the fields bring forth a kind of Rhie or Amel corne in such abundance as it is incredible. Neither is this a new devise thus to burne ground, but very ancient, as we may see in Virgil and Horace. Among these hilles there is a place commonly called Cerigy Druidon, that is, The stones of the Druidæ, and certaine little columnes or pillers are seene at Yvoellas, with inscriptions in them of strange characters, which some imagine to have beene erected by the Druides: and not farre from Clocainog, this Inscription is red in a stone.

D

AMIDLIN TOVISATOC.

By the vale side where these mountaines beginne now to wax thinner, upon the hanging of a rocke standeth Denbigh, called of our Britans by a more ancient name, Cled Fryn-yn Rosse, that is, A rough hillin Rosse, for so they call that part of the Shire: which King Edward the First gave with other faire lands and possessions to David the brother of Lhewellin. But when hee soone after being found guilty of high treason was beheaded, Henrie Lacie Earle of Lincolne obtained it by the grant of the said
E King Edward: and he fortified it with a wall about, not large in circuit, but strong, and on the Southside with a proper castle, strengthned with high towres. In the well whereof, after that his onely sonne fortuned to be drowned, the most sorrowfull father conceiued such griefe, that hee gave over the worke and left it unfinished. And after his death, the towne with the rest of the possessions descended unto the house of Lancaster by his daughter Alice, who survived: From whom notwithstanding it came first through the liberality of King Edward the Second (when the said house was deiected) unto Hugh Spenser Earle of Winchester; then, to Roger Mortimer by covenant and composition with King Edward the Third: and the said
F Mortimers Armes are to be seene upon the chiefe gate. But after that he was executed, it with the Cantreds of Rosse, and Rieuinoc &c. were granted to William Montacute after Earle of Salisbury, for suppressing of Mortimer, and shortly after it was restored unto the Mortimers, and by them at length descended to the family of Yorke. At which time, they of the house of Lancaster for the malice they bare unto Edward the fourth, who was of the family of Yorke, did much hurt unto it. And then, either because becauſe the inhabitants like not the ſteep ſituation therof(for the cariage up & down A was very incommodious) or by reaſon that it wanted water, they remoued downe from thence by little and little, ſo as that this ancient towne hath now few or none dwelling in it: But a new one farre bigger than it ſprung up at the very foote of the hill: which is ſo well peopled and inhabited, that by reaſon, that the Church is not able to receiue the multitude, they beganne to build a new one in the place where the old towne ſtood, partly at the charges of their Lord Robert Earle of Leiceſter, and partly with the mony which they have gathered of many well diſpoſed throughout England: For, the ſaid Robert, in the yeere 1564. was created by Queene Eli- zabeth Baron of Denbigh, to him and the heires of his body lawfully begotten. Nei- B ther is there any one Baronie in all England that hath more gentlemen holding thereof in fee, and by ſervice.

Denbigh.

Diffrin Cluid. Now are we come into the very hart of the ſhire, where Nature having removed the hilles out of the way on both ſides, to ſhew what ſhe could doe in a rough country, hath ſpred beneath them a moſt beautifull pleaſant vale reaching 17. miles in length from South to North, and five miles or thereabout in bredth, which lieth open one-ly toward the ſea and the cleering North wind: otherwiſe environed it is on every ſide with high hilles, and thoſe from the Eaſtſide, as it were embatled. For ſuch is the wonderfull workmanſhip of nature, that the tops of theſe mountaines reſemble in faſhion the battlements of walles. Among which the higheſt is Moilnlly, on the C top whereof I ſaw a warlicke fenſe with trench and rampier; alſo a little fountaine of cleere water. This vale for wholſomeneſſe, fruitfulneſſe and pleaſantneſſe excel-leth. The colour and complexion of the inhabitants is healthy, their heads are ſound and of a firme conſtitution, their eie ſight continuing, and never dimme and their age long laſting and very cheerefull. The vale it ſelfe, with his greene meddowes, yellow corne-fields, villages, and faire houſes ſtanding thicke, & many beautifull Churches, giveth wonderfull great contentment to ſuch as behold it from aboue. The river Cluid, encreaſed with beckes and brookes reſorting unto it from the hilles on each ſide, doth from the very ſpring-head part it in twaine running through the midſt of it, whence in ancient time it was named Strat Cluid; For, Marianus ma- D keth mention of a King of the Strat-Clud of the Welſh: and at this day it is commonly called Diff yn Cluid, that is, The vale of Cluid: wherein, as ſome have recorded, certaine Britans which came out of Scotland, after they had driven forth the Engliſh, erected a pettie Kingdome. On the Eaſt banke of Cluid, in the South part of the vale, ſtandeth Ruthin in Latin writers Ruthunia, in Britiſh Ruthun, the greateſt market Cluid-river. towne in all the vale, full of inhabitants, and well repleniſhed with buildings; famous alſo not long ſince by reaſon of a large & very faire Caſtle able to receiue and entertaine a great houſhold. Which with the towne, Reginald Grey to whom King Edward the Firſt granted it, and Roger Grey built, having obtained licence of the King, the Biſhop of Saint Aſaph, and the parſon of the Church of Lhan-Ruth, in E whoſe pariſh the place is ſited. Unto him in recompenſe for his part of the good ſer-vice performed againſt rhe Welſh King Edward the Firſt had given in maner the whole vale: and it was the ſeat of his heires, men of great honor; and at length ſtiled with the title of Earle of Kent, untill that Richard Grey Earle of Kent and L. of Ruthin having no iſſue nor care of his brother Henrie, paſſed away for a ſum of mony this his ancient inheritance unto King Henrie the Seventh: But of late daies the bounteous magnificence of Queene ELIZABETH beſtowed it upon Ambroſe Dudley Earle of Warwicke, together with rich revenewes in the Vale.

When you aſcend out of the vale Eaſtward, you come to Yale, a little hilly country, and in compariſon of the regions beneath and round about it paſſing high, ſo F that no river from elſwhere commeth into it, & it ſendeth forth ſome from it. By reaſon of this high ſituation it is bleake, as expoſed to the winds on all ſides. Whether it tooke that name of the riveret Alen, which riſing firſt in it, undermineth the ground and once or twice hideth himſelfe, I know not. The mountaines are full of neat, ſheepe, and goats: the vallies in ſome places plenteous enough of corne, eſpecially

Eaſtward,

A East, on this side of Alen. But the more Westerly part is not so fruitfull, and in some places is a very heath, and altogither barraine. Neither hath it any thing memorable, saue onely a little Abbay, now wholy decaied, but standing most richly and pleasantly in a vale, which among the woody hils cutteth it selfe overthwart in maner of a crosse, whereupon it was called in Latin Vallis Crucis, that is, the vale of the Crosse, and in British Lhane-Gwest. Valle Crucis. Vale of the Crosse.

From hence more Eastward, the territory called in Welsh Mailor Gymraig, that is, Welsh Mailor, in English Bromfield, reacheth as far as to the river Dee. A smal territory, but verie rich & pleasant, plentiful withal of lead, especially nere unto Moinglath,
B a little towne which tooke the name of mines. Heere is Wrexham to bee seene, in the Saxons togne Wpıttlej-ham, much spoken of for a passing faire towre steeple that the Church hath, and the Musical Organs that be therein. And nere unto it is Leonis Castrum, happily so called of the twenty Legion denominated Victrix, which a little higher on the other banke of Dee lay garrisoned: now it goeth commonly under the name of Holt: and is thought to haue beene re-edified of late by Sir William Stanley, and long since by Iohn Earle of Warren, who being a guardian of trust unto Madock a Welsh Lord, conveighed falsly from his ward, this Lordship togither with Yale unto himselfe. But from the Earles of Warren, it came unto the Fitz-Alans Earles of Arundel, and from them to Sir William Beauchamp Baron of Abergeven-
C ney, and afterward to Sir William Stanley Chamberlane to King Henry the Seventh, who contesting with his soveraigne about his good services (when hee was honorably recompensed) lost his head, forgetting that soueraignes must not bee beholding to subjects, how soever subiects fancy their owne good services. Lead. Wrexham. Holt. *

Beneath Bromfield, Southward lieth Chirke, in Welsh Gwain, being also very hilly, but wel knowne in elder ages for two Castles, Chirk, which gaue it the name, built by Roger Mortimer, and Castle Dinas Bran, situate in the hanging of a mighty high hill pointed in the top: where of note there remaineth nothing but the very ruines. The common sort affirme, that Brennius the Generall of the Galles both built and so
D named it: others interpret the name to this sense, The Castle of the Kings palace. For, Bren in British signifieth a King: whence perhaps that most puissant King of Gaules and Britans both, was by way of excellency called Brennus: But others againe draw this name from the high situation upon an hill, which the Britans terme Bren, and in mine opinion this their conjecture carrieth with it more probability. In the time of King Henry the Third, it was the mansion place of Gruffith ap Madoc, who when hee tooke part with the English against the Welsh, was wont heere to make his abode: but after his death, Roger Mortimer who had the charge and tuition of his sonne Lhewellin, like as Iohn Earle of Warren, of whom I spake seized Bromfield; so he seised also this Chirck, into his possession. Chirke. Castle Dinas Bran. Bren. Brennus.

E When the state of the Welsh by reason of their owne civill dissensions, and the invasions of English, now ready to ruine, could not well subsist, The Earles of Chester and of Warren, the Mortimers, Lacy, and the Greies, that I spake of, first of all the Normans brought this little Country of Denbigh by little and little into their owne hands and left possession thereof to their heires. Neither was it made a shire before King Henry the Eighth his daies: at which time Radnor, Brechnock and Montgomerie, by authority of the Parliament were ordained to be shires.

F

In this shire there be Parishes 57.

Vale Crucis, Vale of the Croile.

Lead, Wrexham.

Hole.

*

Chirke.

Castle Dinas Bran.

Bren. Brennus.

SEPTENTRIO

VIRGINIVM SIVE

HIBERNIAE MA

RE

DEN

BIGH PA

PARS

MERIONETH

MERIDE

FLINT

DIFFRIEN

Gronant Talacre Prestin Meliden Gulgraue
Mostyn
Treer east
Gwenfkor Llanasaphe Dyffart Rhuflnoyde
Basingwark
Whitford
Pottrichan
Rudland east
Combe Holiwell
Hendray
Caerwis Cornyfh Llandulas Abergele
St. Asaph Llanfhanfhore
Mayfmynan
Haulk in Demyrchion
Maghegreg
Vars Potuary Kiniog
Wheler flu
Cap Funhown water
Bettas Llewency
Llangwinen
Nannarch
Henllan
Foxholes
Denbigh
Whitchurch Llandurnog
Kilken
Llanganhaual
Llanunnus Llanbichan Llanuerres
Llanrayder Bachimbid
Moyfarille hill
Llanarmon
Ruthin
Bodc
Clawedok flu
Hifpyn flu
Clwyd flu
Manyan flu
Alun flu
Alen flu
S. Iyn Aled
Aled flu
Scala Miliarium
1 2 3 4 5
Christophorus Saxton descripsit
Wilhelmus Kip Sculpsit
Llandderuel gadern
Bala

FLINT

Comitatus quem
ORDOVICES
olim Incoluerunt

CESTRIÆ

ORIENS

PARS

PARS

PARS

SALOPIÆ PARS

Shotwick
Shotwick caſt:
Chester
DEVA LEGIO XX
Dee flu.
Eckleſton
Hawerden caſt:
Yowley hall
Bretton
Eaton
Broughton
Alaſorde
Sodleſton
Pulforde Horſheath
Alen fluuius
Darland grene
Alen
Molde Treuealen
Almere
Pulton chap:
Capel Nergoyes
Merford
Fernton
Holt Tilſton Greſſeforde Trethyn
Holt caſt:
Tagaddy flu:
Pentiocken
Capell Iſcoid
Shok lidge Maples
Gwenurow flu
Bers
Abenbury
Capell moynglath
Wrexham
Worthenbury
Olt caſt:
Nether droitwich Clawedok flu:
Markwicll
Emberhall Willymon
Ouer droitwich
Place cadagan
Banger
Eſcoyde hall
Chriſtioneth flu:
Ruabon
Byſtok
Whitwell chap:
Whitchurch
Penley chapl:
Pens hall
Orton madok
Hanmer Tyſſtok
Dee flu:
Didleſton chap:
Haulton
New hall
Chirk Chirk caſt:
Bottesley
Marton
Welſhe hamton
Elſmere Morlas flu:

A

FLINT-SHIRE.

RIght over against Denbigh-shire North-east ward lieth FLINT-SHIRE, a small territory, more in length than in bredth: hemmed in on the North-side with the Irish-sea, or rather with an arme of the same: on the East with Cheshire, on other parts with Denbigh-shire. It is no
B mountain Country to speake of, yet rising somewhat with the bearing up of hilles, and gently falleth and sloopeth it selfe downe with fruitfull fields, which towards the sea, especially every first yeere that they bee new broken uppe and sowne, beare in some places barley, in others wheat, but generallie throughout rie with twenty fold increase and better, and afterwards foure or fiue crops together of otes.

In the Confines of this shire and Denbigh-shire where the hils grow more flat and plaine with a softer fall, and an easier descent downe into the vale, in the verie gullet and entry thereof, the Romans placed a little Citie named VARIS, which Varis.
C Antonine the Emperour placeth nineteene miles from CONOVIVM. This without Bod-vari. any maime of the name is called at this day Bod-Vari, that is, Mansion Vari, and the next little hill hard by which the inhabitants there about commonly call Moyly Gaer, that is, The Mountaine of the City, sheweth the footings of a City in deed, that hath beene destroied. But what the name should signifie it appeereth not. I for my part haue beene of opinion else where, that Varia in the old British language signified a Passage, and accordingly haue interpreted these words Durnovaria and Isannavaria, The passage of a water, and the passage of Isanna. And for this opinion of mine maketh well the situation of VARIS in that place where only there lieth open an easie passage betwixt the hils. And not three miles from hence standeth Caer-
D wisk, the name whereof although it maketh some shew of antiquity, yet found I no- Caer-wisk. thing ancient there, nor worth the obseruation.

Beneath this VARIS, or Bodvari, in the vale glideth Cluid, and streightwaies Elwy a little riveret conioineth it selfe with it, where there is a Bishops see. This place the Britans call, according to the riuer Llan-Elwy, the Englishmen of Asaph Saint Asaph. the Patron thereof Saint Asaph. And the Historiographers, Asaphensis. Neither is the towne for any beauty it hath, nor the Church for building or braverie memorable: yet some thing would bee said of it, in regard of antiquity.

For, about the yeere of our redemption 560. Kentigern Bishop of Glasco, bee- Capgraue. ing fled hither out of Scotland placed heere a Bishops See, and erected a monaste-
I rie, having gathered together sixe hundred three score and three in a religious brotherhood. Whereof three hundred beeing unlearned did giue themselues to husbandry, and as many moe to worke and labour within the monasterie, the rest to diuine service. Whom hee divided so by Covents, that some of them should continually giue attendance in the Church to the service of God. But when hee returned into Scotland, hee ordained Asaph a most Godly and upright man gouernour over this monasterie, of whom it tooke the name which now it hath. The Bishop of this See hath under his iurisdiction about 128. parishes, the Ecclesiastical benefices whereof, were wont to bee bestowed, when the See was voide by J the Archbishop of Canterbury, without interruption untill the time of King Henry the Eighth, and that by his Archiepiscopall right, which now is counted a regality. For so we read in the history of Canterbury.

Aboue this, Ruthlan, taking the name of the ruddy and red banke of Cluid, on which Ruthlan. it stands, maketh a good shew with a Castle, but now almost consumed by very age.

Lhewellin Ap Sisil Prince of Wales, first built it; and Robert surnamed de Ruthland, Nephew of Hugh Earle of Chester, was the first that by force wonne it from the Welsh, as beeing Captaine Lieutenant to the said Hugh, who fortified it with new workes, and bulwarkes: Afterward (as Rob. Abbat de Monte hath written) King Henry the Second, when hee had repaired this Castle gaue it unto Hugh Beauchamp. A

Beneath this, Cluid straightwaies emptieth it selfe into the sea; And albeit the valley at the very mouth seemeth to carrie a lower levell and to lie under the sea, yet the water never overfloweth into the vale; but as it were, by a naturall obstacle, staieth within the very brinkes of the shore, not without the exceeding great admiration of Gods providence. From hence the shore tending by little and little Eastward, shooteth forward first by Disart Castle, so called because it was situate on the rising of a cliffe, or as some would haue it, as it were Desert: then by Basing werke, which also King Henry the Second granted unto Hugh Beauchamp. B

Basing-Werk.

Beneath this, we saw the little towne Haly-well, as one would say Holy well, where there is that fountaine frequented by Pilgrimes for the memoriall of the Christian Virgin Winefride, ravished there perforce and beheaded by a tyrane, as also for the mosse there growing of a most sweet and pleasant smell. Out of which well there gusheth forth a brooke among stones, which represent bloudy spottes upon them; and it carrieth so violent a streame that presently it is able to driue a mill. Over the very well there standeth a Chappell built of stone right curiously wrought, whereunto adjoineth a little Church, in a window whereof is portraied and set out the history of the said Winifride, how her head was cut off, and set on againe by Saint Benno. Nere unto this place in the time of Giraldus, who yet knew not this well, there was, as him selfe writeth, a rich veine and gainefull mine of silver, where men in seeking after silver pierced and pried into the very bowels of the Earth. C

Haly-well. Saint Winefrid.

This part of the Country, because it smileth so pleasantly upon the beholders with a beautifull shew, and was long since subject unto Englishmen, the Welsh named Tec-Engle, that is, Faire England. But whereas one hath termed it Tegenia, and thought that the Igeni there planted themselues, take heede I advise you, that you bee not overhasty to beleeue him. Certes, the name of the Iceni wrong put downe heere deceived the good man. Then upon the shore, you may see Flint Castle, which King Henry the Second beganne, and King Edward the First finished: and it gaue the name unto this shire: where King Richard the Second circumvented by them who should haue beene most trusty, was cunningly induced to renounce the crowne as vnable for certaine defectes to rule; and was delivered into the hands of Henry of Lancaster Duke of Hereford, who soone after claimed the Kingdome and crowne beeing then voide by his cession, as his inheritance descended from King Henry the third, and to this his deviſed claime the Parliament assented, and he was established in the kingdome. After Flint by the East border of the shire, nere to Cheshire, standeth Hawarden commonly called Harden-Castle, not far from the shore; out of which when David Lhewelins brother had led away prisoner, Roger Clifford, Iustice of Wales, hee raised there by a most bloudy warre against himselfe and his people, wherein the Princedome of the Welsh nation was utterly overthrowne. But this castle anciently holden by the Seneschalship of the Earles of Chester, was the seat of the Barons de Mount-hault, who grew up to a most honorable familie, and gaue for their Armes in A shield Azure a Lion rampant Argent: and bettered their dignity and estate by marriage with Cecilie one of the coheires of Hugh D'Albiney Earle of Arundell. But in the end, for default of male issue Robert the last Baron of this race, made it over as I haue said already, to Isabel Queene of England wife to King Edward the Second. Howbeit the possession of the Castle was transferred afterward to the Stanleys, now Earles of Darbie. C D E F

Flint.

Harden.

Barons of Mont-hault. Or De monte Alto.

Through the South part of this shire lying beneath these places aboue named, wande-

A wandereth Alen a little riuer: neere vnto which in a hill hard by Kilken, a small village, otherie is a well, the water whereof at certaine set times riseth and falleth, after the manner of the sea tides. Vpon this Alen, standeth Hope Castle in Welsh Caer-Gurle, in which King Edward the First retired himselfe when the Welshmen had vpon the sodaine set vpon his soldiers being out of array: and where good milstones are wrought out of the rocke: also, Mold, in Welsh Guid Cruc a castle, belonging in ancient time to the Barons of Monthault: both which places shew many tokens of Antiquity.

Hope castle.

Milstones.

Mold.

Neere vnto Hope, a certaine gardiner, when I was first writing this worke, digB ging somewhat deepe into the ground, happened vpon a very ancient peece of worke, concerning which there grew many divers opinions of sundry men: But hee that will with any diligence reade M. Vitruvius Pollio, shall verie well perceiue, it was nothing else but a Stouph or hote house begunne by the Romans, who as their riotous excesse grewe together with their wealth, vsed bathes exceeding much. In length it was fiue elns, in bredth foure, and about halfe an eln deepe, Enclosed with walles of hard stone, the paving laied with bricke pargetted with lime morter: the arched roufe over it supported with small pillers made of bricke, which roufe was of tiles pargetted over likewise verie smooth, having holes heere and there through it, wherein were placed certaine earthen pipes of potters worke, by C which the heat was conveied, and so as hee saith, Volvebant hypocausta vaporem, that is, the Stuples did send away a waulming hote vapor. And who would not thinke this was one of these kindes of worke which Giraldus wondered at especially in Isca? writing thus as hee did of the Romans workes. That (saith hee) which a man would judge among other things notable, there may you see on every side stouphs made with mervailous great skill, breathing out heat closely at certaine holes in the sides, and narrow tunnels. Whose worke this was the tiles there did declare beeing imprinted with these wordes LEGIO XX. that is, The twentieth Legion, which, as I haue shewed alreadie before, abode at Chester scarce sixe miles a side from hence.

Baths or hote waters.

D Neere vnto this riuer Alen, in a certaine streight set about with woods standeth Coles-hull, Giraldus termeth it Carbonarium collem, that is, Coles Hill, where when King Henry the Second had made preparation with as great care as ever any did, to giue battaile vnto the Welsh, the English by reason of their disordered multitude drawing out their battailions in their rankes, and not ranged close in good array, lost the field and were defeited: yea and the very Kings standerd was forsaken by Henrie of Essex, who in right of inheritance was Standard-bearer to the Kings of England. For which cause hee beeing afterwards charged with treason, and by his challenger ouercome in combate, had his goods confiscate and seized into the kings hands, and hee displeased with himselfe for his cowardise, put on a E coule, and became a monke.

Coles-hul.

Another little parcell there is of this shire on this side the riuer Dee, dismembred, as it were from this, which the English call English Mailor. Of this I treated in the County of Chester, whiles I spake of Bangor: and there is no reason to iterate the same heere which hath beene already spoken of before. Neither doth it affourd any thing in it worth the reporting, vnlesse it bee Hanmere, by a Meres side, whereof a right ancient and respectiue familie there dwelling, tooke their surname.

English Mailor.

Ha-mere.

The Earles of Chester as they skirmished by occasions, and advantage of opportunity with the Welsh, were the first Normans that brought this Country vnder F their subjection, whereupon wee reade in ancient recordes. The County of Flint appertaineth to the dignity of the sword of Chester: and the eldest sonnes of the K. K. of England were in old time styled by the Title of Earles of Chester and of Flint. But notwithstanding King Edward the First, supposing it would bee very commodious both for the maintenance of his owne powre and also to keepe vnder the Welsh, held in his owne hands both this and all the sea coast of Wales. As for the Earles of Chester.

The prudent policy of Edward the first.

in-land Countries, hee gaue them to his Nobles as hee thought good: following herein the policy of the Emperour Augustus, who undertooke himselfe to governe the prouinces that were strongest and lay out most, but permitted Proconsuls by lot to rule the rest. Which he did in shew to defend the Empire, but in very deed to haue all the armes and martiall men under his owne commande.

In this County of Flint there be Parishes in all. 28.

PRINCES

PRINCES OF WALES.

AS concerning the Princes of Wales of Britiſh bloud in ancient times, you may reade in the Hiſtorie of Wales publiſhed in print: For my part I thinke it requiſite and pertinent to my intended purpoſe to ſet downe ſummarily thoſe of latter daies, deſcended from the roiall line of England.

King Edward the Firſt, vnto whom his father King Henrie the Third had granted the Principalitie of Wales, when hee had obtained the Crowne, and Lhewellin Ap. Gryffith the laſt Prince of the Britiſh race was ſlain, & therby the ſinewes as it were of the principalitie were cut: in the twelft yeere of his reigne, vnited the ſame vnto the Kingdome of England: And the whole prouince ſware fealty and allegeance vnto Edward of Caernaruon his ſonne whom hee made Prince of VVales. But King Edward the Second conferred not vpon his ſonne Edward, the title of Prince of Wales, but onely the name of Earle of Chester and of Flint, ſo farre as euer I could learne out of the Records, and by that title ſummoned him to Parliament being then nine yeres old. K. Edward the Third firſt created his eldeſt ſonne Edward ſurnamed the Blacke Prince the Mirour of Chiualrie (being then Duke of Cornwall and Earle of Cheſter) Prince of Wales by ſolemne inveſture, with a cap of eſtate, and Coronet ſet on his head, a gold ring put vpon his finger, and a ſiluer vierge deliuered into his hand, with the aſſent of the Parliament: who in the very floure of his martiall glory was taken away by vntimely death too too ſoone, to the vniuerſall griefe of all England. Afterwards King Edward the Third inueſted with the ſaid honour Richard of Burdeaux the ſaid Princes ſonne, as heire apparent to the Crowne who was depoſed from his Kingdome by King Henrie the Fourth, and hauing no iſſue was cruelly diſpatched by violent death. The ſaid King Henrie the Fourth at the formall requeſt of the Lords and Commons beſtowed this Principalitie with the title of Cheſter and Flint, with ſolemne inueſture, & a kiſſe in full Parliament vpon his eldeſt ſonne, who glorioufly bare the name of King Henrie the Fifth. His ſonne King Henrie the Sixth who at his fathers death was an infant in the cradle, conferred likewiſe this honor which he neuer had himſelfe, vpon his yong ſonne Edward, whoſe vnhappy fortune it was to haue his braines daſhed out cruelly by the faction of Yorke, being taken priſoner at Tewkesbury field. Not long after King Edward the Fourth hauing obtained the Crowne created Edward his yong ſonne Prince of Wales, who was afterwards in the lineall ſucceſsion of Kings, Edward the Fifth of that name. And within a while after his Vnkle King Richard the Third who made him away, ordained in his roome, Edward his owne ſonne, whom King Edward the Fourth had before made Earle of Salisbury,

See pag. 114.

See pag. 164.

Afterward a golden vierge was vſed.

but

but hee died quickly after. Then King Henrie the seuenth first created his eldest sonne Arthur Prince of Wales, and when he was dead, Henrie, his other sonne well knowen in the world by the name of King Henrie the eight. Every one of these had the Principality of Wales given unto them by the foresaid solemne inuesture, and delivery of a Patent, To hold to themselves and their Heires, Kings of England. For Kings would not bereave themselves of so excellent an occasion to doe well by their eldest sonnes, but thought it very good pollicie by so great a benefit to oblige them when they pleased. Queene Marie, Queene Elizabeth, and King Edward, the children of King Henrie the Eighth, although they never had investiture, nor Patent, yet were commonly named in their order Princes of Wales. For, at that time, Wales was by authority of Parliament so annexed and united to the Kingdome of England, that both of them were governed under the same law: or, that you may read it abridged out of the Act of Parliament. The Kings country or dominion of Wales shall stand and continue for euer incorporated, vnited, and annexed, to and with the realme of England and all and singular person and persons borne and to be borne in the said principalitie, countrie, or dominion of Wales, shall haue, enioy, and inherit all and singular freedomes, liberties, rights, priuiledges, and lawes, within this Realme, and other the Kings dominions, as other the Kings subiects naturally borne within the same, haue, enioy, and inherit: and the lawes, ordinances, and statutes of the Realme of England for euer, and none other shall be had, vsed, practised, & executed in the saide country, or dominion of Wales, and euery part thereof, in like manner, forme, and order, as they be and shall be in this Realme, and in such like maner and forme, as heereafter shall be further established and ordained. This Act, and the calme commaunde of King Henrie the Seuenth preparing way for it, effected that in a short time, which the violent power of other Kings armes, and especially of Henrie the fourth with extreme rigour also of lawes, could not draw on in many yeeres. For euer sithence the British nation hath continued as faithfully and dutifully in their loyall allegiance to the Crowne of England, as any other part of the Realme whatsoeuer. Now am I to returne out of Wales into England, and must goe vnto the Brigantes.

27.H.8.

BRIGANTES.

BRIGANTES.

BRITAINE, which hitherto hath, as it were, launched out with huge Promontories, looking on the one side toward Germanie, on the other side toward Ireland, now as if it were affraid of the Sea violently inrushing upon it, withdraweth it selfe farther in, and by making larger separations of lands retyreth backe, gathered into a farre narrower breadth. For, it is not past one hundred miles broad from coast to coast, which on both sides passe on in a maner with streight and direct shores Northward, as farre as to Scotland. All this part wellneere of the Iland, whiles the Romane Empire stood upright and flourished in Britaine, was inhabited by the BRIGANTES. For, Plinie writeth, that they dwelt from the East sea to the West. A nation this was right valiant, populous withall, & of especially note among ancient Authors, who all doe name them, BRIGANTES, unlesse it be Stephanus onely, in his booke Of Cities; who called them BRIGAE: in which place, that which he wrote of them is defective at this day in the bookes, by reason that the sentence is unperfect. If I should thinke that these were called Brigantes, of Briga, which in the ancient Spanish tongue signified A Citie, I should not satisfie my selfe; seeing it appeereth for certaine out of Strabo, that it is a meere Spanish word. If I were of opinion with Goropius that out of the Low Dutch tongue, they were termed Brigantes, as one would say Free-hands, should I not obtrude upon you his dreames for dainties? How soever the case standeth, our Britans, or Welshmen, if they see any of a bad disposition, & audaciously playing lawlesse and leawd parts, use to say of them by way of a common merry quippe, Wharret Brigans, that is, They play the Brigants. And the Frenchmen at this day, alluding as it seemeth to the ancient language of the Gaules, usually terme such leawd fellowes Brigans like as Pirats shipes, Brigantins. But whether the force of the word was such in old time in the Gaules or Britans language, or whether our Brigantes were such like men, I dare not determine. Yet, if my memorie faile me not Strabo calleth the Brigantes (a people about Alpes) Grassatores, that is, Robbers, and Iulius a Belgian a young man of desperat boldnesse, who counted power, authority, honestie, and vertue to be nothing but naked names, is in Tacitus surnamed Briganticus. With which kind of vice, our old Brigantes may seeme to have beene tainted, when they so robbed and spoiled the neighbour inhabitants, that the Emperour

Brigantes where of they tooke name.

See Pasquier in Les Recherches de France. lib. 6. cap. 40.

Emperour Antoninus Pius for this cause tooke away a great part of their country from them, as Pausanias witnesseth, who writeth thus of them: Ἀπετέμνετο ὁ Ἀντωνῖνος ὁ εὐσεβὴς καὶ τῶν ἐν Βρεττανίᾳ Βριγάντων τὴν πολλὴν, ὅτι ἐπεστράτευσαν καὶ τοῖς ὅπλοις ἦρξαν πολέμου Γενουανίαν μοῖραν ὑπηκόων Ῥωμαίων. that is, Antoninus Pius cut the Brigantes in Britaine short, of a great part of their country, becauſe they beganne to take armes and in hoſtile maner to inuade Genunia, a region ſubject to the Romanes. Neither will any, I hope, take this as a reproch: Surely, I ſhould ſeeme farre unlike my ſelfe, if I fell now to taxe ignominouſly any priuate perſon, much leſſe a nation. Neither was this counted a reprochfull imputation in that warlicke age when all nations reckoned that their right, which they could winne, or hold by might and dint of ſword. Roberies, ſaith Cæſar, among the Germans are not noted with infamie, ſuch I meane as are committed without the borders of every State, and they allow the practiſe thereof to exerciſe their youth withal, and to keepe them from ydleneſſe. And for a reaſon not unlike, the Pæones, among the Greekes are ſo called, quia Percuſſores, that is, becauſe they were cutters: The Quadi among the Germans, and the Chaldæi likewiſe, are reported to haue gotten thoſe names, becauſe they uſed to robbe and kill.

Reinerus Reineccius.

Now, in that Florianus Del-Campe, a Spaniard, hath with to much affectation derived our Brigantes from Spaine into Ireland, and from thence into Britaine, grounding upon no other conjecture, but that he found the Citie Brigantia in his owne country Spaine, he hath I feare me, ſwarued from the Truth. For, in caſe our Brigantes and thoſe in Ireland had not the ſame name both for one cauſe, I had rather with my friend, the right learned Thomas Savil judge, that as well diuers of our Brigantes, as alſo others nations of Britaine, from the firſt comming of the Romans hither, departed into Ireland, ſome for deſire of quietneſſe and eaſe; others, that the Lordly dominion of the Romans might not be an eieſore unto them: & others againe, becauſe they would not by their good will looſe that liberty in their old age, which by nature they were endowed with in their childhood. But, that Claudius the Emperour was the firſt of all the Romans who ſet upon theſe our Brigantes, and brought them under the Romane dominion, Seneca in his Play ſheweth by theſe verſes.

Yet are they in Ireland called Birgantes in ſome Copies.

Ille Britannos
Vltra noti littora Ponti & cæruleos
Scuta Brigantes, dare Romulæis colla catenis
Iuſsit, & ipſum noua Romanæ jura ſecuris Tremere Oceanum.

The Britans ſuch as ſeated are beyond the knowen Sea-coaſt,
And Brigants with blew peinted ſhields, he forced with his hoaſt,
To yeeld their neckes in Romane chaines, as captiue to be led;
And euen the Ocean this new powre of Romane-ax to dred.

And yet I haue beene of this mind, that they were not then conquered, but committed themſelues rather into the tuition and protection of the Romans. For, that which he poetically endited, the Hiſtoriographers doe not mention. And Tacitus recordeth how by occaſion at that time of certaine diſcords riſen among the Brigantes, Oſtorius who now made preparation for new warres, was hindered and pulled backe, which he with the execution of a few, eaſily appeaſed. At which time, the

Brigantes,

A Brigantes had Cartiſmandua, a right noble and puiſſant Lady for their Queene, who intercepted Caratacus, and delivered him into the Romans hands. Heereupon enſued welth of welth and proſperity, roiotous and incontinent life: in ſo much, as forſaking her husband Venutius his bed, ſhe joined herſelfe in marriage with Vellocatus his Eſquire, and made him King. Which foule fact was the overthrow ſhortly after of her houſe, and thereby a bloudy and mortall warre was enkindled. The love and affection of the country went generally with the lawfull husband, but the Queenes un-
B temperate luſt and cruelty were peremptorie, in maintaining the adulterer. She, by crafty plots and miſcheivous meanes intercepteth the brother and kinsfolke of Venutius. Venutius againe for his part pricked forward with ſhamefull diſgrace, by the helpe of friends whom he procured, and the rebellion withall of the Brigantes themſelves, brought Cartiſmandua into great extremities. Then, upon her inſtant unto unto the Romans for aide, gariſons were ſet, Cohorts and wings of foote and horſe were ſent, which after ſundry skirmiſhes with variable event delivered her perſon out of perill: yet ſo, as that the Kingdome remained to Venutius, and the warre
C with the Romanes: who were not able to ſubdue the Brigantes before the time of Veſpaſian. For, then Petilius Cerealis having invaded this country, fought many battailes, and ſome of them very bloudy: and either conquered, or elſe waſted a great part of the Brigantes. Whereas Tacitus writeth, that this Queene of the Brigantes delivered Caratacus priſoner unto Claudius the Emperour, there is in that excellent author a manifeſt ὑπαλλαγὴ and the ſame noted a good while ſince by Iuſtus Lipſius deeply inſighted in underſtanding old Authors. For, neither was this Caratacus Prince of the Silures and Ordevices led in pompe at that tri-
D umph of Claudius, nor yet Caratacus the ſonne of Cunobelinus (for ſo is he called in the Roman Faſti, whom Dio nameth Catacratus.) Of whom Aulus Plautius, if not in the very ſame yeere, yet in the next following triumphed by way of Ovation. But let others ſift out theſe matters, & ther of I have already ſaid ſomwhat. In the Emperour Hadrians time, when, as Aelius Spartianus ſaith, The Britans could not be contained under the Romans dominion, it may ſeeme that theſe our Brigantes revolted from the Romans and made a turbulent inſurrection. For, had it not beene ſo, there was no cauſe why Iuvenall who then lived
E ſhould thus write:

Dirue Maurorum attegias, & caſtra Brigantum.

Downe with the Moores ſheepe cotes and folds,
Downe with the Brigantes forts and holds.

Neither afterward in the time of Antoninus Pius, was their courage, as it may
F ſeeme, very much abated, when he tooke away part of their territories from them, becauſe they had mad rodes, as I have ſaid before, into Genunia, or Guinethia, a province confederate with the Romans.

If I durſt by our Critickes good leave (who in theſe daies preſuming ſo much of their great wits are ſupercriticall) me thinkes, I could heere cleare Tacitus of a fault or two, which ſitteth cloſe to him, as concerning the Brigantes. The one is Cartiſmandua. Tacitus.

* The putting of one time for another.

in

in the twelfth book of his Annales, where I would read, (for Venutius out of the State of the Iugantes) out of the State of the Brigantes: which Tacitus himselfe seemeth to insinuate in the third booke of his Histories. The other, in the life of Agricola. The Brigantes, saith he, under the leading of a Woman, burnt the Colonie &c. Where truth would haue you read, The Trinobantes. For he speaketh of Queene Boadicia, who had nothing to doe with the Brigantes. But, the Trinobantes, she stirred indeed to rebellion, and burnt the Colonie * Camalodunum.

A place in Tacitus cor. rected.

* Maldon.

A

B

But, this country of theirs so exceeding large, which the further it goeth the narrower it waxeth, riseth on high in the mids with continued ridges and edges of hils, (as Italie is raised up with Apenninus) which make a partition betweene those Counties into which it is now divided. For, beneath those hils toward the East and the German Sea, lieth York-shire, and the Bishopricke of Duresme; and on the West side, Lancashire, Westmerland, and Cumberland, all which countries in the first infancie of the English-Saxons Empire, where contained within the Kingdome of the Deiri. For, they call these Countries, the Kingdome of the Nordanhumbers, and devided them in two parts; Deira, called in that age Deirland, which is neerer unto us and on this side Tine: and Bernicia, which lying beyond Tine, reached as farre as Edenborrough Frith in Scotland: which parts although they had their severall Kings for a long time, yet at length grew all to be one kingdome. And, that I may note this one thing by the way, whereas in the life of Charles the Great it is red thus, Eardulph King of the Nordanhumbers, that is, De-Irland, being driven out of his country unto Charles the Great &c. we must read jointly, Dierland, and understand the place of this country, and not of Ireland, as some haue misconceiued.

C

D

YORK-E

E

F

DVNELMENSIS

Episcopatus (qui comitatus est Palatinus) olim pars BRIGANTVM

NORTHVM

BRIÆ

PARS

WEST MORE

LANDIÆ

PARS

EBORACENSIS

BISSHOPPES AVEL

Heddon · Denton · Houghton · Thockley · Wawbottell · Wylam · Close · Newborne · Benwell · Elswick · Ryton · Blayden · Crawcrake · Willynton · Swalwell · Prudhoe cast: · Whickham · Myckley · Thornerlee · Hollinsyde · Chapwell · Hedley · Ravensworth · Aperley · Black hall · Gibside · Ravensworth · Whittenstall · Darwencote · Tanfelde · Kibblewor · Shetley · Newlands · Ebchest · Byarside · Medumsley · Shetley bridge · Painsheaks · Shildmn · Cronkley · Barkinside · Benfeldside · Iseton · Standley · Aspersheaks · Blakhedley · Acton · Mugliswick · Cowside hall · Holmside · Grencrofte · Edmondbyers · Blanchlande · Newbigin · Ridlumhope · Pedumsake · Rowley · The Manor · Knewdon · Humsienworth · Newbigin · Lanchester · Langley · Sibtonshcles · Derwent flu: · Kmchley · East Alon flu: · Wilkhill · Ashe · Vsshaw · Cowpigh hell · Flasket · Satley chap · Primrose style · Vnthank · East brand · Waskerp burn · West brandon · Walley · Kellop flu: · West: Yate · Wellop flu: · Stanhope pk · Weeredale · Stokley · Burdon flu: · St. Johns chap · Were flu: · East Yate · Stanhope · Frosterley · Bradey hall · West pk · Vnthank · Wilsingham · Weedcroft hall · Bradwood · Were flu: · Blakhall · Willimoton · Bushoplyc · Landew · Harpley hall · Bichborne · Mylhouse · Tees flu · Langton flu · Teesdale · Bolliop · Bedbern · the cole pitte · Witton · Hamsterley · Witton cast · Escomb · Mayland · St Ellins · Durtpit chap · Hude flu · Newbiggin · Holwick cragg · Holwick · Middleton · Gemlesse flu · W. Enewode · Lonton · Sinwith · Cockfelde · Lathkirk · Eggleton · Shotton · Wakerfelde · Arngill flu: · Mickleton · Lune flu · Shepley · Langley · Hilton · Rumbaldkirk · Arngill howse · Marwood hagg · Rabye cast: · Lune forest · Cudderston · Ingleton · Stretlam · Stayndorp · Langton · Nabye · Marwood pk · Snotterton · Cletlam · Heslam · Gainforth · Barnard cast: · Sclabye · Bauder flu: · Westwick · Wynston · Burforth · Cragg · Stratforde · Wharleton · Tees flu · Egleston · Rokeby · Ouinton · Wiclisse · Thorpe · Reare crosse · The spittle one staunmore

OCEA

NVS

PARS

DVRESME

Darlington

Hartlepoole

Yarum

Middlesburgh

Christophorus Saxton descripsit
Wilhelmus Kip. sculpsit

ber.

ft called and r.

ft riding.

e river n.

ortley.
entworth.

afield.

nivall.

heram.

nisbor.

legus.
87.

YORK SHIR

PART OF WESTMOR

SAND

PART OF THE WEST RIDING OF SANCA-SHIRE

NORTH RIDING

THE GER MAN OCEAN

PART OF SINCOSNE SHIRE

DIEU ET MON DROIT

Performed by Iohn Speed and are to be solde in Popes head alley, against the Exchange by Iohn Sudbury and G. Humble. Cum Privilegio. 1610.

PRIVILEGIO.

THE SCALE OF MILES

A

YORKE-SHIRE.

THe County of YORKE, in the Saxon tonge Ꮯueppic-ſcỳne, Ꮯꝼꝼpoc-ſcỳne, & Ꮯbopa-ſcỳne, commonly YORKE-SHIRE, the greateſt Shire by far, of al England, is thought
B to bee in a temperate meaſure fruitfull. If in one place there bee ſtonie and ſandy barraine ground, in another place there are for it cornfields as rich and fruitfull: if it be voide and deſtitute of woods heere, you ſhall finde it ſhadowed there with moſt thicke foreſts: ſo providently uſeth nature ſuch a temperature, that the whole country may ſeeme by reaſon alſo of that variety more gracefull and delectable. Where it bendeth Weſtward, it is bounded with the hilles, I ſpake off, from Lancaſhire and Weſtmorland.

On the North-ſide it hath the Biſhopricke of Durham, which the river Tees with a continued courſe ſeparateth from it. On the Eaſt-ſide the Germaine ſea
C lieth ſore upon it: and the South-ſide is encloſed firſt with Cheſhire and Darby-ſhire, then with Nottingham-ſhire, and after, with Lincoln-ſhire, where that famous arme of the ſea Humber floweth betweene, into which all the rivers well neere that water this ſhire empty themſelues, as it were, into their common receptacle. Humber.

This whole ſhire is divided into three partes: which according to three quarters of the world are called The Weſt-Riding, The Eaſt-Riding, The and North-Riding. Weſt-Riding, for a good while is compaſſed in with the river * Ouſe, with the bound of Lancaſhire, and with the South limits of the ſhire, and beareth toward the Weſt and South. Eaſt-Riding, looketh to the Sunne-riſing and the Ocean, which together with the river Derwent incloſeth it. North-Riding reacheth Northward,
D hemmed in, as it were, with the river Tees with Derwent and a long race of the river Ouſe. In that Weſt part, out of the Weſterne mountaines or hils in the confines, iſſue many rivers which Ouſe alone, entertaineth every one & carrieth them all with him unto Humber. Neither can I ſee any fitter way to deſcribe this part, than to follow the ſtreames of Done, Calder, Aire, Wherfe, Nid and Ouſe, which ſpringing out of theſe hilles, are the rivers of moſt account, and runne by places likewiſe of greateſt importance. * Firſt called Vre and Your. Weſt-riding.

The river Danus, commonly called Don, and Dune, ſo termed, as it ſhould ſeeme for that it is carried in a chanell ſome-what flat, ſhallow and low by the ground (for ſo much ſignifieth Dan in the Britiſh language) after it hath ſaluted Wortley, which E gaue ſurname to a worſhipfull family, as alſo Wentworth hard by, whence beſide other gentlemen as well in this Country, as elſe where, the Barons of Wentworth haue derived both their originall and name; runneth firſt by Sheafield a towne of great name (like as other ſmall townes adjoyning) for the Smithes therein (conſidering there bee many iron mines there about) fortified alſo with a ſtrong and ancient Caſtle, which in right line deſcended from the Lovetofts, the Lords Furnivall, and Th. Lord Nevil of Halumſhire, unto the Talbots, Earles of Shrewsbury. From thence Don clad with alders, and other trees goeth to Rotheram, which glorieth in Thomas Rotheram ſometime Archbiſhop of Yorke, a wiſe man, bearing the name of the towne, beeing borne therein, and a ſingular benefactor thereunto, who found-
F ded and endowed there a Colledge with three ſchooles in it to teach children writing, Grammar, and Muſicke, which the greedy iniquity of theſe our times hath already ſwallowed. The river Don. Wortley. Wentworth. Sheafield. Furnivall. Rotheram.

Then looketh it up to Connisborow or Conines-borrough an ancient caſtle, in the Britiſh tonge Caer Conan, ſeated upon a rock, into which, what time as Aurelius Ambroſius had ſo diſcomfited and ſcattered the Engliſh Saxons at Maisbelly, that they tooke Connisborow. Florilegus. 487.

them to their heeles, and fled every man the next way hee could finde, Hengeſt A their Captaine retyred himſelfe for ſafety: and few daies after brought his men forth to battaile before the Campe againſt the Britans that purſewed him, where hee fought a bloudy field to him and his: For, a great number of men were there cut in peeces: and the Britans having intercepted him, chopt of his head, if we may beleeue the Britiſh Hiſtory rather than the Engliſh-Saxon Chronicles, which report that he being outworne with travell and labour, died in peace. But this Conings- borough in latter ages was the poſſeſſion of the Earles of Warren. Afterwards, he runneth under Sprotburg the ancient ſeat of that ancient family of the Fitz-Williams
The family of Fitz-Williams. Knights, who are moſt honourably allied and of kin to the nobleſt houſes of Eng- B land, and from whom deſcended Sir William Fitz-Williams Earle of Southhampton, in our fathers remembrance, and Sir William Fitz-Williams late Lord Deputy of Ireland. But in proceſſe of time this is fallen to the Copleys, like as Elmeſly with other poſſeſſions of theirs in this tract, are come by right of inheritance to the Sauils.

Dan-caſtre. From hence Done running with a divided ſtreame hard to an old towne, giveth it his owne name, which we at this day call Dan-caſter, the Scots Don-caſtle, the Saxons Dona-ceaꝑtep, Ninius, Caer Daun, but Antonine the Emperour DANVM, like as the booke of Notices: which hath recorded that the Captaine of the Criſpinian Horſemen, lay there in Gariſon under the Generall of Britajne. This about the yeere of our Lord 759. was ſo burnt with fire from heauen, and laie ſo buried under C the owne ruines, that it could ſcarce breath againe. A large plot it ſheweth yet, where a Citadell ſtood, which men thinke was then conſumed with fire: in which place I ſaw the Church of S. Georges, a faire Church, and the onely Church they haue in the towne.

Beneath this towne Southward ſcarce fiue miles off is Tickhill, which I am not willing to omit, an old towne, fenſed with as old a Caſtle, large enough, but having onely a ſingle wall about it, and with an high mount whereon ſtandeth a round Tickhill. Keepe. It carried in old time ſuch a dignity with it, that the Manours and Lords belonging thereto were called the Honour of Tickhill. In the reigne of Henry the First Roger Buſly held the poſſeſſion thereof: Afterwards the Earles of Ewe in Nor- D Plac. anno. 3. Ioan. Reg. Pl. M. 4. H. 3. mandy were long ſince Lords of it by the gift of King Stephen. Then King Richard the First gave it unto Iohn his brother. In the Barons warre Robert de Vipont detei-ned it for himſelfe, which that he ſhould redeliuer unto the Earle of Ewe, King Henry the Third put into his hands, the Caſtle of Carleol, and the County. But when the King of France would not reſtore unto the Engliſh againe their poſſeſſions in France, the King of England retained it to himſelfe, when as Iohn Earle of Ewe in the right of Alice his great Grandmother claimed of King Edward the First reſtitution thereof. At length Richard the Second King of England liberally gave it unto Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter.

But now by this time Done that often riſeth heere and overfloteth the fields, ga- E thering his divided waters into one ſtreame againe, when he hath for a while run in one channell through Hatfeld Chace (where there is great game and hunting of red Deere) being divided eft-ſoone, ſpeedeth himſelfe on the one hand to Idel a river in Nottinghamſhire, on the other to Are, that he and they together may fall into Humber. In which very place there are environed with theſe riuers Diche-march Marſhland. and Marſhland, little Merſh Countries or River-Ilands rather, taking up in circuit much about fifteene miles, moſt plentifull of greene graſſe, paſſing good for feeding of Cattell, and on every ſide garniſhed, as it were, with prety townes.
Yet ſome of the Inhabitants are of opinion, that the land there, is hollow and hanging, yea and that, as the waters riſe, the ſame alſo is heaued up: a thing that F Pomponius Mela hath written concerning Antrum an Iſle in France.

Noſthill. Saint Oſwalds. But among thoſe Beakes and Brookes that conveie their ſtreames hither, I muſt not overpaſſe Went, which floweth out of a ſtanding Poole neere unto Noſthill, where ſometime ſtood an Abbay conſecrated to Oſwald, both a King and a Saint which A. Confeſſour to King Henry the First re-edified. But ſince the diſſolution it hath

A hath beene the dwelling house of the Gargraues, knights of especiall good respect.

Calder springing in the very confines of Lanca-shire, runneth along certaine townes of no account; among which, at Gretland in the toppe of an hill (whereunto there is no ascent but of one side, was digged up this Votiue Altar; erected, as it should seeme, to the tutelar God of the whole State of the Brigants: which altar was to be seene at Bradley, in the house of the right worshipfull Sir Iohn Savill Knight, Baron of the Eschequer, but now among Sir Robert Cottons Antiquities. The river Calder.

On the other side.

B

DVI CI. BRIG.
ET NVM. AVGG.
T. AVR. AVRELIAN VS DD PRO SE
ET SVIS. S. M. A. G. S.

ANTONINO
III. ET GET. COSS.

Anno Christ 209.

C That is, To the God of the whole Communalty and state of the Brigantes, and to the sacred Maiestie of the Augusti, Titus Aurelius Aurelianus hath dedicated for himselfe and his. (The letters that bee last of all, passe my skill altogither) When Antonine the third time, and Geta were Consuls.

Now whether that DVI, be God, whom the Britans now call Diw, or a peculiar Iocal God, or Genius of the Brigantes, I leaue for to be discussed by them, that are better learned. Like as the soules are divided and distributed among them that are borne (saith Symmachus) Euen so are Fatal Genij, among nations. And the divine minde allotteth sundry keepers and guardians to particular Countries. For, thus they were in old time perswaded in their divinity, and thus they beleeved. And, to say nothing of forraine nations, whose historie is very full of such peculiar and locall Gods; the Britans had in that part which now is called ESSEX, ANDATES: in Cumberland, BELLO-TVCADRVS: in Northumberland VITERINVS, and MOGONTVS; as shall appeere more evidently out of those Inscriptions, which I will set downe in due place. Servius Honoratus likewise hath well and truely observed, that these Locall or Topick Gods doe never passe unto other Countries. But to returne unto the river Calder: which when by the comming in of other waters he is growne bigge and carrieth a fuller streame, hath a faire bridge over it at Eland: neere unto which, at Grimscarre, were brickes found with this inscription. DVI. The Genij of Places. Lib. Ep. 40.

D

E

COH. IIII. BRE.

For, the Romans flourishing in military prowesse, in great wisdome and policie exercised both their Legions and Cohorts in time of peace, to withstand Idlenesse; by casting of ditches, making of high-waies, baking of brickes, building of bridges &c. Vopiscus in Probus.

F Calder afterward among the very hils leaveth on the left hand Halifax a most famous towne, lying from West to East upon the steepe descent of an hill. And not many ages since, tooke it this name; whereas before time it was called Horton, as some of the Inhabitants doe report, who tell this prety story also, touching the alteration of the name. Halifax. Some would haue it to bee called aforetime, the Chappell in the Groue.

A certaine Clerke, as they call him, was farre in loue with a maiden who when he might not haue his purpose of her, for all the faire meanes and entis- A ments hee could use, his loue beeing turned unto rage (vilanous wretch that hee was) cut off the maides head: which beeing hung afterwards upon an Eugh tree, the common people counted as an hallowed relique, untill it was rotten, yea and they came devoutly to visit it, and every one gathered and carried away with him a branch or sprig of the sayd tree. But after the tree was bare and nothing left but the very stock (such was the credulity of that time) it maintained the opinion of reverence and religion still. For, the people were perswaded, that the little veines that are stretched out and spred betweene the barke and bodie of the eugh tree in manner of haires or fine threads, were the very haires in deed of the virgins head. Here- B upon, they that dwelt there about repaired on pilgrimage hither, and such resort

Fax what it is. there was unto it, that Horton beeing but a little village before, grew up to a great towne, and was called by a new name Halig-Fax, or Hali-fex, that is, Holy haire. For, the Englishmen dwelling beyond Trent, called the haire of the head Fax. Whence also there is a familie in this Country, of gentlemen, named Faire-fax, of the faire bush of their haire. They therefore, which by resemblance of the name gather this Halifax law. to bee Ptolomees Olicana, bee farre deceived. Now this place is become famous as well among the multitude by reason of a law there, whereby they behead streightwaies whosoever are taken stealing: as also amongst the learned: for they report that Ioannes de Sacro Bosco the Author of the Sphære, was here borne: yet more C famous it is, for the greatnesse of the Parish, which reckoneth in it eleuen Chappels; whereof two, bee Parish-chappels, and to the number of twelue thousand people therein. So that the inhabitants are wont to giue out, that this parish of theirs mainteineth more men and women, than other living creatures of what kinde soever. Whereas you shall see elsewhere in England, in the most fruitfull and fertile places, many thousands of sheepe, and very few men, as if folke had given place to flockes of sheepe and heards of neat, or else were devoured of them.
Moreover, the industrie of the inhabitants heere is admirable, who in a barraine soile, wherein there is no commodious, nay scarce any dwelling and living at all, haue so come up and flourished by clothing (a trade which they tooke to not aboue D three score and tenne yeere agoe at the fartheſt) that they greatly enrich their owne estates, and winne the praise from all their neighbours: yea, and haue pro-Almond-bu- ry. ved the saying to bee true, That barrain places giue a good edge to industry: and that hence it is, that Norimberg in Germany, Venice and Genua in Italie, and Limoges in France, situate all in barain places are become right flourishing Cities. Sixe miles from hence and not farre from the right side of the river Calder, neere unto Almond-bury a little towne, standing upon an high and steepe hill which hath no easie passage on even ground unto it but of one side, are seene the manifest tokens of a rampier, some ruines of walles and of a Castle, which was garded about with a triple strength of forts and bulwarkes. Some will haue this also to haue beene E OLICANA: But the truth saith otherwise, and namely that it is CAMBODVNVM, Cambodu- num. which Ptolomee calleth amisse CAMVLODVNVM, and Beda by a word divided, CAMPO-DVNVM.

This is proved by the distance thereof, on the one side from MANCVNIVM, on the other from CALCARIA, according to which Antonine placeth it.
Moreover it seemeth to haue flourished in very great honour, when the English Saxons first beganne to rule. For, the Kings towne it was, and had in it a Cathedrall Church built by Paulinus the Apostle of these partes, and the same dedicated to Saint Alban: whence in steede of Albon-bury, it is now called Almon-bury. But when Ceadwall the Britan and Penda the Mercian made sharpe warre F upon Edwin the Prince of these Countries, it was set on fire by the enemie, as Beda writeth, which the very adust and burnt colour as yet remaining upon the stones doth testifie. Yet afterwards there was a Castle built in the same place, which King Stephen, as I haue red, confirmed unto Henry Lacy.

Hard

A Hard unto it lieth Whitley, the habitation of an ancient and notable familie of Beaumont, which notwithstanding is different from that house of the Barons and Vicounts Beau-mont, yet it was of great name in this tract before their comming into England. Whitley.

Calder now leaving these places behinde him, and having passed by Kirkley an house in times past of religious Nunne; and the tombe of Robin Hood that right good and honest Robber (in which regard he is so much spoken of) goeth to Dewsborrough seated under an high hill. Whether it had the name of Dvi that tutelar God of the place, of whom I wrote a little before, I am not able to say: Surely the B name is not unlike, for it soundeth as much as Duis Burgh, and flourished at the verie first infancie, as it were, of the Church springing up amongst the Englishmen in this Province: for, I haue heard, that there stood a Crosse heere with this Inscription. Kirkley. Dewsborough.

PAVLINVS HIC PRÆDICAVIT ET CELEBRAVIT.

C that is,

PAVLINVS HERE PREACHED AND CELEDRATED DIVINE SERVICE.

D And that this Paulinus was the first Archbishop of Yorke, about the yeere of our redemption 626. all Chronicles doe accord. From hence Calder running by Thornhill (which from knights of that surname is descended to the Savills) passeth hard by Wakefield a towne famous for clothing, for greatnesse, for faire building, a well frequented mercate, and a bridge: upon which King Edward the Fourth erected a beautifull chappell, in memoriall of those that lost their liues there in battaile. The possession some time this was of the Earles of Warren and of Surry, as also Sandall Castle adjoyning, which Iohn Earl of Warren (who was alwaies fleshly lustfull) built, when hee had used the wife of Thomas Earle of Lancaster more familiarly then honesty would require, to the end he might deteine and keepe E her in it securely, from her husband. By this townes side, when the civill warre was hote heere, in England and setled in the very bowels thereof, Richard Duke of Yorke, father to king Edward the Fourth (who chose rather to hazard his fortune: than to stay the good time thereof) was slaine in the field by those that tooke part with the house of Lancaster. The Tract lying heere round about for a great way together, is called The Seigniory or Lordship of Wakefield, and hath alwaies for the Seneschal or Steward one of the better sort of Gentlemen dwelling thereby. Which office the Savills haue oftentimes borne, who are heere a very great and numerous familie, and at this daie Sir Iohn Savill knight beareth it, who hath a very sightly faire house not farre off at Howley, which maketh a goodly shew. Calder is F gone scarce fiue miles farther, when hee betaketh both his water and his name also to the river Are. Where, at their very meeting together standeth betweene them Medley, in times past Mede-ley, so called for the situatiõ, as it were, in the midest between two rivers. The seat it was in the age aforegoing, of Sir Robert Waterton Mr. of the horse to K. Hen. the Fourth, but now of Sir Iohn Savil a right worshipfull knight, and a most worthy Baron of the kings Exchequer, whom I acknowledge full gladly Wakefield. 1460. The Savils. Medley. Howley.

in his loue and courteſie to haue favored me, & out of his learning to haue furthered this worke. This river Are ſpringing out of the bothom of the hil Pennigent, which among the Weſterne hils mounteth aloft aboue the reſt, doth forthwith ſo ſport himſelfe with winding in and out, as doubtfull whether hee ſhould returne backe to his ſpring head, or runne on ſtill to the ſea, that my ſelfe in going directly forward on my way was faine to paſſe over it ſeven times in an houres riding. It is ſo calme, and milde, and carrieth ſo gentle and ſlow a ſtreame, that it ſeemeth not to runne at all but to ſtand ſtill, whence I ſuppoſe it tooke the name. For, as I haue ſaid before, Ara in the Britiſh tongue betokeneth Milde, Stil, and Slow: whereupon that ſlow river in France Araris hath his name. The Country lying about the head of this river, is called in our tongue Craven, perchance of the Britiſh word Crage, that is, a Stone. For, the whole tract there, is rough all over and unpleaſant to ſee to, which craggie ſtones, hanging rockes, and rugged waies: in the mideſt whereof, as it were in a lurking hole, not farre from Are, ſtandeth Skipton: and lieth hidden and encloſed among ſteepe hilles, in like manner as Latium in Italie, which Varro ſuppoſeth to haue beene ſo called, becauſe it lieth cloſe under Apennine and the Alpes. The towne (for the manner of their building among theſe hilles) is faire enough, and hath a very proper and a ſtrong Caſtle, which Robert de Rumeley built, by whoſe poſterity it came by inheritance to the Earles of Aumarle. And when their inheritance for default of heires fell by eſcheat into the Kings hands, Robert de Clifford, whoſe heires are now Earles of Cumberland, by way of exchange obtained of King Edward the Second both this Caſtle, and alſo faire lands round about it every way, delivering into the kings hands in lieu of the ſame, the poſſeſſions that he had in the Marches of Wales.

The river Are. — Araris in France. — Craven. — Skipton. — Latium.

When Are is once paſt Craven, hee ſpreadeth broader and paſſeth by more pleaſant fields lying on each ſide of it, & Kigheley among them, which gaue name to the worſhipfull familie of Kigheley, ſo ſurnamed thereof. Of which family, Henry Kigheley obtained of King Edward the Firſt for this Mannor of his The liberty of a mercate and faire, and free warren. So that no man might enter into thoſe lands to hunt and chace in them, or to take any thing that pertained to the Warren, without the licence and good will of Henry himſelfe and his ſucceſſours. Which was counted in that age for a ſpeciall favour, and I note it once for all, that we may ſee, what Free warren was. But the male iſſue of this family in the right line ended in Henry Kighley of Inskip. Howbeit, the daughters and heires were wedded to William Cavendiſh, now Baron Cavendiſh of Hardwick, and to Thomas Worſeley of Boothes. From hence Are paſſeth beſide Kirkſtall, an Abbay in times paſt of no ſmall reckoning, founded by Henry Lacy, in the yeere 1147. and at length viſiteth Leedes, in the Saxon tongue Loyder, which became a houſe of the Kings, when CAMBODVNVM was by the enemy burnt to the ground: now a rich towne by reaſon of clothing, where Oſwy K. of Northumberland put to flight Penda the Mercian: And, as Bede ſaith, this was to the great profit of both nations: for, he both delivered his owne people from the hoſtile ſpoiling of the miſcreants, and alſo converted the Mercians themſelues to the grace of Chriſtian faith. The very place wherein they joyned battaile, the writers call Winwidfield, which name I ſuppoſe was given it of the victory: like as a place in Weſtphalia, where Quintilius Varus with his legions was ſlaine, is in the Dutch tongue called Winfield, that is, The fields of victory, as that moſt learned man and my very good friend Abraham Ortelius hath obſerved. The little region or Territory about it, was in times paſt by an old name called Elmet: which Eadwin King of Northumberland, the ſonne of Aella, after he had expelled Cereticus a Britiſh King, conquered in the yeere of Chriſt 620. Herein is digged limeſtone every where, which is burnt at Brotherton, and Knottingley, and at certaine ſet times, as it were, at faires, a mighty quantity thereof is conveied to Wakefield, Sandall, and Stanbridge: and ſo is ſold unto this Weſterne Country which is hilly and ſomewhat cold, for to manure and enrich their corne fields. But let us leaue theſe things to husbandmen: as for my ſelf I profeſſe my ignorance therein, and will goe forward as I beganne.

Kighley. — Libera Warrena. — Free Warren. — Leedes. — Winwidfield. — Elmet. — Ninius. — Calxviva.

At

A At length Are entertaineth Calder aforesaid with his water as his gueſt, where neere unto the meeting of both rivers, ſtandeth Caſtleford a little village, Marianus nameth it Caſterford: who reporteth, that the Citizens of Yorke ſlew many of King Ethelreds armie there, whom in their purſuite they ſet upon and charged heere and there at aduantages; what time as hee invaded and overranne this country for breaking the alleagence they had ſworne unto him. But in Antonine, this place is called by a more ancient name LEGEOLIVM and LAGETIVM: Wherein beſide expreſſe and notable tokens of antiquity, a mighty number of Romaine peeces of money (the common people there tearme them, Saraſins head) were found at Beanfield (a place ſo called now of Beanes) hard by the Church: The diſtance alſo from B DAN and YORKE, betweene which hee placed it, doth moſt cleerly confirme as much: to ſay nothing of the ſituation thereof hard by the Romans High ſtreat, and laſt of all for that Roger Hoveden in plaine termes calleth it A City.

Caſtleford.

Legeolium.

From hence Are being now bigger, after it hath received Calder unto it, leaveth on the left hand Brotherton a little towne; in which Queene Margaret, turning thither out of the way as ſhe road on hunting, was delivered of child, and brought forth unto her husband King Edward the Firſt, Thomas de Brotherton, ſo named of the place, who was afterward Earle of Norfolke, and Mareſhall of England. And not farre beneath, Are after it hath received into it Dan, looſeth himſelfe in Ouſe. On the C right hand, where a yellower kind of marke is found, which being caſt and ſpred upon the fields maketh them beare corne for many yeres together, he paſſeth by Pontfract, commonly called Pontfret, ſituate not farre from the river bank, which towne gat life, as it were, by the death of old Legeolium. In the Saxons time it was called Kirkby, but the Normans of a broken bridge named it in French Pontfract. Upon this occaſion, as it is commonly thought, that the wooden bridge over Are hard by, was broken, when a mighty multitude of people accompanied William Archbiſhop of Yorke (King Stephens ſiſters ſonne) newly returned from Rome. Whereby a great number fell into the river, and yet by reaſon that the Archbiſhop ſhed many a teare at this accident, and called upon God for helpe: there was not one of them D that periſhed. Seated it is in a very pleaſant place, that bringeth forth Liquirice and skirworts in great plenty, adourned alſo with faire buildings, and hath to ſhew a ſtately Caſtle as a man ſhall ſee, ſituate upon a rocke no leſſe goodly to the eie, than ſafe for the defence, wel fortified with ditches and bulwarkes. Hildebert Lacie a Norman, unto whom King William the firſt, after that Alricke the Saxon was thruſt out, had given this towne with the land about it, firſt built this Caſtle. But Henrie Lacy his nephew, came into the field at the battaile of Trenchbrey (I ſpeake out of the Pleas) againſt King Henrie the Firſt: wherefore he was diſſeiſed of the Baronie of Pontfract, and the King gave the Honor to Wido de Laval, who held it untill King Stephens dates: at which time, the ſaid Henrie made an entry into the Baronie, and by mediation of the King E compounded with Wido, for an hundred and fifty pounds. This Henrie had a ſonne named Robert; who having no iſſue, left Albreda Lizours his ſiſter by the mothers ſide, and not by the father, to be his heire, becauſe he had none other ſo neere in bloud unto him: whereby ſhe, after Roberts death, kept both inheritances in her hand, namely of her brother Lacies, and her father Lizours. And theſe be the very words of the booke of the Monaſterie of Stanlow. This Albreda, was married to Richard Fitz Euſtach, Conſtable of Cheſter, whoſe heires aſſumed unto them the name of Lacies, and flouriſhed under the title of Earles of Lincolne. By a daughter of the laſt of theſe Lacies, this goodly inheritance by a deede of conveiance was devolved in the end to the Earles of Lancaſter, who enlarged the Caſtle very much, and Queene Elizabeth F likewiſe beſtowed great coſt in repairing it, and beganne to build a faire Chappell. This place hath beene infamous for the murder and bloud ſhed of Princes: For, Thomas Earle of Lancaſter, the firſt of Lancaſtrian houſe that in right of his wife poſſeſſed it, ſtained and embrewed the ſame with his owne bloud. For, King Edward the Second to free himſelfe from rebellion and contempt ſhewed upon him a good example of wholſome ſeverity, and beheaded him heere. Whom notwithſtanding

T. de Caſtleford.

Saint William of Yorke.

Lacy the Norman.

Placit. 11. H. 3.

The booke of Stanlow Monaſterie.

See Earles of Lincolne.

Thomas Earle of Lancaſter.

ſtanding the common people enrolled in the Beadroll of Saints. Here alſo was that Richard the Second King of England; whom King Henrie the Fourth depoſed from his Kingdome with hunger, cold, and ſtrange kinds of torments, moſt wickedly made away. And heere King Richard the Third cauſed Antonie Earle Rivers, King Edward the Fifth his Vnkle by the mothers ſide, and Sir Richard Grey Knight, halfe brother to the ſame King by the mothers ſide, both innocent perſons, to looſe their heads. For the Vſurper feared, leaſt thoſe courageous and reſolute men would ſtop his paſſage, aſpiring as he did by wicked meanes to the Crowne: As for the Abbay, which the Lacies heere founded for religious perſons, and the Hoſpitall which Sir Rob. Knolles erected for poore people, I let paſſe wittingly, ſeeing there is ſcarce any rubbiſh now remaining of thoſe good workes.

From LEGEOLIVM or Caſtleford above ſaid, leaving behind vs Shirburne a little towne but well inhabited, which tooke name of the cleere bourne or riveret, and which King Athelſtane graunted unto the Archbiſhops of Yorke, by the high ridge or port way raiſed up of a great heigth, we came to Aberford, a little village ſituate upon the ſaid way, famous onely for making of pinnes, which by womens iudgement are eſpecially commended as the beſt. Vnder this the little river Coc (in bookes, named Cokarus) runneth, and in the deſcent downe thereunto, the foundations of an old Caſtle, which they call Caſtle Cary, are to be ſeene. Scarce two miles from hence, at the ſpring head of Coc, ſtandeth Barwic in Elmet the roiall houſe or ſeat, by report, in times paſt of the Kings of Northumberland, which was environed about with walles, as the very ruins and ruble thereof ſeeme to teſtifie. On the other ſide is placed Heſſelwood the principall ſeat of that worthy and right ancient family of the Vavaſours, who by their office (for the Kings Valvaſors in times paſt they were) tooke to them this name: and in the latter daies of King Edward the firſt Sir William Vavaſor was called among other Barons of the Realme unto the high Court of Parliament, as appeereth in the very writs, as they call them, of Summons. Under this place lieth that moſt famous delfe or quarry of ſtone, called Peters poſt, for that with the ſtones hewed out of it, by the liberall grant of the Vavaſors, that ſtately and ſumpteous Church of Saint Peters at Yorke was reedified.

Aberford.

Cary Caſtle Barwic in Elmet.

Heſſelwood. Vavaſores or Valvaſores.

Petres-poſt.

From Aberford the ſaide riveret Coc ſpeedeth immediatly to the river Wherf, as it were, ſad, ſorrowfull, and with heavy cheere, in deteſtation of all civile warres, ſince time that he ranne all died with Engliſh bloud. For, upon his banke neere unto Towton a little country Village, was (as I may truly ſay) that our Engliſh Pharſalia. In no place ever ſaw our England ſuch puiſſant forces, ſo much gentry and nobilitie together: a hundred thouſand fighting men, and no fewer, of the one ſide and the other: Never were their leaders and Captaines of both parts more fierce, hardy, and reſolute, never more cheerefull and forward to fight; who upon Palme Sunday, in the yeere 1461. in battaile array with banner diſplaied, entred the field and encountred. And when they had continued a doubtfull and variable fight a great part of the day, at length the Lancaſtrians not able to abide any longer the violence of their enimies (the chiefe cauſe of whoſe overthrow was the diſordered vnwealdineſſe of their owne armie) turned backe and fled a maine: And thoſe that tooke part with Yorke, being eager upon execution, followed them in chaſe ſo hotely, that they had the killing of a number of noble men and gentlemen, and thirty thouſand Engliſhmen were that day left dead in the field. But I leaue this to the Hiſtorians. Somwhat lower, neere unto Shirburne, at Huddleſton a little village, is a famous Stone quarry, out of which the ſtones when they are newly heawen be very ſoft, but after they be ſeaſoned with wind and weather, they become of themſelves exceeding ſolid and hard. But (to returne) Coc making no long courſe ſheadeth himſelfe into Wherf.

The battaile at Towton.

A quarry of ſtone.

The river Wherf.

This Wherf or Wharf, in the Engliſh Saxons language Guerp, commeth downe out of Craven, and for a great while runneth in a parallel diſtance even with Are. If a man ſhould thinke the name to be wreſted from the word Guer, which in Britiſh ſignifieth Swift and Violent, verily, the nature of that river concurreth with his opinion;

A nion; For, he runneth with a ſwift and ſpeedy ſtreame, making a great noiſe as hee goeth, as if he were froward, ſtubborne, and angry; and is made more fell & teaſty with a number of ſtones lying in his chanell, which he rolleth and tumbleth before him in ſuch ſort that it is a wonder to ſee the maner of it, but eſpecially when hee ſwelleth high in winter. And verily it is a troubleſome river and dangerous even in ſummer time alſo, which I my ſelfe had experience of, not without ſome perill of mine owne, when I firſt trauailed over this country. For, it hath ſuch ſlippery ſtones in it, that an horſe can have no ſure footing on them, or elſe the violence of the water carrieth them away from under his feete. In all his long courſe which
B from the ſpring head unto Ouſe is almoſt fifty miles, he paſſeth onely by little townes of no eſpeciall account: running downe by Kilneſey Cragge, the higheſt and ſteepeſt rocke that ever I ſaw in a midland Country by Burnſall, where S. William Craven Knight and Alderman of London there borne, is now building of a Stone bridge: who alſo hard by, of a pious minde and beneficiall unto his country hath of late founded a Grammar ſchoole; alſo by Barden-Towre, a little turret belonging to the Earle of Cumberland, where there is round about good ſtore of game and hunting of fat Deere: by Bolton, where ſometime ſtood a little Abbay: by Bethmeſley, the ſeat of the notable family of Claphams, out of which came Iohn Clapham a worthy Warriour, in the Civile broiles betweene Lancaſter and Yorke. From thence com-
C meth he to Ilekely, which conſidering the ſite in reſpect of Yorke out of Ptolomee, and the affinity of the name together, I would judge to be OLICANA. Surely that it is an old towne (beſide the Columnes engraven with Roman worke lying in the Churchyard and elſewhere) and was in Severus time reedified by the meanes of *Virius Lupus, Lieutenant Generall and Proprætor then of Britaine, this inſcription lately digged up hard by the Chutch doth plainly ſhew.

Kilnſey Crag.

Olicana.
Ilekely.

* Of him Vlpian maketh mention lib. 2. de Vulgari & pupillari ſubſtitutione.

D

IM. SEVERVS.
AVG. ET ANTONINVS
CAES. DESTINATVS
RESTITVERVNT, CVRAN-
TE VIRIO LVPO. *LEG. E-
ORVM *PR. PR.

* Legato.
* Pro-pratore.

That the ſecond Cohort of the Lingones abode heere, an Altar beareth witneſſe, which I ſaw there, vpholding now the Staires of an houſe, and having this inſcription ſet upon it by the Captaine of the ſecond Cohort of the Lingones, to VERBEIA,
E haply the Nymph or Goddeſſe of Wherf, the river running thereby, which river they called VERBEIA as I ſuppoſe, out of ſo neere affinity of the names.

VERBEIÆ SACRVM CLODIVS FRONTO PRÆF. COH.
II LINGON.

F

For,

For, Rivers, as Gildas writeth, in that age, had by the blind and ignorant people of Britaine, divine honours heaped upon them. And Seneca sheweth, that in times past, Altars were erected unto them: We worship, saith he, The heads of great rivers, and the sudden breaking forth of an huge river out of an hidden and secret place hath altars consecrated unto it. Againe, All waters, as Servius Honoratus saith, had their severall Nymphs, to take the rule and protection of them. Moreover in a wall of the Church is fastened this broken and unperfect inscription.

Epist. 41.

But in the very Church it selfe, whiles I sought diligently for monuments of Romaine antiquity, I found nothing but the image in stone all armed, of Sir Adam Midleton: who seemeth to have flourished under King Edward the first, and whose posterity remaineth yet in the country heereby, at Stubham.

Otley.

More beneath standeth Otley a towne of the Archbishops of Yorke: but it hath nothing memorable, unlesse it be one high and hard craggy cliffe, called Chevin, under which it is situate. For, the ridge of an hill, the Britans terme Chevin: whence I may coniecture that that continued ridge of mountaines in France, where in old time they spake the same language that Britans did, was called Gevenna and Gebenna. After this, Wherf runneth hard by, with his bankes on both sides reared up, and consisting of that Limestone which maketh grounds fat and fertile: where I saw Harewood Castle of good strength, which by the alteration of times, hath often changed his Lords.

Chevin.
Chevin what it signifieth.
Gevenna.
Harewood.

Long since it belonged to the Curcies, but by Alice an inheritrice it came to Warin Fitz-Gerold, who had taken her to wife; whose daughter Margerie and one of his heires, being endowed with a very great estate of living, was first married unto *Baldwin de * Ripariis*, the Earles sonne of Devonshire, who died before his father: afterwards to Falque de Brent, by the beneficiall favour of King Iohn, for his approued service in pilling, polling, and spoiling most cruelly. But when at length Isabell *de * Ripariis* Countesse of Devonshire departed this life without issue: This Castle fell unto Robert de L'isle the sonne of Warin, as unto her cousin in bloud and one of her heires: in the end by those of Aldborrough, it descended to the Rithers, as I am enformed by Francis Thinn, who very diligently and iudiciously hath a long time hunted after Pedigree antiquities. Neither is Gawthorp adjoining heereby to be concealed in silence, when as the ancient family of Gascoignes descended out of Gascoigne Placit. 1. Ioan. Rot. 10. in D. Monstr. le Droit. 35. E. 1.

* Rivers or Redvers.

A coigne in France as it seemeth, hath made it famous both with their vertue and antiquitie. Gascoignes.

From hence runneth Wherf hard by Wetherby, a mercate towne of good note, which hath no antiquity at all to shew, but a place only, beneath it (they cal it usually now, Saint Helens fourd) where the high Roman street crossed over the river. From thence he passeth downe by Tadcaster, a very little towne, yet I cannot but thinke as well by the distance from other places, as by the nature of the soile, and by the name, that it was CALCARIA. For, it is about nine Italian miles from Yorke, according as Antonine hath set CALCARIA. Also the limestone which is the very soader and binder of all morter, and hardly elsewhere in this tract to be found, heere is digged B vp in great plenty and vented as farre as to Yorke and the whole countrie bordering round about, for use in building. Considering then that the said Lime, was by the Britans and Saxons in old time, and is by the Northren Englishmen called after the Roman name Calc (For, that imperious citie Rome, imposed not their yoke onely, but their language also upon the subdued nations) seeing also that in the Code of Theodosius, those bee tearmed Calcarienses who are the burners of limestone: it may not seeme absurd, if the Etymologie of the name be fetched from Calx, that is, Chalke or Lime: even as Chalcis, of χαλκος, that is, brasse, Ammon of Αμμος, that is, Sand, Pteleon, of πτελεα, that is, Elmes, and Calcaria a Citie of Cliveland, haply of Calx, that is, Lime, tooke their names: especially seeing that Bede calleth it also Calca-cester. Where he C reporteth, that Heina the first woman in this country that put on the Vaile and religious habite of a Nunne, retyred herselfe a part to this Citie, and therein made her abode. Moreover, an hill neere to the towne is called Kelc-bar, in which there lieth couched somewhat of the ancient name. Neither are there other arguments wanting, to prove the antiquity therof: For, to say nothing how it is situate upon a port high way, there be peeces of the Roman Emperours money oftentimes digged up, and the tokens of the trenches and bankes that compassed it about, the plot also where an old castle stood, yet remaining out of the reliques whereof, not many yeeres agoe was a bridge built, which when Wherf is once passed under, he becommeth more still, and so gently intermingleth his water with Ouse. And verily a thing D it is in my judgement to be wondered at, That Wherf being encreased with so many waters, in summer time runneth so shallow under this bridge, that one comming hether about mid sommer, when hee saw it, pretily and merrily versified thus:

Tadcaster, Calcaria.

Calcarienses. De Decurionibus L. 27.

The Romain Languag in Provinces. Augustin. lib. 19. de Civitate Dei.

Nil Tadcaster habet Musis, vel carmine dignum,
Præter magnificè structum sine flumine pontem.
Nought hath Tadcaster worth my Muse, and that my verse deserv's, Unlesse a faire bridge stately built, the which no river serv's.

Itinerarium, T. Edes.

E But had he come in winter time, he should have seene the bridge (so great as it was) scarce able to receiue so much water. But Naturall philosophers know full well, that both wels and rivers according to the seasons, and the heat or cold, without or within doe decrease or encrease accordingly. Wherupon in his returne he finding heere durt for dust, and full current water vnder the bridge, recanted with these verses.

Quæ Tadcaster erat sine flumine, puluere plena;
Nunc habet immensum fluuium, & propuluere lutum.

Somewhat higher Nid a muddy river runneth downe, well beset with woods on The river Nid.
F either side, out of the botome of Craven hils, first by Niderdale, a vale unto which it giveth name: and from thence carrieth his streame by Rippley a mercate towne, Rippley.
where the Inglebeys a family of great antiquity, flourished in good reputation. Afterwards, with his deepe chanell he fenseth Gnaresburg commonly called Knarsborow Castle, situate upon a most ragged and rough rocke, whence also it hath the Knarsborrow castle.
name: which, Serle de Burgh, unkle by the father side to Eustace Vescy built, as the tradition tradition holdeth: Afterward it became the ſeate of the Eſtoteviles, and now is coun A ted part of the lands, belonging to the Dutchy of Lancaſter. Under it there is a well, in which the waters ſpring not up out of the vaines of the earth but diſtill and trickle

Dropping well. downe dropping from the rockes hanging over it, whence they call it Dropping well:
A well turning wood into ſtone. into which what wood ſo ever is put, will in ſhort ſpace be covered over with a ſtonie barke and turne into ſtone, as it hath beene often obſerved. In the territorie thereby Liquirice groweth in great abundance, & a yellower and ſofter kind of marle is there found, paſſing good to make the ground fertile. The Keeper or chiefe ranger of the Foreſt adjoining, was in times paſt one Gamell: whoſe poſterity, of their habitation at Screven aſſumed the name of Screven: and from them deſcended the Slingsbies, who B received this forreſterſhip of King Edward the firſt, and to this day live heere in great and good regard. Nid having paſſed by theſe places not farre from Allerton, the ſeat of a very ancient and ſignale family of the Malliveries, who in old Deeds and records are called Mali-Leporarij, goeth on a little way, and then meeting Ouſe, aug-menteth the ſtreame of Ouſe by his confluence.

As for Vre, he alſo ſpringing out of theſe Weſterne hilles, but on the other ſide of the country, in North-Riding, when by this name he hath watered the North part of the Shire, a little before he commeth to Rippon, ſerveth for the limite dividing the North and Weſt Ridings one from another. This Rippon, in the Saxon tongue hpippun, being placed betweene Vre and Skell a rill, is beholden to religious houſes C for all the dignity it had, and eſpecially to a Monaſterie built in the primitive Church of the Engliſh-Saxons by Wilfride Archbiſhop of Yorke, and that with ſuch arched and embowed Vaults, with ſuch floorings and ſtories of ſtone worke, with ſuch turnings and windings in and out of Galleries (ſo ſaith William of Malmesbury) that it was wonder-full: Which, the Danes afterward, being ſo violent and outragious that they ſpared neither God nor man, raced, together with the towne. Yet flouriſhed it againe, repaired by meanes of Odo Archbiſhop of Canterburie: who being a very great maiſter of Ceremoniall miſteries, tranſlated from hence to Canterbury the reliques of Wilfride. But ſince the Normans arriuall, it proſpered moſt, when the Caſtles as one ſaith, of Monkes beganne to bee built in greater number: For then both the D towne grew famous partly under the chiefe Magiſtrate, whom they call by an old Wakeman Saxon word, Wakeman as one would ſay, Watchman, and partly by their induſtry in clothing which at this day is much deminiſhed: and the monaſterie likewiſe under the tuition and protection of the Archbiſhops of Yorke beganne marveilouſly to reflouriſh. Beſides, a very faire Church was there alſo built, at the charitable charges of the Noblemen and Gentry dwelling there about, and of their owne Treaſurer:
which with three high Spire-ſteeples doth welcome thoſe that come to the towne, and did as it were æmulate in workmanſhip, the wealthy Abbay of Fountaines, built within the ſight of it by Thurſtin Archbiſhop of Yorke. On the one ſide of this Church we ſaw a little College of ſinging men, which Henric Bath Archbiſhop of E
Yorke erected: on the other ſide a very great mount of earth called Hilſhow, caſt up, Saint Wilfrides Needle. as they report, by the Danes. Within the Church, Saint Wilfrides Needle, was in our grandfathers remembrance, very famous: A narrow hole this was, in the Crowdes or cloſe vaulted roome under the ground, whereby womens honeſtie was tried: For, ſuch as were chaſt did eaſily paſſe through, but as many as had playd falſe, were miraculouſly, I know not how, held faſt and could not creepe through. The Ab-bay Fountaines aforeſaid, moſt pleaſantly ſeated in a right plentifull country, and hauing lead mines neere it, had the originall from twelve præciſe Monkes of Yorke, who fervently, zealous, to ſerve God in a more ſtrict kind of life, forſooke their cloi-ſtures and addicted themſelves to the ordinances of Saint Bernard. For whom, after F they had reaped many Harveſts of troubles, Thurſtine Archbiſhop of Yorke built this Abbay, which was acknowledged an immediat daughter of Clarevalle, and in a few yeares became a mother to many others, as Kirkſtall, Salley, Meaux, &c. I have made more willingly mention of theſe, becauſe S. Bernard in his Epiſtles ſo highly approved their life, and diſcipline.

Not

A Not farre beneath, there ſtandeth by Vre a little towne called Burrow bridge, of the bridge that is made over the river: which is now built very high and faire of ſtone worke, but in King Edward the Second his time, it ſeemeth to haue beene of wood. For, wee read, that when the Nobles of England diſquieted this king and troubled the ſtate, Humfrey Bohun Earle of Hereford in his going over it; was at a chinke thereof thruſt through the body about his groine, by a ſouldiour lying cloſe under the bridge. Neere unto this bridge Weſtward, wee ſaw in three divers little fields, foure huge ſtones, of pyramidall forme, but very rudely wrought, ſet as it were in a ſtreight and direct line. The two Pyramides in the middeſt whereof the Pyramides.
B one was lately pulled downe by ſome that hoped, though in vaine, to finde treaſure did almoſt touch one another: the utter more ſtand not far off, yet almoſt in equall diſtance from theſe on both ſides. Of theſe I haue nothing elſe to ſay, but that I am of opinion with ſome, that they were monuments of victorie erected by the Romans; hard by the high ſtreet that went this way. For I willingly overpaſſe the fables of the common people, who call them the Devills Bolts which they ſhot at Divels bolts.
ancient cities and therewith overthrew them. Yet will not I paſſe over this, that very many and thoſe learned men thinke they are not made of naturall ſtone in deed, but compounded of pure ſand, lime, vitriol (whereof alſo they ſay there bee certaine ſmall graines within) and ſome unctuous matter. Of ſuch a kinde there were in Rome
C ciſterns, ſo firmely compact of very ſtrong lime and ſand, as Pliny writeth, that they ſeemed to be naturall ſtones.

A little Eaſtward from this bridge, Is-vrivm Brigantvm an ancient city, ſo Is-Vrium. called of the river Vre running by it, flouriſhed in ancient times, but was raſed to the very ground many ages paſt. Nevertheleſſe the village riſen up neare the place, giveth teſtimony of the antiquity thereof, for it is called Ealdburg and Aldborrow. Aldborrow i. Old borrow.
But, in that very plot of ground where the ſaid citie ſtood, are now arable grounds & paſtures, ſo that ſcarce any footing thereof doth apeare. Surely, the verie credite of writers ſhould haue had much a doe to make us beleeue, that this had beene Is-vrivm, but that Vre the rivers name, the Romane coine daylie digD ged up, and the diſtance according to Antonines account betwixt this and Yorke, warranted it. For, by that Vre (which the Saxons afterward named Ouſe becauſe it hath entertained Ousburne a little river) is gone ſixteene Italian miles from hence, hee runneth through the city Eboracvm or Ebvracvm, which Ptolomee in the ſecond booke of his Great Conſtruction calleth Brigantivm (if the ſaid booke Eboracum. Yorke. bee not corrupted) becauſe it was the chiefe city of the Brigantes. Ninnius calleth it Caer Ebrauc, the Britans Caer Effroc, the Saxons Euop-pic and Eoforp-pic, and wee at this day, Yorke.

The Britiſh hiſtory reporteth, that it tooke name of King Ebrauc the founder: yet giue mee leaue to deeme conjecturally, without the prejudice to others
E that the name Eb-vracvm is derived from nothing elſe but from the river Vre, ſo that it ſoundeth as much as by Vre, or along the ſide of Vre: for, even ſo the Ebvrovices in France, were ſeated by the river Eure, neere unto Eureux in Normandie: Semblably the Eb-vrones in the Netherlands, neere unto the river Oure in the Diœceſe of Lhuick: and Eb-lana in Ireland ſtandeth hard by the river Leſny. This is the ſecond city of England, the faireſt in all this country, & a ſingular ſafegard and ornament both, to all the North-parts. A pleaſant place, large, and ſtately, well fortified, beautifully adorned as well with private as publike buildings, rich, populous, and to the greater dignity thereto it hath an Archiepiſcopall See. Vre, which now is called Ouſe, flowing with a gentle ſtreame from the North part Southward
F cutteth it as I ſaid in twaine, and divideth it, as it were, into two cities, which are conjoined with a ſtone bridge, having the mighteſt arch one of them, that ever I ſaw.

The Weſt part, nothing ſo populous, is compaſſed in with a verie faire wall and the river together, foureſquarewiſe, and giveth entrance to thoſe that come thither at one onely gate, named Mikel Barre, as one would ſay, The great gate. From which a long ſtreet and a broade, reacheth to the very bridge, and the ſame ſtreete A beſet with proper houſes having gardens and orchards planted on the back-ſide on either hand, and behinde them fieldes even hard to the walles, for exerciſe and diſports. In the South angle whereof which they and the river make betweene them, I ſaw a mount, raiſed, as it ſeemeth, for ſome caſtle to be built upon it, called the old Bale; which, William Melton Archbiſhop, as wee reade in the Archbiſhops liues ſtrongly encloſed, firſt, with thicke planckes, eighteene foot long; afterward with a ſtone-wall: yet there is nothing of all that, now to bee ſeene.

Foſſ-river. The Eaſt ſide wherein the houſes ſtand very thicke and the ſtreetes bee narrower, in forme reſembleth as it were a lentill, and is fortified alſo with very ſtrong walles B and on the South-caſt, defended with the deepe chanell of Foſſe a muddy river, which entring into the heart of the citie by a blinde way, hath a bridge over it, with houſes ſtanding upon it ſo cloſe ranged one by another, that any man would judge it, to bee not a bridge, but a continued ſtreete; and ſo a little lower runneth into Ouſe: where at their confluence, and meeting together, right over againſt the mount that I ſpake of, King William the Conquerour in a very convenient place raiſed a moſt ſtrong caſtle to awe the Citizens. Upon which, time hath now a great while without empeachment wrought his will; ever ſince that Engliſhmen fell to neglect ſtrong holds, as receptacles for thoſe whoſe hearts would not ſerue to fight in open field. C

On this ſide alſo toward the North-eaſt, ſtandeth the Cathedrall church dedicated to Saint Peter, an excellent faire fabrique and a ſtately; neere unto which, without the walles of the city, but yet encloſed within walles and by the river, flouriſhed a renowned Abbay called Saint Maries, which Alan the Third, Earle of Little Britan in Armorica and of Richmund, built and endowed with rich livings: but The Manour. now it is converted into the Princes houſe, and is commonly called The Manour.

Whence I ſhould fetch the originall of Yorke but from the Romans I cannot tell, ſeeing the Britans before the Romans comming had no other townes, than woods fenſed with trenches and rampier, as Cæſar and Strabo unreprovable authors D doe teſtifie. To ſay nothing therefore of King Ebrauk, whom ſome men both curious and credulous, as it ſhould ſeeme, haue imagined out of the name of Eboracum (for ſo is Yorke in Latin termed) to haue beene the founder thereof: moſt certaine it is, that the Sixt Legion Victrix, which Hadrian there Emperor brought out of Germany over into Britaine was placed here in garizon. And that it was a Colonie of the Romans, it appeereth both by the authority of Ptolomee, and Antonine, and alſo by an ancient Inſcription, which I ſaw in a certaine Aldermans houſe there in theſe words.

E

M. VEREC. DIOGENES IIIII VIR
COL. EBOR. IDEMQ. MORT CIVES
BITVRIX. HÆC SIBI VIVUS FECIT.

As alſo by a peece of money coined by the Emperor Severus, in the reverſe whereof we read.

F

COL. EBORACVM. LEG. VI. VICTRIX.

But

A But how it is, that Victor in his Historie of the Cæsars, hath called Yorke Municipium or free towne of Britaine, being, as it was a Colony, I require farther time to deliberat thereupon, unlesse it were, that the inhabitants of Yorke, like as sometime the Prenestines did chose rather from a Colonie to be brought unto the state of a free-Burgh. For, Colonies having, as Agellius writeth, lawes, customes and rights at the will of the people of Rome and not at their owne pleasure, seemed more obnoxious, and their condition not so free: whereas free Cities, such as in Latin are named Municipia, used rights, lawes and orders of their owne, and the Citizens or Burgesses thereof were partakers with the people of Rome in their honorable offices onely, & B bound of necessity to nothing else. No mervaile therefore, if Colonies were changed into Free burroughs. But to what end stand I upon this point? This difference of the name is not in the story of the Emperors so exactly observed, but that one and the selfe same place is called both a Colony, and a Municipium, or free city. Howbeit out of that peece of mony I dare not constantly affirme, that Severus first conducted and planted this Colonie, seeing that Ptolomee and Antonine, himselfe writeth it was the seat of the sixth legion in the Antonines time. But we read that Severus had his palace in this City, and here at the houre of death gaue up his last breath with these words: I entred upon a state every where troublesome, and I leaue it peaceable even to the Britains. His body was carried forth here to the funerall fire by the soldiors, after the C military fashion, and committed to the flames, honoured with Iusts and Turneaments of his soldiours and his owne sonnes, in a place beneath this City Westward nere to Ackham, where is to bee seene a great mount of earth raised up, which as Raulph Niger hath recorded, was in his time, of Severus, called Sivers. His ashes being bestowed in a little golden pot, or vessell of the Porphyrite stone, were carried to Rome, and shrined there in the monument of the Antonines. At which time there was in this city the temple of Goddesse Bellona. For, Spartianus speaking of Severus and this very city, saith thus. When Severus returned and came into the City, purposing to offer sacrifice, he was led first of all to the Temple of Bellona, by the errour of a rusticall Augur or Soothsaying priest. At which time the Tribunall or Iustice Haul of this city was D in this respect most happy, because therein sat to minister justice that Oracle of the law, Aemilius Paulus Papinianus, as Forcatulus witnesseth. And from this place it was, for certaine, that Severus and Antoninus Emperours beeing consulted in a case or question of Right, gaue forth their Imperiall constitution De rei Vindicatione. An hundered yeeres or thereabout after the death of Severus. Fl. Valerius Constantius surnamed Chlorus, an Emperour surpassing in all vertue and christian piety, who came hether when the Gods, as the Panegyrist saith, called him now to the inmost entry and dore of the earth, ended his life also in this city and was deified, as we may see by ancient coines. And albeit Florilegus recordeth, that his tombe was found in Wales, as I haue said; yet men of credite haue enformed me, that in E our fathers remembrance, when Abbaies were suppressed and pulled downe, in a certaine vault or crowdes or a little chappell under the ground wherein Constantius was supposed to haue beene buried, there was found a lampe burning: for, Lazius writeth, that in ancient time they preserved light in Sepulchres, by resolving gold artificially into a liquid and fatty substance, which should continue burning a long time and for many ages together.

That Victor whom Andrew Scot set forth of late.

Severus.

The Temple of Bellona.

L.1.C. Constantius

This Emperour begat of his former wife Helena CONSTANTINE THE GREAT, THE DELIVERER OF ROME CITY, as ancient inscriptions giue testimony, THE FOVNDER OF PEACE, AND THE REPAIRER OF THE COMMON VVEALTH: Who was present in Yorke at his fathers last gaspe, and forwith proclamed Emperour, The soldiours, as the Panegyricall oratour saith, regarding rather the good of the state, than private affections, cast the purple robe upon him, whiles hee wept and put spurs to his horse, to avoide the importunity of the army attempting and requiring so instantly to make him Emperour: But the happinesse of the state overcame his modesty. Whence it is that the Author of the Panegyrical oration crieth out in these words, O fortunate Britaine and now blessed aboue al lands, which first sawest Constantine Emperor.

Constantine the Great.

Hence it may be gathered, in what, & how great estimation Yorke was in those daies, seeing the Roman Emperours Court was there held. For, our owne country writers record, that this City was by Constantius adorned and graced with an Episcopall See: But yet, that Taurinus the Martyr Bishop of Eureux sat heere and governed, I will not say as others doe. For, Vincentius out of whom they sucked this error, would by his own words convince me of untruth. But when the Romans were departed and had left Britaine for a prey to Barbarous nations, this City sore afflicted with many calamities, suffered her part also of miseries, and was little or nothing better about the end of the Scotish and Saxons warres, than a poore small shadow of a great name. For, when Paulinus preached Christian religion to the English Saxons in this country, it lay so desolate, that there remained not so much as a chappell in it, for King Edwin to bee baptized in. Who in the yeere after Christs birth 627. built a little oratorie of woode: and when as afterward hee went in hand with building a greater Church of stone, scarce had hee laied the foundation thereof, when he was prevented by death and left it to be finished by his successour Oswald. Ever since that time, the Ecclesiasticall dignity in this Church encreased, and by a Pall sent unto it from Honorius the Pope, became a Metropolitane City; which beside twelue Bishoprickes in England, exercised the powre of a Primate over all the Bishops of Scotland. But many yeeres since, Scotland withdrew it selfe from this her Metropolitane: and the Metropolitane City it selfe hath so devoured other Bishoprickes adjoyning, beeing but little to say truth and of small account, that it hath now but foure within the owne Diœcese, namely, the Bishoprickes of Durham, of Chester, of Carlile, and of Man, or Sodorensis in the Isle of Man. And the Archbishop Egbert, who flourished about the yeere of our salvation 740. erected at Yorke, a most famous Library, the Cabinet as I may so terme it (these bee the words of William of Malmesbury) and closet of all liberall Artes. Touching which Librarie, Alcwin of Yorke scholemaster to Charles the Great, first founder of the University of Paris, and the onely Honour of this City, in an Epistle to the said Charles wrote thus. Giue mee the bookes of deeper and more exquisite scholasticall learning, such as I had in mine owne Country by the good and most devout industry of the Archbishop Egbert. And if it please your wisdome, I will send backe some of your owne servants, who may exemplifie out of them all those things that bee necessary, and bring the flowres of Britaine into France, that there may not bee a garden of learniug enclosed onelie within Yorke walles; but that streames of Paradise may bee also at Towrs.

Vincentij Speculum historiale.

Scotland in times past, subject to the Archbishop of Yorke.

See in Scotland.

A Library. Flaccus Alcwinus or Albinus flourished. anno. 780.

Then also it was that Princes bestowed many and great livings and lands upon the Church of Yorke, especially Vlphus the sonne of Toral (I note so much out of an old booke, that there may plainly appeere a custome of our ancestour in endowing Churches with livings). This Vlphus aforesaid ruled in the West part of Deira, and by reason of the debate that was like to arise betweene his sonnes the elder and the yonger, about their Lordships and Seignories after his death, forthwith hee made them all alike. For, without delay hee went to Yorke, tooke the horne with him out of which hee was wont to drinke, filled it with wine, and before the Altar of God and blessed Saint Peter Prince of the Apostles, kneeling upon his knees hee dranke, and thereby enfeoffed them in all his lands and revenewes. Which horne was there kept as a monument (as I haue heard) untill our fathers daies.

I might seeme to speake in derogation of the Clergie, if I should report what secret heart-burnings, or rather open enmities flashed out betweene the Archbishops of Yorke and of Canterbury upon worldly ambition; whiles with great wast of their wealth, but more losse of their credite and reputation, they bickered most egerly about the Primacie. For, the Church of Yorke, as he writeth (inferiour though it were unto that of Canterbury in riches) yet being equall in dignity, albeit of later time founded: and advanced on high with the same powre that Canterbury hath, confirmed also with the like authority of Apostolical priviledges, tooke it ill to be subject unto that of Canterbury by vertue of a Decree of Alexander of Rome, who ordained, That the Church of Yorke ought to be subject unto Canterbury, and in al things to obey the constitutions of the Arch-

A Archbiſhop therof, as Primate of al Britain, in ſuch matters as appertaine to Chriſtian religion. Cõcerning the Archbiſhops of Yorke, it is no part verily of my purpoſe to write any thing here, although there be very many of them who deſerue for their vertue and piety to be renowned. Let it ſuffice to note in a word, that from Paulinus the firſt Archbiſhop, conſecrated in the yeere of our redemptiom 625. there haue ſitten in that See three ſcore and fiue Archbiſhops, unto the yeere 1606. in which D. Tobie Matthew a moſt reverend Prelate, for the ornaments of vertue and piety, for learned eloquence, and continuall exerciſe of teaching, was tranſlated hether from the Biſhoprick of Durrham. The Sixty Sixth Archbiſhop.

This Citie for a time flouriſhed very notably under the Engliſh Saxons dominion, untill the Danes like a mighty ſtorme thundring from out of the North-eaſt, de-
B faced it againe with merveilous great ruines, and by killing and ſlaying diſteined it with bloud, which, that Alcuine aforeſaid in his Epiſtle to Egelred King of Northumberland may ſeeme to haue preſaged before, What ſignifieth (ſaith he) that raining of bloud which in Lent we ſaw at Yorke the head City of the whole Kingdome, in Saint Peters Church, to fall downe violently in threatning wiſe from the top of the rouſe, in the North part of the houſe, and that in a faire day: May it not be thought, that bloud is comming upon the Land from the North parts? Verily ſoone after it was embrued with bloud, and did pine away with moſt miſerable calamities, when the Danes ſpoiled, waſted, and murthered all where ever they came. And verily in the yeere 867. the C wals were ſo battered and ſhaken by reaſon of continuall warres, that Osbright and Ella Kings of Northumberland, whiles they purſewed the Danes eaſily brake into the City: who being both of them ſlaine in a moſt bloudy battaile in the very mideſt of the City, left the victory unto the Danes. Whereupon William of Malmesbury writeth in this manner. Yorke, alwaies expoſed firſt to the rage of the Northren Nations, ſuſteined the Barbarous aſſaults of the Danes, and groaned beeing piteouſly ſhaken with manifold ruines. But as the very ſame Author witneſſeth, K. Athelſtone wonne it perforce out of the Danes hands, and overthrew the Caſtle quite, which they had here fortified. Neither for all this, was it altogether free from warres in the times next enſuing whiles that age ranne fatall for the deſtruction of cities.

But the Normans, as they ended theſe miſeries, ſo they made almoſt a finall hand
D of Yorke alſo. For, when the ſonnes of Sueno the Dane had landed in theſe parts with a Daniſh fleete of 240. ſaile, the Normans lying in garrizon, who kept two forts within the City, fearing leaſt the houſes in the ſuburbes might ſtand the enemy in ſteed to fill up the ditches withall, ſet them on fire: but by reaſon the winde roſe highly, the fire was ſo carried and ſpred throughout that City, that now it was ſet a burning, when the Danes breaking in upon them made pitifull ſlaughter in every place, having putting the Normans to the ſword, and keeping aliue William Mallet and Gilbert Gant two principall perſons, that they might be tithed with the ſoldiors. For, every tenth man of the Normans they choſe out by lot, to be executed. Where-
E upon King William the Conqueror was ſo incenſed with deſire of revenge, that he ſhewed his cruelty upon the citizens by putting them all to death, as if they had taken part with the Danes: and upon the citie it ſelfe by ſetting it on fire a freſh; and as William of Malmsbury ſaith, hee ſo depopulated and defaced the villages adjoyning, and the ſinews of that fertile region were ſo cut by the ſpoiles there committed and bootes raiſed, and the ground for the ſpace of three ſcorce miles lay ſo untilled, that if a ſtranger had then ſeene the Cities that in times were of high account, the towres which with their lofty tops threatned the skie, and the fields that were rich in paſtures, hee could not but ſigh and lament, yea and if an ancient inhabitant had beheld the ſame, hee could not haue knowne them. How great Yorke had beene afore-time, Domeſday booke ſhall tel you
F in theſe words. In King Edward the Confeſſours time, there were in Yorke City ſixe Diviſions or Shires, beſides that of the Archbiſhops. One was layd waſt, for the Caſtles or forts. In the five Diviſions were 1428. dwelling manſions to giue entertainement: And, in the Archbiſhops ſhire or Diviſion 200. dwelling Manſions likewiſe. After theſe wofull overthrowes our Country man Necham thus verſified of it.

Alfred of Beverley, in the Library of the Lord Burghley Treaſurer of England.

Decimation, or Execution of every tenth man.

Visito quam fœlix Ebraucus condidit vrbem
Petro se debet pontificalis apex
Ciuibus hæc toties viduata, nouisque repleta,
Diruta prospexit mœnia sæpe sua.
Quid manus hostilis queat, est experta frequenter,
Sed quid? nunc pacis otia longa fouent.

The City that Great Ebrauk built, I come now for to view, Whereof the See pontificall, is to Saint Peter due.
This, many times laid desolate, and peopled new hath beene,
Her wals cast downe and ruinate full often hath it seene.
What mischeife hostile hands could worke, not once nor twice it found,
What then? since now, long time of peace, doth keepe it safe and sound.

For, in his time, when after these troublesome stormes a most pleasant calme of peace presently ensewed, it rose of it selfe againe and flourished a fresh, although the Scots and Rebels both, did often times make full account to destroy it. But under the reigne of K. Stephen, it caught exceeding great harme by casualty of fire, wherin were consumed the Cathedrall church, the Abbay of S. Mary and other religious houses: yea and that noble and most furnished library (as it is thought which Alcuin hath recorded to haue bin founded by Archbishop Egeldred his Præceptour. As for the Abbay of S. Mary it quickly recovered the former dignity by new buildings: but the Cathedral Church lay longer ere it held up head againe, & not before K. Edw. the first his time: For then, Iohn Roman Treasurer of the Church laid the foundation of a new worke, which his son Iohn, William Melton, and Iohn Thoresby, all of them Archbishops, brought by little and little to that perfection and beauty which now it sheweth, yet not without the helping hand of the nobility and gentry thereabout, especially of the Percies and the Vavasours, which the Armes of their houses standing in the very Church, and their images at the West gate of the Church doe shew, Percies pourtraied with a peece of timber, and Vavasours with a stone in their hands, for that the one supplied the stone, the other the timber for this new building. This Church as he reporteth who wrote the life of Aeneas Sylvius, who was Pope Pius the second, and that upon the Popes owne relation, for workmanship and greatnesse, is memorable over all the world, and the Chappell most lightsome, the glasse windowes whereof are fast bound betweene pillers that bee most slender in the mids. This chapell is that most dainty and beautifull Chapter house, in which this verse stands painted in golden letters.

Commentar. of Pope Pius. Lib. prim.

Vt Rosa flos florum, sic est Domus ista Domorum.

The floure of floures, a Rose men call:
So is this house of houses all.

About the same time also, the Citizens fensed the city round about with new walles and many towres and bulwarkes set orderly in divers places, yea and ordeined very good and holsome lawes for the government thereof. King Richard the Second granted it to be a County incorporate by it selfe, and King Richard the Third began to repaire the castle. And that nothing might be wanting, King Henry the Eighth within the memory of our fathers, appointed here a Councell not unlike to the Parliaments in France, for to decide and determine the causes and controversies of these North parts according to equity and conscience, which consisteth of a Lord President, certaine Counsellers at the Princes pleasure, a Secretarie and under officers. As touching the Longitude of Yorke our Mathematicians have described it to be two and twenty degrees and twenty fiue scruples: the Latitude 54. degrees and 10. scruples. Hitherto haue we treated of the West part of this shire and of Yorke Citie, which is reckoned neither in the one part, nor the other, but enjoyeth peculiar liberties, and hath iurisdiction over the territorie adjoining on the West side. Which they call the Libertie of Ansty, others the Ancienty of the Antiquitie

The Councel established in the North.

A quitie: but others have derived it very probably from the Dutch word Anſtoſſen, which detokeneth limits. And now for a concluſion have heere what M. Iohn Ionſton of Aberden hath but a while ſince written in verſe, of York.

Præſidet extremis Arctoæ finibus oræ
Vrbs vetus, in veteri facta ſubinde noua.
Romanis Aquilis quondam Ducibuſque ſuperba.
Quam poſt barbaricæ diripuere manus.
Pictus atrox, Scotus, Danus, Normannus, & Anglus
Fulmina in hanc Martis detonuere ſui.
B Poſt diras rerum clades, totque aſpera fata,
Blandiùs aſpirans aura ſerena ſubit.
LONDINVM caput eſt, & regni vrbs prima Britanni:
EBORACVM à prima iure ſecunda venit.

In parts remote of Northren tract, there ſtands as ſoveraine,
A Citie old, but yet of old eftſoones made new againe.
Whilom of Romaine legions and Captaines proud it was:
But ſince by forces barbarous ſacked and ſpoiled, alaſſe.
The Picts ſo fierce, the Scots and Danes, Normans and Engliſhmen, Gainſt it their bolts of dreadfull warre have thunderd now and then
C Yet after ſundry bitter blaſts, and many a curſed clap,
A milder gale of peacefull daies, hath brought it better hap.
Of Britiſh kingdome LONDON is chiefe ſeat and principall,
And unto it there goes by right Yorke Citie next of all.

Ouſe now leaving Yorke, being other whiles diſquieted & troubled with that whirling encounter of contrary waters, and forceable eddies which ſome call Higra, runneth downe through Biſhops Thorpe, called Saint Andrews Thorpe, before that Walter Grey Archbiſhop of Yorke purchaſed it with ready money, and to prevent the Kings Officers who are wont rigorouſly to ſeize upon Biſhops Temporalties when the See is vacant, gave it to the Deane and Chapter of Yorke, with this con- Biſhops Thorp.
D dition that they ſhould alwaies yeeld to it his Succeſſours. Of whom, Richard Le Stcrope Archbiſhop of Yorke, a man of a firie ſpirit, & ready to entertaine rebellion, was condemned in this very place, of high treaſon by King Henrie the fourth, a- Cawood.
gainſt whom he had raiſed an inſurrection. Afterward Cawood a caſtle of the Archbiſhops ſtandeth upon the ſame river, which King Athelſtan, as I have read, gaue unto the Church: Iuſt againſt which on the other ſide of the river lieth Ricall, where Harald Hardread arrived with a great fleet of Danes. Then Ouſe paſſeth hard by Selby a little towne, well peopled and of good reſort; where King Henrie the firſt was borne, and where his father King William the firſt built a faire Abbay in memorie of Saint German, who happily confuted that venemous Pelagian hæreſie, which of-
E ten times (as the ſerpent Hydra) grew to an head againe in Britaine. The Abbats of this Church, as alſo of Saint Maries in Yorke, were the only Abbats in the North-parts that had place in the Parliament houſe. And ſo Ouſe at length ſpeedeth away to Humber, leaving firſt Eſcricke a ſeat of the Laſcelles ſomtimes to be remembred for that K. Iames aduaunced S. Thomas Kniuet the owner therof L. Kniuet to the honor of L. Kniuet.
Baron Kniuet of Eſcrick, in the yere 1607. And afterward paſſing by Drax, a religious houſe of Chanons founded there by S. William Painell, & whereas William of Newburgh writeth, Philip of Tollevilla had a caſtle moſt ſtrongly fenſed, with rivers, wods, and mariſhes about it, which he, confident upon the courage of his folowers, and his proviſion of victuals and armour, defended againſt King Stephen; vntill it was won F by aſſault.

EAST-

A

EAST-RIDING.

Eaſtriding

EAſt-Riding the ſecond part of this region, wherein Ptolomee placed the Parisi, lieth Eaſtward from Yorke. On the North ſide and the Weſt, it is bounded with the river B *Darwent, that runneth downe with a winding courſe: on the South with the Salt water of Humber, & on the Eaſt with the German Ocean. Vpon the Sea ſide and along Darwent the ſoile is meetly good and fertile: But in the mids it is nothing elſe but an heape of hilles riſing up on high, which they call Yorkes wold. Darwent ſpringing not farre from the ſhore, firſt taketh his way Weſtward: then, he windeth into the South by Aiton and Malton; whereof, becauſe they belong to the North part of the Shire, I will ſpeake in due place. No ſooner is hee entred into this quarter, but downe he runneth not farre from the ruins of the old Caſtle Montferrant. The Lords whereof were in times paſt the Foſſards, men of noble parentage & welthy withall: C But when William Foſſard ward to the King, being committed unto William le Groſſe Earle of Aumarle as to his guardian, and now come to his yeeres, abuſed his ſiſter; the Earle in wreckfull diſpleaſure for this fact of his, laid this Caſtle even with the ground, and forced the young Gentleman to forſake his country. Howbeit, after the Earles death, he recovered his inheritance againe, and left one onely daughter behind him: who being married unto R. de Tornham, bare a daughter maried to Peter de * Mauley: whoſe heires and ſucceſſours being bettered in their eſtate by this inheritance of the Foſſards, became great and honorable Barons. Not farre from hence is ſituate upon the river ſide, Kirkham, as one would ſay of Church-place: D For, a Priory of Chanons was there founded by Walter Eſpec a man of high place and calling, by whoſe daughter a great eſtate accrewed to the family of the L. Roſſes. Then, but ſomewhat lower, Darwent had a Citie of his owne name, which Antonine the Emperour calleth Derventio, and placeth it ſeven miles from Yorke. The booke of Notices maketh mention of a captaine over the companie Derventienſis under the Generall of Britaine, that reſided in it: and in the Saxons Empire it ſeemeth to have beene that towne, where the King uſed to lie, which Bede ſaith, was ſituate neere unto the river Doroventio. In which, as he alſo writeth, Eumer, that murderous villaine thruſt at Edwin King of Northumberland with a ſword and had runne him through, but that one of his men ſtepped betweene, and ſaved the Kings E life with the loſſe of his own. Yet could I never haue ſaid preciſely which was the very place, had not that moſt judicious Robert Marſhall given me a light thereof. For, he gave me to underſtand, that juſt at the very ſame diſtance from Yorke which I ſpake of, there ſtands hard upon the river Darwent, a little towne named Auldby, that is, if you interpret the Saxon word, The old Habitation: where, are extant yet in ſight ſome tokens of antiquity, and upon a very high hill neere unto the river, the rubbiſh of an ancient fortification, ſo that it cannot chuſe, but to have beene the ſaid Citie Derventio. From hence glideth the river hard under Stanford-Bridge, which alſo of the battaile there fought is called Battlebridge. For, at that bridge, Harald King of England, after a great execution done upon the Danes ſlew in a pight field Harald Hardread King of Norway, who with a fleete of 200. ſaile grieuouſly annoied the F Iſle of Britaine, and was now landed at Richall, ſpoiling and waſting all in his way. The King of England who having the honour of the field, found among the ſpoiles ſuch a maſſe of gold, as that twelve luſtie young men, had much a doe to carry it on their backes, as Adam Bremenſis recordeth. This field was foughten ſcarce nine daies before the arriuall of William Conquerour, what time the diſſolute and roiotous life

Mont ferrent Hiſtorie of Meaux.

* de Malolacu.

Battlebridge.

life of the Englishmen, seemed to foretell their imminent overthrow and destruction. But of this I have spoken before. A

Derwent, which when it is encreased with raine, and as it were provoked to anger doth often time contemne his bankes and surround the medowes lying about it, passing from hence by Wreshil a proper and a strong Castle, which Sir Thomas Percy Earle of Worcester built, runneth a maine under Babthorpe, which yeeldeth both name & habitation to a worshipfull family of Knights degree: and so at length dischargeth himselfe into Ouse. Out of this stocke it was (for let us not thinke much to tell of those who performed faithfull service to their Prince and country) that both father and sonne fighting together under the banner of King Henrie the Sixth lost their lives in the battaile of Saint Albans, and were there buried together with this Epitah: B

Cum patre Radulpho Babthorp iacet ecce Radulphus
Filius, hoc duro marmore pressus humo,
Henrici Sexti dapifer, pater Armiger eius,
Mors satis id docuit, fidus vterque fuit. &c.

Behold where two Raulph Babthorps, both the Sonne and father lie,
Under a stone of marble hard, enterrd in this mould drie: C
To Henrie Sixth the father Squire, the Sonne he Sewer was, Both true to Prince, and for his sake they both their life did passe.

Howden. And now Ouse by this time carrying a fuller streame, runneth neere Howden a mercate towne, famous not so much for any beauty in it, or great resort thereto, as because it hath given name to a little Territorie adjoining, called of it Howdenshire, and had therein not long since a prety collegiat Church of fiue Prebendaries: unto which joineth the Bishops house of Durrham who have great lands thereabout. One of which, namely Walter Skirlaw, who flourished about the yeere of our Lord 1390. as we read in the booke of Durrham, built a very great and large steeple to this Church, that if there happened by chance any inundation, it might serve the inhabitants for a place of refuge to save themselves in. And not farre from hence stands Metham, which gave both surname and habitation also to the ancient house of the Methams. D

Metham.

Abus. Humber. Now the river Ouse being very broad, swift and roring besides, out poureth his streame into the Frith or salt water Abvs: For so calleth Ptolomee that arme of the Sea, which the English Saxons and we tearme Humber whereof also the country beyond it, by a generall name was called Northumberland. Both these names may seeme to have beene drawne with some little change, from the British word Aber, which among them signifieth the mouth of a river: and I would thinke it was imposed upon this river by way of excellencie; because Vre or Ouse having entertained and lodged many rivers, carieth them all with him along into this, yea and other rivers of right great name are empted into it. And verily it is one of the broadest armes of the sea and best stored with fish in all Britaine. It riseth high as the Ocean, at every tid floweth, and when the same ebbeth and returneth backe, it carieth his owne streame and the current of the sea together most forcibly and with a mighty noise, not without great danger of such as saile therein, whence Necham writeth thus of it. E

Fluctibus æquoreis nautis suspectior Humber,
Dedignans Vrbes visere rura colit.
More fear'd of shipmen Humber streame, than waves of sea so deep; F
Disdaining cities great to see, neere country townes doth keepe.

And following the British Historie, as if it had beene so called of a King of the Hunnes, he addeth this moreover.

Hunnorum

A Hunnorum princeps oſtendens terga Locrino
Submerſus, nomen contulit Humbris aquæ.
A prince of Hunnes, whiles that he ſhewed his backe to Locrine brave,
Was drowned heere, and ſo the name, to Humber water gave.

Touching whom another Poet alſo,

Dum fugit, obſtat ei flumen, ſubmergitur illic;
Deq; ſuo tribuit nomine nomen aquæ.
Whiles he turn'd backe, and tooke his flight, the river ſtopt the ſame,
B There drownd was he, and then of him the water tooke the name.

Neither were there indeed any cities ſeene to ſtand by this Arme of the Sea in Nechams daies: but before and after, there flouriſhed one or two Cities in theſe places. Under the Roman Empire, not farre from the banke, by Foulneſſe a river of ſmal account, where Wighton a little towne of husbandry well inhabited is now ſeene, ſtood, as we may well thinke, in old time DELGOVITIA: and that I may not take hold of the diſtance from DERVENTIO for a proofe, both the reſemblance, and the ſignification alſo of the name, doe concurre. For, Delgwe in the Britiſh tongue ſignifieth The Statues or Images of the Heathen Gods, and in a ſmall village adjoining to
C this little towne, there was a temple of Idols even in the Saxons time, of exceeding great name, and requeſt: which, of thoſe Heathen gods was then tearmed Godmundingham, and now is called in the ſame ſenſe Godmanham*. Neither doubt I, but that even when the Britans flouriſhed, it was ſome famous Oracle much frequented, when ſuperſtition ſpred, & ſwaying among all nations had wholy poſſeſſed the weak minds of ignorant people. But when Paulinus preached Chriſt, unto Northumberland men, Coy-fi, who had beene a Pontife or Biſhop of the heathen rites and ceremonies, after hee had once embraced Chriſtian religion, Firſt of all profaned this Temple the very habitation of impiety, by launcing a ſpeare againſt it, yea hee deſtroyed it, and as Bede writeth, Set it on fire, with all the encloſures and Iſles
D belonging to it. From hence, ſome thing more Eaſtward, the river Hull bendeth his courſe to Humber, which river hath his ſpring head neere unto Driſfeild, a village well knowne, by reaſon of the tombe of Alfred that moſt learned King of Northumberland; and the mounts that be raiſed heere and there about it. The ſaid river haſteneth thitherward, not farre from Leckenfielde, an houſe of the Percies Earles of Northumberland: neere unto which, ſtandeth the dwelling place of a very famous and ancient progenie of the Hothams at Schorburg; together with the rubbiſh of an old Caſtle of Peter Mauley at Garthum. And now approcheth the river Hull neerer unto Beverley, in the Engliſh Saxon tongue called Beuep-leȝa, which Bede ſeemeth to name, the Monaſterie in Deirwaud, that is, In the word of the Deiri,
E a great towne, very populous and full of trade. A man would gueſſe it by the name and ſituation to be PETVARIA PARISIORVM, although it affordeth nothing of greater antiquity, than that Iohn ſurnamed de Beverley, Archbiſhop of Yorke, a man as Bede witneſſeth, both godly and learned, after he had given over his Biſhopricke, as weary of this world, came hither, & ended his life in contemplation, about the yeere of our redemption 721. The Kings held the memoriall of this Iohn ſo ſacred and reverend, eſpecially King Athelſtan who honored him as his tutelar Saint, after hee had put the Danes to flight, that they endowed this place with many and thoſe very great priviledges, and Athelſtane granted them liberties in theſe generall
F words, Als free make I thee, as heart may thinke, or eie may ſee. Yea and there was granted unto it the priviledges of a Sanctuarie, ſo that bankrupts and men ſuſpected of any capital crime worthy of death, might be free & ſafe there from danger of the law. In which there was erected a Chaire of ſtone with this inſcription.

Bede.
* Gods Church or habitation.
Driſeild.
Beverley.
Petuaria.
The life of Iohn of Beverley.
Pat 5. H. 4.

HÆC

A

HÆC SEDES LAPIDEA Freedſtooll
DICITVR i. PACIS CATHEDRA, AD
QVAM REVS FVGIENDO PERVE-NIENS OMNIMODAM HABET SECVRITATEM.

That is,

B

This ſeat of Stone is called Freedſtool, that is, The chaire of Peace, unto which what offender ſoever flieth and commeth, hath all maner of ſecurity.

Heereby, the towne grew great, & daily there flocked hither a number to dwell as inmates; and the townesmen for conveiance of commodities by ſea made a chanell for a water courſe out of the river Hull ſufficient to carry boats and barges. For the chiefe Magiſtracie there, it had twelve wardens: afterwards Governours and Wardens. And now, by the gracious grant of Queene Elizabeth, a Major and Governours. More Eaſtward, there flouriſhed Meaux Abbay, ſo called of one Gamell borne at Meaux in France, who obtained it at William the Conquerours hands for a place to dwell in: and heere was founded an Abbay for the Monkes of the Cluniacke order by William Le Groſſe Earle of Aulbemarle, to be releaſed of his vow that he had made to viſite Ieruſalem. A little lower runneth out in a great length Cottingham, a country towne of husbandry, where by licence granted from King Iohn, Robert Eſtotevill the Lord thereof built a Caſtle now utterly fallen to ruine. Which Robert, was deſcended from Robert Grondebeoſe, or Grandebeoſe a Baron of Normandie, and a man of great name and reputation: whoſe inheritance fell by marriage to the Lord de Wake, and by a daughter of Iohn de Wake it came to Edmund Earle of Kent, who had a daughter named Ioane wife unto that moſt warlicke Knight Edw. Prince of Wales, who ſo often victoriouſly vanquiſhed the French in divers places. The river Hull aforeſaid, after it hath paſſed ſix miles from hence ſheddeth himſelfe into Humber, and neere unto his mouth hath a towne of his owne name called Kingſton upon Hull, but commonly Hull. This towne fetcheth the beginning from no great antiquity: For, King Edward the firſt, who in regard of his Princely vertues deſerveth to bee ranged among the principall and beſt Kings that ever were, having well vewed and conſidered the opportunity of the place which before time was called Wike, had it by right of exchange from the Abbat of Meaux, and in lieu of the Beaſts ſtalls* and ſheepe paſtures: as I conceive it which there he found, built a towne that he named Kingſton, as one would ſay, The Kings towne; and there, as we read in the records of the Kingdome, hee made an haven and free Burgh, the inhabitants thereof alſo free Burgeſſes, and he granted divers liberties to them. And by little and little it roſe to that dignity, that for ſtately and ſumpteous buildings, for ſtrong blockhouſes, for well furniſhed ſhips, for ſtore of Merchants and abundance of all things it is become now the moſt famous towne of Merchandiſe in theſe parts. All which the inhabitants aſcribe partly to Michael De la-Pole, who obtained their priviledges for them, after that King Richard the Second had promoted him to the honor of Earle of Suffolke, and partly their gainfull trade by Iſland fiſh dried and hardned which they terme Stockfiſh: whereby they gathered a maine maſſe of riches. Hence it came to paſſe, that within a little while, they fenſed their Citie with a bricke wall, ſtrengthened it with many Towres and Bulwarkes, where it is not defended with the river: & brought ſuch a deale of cobleſtones for ballais to their ſhips, that therewith they have paved all the quarters and ſtreets of the towne moſt

C

D

E

F

Hull river.

The regiſter of Meaux Abbay.

Cottingham.

Eſtotevill.

Wake.

Kingſton upon Hull.

Plaeit. Anno. 44. Edw. 3. Ebor. 24.

* Pro Vaccariis & Bercariis.

A moſt beautifully. For the cheife Magiſtrate it had (as I haue beene enformed) firſt a Warden or Cuſtos: then Bailiues, afterward a Major and Balliues: and in the end they obtained of K. Henry the Sixth that they might haue a Major and a Sherife, and that the very towne ſhould be a County, as our lawiers uſe to ſay incorporate by it ſelf. Neither will I thinke it much to note, although in Barbarous tearmes, out of the booke of Meaux Abbay, as touching the Major of this City. William De la Pole knight, was beforetime a merchant at Ravens-rod, skilfull in merchandiſe and inferiour to no Engliſh merchant whatſoever. He making his aboade afterwards at King-ſton upon Hull, was the firſt Major that ever the ſaid towne had: hee beganne alſo and founded the monaſtery B of Saint Michel hard by the ſaid King-ſton, which now is an houſe of the Carthuſian or Charter-houſe monkes. And hee had for his eldeſt ſonne Sir Michael De la Pole Earle of Suffolke, who cauſed the ſaid Monaſterie to bee inhabited by Carthuſian monkes. And verily William de-la Pole aforeſaid, lent many thouſand pounds of gold unto King Edward, whils he made his abode at Antwerp in Brabant, wherefore the King in recompence of the ſaid gold, made him Lord chiefe Baron of his Exchequer, conferred upon him the whole Seignorie or Lordſhip of Holderneſſe, togither with other lands belonging unto the Crowne: and that by the Kings Charter, yea & ordained that he ſhould be reputed a Baneret. Yet if any man make doubt hereof, the Recordes I hope may ſatisfie him fully, in which William De la Pole is in plaine tearmes called Dilectus Valectus, et Mercator noſter, that is, Our welbeloved valect and our Merchant, now, Valect, to tell you once C for all, was in thoſe daies an honorable title as well in France as in England: but afterwards applied unto ſervants and gromes: whereupon when the Gentry rejected it, by changing the name they began to be called Gentlemen of the Bedchamber.

De la Pole.

Cl. 5. E. R. 3. M. 28.

Valectus or Valertus.

I. Tiſius.

From Hull, a Promontorie runneth on forward and ſhooteth out a farre into the ſea, which Ptolomee calleth OCELLVM, wee Holderneſſe, and a certaine monke, Cavam Deiram, as it were, the hollow Country of the Deirians, in the ſame ſignification that Cœleſyria is ſo tearmed, as one would ſay Holow Syria. In this Promontory, the firſt towne wee meet with in the winding ſhore is Headon, in times paſt (if wee liſt to beleeue fame that uſeth to amplifie the truth and which for my part I will D not diſcredite) riſen to exceeding great account by the induſtry of merchants and ſea-fairing men: from which (ſo uncertaine is the condition as well of places as of people) it is ſo much fallen by the vicinity of Hull, and the choaking up of the haven which hath emproveriſhed it, that it can ſhew ſcarce any whit of the ancient ſtate it had. Although King Iohn granted unto Baldwin Earle of Aulbemarle and of Holderneſſe, and to his wife Hawis, free Burgage heere, ſo that the Burgers might hold in free Burgage, with thoſe cuſtomes that Yorke and Nichol, that is, Lincolne. Yet now it beginneth by little and little to revine againe in hope to recover the former dignity.

Ocellum. Holderneſſe.

Headon.

There ſtandeth hard by the Promontorie, an ancient towne, which Antonine the E Emperour called PRAETORIVM, but wee in our age Patrington, like as the Italians haue changed the name of a towne ſometime called Prætorium, into Petrovina. That I doe not miſtake herein, both the diſtance from DELGOVITIA, and the very name yet remaining doth proue: which alſo in ſome ſort implieth, that this is the very ſame that in Ptolomees copies is written PETVARIA corruptly, for Prætorium. But whether this name were given it, either from Prætorium, that is, the hal of Iuſtice, or from ſome large and ſtately houſe, ſuch as the Romans tearmed Prætoria, it doth not appeere for certaine. The inhabitants glorie much yet as touching their Antiquity and the commodiouſneſſe of the haven in ancient times: and they may as well glorie for the pleaſantneſſe thereof. For, it hath a moſt delectable pro- F ſpect: on the one ſide lieth the maine ſea brimme upon it, on the other Humber a famous arme of the ſea; and over againſt it the freſh and greene skirtes of Lincoln-ſhire. The high way of the Romans from the Picts wall which Antonine the Emperor followed, here endeth. For, Ulpian hath written, that ſuch high waies commonly end at the ſea, at rivers, or at Cities.

Prætorium. Patrington.

Somewhat lower ſtandeth Winſted, the habitation of the Hildeards knights of ancient descent: and higher into the Country, Rosse: from whence the honorable family of the Barons Rosse tooke their name, like as they were seated there in times past: and hard by the sea-side, Grimstons-garth: where the Grimstons for a long time haue lived in good reputation: and a little from hence standeth Rise, the mansion house in old time of certaine noble men bearing the name of Faulconberg. And then, in the very necke of the promontorie, where it draweth in most narrow into a sharpe point, and is called Spurnhead, is KELNSEY a little village: which plainely sheweth that this is the very OCELLVM mentioned by Ptolomee: for, as from OCELLVM Kelnsey is derived: so Ocellum doubtlesse, was made of Y-kill, which as I haue said before signifieth in the British tongue a Promontory or narrow neck of land.

Winsted. Barons de Rosse.

Ravenspur. and Ravensburg. Kelnsey.

From Spurn-head, the shore withdraweth it selfe backe by little and little, and gently bending inward shooteth Northward by Overthorne and Witherensey two little Churches, called of the sisters that built them Sisters kirks: and not farre from Constable-Burton, so called of the Lords thereof, who beeing by marriages linked to right honorable houses, flourish at this day in great worship: and out of which familie Robert (as wee read in the booke of the Abbay of Meaux) was one of the Earle of Aulbemarls knights, who being aged and full of daies tooke upon him the Crosse and went with King Richard in his voiage toward the holy land. Then, by Skipsey, which Dru the first Lord of Holdernesse fortified with a Castle, When the shore beginneth to spread againe and beare out into the sea, it maketh roome for a bay or creeke, that Ptolomee calleth EYAIMENON GABRANTOVICORVM, which the Latin Interpreters haue translated, some PORTVOSVM SINVM, that is, the harborous Creeke; others, SALVTAREM, that is, the safe Creeke. But neither of them both better expresseth the nature of the Greeke word, than the very name of a little village in the nouke thereof, which wee call Sureby. For, that which is safe and sure from daughter, the Britans and French men both, terme Scur, as wee Englishmen (sure) who peradventure did borrow this word from the Britans. There is no cause therefore, why wee should doubt, but that this creeke was that very EYAIMENON of the GABRANTOVICI, who dwelt there abouts. Hard by, standeth Bridlington a towne very well knowne by reason of Iohn of Bridlington a poeticall monkish prophet, whose ridiculous propheSies in Rhyme I haue read albeit they were not worth the reading. And not farre from hence, for a great length toward Driffield, was there a ditch cast up and brought on by the Earles of Holdernesse, to confine and bound their lands, which they called Earles Dyke. But whence this little nation here inhabiting were named GABRANTOVICI, I dare not search, unlesse happily it were of goates which the Britans tearme Gaffran, and whereof there is not greater store in al Britain than here about. Neither ought this derivation of the name to seeme absurd, seeing that Aegira in Achaia boroweth the name of goates, Nebrodes in Sicily of fallow Deere, and Boetia in Greece, of Kine & Oxen. That little Promontory which with his bent made this creeke, is commonly called Flamborough head, and in the Saxon tongue Fleam-burg by Authors, who write, that Ida the Saxon, who first subued these Countries, arrived here. Some thinke it tooke the name from a watchtowre which did by night put forth a flame or burning light for to direct sailers into the haven. For, the Britans retaine yet out of the provinciall language this word, Flam: and Mariners paint this creeke in their sea-cards with a blazing flame on the head. Yet others are of opinion, that this name arrived in this Island with the English out of Angloen in Denmarke, the ancient seat of the English nation; for, there is a towne called Flemsburg, and that the Englishmen from hence called it so: like as the Gaules, as Livie witnesseth, tearmed Mediolanum, that is, Milan, in Italie, after the name of Mediolanum in Gaule, which they had left behinde them. For, there is a little village in this Promontory named Flamborrough, wherean other notable house of the Constables had anciently their seat, which some do deriue from the Lacies Constables of Chester. Beeing in these partes I could learne nothing for all the enquirie that I made, as touching the bournes commonly called Sisters Kirkes. Constable.

Sinus salutaris. Suerby.

Gabrantovici.

Flamborough head.

Flamborough.

Constable de Flamborough.

A B C D E F

Vipseys

A Vipſeys, which (as Walter of Heminburgh hath recorded) flow every other yeere out of blind ſprings and runne with a forcible and violent ſtreame toward the ſea neere unto this Promontory. Yet take here with you, that which William Newbrigenſis, who was borne neare that place writeth of them. Thoſe famous waters which commonly are called Vipſeys, riſe out of the earth from many ſources not continually, but every ſecond yeere, and beeing growne unto a great bourn runne downe by the lower grounds into the ſea. Which when they are dry, it is a good ſigne: for, their breaking out and flowing is ſaid to be an infallible token portending ſome dearth to enſue. Vipſeys waters.

From thence the ſhore is drawne in', whereby there runneth forth into the ſea a certaine ſhelfe or ſlang, like unto an out-thruſt tongue, ſuch as Engliſhmen in old
B time termed a File, whereupon the little village there Filey tooke name: and more within the land you ſee Flixton, where, in King Athelſtanes time was built an Hoſpitall, for the defenſe (thus word for word it is recorded) of way-faring people paſſing that way from Wolues, leaſt they ſhould bee devoured. Whereby it appeereth for certaine, that in thoſe daies Wolues made foule worke in this tract, which now are no where to be ſeene in England, no not in the very marches toward Scotland; and yet within Scotland there be numbers of them in moſt places. Wolues.

This little territory or Seigniory of Holderneſſe, King William the Firſt gaue to Drugh Bucrer a Fleming, upon whom alſo hee had beſtowed his Niece in marriage; whom when hee had made away by poiſon and thereupon fled to ſaue himſelfe,
C hee had to ſucceed him Stephen the ſonne of Odo, Lord of Aulbemarle in Normandy who was deſcended from the Earles of Champaigne: whom King William the Firſt becauſe hee was his nephew by the halfe ſiſter of the mothers ſide, as they write, made Earle of Aulbemarle: whoſe poſterity in England retained the title, although Aulbemarle be a place in Normandy. His ſucceſſor was William ſurnamed Le Groſſe: whoſe onely daughter Auis was married to three husbands one after another, namely to William Magnavill Earle of Eſſex, to Baldwine De Beton, and William Forts, or, de Fortibus, by this laſt husband only ſhe had iſſue William, who alſo had a ſonne named William. His onely daughter Avelin, beeing the wedded wife of Edmond Crouchback Earle of Lancaſter, died without children. And ſo, Gibboſus.
D as we read in the booke of Meaux Abbay, for default of heires, the Earledome of Aulbemarle and honor of Holderneſſe, were ſeized into the Kings hands. Howbeit in the ages enſuing K. Richard the Second created Thomas of Woodſtock his unkle, and afterwards Edward Plantagenet Earle of Rutland, the Duke of Yorkes ſon, Duke of Aulbemarle, in his fathers life time: likewiſe King Henry the Fourth made his owne ſonne Thomas, Duke of Clarence and Earle of Aulbemarle: which title King Henry the ſixth afterward added unto the ſtile of Richard Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke, for the greater augmentation of his honour. Earles of Aumarle and Holderneſſe. Fitz-Odo. An ancient Genealogy or pedigree. Craſſus.

E

F

A

NORTH-RIDING.

SCarce two miles aboue Flamborrough-head, beginneth the North-Riding or the North part of this Country, which affronting the other parts, and beginning at the sea, is streatched out Westward, and carrieth a very long tract with it (though not so broad) for threescore miles togither, even as farre as to Westmorland: limited on the one side with Derwent, and for a while with the river Vre, on the other side with Tees running all along it, which on the North coast seperateth it from the Bishoprick of Durham. And very fitly may this part bee divided into, Blackamore, Cliveland, Northallverton-shire and Richmond-shire. Northriding.

B

That which lieth East, and bendeth toward the sea is called Blackamore, that is, The black mooriſh land: For it is mountanous and craggy. The sea coast thereof, hath Scarborrough castle, for the greatest ornament a very goodly and famous thing, in old time called Sceap-burg, that is, A burgh upon the Scar, or steepe rocke. Scarborrough castle.

C

The description whereof, haue here out of William of Newburgh his history. A rocke of a wonderfull height and bigneſſe, which by reason of ſteepe cragges and cliffes, almost on every ſide is unacceſsible, beareth into the sea; wherewith it is all compaſſed about, saue onely a certaine ſtreight in manner of a gullet, which yeeldeth acceſſe, and openeth into the West: having in the toppe a very faire, greene, and large plaine conteining about three ſcore acres of ground or rather more; a little well alſo of freſh water ſpringing out of a ſtony rocke. In the fore ſaid gullet or paſſage, which a man ſhall haue much a doe to aſcend up unto, ſtandeth a ſtately and princelike Towre: and beneath the ſaid paſſage beginneth the City or Towre, ſpreading two ſides South and North, but having the fore part Weſtward: and verily it is fenſed afront with a wall of the owne: but on the East fortified with the rock of the Caſtle: and both the ſides thereof are watered with the ſea. This place William Le Groſſe, Earle of Aulbemarle and Holderneſſe vewing well, and ſeeing it to bee a convenient plot for to build a Caſtle upon, helping Nature forward with very coſtly worke cloſed the whole plaine of the rocke with a wall, and built a towre in the very ſtreight of the paſſage: which beeing in proceſſe of time fallen downe, King Henry the Second cauſed to bee built in the ſame place a great and goodly Caſtle; after hee had now brought under the Nobles of England, who during the looſe government of King Stephen had conſumed the lands of the Crowne: but eſpecially amongſt others, that William aboue ſaid of Aulbemarle, who had in this tract ruled and reigned like a King, and poſſeſſed himſelfe of this place as his owne.

D

E

Touching the moſt project boldneſſe of Thomas Stafford, who to the end hee might overthrow himſelfe with great attempts, with a few French men ſurpriſed this Caſtle of a ſodaine in Queene Maries reigne and held it for two daies togither, I neede not to ſpeake: ne yet of Sherleis, a gentleman of France, who having accompained him, was judicially endited and convict of high treaſon, albeit he was a forrainer, becauſe hee had done againſt the duty of his allegeance, the peace then betweene the Kingdome of England and of France beeing in force. Theſe are matters better knowne than that the world can take notice of them by any writings of mine. Yet may this ſeeme a thing worth my labour and expedient, to note, how the Hollanders and Zelanders uſe to take mervelous plentie of herrings (call them in Latin Haleces, Leucomenidæ, or Chalcides, which of them you pleaſe) upon this coaſt, and make a very gaineful trade thereof, having anciently firſt obtained licence by an ancient cuſtome, out of this caſtle. For the Engliſhmen granted licence to fiſh, reſerving the honour to themſelues, but reſigning for lazineſſe, as it were, the profit unto ſtangers. For, it is almoſt incredible, what infinite ſummes of money the Hollanders raiſe unto themſelues by this their fiſhing in our ſhore. See Dier. 144. The gaineſull fiſhing for Herrings.

F

These Herrings (pardon mee I pray you if briefly by way of digression I doe make mention of Gods goodnesse towardes us) which in our great grandfathers daies kept as it were their station onely about Norway: now in our time not without the divine providence, swimme yeerely round about this Isle of Britain by skulles in wonderfull great numbers. About Midsommer they shoole out of the deepe and vast Northen-sea to the coasts of Scotland, at which time becausse they are then at the fatteſt, they be streight waies sold: Thence come they to the Englisſh East coast, and from the middest of August unto November, is the best and most plentuous taking of them betweene Scarborrough, and Tamis mouth. A

Afterwards by force of some great storme, they are carried into the Britisſh sea, and there untill Christmas offer themselues to the fishers nettes; from hence dividing themselues and swimming along both sides of Ireland, after they haue coasted round about Britaine, they take their course into the Northren Ocean, as their home, and there settle themselues as it were and rest untill Iune: where after they haue cast their spawne and brought forth a yong frie, they returne againe in mighty great skulles and so march about these Isles. Whiles I am writing hereof, that comes into my minde which sometimes I read in Saint Ambrose. Fishes (saith hee) by infinite numbers, meeting, as one would say, by common consent out of many places from sundry creekes of the sea, with a joint flote, as it were, make toward the blastes of the North winde, and by a certaine direction and instinct of Nature hast into that sea of the Northren partes. A man that sawe the manner of them would say a certaine tyde were comming downe from the current, they rush so forward and cut the waues, as they passe, with a violent powre, through Propontis into Pontus Euxinus. But to my matter againe. B C

Hexameron. lib. 5. cap. 10.

From thence, the shore endented and interlaced with rockes, bendeth in, as farre as to the river Teise, and by a compasse that the said shore fetcheth, there is made a bay about a mile broade, which of that outlaw Robert Hood, so much talked of, wee call Robin Hoods Bay. For hee (as Iohn Major the Scotisſhman writeth) flourisſhed in the reigne of Richard the First; and the said Author setteth him out with this commendation, that hee was in deede an Arch-robber, but the gentelleſt theefe that ever was. Then Dvnvs Sinvs, a creeke mentioned by Ptolomee streight-waies by giving backe of the shore on both sides sheweth it selfe; neere unto which standeth Dunesley a little village, and hard by it, Whitby, in the Englisſh Saxon tongue Sᵹpeanep-healc; which Beda expoundeth to bee, the Bay of a Watch-towre. Neither will I call that interpretation into question, although in our language it doth resemble Sinum Salutis, that is, the Bay of health; so, that I would say this very same was Salutaris Sinus, that is, The Bay of safety, but that the situation in the Geographer did perswade mee otherwise. Here are found certaine stones faschioned like serpents folded and wrapped round as in a wreathe even the very pastimes of Nature disporting her selfe: who, as one saith, when shee is wearied as it were with serious workes, forgeth and shapeth some things by way of game and recreation. A man would thinke verily they had beene sometime serpents, which, a coate or crust of stone had now covered all over. But people to credulous ascribe this to the Praiers of Saint Hilda, as if shee had thus transformed and changed them: who in our Primitiue Church withstood to her powre the shoring and shaving of Priests, and the celebration of Easter according to the order of Rome, when a Synod was helden touching these matters in the yeere of our Lord 664. in the Abbay which shee had built in this place, and whereof her selfe was first Governesse. Vnto whose holinesse also they ascribe, that those wilde geese, which in wintertime flie by flockes unto Pooles and Rivers that are not frozen over, in the South partes; whiles they flie over certaine fields heere adjoyning, soudainely fall downe to the ground, to the exceeding great admiration of all men: a thing that I wold not haue related, had I not heard it from very many persons of right good credit. But such as are not given to superstitious credulity, attribute this unto a secret propriety of this ground, & to an hidden dissent betweene this soile and those geese, such D E F

The river Teese.

Robbin Hoods Bay.

Dunum.

Dunsley. Whitby.

Stony serpents of Hildas.

Geese falling downe.

A such as is betweeue wolves and Squilla rootes. For prouident Nature hath infused such like secret mutuall combinations, and contrarieties, which the learned terme Sympathies and Antipathies, as all men acknowledge, for their preservation. Afterwards Edelfleda King Oswins daughter enriched this Abbay with most large revenewes, where also she solemnized her fathers funerall obsequies. But at length the Danes robbing and spoiling where ever they came, utterly overthrew it: and although Serle Percie reedified it, being immediatly upon the comming in of the Normans head-ruler of the same; yet now it scarce affordeth any footing at all of the ancient dignity. Hard by, upon a steepe hill, howbeit betweene two others higher
B than it, toward the sea, stood by report, the Castle of Wada a Saxon Duke, who in that confused Anarchie of the Northumbers, and massacre of Princes and Nobles, having combined with those that murdred King Ethered, gave battaile unto King Ardulph at Whalley in Lancashire: but with so disasterous successe, that after his owne powre was discomfited and put to flight, himselfe was faine to flie: and afterwards by a languishing sickenesse ended his life; and heere within the hill betweene two entire and solide stones about seven foote high lieth entombed: which stones because they stand eleven foote asunder, the people doubt not to affirme, that hee was a mighty Giant. Neere unto this place, long time after, Peter * de Malolacu
C built a Castle, which being full as it were of grace and beauty he named in French Moult-Grace, as we read in the historie of Meaulx, but because it became a most grievous yoke unto the neighbour inhabitantst, he people maisters alwaies of our usuall speech, by change of one letter termed it Moult-grave, by which name although the reason thereof be not so well knowen, the world takes knowledge of it. This Peter de Malolacu, commonly called Mauley (that I may in this point satisfie the curious) borne in Poictou in France, married the onely daughter of Robert de Turnham, in the reigne of King Richard the first: in whose right he entred upon a very great inheritance heere: after whom succeeded in order seven Peters called Lords Mauley: who give for their Arms a Bend Sables in an escocheon Or. But when the seventh died issueless, this the Manours of Dancaster, Bainton, Bridesalle &c. were parted by the si-D sters, betweene the families of the Saluains and Bigots.

Duke Wade from whom the families of the Wades deriue.

* Mauley.

Moul-grave castle.

Barons of Mauley.

Neere unto this place, as elsewhere in this shore, is found Blacke amber or Geate: Some take it to be Gagates, which in old time they held to be one of the rare gems and pretious stones. It groweth among the cliffes and rockes, where they chinke and gape a sunder. Before it be polished, it is of a reddish and rustie colour: but after it be once polished, it becommeth, as saith Solinus, as a * Gemme of a bright radiant blacke colour. Touching which, Rhemnius Palæmon out of Dionysius Afer thus versifieth.

Gagates. Geat.

* Others are of opinion that our pit cole or stone cole was the old Gagates.

Præfulget nigro splendore Gagates.
E Hic lapis ardescens austro perfusus aquarum,
Aſt oleo perdens flammas, mirabile visu
Attritus rapit hic teneras seu succina frondes.

The Geat is blacke and shineth passing bright,
Which Stone in water dipt and drencht, takes fire and burneth light.
In oyle, a wonder for to see, the flame is quickly done,
And like to Amber rub it hard, small stickes it catcheth soone.

And Marbodæus in his little booke of pretious stones,

F

Nascitur in Lycia lapis, & prope gemma Gagates,
Sed genus eximium fœcunda Britannia mittit,
Lucidus & niger est, leuis & lauissimus idem:
Vicinas paleas trahit attritu calefactus,
Ardet aqua lotus, restinguitur unctus oliuo.

Geat

Geat is a Stone, and Gemme well neere, that men in Lycia find, A
But fruitfull Britan yeelds the beſt ſimply of all that kind.
Of colour blacke, yet bright it is, moſt ſmoth and light withall;
Well rubbed and enchauf'd thereby, thin ſtrawes and feſcues ſmall
That are neere hand it drawes thereto: it burns in water drencht, Annoint the ſame with fatty oyle, the flame ſtreightwaies is quencht.

Heare alſo what Solinus ſaith: In Britaine there is great ſtore of Gagates, or Geat, and an excellent ſtone it is: If you demaund the colour, it is a bright radiant blacke: if the quality, it is in maner nothing weighty: If the nature, it burneth in water, and is quenched with oyle: if the vertue, being made hote with rubbing, it holdeth ſuch things as are applied thereto. From Whitby the ſhore gives backe Weſtward: by which lieth Cliveland, taking that name as it ſeemeth of ſteep bankes, which in our language we call Cliffes; for, there runne all along the ſide thereof cliffie hils; at the foote of which, the country ſpreadeth into a plaine full of fertile fields. B Cliveland.

Upon the ſhore, Sken-grave a little village is much benifited by taking great ſtore of fiſh: where alſo, by report, was caught a Sea-man about 70. yeeres ſince, that for certaine daies together fed of raw fiſhes: but eſpying his opportunity eſcaped away unto his proper element again. Whenſoever the winds are laied, and that upon ſtill wether the ſea is moſt calme, and the water lieth as one would ſay levell and plaine without any noiſe: there is heard heere many times on a ſudden a great way off, as it were, an horrible and a fearefull groning: at which time the fiſhermen dare not launch out farre into the deepe, as beleeving according to their ſhallow reach, that the Ocean is a fell & cruel beaſt, and being then very hungry defireth greedily in that ſort to deuoure mens bodies. Beneath Sken-grave, is ſituate Kilton Caſtle within a parke, which belonged ſometime to the habitation of the Thwengs, whoſe patrimonie deſcended to the Barons of Lumley, Hilton and Daubeneie: And there joineth almoſt cloſe unto it Skelton Caſtle, appertaining to the ancient family of the Barons Brus, who derive their deſcent from Robert Brus the Norman. The ſaid Robert had two ſonnes, Adam Lord of Skelton, & Robert of Anan-dale in Scotland: from whom is deſcended the roiall ſtem of Scotland. But Peter Brus the fifth Lord of Skelton died without iſſue, and left his ſiſters to inherite: namely Agnes, wife to Walter Falconberg: Lucie, wedded to Marmaduke Thweng, of whom is come the Baron Lumley: Margaret, married to Robert Ros; and Laderina to John Belle-eau, men in that age of honorable reputation. The heires ſucceſſively of Walter Falconberg flouriſhed a long time; but in the end by a femall, the poſſeſſions came to Sir William Nevil, who was a redoubted Knight for martiall proeſſe, and by King Edward the fourth aduaunced to the title of Earle of Kent. And his daughters were beſtowed in marriage upon Sir John Ceigniers, N. Bechowing, and R. Strangwaies. C D

Brius of Skelton.

Barons Falconberg.

Neere unto Hunt-cliffe, and not farre from the ſhore there appeere aloft at a vale water certaine rockes, about which the fiſhes that we call Seales, ſhort (as ſome thinke) for Sea-veales, meete together in droves to ſleepe and ſunne themſelves: and upon that rocke which is next unto the ſhore, there lieth one, as it were to keepe the Centinell: and as any man approcheth nere, he either by throwing downe a big ſtone, or by tumbling himſelfe into the water with a great noiſe, giveth a ſignall to the reſt to looke unto themſelves and get into the water. Moſt affraid they be of men: againſt whom when they chaſe them, they being deſtitute of water fling backward with their hinder feete a cloud, as it were, of ſand and gravell ſtones, yea and often times drive them away: For women they care not ſo much: and therefore whoſoever would take them, uſe to bee clad in womens apparell. In the ſame coaſt are found ſtones, ſome of a yellowiſh, others of a reddiſh colour, and ſome againe with a rough caſt cruſt over them of a certaine ſalt matter, which by their ſmell and taſt make ſhew of Coperoſe, nitre, and brimſtone: & alſo great ſtore of Marqueſites in colour reſembling braſſe. E F

Hardby, at Huntly Nabb, the ſhore that lay for a great way in length open, riſeth

now

A now up with craggy rockes, at the rootes wherof there lie ſcattering heere and there ſtones of divers bigneſſe, ſo artificially by nature ſhaped round in maner of a Globe, that one would take them to be big bullets made by the turners hand for ſhot to bee diſcharged out of great ordinance. In which, if you breake them, are found ſtony ſerpents enwrapped round like a wreath, but moſt of them are headles. Then ſee you from thence Wilton Caſtle, ſometime the Bulmers: and above it at Dobham the river Tees voideth into the Sea after it hath lodged ſundry rivers, & at the laſt one that is nameleſſe, beſide Yare a mercate towne well knowen, which river watereth Stokeſley, a little mercate towne, likewiſe that hath a long time appertained to the noble
B family of Eure. Beneath which places, Wharton Caſtle belonging in times paſt to the Barons Menill, and Harlſey to the family of Hotham and afterward to Stragwaies, now wreſtle with old age, and hardly hold up their heads.

Yare. Stokeſley.

The mouth of Tees aforeſaid, ſuſpected in times paſt of ſailers, is now found to be a ſure road and harbour: and to give direction for ſafe acceſſe and entrance unto it, there are erected on both ſides thereof within our remembrance high turrets with light. Foure miles from this Tees mouth, ſtandeth Gisburgh on high; now a ſmall towne, but whiles it ſtood in flouriſhing eſtate, it was right glorious for a very faire and rich Abbay, built by Robert de Brus, Lord of the place, about the yeere of our Salvation 1119, and for the common buriall place of all the gentry and nobility
C in this tract; which alſo brought forth Walter de Heminford no vnlearned Hiſtoriographer. This verily is a paſſing good place, and may well for pleaſantneſſe, delightſome variety, and rare gifts of Nature, contend with Puteoli in Italy, which in regard of healthy ſituation it alſo farre excelleth. The aer is mollified and made more mild by the mountaines ſeated betweene it, and what way the ſea yeeldeth a cold and winterly diſpoſition: the ſoile fruitfull and plenteous in graſſe affordeth delectable floures a great part of the yeere, & richly aboundeth with vaines of mettall and Alum-earth of ſundry colours, but eſpecially of ocher and murray, likewiſe of iron, out of which they have now begunne to try very good Alum, and Coperoſe. Which D with learned skill and cunning not many yeeres ſince, Sir Thomas Chaloner Knight (a learned ſercher into natures workes, and unto whoſe charge, our moſt high and mighty King hath committed his ſonne Prince Henrie, the lovely joy and delight of Britaine) firſt diſcouered, by obſerving, that the leaves of trees were of a more weake greene colour heere than in other places; that the oakes had their rootes ſpreading broad but very eb within the ground, the which had much ſtrength but ſmall ſtore of ſappe, that the earth ſtanding upon cley, and being of divers colours, whitiſh, yellowiſh, and blew, was never frozen, and in a cleere night, glittered in the pathes like unto glaſſe. Not farre off, Ounsbery or Roſebery Topping mounteth up a mighty
E height, and maketh a goodly ſhew a farre off, ſerving unto ſailers for a marke of direction, and to the neighbour inhabitants for a prognoſtication: For, ſo often as the head thereof hath his cloudy cap on, lightly there followeth raine: whereupon they haue a Proverbiall Rhime, when Roſebery Topping weares a cap. Let Cliveland then beware a clap. Neere unto the top of it, out of an huge rocke there floweth a ſpring of water medicinable for diſeaſed eies: & from hence there is a moſt goodly and pleaſant proſpect downe into the vallies below lying a great way about, to the hils full of graſſe, greene meddowes, delightſome paſtures, fruitfull corne fields, riverets ſtored with fiſh, the river Tees mouth full of rodes and harbours, the ground plaine and open without danger of innudation, and into the ſea with ſhips therein under ſaile. Beneath it, ſtandeth Kildale, a Caſtle of the Percies Earles of Northumberland: and F more Eaſtward Danby, which from Brus alſo by the Thwengs came unto the Baron Latimers, from whoſe heire deſcended the Willoughbeies, Barons of Brooke. But this Danby with other poſſeſſions was ſold to the Nevills, of which family Sir George Nevill was by King Henrie the Sixth called among Barons to the Parliaments, under the name of Lord Latimer, in whoſe progenie and poſterity this dignity hath continued unto our daies. There remaineth nothing elſe heere for me to note, but that the Barons Meinill held certaine lands in this ſhire of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, Gisburgh.

Ounsbery hil or Roſebery. Topping.

The Hiſtory of Cantorbury.

terbury, and for the same, the Coigniers, Strangwaies and Darcies, descended from them, are bound to performe certaine service to the said Archbishops. And whereas, the King of England by his Prerogative shall have the Wardship (these bee the very words of the Prærogative) of all their lands who hold of him in chiefe by Knights service, of which themselves as tenants shall be seized in their Demesne as of Fee, the day whereon they die, of whomsoever they held by the like service, so that themselves notwithstanding hold of the King any tenement of the ancient demesne of the Crowne, unto the full and lawfull age of the heire: Yet are excepted these Fees and others of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Durrham, betweene Tine and Tees &c. so that they may have the Wardship of such lands, although elsewhere they held of the King.

Prærogativæ Reg. 17. Ed. 2.

A

B

Farther within the country among the mountaines of Blackamore, there offereth it selfe (besides wandering beakes and violent swift brookes, which challenge the vallies every where, as their owne to passe through) no memorable thing, unlesse it be Pickering; a good bigge towne belonging to the Dutchy of Lancaster, situate upon an hill and fortified with an old Castle, unto which a number of small villages lying there round about doe appertaine: whereupon the country adjoining is commonly called Pickering Lith, The Liberty of Pickering, and Forest of Pickering, the which King Henrie the Third gave unto his younger sonne Edmund, Earle of Lancaster. Wherein, neere unto the river Darwent standeth Atton, that gave name unto the right noble family of the Attons Knights, descended from the Lords Vescy: the inheritance of which family, was by the daughters parted betweene Edward Saint John, the Evers, and the Coigniers. Now from Edward Saint John a great portion thereof came by a daughter to Henrie Bromflet. Which Henrie verily was sommoned to the High court of Parliament by these expresse termes, else where not to be found in Summons. Our Will is, that both yee and your heires males, of your body lawfully issuing, be Barons of Vescy. Afterwards, that title passed away by a daughter to the Cliffords. On the other side, foure miles from Pickering, neere unto Dow, a swift running riveret, lieth Kirkby-Morside hard unto the hilles, whereof it had that name, a mercate towne not of the meanest reckoning, and the possession sometime of the Estotevilles.

C

17 Hen. 6. Bromfleet Lord Vescy.

D

Behind these, Westward, Rhidal lieth low, a goodly, pleasant and plentifull vale adorned with three and twenty Parish-churches, through the mids whereof runneth the river Rhie: A place (as saith William of Newborrough) wast, desolate, and full of horrour, before that Walter Espec had granted it to the Monkes of the Cluniack order, and founded there an Abbay. In this vale is Elmesley seated, which, if I deceive not my selfe Bede called Vlmetum; where, that Robert called de Rosse, surnamed Fursan built a Castle; nere unto which the river Recall hideth it selfe under the ground. More beneath, hard by the river side standeth Riton, an ancient possession of the ancient familie of the Percihaies, commonly named Percies. From thence Rhie carrieth with him the streames of many a brooke into Derwent, which watereth in this vale Malton a mercate towne well knowne and frequented, for corne, horses, fish, and implements of husbandry: where are to be seene the foundations of an old Castle, belonging, as I have heard say, in old time to the Vescies, Barons in these parts of great estate and honor. Their pedigree as appeereth evidently by the Kings records, is derived from William Tyson, who being Lord of Malton and of Alnewicke in Northumberland, was slain in the battaile at Hastings against the Normans. Whose onely daughter was given in marriage to Ivo de Vescy a Norman, and he left behind him his only daughter likewise named Beatric, with whom Eustach the son of Fitz John * with one eie contracted marriage, who in the reigne of Stephen founded the religious houses at Malton, and Watton. For, his second wife daughter to William, Constable of Chester, was Ladie of Watton. William the sonne of Eustach by Beatrice, being ripped out of his mothers wombe, assumed unto him the name of Vescy and the Armes, a Cross floury Argent, in a shield Gueles. This William begat of Beatrice daughter to Robert Estotevill of Knaresburg, two sonnes, Eustach de Vescy, who tooke to wife Margaret daughter to William King of the Scots, and Sir Warin de Vescy Lord

E

Escaetria 8. Edw. 2. n. 63. Barons Vescy

* Monoculi.

F

A Lord of Knapton. As for Eustach, father hee was of William, who begat Iohn, that died without issue, and William, so renowned for his exploites in Ireland; and these changed the Armes of their house, into a shield Or with a crosse Sables. But William, after that his legitimate sonne Iohn, died in the warre of Wales, granted unto King Edward certaine lands in Ireland, that his illegitimate sonne William surnamed of Kildare; might inherite his fathers estate. And he ordeined Anthony Bec Bishop of Durrham his feofie in trust to the use of his sonne: but he was scarce trusty as touching Alnewic, Eltham in Kent, and other lands; which he is reported to haue conueied indirectly to his owne use. This illegitimate sonne young Vescy was slaine B in the Battaile of Sterling in Scotland. And at length the title fell backe unto the line of the Attons, considering that Margaret the only daughter of Sir Gwarin vescy was wedded unto Gilbert de Atton. But, heereof enough if not too much, and of it I have spoken before. Neere unto this vale there flourished two famous Abbaies, Newborrough (unto which we are endebted for William of Newborrough, a learned and diligent writer of the English Historie) now, the habitation of the worshipfull family of Bellasise, descended out of the Bishopricke of Durrham: and Bellelanda commonly Biland, both founded and endowed by Robert Mowbray. This family of the Mowbraies was for powre, nobility, and wealth comparable to any other, and possessed very faire lands with the Castles of Slingesby, Threske, and others in this C Tract. The originall of this race if you desire to understand, I will compendiously set it downe. When Roger de Mowbray Earle of Northumberland, and R. * de Grunde-beofe for their disloialtie were disseized of all their possessions, King Henrie the First bestowed a great part thereof upon Nigell, or Niele de Albenie of the same family that the Albeneis Earles of Arundell were descended; a man of very high birth in Normandie, who had bin Bowbearer to King William Rufus: and so enriched him thereby, that he held in England 140. Knights fees, and in Normandie 120. He commanded also that Roger his sonne should assume the name of Mowbray: from whom flowred out the Mowbraies Earles of Nottingham, and Dukes of Norfolke. To these Mowbraies also belonged in times past Gilling Castle standing hard by: but D now unto that ancient and worshipfull family, which of their faire bush of haire got their name Fairfax. For Fax in the old English tongue signifieth haires, or the haire of the head: whereupon our progenitours called a Comet or blasing starre, A Faxed Starre, like as a place, whereof I have spoken before, Haly-fax, of holy haires.

The Vescyes coate of Armes. Matth. Paris, M.S.

Mowbraies.

In other places he is named De Fronte-bovis.

The Register of Fountains Abbay.

Fair-fax. Fax.

Then beneath these, Southward, lieth Calaterium Nemus, commonly called, The Forest of Galtres, shaded in some places with trees, in other some a wet flat, full of moist and moorish quavemires: very notorious in these daies by reason of a solemne horse running, wherein the horse that out runneth the rest hath for his prise a little golden bell. It is almost incredible what a multitude of people conflow hither from all parts to these games, and what great wagers are laid on the E horses heads for their swift running. In this Forest standeth Creac, which Egfrid King of Northumberland in the yere 684, gave with three miles round about unto Saint Cuthbert: by whom it came to the Church of Durrham. Scarce foure miles hence is situate most pleasantly among little woods and groves Sherry-Hutton, a very proper Castle built by Sir Bertrand Bulmer, and reedified by Raulph Nevil, the first Earle of Westmorland. Neere unto which standeth Hinderskell a little Castle, built by the Barons of Greystocke, which others call Hunderd-skell, of a number of fountaines that spring up and rise there.

A solemne Horse running.

Behind the hilles Westward, where the country spreedeth it selfe out againe into a more fresh and plaine champion, lieth Alverton-shire, commonly called Northal- F lerton-shire, a little countrie watered with the riveret Wiske, and taking the name of Northalverton a towne, sometime called Ealpertun, which is nothing else but a long broad street; howbeit, having in it on S. Bartholomewes day the greatest Faire of Kine & Oxen, and of most resort, that ever I saw in all my life. King William Rufus gave this with the territorie adjoining unto the Church of Durrham, to the Bishops of which See it is very much beholden. For, William Comin who by force held the Bishopricke

North-Alverton-shire.

Bishopricke of Durrham, built the Castle there, and granted it unto his nephew, which now is in maner quite decaied and gone. The Bishops likewise his successours granted unto it certaine liberties and immunities. For, in the Booke of Durrham we read that Hugh Pudsey Bishop of Durrham fortified the towne, having obtained licence of the King, that among those vnlawfull castles, which by commandement were then destroyed in many places of England, this onely should have the priviledge to stand still: which notwithstanding, the King commaunded afterward to be layd even with the ground. Cap. 126.

Battaile of Standard.

Hard by this, was that field foughten, which they commonly call the Battaile of the Standard: in which, Daving King of Scots, who with his unexampled cruelty had made this country almost a wilderneſse, was after so great a slaughter of his people put to flight; that then and never before our countrimen thought they were fully revenged. For, that indeed came to passe in this battaile, which Raulfe the Bishop said, when before the battaile in an oration he encouraged the English to flight: A confused multitude vntrained, is an impediment to it selfe, in prosperous successe to hurt others; and in adverse fortune, to escape it selfe. This was called, The battaile of the Standard, because the English keeping theemselves close together about the standard received the first onset and shock of the Scotish, endured it, & at length put them to flight. And this Standard, as I have seene it pictured in ancient bookes, was a mighty huge chariot supported with wheeles, wherein was set a pole of a great height in maner of a mast, and vpon the very top thereof stood a crosse to be seene, and under the crosse hung a banner. This when it was aduanced was a token, that euery one should prepare himselfe to fight, and it was reputed as an holy and sacred altar that each man was to defend with all powre possible, resembling the same for all the world that Carrocium of the Italians, which might never be brought abroad but in the greatest extremitie and danger of the whole state.

Within this litle shire also, Threske commonly called Thruske is worth to bee mentioned: which had sometime a most strong Castle out of which Roger Mowbray displaied his banner of rebellion, & called in the king of Scots to the overthrow of his owne native country: what time as King Henrie the Second had rashly and inconsideratly digged, as it were, his owne grave, by investing his sonne King, in equall authority with himselfe. But this rebellion was in the end quenched with bloud, and this Castle quite dismantled: so that beside a ditch and rampier, I could see nothing there of a Castle. Another firebrand also of rebellion flamed out heere in the reigne of Henrie the seventh. For when the unruly commons tooke it most grievously that a light subsidie granted by the States of the Kingdome in Parliament, was exacted of them, and had driven away the Collectors thereof, forthwith (as it is commonly seene that Rashnes speeding once well can never keep a mean nor make an end) they violently set upon Henrie Percy, Earle of Northumberland, who was Lieutenant of these parts, and slew him in this place: and having Iohn Egremond to be their leader, tooke armes against their country and their Prince: but a few daies after they felt the smart of their lawlesse insolencie greivously and justly as they had deserved. Heere hard by are Soureby and Brakenbake, belonging to a very ancient and right worshipfull family of the Lascelles: also more Southward Sezay, sometime of the Darels (from whence a great family branched) & afterwards the Dawnies who for a long time flourished heere maintaining the degree and dignity of Knights right worthily.

Earle of Northumberland slaine by Rebells.

Earles and Dukes of Yorke.

The first and onely Earle of Yorke (after William Mallet, and one or two Estotevils of the Norman bloud, who they say were Sheriffes by inheritance) was Otho sonne to Henry Leo Duke of Bavar and Saxony, by Maude the daughter of Henry the Second, King of England, who was afterwards proclaimed Emperour and stiled by the name of Otho the fourth. From whose brother William, another sonne of Maud, are descended the Dukes of Brunswicke and Luneburgh in Germaine, who for a token of this their kinred with the Kings of England give the same Armes that the first Kings of England of Norman bloud bare, to wit two Leopards or Lions Or, in a sheild Gueles. Long after, King Richard the Second created Edmund of Langley, fift

sonne

A sonne of King Edward the Third, Duke of Yorke: who by a second daughter of Peter King of Castile and of Leon had two sonnes. Edward the eldest, in his fathers life time, was first Earle of Cambridge, afterwards Duke of Aumarle, and in the end Duke of Yorke; who manfully fighting in the battaile at Agincourt in France lost his life, leaving no children: and Richard his second sonne Earle of Cambridge, who having married Anne sister of Edmund Mortimer, whose grand-mother likewise was the onely daughter of Leonell Duke of Clarence, and practising to advance Edmund his wives brother to the roiall dignity, was streightwaies intercepted and beheaded, as if hee had beene corrupted by the French to destroy King
B Henry the Fifth. Earle of March.

Sixteene yeeres after, his sonne Richard, was restored in bloud through the exceeding, but unadvised favour of King Henry the Sixth: as beeing sonne to Richard Earle of Cambridge brother to Edward Duke of Yorke, and cousin also to Edmund Earle of March. And now beeing duke of Yorke, Earle of March and of Vlster, Lord of Wigmore, Clare, Trim, and Conaght, he bare himselfe so loftie, that shortly he made claime openly in Parliament, against King Henry the Sixth, as in his owne right, for the crowne: which he had closely affected by indirect courses before in making complaintes of the misgovernment of the state, spreading seditious rumours, scattering libels abroade, complotting secret conspiracies, and stirring up tumults, yea
C and open warres: laying downe his title thus, as being the sonne of Anne Mortimer, who came of Philip the daughter and sole heire of Leonel Duke of Clarence, third sonne of King Edward the Third, and therefore to bee preferred by very good right, in succession of the Kingdome, before the children of Iohn of Gaunt the fourth sonne of the said Edward the Third. And when answere was made unto him, that the Nobles of the realme and the Duke himselfe had sworne allegeance unto the King, that the Kingdome by authority of Parliament had beene conferred and entailed upon Henry the Fourth and his heires; that the Duke claiming his title from the Duke of Clarence never tooke upon him the Armes of the Duke of Clarence, that Henry the Fourth held the crowne in right from King Henry the Third;
D hee easily avoided all these allegations: namely, that the said oth unto the king taken by mans law was in no wise to bee performed, when as it tended to the suppression of the truth and right, which stand by the law of God: That, there was no need of Parliamentary authority to entaile the crowne and kingdome unto the Lancastrians, neither would they themselues seeke for it so, if they had stood upon any right thereunto. As for the Armes of the Duke of Clarence which were his by right hee forbare of purpose to giue them untill then; like as he did, to claime his right to the Imperiall crowne: And as for the right or title derived from King Henry the Third, it was a meere ridiculous devise and manifest untruth to cloake the violent usurpation of Henry the Fourth, and therefore condemned of all men. Albeit these
E plees in the behalfe of the Duke of Yorke stood directly with law: yet, for remedie of imminent dangers the matter was ordered thus by the wisedome of the Parliament: That Henry the Sixth should enjoy the right of the kingdome for tearme of life only and that Richard duke of Yorke should bee proclaimed heire apparant of the kingdome, he and his heires to succeed after him: provided alwaies, that neither of them should plot or practise ought to the destruction of the other. Howbeit the duke immediatly was transported so headlong with ambition, that he went about to preoccupate and forestall his owne hopes, and so he raised that deadly warre between the houses of Yorke and Lancaster, distinguished by the white and red rose, wherein himselfe soone after lost his life at Wakefield, K. Henry the Sixth was foure times taken
F prisoner, and in the end despoiled both of his kingdome and life. Edward Earle of March sonne to the said Richard, obteined the crowne, and being deposed from the same, recovered it againe (thus inconstant fortune disported her selfe, lifting up and throwing downe Princes at her pleasure) many Princes of the roiall bloud, and a number of the Nobility lost their liues: those hereditary and rich Provinces in Parliament 10. Henr. 6.

Out of the Rols of the Parliament 39. of Hen. the 6.

Warre betweene the house of Lancaster and Yorke, or the red Rose and the white.

See page 570.

France belonging to the Kings of England were loſt, the wealth of the realme wholy waſted, and the poore people thereof overwhelmed with al manner of miſery. Edward now beeing eſtabliſhed in his roiall throne, and in the ranke of Kings carrying the name of Edward the Fourth, gaue unto Richard his ſecond ſonne the title of Duke of Yorke, who together with King Edward the Fift his brother was by their unkle Richard the Third murdered. Then King Henry the Seventh granted the ſame title unto his yonger ſonne, who afterwards was crowned king of England by 1604. the name of Henry the eight. And even now of late King Iames inveſted Charles his ſecond ſonne (whom before, hee had created in Scotland Duke of Albany, Marqueſſe of Ormond, Earle of Roſſe and Baron of Ardn anoch) a child not full foure yeeres of age, Duke of Yorke, by cincture of a ſword, impoſition of a cap and coronet of gold upon his head, and by delivering unto him a verge of gold: after he had accordíng to the order with due complements made the day before, both him and eleven more of Noble parentage, Knights of the Bath.

Reckoned there are in this County Pariſhes 459. under which be very many chappels for number of inhabitants equall unto great Pariſhes.

RICH-

RICHMOND-SHIRE.

THe reſt of this Country which lieth toward the North-weſt and carrieth a great compaſſe, is called Richmond-ſhire, or Richmount-ſhire, taking the name from a Caſtle, which Alan Earle of little Britaine had built: unto whom William the Conquerour gaue this ſhire (which before time belonged to Eadwin an Engliſhman) by theſe ſhort letters Patents as it is ſet downe in the booke of Richmond Fees. I William ſurnamed Baſtard, King of England, doe giue and grant unto thee my Nephew Alane Earle of Britaine, and to thine heires for ever, all and every the manour houſes and lands which late belonged to Earle Eadwine in Yorkeſhire, with the knights fees and other liberties and cuſtomes, as freely and in as honorable wiſe, as the ſaid Eadwin held the ſame: Given at our leaguer before the City of Yorke. He was his ſonne in law.

This ſhire moſt of it lieth very high, with ragged rockes and ſwelling mountaines, whoſe ſloping ſides in ſome places beare good graſſe, the botomes and vallies are not altogether unfruitfull. The hilles themſelues within, are ſtored with lead, pit-coale, and coper. For, in a Charter of King Edward the Fourth, there is mention made of a Mine or Delfe of copper, neere unto the very towne of Richmond. But couetouſneſſe, which driveth men even as far as to hell hath not yet perced into theſe hils, affrighted perchance with the difficultie of carriage: whereas there haue beene found on the tops of theſe mountaines, as alſo in other places ſtones like unto ſea winkles or cockles and other ſea fiſh, if they bee not the wonders of nature, I will with Oroſius a Chriſtian Hiſtoriographer deeme them to be undoubted tokens of the generall deluge that ſurrounded the face of the whole earth in Noahs time. When the ſea (ſaith he) in Noahs daies overflowed all the earth, and brought a generall floud, ſo that the whole globe thereof, being therewith ſurrounded and couered, there was one face, as of the firmament, ſo alſo of the ſea. The ſoundeſt writers moſt evidently teach, That all mankinde periſhed, a few perſons excepted, who by vertue of their faith were reſerved aliue for offspring & propagation. Howbeit even they alſo haue witneſſed that ſome there had beene, who although they were ignorant of the times paſt, and knew not the Author himſelfe of times, yet gathered conjecturally as much by giving a gueſſe by thoſe rough ſtones, which we are wont to finde on hilles remote from the ſea, reſembling Cockles and Oyſters, yea and oftentimes eaten in hollow, with the waters. Copper, lead and ſtone cole, or Pitcole. Stone cockes and wilkes.

Where this Country bordereth upon Lancaſhire; amongſt the mountaines it is in moſt places ſo waſt, ſolitary, unpleaſant, and unſightly, ſo mute and ſtill alſo, that the borderers dwelling thereby haue called certaine riverets creeping this waie, Hel-becks. But eſpecially that, about the head of the river Vre, which having a bridge over it of one entier ſtone falleth downe ſuch a depth, that it ſtriketh in a certaine horror to as many as looke downe. And in this tract there be ſafe harbors for goates and Deere, as well red as fallow, which for their huge bigneſſe with their ragged and branching hornes are moſt ſightly. Hell-becks.

The river Vre, which we haue often ſpoken of before, hath his fall here out of the Weſtern mountaines; and firſt of all cutting through the mideſt of the vale called Wentſedale, whiles it is yet but ſmal as beeing neere unto his ſpringhead, where great flocks of ſheepe doe paſture, and which in ſome places beareth lead ſtones plentifully, is increaſed by a little river comming out of the South called Baint, which with a great noiſe ſtreameth out of the poole Semer. At the very place where theſe rivers meet, and where there ſtand a few ſmall cotages which of the firſt bridge made ouer Vre, they call Baintbrig, there lay in old time a garizon of the Romans: whereof the very reliques are at this day remaining. For, on the top of an hill, which of a fort, or Burge they now call Burgh, appeere the groundworkes of an an- Wentſedale.

cient hold, conteining about fiue acres of ground in compaſſe; and beneath it Eaſtward, many tokens of ſome old habitation and dwelling places. Where, amongſt many other ſignes of Roman antiquity, I haue ſeene of late this fragment of an antique inſcription in a very faire letter, with Winged Victory ſupporting the ſame.

IMP CÆS. L. SEPTIMIO
PIO PERTINACI AVGV.-- IMP CÆSARI.M. AVRELIO
ANIO FELICI AVGVSTO--

BRACCHIO CAEMEN-
TICIVM VI NERVIO-RVM SVB CVRA LA SE-NECINON AMPLISSI-
MIO PERI L. VI SPIVS
---PRAE LEGIO.---

The name of Geta raſed out.

Bracchium.

By this we may gueſſe, that the ſaid hold at Burgh, was in times paſt named BRACCHIVM, which before time had beene made of turfe, but now built with ſtone and the ſame laied with good morter. Alſo, that the Sixth Cohort of the Nervians lay there in gariſon, who may ſeeme to haue had alſo their place of Summer aboade in that high hill hard by fenſed with a banke and trench about it, which now they tearme Ethelbury. And not long ſince, there was digged up the ſtatue of Aurelius Commodus the Emperor: who, as Lampridius writeth, was ſurnamed by his flattering clawbackes, BRITANNICVS, even when the Britans would haue elected an Emperor againſt him. And then it may ſeeme, was this ſtatue of his ſet up, when hee prizing himſelfe more than a man, proceeded to that folly, that hee gaue commandement he ſhould be called, The Roman Hercules, Iupiters ſonne. For, he was portraied in the habite of Hercules, and his right hand armed with a club: under which there lay, as I haue heard, ſuch a mangled inſcription as this, broken heere and there with voide places betweene: the draught whereof was badly taken out, and before I came hither was utterly ſpoiled.

The ſtatue of Emperor Commodus.

---CÆSARI, AVGVSTO
MARCI AVRELII FILIO

SEN IONIS AMPLISSIMI
VENTS PIVS.

The

A This was to be seene in Nappa, an house built with turrets, and the cheife seat of the Medcalfs, thought to be at this day the greatest family for multitude of the same name, in all England: for, I haue heard that Sir Christopher Medcalfe Knight, and the top of this kinred beeing of late high-Sherife of the shire, accompained with three hundred men of the same house all on horsback and in a livery, met and receiued the Iustices of Assizes, and so brought them to Yorke. From hence runneth Vre downe a maine, full of Creifishes, ever since Sir Christopher Medcalfe in our remembrance brought that kinde of fish hither out of the South part of England: and betweene two rockes, whereof the place is named Att-scarre, it runneth headlong B downe, not far from Bolton, a stately castle, the ancient seat of the Barons Scrops, and which Richard Lord le Scrope, and Chancellour of England under King Richard the Second built with exceeding great cost: and now bending his course Eastward, commeth to Midelham, the honour, whereof (as wee read in the Genealogie or Pedigree of the Nevills) Alan Earle of Richmond bestowed upon his younger brother Ringbald, with all the lands, which before their comming belonged to Gilpatrick the Dane. His nephew by his sonne Raulph, named Robert Fitz-Ralph, had all Wensedale also by gift of Conan Earle of Britaine & of the Richmond: and at Midleham raised a most strong castle. His sonne Ranulph erected a little Abbay for Chanons at Coverham (called now short, Corham) in Coverdale: whose sonne Ralph C had a daughter named Mary, who beeing wedded to Robert Lord Nevill with this marriage, translated this very faire and large inheritance as her portion into the family of Nevils. Which Robert Nevill having had many children by his wife, was taken in adultery unknowne; and by the husband of the adultresse: being for revenge bereft of his genitours, shortly after died with extremity of paine.

The great family of the Medcalfes.

Creifishes.

Bolton castle.

Barons le Scrope.

Midleham.

Lords of Mildleham.

Genealogia antiqua. Coverham.

Then Vre after it hath passed a few miles forward watereth Iervis or Iorvalle Abbay of Cistertians founded first at Fors, and after translated hither by Stephen Earle of Britaine, and Richmond, but now wholy ruinated; and after that, Masham, which was the possession of the Scropes of Masham; who as they sprung from the stocke of the Scropes of Bolton, so they were by marriages ingraffed againe into the same. On D the other side of this river but more inward standeth Snath, the principall house of the Barons Latimer, who derived their noble descent from George Nevill, younger sonne of Ralph Nevil the first Earle of Westmorland, and hee received this title of honour from King Henry the Sixth; when as the ancienter house of the Latimers expired in a female, and so by a continued succession they haue flourished unto these our daies: when for default of male issue of the last Baron Latimer, that goodly and rich inheritance was divided among his daughters, married into the families of the Percies, Cecils, D'anvers and Cornwallis. Neither are there any other places in this part of the shire worth the naming that Vre runneth by, unlesse it be Tanfeld, the habitation in times past of the Gernegans Knights: from whom it descended to the E Marmions: the last of whom left for his heire Amice Second wife to Iohn Lord Grey of Rotherfeld: by whom he had two sonnes; Iohn that assumed the surname of Marmion and died issueless: and Robert who left behinde him one onely daughter and sole heire Elizableth, wife to Sir Henry Fitz Hugh, a noble Baron.

Masham.

Snath. Barons Latimer.

Tanfeld.

Marmions. Inq 6.H 6.

After this, Vre interteineth the river Swale, so called (as Th. Spot writeth) of his swiftnesse, unlading it selfe, into it with a maine and violent streame: which Swale runneth downe Eastward out of the West mountaines also, scarce fiue miles aboue the head of Vre: a river reputed very sacred amongst the ancient English, for that in it, when the English Saxons first embraced Christianity, there were in one day baptized with festivall joy by Paulinus the Archbishop of Yorke, a- F boue tenne thousand men, besides women and little children. This Swale passeth downe along an open vale of good largenesse, which of it is called Swal-dale; having good plenty of grasse, but as great want of wood: first, by Marrick, where there stood an Abbay, built by the Askes men in old time of great name: also by Mask, a place full of lead ore.

Swale a sacred river.

See pag. 136.

Marrik.

Then runneth it through Richmond, the cheife towne of the Country, having but a smal

Richmond.

a ſmall circuit of walles, but yet by reaſon of the ſuburbs lying out in length at three gates well peopled and frequented. Which, Alan the firſt Earle thereof built, repoſing ſmall truſt in Gilling (a place or manour houſe of his hard by) to withſtand the violence of the Danes and Engliſh, whom the Normans had deſpoiled of their inheritance, and hee adorned it with this name, as one would ſay, The rich mount: hee fenſed it with a wall and a moſt ſtrong caſtle, which beeing ſet upon a rock, from an high looketh downe to Swale, that with a mighty rumbling noiſe ruſheth rather then runneth among the ſtones. For, the ſaid houſe or manour place of Gilling was more holy in regard of devout religion, than ſure and ſtrong for any fortification it had, ever ſince that therein (Beda called it Gethling) Oſwy King of Northumberland being intertained gueſt-wiſe, was by his hoſt forelaied and murthered: for the expiation whereof, the ſaid monaſtery was built, highly accounted of among our anceſtours. More Northward, Ravenſwath caſtle ſheweth it ſelfe compaſſed with a good large wall, but now fallen, which was the ſeat of the Barons named Fitz-Hugh, extracted from the ancient line of the Engliſh nation: who were Lords of the place before the Normans Conqueſt, & lived in great name unto K. Henry the Seventh his daies, enriched with faire poſſeſſions by marriage with the heires of the noble houſes of Furneaux, and Marmion: which came at laſt by the females unto the Fienes Lords Dacres in the South, and to the Parrs. Three miles beneath Richmond, Swale runneth by that ancient City which Ptolomee and Antonine call CATVRACTONIVM and CATARRACTON, but Bede Catarractan, and in another place, the village nere unto Catarracta: whereupon I ſuppoſe it had the name of Catarracta, that is, a Flud-fall, or water-fall, conſidering hard by there is ſuch a fall, but nerer unto Richmond; where, Swale ruſheth rather than runneth as I haue ſaid with fooming waters, meeting here and there with rockes, whereby his ſtreame is interrupted and broken. And wherefore ſhould he call it the towne nere unto Catarracta, if there were not there a waterfall? That it was in thoſe daies a moſt famous City may be gathered out of Ptolomee: becauſe hee tooke there an obſervation of the heavens poſition: for, in the ſecond booke and 6. chapter of his Great Conſtruction, he deſcribeth and ſetteth downe the 24. Parallele, through Catarractonium in Britaine, and maketh it to bee diſtant from the Aequator 57. degrees: yet in his Geographical tables he defineth the longeſt daie to be 18. Æquinoctiall houres: ſo that by his owne calculation and account, it is diſtant from the Æquator 58. degrees. But at this day, as ſaid that Poet.

Gilling.

Ravenſwath.

Barons Fitz-Hugh.

Caturacto-nium.

Catarick.

——Magnum nil niſi Nomen habet.

Nothing hath the ſame
But onely a great name.

For it is but a ſmall village, called Catarrick and Catarrick-bridge; howbeit well knowne both by the ſituation thereof nere unto the High ſtreet way which the Romans made, that here paſſeth over the river; and alſo by the heapes of rubbiſh heere and there diſperſed, which carry ſome ſhew of antiquity, eſpecially about Ketterciksfwart and Burghale, ſomewhat farther off from the bridge, and more Eaſtward hard by the river, where we beheld a mighty mount and foure bulwarkes raiſed as it were with exceeding great labour up to a great height. What ſorrow it ſuſteined in times paſt at the Picts and Saxons hands, when with fire and ſword they made foule havock of all the Cities in Britaine, I cannot certainely tell: but it ſeemeth to haue flouriſhed after the Saxon Empire was eſtabliſhed: (Although Bede in every place calleth it Vicum, that is, a village) untill that in the yeere 769. it was ſet on fire and burnt by Eanred or Beanred the Tyrant, who pittifully mangled the Kingdome of Northumberland. But both he ſtreight after miſerably periſhed by fire; and Catarractoninum alſo began to reviue againe out of the very aſhes: for, in the 77. yeere after King Etheldred ſolemnized heere his marriage with the daughter of Offa King of the Mercians. Notwithſtanding, it continued not long in good and flouriſhing eſtate: for, in that confuſion immediatly enſuing of the Danes who laied all waſt, it was quite deſtroied.

Catarrick bridge.

Swale

A Swale driueth on with a long course, not without some lets heere and there in his streame, not farre from Hornby Castle, belonging to the family of Saint Quintin, which afterwards came to the Cogniers: and seeth nothing besides fresh pastures country houses, and villages, unlesse it be Bedal, standing by another river running into him: which Bedall glorieth much of a Baron it had named Sir Brian Fitz-Alan who flourished in the daies of King Edward the First, in regard of his worth, and his ancient nobility, as descended from the Earles of Britaine, and Richmond: But for default of heires males, the inheritance came by the daughters, to Stapletons, and the Greies of Rotherfeld. By this time Swale having left Richmondshire behind, cometh neerer unto Vre or Ouse, where hee visiteth Topcliffe the chiefe seat of the Percies; Marianus calleth it Taben-clife; who writeth, that in the yeere of our Redemption 949, the States of Northumberland bound themselves there by an oath of allegiance unto K. Eldred the West-Saxon. And at the very confluence of these rivers standeth Mitton, a small village, but remarkable by no small slaughter. For, the Scotish in the yeere 1319, when the pestilence had consumed in maner all the manhood of England, having made an inrode thus farre robbing and ransacking all where they came, soone discomfited and put to flight no small powre of priests and country people, which the Archbishop of York had led forth, with banner displaied into the field. But to returne backe againe to our matter. From CATARACTONIVM, the high street or Port way divided it selfe in twaine: where it taketh North ward, it leadeth C by Caldwell and Aldburgh, which betokeneth an old Burrowgh. By what name it was knowen in ancient times I cannot easily guesse. By the great ruins it should seeme to have beene some notable place: and neere at hand there is seene a ditch by Stanwig a little village, that runneth eight miles in length betweene the river Tees and Swale. Where the said high way goeth Northwestward about twelve miles off you meet with Bowes, which also is written Bowgh; now, a little village: where in the ages aforegoing the Earles of Richmond had a prety Castelet, a certaine custome called Thorough-toll, and their Furcas i. power to hang. But that in old time it was called in Antonines Itinerarie, LAVATRAE and LEVATRAE, both the account of distance, and the site thereof by the high street, which heere is evidently apparent by the ridge thereof, doe easily prove. But, that which maketh much to D confirme the antiquitie of it, is an ancient large Stone in the Church, sometimes used by them for an altar stone, with this inscription upon it, to the honor of Hadrian the Emperour.

Hornby.

Fitz-Alan.

Caldwell. Aldburgh.

E

IMP. CÆSARI DIVI TRAIANI PARTHICI. Max filio
DIVI NERVÆ NEPOTI TRAIANO. Hadria
NO AVG. PONT. MAXIM. ---
COS. I. --- P. P. COH. IIII. F. ---
IO. SEV.

This fragment also was there digged up,

F

NOL. CAE FRONTINVS.
COH. I. THRAC.

Whiles

Whiles vnder Severus the Emperour, Virius Lupus ruled as Lieutenant Generall and Proprætor of Britaine, the first Cohort of the Thracians lay heere in garizon: for whose sake, he reedified the Bath or Hote house: as appeereth by this inscription, which from hence hath beene translated to Cunnington, unto the house of that right worshipfull and learned Sir Robert Cotton, Knight. A Forte Deæ Fortunæ.

DAE. i. FORTVNÆ
VIRIVS LVPVS
LEG. AVG. PR. PR.
BALINEVM VI
IGNIS EXVST-
VM. COH. I. THR-ACVM REST-
ITVIT. CVRANTE
VAL. FRON-TONE PRAEF---- EQ. ALAE VETTO

B

C

Heere must I cause them to forgoe their error, who by this inscription falsely copied forth, whiles they red vntruly BALINGIVM, for BALINEVM, are of opinion, that the name of the place was BALINGIVM. But if a man looke neerer to the words, hee shall find it most evidently engraven in the stone BALINEVM: which word they used in old time, as the learned know, for BALNEVM, that is, A BATH, or Hotehouse: who also are not ignorant that souldiers, as well as others, used ordinarily to bath, both for health, and cleanlinesse: as who every day, before they did eate, in that age were wont to bath: as also, that such like bathing houses both publicke and private were made every where with so great cost and superfluous excesse, That he thought himselfe poore and a very begger, who had not the walles of his bathing house resplendent with great and costly embossed Glasses. In which Bathes men and women both, washed one with another: albeit this had oftentimes beene prohibited as well by the Imperiall lawes, as the Synodall decrees.

Bathes.

Balineum or Balneum.

Seneca.

D

In the declining estate of the Roman Empire the Company or Band of the Exploratores, with their Captaine kept their station heere, under the dispose of the Generall of Britaine: as appeereth for certaine out of the NOTICE of Provinces, where it is named LAVATRES. But whereas such Bathes as these, were called also in Latin Lavacra, some Criticke, no doubt, will pronounce, that this place was named LAVATRAE in steed of LAVACRA: yet would I rather have it take the name of a little river running neere by, which, as I heare say, is called Laver. As for the later name Bowes, considering the old towne heere was burnt downe to the ground (as the inhabitants with one voice doe report) I would thinke, it grew upon that occasion. For, that which is burnt with fire the Britans still at this day, doe terme Boeth; and by the same word, the Suburbes of Chester beyond the river Dee, which the Englishmen call Hanbridge, the Britans or Welshmen name Treboeth, that is, The burnt towne, because in a tumult of the Welshmen it was consumed with fire.

Stane-More.

E

Heere beginneth to rise that high hilly and solitary country exposed to wind and raine, which because it is stony, is called in our native language Stane more. All heere round about is nothing but a wild desert, unlesse it be an homely Hostelrie, rather than an Inne, in the very midst thereof, called the Spitle on Stanmore, for to entertaine waifaring persons, and neere to it is a fragment of a crosse, which we call Rerecrosse, the Scots Reicrosse, as one would say, The Kings Crosse. Which Crosse, Hector Boetius the Scottish writer recordeth to have beene erected as a meere stone confining England and Scotland; what time as King William the Conquerour granted granted Cumberland unto the Scots on this condition, that they should hold it of him as his tenants, & not attempt any thing prejudiciall or hurtfull to the Crowne of England. And a litle lower, upon the Romãs high street, there stood a little fort of the Romans built foure square, which at this day they call Maiden-castle. From whence, as the Borderers reported, the said High way went with many windings in and out, as farre as to Caer Vorran in Northumberland. Maiden-Castle.

F

Spittle on Stane-more.

Rerecrosse.

There haue beene diuers Earles of Richmond according as the princes fauour enclined, and those out of diuers families: whom I will notwithstanding set downe as exactly and truly as I can, in their right order. The first Earles were out of the house of little Britaine in France, whose descent is confusedly intricate amongst their owne writers, for that there were two principall Earles at once, one of Haulte Britaine, and an other of Base Britaine for many yeares, and euery on of their children had their part in Gauell kind, and were stiled Earles of Britaine without distinction. But of these the first Earle of Richmond, according to our writers and Records, was Alane surnamed Feregaunt, that is, The Red, sonne of Hoel Earle of Britaine, descended from Hawise great Awnt to William Conquerour, who gaue this country unto him by name of the lands of Earle Eadwin in Yorkshire, and withall bestowed his daughter upon him by whom he had no issue. He built Richmond Castle, as is before specified, to defend himselfe from disinherited and outlawed Englishmen in those parts: and dying left Britaine to his sonne Conan Le Grosse by a second wife. But Alan the Blacke sonne of Eudo sonne of Geffrey Earle of Britaine and Hawise aforesaid, succeeded in Richmond, and he having no child, left it to Stephen his brother. This Stephen begat Alan surnamed Le Sauage his sonne and successour, who assisted King Stephen against Maude the Empresse in the battaile at Lincolne, and married Bertha one of the heires of Conan Le Grosse Earle of Hault Britain by whom he had Conan Le Petit Earle of both Britaines by hæreditary right, as well as of Richmond. Hee by the assistance of King Henrie the Second of England dispossessed Eudo Vicount of Porhoet his father in lawe who vsurped the title of Britaine in right of the said Bertha his wife: and ended his life leaving onely one daughter Constance by Magaret sister to Malcolne King of Scots. Geffray third sonne to King Henrie the Second of England was aduanced by his father to the marriage of the said Constance, wherby he was Earle of Britaine, and Richmond; and begat of her Arthur who succeeded him, and as the French write was made away by King Iohn his vnckle. True it is indeede, that for this cause, the French called King Iohn into question, as Duke of Normandie: And notwithstanding he was absent, and not heard once to plead, neither confessing ought, nor conuicted, yet by a definitive sentence they condemned him, & awarded from him, Normandie and his hæreditarie possessions in France: Albeit himselfe had promised, under safe conduct to appeere in personally at Paris, there, to make answere as touching the death of Arthur: who as a Liege subject had bound himselfe by oath to bee true and loyall unto him, and yet started backe from his allegeance, raised a rebellion, and was taken prisoner in battaile. At which time this question was debated; whether the Peeres of France might give judgement of a King annointed, and therefore superiour? considering that a greater dignity drowneth the lesser, and now one and the same person was both King of England and Duke of Normandie. But whither doe I digresse? After Arthur, these succeeded orderly in the Earldome of Richmond. Guy Vicount of Thouars, unto whom the foresaid Constance was secondly married. Ranulph the third, Earle of Chester, the third husband of the said Constance. Peter of Dreux, descended from the bloud roiall of France; who wedded Alice the onely daughter of Constance by her husband abovenamed Guy. Then vpon dislike of the house of Britaine, Peter of Savoy, Vnkle by the mothers side unto Eleonor the wife of King Henrie the Third, was made Earle of Richmond, who for feare of the Nobles and Commons of England that murmured against strangers preferred to honours in England, voluntarily surrendred up this Honour which was restored to Iohn Earle of Britaine sonne to Peter of Dreux. After whom succeeded Iohn his sonne, the first Duke of Britaine, who Earles of Richmond.

Guil. Gemit. L. 7. c. 34.

Booke of Richmond Fees. Register of Swasey.

Ouerus de S. Martino is about this time named Earle of Richmond.

Normandie awarded away from the K. K. of England.

Robert de Arthois was not Earle of Richmond as Froſſard writeth, but of Beaumont. The booke of Tenures or Fees of Richmond.

who wedded Beatrice daughter to Henrie the third King of England. Whoſe ſonne Arthur was Duke of Britaine, and as ſome write, Earle of Richmond. Certes, Iohn of Britaine his younger brother, immediatly after the fathers death, bare this honorable title. And he added unto the ancient Armes of Drewx with the Canton of Britain, the Lions of England in Bordeur. He was Gardian of Scotland under K. Edward the Second, and there taken and detained priſoner for three yeeres ſpace, and died at length without iſſue, in the reigne of Edward the third. And Iohn Duke of Britaine, his nephew, the ſonne of Arthur ſucceeded in this Earldome. After his deceaſe without children, when there was hote contention about the Dutchie of Britaine, betweene Iohn Earle of Montford of the halfe bloud, and Ioane his brothers daughter and heire of the whole bloud married to Charles of Bloys: King Edward the Third affecting the ſaid Iohn Earle of Montfort, & to ſtrengthen his owne party in France, fauoured the title of the ſaid Iohn Earle of Montfort for that he was a man and nerer in degree, and therefore ſeemed to haue better right and to be preferred before his Niece (to whom the Parlament of France had adjudged it) & which is more for that he ſware fealty to him as King of France, for the Dutchie of Britaine. In theſe reſpects hee granted the Earldome of Richmond unto the ſaid Iohn vntill he might recouer his owne poſſeſſions in France, which being ſoone after recovered by aid of the Engliſh, the ſaid King beſtowed it vpon Iohn of Gaunt his ſonne. And he afterward ſurrendred it againe into the King his fathers hands for other poſſeſſions. Who forthwith created Iohn Earle of Montfort Duke of Britaine ſurnamed the Valiaunt Earle of Richmond vnto whom he had giuen his daughter to wife, that therby he might more ſurely oblige vnto him a warlike perſon, and then ill affected to the French. But in the fourth yeere of Richard the ſecond he by authority of the Parliament forfaited his Earldome becauſe he adhered vnto the French King againſt England: howbeit he kept ſtill the bare title, and left it vnto his poſterity: But the poſſeſſion was granted to Dame Ioane of Britaine his ſiſter, and the widdow of Ralph L. Baſſet of Drayton. After her deceaſe firſt Ralph Neuill Earle of Weſtmorland, had the Caſtle and Earledome of Richmond for the tearme of his owne life, by the gift of King Henry the fourth. And after him Iohn Duke of Bedford. Then King Henrie the Sixth conferred the title of Earle of Richmond vpon Edmund of Hadham his halfe brother by the mothers ſide, with this ſpeciall and peculiar prerogatiue, To take his place in Parliament next vnto Dukes. After him ſucceeded Henrie his ſonne who was King of England by the name of Henrie the Seventh. But during his exile George Duke of Clarence, and Richard Duke of Gloceſter receiued the Signiorie of Richmond, but not the title from their brother King Edward the fourth. Laſt of all Henrie the baſe ſonne of King Henrie the eighth was by his father inueſted Duke of Richmond who departed this life without iſſue 1535. As for S. Tho. Grey who was made Baron of Richmount by King Henrie the Sixth, was not Lord of this Richmond, but of a place in Bedfordſhire called Rugemound, and Richmount Greies.

Duke of Richmond.

There are contained in this ſhire pariſhes 104. beſide Chapells.

BISHOPRICKE-

BISHOPRICK OF DVRHAM.

THe Bishopricke of Durham or Duresme, bordering on the North-side upon Yorkshire is shaped in fashion of a triangle, the vtmost angle whereof is made up, toward the West, where the Northren Limit and the Spring-head of Tees doe meete. One of the sides which lieth Southward is bounded in with the continued course of the river Tees running downe along by it: the other that looketh Northward, is limited first, with a short line, from the vtmost point to the river Derwent, then, with Derwent it selfe, untill it hath taken unto it Chopwell a little river, and afterward with the river Tine. The Sea coast fashioneth out the Base of the Triangle which lieth Eastward, and the German Ocean with a mighty roaring, and forcible violence beateth thereupon.

On that part where it gathereth narrow to the Westerne angle, the fields are naked and barraine, the woods very thinne, the hilles bare without grasse, but not without mines of yron. As for the Vallies, they are reasonably grassie, and that high hill which I tearmed the Apenine of England, cutteth in twaine this angle. But on the East part or Base of the Triangle, as also on both sides, the ground being well manured, is very fruitfull, and the increase yeeldeth good recompense for the husbandmans toile: it is also well garnished with meddowes, pastures, and corn-fields, beset every where with townes and yeelding plenty of Sea coale, which in many places we use for fewell. Some will have this coale to be an earthy blacke Bitumen, others, to be Gagates, and some againe the Lapis Thracius; all which, that great Philosopher in Mineralls, George Agricola, hath prooved to be one and the same thing. Surely this of ours, is nothing else but Bitumen, or a clammy kind of cley hardned with heat under the earth, and so throughly concocted: For, it yeeldeth the smell of Bitumen, and if water be sprinkled upon it, it burneth more vehemently and the cleerer: but, whether it may be quenched with oile, I have not yet tried. And if the Stone called Obsidianus be in our country, I would take that to be it, which is found in other places of England, and commonly called Canole cole: For, it is hard, bright, light, and somewhat easie to be cloven peece meale into flakes, & being once kindled it burneth very quickly. But let us leave these matters to those that search more deeply into Natures closets.

Obsidianus lapis Canol cole.

All this country with other territories also thereto adjoining the Monasticall writers tearme the Land, or Patrimonie of Saint Cuthbert. For, so they called whatsoever belonged to the Church of Durrham, wherof S. Cuthbert was the Patron: who in the primitiue state of the English Church, being Bishop of Lindefarn, led all his life in such holinesse and so sincerely, that he was enrolled among the English Saints. Our Kings also, and Peeres of the realme, because they verily perswaded themselves that he was their Tutelar Saint and Protectour against the Scots, went not onely in pilgrimage with devotion to visite his bodie (which, they beleeved to have continued still sound & uncorrupt) but also gave very large possessions to this Church, & endowed the same with many immunities. King Egfride bestowed upon Cuthbert himselfe whiles he lived, great revenewes in the very Citie of Yorke, and Creake also whereof I spake, and the Citie Luguballia, as we read in the historie of Durrham. King Aelfred and Guthrun the Dane, whom hee made Lieutenant of Northumberland, gave afterwards all the lands betweene the rivers Were and Tine unto Cuthbert, and to those who ministred in his Church, to have and to hold for ever, as their rightfull possession. (These bee the very words in effect of an ancient booke) whence they might have sufficient maintenance to live upon, & not be pinched with poverty: over and besides, they ordained his Church to be a safe Sanctuarie for all fugitiues: that whosoever for any cause fled unto his coasts, should have peaceable being for 37. daies, and the same liberty never for any occasion to be infringed or denied. Edward and Athelstan, Kings;

Saint Curthberts Patrimonie.

Kings; Knute also or Canutus the Dane, who came on his bare feete to Cuthberts tombe, not onely confirmed but enlarged also these liberties. In like maner King William the Conquerour, since whose time it hath alwaies beene deemed a County Palatine: yea and some of the Bishops, as Counts Palatines have engraven in their seales a Knight or man at armes in complet harnesse sitting upon an horse all trapped, with one hand brandashing a sword, and in the other holding out the Armes of the Bishopricke. A

The Bishops also have had their roialties and princely rights, so that the goods of outlawed & attainted persons out of the Kings protection, fell into their hands & not into the Kings: yea and the commons of that province standing upon their priviledges have refused to serve in warre under the King in Scotland. For, they pleaded (the Storie of Duresme shall speake for me) That they were Haliwerke folkes, and held their lands to defend the Corps of Saint Cuthbert; neither ought they to goe out of the precincts of the Bishopricke, namely beyond Tine and Teese, for King or Bishop. But King Edward the First, was the first that abridged them of these liberties. For, when as he interposed himselfe as Arbitratour betweene the Bishop Antonie Bec, and the Priour who contended most egerly about certaine lands, and they would not stand to his award, he seised, as saith mine author, the libertie of the Bishopricke into his owne hand, and there were many corners serched, many flawes found, and the Liberty in many points much impaired. Howbeit, the Church afterward recovered her rights, and held them inviolate unto the daies of King Edward the Sixth; unto whom, upon the dissolution of the Bishopricke, the States in Parliament granted all the revenewes and liberties thereof. But forthwith Queene Marie by the same authoritie repealed this Act, and restored all things safe and sound unto the Church againe, which it enjoieth at this day. For, the Bishop, Iames Pilkinton of late time entred his action against Queene ELIZABETH, about the possessions and goods of Charles Nevill Earle of Westmorland & of others that stood attainted for treason in this precinct, because they had most wickedly levied warre against their native country: and hee the said Bishop had followed the suit to a triall, if the authority of Parliament had not interposed and adjudged the same for that time, unto the Queene, because to her exceeding great charges she had delivered both Bishop and Bishopricke from the outrage of the rebells. But leaving these matters, let us proceede forward to the description of places. B C D

The river Teise, or Teisis.

The river that boundeth the South part of this country, is called by Larin writers Teisis, and Teesa, commonly Tees: by Polydore Virgill the Italian (whose minde ranne of Atheists in his owne country Italie) without any reason, Atheis. In Ptolomee it seemeth to be called, ΤΟΥΑΣΙΣ and TVESIS: and yet I thinke that in him it is removed out of his proper place through the negligence of transcribers. For, considering that he hath placed TVESIS and TINA in the more remote part of Britaine, where the Scots now inhabite; and seeing that this region is enclosed within Tees and Tine; If I durst, as a Criticke, correct that ancient Geographer, I would recall them home againe hither into their owne places, though they have beene long displaced, and that with the Scots good leave I hope, who have no rivers upon which they can truly father these names. TEES springeth out of that Stonie country called Stanemore, and carrying with him away in his chanell along, many brookes and beckes on each side, and running through rockes (out of which at Egleston, where there is a marble Quarroy, and where Conan Earle of Britaine, and Richmond founded a small Abbay) first beateth upon Bernard Castle, built and so named by Bernard Balliol the great grandfathers father of Iohn Balliol King of the Scots. But this Iohn Balliol, whom King Edward the first had declared King of Scotland, lost the same with other his possessions, because he had broken his allegeance which he sware unto Edward. At which time the King being highly displeased with Antonie Bishop of Durham, tooke this Castle (as witnesseth the booke of Duresme) with the appertinences thereto from him, and conferred the same upon the Earle of Warwicke: as Herkes also and Hertnes, which hee gave unto Robert Clifford: Kewerston also, which he bestowed upon Geffrey of Hertpole, which E

the

A the Bishop had by the forfeiture of Iohn Baliol, Robert Bruse, and Christopher Seton. But a few yeeres after, Lewis Beaumount the Bishop, a man roially descended, but altogether unlettered, brought his action for this castle and the rest of those possessions, and obtained his suite, by vertue of judgement given in this tenour, The Bishop of Durham ought to haue the forfeiture of warres within the liberties of his Bishoprick, as the King hath it without. Hard by it is Stretlham seene, where dwelt for a long time the worshipfull familie of the Bowes, Knights: who from time to time in the greatest troubles haue performed passing good service to Prince and Country; and deriue their pedigree from W. de Bowes, unto whom, as I haue read, Alanus Niger Earle of B Britain and Richmond granted, that hee might giue for his Armes, The Scutcheon of Britain with three bent* Bowes therein.

Stretlham. Bowes. * Ermin.

Not full fiue miles from hence, standeth somewhat farther from Tees banke Standrop, which also is called Stainthorpe, that is, Stony village, a little mercate towne, where there was a Collegiat Church, founded by the Nevills, and was their Burial-place. Neare unto it is Raby, which Cnut or Canute the Danish King gaue freely unto the Church of Durham together with the land lying round about it, and Stanthorpe, to bee held for ever. Since which time, as mine Author informeth mee, the Familie of the Nevills, or De nova villa, held Raby of the Church, paying yeerely for
C it foure pounds and a stagge. These Nevilles deduce their descent from Waltheof Earle of Northumberland, out of whose posteritie, when Robert the sonne of Maldred, Lord of Raby had married the daughter of Geffrey Nevill the Norman (whose grandsire Gilbert Nevill is reported to haue beene Admirall to King William the Conquerour) their succeeding progenie tooke unto them the name of Nevilles, and grew up into a most numerous honorable, and mighty house: who erected heere a great and spatious castle, which was their first and principall seat. These two places Stainthorpe, and Raby are severed one from another onely by a little rill which after some few miles runneth into Tees, neere unto Selaby, where now is the habi-
D tation of the Brakenburies, a familie of right good note both in regard of their owne antiquity, as also for their marriages contracted with the heires of Denton and of Wicliff.

Raby-castle. The family of the Nevils See in Westmorland. Selaby.

Tees passing on from thence by Sockburne, the dwelling house of the ancient and Noble familie of the Coigniers, out of which were the Barons Coigniers of Horn by (whose inheritance much bettered by matching in marriage with the heires of the Lord Darcy of Metnill, and of William Nevill Earle of Kent, and Lord of Fauconberg, is descended from them in the memorie of our fathers, to the Athertons and the Darcies) holdeth his course neere unto Derlington, a mercate towne of good resort, which Seir, an English Saxon the sonne of Vlph, having obteined leaue of King Etheldred gaue unto the Church of Durham: and Hugh Pudsey adorned it
E with a faire Church and other ædifices.

Barons Coigniers. Derlington.

In this towne field are three pittes of a wonderfull depth, the common people tearme them Hel-Kettles, because the water in them by the Antiperistasis or reverberation of the cold aire striking thereupon, waxeth hote. The wiser sort and men of better judgement doe thinke, they came by the sinking downe of the ground swallowed up in some earth-quake, and that by a good probable reason. For, thus weereade in the Chronicles of Tinmouth. In the yeere of our Lord 1179. on Christmas day, at Oxenhall in the Territory of Derlington, within the Bishopricke of Durham, the ground heaved it selfe up aloft like unto a high towre, and so continued all
F that daie as it were unmoveable, untill the evening: and then, fell with so horrible a noise, that it made all the neighbour dwellers afraide: and the earth swallowed it up and made in the same place a deepe pitte, which is there to bee seene for a testimonie, unto this daie, That these pittes haue passages under the ground Bishop Cuthbert Tonstall first observed, by finding that goose in the river Teese, which hee for the better triall and experience of these pittes, had marked and let downe into them.

Hell Kettels Deepe pits. Earth quake.

Beyond Derlington, Tees hath no townes of any great account standing upon it, but Certaine Gentlemen called Sur.

Teis i. upon Teis, ſometime flouriſhed here.

but gliding along the skirtes of greene fieldes, and by country villages, winding in and out as he paſſeth; at length diſchargeth himſelfe at a large mouth into the Ocean, whence the baſe or bothom of the Triangle aforeſaid towardes the ſea beginneth. A Gretham.

From hence the ſhore coaſteth Northward, holding on entire ſtill, ſaue that it is interrupted with one or two little brookes and no more, nere unto Gretham; where Robert Biſhop of Durham having the Manour given freely nnto him by Sir Peter de Montfort, founded a goodly Hoſpitall. Next unto it is Claxton which gaue name unto a family of good and ancient note, in this tract: whereof, I haue beene the more willing to make mention, becauſe of the ſame houſe was T. Claxton, an affectionate lover of venerable antiquity. From thence, the ſhore ſhooteth forth into the ſea with one onely promontory ſcarce ſeven miles aboue Tees mouth, on B

Hartlepole.

which ſtandeth very commodiouſly Hartlepole, a good towne of trade, and a ſafe harbour for ſhipping. Bede ſeemeth to call it Heoꝛtu, which Henry of Huntingdon, interpreteth the Harts or Stagges Iſland, where hee writeth, that Heiu a religious woman founded a monaſterie in times paſt. If Heorteu bee not rather the name of that little territorie, which the Booke of Dureſme ſeemeth to implie and in another place calleth Heort-neſſe, becauſe it lieth out ſomewhat farre into the ſea. From this for fifteene miles together the ſhore beeing in no place broken off, but here and there embrodered as it were and garniſhed with townes, ſmileth pleaſantly upon thoſe that ſaile that way, untill it openth it ſelfe to make roome for the river VEDRA; for, ſo Ptolomee calleth that, which Bede nameth Wirus, the Saxons peoꝛ; and we Were. This river firſt groweth into one out of three riverets Burdonhop Wel-hop and Kel-hop in the vtmoſt part of this country Weſtward: which when they are joyned in one chanel is called by one name Were, and ſpeedeth into the Eaſt, by vaſt moores and heathes, by great parkes of the Biſhops, and by Witton a little caſtle or pile belonging to the Lords Evers, who are noble men in this Country of great antiquity, as deſcended from the Lords of Clavering and Warkworth, as alſo from the Veſcyes and the Attons, by daughters: renowned for their martiall proeſſe, which Scotland may well witneſſe. For, King Edward the Firſt, gaue unto them for their valiant ſervice Kettnes a little towne in Scotland, and King Henry the Eighth within our fathers remembrance honoured them in that reſpect with the title of Barons. C D

A promontory in our language is called Neſſe.

The river Vedra, or Were.

Witton. Barons Evers. or D'Eure.

Then Were after a few miles taketh into him from the South Gaunleſſe a riveret; where, at the very meeting of them both togither, there ſtandeth upon a high hill Aukland ſo called of Okes (like as Sarron in Greece) which ſheweth an houſe of the Biſhops ſtately built with turrets by Antonie Bec; and withall a beautifull bridge, made by Walter Skirlaw a Biſhop of Durham about the yeere 1400. who alſo enlarged this houſe and built the bridge over Tees at Yare. From hence Were turneth his courſe Northward, that he might water this ſhire the longer, and then forthwith looketh up to the remaines of an ancient City not now a dying, but dead many yeeres agoe, ſtanding on the brow of a hill: which Antonine the Emperour called VINOVIVM, Ptolomee BINOVIVM, in whom it is ſo thruſt out of his owne place, and ſet as it were in another climate, that it would for ever haue lien hid, had not Antonine pointed at it with his finger. Wee call it at this day Bincheſter, and it hath in it a very few houſes: yet it is very well knowne to them that dwell there about, both by reaſon of the heapes of rubbiſh, and the reliques of walles yet to be ſeene, as alſo for peeces of Romaine coine often digged up there, which they call Bincheſter Pennies, yea and for the Inſcriptions of the Romans, amongſt which I happened of late when I was there upon an Alter with this Inſcription. E F

Auk-land.

Vinovium. Bincheſter.

DE

A

As concerning the Mother Goddesses. See in Lancashire.

Anno Christi. 236. Votum solvit liben. merito. i. Paid his vow willingly and duly.

B Another stone also was heere lately gotten out of the ground, but defaced with voide places, where the letters were worne out: which notwithstanding, if one beheld it wishly seemeth to shew this inscription.

C

Neither haue I red any thing else of it, but that an old booke maketh mention, how the Earles of Northumberland, long since plucked away this with other villages from the Church, what time as that accursed and unsatiable hunger after gold swallowed up also the sacred patrimony of the church.

D On the other Banke of Were, among the mounting hilles appeereth Branspeth castle, which the Bulmers built, and the daughter of Sir Bertram Bulmer coupled in mariage unto Geffrey Nevil, adjoyned with other great possessions unto the familie of the Nevills. Within a while after Were runneth downe much troubled and hindered in his course with many great stones apparent aboue the water, which unlesse the river doe rise and swell with great store of raine, are never over covered: and upon which (a thing that hapneth not elsewhere) if yee powre water, and temper it a little with them, it sucketh in a saltish quality. Nay, that which more is, at Butterby a little village, when the river in summer time is very ebbe and shallow, there issueth out of those stones a certaine salt reddish E water, which by the heat of the Sunne waxeth so white, and with all groweth to a thicke substance, that the people dwelling thereby gather from hence salt sufficiently for their use.

Branspath Castle.

Salt-stones.

And now the river, as though it purposed to make an Island, compasseth almost on every side the cheife City of this Province standing on an hill, whence the Saxons gaue it the name Dunholm. For, as you may gather out of Bede, they called an hill Dun, and a river Island Holme. Hereof, the Latin writers haue made DVNELMVM, the Normans Duresme, but the common people most corruptly name it Durham. It is seated on high, and passing strongly withall, yet taketh it up no great circuit of ground; shaped in forme, as one would say, of an egge, environed on every side F saue on the North with the river, and fortified with a wall. Toward the South-side almost, whereas the river fetcheth it selfe about, standeth the Cathedrall church a loft, making a solemne and a sightly shew with an high towre in the midest and two spire at the West end.

Dunelmus. Durham, or Duresme.

In the midest there is a castle placed, as it were betweene two stone bridges over the river, the one Eastward, the other West-ward. From the castle Northward is seene a spatious mercate place and Saint Nicholas church: from whence there runneth out a great length North-east a Suburbe compassed on two sides the river: like as others on both sides beyond the river, which lead unto the bridges, and every of them haue their severall Churches. The originall of this City is of no great antiquity. For, when the distressed Monkes of Lindisfarn driven hither, and thither by the Danes warres, wandered up and downe without any certaine place of abode with the corps of Saint Cuthbert, at length here they settled themselues by divine direction, about the yeere of our salvation 995. But heere the whole matter out of mine author of Durrham. All the people accompanying the corps of that most holy father Cuthbert came into Dunholm, a place verily strong of it selfe by nature, but not easily to bee inhabited as beeing wholy beset on every side with a most thicke wood: onelie in the middest was a little plaine, which was wont to bee tilled and sowed with corne: where Bishop Aldwin built afterwards a faire Church of stone. The foresaid Prelate therefore, through the helpe of all the people and the assistance of Vthred Earle of Northumberland, stocked up all the wood and in short time made the whole place habitable. To conclude, the people generally from the river Coqued as farre as to Tees, came right willingly, as well to this worke, as after that to build a Church: and untill it was finished ceased not to follow that businesse devoutly. Wherefore after the wood was quite grubd up, and every one had their mansion places assigned out by lot; The said Bishoppe in a fervent loue to Christ and Saint Cuthbert, upon an honest and Godly intent beganne (no small peece of worke) to build a Church, and endevoured by all meanes to finish the same. Thus farre mine author.

Not many yeeres after, those Englishmen who could not endure the insolent command of the Normans, presuming upon the natural strength of the place, chose it for their cheife hold and seat of resistance, yea and from thence troubled the Conqueror not a little. For, William Gemeticensis writeth thus. They went into a part of the Country which for waters and woods was inaccessible, raising a Castle with a most strong trench and rampier, which they called Dunholme: out of which making many rodes sundry waies, for a certaine space they kept themselues close there, waiting for the comming of Swene King of the Danes. But when that fell not out according to their expectation, they provided for themselues by flight: and King William comming to Durham, granted many priviledges for establishing the liberty of the Church, and built the castle whereof I spake, on the highest part of the hill, which afterwards became the bishops house: and the keies thereof when the Bishoprick was voide, were wont by an ancient custome to be hanged upon Saint Cuthberts shrine.

When this castle was once built, Willi. of Malmesbury who lived about that time, describeth this city in these words. Durham is a prety hill rising by little and little from one plaine of the valley with a gentle ascent, untill it come to bee a mount: and although by reason of the rough and steepe situation of the rockes, there is no way for the enemie to enter it; yet they of these daies haue erected a Castle upon the hill. At the very foot and botom of the Castle, runneth a river, wherein is great store of fish, but of Salmons especially. At the same time well neere (as that ancient booke reporteth) William de Careleph the bishop, who gathered againe the dispersed monkes hither (for, the Danes in every place had overthrowne their cloistures) pulled downe that Church which Aldwin had formerly built and beganne the foundation of another of a fairer worke, which his successor Ralph finished. And after that, Nicholas Feruham Bishop, and Thomas Melscomb Prior, adjoyned a new fabrique or frame unto it, in the yeere of Christ 1242. And a good while after. W. Skirlaw the Bishop, built at the West end of the Church a faire peece of worke which they call Gallilee, whereinto hee translated the marble tombe of Venerable Bede. In which place Hugh Pudsey, beganne in times past an house, wherein (I use the wordes of an ancient booke) women might lawfullie enter, that whereas they had not corporall accesse unto the more secret holy places; yet they might haue some comfort by the beholding of the holy mysteries.

Gallilee.

For no woman might enter into Durham Church.

But, that Ralph the Bishop aforesaid, as our Historian writeth, reduced the place betweene the Church and the Castle, which had beene taken up with many dwelling houses,

into

A into a plaine and open ground; for feare leaſt either any anoyance by filth, or dangers by fire, might come nere unto the Church. And all be it the City was ſtrong enough by the naturall ſite, yet hee made it more ſtrong, and ſtately with a wall, reaching in length from the chancell of the Church, unto the keepe and towre of the caſtle: Which wall now by little and little giveth place unto time, and never that I could heere, ſuffered any aſſault of enemie.

For, when David Brus, King of Scots, had forraied the Country with fire and ſword, as farre as to Beanparke or Beereparke, which is a parke nere unto the City, whiles King Edward the Third beſieged Calais, Henry Percy and William Zouch Archbiſhop of Yorke, with their companies of men muſtered up in haſt, encoun- Bere-parke. 1346.

B tred the Scots, and ſo couragionſly charged them, that having taken the King priſonor they ſlew the moſt of the firſt and ſecond battaile; and put the third to a feare-full flight: neither ſtaied they at moſt ſteepe and combersome places, untill they recovered their owne holds. This is that famous battaile, which our people call the Battaile at Nevills Croſſe. For, the cheifeſt of the Scottiſh Nobility beeing ſlaine Battaile of Nevils croſſe. and the King taken priſoner at this field, they were enforced to yeeld much ground within their confines, yea and to render many Caſtles. But this may ſuffice as touching Durham: which I will take my leaue of, if you thinke good, with a Diſtichon of Neeham, and an Hexaſtichon of I. Ionſton.

C Arte, ſituque loci munita Dunelmia ſalue,
Qua floret ſanctæ relligionis apex.

VEDRA ruens rapidis modò curſibus, agmine leni,
Seque minor celebres ſuſpicit vrbe viros
Quos dedit ipſa olim, quorum & tegit oſſa ſepulta;
Magnus vbi ſacro marmore BEDA cubat.
Se iactant aliæ vel relligione, vel armis;
Hæc armis cluit, hæc relligione potens.

D Durham by art and ſite of place well fenſed now farewell,
Where for devout religion the Mitre doth excell.

The river WERE that ranne moſt ſwift ere while, with ſtreame now ſoft
And chanell leſſe, to famous men in towne lookes up aloft;
Whom once it bred: and of whoſe bones in graue it is poſſeſt:
Where under ſacred marble ſtone, Great Beda now doth reſt.
Of Armes or of Religion, may other boaſt, I grant,
For Armes and for Religion both, this City makes her vaunt.

E Concerning the Monkes that were caſt out at the ſuppreſſion of the Abbaies, the twelue Prebendaries and two Arch-Deacons placed in this Church, and the Priors name changed into the dignity of a Deane, I neede not to ſay any thing: for, they are yet in freſh memorie. And unwilling I am to remember how this Biſhopricke was diſſolved by a private Statute, and all the poſſeſſions thereof given to Edward the Sixth, when private greedineſſe eadged by Church men did grind the Church, and withdrew much from God, wherewith Chriſtian pietie had formerly honoured God. But Queene Marie repealed that ſtatute and reſtored the ſaid Biſhopricke withall the poſſeſſions, and franchiſes thereof, that

F God might enioy his owne. The Longitude of this City is 22. degrees. The Latitude 54. degrees and 57. minutes.

Beneath Durham, that I may not overpaſſe it, ſtandeth Eaſtward a very faire Hoſpitall, which Hugh Pudſey that moſt wealthy Biſhop, and Earle of Northumberland, ſo long as it was, Beeing very indulgently compaſſionate to Lepres (as Neubrigenſis writeth) built with coſt (I muſt needes ſay profuſe enough) but in ſome ſort not Shirburne Hoſpitall.

so honeſt: as who layd no ſmall deall of other mens right (ſo great was his powre) upon this devotion, whiles hee thought much to disburſe ſufficient of his owne. Howbeit hee aſſigned unto it revenewes to maintaine threeſcore and fiue Lepres, beſides Maſſe Prieſts. A Finchdale.

From Durham Were carrieth his ſtreame Northward with a more direct courſe, by Finchdale; where, in the reigne of King Henry the Second Goodrick a man of the ancient Chriſtian ſimplicity, and auſterity wholy devoted to the ſervice of God, led a ſolitary life and ended his daies: beeing buried in the ſame place, wherein, as that William of Neuborrow ſaith, he was wont either to lie proſtrate whiles he praied, or to lay him downe when hee was ſicke. Who with this his devout ſimplicity, drew men into ſo great an admiration of him, that R. brother unto that rich Biſhop Hugh Pudſey built a Chappell in memorriall of him. B

Lumley. Barons Lumley.

From thence Were paſſeth by Lumley Caſtle ſtanding within a parke, the ancient ſeat of the Lumleies, who deſcended from Liulph, a man in this tract of right great Nobility in the time of King Edward the Confeſſour, who married Aldgitha the daughter of Aldred Earle of Northumberland. Of theſe Lumleies, Marmaduke aſſumed unto him his mothers coate of Armes (in whoſe right he was ſeized of a goodly inheritance of the Thwengs) namely, Argent of Feſſe Gueles betweene three Poppinjaes Vert, whereas the Lumlies beforetime had borne for their Armes, Six Popiniayes Argent, in Gueles. For ſhee was the eldeſt daughter of Sir Marmaduke Thweng Lord of Kilton, and one of the heires of Thomas Thweng her brother. But Ralph ſonne to the ſaid Marmaduke was the firſt Baron Lumley, created by King Richard the Second: which honour Iohn the Ninth from him enjoied in our daies a man moſt honorable for all the ornaments of true Nobility. C

Cheſter upon the ſtreet. Condercum.

Iuſt over againſt this place, not farre from the other banke of the river ſtandeth Cheſter upon the Street, as one would ſay, the Caſtle or little City by the port way ſide: the Saxons called it Concerten: whereupon, I would deeme it to bee CONDERCVM, in which as the booke of Notices recordeth, the firſt wing of the Aſtures, in the Romains time kept ſtation and lay in garizon, within the Line or præcinct (as that booke ſaith) of the WALL. For it is but a few miles diſtant from that famous WALL, whereof I am to ſpeake hereafter. The Biſhops of Lindifarre lived obſcurely heere with the corps of Saint Cuthbert, whiles the raging ſtormes of the Danes were up, for the ſpace of an hundred and thirteene yeeres. In memorie whereof, when Egelricke Biſhoppe of Durham laied the foundation of a new Church in that place, hee found ſuch a mightie maſſe of money buried within the ground, as is thought by the Romanes, that wallowing now in wealth, hee gaue over his Biſhopricke: and beeing returned to Peterborrow whereof hee had beene Abbot before, made cauſeys through the fennes and raiſed other workes, not without exceeding great charges. D

And a long time after Anthony Bec, Biſhop of Durham and Patriarch of Ieruſalem erected here a Collegiat Church, a Deane, and ſeven Prebends. In which church, the Lord Lumley aboue ſaid placed and ranged in goodly order the monnments of his Anceſtors in a continued line of ſucceſſion even from Liulph unto theſe our daies; which he had either gotten togither out of monaſteries that were ſubverted, or cauſed to bee made a new. And further within, almoſt in the middeſt of the Triangle, there is another little village alſo knowne of late by reaſon of the Colledge of a Deane and Prebendaries founded by that Antony Bec at Lancheſter, which I once thought to haue beene LONGOVICVM a ſtation of the Romanes. E

Hilton Caſtle.

But let us returne unto Were, which now at length turneth his courſe Eaſtward, and running beſide Hilton a Caſtle of the Hiltons, a familie of ancient gentry; uenteth his waters with a vaſt mouth into the ſea at Wiran-muth, as Bede tearmeth it, now named Monkes Were-mouth, becauſe it belonged to the Monkes. Touching which mouth or out-let, thus writeth William of Malmsburie. This Were where hee entereth into the ſea, entertaineth ſhippes brought in with a faire gale of winde, within the gentle and quiet boſome of his out-let. Both the bankes whereof, Benedict F

Biſhop

A Bishop beautified with Churches and built Abbaies there, one in the name of Saint Peter and the other of Saint Paule. The painfull industry of this man hee will wonder at, who shall read his life; for that he brought hither great store of bookes, & was the first man that ever procured Masons and Glasiers for windowes to come into England. Glasiers first in England.

Five miles higher, the river Tine doth also vnlade it selfe, which together with Derwent for a good way lineth out (as it were) the North side of this country. Upon Derwent which hath his spring head neere unto the top of the Triangle, there standeth nothing of note, unlesse it be a little Village which now they call Ebchester, of Ebchester. Ebba a Virgin of the bloud roiall of the Northumbers, of whom there went so great a Saint Ebba;

B name and opinion for her sanctimonie and devotion about the yeere 630, that being Canonized among the Saints, she hath many Churches in this Iland dedicated unto her, which the common sort usually call Saint Tabbs, for Saint Ebbes. Saint Tabbs.

But by Tine there is situate a memorable towne called Gateshead in the English Saxon tongue Gaetheheb, and by Latin Historians, Capræ Caput, which is the same, as one would say, Goates head: and is as it were the Suburbs of Newcastle, standing on the hether side of Tine, whereunto also it was annexed by King Edward the Sixth, when the Bishopricke was dissolued. But Queene Marie soone after restored it againe unto the Church. The common people thinke it is farre more ancient than New-castle it selfe And if I also, should say, that this and New-castle together (for one

C towne it may seeme in old time to have beene, divided onely by the river) was that Frontier station, which under the later Emperours they called GABROSENTVM, and was kept by the second Band of the Thracians, and that it retained still the ancient name in sense and signification, whereas, New-castle hath gotten once or twice a new name, I hope my opinion would be nothing dissonant from the truth: For, Gaffr in the British tongue signifieth a Goat, and Hen in ordinary speech is used for Pen, which betokeneth an Head: and in the very same signification our old Historiographers terme it in Latin Capræ Caput, like as Brundusium, in the Messapians Language tooke that name, from a Stags head. I would thinke that this name was given unto this place, by occasion of some Inn that had a Goats head for D the signe: even as Gallus Gallinaceus, that is, The Housecocke, Tres Sorores, that is, Three sisters, and Pirum, that is, The Peare, Places in Africke, Spaine, and Italie, whereof Antonine maketh mention: which, of such signes (as some learned men suppose) tooke their names. And our Historians all with one accord, name this towne Capræ Caput, when they record, that Walcher Bishop of Durham, whom King William the first had made Governour over Northumberland with the authority of an Earle, was slaine in this place by the furious multitude, for misgoverning the country.

Beneath this towne, almost at the very mouth of Tine, is to be seene Girwy, now Iarrow. Iarrow, the native soile of venerable Bede, where also in ancient times flourished a Girwy. Bede.

E little Monastery: The founder whereof and the time of the foundation, this inscription sheweth, which is yet extant in the Church wall.

DEDICATIO BASILICÆ
S. PAVLI VIII. KL. MAII.
ANNO XVI. ECFRIDI REG.
CEOLFRIDI ABB. EIVSDEMQ.
ECCLES DEO AVCTORE, CONDITORIS ANNO IIII.

F

These greater Churches when the Saving light of Christ shone upon the world Basilicæ. (let it not seeme impertinent to note so much by occasion of the word Basilica) were tearmed BASILICAE, for that the Basilicæ of the Gentiles which were large and spatious Hauls, wherein Magistrates sat in judgement and ministred Iustice, were converted into Christians Churches. Whence Ausonius wrote thus, Basilica olim negotijs tys plena &c. The Basilica [or Haull of Iustice] in times past full of businesses, is now as full of Prayers and vowes: or else becauſe they were built in forme ſomewhat long, in maner of thoſe Basilicæ. A

S. Bede. Heere our Bede, the ſingular glory and ornament of England who for his piety and learning got the ſurname of VENERABILIS, beſtowed all diligence, as himſelfe ſaith, in meditation of the Scriptures, and amidde the moſt boiſterous billowes and ſurging waves of Barbariſme wrote many moſt learned volumes. When he was once dead, there was buried with him, as William of Malmesbury ſaith, all the knowledge well neere of Acts and monuments, untill our time. For, when there ſucceeded ever one more lazie than another, the heat of good ſtudies was abated, and cooled through the whole land. And the Danes for their part, plagued this holy place in ſuch wiſe, that ſhortly after the Conqueſt, when ſome in theſe countries went in hand to reſtabliſh the Monkes againe, and Walcher the Biſhop aſſigned this place for them; Onely walles, as ſaith mine author, were ſtanding without any rouſe, and it ſcarcely retained any ſigne of the ancient dignity: howbeit for all that, they framing a rouſe over head of rough hewen wood ſuch as they could get, and thatching it with ſtraw, beganne to celebrate divine ſervice therein. B

Biſhops of Durham. I neede not to make a Catalogue of the Biſhops of Durham who are reputed Count-Palatines. Let it ſuffice to intimate thus much, that ſince the firſt time, a See was heere erected, in the yeere of our redemption 995, there have ſitten in it 35. Biſhops unto our daies. Of which theſe were moſt eminent: Hugh Pudſey nobly deſcended, and allyed to King Stephen: who for a thouſand and thirteene pounds preſently diſburſed, purchaſed of King Richard the firſt, the County of Northumberland for his life; and Sathbrege, to his ſucceſſours for ever, and built that goodly Hoſpitall whereof I ſpake: betweene whom and the Archbiſhop there aroſe a moſt bitter controverſie, Whiles (as he writeth of them) hic præeſſe ille non ſubeſſe, & neuter prodeſſe contenderet, that is, One would be ſuperior, the other would not be inferior, and neither of them would doe any good. Antonie Bec, Patriarch of Ieruſalem, who ſpent infinite ſummes of money, upon vaſt buildings, and glorious furniture. Thomas Wolſey Cardinall, who in his high proſperity wanted nothing but moderation (but his Hiſtorie is ſufficiently knowen.) And Cuthbert Tunſtall, who died in our time, for ſingular knowledge in the beſt Sciences, ſincere holineſſe of life, and great wiſedome approved in domeſticall, and forraine imploiments, was (without offence be it ſpoken) æquiualent to them all, and a ſingular ornament to his native countrie. C D

See the Earles of Northumberland.

In this province and in Northumberland beſide very many Chappels, are counted pariſh Churches 118. E

LANCA-

CUMBER: LANDIÆ

WESTMORE
PARS

PA: RS

Ken dale

Leuen land

Kent sad

Lancaster

Ormiskirk

Marto mos se

Pilling mose

Garsting

Fonlney Insul:

The pole of neudran

Sunderland poynt

Coker sandobba

Altmouth

The black rocke

Hilbre Insull

CES:

O CEA:
NUS

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12

Chris: Saxton. descrip: Guliel: Hole sculpsit

NDLE EBORACEN=

LANCASTRIÆ

Comitatus palatinus olim pars

BRIGANTUM

SIS

PAR

DAR=

BIÆ

PARS

TRIÆ PARS

The countye stones

Ingleboro hill

Thornton

Penningshu:

ouer Bentham

Benthams hall

Tatcham chap:

Hindbrome flu:

The cross of Gyrete

Slaborne

Holker flu:

Batterbey

Esington

Gisborn

Kibble flu:

Brascu'ell

Gillark

Newton

Forest

Holker flu:

Bardford

Chaddet

Sawley

Rimington

Foulridg

Barnesid

Dou'nham

Wicoler

Radhomle pk

Waddington

Werston

Newchurch

Colne

Bashall

Clethero cast

Pendleton

Pendhill

Marshden chap:

Padiam

Burnley

Whaley

Salesburye hall

Lungsden

Read

Symonite

Widdophead

Haru'ood mar

Marthelme

Alkin

Tou'nley

Holme

Stiperden

Hampton tou're

Hunsee

Dunkenshalgh

Samsburye hall

Chirkes

Stansfeld

Todmerden

Bacop

Aerentan chap:

Blackborne

Hauxley

Rossendale

Hyndeden

Brundell

Daru'en chap:

Teckeleles chap:

Blakeston

The battinges

Clayton

Turtō chap:

Hou'elme chap:

Newhall

Clegoe

Mylnecraw

Rochdale

Bradlesh

Ashu'orth chap:

Hopwood

Stake chap:

Bury

Hawood

Chatterton

Middleton

Oldham

Micleburst

Bolton

Blakeley chap:

Ashton

Stanley hall

Wigan

Hyderton

Worsley

Claton hall

Manchester

MANCVNIVM

Mottram

Eccles

Garret hall

Dunkenfeld

Leigh

Worsley

Parton

Whickegate

Trafford

Denton

Harden

Dena

Trimston

Kilcheth

Chat

mosse

Flixton

Clayhall

Chowerton chap:

Greythall

Meller chap:

Newchurch

Heleros

Barlow

Diddesbury

Marsfull chap:

Ashton

Carrinton

Salle

Northen

Cheadle

Stopford

Hollinwrene

Brreche

Bixt

Warberton

Haulton east:

Runcorne

A

LANCA-SHIRE.

B I Muſt now turne the courſe of my journey another way, unto the reſt of the BRIGANTES, who were planted on the farther ſide of the hilles toward the Iriſh ſea: and firſt unto Lanca-ſhire, which I goe unto (God ſpeede me well) after a ſort ſomewhat againſt my will: For I feare me that I ſhall not ſatisfie my ſelfe, and much leſſe the reader. For very few things fell out to my deſire, when I trauailed over the greateſt part thereof, the old names in every place haue bin ſo worne out by the continuall aſſault of Time. But leaſt I might be thought to neglect the harty good Lancaſhiremen, I will proceed, in hope that Gods aſſiſtance, which hitherto hath beene favourable unto me, will not now faile me.

Under thoſe mountaines, which (as I have often ſaid heeretofore) ſhoote along through the middle of England, and interpoſe themſelves as vmpiers & Bounders between diverſe ſhires, Lancaſhire lieth toward the Weſt, in the Engliſh Saxon tonge
C Loncaſcyr-ſcyre, commonly tearmed Lonka-ſhire Lanca-ſhire, and The County Palatine, of Lancaſter, becauſe it is notably known by the title of a County Palatine. It is ſo encloſed betweene Yorkſhire on the Eaſtſide, and the Iriſh Sea on the Weſt, that on the South ſide where it boundeth upon Cheſhire it is broader, and by little and little the more Northward it goeth, where it confineth upon Weſtmorland, the narrower it groweth. And there, by an Arme of the Sea inſinuating it ſelfe, is interrupted, and hath a good part of it which butteth upon Cumberland, beyond the ſaid Arme.

Where the ground is plaine and champion, it yeeldeth good ſtore of barly and wheat: that which lieth at the botome of the hilles, is better for otes: The ſoile e-D very where is meetely good and tolerable, unleſſe it be in certaine moiſt places and unwholſome called Moſſes, which notwithſtanding make amends for theſe their diſcommodities, with more plentifull commodities. For, if their vpper coate bee paired away, they yeeld certaine vnctuous or fattiſh * Turffes for fewell, and ſome times vnder-grownd trees, or which have lien along time buried there. Underneath alſo in divers places they affourd abundance of marle, which ſerveth in ſteed of mucke to enrich their grounds. Whereby, the ſoile that in mans opinion was held moſt unapt to beare corne, beginneth now to be ſo kind and arable, that it may be juſtly thought, mens idleneſſe in times paſt was greater than any natural barainneſſe of the ſoile. But a man may judge of the goodneſſe of the ſoile, partly by the conſti-
E tution and complexion of the inhabitants, who are to ſee to, paſſing faire and beautifull, and in part, if you pleaſe, by the cattaile. For, in their kine and oxen which have goodly heads and faire ſpread hornes, and are in body well proportionate withall, you ſhall find in maner no one point wanting, that Mago the Carthaginian doth require, as Columella ſpecifieth out of him.

Moſſes.
* Ceſpites.

Lankaſhire beeſes.

On the South part, it is ſeparated from Cheſhire with the river Merſey which ſpringing forth of the midland hilles, having paſſed a little from his head, becommeth a bound to diſtinguiſh the Shires, & with a ſlow current runneth Weſtward, calling as it were, other rivers (to uſe the words of the Poet) into his skie coloured and Azure lappe, and forthwith gladly biddeth welcome unto Irwell from the North,
F which river bringeth along with him all the rivers of this Eaſtern part. Among theſe, Roch is of greateſt name, which hath ſtanding upon it in the Vale, Rochdale a mercate towne well frequented; like as Irwell it ſelfe hath ſituate upon it Bury a mercate towne nothing inferiour to the other: and hard by, whiles I carefully ſought for COCCIVM, mentioned by Antonine the Emperour, I ſaw Cockley, a chapell built of timber, beſet round about with trees: Alſo Turton Chappell among very ſteepe downfalls, and overgrowen unpleaſant places: Turton towre, and Entweiſſell a proper per faire houſe: which had in times paſt Gentlemen of that name, as Turton is the A ſeate at this day of the right ancient family of Orell. But, where Irke and Irwell meet together, on the left hand bank raiſed of a reddiſh kind of ſton, ſcarce three miles frō Merſey, flouriſhed that town of right great antiquity which we now call Mancheſter, Mancunium. and Antonine the Emperour called MANCVNIVM, and MANVCIVM, according to the variety of the Copies. This retaining the firſt part of his ancient name, farre excelleth the townes lying round about it, for the beautifull ſhew it carieth, for reſort unto it, and for clothing: in regard alſo of the mercate place, the faire Church, and Colledge, founded by Thomas Lord De-la-ware, a prieſt (the laſt heire male of his family) and ſummoned to the Parliament among the Lords temporall by the B name of Magiſter Thomas De-la-ware. For he deſcended from the Greleies, who were the ancient Lords of this towne and by Ioane ſiſter of the ſaid Sir Thomas, it came to Weſts now Lords De-la-ware. But, in the foregoing age, this towne was of farre greater account, both for certain wollen clothes there wrought and in great requeſt commonly called Mancheſter Cottons, and alſo for the libertie of a Sanctuary, which under King Henrie the Eighth, was by Parlamentary authority, rranſlated to Cheſter. In a parke of the Earle of Derbies neare adjoining, called Alparke, where the brooke Medlocke entreth into Irwell, I ſaw the plot and ground worke of an ancient Fortreſſe built foure ſquare, commonly called Mancaſtle: which I will not in any wiſe ſay, was that ancient MANCVNIVM, it is contained in ſo narrow a C peece of ground, but rather the Fort of Mancunium, and ſtation of the Romans where they kept watch and ward: at which I ſaw this ancient inſcription in a long ſtone to the memorie of Candidus a Centurion.

Roch-dale.

Cockley.

 Centurionis.* D

As for this other, Iohn Dee that moſt famous Mathematician, and Warden of Mancheſter Colledge, who had a ſight of the ſame heere, copied it out for me.

E

Both which may ſeeme erected in honor of thoſe Centurions, for their loyaltie and honeſty ſo many yeeres approoved.

In the yeere of our Salvation 920, King Edward the Elder, as Marianus writeth, ſent an armie of Mercians into Northumberland, To reedifie the Citie of Mancheſter, and to place a gariſon there (for it belonged formerly unto the Kings of Northumberland) and ſeemeth to have beene quite deſtroied in the Daniſh warre: againſt whom, becauſe the inhabitants had borne themſelves as valiant men, they will have their towne to be called Mancheſter, that is, as they expound it, The Citie of Men, and in this conceit which implieth their owne commendation, they wonderfully pleaſe F
and

A and flatter themſelves. But full little knowe the good honeſt men, that MANCVNIVM was the name of it in the Britans time, ſo that the Etymologie thereof, out of our Engliſh tongue, can by no meanes ſeeme probable. I for my part therefore would derive it rather from Main a Britiſh word which ſignifieth a Stone: For, upon a ſtony hill it is ſeated, and beneath the very towne, at Colyhurſt, there are moſt good and famous quarries of ſtone.

But, to returne againe. Merſeie now by this time carrying a fuller ſtreame by reaſon of Irwell conſociating with him, holdeth on in his journey toward the Ocean, by Trafford, from whence the Traffords a family of great good note tooke their name as they had their habitation: alſo by Chatmoſſe, a low moſſie ground, lying a great Trafford.
B way in length and bredth: a good part whereof, the brookes ſwelling high within our fathers remembrance caried quite away with them not without much danger: Whereby, the rivers were corrupted, and a number of freſh fiſh periſhed. In which place now lieth a vale ſomewhat low, watered with a little brooke, and trees have beene diſcovered lying along. So that it may be thought, when the ground lay neglected, and the chanells were not ſkoured in thoſe open and flat valleies for riverets Moſſes whence they come.
and brookes to paſſe away, but the water-lades ſtopped up either through negligence, or depopulation: that then all the grounds that lay lower than others, became ſuch boggy plots, as we call Moſſes, or elſe ſtanding Meeres. Which if it bee true, we neede not mervaile that ſo many trees in the like places every where
C throughout England (but in this ſhire eſpecially) ly overwhelmed, and as it were, buried. For, when their rootes were looſened through overmuch moiſture, the trees could not chuſe but fall, and in ſuch ſoft ground ſinke and be quite ſwallowed up. They that dwell there abouts, aſſay and trie with poles and ſpits, where they ly hidden, and when they light upon them marke the place, digge them out, and uſe them for fire wood: For they burne cleere & give light, as well as torch wood which happly is by reaſon of a bituminous and clammy fat earth wherein they lie: whence the common ſort take them for firres: which notwithſtanding Cæſar denieth to have growen in Britaine. I know it is an opinion curr'ant with the moſt, that theſe trees Firre trees in Cæſars time grew not in Britaine. over turned with the force of waters, have lien ever ſince Noahs floud, when the D world was drowned, and ſo much the rather, becauſe they are elſewhere digged out of very high places: and yet they denie not, but thoſe high grounds are very mariſh and wateriſh.

Such mighty trees alſo are found oftentimes in Holland, a country of Germanie: which the learned men there, ſuppoſe were either undermined by waves working into the Shore, or by winds driven forward and brought unto thoſe lower and moiſt places; where they ſetled and ſunke downe. But let the curious company of Philoſophers ſearch into theſe matters to whom I commend them, and to their further inquiery, whether there are not Subterranean trees growing under earth; as well as plants and other creatures. After Chatmoſſe, Holcroft ſheweth it ſelfe, which, as it af-
E forded the ſeat, ſo it gaue the name alſo, to that right ancient family of the Holcrofts: Holecroft.
whoſe eſtate in old time was much amended by marriage with one of the heires of Culchit a place ſeated hard by, which Gilbert de Culchit held, Of the Fee of Almaricke Butler, as he himſelfe did of the Earle of Ferrars, in King Henrie the Third his time. Whoſe eldeſt daughter and heire, when Richard Fitz-Hugh of Hindley had married, he aſſumed to himſelfe the name of Culchith: like as his brother Thomas, who wedded the ſecond daughter, was of the poſſeſſion, called Holcroft: another alſo by the ſame reaſon was named de Peasfalong, and a fourth de Riſeley. Which I note, that the reader may underſtand, how our Anceſtours, as they were in F other things conſtant and grave, ſo in leaving and taking up names out of their poſſeſſions, they were as vaine and variable as might be. But even in other parts of England alſo, this was in old time a thing in uſuall practiſe.

Heere lie there round about every way little townes, which (as throughout this whole Countie, and Cheſhire, and other Northren parts) as they imparted their names to worſhipfull houſes, ſo they to have their Lords even unto theſe daies, men of the very ſame name with them. As for example, Aſton of Aſton: Atherton of Atherton, Tilleſley of Tilleſley, Standiſh of Standiſh, Bold of Bold, Hesket of Hesket, Worthington of Worthington, Torbec of Torbec &c. And an endleſſe peece of worke it were to name them one by one, neither is it any parr of my purpoſe to recken up all families of name and worſhip, but to take a view and ſurvey of the more ancient places. And as vertue and wealth laied the foundations of theſe and ſuch like families in theſe North countries, and elſewhere (that I may ſpeake it once for all) and provident moderation with ſimplicity ſtanding contented with their owne eſtate, both preſerved and encreaſed them: So, in the South part of England, rioiotous expenſe and ſuperfluity, vſurious contracts, voluptuous and vicious life, together with indirect courſes and crafty dealings; have in ſhort ſpace utterly overthrowen moſt flouriſhing houſes, in ſo much as men complain, that the ofspring of the ancient gentrie hath now a long time faded. But families as plants haue their times of encreaſing and decreaſing, I and overpaſſing this, will follow on with the courſe of Merſey, which now by this time runneth downe by Warrington, a towne knowen by reaſon of the Lords thereof ſurnamed * Butlers, who obtained of King Edward the Firſt the liberty of a mercate for it: From which, Northward, Winwicke is not farre diſtant: a place among other fat Benefices of England of greateſt name: in the upmoſt part of the Church whereof, are red theſe rude verſes engraven in an old Character, concerning King Oſwald.

of

A B C

* Pincerna.

Winwicke.

Hic locus Oſwalde quondam placuit tibi valde
Northanhumbrorum fueras Rex, nuncq; Polorum
Regna tenes, loco paſſus Marcelde vocato.
This place ſometime thee pleaſed well, Oſwald,
King thou hadſt beene once of Northumberland,
Thou ſufferedſt in a place Marcelde cald,
Thy Kingdome now is heaven, that ay doth ſtand.

From Warrington, the river Merſey ſpreading abroad, and ſtreightwaies drawing in himſelfe againe, with a wide and open outlet, very commodious for merchandiſe entreth into the Iriſh Sea, where Litherpoole, called in the elder ages Lifep-pole, commonly Lirpoole is ſeated, ſo named, as it is thought, of the water ſpreading it ſelfe in maner of a Poole: whence there is a convenient paſſage over into Ireland and much frequented, and in that reſpect more notorious, than for any antiquity. For, there is no mention extant thereof any where in ancient writers, but that Roger of Poictiers, who was Lord, as they ſpake in thoſe daies, of the Honour of Lancaſter, built a caſtle heere. Whereof the worthy family of the Molineaux Knights haue had the cuſtodie now a long time, whoſe chiefe ſeat is hard by at Sefton, which, the ſaid Roger of Poictiers gave unto Vivian de Molineaux, ſhortly after the firſt entrie of the Normans. For, all that territorie betweene the two rivers Ribel and Merſey, the ſame Roger held: as appeareth euidently by the authenticall Record of Domeſday booke. Neere unto Sefton, Alt a little river ſeeketh a way into the Sea, and when he hath found it, giueth name a ſmall village Attmouth ſtanding by, and hath Ferneby neere unto it: wherein the moiſt and moſſie ſoile turffes are digged up, which ſerve the inhabitants for fewell and candle light. Vnder the ſaid Turffes, there is a certaine dead and blackiſh water, upon which there ſwimmeth, I wot not what unctuous matter, and in it ſwimme little fiſhes that are caught by the diggers of turfe: So that we may ſay, there be fiſhes digged heere out of the earth, no leſſe than about Heraclea, and Tios in Pontus. And no mervaile, ſeeing that in ſuch watery places fiſhes otherwhiles ſeeking for moiſture get under the ground, and men goe a fiſhing with ſpades. But, that in Paphlagonia many and thoſe good fiſhes are gotten by digging in places nothing watery, there is ſome ſecret and peculiar reaſon thereof in nature: and pleaſantly wrote Seneca, why ſhould not fiſhes enter and paſſe into the land, if we paſſe over the Sea.

D E F

Fiſhes digged out of the ground.

From

A From hence the open ſhore ſhooteth out with a great bent, and more within land from the ſea ſtandeth Ormeskirke a mercate towne; well knowne by reaſon of the ſepulture there, of the Stanleys Earles of Derby, whoſe cheife ſeat Latham, is hard by, a ſtately houſe, which they haue enlarged continually ever ſince King Henry the Fourth his daies, what time Sir Iohn Stanley knight, father to Iohn, Lord deputy of Ireland, deſcended of the ſame ſtemme whence the Barons de Audley, married the daughter and heire of Sir Thomas Latham a right noble knight, who brought to him for her dowrie this faire inheritance with many other poſſeſſions. And from that time haue the Stanleies planted their ſeat heere: of whom, Thomas, the Ormeskirk.

B ſonne of Thomas Lord Stanley was by King Henry the Seventh created Earle of Derbie: and had iſſue by Eleonor Nevill daughter to the Earle of Salisbury, George Lord Strange, for hee had wedded Ioan the onely daughter and heire of Iohn Baron Le Strange of Knockin, who dying in his fathers life time begat a ſonne named Thomas, the ſecond Earle of Derby, unto whom, Anne the daughter of Edward Lord Haſtings bare Edward, the third Earle of Derbie who begat of Dorothea daughter of Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolke, Henry, the fourth Earle: who married Margaret daughter of Henrie Clifford Earle of Cumberland, mother unto Ferdinando the fifth Earle lately deceaſed, and to William now the ſixth Earle who ſucceeded his brother: but I forget my ſelfe now when as I haue formerly remembered as Stanleys Earles of Derby.

C much.

Dugleſſe a riveret, creepeth and ſtealeth along quietly by this place; nere unto which our Noble Arthur, as Ninnius writeth, put the Saxons to flight in a memorable battaile. At the head hereof ſtandeth the towne Wiggin, called, in ancient times Wibiggin, of which name I haue nothing elſe to ſay, but that in Lancaſhire they call buildings and houſes Biggins: neither of the towne, but that it is faire and a Corporation alſo with a Major and Burgeſſes: and the perſon of the church as I haue learned, is Lord of the towne. Hard by it Holland ſheweth it ſelfe, out of a younger brother whereof that moſt Noble and renowned race of the Hollands Earles of Kent and Dugleſſe a riveret.

Wiggin.

Biggin, what it is.

The family of the Hollands.

D Dukes alſo of Surry and Exceſter fetched both their originall and their ſurname. But the daughter and heire of the eldeſt brother who flouriſhed heere in knights degree, being in the end married into the houſe of the Lovells, brought unto them an addition of poſſeſſions with her armes, vz. *in a ſhield Azur * floretè Argent a Lion rampant gardant Arg.* Neere unto the mouth of Dugleſſe is Merton, a very great and large poole, which emptieth it ſelfe into this river, and then ſtreight waies meeteth with the river Ribell, neare his out-let, for this is the next river after Merſey, that runneth into the ſea, and hath not yet loſt quite his former ancient name, for, Ptolomee calleth the ſalt water or arme of the ſea, here, Bellisama, & we Ribell; perhaps by addition of the Saxon word Rhe unto it, that ſignifieth a River. This river comming

The Hollands coat of Armes.

*Withfloures de Lyz.

Bellisama.

E with a quick and haſty ſtreame out of the hils in Yorke-ſhire, taketh his courſe firſt Southward, by three exceeding high mountaines, Ingleborrow hil at the ſpring head, which I wondered at to ſee how it aſcendeth as it were by degrees with a huge and mighty ridge Weſtward and at the furtheſt end mounteth up into the aire as if an other hil were ſet upon the head of it: Penigent, haply ſo called of his whitiſh & ſnowy top, for ſo Pengwin ſignifieth in the Britiſh tongue: and he riſeth aloft with an huge bulke. Howbeit not altogither ſo high as the other. But when Ribell commeth into Lancaſhire (for thoſe two ſtand in Yorke-ſhire) Pendle hill advanceth it ſelfe up to the skie, with a lofty head, and in the verie top thereof bringeth forth a peculiar plant, which, as though it came out of the clowds, they tearme Clowdes-bery. But Penigent.

Pendlehill.

Clowdesbery.

F this mountaine is moſt notorious for the harme that it did not long ſince to the country lying beneath it, by reaſon of a mighty deale of water guſhing out of it: as alſo for an infallible prognoſtication of raine, ſo often as the top thereof is covered with a miſt. Of theſe hils I haue made mention the more willingly, both becauſe they are the higheſt in our Apennine whence commeth this vulgar Rhime.

Ingleborrow, Pendle and Penigent
Are, the higheſt hills betweene Scotland and Trent.

Penninæ Alpes.

Pen in Britiſh what it is.

Clithero.

Whalley.

As alſo, that the reader may underſtand, as I ſaid before, why the higheſt Alpes were called of the old Gaules Penninæ, and why the very top of the hils, named Pennum, and Apennini were of them ſo tearmed. For Pen in the Britiſh tongue ſignifieth the tops of hils. By an out corner or parcell of Pendle hill, ſtandeth Clithero caſtle built by the Lacies nere unto Ribell, and a neighbour unto it Whaley, in the Saxon tongue Walaleȝ, famous for the monaſtery that the ſaid Lacies founded, which was tranſlated from Stanlaw in Cheſhire hither in the yeere 1296. where, in the yeere 798. duke Wade unfortunately gaue battaile to Ardulph king of Northumberland, at Billangho, which is more ſhort called Langho. This Ribell no ſooner turneth into the Weſt, but imparteth his name to a ſmall towne, which in our age is called Ribleche-ſter: where are digged up from time to time ſo many monuments of Romaine antiquity, ſtatues, peeces of coine, Pillers, Piediſtals & Chapters of pillers, heathen altars, Marble-ſtones and inſcriptions, that the inhabitants may ſeeme not without cauſe to haue this hobling rhyme ſo rife in their mouthes.

Riblecheſter.

A

B

It is written upon a wall in Rome,
Ribcheſter was as rich as any towne in Chriſtendome.

And the port high waies came directly hither, raiſed up with eminent cauſeis: one from Yorke, another out of the North, through Bowland-Forreſt a ſpacious peece of ground, which as yet is moſt evidently to be ſeene for many miles together. But the country folke haue ſo disfigured the inſcriptions, that although I did ſee many, yet could I ſcarce read one or two of them. At Salesbury hall, an houſe of that ancient family of the Talbots, ſtanding neare by, I ſaw the baſe or foot of a piller with this inſcription.

C

DEO
MARTI, ET VICTORIÆ
D D. AVGG.
ET. CC---NN

D

In a wall neare unto it, there is an other great ſtone infixed, ſhewing in the fore-part Cupid and another little image: out of the backe ſide or reverſe whereof, this was exemplyfied for me: but the inſcription carrieth no ſenſe with it, which becauſe it troubled me a long time, I will ſet downe here underneath, to ſee what the opinion of other men is of it.

SEOESAM ROLNASON OSALVEDN
AL. Q. Q. SAR.
BREVENM BEDIANIS ANTONI
VS MEG. VI.
IC. DOMV ELITER.

E

F

For mine owne part, I can make nothing elſe thereof, but that moſt of theſe words were the Britiſh names of places adjoyning. In the yeere 1603. when I went a ſecond time to ſee this place, I hapned upon the greateſt and faireſt Altar that ever I ſaw dedicated to the Mother Goddeſſes by a Captaine of the Aſturians with this inſcription.

DE

A

DEIS MATRIBVS
M. INGENVI-VS ASIATICVS
B DEC. AL. AST.
SS. LL. M.

In the house of Thomas Rhodes.

Haply, Decurio Ale Asiarum, susceptum, solvit (s. votum) libens, Lubens merito.

C Concerning these DEABVS, or DEIS MATRIBVS, that is, Mothers Goddesses, what they were I cannot finde out with all my searching (for, in the volumes of Inscriptions gathered through the world, saue in another Alter besides found among us, they are not mentioned as farre as I remember. Onely I read that Enguium a little towne in Sicilie, was ennobled for the presence of the MOTHER GODDESSES, wherein were shewed certaine speares, and brasen helmets, which Metio and Vlysses consecrated to those Goddesses.

Deæ Matres. Mother Goddesses.

See in the Bishopricke of Durham. Plutarch in M. Marcellus.

Another little altar I saw there, cast out among rubbish stone, with this inscription.

D

PACIFE
RO MARTI ELEGAVR
BA POS
VIT EX VO
TO.

So small a one this was, that it may seeme to haue beene some poore mans little
E alter to cary with him to and fro, serving onely to burne and offer incense or salt and meale upon it: whereas that other, was farre bigger and made for to sacrifice and offer greater beasts upon it. In these altares the posterity no doubt imitated Noah, even after they had fallen away and revolted from the true worship of God. Neither erected they altars to their Gods onely, but also unto their Emperors by way of servile flattery, with this impious title NVMINI MAIESTATIQVE EORVM, that is, Vnto their GOD-HED, and Majesty. Vnto these they kneeled in humble manner, these they clasped about and embraced as they praied: before these, they tooke their othes: and in one word, in these and in their sacrifices consisted the maine substance of all their religion, so farre forth, that whosoever had no altar of their owne,
F they were thought verily to haue no religion, nor to acknowledge any God at all.

Altares of the Gentiles 8. Genes.

Moreover very lately and but the other day, a stone was digged up here, wherein was engraven the naked portract or image of a man on horsebacke, without saddle, without bridle, with both hands seeming to launce his speare, and ready to ride over a naked man lying downe along at his foote, who holdeth before I wot not what foure square peece. Betweene the horse and him that lieth along are these letters D.M. and under him so lying, are read these words CAL. SARMATA. All the letters beside, which were many, are so worne out and gone, that they could not be read, neither list I to guesse any farther what they were. That, ALA SARMATARVM, that is, a wing of Sarmatian horsemen abode in this place, it may seeme, as well by that former inscription, as by this, that many yeeres before was found hard by. A Haply. C. AL. for, Centurio Alæ Sarmatarum.

HIS. TERRIS. TEGITVR.
AEL. MATRONA QV-----
VIX. AN. XXVIII. M. II. D. VIII.
ET. M. IVLIVS MAXIMVS. FIL.
VIX. AN. VI. M. III. D. XX. ET CAM
PANIA. DVBBA. MATER
VIX. AN. L. IVLIVS. MAXIMVS
-----ALÆ. SAR. CONIVX
CONIVGI. INCOMPARABILI
ET. FILIO. PATRI. PIENTIS
SIMO. ET SOCERÆ. TENA
CISSIMÆ MEMORIÆ. P. B

Out of William Lambards notes.

But hence haue wee no light at all toward the finding out of the ancient name of this place which now is in question, unlesse it hath now & then changed the name, which other whiles usually happeneth. For, in this place Ptolomee hath set RIGODVNVM: if for RIBODVNVM, the name is not altogether unlike to Ribchester: and just at this distance from Mancunium, that is, Manchester, that is to say 18. miles off, doth Antonine place COCCIM, which also in some copies we read GOCCIVM. C

Ribodunum.

Coccium.

But when the flourishing fortune of this City, having runne the full and fatall period was faded, either by warre, or earthquake, as the common sort doe thinke, somewhat lower where Ribell suffereth the violence of the flowing tides of the sea, and is called of the Geographer BELLISAMA ÆSTVARIVM, that is, the salt-water BELLISAMA, nere unto Peneworth, where in the Conquerors reign there was a little castle (as appeereth by the Records of the said King) out of the fall of Riblechester arose in steed of it her daughter Preston, a great, and (for these Countries) a faire town, and wel inhabited, so called of religious men, for in our speech the name soundeth as much as Priests towne. Beneath this Ribell, Derwen a rill commeth in with his water: and the first mercate towne that he watereth is Black-borne, so called of the Black-Water, which towne belonging in times past to the Lacies gaue name unto Blackburne shire a little territory adjoyning; from thence it runneth by Houghton towre, which communicated the name unto a notable family that long time dwelt in it: and by Waleton which William Lord of Lancaster King Stephens sonne, gaue unto Walter de Walton: and afterward it was the possession of the ancient race of the Langtons, who descended from the said Waltons. But now let us returne. D E

Penworthis otherwise called Penverdant.

Preston.

Houghton.

Walton.

The said Preston, whereof I spake, is by the common people called Preston in Anderneſſe, for Acmundes-nesse, for, so the English Saxons tearmed this part of the shire: which lying betweene the two rivers Ribel and Cocar streatcheth out with a promontorie in manner of a nose: which afterwards, they also called Acmunderneſſe. Wherein were no more but sixteene villages inhabited in King William the Conquerours time; the rest lay west, as wee reade in Domes-day booke: and Roger of Poictiers held the same. F

Ander-nesse.

But afterwards it belonged to Theobald Walter: from whom the Bottelers of Ireland deriue their beginning: for, thus wee read in a Charter of K. Richard the First, Know yee, that wee haue given, and by this present Charter confirmed unto Theobald Walter,

A Walter, for his homage and ſervice, Agmonderneſſe full and whole, with all the apperte- nences &c. This part yeeldeth plenty of oates, but not ſo apt to bere barly: Howbeit it is full of freſh paſtures eſpecially to the ſea ſide, where it is partly Champion ground, and thereupon it ſeemeth that a good part of it is called The File, for the The file.
Feild (and yet in the Kings Rolls it goeth under the Latin name LIMA, that is, a File, namely that Smithes toole or Inſtrument wherewith Iron or any other thing is ſmoothed. But becauſe elſe where it is mariſh ground, they hold it not very holſome. Wie, a little river ſpeedily cutting over this part, commeth rolling downe out of Wierdale a very ſolitary place, and runneth by Grenhaugh Caſtle, which Tho- Grenhaugh Caſtle.
mas Stanley the firſt Earle of Derby out of this familie, built: what time as hee
B ſtood in feare of certaine outlawed gentlemen of this ſhire; whoſe poſſeſſions King Henry the Seventh had freely given unto him. For, many an aſſault they gaue him, and other whiles in hoſtile manner made inrodes into his landes, untill the moderate carriage of the good and worthy man, and proceſſe of time pacified theſe quarrelles.

Heere along the ſea ſhore, you may ſee in many places, heapes of ſand, whereup- A new manner of making ſalt.
on they powre water, untill it gather a ſaltiſh humor which afterwards with turfes they boile untill it be white ſalt. There be alſo here uncertaine ſands not to be truſt-ted, but ready to catch and ſwallow, they call them Quick-ſands; ſo dangerous for travailours, whiles at a low water when tide is paſt they ſeeke to goe the nereſt way;
C that they had neede to take very good heed leaſt in going a foote (I uſe Sidonius his wordes) they ſuffer not ſhipwracke and be caſt away on the land. But eſpecially about the mouth of Cocar, where, as it were, in a field of Syrts or Quick-ſands, Cokar Quick-ſands.
ſand Abby, an Abbay not long ſince of the Cluniack monkes, built by Ranulph de Meſchines, but open to the violence of windes, ſtoode betweene the mouthes of Co- car and Lune or Lone and hath a bleake proſpect into the wide Iriſh ſea. This river Lone commonly called Lune, ſpringing out of the mountaines of Weſtmorland, The river Lune or Lone.
running Southward in a chanell now broad, now narrow with many a reach in and out hindring his ſtreame, enricheth the dwellers thereby in Summer time with great Salmons.
ſtore of Salmons: which becauſe they delight in cleere water and eſpecially in ſhal-D low places that are ſandy, come up thicke togither into this and other rivers of this coaſt. As ſoone as Lune is entred into Lancaſhire, Lacc, a little brooke from out of the Eaſt joyneth his ſtreame with it. In which place now ſtandeth Over-Burrow, a Over-burrow.
verie ſmall village of husbandmen; which, as the inhabitants enformed mee, had beene ſometimes a great City and tooke up all thoſe large fields betweene Lacc and Lone, and after it had ſuffered all miſeries, that follow famine, was driven to compoſition through extremity: This tradition they received from their anceſtours, delivered as it were from hand to hand unto them. And in very truth by divers and ſundry monuments exceeding ancient, by engraven ſtones, pauements of E ſquare checker worke, peeces of Romane coine, and by this new name Borrow, which with us ſignifieth a Burgh, that place ſhould ſeeme to bee of great antiquity. But if it recover the ancient name, it may thanke other and not me, although I haue ſought as narrowly, & diligently for it, as for Ants pathes: neither is any man to thinke, that the ſeverall names of every towne in Britain are preciſely noted and ſet downe, in Ptolomee, Antonine, The Notice of Provinces and other approved and principall Authors. But, if a man may goe by gueſſe, I would willingly thinke, that it was BREMETONACVM (which Ierome Surita a Spaniard in his notes upon Anto- Bremetonacum. nine deemeth truely, to be a different place from BREMENTVRACVM) and that by the diſtance from COCCIVM, or Ribble-cheſter.

F From this Burrow, the river Lune runneth beſide Thurland Tunſtalls, a fortreſſe built by Sir Thomas Tunſtall, in the time of King Henry the Fourth when the King Kernellare what it is.
had given him Licence to fortifie and Kernel his manſion houſe, that is, to embatle it:
alſo by Hornby a faire caſtle, which glorieth much of the firſt founder N. de Mont Hornby Caſtle.
Begon, and of the Lords thereof The Harringtons, and Stanleies, Barons Stanleyes of Barons Mont-Aegle.
Mont Eagle, deſcended from Thomas Stanley the firſt Earle of Derby, of that houſe, and advanced to that title by King Henry the Eight of whom the third and the last named William, left behinde him his onely daughter and heire Elizabeth, wife to Edward Parker Baron Morley, mother to Sir William Parker, whom in that regard King Iames commanded to be ſummoned to Parliament by the title of Lord Mont-Eagle, and whom wee and all our poſterity may acknowledg, to haue beene borne for the good of all Britain. For, by a ſhort letter obſcurely penned and ſecretly ſent unto him, and by him duetifully diſcovered, in a happie houre was detected, at the very laſt houre in maner, when the whole ſtate was at the point to periſh by the moſt horrible and deteſtable treaſon, that ever any barbarous impiety could contriue what time certaine Godleſſe, & irreligious monſters of men masking under the mantle of religion, having beſtowed a great quantitie of gunpowder under the Parliament houſe, ſtood ready with match in hand to giue fire thereto, for to blow up both Prince and Country with one blaſt in a moment.

The Gunpowder treaſon.

Lone having paſſed on ſome few miles from hence, commeth within the ſight of Lancaſter, ſtanding on his South banke, the cheife towne of this region: which the inhabitants more truly call Loncaſter, as the Scots alſo, who name it Loncaſtell of the River Lone. Both the name ſtill remaining, and the river running under it, doe argue in ſome ſort, that it is LONGOVICVM, where, under the Lieutenant Generall of Britain, as wee finde in the Notice of Provinces, a company of the Longovicarians, who of the place borrowed that name, kept their ſtation. Although the towne at this day is not very well peopled, nor much frequented, and all the inhabitants thereof are given to husbandry: for, the territorie al round about is well manured, lying open, freſh and faire, and not voide of woods: yet for proofe of Romaine antiquity, they finde other whiles peeces of the Emperours coine, eſpecially, where the Friery ſtood: for there, they ſay was the plot upon which the ancient City was planted, which, the Scots after they had with a ſodaine outroad waſted all in their way, in the yeere of our Redemption 1322. ſet on fire and burnt. Since which time they haue begunne to build neerer unto a greene hill by the river ſide, on which ſtandeth the caſtle, great I cannot ſay, nor of any antiquity, but faire and ſtrong. And hard by it ſtandeth upon the heigth of the hill, the onely Church they haue where the monkes aliens had in times paſt a cell founded by Roger of Poictiers. A little beneath which, by a faire bridge over Lone, in the deſcent and ſide of the hill where it is ſteepeſt, hangeth a peece of a moſt ancient wall of Romain worke ſeeming ready to reele; Wery wall they call it, after a later Britiſh name, as it ſhould ſeeme, of this towne. For, they called it Caer Werid, as one would ſay, The Greene City, happily of that freſh greene hill. But I leaue this to others. Iohn Lord of Moriton and of Lancaſter, afterwards King of England, confirmed by Charter to his Burgeſſes of Lancaſter, all the liberties which hee had granted unto the Burgeſſes of Briſtoll. And King Edward the Third in the ſixe and thirty yeere of his reigne, granted unto the Major and Bailiues and Commonaltie of the towne of Lancaſter, that Plees and Seſſions ſhould not elſe where bee holden. This towne ſeeth the Pole Arcticke (that I may note ſo much) elevated foure and fiftie degrees and fiue minutes: and ſtandeth remooved from the utmoſt line of the Weſt, twentie degrees and forty eight minutes in Longitude.

Lancaſter.

Whiles I looked round about from the top of the ſaid caſtle hil to ſee the mouth of Lone, that iſſueth it ſelfe into the ſea a little lower, Forneſſe the other part of this ſhire appeered in ſight, which the ſea hath after a ſort violently rent a part from the reſt. For, when as the ſhore did from hence ſhoote out a maine way into the Weſt, the Ocean, as it were much diſpleaſed, and angry hereat, obſtinately ceaſed not to ſlaſh and mangle it, nay, which is more, hath with his fell flowing at boiſterous tides devoured the ſhore: and thereby maketh three wide creekes or bayes: namely, Kent-ſand, at which the river Ken powreth it ſelfe forth, Leven-ſand and Dudden-ſand: betweene which (two) the land beareth out ſo much, that thereupon it tooke the name. For, with us in our language, For-neſſe & Foreland is al one with the Latin Promontorium anterius (that is, a Fore-promontory) All this part unleſſe it be Fourneſſe.

A be hard by the sea side, mounteth up aloft with high topped hilles and huge fels standing thicke together (which they terme Forneſſ-fells. Among which the Britans lived safe a great while, trusting upon these strong naturall fenses: although the victorious Englisſh Saxons made way through all in the end. For, in the yeere 228. after there comming in, I gather that the Britans had their abode heere, because Egfride King of Northumberland, gave unto Holy Saint Cuthbert, the land called Carthmell, and all the Britans in it (thus we find written in his life) and it is very well knowen that Carthmell is a part of this shire by Kentsand, and a little towne in it retaineth yet the same name: Wherein William Mareschall the elder, Earle of Penbroch built a B Priorie and endowed it with living. If you read in Ptolomee SETANTIORVM λιμὴν that is, The Setantians Mere, as some Copies have: and not Setantiorum λιμὴν that is, The Setantians Haven, I durst boldly avouch, that these Britans heere were called SETANTII. For, among these mountaines the greatest standing water in all England now called Winander-mere; in the Englisſh Saxon Winpaðpe-mep (happly of his winding and turning in and out) lieth stretched out for the space of tenne miles or there about with crooked bankes, and is all paved (as it were) with stone in the bothom: in some places of wonderfull depth, and breeding a peculiar kind of fish found no where else, which the inhabitants there by call A Chare. And a little village standing hard by, carieth the name thereof: In which, Eathred King of Nor- C thumberland in the yere of Christ 792. when he had by force fetched King Elfwolds sonnes out of Yorke and slue them, that by his owne wickednes, and their bloud, he might secure the Kingdome to himselfe, and his.

Carthmell.

The fish Chare.

Winander-mer.

Betwixt this Mere and the river Dudden, the promontorie runneth out, which we commonly call Forneſſe, and hath the Iland Walney as a fore fence or countremure lying a long by it, with a small arme of the sea betweene: The gullet or entry into which, is defended with a fort called the Pile of Fouldrey, standing in the mids of the waves upon a rocke, erected there, by the Abbot of Forneſſe in the first yeere of King Edward the Third.

As for the Promontorie it selfe, there is nothing worth the sight in it, unleſſe it be D the ruins of a monasterie of Ciſtertian Monkes, called Forneſſe Abbay, which, Stephen Earle of Bullen, afterwards King of England, in the yeere of our redemption 1127. built in a place called sometime Bekenſgill, or translated rather from Tulket in Anderneſſe. Out of the Monkes whereof, and from no place elſe (as they themselves have reported) the Bishops of the Isle of Man (that lieth just over against) were by an ancient custome wont to be elected: as having beene the mother (as it were) of many Monasteries in the said Man, and in Ireland. More Eastward standeth Aldingham an ancient hæreditament belonging to the family of the Haveringtons, or Harringtons; unto whom it came from the Flemmings, by the Cancefelds: and whose inheritance descended by a daughter unto William Bonvill of Somersetshire, and at last by E him unto the Greies Marqueſſes of Dorset. And somewhat higher is Vluerſton, in this regard not to be passed over in silence, for that King Edward the third gave a moity thereof unto Sir Iohn Coupland a most brave Warriour: whom also he advaunced to the dignity of a Banaret, because in the battaile at Durham, he tooke David the second, King of the Scots prisoner. But after his deceaſe, the same King granted it with other faire lands in this tract, and the title also of Earle of Bedford, unto Ingelram Lord Coucy of France, as who had married his daughter Isabell, and whose ancestours in right of Chriſtiana Lindſey had great revenewes in England.

The booke of Fourneſſe.

Aldingham. Harringtons.

Touching the noble men which have borne the title of Lancaster, there were in F the first infancie of the Norman Empire three stiled Lords of the Honour of Lancaſter, namely Roger of * Poicton, the sonne of Roger Mont-gomery, who was surnamed Pictavenſis as William of Malmesbury writeth, because hee had married a wife from out of Poicton in France. But when he had by his perfidious disloialty lost this honour, Lords of Lancaster.

* Pictavenſis, or of Poictiers

honour, William the ſonne of King Stephen, and Earle of Moriton and Warren, had the ſame given unto him by his father. After whoſe death King Richard the Firſt beſtowed it upon his brother Iohn, who was afterward King of England. For, thus we read in an old Hiſtorie; King Richard declared his ſingular love to his brother Iohn. For, beſide Ireland and the Earldome of Moriton in Normandie, hee heaped upon him ſo many dignities in England, that he was in maner a Tetrarch there: Finally hee conferred upon him Cornwall, Lancaſter, Notingham, Derbie with the countrey adjoining, and manie more beſide. A good while after King Henrie the Third the ſonne of Iohn, firſt advanced Edmund his ſecond ſonne called by ſome Crouth-backe to the title of Earle of Lancaſter, unto whom hee conveied and made over, the inheritances and honors of Simon Montfort Earle of Leiceſter, Robert Ferrars Earle of Derbie, and Iohn of Monmouth, becauſe they had riſen and rebelliouſly borne armes againſt him: and he gaue this Honor of Lancaſter unto him in theſe words, The Honour, County, Caſtle and Towne of Lancaſter, with the Cow-paſtures and foreſts of Wireſdale, & Lownſdale, New caſtle vnder Lime. The Manour, Foreſt and Caſtle of Pickering, The Manour of Scaleby, the towne of Gomiceſter and the rents of the towne of Huntendon &c. After he the ſaid Edmund had miſſed the Kingdome of Sicilie, in which the Pope had inveſted him in vaine by a ring, and not without ridiculous diſgrace to the Engliſh nation cauſed in honor of him certaine peeces of gold to bee ſtamped with this title, AIMVNDVS REX SICILIAE, hauing firſt cunningly ſuckt a great maſſe of money from the credulous King in this regard. This Edmund (when his firſt wife Auelina daughter and heire to William de Fortibus Earle of Albemarle was dead, iſſueleſſe, who neuertheleſſe in her will had made him her heire (married Blanch of Artois, of the roiall family of France, to his ſecond wife, and by her had Thomas, Henrie, and Iohn that died an infant. Thomas was the ſecond Earle of Lancaſter, who tooke to wife Alice, the onely daughter and heire of Henrie Lacy Earle of Lincolne; who by her deede paſſed over unto the houſe of Lancaſter her owne inheritance and her mothers, that which belonged to the family of Long Eſpee, who were Earles of Salisbury, like as her father the ſaid Henrie Lacy had made the like conveiance before of his owne lands, in caſe Alice ſhould die without iſſue, as it afterward hapned. But this Thomas, for behaving himſelfe inſolently toward his Soueraigne Edward the ſecond, and ſtill ſupplying fewell to civill warres, beiug taken priſoner in the field, loſt his head, leaving no iſſue. Howbeit, when this ſentence of death pronounced againſt him, was afterwards by authority of Parliament reverſed, becauſe had hee not his triall by his Peeres according to the lawe, and Great Charter; his brother Henrie ſucceeded after him in all his poſſeſſions and honours. He alſo was aduanced in eſtate by his wife Maude daughter and ſole heire of Sir Patricke * Chaworth, who brought unto him not onely her owne patrimonie, but alſo great inheritances in Wales, of Mauric of London, and of Siward, from whom ſhe deſcended. This Henry left behind him Henrie his onely ſonne, whom King Edward the Third from an Earle raiſed unto the honor of a Duke: and he was ſecond man of all our Nobility, which receaued the name of Duke. But hee, having no iſſue male departed this life, leaving behind him two danghters, Maude and Blanch, betweene whom the inheritance was divided. Maude was married to William of Bavaria, who was Earle of Holland, Zeland, Friſland, Henault, and in his wives right, of Leiceſter. And when as ſhe deceaſed without children, Iohn of Gaunt, ſo called becauſe he was borne at Gaunt in Flaunders, fourth ſonne of King Edward the Third, who had married Blanch the other daughter of Henrie aforeſaid entred upon the whole inheritance: & now being for wealth equiualent to many Kings, and created withall by his father Duke of Lancaſter, he obtained alſo at his hands great roialties; for hee, having related what noble ſervice he had performed to his country at home and abroad in the warres, preferred the County of Lancaſter, to the dignity of a County Palatine

Walter Hemingford. Ro. Hoveden pag. 373. b.

Earle of Lancaſter, King of Sicilie.

* De Cadurcis.

Dukes of Lancaſter.

A Palatine, by his letters Patent, the tenour whereof runneth in this wise. We have granted, for us and our heires unto our foresaid sonne, that he may have for tearme of his life his Chancery within the County of Lancaster, and his writs to be sealed under his owne seale, to be appointed for the office of the Chauncellour: also Iustices of his owne, as well to hold Plees of the Crowne, as also other plees whatsoever touching common Law: also the hearing and deciding of the same, yea and the making of all executions whatsoeuer, by vertue of their owne writs and officers there.

Moreover all other liberties and Roialties whatsoever to a County Palatine belonging, as freely and in as ample maner, as the Earle of Chester within the same County of Chester
B is knowne to have &c. Neither was he Duke of Lancaster onely, but also by his marriage with Constance the daughter of Peter King of Leon and Castile, hee for a time was stiled by the name of King of Leon and of Castile. But by a composition, he gave this over: and in the thirteenth yeere of King Richard the Second, by consent of Parliament was created Duke of Aquitaine to haue and hold the same for tearme of life of the King of England, as King of France; but to the vniuersall dislike of Aquitaine repining, and affirming that their Signiorie was inseparably annexed to the Crowne of England. At which time his stile ranne thus, Iohn, sonne to the King of England, Duke of Aquitaine, and of Lancaster, Earle of Derbie, Lincolne, and Leicester, and high Steward of England. Iohn of Gaunt King of Castile.

C After him, Henrie of Bollingbroke, his sonne, succeeded in the Dukedome of Lancaster, who when he had dispossessed Richard the second and obtained the Kingdom of England. He considering that being now King he could not beare the title of Duke of Lancaster, and vnwilling that the said title should be discontinued, ordained by assent of Parliament that Henrie his eldest sonne should enioy the same, and be stiled Prince of Wales, Duke of Aquitaine, Lancaster, and Cornwall; and Earle of Chester: and also that the liberties and franchesies of the Dutchy of Lancaster, should remain to his said sonne seuered from the Crowne of England: and to make better assurance to himselfe his heires and successours in these inheritances, by authority of Parliament he ordained in these words. Wee, not willing that our said Inheritance or the liber-
D ties of the same, by occasion of this present assumption upon vs of our regall state and dignitie, should be in any thing changed, tranffered, diminished, or impaired; will, that the same our inheritance with the foresaid rights and liberties thereof, be kept, continued, and held fully and wholly; to vs and our said heires in the said Charters specified, in the same maner and forme, condition and state, as they descended and came unto vs: and also with all and every such liberties and franchises and other priviledges, commodities, and profits whatsoever, in which our Lord and father whiles he lived had and held it for terme of his owne life, by the grant of Richard late King. And by the tenour of these presents, of our owne certaine knowledge, with the consent of this our present Parliament, we graunt, declare, de-
E cree, and ordaine for vs and our heires, that as well our Dutchy of Lancaster, as all other things and every one, Counties, Honours, Castles, Manours, Fees or Inheritances, Aduocations, possessions, Annuities and Seignories whatsoever, descended unto us, before the obtaining of our Regall dignity, howsoever and wheresoever, by right of inheritance in service, or in reversion, or any way whatsoever, remaine for ever to vs and our said heires, specified in the Charters aboue said, in forme afore said. King Henrie the Seventh.

After this, K. Henry the Fifth by authority of Parliament disseuered frō the Crown and annexed unto this Dutchy, a very great and large inheritance, which had descended unto him in right of his mother Dame Marie, who was daughter and one of the heires of Humfrey Bohun Earle of Hereford. In this forme and estate it remained under Henrie the Fifth, and Henrie the Sixth: but King Edward the Fourth in the F first yeere of his reigne, when he had in Parliament attainted and forfaited Henrie the Sixth, appropriated it, as they use to speake, unto the Crowne, that is to say unto himselfe, & his heires Kings of England: From which King Henrie the Seventh notwithstanding Parliament Rowle. 1. H. 4.

notwithstanding forthwith separated it. And so continueth hauing seuerall officers, namely, A Chauncellor, an Attorney, a Receiver, a Clerke of the Court, six Assistants, a Messenger, two Auditours, 23. Receivers, and three Supervisors &c. A

B

Fable of Gaunt King of Caddic.

There are counted in this shire beside very many Chappells, Parishes 36. and no more: but those wonderfull populous, and which for multitude of inhabitants, farre exceed the greatest parishes elsewhere. C

King Henrie the Seventh.

D

WEST-

E

Parliament holden 14.

F

CVMBERLA NDIA PARIS
OCCIDEM
PARIS

SEPTENTRIO

CVMBER

LANDIÆ

PARS

OCCIDENS

PARS

LAN

CAS TRIÆ

PARS

Barren Wood pk

Glasenbye Wynsgell
Owsbye Skirwith
Laseńbye
Salkeldes
Langanbye
Kirkland Blenkerne
Milborne
Ednell Hornby
Culgaith
Howgill east:
Newton
Carleton
Winderworth Nynechurches
Newbiggin
Knok Sowbarrow
Brougham east:
Tempelsowerby
Penreth
Whinfeld forest
Kirkby thuet
Duston
Newbiggin
Stainton
Yanworth
Morton
Aldbyn Stokbridge
Clifton
Clebrot
Bolton Crakenthorp Branton
Dalemane Myslkinthorp Coulby
Barton
Marlan
Buley east:
Lanton
Daker ca:
Lowther
Stricklandes Mesborn
Pettereill flu:
Askham
Thurnbye
Apple bye Thakthwate Pole
Helton
Slegill
Burrels
Threlcot Wetherlake Croftermond
Regill
Hosse Ormeside Waterdale
Rasgill Drineuers
Dowthwate Heltondale
Malsmeborn
Dribeck Shapp Keswick
Markendale
Banton
Wickerslack
Crosbyer
Ashby mag:
chap:
Herberwen
Glenkwen flu
Glenkroden flu Thornthwate
Octdelden
Gilse
Ashby Leaburthwate Paterdale
Wastall heade
Parke Sunbiggin
Helsillon hill
Depedale Wastallfoot
Orton
Burbek flu
Raisebeck Armbath
Hartesbope hall
Skales
Cotesflat
Kellath
Waterlath
Breaderdale heuil
Baisgill hall
Wiborne
Breaderdale foote
Tybay Langdale
Dunbalrase stones Runthwate
Hawse house
Gresemere Leadrig Ambleside
Sleddale Winsfeldhill
Langdale m: Pawsetwood
Shiresstones upō Wrenrose
Langdale pua Impryate
Kentmere
Spur flu:
Gratig hall
Howg Whinfelde
Seisted hall
Brathey Troutbeck
Stanlay Sleelmere
Colnhead Frebank Armeside
Hauke side
Cowgarth
Chapellan the inges
Barn side Delake Classe Wynandermere
Ridleton
Camswick pk
Rendall east:
Croke
Kendall
Maldleton
Blackhall
Wynster chap Vnderbarrow
Helston lathes Watlande
Crosbrake
Sowthwate
Siserghe Seaggswick Crosthwate
New bridge
Sct: Iohns
Preston chap
Carpmansel
Brigster pk
Kirkby launsdale
Witherslak
Leuens bridge
Farleton Mylnthorpe
Broughton
Methap
Farleton knot hill Whitterton
Lethaus
Arum
Burton
Kirkby
Arnsyde toure
Warton
Barwik hall
MER

WESTMORLANDIÆ
Comitatus qui olim
Spectauit ad
BRIGANTAS

EBORACENSIS

CARLISLENSIS

Troutbk
Morton
Helbeck
Burgh caſt:
Warcop
Staimmore
Muſgraue mag:
Sowerby
The ſpittle on ſtaimmore
Caber
Winton
Kirkby ſteuen
Hartley caſt:
Smardale
Neatbye hall
Whanton
Newbiggin
Holemill croſſe
Brikdale
Pendragon caſt:
Mallerſtange
Mallerſtange foreſt
Huſcat moruill hill
Garſtall
Dent
The countye ſtone Lake Irebye
Burton
Scala Miliarium.
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8
Chriſtophorus Saxton ſcripſit
William kip ſculpſit

A

WEST-MOR-LAND.

B

BEyond the furtheſt part of Lancaſhire more Northward, lieth another leſſer country of the Brigantes called by late Latin writers Weſtmaria, & Weſtmorlandia, in our tongue Weſt more-land, & of ſome later Latin writers Weſtmoria: bounded on the Weſt and Northſide with Cumberland, on the Eaſt with Yorkſhire and the Biſhopricke of Durrham. Which becauſe it lieth all of it among moores and high hilles reaching one to another (for our Apennine waxeth heere broader and brooder ſtill as it runneth) and was for the moſt part vn-manured, came by this name in our language. For, ſuch barren places, which cannot eaſily by the painfull labour of the husbandman bee brought to fruitfulneſſe, the Northren Engliſhmen call Moores: and Weſt-more-land is nothing elſe with us, but A Weſtern-mooriſh country. Let that dreame therefore, as touching King Marius be excluded out of the ſchoole of reverend antiquity, who for ſooth, as our Chronicles have dreamed, ſubdued the Picts and called this country after his owne name.

C

The more Southerly part of this ſhire, contained in a narrow roome betweene the river Lone and Winander mere, is reputed fruitfull enough in the valleis, although it can ſhewe many felles, with rough & ſtony rockes lying ever bare without graſſe: and is all tearmed by one name, The Baronie of Kendale and Candale, that is, The Dale by Can: for it tooke name of the river Can, which running rough vpon ſtones cutteth through it: On the Weſt banke whereof ſtandeth Kandale or Kendale, called alſo Kirke by Kindale, a towne of very great trade and reſort, with two broad and long ſtreets croſſing the one over the other, and a place for excellent clothing and for induſtrie ſo ſurpaſſing, that in regard thereof it carrieth a great name: For, the inhabitants have great trafficke and vent of their wollen clothes throughout all parts of England. They count it alſo much for their credite, that it hath dignified Barons and Earles with the title thereof. As for their Barons they were the ofspring of Iuo Talboys: of whoſe race, William, by conſent of King Henrie the Second called himſelfe, William of Lancaſter, whoſe Neice and heire, was wedded unto Gilbert the ſonne of Roger Fitz-Reinfrid, by whoſe daughters (after her ſonne William was dead) the inheritance went to Peter Brus Lord of Skelton the ſecond of that forename, and unto William Lindeſay; from whom by the mothers ſide, as we learne out of the Lieger booke of Forneſſe Abbay, Ingelram Lord of Coucy in France fetched his deſcent. By which Peter Brus his daughter, the ſiſter and heire of Peter Brus the third, came this Baronie to the Roſſes of Werke, & from them by right of inheritance, this poſſeſſion was devolved upon the Parres of whom Sir William Par was made Lord Par by King Henrie the Eight. As for the Caſtle the ancient ſeat of theſe Lords ſtanding over againſt the towne, it runneth to decay through age, and neglect. As for Earles of Kendale there haue beene three in number: Iohn Duke of Bedford, advanced to that honor by his brother King Henrie the Fifth: Iohn Duke of Somerſet, and Iohn de Foix, of that moſt noble and honorable family of the Foix in France, whom King Henrie the Sixth for his faithfull ſervice in the French warres had preferred to that dignity. Whence perhaps it is, that ſome of this houſe of Foix in France, retaine the name ſtill of Candale. As for any glory elſe of antiquity, Kendall to my knowledge challengeth none. And yet I was once of opinion, that it was CONCANGII a ſtation place ſometimes of the Romanes: But time hath now inſtructed me better. Somwhat beneath in the river Can, are two Catadupæ, or water falls, where the waters have a downfall, with a mighy noiſe; the one is by Levens a little village; the other more Southward neere to Betham, which to the neighbour inhabitants are as good as true prognoſtications: For, when that which ſtandeth North from them ſoundeth

D

E

F

The Baronie of Kendale.

Lords of Kendale. Hiſtorie of Fourneſſe.

The family of Lancaſter.

L. Par of Kendale.

Earles of Kendale.

Catadupæ or Forſes.

ſoundeth more cleere and aloud in their eares they looke certainly for faire wether: when that on the South ſide doth the ſame, they expect no other than ſhewers of raine and foggy miſts. Thus much for the South and narrower part of this region which Weſtward is bounded with the river Winſter and the ſpatious Lake Winander-mere, whereof I ſpake ere while: and Eaſtward with the river Lone or Lune. A

At the upper corner of Winander-mere, lieth the dead carcaſſe as one would ſay of an ancient Citie, with great ruins of Walles, and many heapes of rubbiſh one from another, remaining of buildings without the wals yet to be ſeene. The fortreſſe thereof was ſomewhat long, fenſed with a ditch and rampire: for it tooke up in length 132 ells, and in bredth 80. That it had beene the Romans worke is evident, B by the Britiſh brickes, by the morter tempered with little peeces of bricke among, by ſmall earthen pots or pitchers, by ſmall cruets or vialls of glaſſe, by peeces of Roman money oftentimes there found, and by round ſtones as much as milſtones or quernſtones; of which layed and couched together they framed in old time their columnes, and by the paved high waies, leading unto it. Now, the ancient name thereof is gone, unleſſe a man would gueſſe at it, and thinke it were that AMBOGLANA, whereof the booke of Notices maketh mention, ſeeing at this day it is called Ambleſide.

Ambleſide. Amboglana.

On the Eaſt ſide, the river Lone ſerveth for a limite, and after his name, the tract lying about it is called Lonſdale: the principall towne whereof is Kirkby Lonſ-dale, C whither all the people round about repaire to Church and mercate. Above the Spring-head of Lone, the country ſpreadeth broader and the hilles ſhoot out with many turnings, betweene which there lie ſome vallies mervailous ſteepe and deepe withall, with many hollow places in maner of caves. Among theſe hilles, that notable river Eden, which Ptolomee calleth ITVNA, ſhewing his head firſt in Yorkſhire, carrying a ſmall and faint ſtreame in the beginning, but afterwards growing by little and little bigger, with ſundry beckes ſtill augmenting it, ſeeketh a way Northweſt, by Pendragon Caſtle, which hath nothing left unto it unconſumed by time, beſides the bare name, and an heape of ſtones: From thence hee paſſeth by Wharton Hall, the ſeate of the Barons Wharton, of whom the firſt was Sir Thomas Wharton, ad- D vanced to that dignity by King Henrie the Eigh, th whom ſucceeded his ſonne of the ſame name: and after him Philip that now liveth, the third Baron, a right honorable perſon. Afterwards it runneth downe by Kirk-by Stephen, a mercate towne well knowen, and both the Muſgraves, two little villages, which gave name unto that martiall and warlicke family of the Muſgraves: out of which in the reigne of King Edward the third, Thomas Muſgrave flouriſhed, and was by ſolemne write of ſummons called to the Parliament in the ranke of Barons: and theſe Muſgraves had their principall habitation in Heartly Caſtle adjoining.

Baron Wharton.

Heartly caſtle

Heere Eden doth, as it were, make ſtay with his ſtreame, to give meeting unto other pety rivers: upon one of which ſcarce two miles off, from Eden it ſelfe ſtood E VERTERAE a towne of ancient memorie, mentioned by Antonine the Emperour and the booke of Notices: wherein it is notified, that in the declining age of the Romane Empire, a Romane Captaine made his abode there with a band of the Directores. But now the towne is decaied and become a ſmall poore village fenſed with a little Fortreſſe, and the name turned into Burgh: For it is commonly named, * Burgh under Stanemore. For in the time of the later Emperours (and willing I am to note ſo much once for all) little caſtles meete for warre occaſions, and furniſhed with ſtore of corne, beganne to be tearmed Burgi, that is, Burghs by a new name, which after that the Empire was tranſlated into the Eaſt, the Germans and others may ſeeme to have borrowed of the Greeke word πυργος. Hence alſo came the name F of Burgundians, becauſe they inhabited Burghs; for ſo, in that age they uſed to call thoſe dwelling places which were planted heere and there, along limites and marches. Neither have I red any thing elſe of that Burgh, but that in the beginning of the Norman government, the Northern Engliſh conſpired heere againſt William the Conquerour. That this Burgh was VERTERAE I dare be bold to affirme, be-

* Burgus ſubſaxeto. Burgh under Stanmore. Burgus. Vegetius. lib. 4. cap. 10.

cauſe

A cause the distance thereof from Levatræ of the one side, and from Brouonacum on the other, being reduced into Italian miles doth exactly agree with Antonines numbers: and for that the high streete of the Romans as yet evidently apparent by the ridges thereof, leadeth this way to BROVONACVM by ABALLABA, whereof mention is made in the booke of Notices, which hath hitherto kept the ancient name so well, that it doth most evidently descrie and shew it selfe, yea and in some sort remooue all doubt. For we call it short in steed of ABALLABA Apelby. Memorable is it, for the antiquity and situation onely. In the Romans time, no doubt, the Aurelian Maures kept a station there: it standeth also in a pleasant site, encompassed
B for the most part with the river Eden: but so slenderly inhabited, and the building so simple, that were it not that by reason of the antiquity it had deserved to be counted the cheife towne of the shire, and to haue Sessions and Assises kept in the castle, which is the common goale for malefactours, it would be little better than a village. For, all the beauty of it lieth in one broad street, which from North to South riseth with an easie ascent of the hill: in the upper part whereof standeth the castle aloft, environed wholy almost with the river. In the nether end of it is the church: and therby a schoole, which Robert Langton and Miles Spenser, Doctors of the law founded, the Maister whereof is Reginald Bainbrige, a right learned man who governeth the same with great commendation; and who of his courtesie hath exemplified for C me many antique inscriptions, and brought some hither into his garden. Neither verily was it for nought, that William of Newborrogh calleth this towne, and Burgh, Princely Holds, where he writeth that William King of Scots, surprised them on the sodaine, a little before himselfe was taken prisoner at Alnewick. Which King Iohn afterwards having recouered, gaue liberally, unto Robert Vipont in consideration of his singular good service to him and the state. From hence the river with his full course passeth directly North-west by Buley a castle of the Bishops of Carlil, and by Kirby Thore, under which are seene great ruinsof an old towne, and peeces of Romane coine otherwhiles digged up, and not long since this inscription.

Aballaba.
Apelby.

D

DEO BELATVCAD-RO LIB VOTV
M. FECIT.
IOLVS.

But tract of time hath quite out-worn the old name, and it is called at this day Whealop-Castle. If I might without præiudice to the Iudges of antiquity, I would say it
E were GALLAGVM mentioned by Ptolomee, which Antonine nameth GALLATVM, the distance of iourneies accord so well, and the name doth not altogither gainesay. For, what words the Britans began with GALL, the English turned into Wall. Thus they called GALENA, Wallingford, and Gall Seuer, Wall of Sever, Gall-dour, Wallbroke &c. Doubtlesse it was a place in old time of better note, seeing that from hence there leadeth a paued streete (Maiden way they call it) to Caer-Vorran neare the Picts-wall 20. miles or thereabout in length by fells, wastes, & moores. Along which F street I would willingly thinke, were placed those Stations and Mansions mentioned by Antonine in the ninth iourny of Britain, although no man is able precisely to say in what places they stood: and no mervaile, considering that Time, which deuoureth and consumeth all things, hath continually fed upon their carcasses so many ages together. Not far from Whellop, hard by Crawdundale, there are evident remaines of ditches, trenches, and mounts cast up: and among them this Roman inscription (the draught whereof Reginold Bainbrig before named, head schoolemaster of Applebey tooke out for me) was ingraven in a craggy rock: the forepart of which was quite eaten out with continuance of time, or thrust out by the roote of a tree there growing.

Whellep castle.
Gallatum.
Mayden-way.

A

B

That is to say, by my reading ----Varronius Præfectus legionis viceſimæ valentis victricis ---- Aelius lucanus Præfectus legionis ſecundæ Auguſtæ, caſtrametati ſunt ---- Varronius captaine of the xx. legion valens victrix ---- Aelius Lucanus Captaine of the ſecond legion Auguſta, encamped, or did ſome ſuch thing. For the twenteth legion called Valens victrix, which kept reſidence at DEVA, that is, Weſtcheſter: and the ſecond legion named Auguſta, that abode at ISCA, that is, Caer-Leon in Wales, may ſeeme to haue beene emploied againſt the enemies in theſe partes, and heere to haue ſtaied and kept their ſtanding campe for a time, and that their Captaines or Colonells in memoriall hereof engraved this upon the cragge. The iuſt time I may not eaſily ſet downe. Yet to the pointing out of C the verie time there remaine to bee ſeene upon a rocke thereby, theſe great capitall letters engraven CN. OCT. COT. COSS. But in the Conſular Rolles among all the Paires of Conſulls, I can meete with no ſuch names. Yet haue I obſerved thus much, that from the time of Severus unto Gordian and afterwards, the letter A. in all the inſcriptions of that age, every where in this Iſland, wanteth the overthwart little line or ſtroke, and is made thus Λ.

A. for A.

Northern men call that a whin, which the the Southern men A burr.

Eden holdeth on his courſe from hence, not farre from Howgill caſtle belonging to the familie of the Sandfords: but the Romane high way goeth ſtreight into the Weſt by Whinfield, a large parke ſhaded with trees, hard by BROVONIACVM, ſtanding twenty Italian miles or ſeventeene Engliſh miles from VERTERAE: as Antonine hath ſet it, who alſo hath called it Brocovum, like as the booke of Notices, Broconiacum; which ſpecifieth, that a company or band of Defenſors had heere their a- D bode. The beauty and buildings of this towne, although time hath conſumed, yet the name remaineth almoſt untouched, for wee call it Brougham. Here the river Eimot, flowing out of a great Lake, & for a good ſpace dividing this ſhire from Cumberland, receiveth the river Loder into it: nere unto the ſpring head whereof, hard by Shape, in times paſt Hepe, a little monaſtery built by Thomas the ſonne of Goſpatrick, ſonne of Orms, there is a well or fountaine which after the manner of Euripus ebbeth and floweth many times in a day: alſo there be huge ſtones in forme of Pyramides, E ſome 9. foote high, and foureteene foote thicke ranged directly as it were in a rowe for a mile in length, with equall diſtance almoſt betweene, which may ſeeme to haue bin pitched & erected, for to continue the memoriall of ſome act there atchieved: but what the ſame was, by injurie of time it is quite forgotten. Hard by Loder, there is a place bearing the ſame name, which, like as Stricland nere unto it, hath imparted their names to families of ancient gentry and worſhip. Somewhat aboue, where Loder and Eimot meet in one chanell, in the yeere of our Lord 1602. there was a ſtone gotten out of the ground erected in the honor of Conſtantine the Great, with theſe words.

Brovoniacum.

Brougham.

F

IMP.

A

IMP.
C. VAL.
CONSTA-NTINO
*PIENT.
AVG.

B

*Pientiſſimo Auguſto.

When Eimot hath ſerved a good while for a limit betweene this ſhire and Cumberland, nere unto Iſan-parles, a rocke full well knowne unto the neighbour inhabitants, whereunto nature hath left difficult paſſage, and there framed ſundry caues and thoſe full of winding crankes, a place of ſafe refuge, in time of danger: he lodgeth himſelfe after ſome few miles both with his owne ſtreame and with the waters of other rivers alſo, in Eden, ſo ſoone as he hath entertained Blencarne a brooke that boundeth this county on Cumberland ſide: Nere unto which, I haue heard there be the ſtrange ruines of an old Caſtle, the people call them the hanging walles of Marcantoniby, that is, Of Marke Antonie, as they would haue it.

Iſan-parles.

C

Hanging walles of Marke Antonie.

As for ſuch as haue borne the title of Weſtmorland; the firſt Lord, to my knowledge, was Robert De Vipont, who bare Gueles, ſixe Annulets Or in his Coate Armour. For King Iohn gaue unto him, the Balliwick and revenewes of Weſtmorland, by the ſervice of foure knights, whereupon the Cliffords his ſucceſſors untill our daies, held the office of the Sherifdom of Weſtmorland. For, Robert de Vipont, the laſt of that name left behinde him only two daughters, Iſabel wife to Roger Lord Clifford, and Idonea married unto Sir Roger Leybourne. Long time after, K. Richard the Second, created Ralph Nevill of Raby the Firſt Earle of Weſtmorland a man of the greateſt and moſt ancient birth of Engliſh nobility, as deſcended from Ucthred Earle of Northumberland: whoſe heires ſucceſſiuely by his former wife Margaret daughter to the Earle of Stafford, flouriſhed in that honour, untill that Charles by his wilfull ſtomack, and wicked conſpiracy caſting off his allegiance to Queene Elizabeth, and covering treaſon under the mantle of religion, moſt ſhamefully diſhonored that moſt noble houſe, and fowlly ſteined his owne reputation by actuall rebellion in the yeare 1599. Whereupon he fled into the Low countries, led a miſerable life, and died as miſerably. The ſaid firſt Earle, to note ſo much incidently, by his ſecond wife Catharine daughter to Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter had ſo faire iſſue, and the name of Nevill therby ſo greatly multiplied, that almoſt at one & the ſame time there flouriſhed out beſide the Earle of Weſtmorland, an Earle of Salisbury, an Earle of Warwicke, an Earle of Kent, Marqueſſe Montacute, a Duke of Bedford, Lord Latimer, and Lord Abergevenny, all Nevills.

D

Fines Term. Mich. R. 6. H. 8. Vipounts Armes.

E

Earles of Weſtmorland.

F

In this ſhire are conteined Pariſhes 26.

I. M. P.
C. VAL.
CONSTA-NTINO
*PIENT.
AVG.

CVMBRIA
Sive CVMBERLANDIA
Quæ olim pars Brigantum

SCOTIÆ

PARS

OCEA

VS

Whithaugh toune Stangartikside
Harelowe
Cannoby Kinmannt Kirkandrews
The Mote
Nether Bye
Blackbanke
Gretney Kirk
Durno Kirk
The red Kirk
Anand cast
Tordoff
W. hill Newby Boulnesse Burgh Glaso
Drambugh cast Cardronok Whitridge Kirkbanton Carlisle
Otterby Banton
Orton Brounelston
The Laith
Croston Kirkby
Wampul
Chapple of the grune Skinburnnesse Action Goudesby Owton Silluthe Braunrig
Babycotes
Wulsty castle
The Lict
Holme
Lasenhall
The Rose Sowterfelde
Blencougy
W. Warde
Old Mawboro
Brumfelde
Warton
Newton in Ardale
Crockdale Alhollowes Warnell
Bolton
Dibmill
Allonbye
Aspatre
Haton cast Harbybrough
Cladbek Owterside Torpenny
Ancautre
Crosbye
Canonbye
Flimland
Bodell Powthwaite
Alwerbye
Wardall Mewtoobecon
Vldale
Birthy Gilcrosse Derehan Redmane
Sunderland
Elneborp Vnerigg Tallantire
Armanthwat Deuonbye Bridekirke Cokermouth Huthwate
Basinthwat
Cammerton
Ribton Brugton Setmurther
Skiddow hill
Lawrance
Seaton
Clyfton Pridgeham Widehope
Crosthwat Flimbye
Derwentfoot haven
Stamborne
Deyn Emelton Thornthwate
Burnes
Eglesfeld
Brathwate
Wirkinton
Harinton
Vllok Lorton
Keswick
Bardsey hall Portinskall
Distinton
Lampley Lawswater Brakenthwate
Derwent Insul
Mowsbye
Arledon
Newlande chap:
Waterlath
The grange Armebath Kaswaldhowe Whithaven Euerdale
COPELAND
Borrodale
Dent hill
Copeland forest
St bees
St bees head
Egremond
Wasdale chap:
Netherwasdale
St Johns beckermond
Hale
Shirestons upon wrent
Abridge Couder
Plunson bye
Myterdale Eskedale Celloselde
Gosforth
Dalegarth
Seascall hall
Irton Momaster
Black shall Drig Southware
Carleton
Ravenglas
St Johns Wawburthwate
Corne
Seaton
Essay pk
Bowtell Wittenham Whidbeck
Millum cast:
Scala Miliarium
2 4 6 8 10
Christophorus Saxton Descripsit
Wilhelmus Kip Sculpsit

NORTHVM

BRIÆ

PARS

DVNEL:

EPISCO:

PARS

WESTMORLANDIÆ

EBORACĒ

SIS

PARS

TRIÆ

PARS

Cristenbury cragg
The Lamiforde
The gele cragg
The horse head
Kiesop foote
Trout beck
The spy cragg
Spade adam Tippall flu:
Thirlewall caſt:
Bellister caſt:
Blenkensop
Fetherstonhaugh
Houtonlee
Lamley Whitwham Williamston
Kellop law hill
Alne
Low byer Whitlaton
Austermere
Emsaugh
The howses Gargill
Eſgill
Vint flu:
Tyne flu:
Croglin chu:
Croglyn pva
Heskew Vnthank
Mudlesskew Gamblesbye Melmerbye
Ouseshye Kirkland: Blenkerne
Milsborne
Howgill caſt:
Newbiggin
Temple sowerbye
Marton
Kirkby thuct Applebye
Tees flu:
Culgaith
Laygambye Skirwith
Edmell
Caterley
Harnbye Windworth Nynechurches
Brougham caſt
Whinfell forest
Boltun
Clebrin Arlikambary Marlan
Penreth
Yonworth
Clifton
Lowther
Askham
Barton
Thurnbye
Shapp
Helton
Helton dale Crestermoor
Markendale chase
Banton
Thornthwate
Kirkbye Steuen
Holmhill cresse
Burbeck flu:
Hartesheps hall
Berrow flu:
Swale flu:
Lune flu:
Husey marull hill
Ambleside
Troutbeck
Kendall caſt:
Kendall
Kirkbylaundale Carpmanfell Methap bridge Hesket
Inglewood forest
Nunny Staſu
Kirk Wewald Laſenby Glaſenby Salkeld
Randerſid hall
Vnthank
Skelton Lathes
Newton
Sowbrow Nawbiogin Graſtek Aldbye Stainton
Stokbridge
Dalmain
Daker caſt:
Askham
Pooley
Hutyn Iohn
Thakthwate
Pooley
Ireby Caldbeck
Caldbeck fell Dunmallet
Carrock
Corby caſt:
Carleton
Cumrew
Cote hill Newby Warwick caſt:
Aglionby
Cetherall
Combe Whitton
Armanthwate caſt:
Anſtable
Croglin Cumcati
Silver side
Denton hall
Nether Denton
Denton
Ouer Denton
Withhill
Harperhall
Stapleton
Kirk Cambok
Hesteclash
Ouer hall
Will Towne
Tretermonc
Askerton Bardoswolde
Walton
Fenercaſt
Irthing flu:
Nawarth caſt:
The caſtlesteed
Forlan
Bramton
Taukin
Hoton
The terne howſe Knarsdale Slagesterde Thornthon Silbenes
Hartley borne Feddington Staſby caſt:
Croſby Vintok caſt:
Newby
Aglionby
Cetherall
Corby caſt:
Carlele
Edden flu:
Briſco Ireby Caldbeck
Caldbeck fell Dunmallet
Carrock

CVMBER-LAND.

WEstward, Northward from Weſtmorland lieth CVMBERLAND, the utmoſt region this way of the Realme of England, as that which on the North ſide boundeth upon Scotland: on the Southſide and the Weſt the Iriſh ſea beateth upon it: and Eaſtward aboue Weſtmorland it butteth upon Northumberland. It tooke the name of the inhabitants, who were the true and naturall Britans, and called themſelues in their owne language Kumbri and Kambri. For, the Hiſtories teſtifie, that the Britans remained heere a long time, maugree the Engliſh Saxons, howſoeuer they fretted and ſtormed thereat: yea and Marianus himſelf recordeth as much, who tearmed this Country Cumbrorum terram, that is, The land of the Cumbri, or Britans: to ſay nothing of the places that every where here, beare Britiſh names, as Caer-Luel, Caer-dronot, Pen-rith, Pen-rodoc. &c. Which moſt evidently declare the ſame, and as cleerely prooue mine aſſertion.

The Country although it be ſomewhat with the coldeſt, as lying farre North, and ſeemeth as rough by reaſon of hilles, yet for the variety thereof it ſmileth upon the beholders, and giveth contentment to as many as travaile it. For, after the rockes bunching out, the mountaines ſtanding thicke togither, rich of mettal mines, and betweene them great meeres ſtored with all kindes of wild-foule, you come to prety hilles good for paſturage and well repleniſhed with flockes of ſheepe; beneath which againe you meet with goodly plaines ſpreading out a great way, yeelding corne ſufficiently. Beſides all this the Ocean driving and daſhing upon the ſhore affourdeth plenty of excellent good fiſh, and upbraideth, as it were, the Inhabitants there abouts, with their negligence, for that they practiſe fiſhing no more than they doe.

Copeland.

The South part of this ſhire is called Copeland, and Coupland, for that it beareth up the head aloft, with ſharpe edged and pointed hilles, which the Britans tearme Copa: or as others would haue it, named Copeland, as one would ſay Coperland, of rich mines of copper therein.

Millumcaſtle.

In this part, at the very mouth of the river Duden, whereby it is ſevered apart from Lancaſhire, ſtandeth Millum Caſtle, belonging to the ancient houſe of the Hodleſtones; from whence as the ſhore fetcheth about with a bent Northward, two rivers very commodiouſly encloſe within them, Ravenglaſſe, a ſtation or roade for ſhips, where alſo, as I haue learned, were to bee ſeene, Roman inſcriptions: ſome will haue it called in old time Aven-glaſſe, as one would ſay, the blew river, and they talke much of King Eueling, that heere had his Court and roiall palace. One of theſe rivers named Eske ſpringeth up at the foote of Hard-knot, an high ſteepe mountaine, in the top whereof were diſcovered of late huge ſtones and foundations of a caſtle not without great wonder, conſidering it is ſo ſteepe and upright, that one can hardly aſcend up to it.

Raven-glas.

Hard-Knot nere Wri-noſe.

Somewhat higher, Irt a little river maketh way toward the ſea, wherein the muſcles and cochles, after they haue with a kinde of yawning or gaping ſucked in dew, which they luſt after to conceiue by bring forth, pearles, or to ſpeake as the Poet doth, Shell-beries, which the inhabitants thereby ſearch after at a low water: and our Lapidaries and Iewellers buy of the poore needy people for a little, but ſell againe at an high rate: of theſe and ſuch like, Marbodæus, ſeemeth to ſpeake in this verſe.

Irt a riverer.

See Plinie.

Pearles.

Gignit et inſignes antiqua Britannia baccas,
And Britanie of ancient fame,
Breeds and brings forth perle of great name.

Saint Bees.

Now by this time the ſhore treandeth out more, and more and encloſeth Weſtward, where it maketh a little promontory, which the common ſort for Saint Bega, call Saint Bees. For, Bega a devout and religious Iriſh woman, led there a ſolitary life, unto whoſe holineſſe are aſcribed certain vaine miracles, as the taming of a wild bul, & the procuring of a mighty deepe ſnow, which in the longeſt Summer day, by her praiers, fell, and lay thicke upon the valleies and tops of hilles. Scarce a mile hence ſtandeth Egremont Caſtle on the top of an hill, the ſeat in times paſt of William de Meſchines; unto whom King Henry the Firſt gaue it, to hold by one knights ſervice, and that he ſhould ſerue at the Kings Commandement in the army for Wales & Scotland. Who left behinde him a daughter, the wife of William Fitz-Duncan, of the bloud roiall of Scotland: by whoſe daughter alſo, the inheritance came into the familie of the Lucies: from them likewiſe by the Moltons and Fitz-Walters, the title of Egremont deſcended unto the Ratcliffes Earles of Suſſex. And yet Sir Thomas Percy through the favour of King Henry the Sixth enjoied it for a time, being ſummoned to the Parliaments, by the name of Th. Percy of Egremont.

Egremont Caſtle.

Lords of Copeland.

Liber Inq.

From hence the ſhore, drawing it ſelfe backe by little and little, and as it appeereth by the heapes of rubbiſh it hath beene fortified all along by the Romans, whereſoever there was eaſie landing. For, it was the outmoſt bound of the Roman Empire, and the Scots lay ſoreſt upon this coaſt and infeſted it moſt, when (as it were with continuall ſurges of warre) they flowed and flocked hither by heapes out of Ireland. And certaine it is that Moresby a little village, where is a roade for ſhips, was one of theſe fortifications. For there are many monumentes of antiquity, as vaultes under the ground, great foundations; many caues, which they uſe to tearme Picts-Holes, many fragments of ſtones with inſcriptions engraven in them are there often times found in the ground: of which, upon one I read this, LVCIVS SEVERINVS ORDINATVS, on another, COH. VII. And this Altar I ſaw lattely digged out there, with a little horned image repreſenting Sylvanus, erected to his honor by the ſecond Cohort of the Lingones.

The ſea ſide fenſed.

Moresby.

Deo Sylvano Cohors ſecunda Lingonum cui præeſt G. Pompeius M. Saturninus.

DEO SILVAN--- COH. II. LING
CVI PRÆES----
G. POMPEIVS M--- SATVRNIN------

As alſo this fragment, which I. Fletcher Lord of the place tranſcribed out for mee and ſent unto me.

OB PROSPE.
RITATEM CVLMINIS INSTITVTI.

Morbium.

But no ſtone hitherto hath beeene found, that aſſureth us that it was MORBIVM, where the Cataphractarij horſemen, or men at armes ſerved, notwithſtanding the name in ſome ſort implieth as much. Neither is Hay-Caſtle which I ſaw hard by, to be paſſed over with ſilence, a place verily to be regarded for antiquity ſake, which by report of the inhabitants belonged ſucceſſiuely in elder time to Gentlemen ſurnamed Moresby and Diſtinton.

Hay caſtle.

After

A After this, the river Derwent hideth himselfe in the Ocean; which having his first beginning in Borrodale, a vally hemmed in with crooked hilles, creepeth betweene the mountains called Derwent Fels; wherin, at Newlands & elsewhere, copper mines were discovered by Thomas Shurland and Daniel Hotchstatter a German of Auspurge, in our daies: and yet the same these knowen before, as appeareth by closse rowles of King Henrie the Third n. 18. Vpon the discoverie of these mines, there was a memorable case in law betweene the late Qveene Elizabeth of sacred memorie, & Thomas Percie Earle of Northumberland, in whose Lordship they were found: but in regard of the Queenes roiall prærogative, and for that there were in B them, veines of gold & silver they were adiudged to the Queene. But hereby it is wel seene, how untrue it was, that Cicero wrote in his Epistles unto Atticus: This is for certaine knowen, saith he, that there is not in the Iland Britaine so much as one scruple of silver. Neither would Cæsar, if he had knowen of these mines, have written, That the Britans had use of coper brought into them from other parts beyond sea, seeing that the mines, not onely serve all England over, but also afford great plenty beside, that is carried yeerely forth of the Realme.

Copper or brasse mines.

Veines of gold and silver.

See Ploydens Reports.

Heere also is commonly found that minerall kind of earth or hardned glittering stone (we cal it Black-lead) with which painters use to draw their lins & make pictures of one colour in their first draughts: which whether it bee Pnigitis or Melanteria, C spoken of by Dioscorides, or Ochre, a kind of earth so burnt with heat, that it becommeth blacke, or whether it were unknowen unto the old writers, I cannot certainly averre, and let others for me search it out. Derwent, after it hath passed through these hilles, spreadeth abroad into a large lake, Bede tearmeth it prægrande Stagnum, that is, a very great poole: wherein are three Ilands eminent above the water: The one hath an house in it of the Ratcliffes, a family of Knights degree: the second is inhabited by the Dutch Minerall men: the third is thought to be that, wherein as Bede writeth, Saint Herbert lived an Heremeticall life. On the very skirt of this botome, in a pleasant soile, compassed about with deawy hilles, and fensed on the North side with that high mountaine Skiddaw, lieth Keswike, a little towne which Keswike. D K. Edward the First made a Mercate by the procurement of S. Thomas of Derwentwater Lord of the place from whō it lineally descended to the family of the Radcliffs. It was well knowen many yeeres agoe by reason of the mines of copper, as we may see in a certaine Charter of King Edward the Fourth, and is at this day much inhabited by Minerall men, who haue heere there smelting house by Derwent side which with his forcible streame, and their ingenious inventions serveth them in notable steede for easie bellowes workes, hammer workes, forge workes, and sawing of boords, not without admiration of such as behold it. As for that mountaine Skiddaw aforesaid, it riseth up to such an heigth with two heads like unto Parnassus, & with a kind of emulation beholdeth Scruffell hill before it in Anandale within Scotland, that E from these two mountaines, according as the misty clouds arise or fall, the people thereby dwelling, make their prognostication of the change of wether, and commonly sing this note.

Skiddaw hill.

If Skiddaw hath a cap
Scruffell wots full well of that.

Like as there goes also this usual byword concerning the heigth as well of this hil, as of other twaine in this tract,

F Skiddaw, Lauuellin, and Casticand,
Are the highest hils in all England.

From hence Derwent sometimes within a narrow chanell, other whiles with a broader streame speedeth him very fast Northward, to entertaine Cockar. Which when they meete, doe incompasse, almost round about, Cokarmouth a mercate

towne

towne of good welth, and a Caſtle of the Earles of Northumberland. The towne is built faire enough, but ſtandeth ſomewhat with the loweſt betweene two hilles: upon the one of which the Church is ſeated, and upon the other right over againſt it, a very ſtrong Caſtle: the gate whereof carrieth in the Front the Armes of the Moltons, Humfranvills, Lucies, and Percies. Oppoſite unto this beyond the river two miles off, lieth the carcaſſe of an ancient Caſtle, called Papcaſtle, which by a number of monuments laieth claime to bee a Romaine antiquity: whether this were Guaſmoric, which as Ninnius writeth, King Vortigern built neere unto Lugubalhia, and the Engliſhmen of old time called Palme-caſtle, I cannot ſo eaſily affirme. Where among many monuments of Antiquity was found a broad veſſell of a greeniſh ſtone artificially engraven with little images: which whether it had beene a Laver to waſh in, or a Font, or, as one calleth it, Sacrarium Regenerationis: for which purpoſe it ſerveth now at Brid-kirke, that is, at S. Brigids Church hard by, I dare not ſay. But I haue read that Fonts were adourned with the Pictures of holy men, to the end that ſuch as were baptized might afterward have before their eies, whoſe deedes they were to imitate as ſaith Pontius Paulinus. For in the firſt plantation of Chriſtianity among the Gentiles, ſuch onely as were of full age, after they were inſtructed in the principles of of Chriſtian religion, were admitted to Baptiſme. And that but twice in the yeere; at Eaſter, and Whitſontide, except vpon vrgent neceſſitie. At which times they which were to be baptized were attired in white garments exorciſed, and exſuffled, with ſundry ceremonies, which I leaue to the learned in Chriſtian antiquities: but this Font we ſpeake of is thus inſcribed.

Guaſmoric.

Epiſt. ad Severum.

Catechmenoi or Hearers.

But what they ſignifie, or what nations characters they ſhould be, I knowne not: let the learned determine thereof. The firſt and the eight differ not much from that which in the time of the Emperour Conſtantine the Great, Chriſtians uſed for the name of Chriſt. The reſt informe, though not in ſound, come very neere unto thoſe which are ſeene in the tombe of Gormon a King of the Danes at Ielling in Denmarke, the which Peter of Lindeberge did put forth, in the yeere 1591.

Theſe places which erewhile I have named, together with a fourth part of the Baronie of Egremond, Wigton, Lewſewater, Aſpatric, Vldal &c. a right faire and goodly inheritance, Maude Lucy (who was the heire of Anthony Molton or De Lucy her brother) gave unto her husband, Henrie Percie Earle of Northumberland: and albeit ſhe had no iſſue by him, yet made ſhe the family of the Percies her heires, upon this condition, *That they ſhould beare quarterly the Lucies Armes ſz. three * Luces Argent in a ſhield Gueles, with their owne Armes*: or that I may uſe the words of the Originall, *On condition, to give their owne armes Gueles with three * Luces Argent, together with the* Armes of the Lucies and Percies.

* Plates.

* Luces.

A the Armes of Percy, Or, A Lion-Azur quarterly; and the ſame condition by a fine levied.

Afterwards, Derwent having gathered his waters into one ſtreame, entreth into the Ocean at Wirkinton, a place famous for taking of Salmons: and now the ſeat of the ancient family of the Curwens Knights, who fetch their deſcent from Goſpatric Earle of Northumberland, and their ſurname they tooke by covenant and compoſition from Culwen a family in Galloway, the heire whereof they had married; and heere have they a ſtately houſe built Caſtlelike, and from whom (without offence or vanitie be it ſpoken) my ſelfe am deſcended by the mothers ſide. Culwen, commonly Curwen.

B From hence ſome thinke there was a wall made to defend the ſhore in convenient places, for foure miles, or there about, by Stilico the potent commander in the Roman ſtate, what time as the Scots annoyed theſe coaſts out of Ireland. For, thus ſpeaketh Britaine of herſelfe, in Claudian. Vnder Honorius and Arcadius.

Me quoque vicinis pereuntem gentibus, inquit,
Muniuit Stilico, totam cùm Scotus Hibernem
Mouit, & infeſto ſpumauit remige Thetis.
And me likewiſe at hands (quoth ſhe) to periſh, through deſpight
Of neighbour-Nations Stilico fenſed againſt their might,
C What time the Scots all Ireland mov'd offenſive armes to take &c.

There are alſo as yet, ſuch continued ruins and broken walles to be ſeene as farre as to Elne Mouth, which river holding no long courſe hath at his ſpring head Ierby, a good big mercate towne ſtanding upon it. I iudge it to have beene that ARBEIA, where the Barcarij Tigrienſes kept their ſtanding guard: and at his mouth, Elenborrough that is the Burgh upon Elen, where the firſt band of the Dalmatians together with their Captaine in old time made their abode. The neere reſemblance of the name Elenborough with OLENACVM where the Firſt Herculean Winge lay in Garriſon in the time of Theodoſius the younger, is ſome motiue to thinke that this was Olenaeum.
D that OLENACVM, but yet I dare not affirme it. Seated it was upon the height of a hill: and hath a goodly proſpect farre into the Iriſh ſea: But now, Corne growes where the towne ſtood, nevertheleſſe many expreſſe footings thereof are evidently to be ſeene: The ancient vaults ſtand open, and many altars, ſtones with inſcriptions, and Statues are heere gotten out of the ground. Which, I. Sinhous a very honeſt man, in whoſe grounds they are digged up, keepeth charily, and hath placed orderly about his houſe. It the mids of his yard their ſtandeth erected a moſt beautifull foure ſquare Altar of a reddiſh ſtone right artificially in antique worke engraven five foote or there abouts high, with an inſcription therein of an excellent good letter: But loe the thing it ſelfe all whole, and every ſide thereof, as the draught
E was moſt lively taken out by the hand of Sir Robert Cotton of Conuington, Knight, a ſingular lover of antiquity, what time as he and I together, of an affectionate love to illuſtrate our native country, made a ſurvey of theſe coaſts in the yeere of our redemption 1599. not without the ſweet food and contentment of our mindes. And I cannot chuſe but with thankfull heart remember, that very good and worthy Gentleman not onely in this regard that moſt kindly hee gave vs right courteous and friendly entertainment, but alſo for that being himſelfe well learned, he is a lover of ancient literature, and moſt diligently perſerveth theſe inſcriptions, which by others that are unskilfull and unlettered beſtreight waies defaced, broken, and converted
F to other vſes to exceeding great prejudice and detriment of antiquity.

VOLANTII

GENIO LOCI
FORTVNÆ REDVC
ROMÆ ÆTERNÆ ET FATO BONO
G CORNELIVS PEREGRINVS
TRIB COHORT
EX PROVINCIA
MAVR CÆS
DOMO STEBS DECVR VOLANTII VIVAS
I O M ALA
AVG OB VIRTVTEM
APPLATA CVI PRÆ
EST PÆLPVBLSER
GIA MAGNVS D
MVRSA EX NNON INFERIOR RÆFEC
ATRONNO BRO BELATV CADRO IVLCI VILIS OPT VSLM
DIS DEABVSQ
P POSTHVMIVS ACILIANVS PRÆ COH IDELM

Decuriones.

A In the Inſcription all is as plaine as may be: onely in the laſt line ſave one (ET and ÆDES) are red by implication of the letters: the laſt part being maimed may haply be amended in this wiſe DECVRIONVM ORDINEM RESTITVIT &c. Theſe Decurions were in free townes (called Municipia) the ſame that Senators were in Rome and Colonies, ſo called, becauſe they executed the office of Curiæ, whereupon they were named alſo Curiales, who had the ordering and managing of civile offices. Iſidor. lib. 9. cap. 4.

On the back-ſide of this Altar in the upper edge and border thereof, are red as you ſee, theſe two words VOLANTII VIVAS: which doe perplex me, neither can I expound them, unleſſe the Decurions, Gentlemen, and Commons (for of theſe three B ſtates conſiſted a Municipium, or free Corporation) added this as a well wiſhing, and votiue inſcription unto G. Cornelius Peregrinus (who reſtored Houſes, habitations and Decurions) that ſo bounteous and beneficiall a man VOLANTII VIVERET, that is, might live at Volantium. Hence I ſuppoſe, if conjecture may carry it, that VOLANTIVM in times paſt was the name of this place. Underneath are engra- Volantium.
ven inſtruments belonging to Sacrifice, An ax or Cleaver, and a chopping Knife. On the left ſide a Mallet and a great baſon: in that on the right ſide, a platter, a diſh, and a peare, if my ſight ſerve me well: or as other would haue it, a drinking cup or C jugg. For theſe were veſſels ordained for Sacrifices; and others beſide as a Cruet, an Incenſe pan or Cenſer, a footleſſe pot, the Prieſts miter &c. Which I have ſeene expreſly portraied upon the ſides of other Altars in this tract. The Second Altar which I have heere adioined was digged up at Old Carlile, and is now to be ſeene in the Barhouſes houſe at Ilkirke: an inſcription it had with that intricate connexion of letters one in another, as the graver hath heere very lively portraied: And thus it ſeemeth they are to be read.

Ioui optimo Maximo. Ala Auguſta ob virtutem appellata, cui præeſt Publius Aelius, Pub-lij filius Sergia Magnus de Murſa ex Pannonia inferiore Præfectus. Apronianо (& Vnder Commodus Anno Chriſti 193.
D fortaſſe) Bradua Conſulibus.

Vnto moſt gracious and mighty Iupiter. The Wing, named for their vertue Auguſta, the Captaine whereof is Publius Aelius, ſonne of Publius, Magnus, of Murſa: From out of the lower Pannonia, Præfect. When Apronianus, and (haply) Bradua were conſuls.

The third Altar, with an inſcription to Belatucadrus the tutelar God of the place, is in this wiſe to be red.

Belatucadro Iulius Ciuilis Optio, id eſt, Excubijs Præfectus, votum ſoluit libens merito.
E Vnto Belacutadrus, Iulius Civilis Optio, that is, Prefect over the watch and ward, hath performed his vow, willingly and duly.

In the fourth Altar, which is of all the reſt the faireſt, there is no difficulty at all, and this is the tenour of it.

Dis, Deabuſque Publius Poſthumius Acilianus Præfectus Cohortis primæ Delmatarum.
To the Gods and Goddeſſes, Publius Poſthumius Acilianus Præfect or Captaine of the firſt Cohort of the Dalmatians.

F Such Altars as theſe (neither neede we thinke much to obſerve thoſe ancient rites, which now long ſince the moſt ſacred Chriſtian religion hath chaſed away and baniſhed quite) they were wont to crowne with greene branches, like as they did the Gentiles or Heathen altars. See in Lancaſhire.
Beaſts for Sacrifices and themſelves: & then they uſed with Frankincenſe and wine to make ſupplication, to kill, and offer their ſacrifices: yea and their maner was to enhuile or anoint the very altars all over. Concerning the demolithing and overthrow throw of which, as Christian religion came in place and beganne to prevaile, Prudentius the Christian Poet thus wrote. A

Exercere manum non pœnitet, & lapis illic
Si stetit antiquus, quem cingere sueuerat error
Fasciolis, aut gallinæ pulmone rigare, Frangitur ---

Men thought not much their hands thus to employ,
And if in place some antique stone there stood,
Which folke were wont in error, with much ioy
To garnish round with ribbands, and with bloud
Of Hens to inbrue they brake it in that mood. B
These inscriptions likewise heere under, I saw there.

PRO SA-----
ANTONINI AV-PII F-----
P. AVLVS -P. F. PALATINA
POSTHVMIVS ACILIANVS PRÆF. COH. I. DELMATAR.

Publij filium. C

*D M INGENVI. AN. X.
IVL. SIMPLEX PATER
*F C.

D M MORI REGIS FILII HEREDES
EIVS SVBSTITVE
RVNT VIX. A. LXX.

* Dijs Manibus.

* Faciendum curavit.

HIC EXSEGERE FATA
--ENVS SC GERMA-
--S REG VIX. AN-- S VIX AN----
-------IX----------

D M LVCA. VIX
ANN IS XX.

D M IVLIA MARTIM
A, VIX. AN
XII III D. XX. H.

D

There is a stone also heere seene workmanly cut and erected for some victorie of the Emperours, in which two winged Genij hold up betweene them a Guirland: as heere is represented. E

F

That

A That is, for the victorie of the Augusti [or Emperours] our Lords.

When the shore hath passed on right forward a little way from hence, it bendeth so backe againe with an arme of the sea retiring inward, that it may seeme to bee that MORICAMBE, which Ptolomee setteth heere: the nature of the place and the name doe so just agree. For a crooked creeke it is of salt water, and Moricambe in the British tongue signifieth a crooked sea. Hard by this, David the first King of Scots built the Abbey de Vlmo, commonly called Holme Cultrain: and the Abbots thereof erected Vlstey a fortresse neere unto it, for a treasury and place of surety to lay up their bookes, charters and evidences, against the sodain invasions of the Scot-
B tish: wherein the secret workes, they say, of Michael the Scot, lie in conflict with mothes, which Michael professing here a religious life, was so wholly possessed with the study of the mathematickes and other abstrusearts, about the yeere of our Lord 1290. that beeing taken of the common people for a Necromancer, there went a name of him (such was their credulity) that he wrought diverse wonders and miracles. Beneath this Abbay, the brooke called Waver runneth into the said arme of the sea, which brooke taketh into it the riveret Wiza, at the head whereof lie the very bones and pitifull reliques of an ancient citie, which sheweth unto us, that there is nothing upon earth, but the same is subject to mortality. The neighbours call it at this day Old Carlile. What name it had in old time I know not, unlesse it were
C CASTRA EXPLORATORVM, that is, The Espialls or Discoverers Castle. The distance put downe by Antonine (who doth not so much seeke after the shortest waies, as reckon up the places of greater note and name) as well from Bulgium as Lugo-vallum suiteth thereto verie aptly, the situation also to discover and descry a far off is passing fit and commodious: for, seated it is upon the top of a good high hill, from whence a man may easily take a full view of all the country round about. Howbeit, most certaine it is, that the wing of horsemen, which for their valour was named AVGVSTA, and AVGVSTA GORDIANA kept residence here in Gordian the Emperours time as appeareth evidently by these inscriptions which I saw hard by.

Moricambe.

Holme Cultrain.

Michael Scotus.

Castra Exploratorum.

See as touched in the Areans afterward in the Picts Wall.

Ala Augusta Gordiana at Il-Kirk.

D

*I O M.	D M
ALA AVG. OB	MABLI
----RTVT. APPEL. CVI	NIVS SEC
PRÆEST TIB. CL. TIB. F. P	VNDVS
IN- G- N IVSTINVS	*EQVIS
P RÆF. *FVSCIANO	ALE AVG
II SILANO II COS.	STE STIP

E

*Iovi Optimo Maximo.

This votiue altar also of a rude stone was erected for the happy health of the Emperour Gordian the Third, & his wife Furia Sabina Tranquilla, and their whole familie by the troupe of horsemen surnamed Augusta Gordiana when Æmilius Chrispinus a natiue of Africa governed the same under Nonnius Philippus Lieutenant generall of Britaine in the yeere of Christ 243. as appeareth by the Consuls therein specified.

F

A

*I O M
PRO SALVTE IMPERATORIS
M. ANTONI GORDIANI. P. F.
INVICTI AVG ET SABINIAE TVR
IAE TRANQVILE CONIVGIEIVS TO TAQVE DOMV DIVIN. EORVMA
LA AVG. GORDIA. OB VIRTVTEM
APPELLATA POSVIT: CVI PRÆEST
AEMILIVS CRISPINVS PRAEF.
EQQ. NATVS IN PRO AFRICA DE
TVIDRO SVB CVR. NONNII PH
LIPPI LEG. AVG. PROPRETO------ ATTICO ET PRETEXTATO COSS.

B

Anno Christi. 243.

From hence also were altars brought, which are erected in the high way by Wigton, in the sides whereof are to bee seene, a drinking cup Or mazar, a footlesse pot, a mallet, a boll &c. all vessels appertaining to sacrifice. But time hath so worne out the letters, that nothing can bee read. And not farre from hence just by the high street way, there was digged up a long rude stone in manner of a columne which we saw at Thoresbey, with this inscription to the honour of Philip the Emperour, and his sonne, who flourished about the yeere of our Lord 248.

Wigton.

C

Thoresby.

IMP CAES.
M. IVL PHILIPPO
PIO FELI CI
AVG
ET M. IVL. PHI LIPPO NOBILIS
SIMO CAES
TR. P. COS---

D

E

This also with others Oswald Dikes a learned minister of Gods word copied out for me, and now is to bee seene in the house of T. Dikes Gentleman at Wardal.

DEO

SANCTO BELA TVCADRO AVRELIVS
DIATOVA *ARAE
XVOTO POSVIT
LL. MM.

F

* For, Aram ex voto.

Like

A Likewiſe an other ſuch like altar to a private tutelar God of the place, was there found with this unperfect inſcription.

B

DEO
CEAI IO AVR
M RTI. ET MS
ERVRACIO PRO
SE ET SVIS. V. S.
L. L. M.

Beſides an infinite number of pety images, ſtatues of horſemen, Ægles, Lions, Ganimedes, and many other monuments of antiquity, which are dayly diſcovered. Something higher, a little promontory ſhooteth out, and a great frith or arme of C the ſea lieth under it, beeing now the common limit confining England and Scotland, ſerving in times paſt to make a ſeparation betweene the Roman Province, and the Picts. Upon this, ſtandeth that ancient towne BLATVM-BVLGIVM (happily of Bulch a Britain word, that ſignifieth a ſeparation) From which, as from the moſt remot place, and the limite of the Roman province, Antonine the Emperor begin-neth his journeies through Britaine. The inhabitants at this day call it Bulneſſe: and as ſmall a village as it is, yet hath it a pile, and in token of the antiquity thereof, beſides the tracts of ſtreetes, ruinous walles; and an haven now ſtopped up with mud; there led a paved high way from hence along the ſea-ſhore, as farre as to Elen Borrough, if we may relie upon report of the by-dwellers.

Which the Scots call Solway Frith.

Blatum-Bulgium.

Bulneſſe.

D Beyond this a mile (as is to bee ſeene by the foundations at a nepe tide) beganne that WALL, the moſt renowned workes of the Romans, which was the bound in times paſt of the Roman province; raiſed of purpoſe to ſeclude and keepe out the barbarous nations, that in this tract, were evermore barking and baying (as an ancient writer ſaith) about the Roman Empire. I mervailed at firſt, why they built here ſo great fortifications, conſidering that for eight miles or there about there lieth oppoſite a very great frith and arme of the ſea: but now I underſtand, that at every ebbe the water is ſo low, that the borderers and beaſt-ſtealers may eaſily wade over. That the forme of theſe ſhores hath beene changed, it doth evidently appeere by the tree-rotes covered over with ſand a good way off from the ſhore, which often-
E times at a low ebbe, are diſcovered with the windes. I know not whether I may relate here, which the inhabitants reported concerning trees without boughes, under the ground, oftentimes found out here; in the moſſes, by the direction of deaw in Summer: for, they haue obſerved, that the deaw never ſtandeth on that ground under which they lie.

The Beginning of the Picts Wall.

Solway Frith.

Trees within the ground.

By the ſame Frith, more within the land, ſtandeth Drumbough Caſtle, belonging of later time to the Lords of Dacre, a ſtation in times paſt of the Romans. Some will haue it to haue beene EXPLORATORVM CASTRA, notwithſtanding the diſtance utterly controuleth it. There was alſo an other ſtation of the Romans beſide it, which now beeing changed into a new name is called Burgh upon Sands:
F whence the territorie adjoyning is named the Baronie of Burgh, the which R. Meſchines Lord of Cumberland gaue unto Robert de Trivers: but from him it came to the Morvills: the laſt of which houſe named Hugh, left behinde him a daughter who by her ſecond husband Thomas de Molton, had iſſue Thomas Molton, Lord of this place: whoſe ſonne Thomas, by marriage with the heire of Hubert de Vaulx adjoined Gilleſ-land to his poſſeſſions: which in the end

Burgh upon ſands.

1307.

Called Morvills de Burgh upon Sands.

Liber. Inq.

were devolved all unto Randulph Dacre, who married M. the heire of Moulton. A
But for no one thing was this little Burgh upon Sands more famous, than, that Edward the First. King Edward the First, that triumphant conquerour of his enemies was heere taken out of this world by untimely death. A right noble and worthy Prince to whom God proportioned a most princely presence and personage, as a right worthy seat to entertaine so heroicall a minde. For hee not onely in regard of fortitude and wisdome, but also for a beautifull & personall presence was in all pointes answerable to the height of roiall majestie, whom fortune also in the very Prime and floure of his age, inured to many a warre, and exercised in most dangerous troubles of the state, whiles she framed and fitted him for the Empire of Britaine: which hee being B once crowned King, managed and governed in such wise, that having subdued the Welsh, and vanquished the Scots, hee may most justly bee counted the second ornament of Great Britaine. Under this Burgh, within the very Frith where the salt Solway Frith. water ebbeth and floweth, the Englishmen and Scotish, by report of the inhabitants fought with their fleetes at full sea, and also with their horsemen and footemen at the ebbe. A thing which may seeme no lesse mervailous than that which Plinie hath reported not without wonder of the like place in Caramania. This arme of
The river Ituna or Eden. the sea both nations call Solway Frith, of Solway a towne in Scotland standing upon it. But Ptolomee more truely tearmeth it ITVNA. For, Eden that notable river, History of Malrosse. which wandereth through Westmorland and the inner partes of this shire, powreth C forth into it a mighty masse of water, having not yet forgotten, what a doe it had to passe away strugling and wrestling as it did, among the carcasses of freebutters, lying dead in it on heapes, in the yeere of salvation 1216. when it swallowed them up loden with booties out of England, and so buried that rable of robbers under his waues.

This river Eden when it is entred into this shire, receiveth from the West the river Eimot, flowing out of Vlse a great lake heretofore mentioned: nere unto the banke
Dacre. whereof, hard by the riveret Dacor, standeth Dacre Castle, of signale note, for that Barons Dacre. it hath given surname to the honorable familie of the Barons Dacre: and mentioned anciently by Bede, for that it had a monasterie in those daies; as also by William of D
Malmesbury, in regard that Constantine King of Scots and Eugenius or Ewain King of Cumberland yeelded themselues there togither with their kingdomes unto Athelstane King of England upon condition to be protected by him.

Not much higher, and not farre from the confluence of Eimot and Loder, where is seene that round trench of earth, which the country people tearme Arthurs Table, stands Penrith, which is, if you interpret it out of the British language, The Red head or hill. (For, the soile, and the stones there are of a rediſh colour) but commonly called Perith. A little towne and of indifferent trade, fortified on the West side with a castle of the Kings, which in the reigne of King Henry the Sixth was repaired out of the ruines of a Roman fort thereby called Maburg, adorned with a proper church: E and the mercate place is large, with an edifice of timber therein for the use of those that resort thither to mercate, garnished with beares at a ragged staffe, which was the deuise of the Earles of Warwicke. It belonged in times past unto the Bishops of Durham: But when Antony Bec the Bishop, over weening himselfe with over much wealth, waxed proud and insolent, King Edward the First, (as wee finde in Durham booke) tooke from him Werke in Tividale, Perith, and the Church of Simondburne. But for the commodious use of this towne William Stricland Bi-Perith. shop of Carlile, descended from a respectiue ancient race in this tract, at his owne charges caused a chanell for a water course to be made out of Petter-rill, that is, the little Petter, which nere unto the bank had Plumpton park, a very large plot of ground F
Called in old time Haia de Plompton. which the Kings of England allotted in old time for wild beasts, but King Henry the Eighth disparked it, and wisely appointed it, for habitation of men, as beeing in the verie merches well neere, where the Realmes of England and Scotland confine one upon the other. Iust by this place, I saw many remaines of a decaied towne, which they there for the vicinity thereof, doe now call Old Perith:

Ifor

A I for my part would deeme it to bee PETRIANAE. For, the fragment of an antique inſcription erected by VLPIVS TRAIANVS EMERITVS an old diſcharged, and penſionary ſouldiour of the Petreian wing doth convince and prooue, that the wing Petriana made abode heere. But, behold both it and others which wee copied out here. Petriana.

B

GADVNO VLP TRAI
EM. AL. PET MARTIVS.
*F P. C.

D M.
AICETV OS MATER
VIXIT * A XXXXV
ET LATTIO FII-VIX
A XII. LIMISIVS
CONIV. ET FILIÆ PIENTISSIMIS POSVIT.

* Annos.

*Haply, Faciendum procuravit.

C
D M
FL. MARTIO SEN
IN * C. CARVETIOR QVESTORIO
VIXIT AN XXXXV
MARTIOLA FILIA ET HERES PONEN
*----------CVRAVIT.

*Peradventure, in Cohorte.

D

* Dum

D M. CROTILO GERMANVS VIX
ANIS XXVI. GRECA VIX ANIS IIII
VINDICIANVS * FRA. ET FIL. TIT. PO.

* Fratri & filiæ Titulum posuit.

E After that Eden hath now given Eimot enterteinment, hee turneth his courſe Northward, by both the Salkelds, watering as hee goes obſcure ſmall villages, and fortreſſes. Amongſt which at the leſſe Salkeld, there bee erected in manner of a circle ſeventie ſeaven ſtones, every one tenne foote high, and a ſpeciall one by it ſelfe before them, at the very entrance riſeth fifteene foote in height. This ſtone the common people there by dwelling, name Long Megge, like as the reſt, her daughters. And within that ring or circle, are heapes of ſtones, under which they ſay, lie covered the bodies of men ſlaine. And verily, there is reaſon to thinke that this was a monument of ſome victory there atchieved, for no man would deem that they were erected in vaine.

F From thence paſſeth Eden by Kirk-Oſwald, conſecrated to Saint Oſwald, the poſſeſſion in old time of that Sir Hugh Morvill, who with his aſſociates ſlew Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury: and in memoriall of this fact, the ſword which hee then uſed was kept heere along time; and ſo goeth on by Armanthwayte a Caſtle of the Skeltons; by Corby caſtle: belonging to the worthie and ancient family Kirk Oſwald. Armanthwayte. Corby Caſtle.

familie of the Salkelds, well advanced by marriage with the heire of Rosgill; by Wetherall, sometime a little Abbay or Cell, which acknowledged the Abbay of Saint Marie in Yorke for her mother; where within a rocke are to bee seene certaine little habitations or cabins hewed hollow for a place of sure refuge in this dangerous countrie. Thence, by Warwic (VIROSIDVM, as I suppose) where the sixt Cohort of the Nervians in old time held their station within the limite of that Wall against the Picts and Scots: and there in the later age was built a very strong bridge of stone, at the charges of the Salkelds and Richmonds: by Linstock castle also belonging to the Bishop of Carlile in the Barony of Crosby, which, Waldeof the sonne of Earle Gospatrick, Lord of Allerdale granted unto the church of Carlile. And now by this time, Eden beeing ready to lodge himselfe in his owne arme of the sea, taketh in two rivers at once, namely Peterill & Caud, which keeping an equal distance a sunder march along from the South, and hold as it were a parallell pace just togither. By Peterill, beside PETRIANAE, which I spake of, standeth Greistock, a castle belonging not long since to an honorable house, which derived their first descent from one Ranulph Fitz-Walter: of which line, William called De Greystock wedded Mary a daughter and one of the coheires of Sir Roger Merley Lord of Morpath: and hee had a sonne named Iohn, who beeing childlesse, by licence of King Edward the First conveighed his inheritanee to Ralph Granthorpe, the sonne of William, and his aunts sonne by the father side: whose male progeny flourished along time in honor with the title of Lord Greistock, but about King Henry the Seventh his daies expired and came to an end, and so the inheritance came by marriage unto the Barons of Dacree: and the femall heires generall of the last Baron Dacre, were married unto Philip Earle of Arundell, and Lord William Howard, sonnes of Thomas Howard late Duke of Norfolke.

Wetherall.

Virosidum.

Linstock. Crosby.

Olenacum.

Greystock.

The ancient Genelogie. Barons de Greystock.

Upon Caud, beside the coper mines neere unto Caudbeck, standeth Highgate a castle of the Richmonds, of ancient descent, and a proper fine castle of the Bishops of Carlile, called the Rose castle: it seemeth also that CONGAVATA, was here about in which the second Band of the Lergi served in garizon: for, Congavata in the British tongue signifieth, The valley by Gavata, which now is called short Caud. But the very place where this towne stood I cannot precisely point out. Betwixt the meeting of these rivers, the ancient City Carlile, is passing commodiously and pleasantly seated, garded on the North side with the chanell of Eden, on the East with Peterill, on the West with Caud: and beside these naturall fenses it is fortified with strong walls of stone, with a castle, and a Citadell as they tearme it. In faschion it lieth somewhat long, running out from West to East: On the West side is the castle of a good large compasse, which King Richard the Third, as appeereth by his Armes, repaired. In the mideste almost of the City, riseth on high the Cathedrall church, the upper part whereof being the newer, is very artificially and curiously wrought: yet the nether part is much more ancient. But on the East side it is defended with the Citadel, that K. Henry the Eight built strongly with sundry bulwarkes. The Romans and Britans called this city LVGV-VALLVM, and LVGV-BALLIVM, or LVGV-BALIA: the English Saxons, Luell as Bede witnesseth: Ptolomee, as some thinke, LEVCOPIBIA. Ninnius, Caer Lualid: the ridiculous propheses of the Bitans, tearmed it The City of Duball; we, Carlile, and Latine writers by a newer name, Carleolum. For, our Historiographers accord with common consent, that Luguballia and Carleolum were the same. But, in searching out the Etymology thereof, good God, how hath Leland besturred him, beeing in the end driven to this point, that hee thought verily, Eden was called Lugus, and Ballum came from Vallis, that is, a vale, so that Lugu ballum soundeth as much as the Vale by Lugus. But I, if so bee I may also hatch a conjecture, would rather suppose, but without præiudice, that the said termination Vallum and Vallia, are derived from that most famous militare Vallum or Trench that standeth apparent a little from the citie. For, that Picts Wall, which was afterwardes set upon the Trench, or rampire of Severus appeereth somewhat beyond the river Eden, which now hath a wooden bridge over it, neere unto a little Mines of Brasse.

Congavata.

Carlile.

Luguvallum.

village

A village called Stanwicke, and went over the very river juſt againſt the Caſtle: where within the chanell of the river mighty ſtones, the remaines thereof, are yet extant. Alſo Lugus or Lucus amongſt the ancient Celts or Gaules, who ſpake the ſame language that once Britans did, ſignifieth a Towre as we may learne by Pomponius Mela. For, that which in Antonine is named LVGO-AVGVSTI, hee calleth TVRRIM AVGVSTI, that is, The Towre of Auguſtus: ſo that Lugu-Vallum, is as much to ſay, as the Towre or Fort by the wall. From this originall, if the Frenchmen had derived Lugu-dunum, as it were The towre on an hill, and Lucotecia, for ſo in old time they called that Citie which we doe Lutetia, that is, Paris, as it were, The faire B Towre (For ſo thoſe words ſignifie in the Britiſh tongue) peradventure they had aimed neerer unto the marke, than in fetching the one from Lutum, that is, Dyrt, and that other from Lugdus an imagined King. That this Carlile flouriſhed in the time of the Romans, divers tokens of antiquitie now and then digged up there, and the famous mention of it in thoſe daies doe ſufficiently proove. After the furious outrages alſo of the Picts and Scots were allayed, it retained ſome part ſtill of the ancient dignitie and was counted a Citie. For, in the yeere of Chriſt 619, Egfrid King of Northumberland paſſed a gift unto that holy Saint Cuthbert in this forme, I have given unto him alſo the Citie called, Luguballia, and 15. miles round about it. At which time alſo it was walled ſtrong. The Citizens, ſaith Bede, brought Cuthbert to ſee the C walles of their Citie, and a fountaine or well in it, built in times paſt according to the wonderfull workmanſhip of the Romans. Who at the very ſame time as ſaith the booke of Durham, ordained there a Covent of Nunnes, with an Abbeſſe, & Schooles. Afterwards being defaced and brought to exceeding ruin by the Danes, it lay about 200 yeeres buried under his owne aſhes: untill it beganne againe to flouriſh, under the government and fauour of King William Rufus, who repaired it with new edifices, built the Caſtle, and placed a Colonie there firſt of Flemmings (whom ſtreightwaies upon better adviſe hee removed into Wales) but afterwards of Southern Engliſhmen. Then was there ſeene, as William of Malmesburie writeth, a Dining chamber after the D Romane faſhion built of ſtone and arched with vaults, ſo that no ſpitefull force of tempeſts, nor furious flame of fire could ever ſhake or hurt it; In the forefront whereof was this Inſcription MARII VICTORIAE, that is, To the victorie of Marius. This Marius ſome will needs have to be Arviragus the Britan, others, that Marius, who being proclamed Emperor againſt Gallienus, was named to be of wonderfull ſtrength, that as writers report of him, He had in his fingers no vaines but all ſinewes, yet have I learned, that another making mention of this ſtone, ſaith it was not inſcribed MARII VICTORIAE, but MARTI VICTORI, that is, To victorious Mars: which perhaps may better content ſome, and ſeeme, to come neerer unto the truth. * Carlile, being now better peopled and of greater reſort, had, as they write, for Earle, or more truly for Lord thereof, Ralph * Meſchines. From whom came the Earles of Cheſter: and at the ſame E time, being raiſed by King Henrie the Firſt to an Epiſcopall dignity, had Artulph for the firſt Biſhop. Which, the monkes of Durham have written, was preiudiciall to their Church when Ranulph (ſay they) Biſhop of Durham was baniſhed, and the Church had none to defend her, certaine Biſhops laid Carlile and Tividale to their Diœceſes. But, how the Scotiſh under the reigne of Stephen wonne this Citie, and King Henrie the ſecond recovered it: How alſo King Henrie the Third committed the Caſtle of Carlile and the County to Robert Vipont: How likewiſe in the yeere 1292. it was burnt together with the Cathedrall Church and the Suburbs: and how Robert Brus King of Scots, in the yeere 1315. laid ſiege unto it in vaine, you may find in the common F Chronicles. And yet it ſeemes it would quit my paines, to adjoine heere two inſcriptions that I ſaw heere, the one in Thomas Aglionby his houſe neere unto the Citadell, but made in the worſe age.

Lucus and Lugus what they ſignifie among the Britans and old Gauls.

Lugdunum, Lucotecia or Lutetia in France.

The old Itinerarie lately imprinted, ſheweth that Lugdunum implieth, a Deſirable hill.

* Or de Micenis.

DIIS

A

DIIS MANIBV
SMARCI TROIANI
AVGVSTINANI *TVM.FA
CIENDVM CVRAVIT
AFEL. AMMILLVSIMA CONIVX *KARISS.

B

*Tumulum.

*Cariſsima.

Where unto is adjoined the image of a man of Armes on horsbacke armed at all peeces, with a launce in his hand. As for the other; it ſtandeth in the Gardens of Thomas Middleton, in a very large and faire letter thus.

LEG. VI
VIC. P. F.
G. P. R. F.

C

Which is, as I gueſſe, Legio Sexta, Victrix, Pia Felix: the reſt let ſome other decipher.

D

The onely Earle that Carlile had, was Sir Andrew de Harcla, whom King Edward the Second created Earle (that I may ſpeake out of the very originall inſtrument of his Creation) For his laudable & good ſervice performed againſt Thomas Earle of Lancaſter, & other his abetters, in vanquiſhing the Kings enemies and diſloiall Subjects, and in delivering them up into the Kings hands when they were vanquiſhed, girt with a ſword and created Earle under the honour and name of the Earle of Carlile: Who notwitſtanding proved a wretched Traitour himſelfe unthankfull and diſloyally falſe both to his Prince and country: and being afterwards apprehended, was with ſhame and reproch payed duly for the deſert of his perfidious ingratitude, degraded in this maner: firſt by cutting off his ſpurres with an hatchet, afterwards diſgirded of his militarie * Belt: Then diſpoiled of his ſhoes and gantlets, laſt of all and was drawen, hanged, beheaded and quartered.

Andrew Harcla Earle of Carlile.

E

* Or girdle.

As for the poſition of Carlile, the Meridian is diſtant from the utmoſt line of the Weſt 21. degrees and 31. Minutes, and elevation of the North poole 54. degrees and 55. Minutes, and ſo with theſe Encomiaſticall verſes of M.I. Ionſton, I bid Carlile a due.

CARLEOLVM.

Romanis quondam ſtatio tutiſsima ſignis,
Vltimaq; Auſonidum meta, laboſq; Ducum
E ſpecula latè vicinos proſpicit agros,
Hinc ciet & pugnas, arcet & inde metus.
Gens acri ingenio, ſtudijs aſperrima belli.
Doctaque bellaci figere tela manu.

F

Scotorum

A Scotorum Reges quondam tenuere beati;
Nunc iterum priſcis additur imperijs.
Quid? Romane putas extrema hîc limina mundi?
Mundum retrò alium ſurgere nonne vides?
Sit vidiſſe ſatis, docuit nam Scotica virtus
Immenſis animis hîc poſuiſſe modum.

CARLILE.

B Vnto the Roman legions ſometimes the ſureſt Station;
The fartheſt bound and Captaines toile of that victorious Nation.
From proſpect high, farre all abroad it lookes to neighbour fields;
Hence fight and skirmiſh it maintaines, and thence all danger ſhields.
People quicke witted, fierce in field, in martiall feats well ſeene;
Expert likewiſe right skilfully to fight with weapons keene.
Whilom the Kings of Scots it held, whiles their State ſtood upright,
And once againe to ancient crowne it now reverts by right.
What Romaine Cæſar, thinkeſt thou, the world hath heere an end?
And ſeeſt thou not another world behind yet doth extend.
C Well maiſt thou ſee this and no more: for Scotiſh valour taught,
Such hauty minds to gage themſelves, and heere to make defaut.

If you now croſſe over the river Eden, you may ſee hard by the banke, Rowcliffe, a little Caſtle erected not long ſince by the Lords de Dacres. For the defenſe of their Tenants. And above it, the two rivers Eske and leven running jointly together enter at one out-gate into the Solway Frith. As for Eske, he rumbleth downe out of Scotland, and for certaine miles together confeſſeth himſelfe to be within the Engliſh dominion, and entertaineth the river Kirſop: where, the Engliſh and Scotiſh parted aſunder of late not not by waters but by mutuall feare one of another, have made
D paſſing good proofe on both ſides of their great valour and proeſſe. Neere this river Kirſop, where is now ſeene by Nether by a little village with a fewe cotages in it, there are ſuch ſtrange and great ruins of an ancient Citie, and the name of Eske running before it doth ſound ſo neere, that we may imagine ÆSICA ſtood there: wherein the Tribune of the firſt band of the Aſtures kept watch and ward in old time againſt the Northern enemies. But now dwelleth heere the chiefe of the Grayhams family, very famous among the Borderers for their martiall diſpoſition: and in a wall of his houſe, this Roman inſcription is ſet up, in memoriall of Hadrian the Emperour, by the Legion ſurnamed Auguſta Secunda. Grayhams.

E

IMP. CÆS. TR. A.
HADRIANO
AVG.
LEG. II. AVG. F.

F But where the River Lidd and Eske conioine their ſtreames, there was ſometimes, as I haue heard, Liddel Caſtle and the Baronie of the Eſtotevills, who held lands in Cornage; which, Earle Ranulph, as I read, in an old Inquiſition, gave unto Turgill Brundas: But, from Eſtotevill it came hereditarily unto the Wakes, and by them unto the Earles of Kent of the bloud roiall. And Iohn Earle of Kent graunted it unto King Edward the Third, and King Richard the Second unto Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter. Baronie of Liddel. Lideſdale.

ſter. Beyond this river Eske, the land for certaine miles together, is accounted Engliſh ground: wherein Solom Moſſe became very famous, by reaſon eſpecially of ſo many of the Scottiſh nobility taken there priſoners in the yeere 1543: What time as the Scottiſh reſolute to ſet upon Sir Thomas Wharton Lord warden of the Engliſh marches: ſo ſoone as they underſtood that their King had committed the command of the armie to Oliver Sincler (whom they diſdained) they conceived ſuch indignation thereat, that with their owne ſhame and loſſe, breaking their arraies in tumultuous maner they made a generall confuſion of all: which, the Engliſh beholding from the higher ground, forthwith charged violently upon them, and put them to flight: many they toke priſoners, who flinging away their weapons, yeelded themſelues after ſome few ſouldiers on both ſides ſlaine, into the hands of the Engliſh, and of the borderers. Preſently whereupon, James the fifth, King of Scots was ſo diſiected, that weary of his life, he died for very ſorrow. The Land there about is called Batable ground, as one would ſay, Litigious; becauſe the Engliſh and the Scotiſh haue litigiouſly contended about it. For the inhabitants on both ſides as borderers in all other parts, are a military kind of men, nimble, wilie, alwaies in readines for any ſervice, yea & by reaſon of often skirmiſhes paſſing wel experienced. Leven, the other river whereof I ſpake, ſpringing in the limite juſt of both Kingdomes, runneth by no memorable place, unleſſe it be Beucaſtle (as they commonly call it) a Caſtle of the Kings, which ſtanding in a wild and ſolitarie country, hath beene defended onely by a ward of ſouldiours. But this in publicke Records is written Bueth-caſtle, ſo that the name may ſeeme to have come from that Bueth, who about King Henrie the Firſt his daies, after a ſort ruled all in this tract. Certaine it is that in the reigne of Edward the third, it was the Patrimonie of Sir Iohn of Strivelin a Baron, who married the daughter and one of the heires of Adam of Swinborn. In the Church, now much decaied, there is laied for a grave ſtone this old inſcription tranſlated thither from ſome other place.

Battaile at Solom moſſe. 1542.

Batable ground.

Leven.

A B C

LEG. II AVG FECIT

D

In the Churchyard, there is erected a Croſſe about 20. foote high, all of one entier foure ſquare ſtone, very artificially cut and engraven, but the letters are ſo worne and gone, that they cannot be red. But whereas the Croſſe is chequy in that maner as the ſhield of Armes belonging to the family of Vaulx ſometime Lords in this tract we may well thinke that it was erected by them.

E

More into the South, and farther within the country lieth the Baronie of Gilleſland, a little region ſo encombred, by reaſon of ſudden riſing brookes, which they call Gilles, that, I would have deemed, it tooke the name of them; had I not red in a booke belonging to the Abbay of Lanercoſt, that one Gill Fitz-Bueth, who is called alſo Gilbert in a Charter of King Henrie the ſecond, held it as Lord in old time, of whom it is probable this name was rather giuen to it. Through this Gilleſland, the wall of Severus, that moſt famous monument of all Britaine, runneth ſtreight as it were by a line from Carlile Eaſtward, by Stanwickes, a little village, by Scalby caſtle belonging in times paſt to the Tilliols (ſometimes a name in this tract of good worſhip and reputation) from whom it came to the Pickerings: then Cambec a ſmall brooke runneth under the wall: Neere unto which the Barons of Dacre built Askerton caſtle, a little pile, where the governour of Gilleſland, whom they call Land-Sergeant, had a ward. Beneath the wall, it conioineth it ſelfe with the river Irthing, where ſtandeth Irthington the chiefe Manour, as they terme it, of this Baronie of Gilleſland:

Scalby caſtle.

Askerton.

A leſland: And great ruins are heere to be ſeene at Caſtle-ſteed. Neere unto it, is Brampton a little mercate towne, which we ſuppoſe to be BREMETVRACVM, at the very line and range of the wall, for, it is ſcarce a mile from the ſaid wall: where, in times paſt, lay the firſt Band of the Tungri out of Germanie in the declining ſtate of the Roman Empire, and a company of Armaturæ, under the generall of Britaine. Theſe were horſmen armed at all peeces. But whether theſe Armatures were Duplar or Simplar, it is doubtfull. Duplar or Duple Armaturæ they were called in thoſe daies, who had Duble alowances of Corne: Simplar, that had but ſingle. Neither verily muſt I overpaſſe in ſilence, that hard by Brampton, there mounteth up an high hill, fortified
B in the very top with a trench: they call it the Mote; from which there is a faire proſpect every way into the country. Beneath this and by Caſtle-ſteeds, like as at Trederman joining unto it, were found theſe inſcriptions exemplified for me by the hand of the right honorable Lord William Howard of Naworth, third ſonne unto Thomas late Duke of Norfolke, a ſingular lover of venerable antiquity and learned withall, who in theſe parts in right of his wife, a ſiſter and one of the heires of the laſt Lord Dacre, enioieth faire poſſeſſions.

Brampton Brementuracum.

Armaturæ veget lib. 2. cap. 7.

C

D

E

F This ſtone alſo was found there in an old Hotehouſe: wherein by ill fortune the name of the Emperours Lieutenant, and Proprætour of Britaine is worne out.

Neere to Brampton, Gelt a riveret runneth downe, by the banke whereof in a crag called Helbecke, are read theſe antiquities (wherin the words hang not well together) erected as it ſeemeth by a Lieutenant of the ſecond Legion Auguſta, under Agricola the Proprætour: and others beſide which the injurie of time hath enuied us.

*Perhaps, Pro-prætore.

In the ſame rocke theſe words alſo are red, written in a more moderne and newer letter.

OFFICIVM ROMANORVM.

This Gelt, empteth himſelfe into the river Irthing, which with a ſwift and angry ſtreame holdeth his courſe by Naworth Caſtle, belonging unto the Lord William Howard aforeſaid who now repaireth it: but lately to the Barons of Dacre, of whom when the laſt died in his tender yeares, Leonard Dacre his Vnkle, who choſe rather to try the title of inheritance with his Prince by force of armes, than with his neices bywager of law, ſeized into his hands this Caſtle, and levied a band of rebells againſt his Prince: whom, the Lord of Hunſdon with the garizon ſouldiors of Berwick

ſoone

A soone discomfited and put to flight: in which conflict many were slaine, but more ranne away: amongst whom Leonard himselfe escaped. But of him more in my Annales. Neerer unto the wall beyond the river Irthinge, was lately found this faire votiue altare erected to the Goddesse Nymphe of the Brigantes for the health of the Empresse Plautilla wife to M. Aurelius Antoninus Severus, and the whole Imperiall family by M. Cocceius Nigrinus a Treasurer to the Emperour, when Lætus was second time Consull: with intricate connexion of letters which I read thus.

B

DEÆ NYMPHÆ. BRIGantum
QVOD VOVERAT PRO
SALVTE PLAVTILIÆ COningis INVICTÆ DOMini MOSTRI INVICTI
IMP. M. AVRELij SEVERI
ANTONINI PII. FELicis CÆSaris
AVGusti TOTIVSQVE DO
MVS DIVINÆ EIVS
M. COCCEIVS NIGRINVS
Questor AVGusti Numini DEVOTVS
LIBENS SVSCEPTVM Soluit
C LAETO II.-----

In the yeare of Christ 216.

Hereby was the Priorie of Lanercost founded by R. de Vaulx Lord of Gillesland: and hard by the wall, Burd Oswald. Beneath which where that Picts wall passed over the river Irthing by an arched bridge, was the station of the first band Aelia Dacica, or of the Dacians (the place is now named Willoford) which the booke of Notice of Provinces, and many altars bearing inscriptions to Iupiter Optimus Maximus, reared by that Cohort heere doe plentifully proue: Of which I thought good to adde these unto the rest, although time hath almost worne them out.

D

*I. O. M.
COH. I. AEL.
DAC. CVI
PRAE | | | | |
IG | | | | | | |
| | | | | |
E | | | | |

I. O. M.
OH. I. AEL. DA
C.--C.--A. GETA IRELSAVRNES

Iovi optimo Maximo.

I. O. M.
COH. I. AEL
DAC. C. P.
STATVLoN
F GINVS, TRIB.

PRO SALVTE
D. N MAXIMIANO
*FOR-----CAE VA----------

----------OAED

*Fortissimo Cæsari.

A

LEG. VI
VIC. P. F.
F.

B

I. O. M
COHIAEL. DAC TETRICIANORO
----C. P. LVTIC
-----VS. DESIG NATVS TRIB.

I. O. M.
COH. I. AEL.
DAC. GORD.
ANA. C. P----EST

C

I. O. M.
---- H.I. AEL. DAC.
----C. PRAEE SI.---
-----FLIVS FA
-----S TRIB.------
-----PETVO.------
-----COS.

D

Lords of Gillesland. Out of an old Missal. Also R. Cook Clarenceux calleth him Radulph .i. Raulph. So doth Manuscript bookes of Fountaines and Holme.

The first Lord of Gillesland that hitherto I haue read of, was William, Meschines, the brother of Ralph Lord of Cumberland (I meane not that William brother to Ranulph Earle of Chester, from whom came Ranulph de Ruelent, but the brother of Ralph) yet could hee never wrest it wholy out of the Scots hands: for, Gill the sonne of Bueth, held the greatest part of it by force and armes. After his death, King Henry the Second, gaue it to Hubert de Vaulx, or de Vallibus, whose shield of Armes was Chequy Or & Gueles. His sonne Robert founded and endowed the Priorie of Lanercost. But the inheritance after a few yeeres was by marriage translated to the Moltons, and from them by a daughter to Ranulph Lord Dacre, whose line hath flourished unto our daies in very great honour. Having now in some sort surveied the maritime coasts and more inward parts of Cumberland. The side that lieth more Easterly, being leane, hungry, and a wast, remaineth to be viewed: and yet it sheweth nothing but the spring-head of South Tine in a moorish place, and an ancient Romane high way eight els broad, paved with great stone, (commonly called Mayden Way) which leadeth out of Westmorland: and where the riveret Alon, and the aforesaid South Tine meete togither in one chanell, by the side of an hill

E

F

Maiden way.

A hill of gentle descent, there remaine yet the footings of a very great and ancient towne: which was toward the North enclosed within a fourefold rampier, and Westward, with one and on halfe: the name of the place is now Whiteley Castle: and for to testifie the antiquity thereof, there remaineth this imperfect inscription, with letters inserted one in another after a short and compendious manner of writing, wherby we learne that the third Cohort of the Nervians erected there a Temple unto the Emperor Antonine, sonne of Severus.

B
IMP. CAES. Lucij Septimi Seueri Ara-BICI, ADIABENICI, PARTHICI,
MAX. FIL. DIVI ANTONINI Pij Germanici
SARMA. NEP. DIVI ANTONINI PII PRON.
DIVI HADRIANI ABN. DIVI TRAIANI
PARTH. ET DIVI NERVÆ ADNEPOTI.
M. AVRELIO ANTONINO PIO
FEL. AVG. GERMANICO PONT. MAX.
TR. POT --X-- IMP. ---COS. IIII. P. P. ---
PRO PIETATE AEDE--- VOTO--- C COMMVNI CVRANTE---------
---------- LEGATO AVG.
PR----COH. III. NERVIO------- RVM--- G.R.POS.

Whereas therefore, the third Cohort of the Nervij served in this place, which Cohort the booke of Notices in a later time placeth at ALIONE, or as Antonine
D nameth it ALONE, and the little river running underneath is named Alne, if I should thinke this were ALONE, it might seeme rather probable than true, considering the injurie of devouring time, and the furie of enemies haue long agoe outworne these matters out of all remembrance. Alone.

Albeit when the state of the Romane Empire decaied most in Britaine, this Country had beene most grievously harried and spoiled by the Scots and Picts, yet it preserved and kept longe the ancient and naturall inhabitants the Britans, and late it was ere it became subjects to the English Saxons. But when againe the English Saxons state sore shaken by Danish warres ranne to ruine, it had peculiar Governors, called Kings of Cumberland, unto the yeere of our Lord 946. at what time as the Kings of Cumberland.
E Floure-gatherer of Westminster saith, King Edmund by the helpe of Leoline Prince of Southwales, wasted & spoiled all Cumberland, and having put out the eyes of both the sons of Dunmail King of and same province, hee granted that kingdome unto Malcolm King of Scots, to bee holden of him, that hee might defend the North partes of England by land and sea, from the inrodes and invasions of the common enemies. Whereupon the eldest sons of the Kings of Scotland were for a while under the English Saxons and Danes both, called the Præfects, or Deputy Rulers of Cumberland. But when England had yeelded it selfe into the hands of the Normans, this part also became subject unto them: and fell unto the lot of Ralph de Meschines, whose eldest sonne Ranulph, was Lord of Cumberland, and partly in his mother right, and partly by his Princes fa-
F vour togither, Earle also of Chester. But King Stephen, to purchase favour with the Scottes, restored it unto them againe, that they should hold it of him and the Kings of England. Howbeit, K. Henry the second who succeeded after him, perceiving that this over-great liberality of Stephen was prejudiciall both to himselfe & his realme, demanded again of the Scot Northumberland, Cumberland and Westmorland: And the K. of Scots (as Newbrigensis writeth) wisely considering that the King *Florilegus.

Captaines or Rulers of Cumberland.

of England had in those partes both the better right and also greater poure, although hee might haue pretended the oth, which he was said to haue made vnto his grandfather David, what time he was knighted by him: yet restored he the foresaid marches according to his demand fully and wholy, and receiued of him againe the Earledome of Huntingdon, which by ancient right apperteine to him. A Earles of Cumberland.

As for Earles of Cumberland, there were none before the time of King Henry the Eight, who created Henry Lord Clifford (who derived his pedigree from the Lords Vipont) the first Earle of Cumberland: who of Margaret the daughter of Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland begat Henry the second Earle; he by first his wife, daughter to Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolke, had issue Margaret Countesse of Derby: B and by a second wife the daughter of Lord Dacre of Gillesland, two sonnes, George and Francis. George the third Earle a renowned for sea-service, armed with an able bodie to endure travaile, and a valerous minde to undertake dangers, died in the yeere 1605. leaving one onely daughter the Lady Anne now Countesse of Dorset. But his brother Sir Francis Clifford succeeded in the Earledome, a man, whose ardent and honorable affection to vertue is answerable in all points to his honourable parentage.

As for the Wardens of the West-marches anent Scotland in this County, which were Noblemen of especiall trust, I neede to say nothing; when as by the vnion of both kingdoms under one head, that office is now determined. C

This shire reckoneth beside chappels, 58. Parish Churches.

VALLVM.

VALLVM.
SIVE
MVRVS PICTICVS.
That is,
THE PICTS WALL.

THrough the high part of Cumberland, ſhooteth that moſt famous Wall (in no caſe to bee paſſed over in ſilence) the limite of the Roman province, the Barbarian Rampier, the Fore-fence and Encloſure, for ſo, the ancient writers tearmed it, being called in Dion, Διατείχισμα, that is, a Croſſe wall, in Herodian, χῶμα, that is, A Trench or Foſſe, caſt up, by Antonine, Caſſiodore and others VALLVM, that is, the Rampier, by Bede MVRVS, that is, the Wall: by the Britans Gual-Sever, Gal-Sever, Bal, Val and Mur-ſever, by the Scottiſh, Scottiſhwaith, by the Engliſh, and thoſe that dwell thereabout, the Picts Wall or the Pehits Wall, the Keepe wall, and ſimply by way of excellency, The Wall.

Frontier fenſes or Forts, writers termed Cluſuræ becauſe they excluded the enemies, and Prætenturæ, becauſe they were ſet againſt or affront the enemies. See P. Pithœus in Adverſarijs. lib. 1. cap. 14.

When the ambitious and valiant Romans finding, by the guidance of God and aſſiſtance of vertue, their ſucceſſe in all their affaires aboue their wiſhes; had enlarged their Empire every way ſo, as that the very unwealdineſſe thereof beganne now to be of it ſelfe fearefully ſuſpected; Their Emperors thought it their beſt and ſafeſt policy to limite and conteine the ſame within certaine bounds: for, in wiſdome they ſaw, That in all greatneſſe there ought to be a meane, like as the heaven it ſelfe reacheth not beyond the limited compaſſe, and the ſeas are toſſed to and fro within their owne precincts. Now thoſe limites or bounds, according to the natures of the places, were either natural, as the ſea, greater rivers, mountaines, waſts and deſert grounds: or artificiall, as Frontier-fenſes, namely trenches or dykes, caſtles, keeps or fortreſſes, wards mounds and baricadoes by trees cut downe & plaſhed, bankes, rampiers and walles: along which were planted gariſons of ſouldiours againſt the Barbarous nations confining. Whence it is, that we read thus in the Novellæ of Theodoſius the Emperor, Whatſoever lieth included within the powre and regiment of the Romans, is by the appointment and diſpoſe of our anceſtoss defended from the Incurſions of Barbarians with the rampier of a Limit. Along theſe limits or borders, ſouldiors lay gariſoned in time of peace within Frontier-caſtles and cities: but when there was any feare of waſt and ſpoile from bordering nations, ſome of them had their field-ſtations within the Barbarian ground, for defence of the lands: others made out-rodes into the enemies marches to diſcouer how the enemies ſtirred, yea, and if good occaſion were offered, to encounter with them before they came to the Limites.

The Limits or Bounds of the Empire.

Tit. 43. Vallo Limitis.

Hence come ſtationes Agrariæ in Vegetius.

In this Iſland, the Romans when they perceived that the farther parts of Britaine lying North, were cold & a rough barraine ſoile, & inhabited by the Caledonian Britans & Barbarous nations, in ſubduing whereof they were ſure to take much paines, & reape very ſmall profit, built at ſundry times divers fore-fenſes, as well to bound as to defend the province. The firſt of theſe ſeemeth to haue bin made by Iulius Agricola, when hee fortified with holds and garizons that narrow ſpace of ground, that lieth betweene Edenborrough Frith, and Dunbretten Frith, which afterwards was eftſons ſtrengthned.

The firſt Forefenſe.

*Bodotria and Glotta.

When TERMINVS the God of bounds who would not giue place to Iupiter himſelfe was ſo enforced to yeeld to Hadrian the Emperor, that he withdrew the Limite of the Roman Empire in the Eaſt to the river Euphrates, whether for envie to Traians glory

*S. Auſtin de Ciu. Dei. L. 4. c. 19.

The ſecond Fore-fenſe.

glorie under whom the Empire extended fartheſt, or for feare; hee likewiſe with- A drew the limits foureſcore miles or there about within this Iſland to the river Tine and there made the ſecond Fore-fence. Hee, ſaith Spartianus, brought a wall on, for foureſcore miles in length (which ſhould divide the Barbarians and the Romans aſunder) raiſed with great ſtakes or piles pitched deepe in the ground and faſtned togither in manner of a mural or military mound for defenſe, as may be gathered out of that which followeth in Spartianus. And this is that Fore-fenſe wherewith we are now in hand: For, it goeth out in length lxxx. Italian miles. About which were PONS ÆLIVS, CLASSIS ÆLIA, COHORS ÆLIA, ALA SABINIANA, which tooke their names from Aelius Hadrianus and Savina his wife. And that Scottiſh Hiſtoriographer, who wrote B
Rota Temporum. The wheele of Times writeth thus: Hadrian, was the firſt of all that made a rampier or wall of an huge and wonderfull bigneſſe like unto a mountaine, all of turfes digged out of the ground, with a ditch lying to it afronte, from the mouth of Tine unto the river Eske, that is, from the German ſea unto the Iriſh Ocean: which Hector Boetius, accordingly witneſſeth in the ſame words.

The third Fenſe. Lollius Vrbicus, Lieutenant of Britaine under the Emperor Antoninus Pius, by his fortunate fights did enlarge the bounds againe, as farre as to that firſt Frontier fenſe, that was made by Iulius Agricola, and even there raiſed up a third fenſe with a wall. He, ſaith Capitolinus, Vanquiſhed the Britans, and having driven out the Barbarians made another wall of turfes, beyond that of Hadrianus. The honour of which warre happily C diſpatched and finiſhed in Britaine, Fronto, as the Panegyricall Oratour ſaith, aſcribed unto Antonine the Emperor, and hath teſtified, that He, although ſitting ſtill at home in the very palace of Rome, had given charge and commiſſion to another generall for the warre, yet like unto the Pilot of a Galley ſitting at the ſterne, and guiding the helme, deſerved the glorie of the whole voiage and expedition. But, that this Wall of Antoninus Pius, and of his Lieutenant Lollius Vrbicus was in Scotland, ſhalbe proved hereafter.

The fourth Fenſe. When the Caledoniam Britans, whiles Commodus was Emperor, had broken through this wall, Severus neglecting that farre and huge big country, made a fortification croſſe over the Iſland from Solway Frith to Tinmouth, in that very place (if I haue any judgement) where Hadrian made his wall of ſtakes and piles; and of mine opinion is D
Hector Boetius, Severus, ſaith hee, commanded Hadrians wall to bee repaired with Bulwarks of ſtone and Turrets, placed in ſuch convenient diſtance, as that the ſound of a trumpet, though againſt the winde, might be heard from the one unto the other. And in another place. Our Chronicles report, that the wall begunn by Hadrian, was finiſhed by Severus. Alſo Hierom Surita a moſt learned Spaniard, who writeth, That the Fenſe of Hadrian, was extended farther by Sept. Severus with great fortifications, by the name of Vallum. Semblably, Guidus Paucirolus, who affirmeth, that Severus did but reedifie and repaire the Wall of Hadrian, beeing fallne downe. Hee, ſaith Spartianus, fenſed Britaine (which is one of the chiefe actes recorded in his time) by erecting up a wall overthwart the Iſland, to the bound of the Ocean on both ſides the Iſle. Whereupon hee got E the title of BRITANNICVS. After he had driven out the enemies, as ſaith Aurelius Victor, he fenſed Britaine, ſo far forth as it was commodious unto him &c. As alſo Spartianus. Againe, Eutropius, To the end that he might fortifie with all ſafety and ſecurity, the provinces which he had recovered, he made a wall for 35. or rather more truly, 80. miles in length, even from ſea to ſea: That part of the Iſland which hee had recovered, as Oroſius writeth, he thought good to ſever from other vntamed Nations by a rampier or wal. And therefore he caſt a great ditch and raiſed a moſt ſtrong wall, fortified with many turrets for the ſpace of an hundred and twenty two miles, from ſea to ſea, with whom Bede agreeth, who will not willingly here that Severus made a wall; for that he laboreth to proue, that a wall is made of ſtone, and a rampier, named Vallum, of ſtakes or piles that Murus. Vallum. be called Vall, and of turffs (whereas in very truth, Vallum and Murus, that is, a wal, be indifferently uſed one for another) And yet Spartianus called it Murus, that is, a wall and ſhould ſeeme to ſhew, that hee made both a wall and a trench, by theſe words Poſt murum apud vallum in Britania miſſum &c.

Howbeit wee gather out of Bede, that the ſaid Vallum or Rampier, was nothing

A thing elſe but a wall of turffes: and no man can truly ſay, that the wall of Severus was built of ſtone. But haue heere the very words of Bede himſelfe, Severus having gotten the victorie in civill warres at home, which had fallen out to be very dangerous, was drawen into Britaine upon generall revolt almoſt of all the allies there. Where, after great and ſore battailes many times fought, when he had regained part of the Iland, he thought good to have the ſame divided from other wild and untamed nations, not with a wall, as ſome thinke, but with a rampier. For, a wall is made of ſtone: But a rampier whereby Camps are fortified to repell the force of enimies, is made of Turffes cut out of the earth round about, but raiſed high in maner of a wall above ground: ſo, that there be a ditch or trench affront it, where out the turffes were gotten: upon which are B pitched piles of very ſtrong timber. And ſo Severus caſt a great ditch, and raiſed a moſt ſtrong rampier ſtrengthend with many turrets thereupon, from ſea to ſea. Neither is it knowen by any other name in Antonine, or the Notice of Provinces, than by Vallum, that is, a Rampire, and is in the Britiſh tongue tearmed Guall-Sever. Heereto wee may annex the authority alſo of Ethelward our ancienſt writer next unto Bede, who as touching Severus, hath theſe words. He did caſt a ditch or trench croſſe over the Iland, from ſea to ſea; within it alſo he built a wall with turrets and bulwarkes. Which afterwards hee calleth Foſſam Severiam, that is, Severs foſſe or ditch: like as we read in the moſt ancient Annales of the Engliſh-Saxons, Seuerus Bryttenland miſ bicode

C ȳrſ. ȝeard fram ſæ oð ſæ, that is, Severus foregirded and fenſed Britain with a ditch from ſea to ſea. And other later writers in this wiſe, Seuerus on Bryttene ȝeworhte weal of turfum ȝeard fram ſæ to ſæ, that is, Severus in Britaine made and finiſhed a wall of turffes or a rampier from ſea to ſea. William of Malmesburie likwiſe nameth it a famous and moſt notorious trench. In which very place, two hundred yeeres after or much there about, a wall of ſtone was ſet up, whereof I am to ſpeake anone.

Whereas Eutropius hath ſet downe the length of it to be 35. miles, Victor 32. and other Authors 132. I ſuppoſe ſome faults have crept into the numbers. For the Iland is not ſo broad in that place, although a man ſhould take the the meaſure of the wall as it ſtood winding in and out, riſing alſo and falling heere and there: Nay, if one

D ſhould reduce it into Italian miles he ſhould find little above foureſkore, as Spartianus hath truly reckoned them. Some fewe yeeres after, this Munition, as it ſeemes, was forlet. Howbeit, when Alexander Severus the Emperour, as we read in Lampridius, had once given unto the Capitaines, & ſouldiors of the marches, thoſe grounds and lands which were wonne from the enimies, ſo that they ſhould be there proprietie, if their heires ſerved as ſouldiers, and that they ſhould never returne to any private men; ſuppoſing they would goe to the warres more willingly, and take the better care, if they ſhould defend their owne peculiar poſſeſſions. Note theſe words well, I pray you: for hence may be deduced either a kinde of Feudum, or the beginning of Feuds. After this the Romans marching beyond the wall, and building themſelves Stations within the

E out-land and Barbarian ſoile, fortifying alſo and furniſhing them accordingly, enlarged the limits of the Roman Empire againe, as far as to Eden borough Frith. Nevertheleſſe the ſavage and barbarous people, never ceaſing to aſſaile them upon advantges, drave them backe now and then, as far as to Severus Trench.

Diocletian the Emperour had a provident eie to theſe limits, under whom when as the whole commaund in Britaine was committed unto Carauſius, for that he was reputed the fitter man to warre againſt theſe warlike nations, he did ſet up againe the Fore-fenſe betweene Dumbritton Frith & Edenborrow-Frith, as I will ſhew in place covenient. The firſt that ever had blame for neglecting theſe limites was Conſtantine the great. For, thus writeth Zoſimus. Whereas the Roman Empire by the providence of Diocletian was in the utmoſt marches thereof every where ſurely fenſed, with

F towns, Caſtles and Burghs; and all their military companies made their abode in them, it was impoſſible for the barbarous nations to paſſe in, but they were ſo met with all at every turne by forces there ſet to repell them backe. Conſtantine aboliſhing this munition of Gariſons, placed the greater part of the ſouldiers, whom hee had removed from out of the marches, in townes that had no neede of gariſons and defenſe. So hee

Why lands were given to the Captaines of the Marches.

Lib. 1. c. 5.

left the marches open to the inrodes of Barbarous nations, without garisons, and pestered the Cities that were at peace and quiet with a sort of souldiers, wherby most of them are now already become desolate, and the souldiers themselves addicted to Theatricall sports and pleasures grew by his meanes deboshed: To conclude, and simply to speake in one word, he it was that gave the first cause and beginning, that the state of the Empire runneth to wrecke and ruin. A Marcellinus lib. 38. About the yeere 367.

The country that lay betweene these Enclosures or fore-fenses. Theodosius father unto Theodosius the Emperour recovered: He reedified and repaired the cities; strengthned the garison castles, and the limits with such watch, and ward, and fortifications, yea and when hee had recovered the province, restored it to the ancient estate, in such wise, as that it had a lawfull Governour by it selfe, and was afterward in honour of Valentinian the Emperour called VALENTIA. Theodosius also his sonne having now by his owne vertue attained unto the imperiall maiestie, had a provident care of these limits, & gave commandement, that the * Maister of the Offices, should yeere by yeere give advise and advertisement unto the Emperour, how all things went with the souldiers, and in what sort the charge of Castles, holds, and forefenses was performed. But when the Roman Empire beganne once to decay apparently, and the Picts together with the Scots, breaking through the wall of Turffes by Edenborrow-frith, cruelly wasted and overranne these parts; the Roman legion sent to aide the Britans under the leading of Gallio of Ravenna, after they had driven away and quite removed the Barbarians, being now called backe againe for the defense of France, exhorted the Britans (these be the very words of Gildas and Bede) to make a wall overthwart the Iland betweene the two seas, which might serve for a defence to keepe of the enimies: and so returned home with great triumph. But the Ilanders fall to building of a wall as they were willed, not so much with stone as with turffes, considering they had no workman to bring up so great a peece of worke, and so they did set up one good for nothing. Which, as Gildas saith, being made by the rude and unskilfull common multitude, without any one to give direction, not so much of stone as of turffe, served them in no steed. As touching the place where this wall was made, Bede proceedeth to write in this maner. They raised it betweene the two Friths, or Armes of the sea, for the space of many miles, that where the fense of water failed, there by the helpe of a rampier they might defend the borders from the invasion of enimies. And such a forefense, reaching a great length secured Assyria from the inrodes of foraine nations, as Ammianus Marcellinus writeth. And the Seres at this day, as we read in Osorius, fortifie their vales and plaine champion with walles, that they might therby shelter and defend themselves from the violent incursions of the Scithians. Of which worke there made, saith Bede) that is to say, of a most broad and high rampier, a man may see the expresse and certaine remaines to this day. Which beginneth, almost two miles from a Monasterie called Abercurning, Eastward, at a place named in the Picts language Pennahel, in the English tongue Penueltun, and reaching Westward, endeth neere the Citie Alclaid. But the former enimies, no sooner perceived that the Roman souldiers were returned, but presently sailing thither by water, breake through the bounds into the marches, kill and slay all before them, and what ever stood in their way, they went downe with it, under foote they over-trample it, as if it had bin standing corn ready for harvest. Wherupō Embassadors were dispatched againe to Rome, making piteous mone, and with teares craving aide, that their miserable country might not utterly be destroyed, nor the name of a Roman province, which had so long time flourished among them wax contemptible, being now overwhelmed with the outrage of strange nations. Heerevpon a Legion was sent over, which being arrived unlooked for toward Winter, made great slaughter of the enimies: as for the rest that were able to shift away and escape, they drave beyond the seas, who before time made it a practise every yeere, while no souldiers made head against them, to passe over the said seas, and raise booties. Now by this time, the Romaines were retyred backe unto the wall or Rampier of Seuerus, & Perlineam Valli (as the booke of Notices tearmeth it which was written toward the latter end of Theodosius the younger his reigne) that is on both sides as well within as without the wall, they kept a standing watch and ward

B

C

D

E

F

* Magister Officiorum.

The wall betweene Edenborrough Frith and Dunbritton Frith.

About the yeere of Christ 420.

Alciatus calleth it the Breviary of Theodosius.

in

A in their ſeverall Stations appointed, namely five wings of Horſemen with their Captaines; 15. Cohorts of foote men with their Colonels: one band, and likewiſe one ſquadron. Which I have mentioned and will againe in due place. As touching the time immediatly enſuing, Bede goeth forward to relate in theſe words. Then the Romans denounced unto the Britans, that they could endure no longer to be out toyled and wearied with ſuch painfull voiages and expeditions for defenſe of them, adviſing them to take weapon in hand themſelves, and endeavour to fight with the enimie, who could not by any meanes be ſtronger than they, unleſſe themſelves would giue way to idleneſſe and become feeble therewith: Moreover the Romans, becauſe they thought this alſo might ſerve their allies in ſome ſteed, whom they were forced to leave, placed a wall of ſtrong B ſtone from ſea to ſea, directly betweene the cities, which had beene built there for feare of the enimies (where, Severus alſo in times paſt had made a rampier) Heere will I alſo put downe the words of Gildas, from whom Bede borrowed all this. The Romans directly levell a wall after their uſuall maner of building, not like unto the other, at the common and priuate charges, adjoining unto them the poore and miſerable naturall home borne inhabitants, from ſea to ſea betwixt the Cities, which chaunced to have beene placed there for feare of the enimies. And now heare what Bede ſaith againe: Which wall, that hath beene hetherto famous and conſpicuous, they with publicke and priuate coſt, having with them the Britans helping hand alſo, built eight foote broad and twelve foote high, in a direct line from Eaſt forward to Weſt, as is evident even at this day to the beholders. Out C of which words of Bede you may ſee that a great learned man, whiles he thinketh to hit the birde in the eie, hath miſſed the marke, ſtreining and ſtriving mightily to prove againſt Boetius and other Scottiſh writers, that Severus his wall of Turffe, was in Scotland. Doth not Bede write in plaine tearmes, after he had ſpoken of the Earth-wall, at Abercurning in Scotland, that a wall was reared of ſtrong ſtone where Severus had made his of turfe? and where I pray is that wall of ſtone but in this place, betweene Tine-mouth and Solwey frith? where was then that wall of Severus? As for the wall, there are yet ſuch expreſſe tokens of it in this place, that you may tracke it as it were all the way it went: and in * the Waſts, as they tearme them, I my ſelfe have beheld with my owne eies on either ſide, huge peeces thereof ſtanding for a great way together, onely wanting their battlements.

Soldiours placed in gariſons and along the wall.

* In Waſtis. The waſts.

D Verily I have ſeene the tract of it over the high pitches and ſteepe deſcents of hilles, wonderfully riſing and falling: and where the fields lie more plaine and open, a broad and deepe ditch without, juſt before it, which now in many places is grounded up: and within a banke or militarie highway, but in moſt places interrupted. It had many towres or fortreſſes about a mile diſtant from another, which they call Caſtle ſteeds; and more within, little fenſed townes tearmed in theſe daies Cheſters, the plots or ground workes whereof are to be ſeene in ſome places foure ſquare: alſo turrets ſtanding betweene theſe, wherein ſouldiers being placed might diſcover the enimies, and be ready to ſet upon them: wherein alſo the Areani might have E their Stations, whom the foreſaid Theodoſius, after they were convicted of falſhood diſplaced and removed from their Stations. Theſe Areani (as Marcellinus ſaith) were a kind of men ordained in old time, whoſe office it was, to runne a great way to and fro from place to place to intimate or give intelligence unto our Leaders; what ſturre and noiſe there was abroad among the neighbour nations. So that the firſt founders of this wall, may ſeeme to have beene directed by his counſell, who wrote unto Theodoſius and his ſonnes, as touching Military affaires in this maner. Among the commodities of State and Weale publicke, right behouefull is the care concerning the Limits, which in all places doe gard and encloſe the ſides of the Empire: The defenſe wherof, may be beſt aſſured by certain caſtles built neare together; ſo that they be erected with a ſteedy wall and ſtrong F towres a mile aſunder one from another: Which munitions verily the Land-lords ought to arreare without the publicke charge by a diſtribution of that care among themſelves, for to keepe watch and ward in them and in the field forefenſes, that the peace and quiet of the Provinces being garded round about therewith, as with a girdle of defenſe, may reſt ſafe and ſecure from hurt and harme.

Areani, certaine diſcoverers lib. 28.

The

The dwellers heereabout talke much of a brasen trunke (whereof they found peeces now and then) that set and fitted in the wall artificially, ranne betweene every Fortresse, and Towre, so, as that if any one in what towre soever conveied the watchward into it, the sound would have beene carried streightwaies without any stay to the next, then to the third, and so to them all one after another, and all to signifie at what place the assault of the enimie was feared. The like miraculous devise of the Towres in Bizantium, Xiphiline relateth out of Dion in the life of Severus. But since the wall now lies along, & no pipe remaineth there, many tenants hold farmes and lands of our Kings heere round about, in Cornage, as our Lawyers speake, that is, that they should give knowledge unto their neighbours of the enimies approaching by winding of an horne: which some thinke had the first originall, from an ancient custome of the Romans: who also were bound to goe by the Kings Precept in the army and service for Scotland (These be the words of the Records) as they marched forth in the Vantward; as they returned home, in the Rereward.

Cornage.

But that I may follow the tract of this wall more directly in particular, it beginneth at the Irish sea, hard by BLATVM-BVLGIVM or Bulnesse, and goeth on along the side of Solwey frith, and so by Burgh upon sands unto LVGVVALLVM or Carlile, where it passeth over Eden. From thence it runneth forth, and hath the river Irthing beneath it, crossing over Camberke a little brooke running crooked with many turnings in and out, where are great tokens to be seene of a fortification. After this having cut over the rivers Irthing and Poltrosse, it entreth into Northumberland, and among the mountaines hudled together, goeth along by the side of the river which they call South-Tine, without any interruption (save only that it is divided by North-Tine, wherein ancient times there was a bridge over it) as farre as to the German Ocean: as I will shew in due place, when I am come once into Northumberland.

Yet this admirable worke could not avert and keepe out the tempestuous stormes of forraine enimies: But when the Roman armies were retired out of Britaine, the Picts and Scots assaulting the wall upon the sudden with their engins and hooked weapons, pluckt and puld downe the garison souldiers, brake through the fense, and overranne Britaine farre and neere, being then disarmed, and shaken with civill broiles, and most miserably afflicted with extreame famin. But the most wofull and lamentable miserie of these heavie times, Gildas a Britan, who lived not long after, pensilleth out lively in these words. As the Romans were returning homeward, there appeere striving who could come first, out of their Caroches in which they had passed over the vale Stitica, like unto duskish swarmes of wormes comming forth of their little caves with most narrow holes at noone day in summer, and when the heat of the sunne is at the highest, a rabble of Scots and Picts, in maners partly different, but in one and the same greedy designe of bloudshed. And having knowledge once that our friends and associates were retired home, & had denied ever to returne againe, they with greater confidence and boldnesse than before time, attempt to possesse themselves of all the North side, and the utmost part of the land from out of the Inlanders hands, as farre as to the very wall. Against these invasions, there stands placed on high in a Keepe, a lasie crew unable to fight, unfit (God he knowes) for service, trembling and quaking at the heart, which night and day sat still as benummed, and sturred not abroad. Meane while the hooked engines of their naked and bareshanked enimies cease not, wherewith the most miserable inhabitants, were plucked downe from the walles and dashed against the hard ground. This good yet did such an untimely death, unto those that thus lost their lives, that by so quicke a dispatch & end, they were freed from the view of most piteous paines & imminent afflictions of their brethren and children. What should I say more? when they had left the cities and high wall, they were againe driven to flie and hide themselves; and being thus dispersed, in more desperate case they were than they had bin before. The enimies likwise presse stil sorer upon them, and semblably hasten bloudy carnage and slaughters one in the necke of another. And even as lambs are torne in peeces by butchers, so are these lamentable inhabitants by the enimies; insomuch as their aboad and continuance together, might be well compared to wild beasts. For, both they preyed one upon another, and by robbing also forbare not the*

The highland Scots at this day call their little barges Carroches.

* The Paris edition hath Scytica Vallem, and meaneth happly, the Scottish sea.

A the ſhort pittance of food that the poorer ſort of the inhabitants had for their owne ſmall ſuſtentation: and alſo theſe outward calamities were encreaſed with domeſticall commotions, ſo that by reaſon of ſo great robbing, pilling and ſpoiling, the whole country wanted the ſtay of all kind of food, ſave onely that, which they gat by hunting to comfort their poore pining bodies.

But this is worth the obſervation, that as by the wiſdome of the Romans this wall was ſo built, that it had two very great rivers neere to it on the inner ſide (as it were) for another defenſe, namely Tine and Irthing, that are divided one from the other with a very narrow parcell of ground: So on the other ſide the Barbarous people B were ſo cunning, that in the ſame place eſpecially they made their firſt entrance betwixt theſe rivers where they might have free paſſage farther into the heart of the province without hinderance of any river: according as we will ſhew by and by in Northumberland. The fabulous tales of the common people concerning this wall I doe wittingly and willingly overpaſſe. Yet, this one thing which I was enformed of by men of good credite I will not conceale from the reader. There continueth a ſetled perſwaſion among a great part of the people there about, and the ſame received by tradition: that the Roman ſouldiers of the marches did plant heere every where in old time for their uſe, certaine medicinable herbes for to cure wounds: whence it is that ſome Empiricke practitioners of Chirurgery in Scotland, flocke hither every C yeere in the beginning of ſummer to gather ſuch Simples and wound herbes, the vertue whereof they highly commend as found by long experience, and to be of ſingular efficacie.

The policie and wiſdome of the Romans in ſetting of this wall.

Plants medicinable and wholſome.

D

E

F

OTTADINI.

After the Brigantes, Ptolomee placeth those who according to the divers readings in Copies are called OTTALINI, OTTADENI and OTTADINI: Instead of all which names, I would, if I durst presume so far, with a very easie alteration, substitute OTTATINI that it might signifie, On the farther side of, or above the river Tine. And so verily would the name of the Inhabitants be consonaut with the position and site of the country. For, these are planted beyond Tine. And the Welsh-Britans at this day call a country in Wales beyond the river Conwey, Vch Conwey: beyond the hilles, Vchmynith: beyond the wood, Vch-Coed: beyond the river Gwirway, Vch-Gwyrway. Neither can it be, I assure you, altogether absurd, if after the same maner they termed this country beyond Tine, Vch Tin: whence the Romans may seeme to have framed this name OTTADINI, by a word somewhat distointed, but more smooth and pleasanter to the eare. And whereas, Xiphilinus reporteth out of Dio, that all the Britans that dwelt neere unto the wall, which we spake of even now, were called Μαιάτας or MAEATAE, good reason it is that we should think these our Ottadini dwelling by the said wall, were among those Mæatæ, who in that memorable revolt and rebellion of the Britans, called in the Caledonians to assist them and take armes with them. At which time Severus the Emperour commaunded his souldiers peremtorilie to kill all the Britans, using these verses of Homer.

MAEATAE.

Μὴ τις ὑπεκφυγέῃσι αἰὴν ὀλέθρου
Χεῖρας ὑπαὶ δηϊοτῆτος, μηδ' ὃν πινα γαστέρι μήτηρ
Κοῦρον ἐόντα φέροι, μηδ' ὃς φυγοι αἰπὺν ὀλεθρον.

Let none skape cruell death,
Nor dint of sword: no not the child unborne
In mothers wombe that lies: his death is sworne.

But the tempestuous storme of this rebellion was caulmed by the death of Severus, who in his very præparation for warre died at Yorke.

Long

A Long after, this Country seemeth to haue beene a part of VALENTIA. For so Theodosius called it in honour of Valentinian the Emperour, after hee had subdued the barbarous people, and recovered this tract or Province which before had beene lost. Valentia.

But these ancient names were quite worne out of use in the English Saxon warre, and all the Countries lying North on the other side of the Arme of the sea called Humber, beganne by a Saxon name to bee called Noppan-humbpa-pic, that B is, The Kingdome of Northumberland: which name notwithstanding, beeing now cleane gone in the rest of the Shires, remaineth still, as it were, surviving, in Northumberland onely. Which when that state or kingdome stood, was knowne to bee a part of the Kingdome of Bernicia which had peculiar pettie Kings, and reached from the river Tees to Eden-borough Frith.

C

D

E

F

SCO=

TIÆ

PARS

CVM=

BERLAN=

DIÆ

PARS

Lammerton Merdington
Whitwiter flu:
Halliden hill
Foulden Carrums
Paxton Herndon
Dunse
Hilton Horde Ladykirk
Norham east Eminotshiles
Newhouses
Grotchugh Fallington
Barrington Tylmouth
Hume east
Barmere Caldstreame
Heaton Spyland Cornwale
Ford east Longbridgham
Warke east
Flodon hill
Rydan Learmouth Downham
Newlett Holefeld
Gilam Padston Anerchester
Newtell Graden
Yatton
Tiwide flu:
Middleton hall
Yeverin hill
Whispire hill
Cheuet hill
The banning stone
The Coklaw hill
Meadon croste
The blak brea
Rembles peth hill
Aum Gnd hill
The red squire
The carter
Bobbes croste
Cheuet flu
Whit side Elvhaue Cleuch
Ridland flu
Walk lawe
Chedep burne Bushop BREMENIUM
DALE REDES Rochester Saules Burtreberne
Greneches ter Ottorburne
The whole fell Maidburne Troughwhen
The old town
Collinhead Croesus
Snepe
Great hanah
Leame Rinsyham
Sweale Blakkalaw Chalkhill Tarset Greenstead
Rudland Dunterley Dalcots Whitchester
Bellesley
Carchouse
Burtley Shildinton
Christenbury cragg
The gale cragg
The horsse head
The watery gate
Rutchester
Gunner Rosebourne Katherinton Simonburne
Carraw burne
Tyne flu
Bew east Grendlesike
Busy coap Haydon
Bradley hall Chesterwood
Black hall
Stone hall
Halton
Halton fell Aderiche
Ouer Langley
Nether Langley
Dunkegull
Plumsford Harsmside Oxenton
Blanchenser castle
Leucros
Tyne flu Hexham
Allens grange Wilton
Ballester east
Pennyghe
Old Rowne
Nauerth east
Fethe stenkaugh
Whitfeld
Caldsh
Todburnsod
Munk Allinton Wintelraw
Whitfeld hall
Cuneystads
Ridlington
Conewood chap
Elles Permandale Newsyde Knaresdale
William stone
Thornbsyde Hawcopse Sparrell
Kirkhaugh
Mowap Whitlaton
Austen more Wetley shes
Gilsdale
Tyne flu
Wall flu
Lyne flu
Lyddesdale head
Rutter haugh
Rhosses fell Kirkley fell
Kirkop flu
Kirkop flu
Tyne head Bellark
Tyne flu
Tyne flu
Tyne flu

OCEA:

NORTH-VMBRIÆ Comitatus OTADINORVM olim sedes

NUS

Holy Iland
Ferne Ilands
The staples
Ferne Iland
Bamburgh cast
Elford Newham
Sunderland
Newton
Dustaburgh cast:
Dunston
Warmouth
Newton house
ALAVNOSTIVM
Alnwick Wooden
The spittle Anbell
Coket Iland
Durrich Newbiggin
Seaton
Blithes newke
Hartley
Tynmouth cast:
TVNNOCELLVM
Tynmouth haven
Shotton Shiels
Morpeth
Newcastle
Whickborne Werremouth VEDRÆ fl:
ostium
Scala Milliarium
1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10
Christophorus Saxton descrip:
Gulielmus Hole sculpsit

DVNEL-MENSIS EPISCOPATVS
PARS

A

NORTH-HVMBER-LAND.

Orth-umber-land, which the Engliſh Saxons called Noꝛþan-humbeꝛ-lono lieth after a ſort encloſed in faſhion of a Triangle, but not with equall ſides. The South-ſide is ſhut in with Derwent running into Tine, and with Tine it ſelfe, where it butteth upon the Biſhopricke of B Durham. The Eaſtſide the German ſea lieth & beateth upon it. But the Weſt ſide which reacheth out from South-weſt to North-eaſt, is firſt parted from Cumber-land afterward with Cheviot and hills linked one to another, & laſtly with the river Twede, it affronteth Scotland, and ſo was the limit of both kingdomes: over which were ſet in this County two governors: the one called L. Warden of the Midle Marches, the other of the Eaſt marches. The ground it ſelfe for the moſt part rough, & hard to be manured, ſeemeth to haue hardened the inhabitants, whom the Scots their neighbours alſo made more feirce and hardy, while ſome-
C times they keepe them exerciſed in warres, and other whiles in time of peace intermingle their manners among them, ſo that by theſe meanes they are a moſt warlike nation, & excellent good light horſemen. And wheras they addicted themſelues as it were wholy to Mars and Armes, there is not a man amongſt them of the better ſort, that hath not his little towre or pile: and ſo it was divided it was into a number of Baronies: the Lords whereof in times paſt before King Edward the Firſt his daies went commonly under the name Barons, although ſome of them were of no great living. But a wiſe and politicke deviſe this was of our Anceſtours, to cheriſh and maintaine martiall proeſſe among them in the marches of the kingdome, if it were nothing elſe, but with an honorable bare title. Howbeit this title came to nothing among D them, what time as under King Edward the Firſt, thoſe onely beganne to enjoie the name and honor of Barons, whom the Kings ſummoned unto the high Court of Parliament by ſpeciall ſummons. Toward the ſea and Tine, by diligence and good huſbandry, it becommeth very fruitfull; but elſe where it is more barraine, rough and as it were un-manurable. And in many places, thoſe ſtones Lithanthraces, which wee call Sea coles, are digged up in great plenty to the great gaine of the inhabitants, and commodity of others.

Wardens of the Marches.

Rank-riders.

Very many Baronies in Northumberland.

Sea-coles.

The hithermore part bending toward the South-weſt, and called Hexam ſhire, acknowledged a long time the Archbiſhop of Yorke for the Lord thereof, and challenged unto it ſelfe, by what right I know not, the priviledge of a County Palatine:
E But after it became of late annexed unto the crowne land, upon an exchange made with Robert the Archbiſhop, by authority of Parliament it was laied unto the County of Northumberland, that it ſhould bee ſubject to the ſame iuriſdiction, and in all cauſes haue recourſe to the high Sherife thereof.

Hexam ſhire.

South Tine (a river ſo called if wee may beleeue our Britans, for that by reaſon of his narrow bankes hee is ſtreight pent in, for ſo ſignifieth Tin, as they ſay, in the Britiſh tongue) having his ſpring-head in Cumberland neere unto Alſten-more, where there was an ancient coper mine, holding on his courſe by Lambley, ſometime a Nunnerie built by the Lucies, and now with flouds for the moſt part undermined and fallen downe: alſo by Fetherſton-Haugh the ſeat of the ancient and wel-deſcended family of Fetherſton, when hee is come as farre as Belliſter Caſtle, turning Eaſtward
F runneth directly forward with the WALL, which is in no place three miles diſtant from it toward the North.

The river South-Tine.

For, the Wall having left Cumberland behind it, and croſſed over the Irthing, paſſed likewiſe with an arch over the ſwift riveret Poltroſſe, where I ſaw within the wall high mounts of earth caſt up, as it were, to over looke and diſcover the country. Nere this ſtandeth Thirl-wale Caſtle, which is not great but ſtrongly built, yet it gaue both habitation and ſurname, to the ancient and noble familie, which was firſt called Wade: where the Picts and Scottiſh made their paſſage into the Province betweene Irthing and Tine (and that verily upon good forecaſt) in that place where they had free entrance by reaſon of no river in their way, into the in more partes of England. But you ſhall better underſtand this; and the name of the place out of Iohn Fordon the Scottiſh Hiſtorian, whoſe words it will not bee amiſſe, as I thinke, to ſet downe here, becauſe the booke is not every where to bee had. The Scottes (ſaith hee) when by conqueſt they had gotten the poſſeſſion of thoſe Countries, which are on this ſide the Wall, toward Scotland, beganne to inhabite them; and having of a ſodaine raiſed a ſort of the Country people, with their mattockes, pickaxes, rakes, three tined forkes and ſpades, make wide gappes and a number of holes in it, by which breaches they might paſſe in and out readilie at their pleaſure. Of thoſe holes therefore, this mound of the wall afterward tooke the name Thirlwall, which it hath at this day in this place; for in the Engliſh tongue that very place is called Thirlwall, which is as much as a wall pierced through. Then ſawe we Blenkenſop, which gaue name unto a generous family, as alſo their habitation in a right pleaſant country Southward: which was part of the Baronie of Sir Nicholas of Bolteby, a Baron of renowne in the time of King Edward the Firſt.

Ioh. Fordon. Scoto. Chronicon.

When you are paſt Thirlwall, the ſaid wall openeth it ſelfe unto the raging river Tippall, where in the deſcent of an hill, a little within the wall, is to bee ſeene the ground worke of a caſtle of the Romans in forme foure ſquare, every ſide whereof taketh an hundred and fortie paces. The very foundations likewiſe of houſes and trackes of ſtreetes appeere ſtill moſt evidently to the beholders. The Rank-riders, or taking men of the borders doe report, that a great port-way paved with flint and bigge ſtone led from hence through waſtes unto Maiden Caſtle in Stanemore: Certes, it paſſed directly to Kirkby Thor, whereof I ſpake. A poore old woman that dwelt in a little poore cottage hard by, ſhewed unto us an ancient little altar-ſtone in teſtimonie of ſome vow, with this inſcription unto VITIRINEVS, a tutelar God, as it ſeemed of the place.

Caer Vorran.

D EO
V I T I
R I N E--- ---L I M E O R O V
*P. L. M.

Poſuit libens merito.

This place is now named Caer Vorran: what it was in old time, it paſſeth my wit to finde out, ſeeing that amongſt all the ſtations mentioned along the range of the Wall, there is not one commeth neere unto it in name; neither haue wee any light out of inſcriptions to lead us thereunto. What ever it was, ſure the wall thereby was both ſtrongeſt and higheſt by farre: for, ſcarce a furlong or two from hence, upon a good high hill, there remaineth as yet ſome of it to bee ſeene fifteene foot high and nine foote thicke, built on both ſides with foure ſquare aſhler ſtone, although Bede reporteth it was not aboue twelue foot in higth.

From hence the wall goeth forward more a ſlope, by Iuerton, Forſten, and Cheſter in the Wall, neere to Buſy-Gapp a place infamous for theeving and robbing: where ſtood ſome caſtles, Cheſters they call them, as I haue heard (but I could not with ſafety take the full ſurvey of it, for the ranke robbers there about) As for Cheſter, the

A the neighbors told us that it was a very great building, ſo that wee may well thinke it to haue been that Second ſtation of the Dalmatians, which is called in the old booke of Notice, MAGNA, where this inſcription was found upon an ancient altar.

PRO SALVTE
DESIDIENI Æ
---LIANI PRÆ
B ET SVA. S.
POSVIT VOT
---AO SOLVIT LIBE
NS. TVSCO ET BAS
SO COSS.

Anno Chriſt. 259.

C This broken and unperfect altar likewiſe brought from thence, wee read at Melkrig, where now women beat their buckes on it.

DEAE SVRI
Æ SVB CALP
VRNIO AG------
ICOLA. LEG. AVG
PR. PR. A. LICINIVS
---LEMENS PRAEF
D ---III. A. IOR------

These two inſcriptions are yet to bee ſeene in Sir Robert Cottons houſe at Connington.

Which if I were able to read, thus would I willingly read it, and the draught of the letters maketh well for it. Deæ Suriæ, ſub Calphurnió Agricola Legato Auguſti, Propratore Licinius Clemens Præfectus, that is, Vnto the Goddeſſe Suria, vnder Calphurnius Agricola Lieutenant of Auguſtus and Proprator, Licinius Clemens the Captaine. This Calphurnius Agricola was ſent by Antoninus Philoſophus againſt the Britans, what time as there was likely to be warre in Britaine, about the yeere of Chriſt 170.

The Goddeſſe Suria.

Capitolinus. Some will haue her to be Iuno, others Venus.

E At which time, ſome Cohort under his command erected this altar unto THE GODDESSE SVRIA, whom with a turreted crowne on her head, and a Tabber in her hand, was ſet in a coach drawn with Lions, as Lucian ſheweth at large in his Narration of the Goddeſſe Suria. Which Goddeſſe alſo Nero, albeit hee contemned all religion, eſpecially worſhipped for a time; and ſoone after ſo aviled and deſpiſed, that hee defiled her with his urine.

Suetonius in Nero. cap. 56.

From hence we ſaw Willymoteſ-wicke, the ſeat of a reſpected familie of the Ridleies; and hard by it the river Alon, running with a ſurging ſtreame and riſe of waters into Tine, namely when both the Alons are met togither in one chanell. By the Alon river.

F Eaſterne of the two Alons, there is to bee ſeene a towne, now called Old-towne, but what the old name was, will not eaſily bee found. Now to the wall againe. The next ſtation upon the wall, beyond Buſye-gap is called Seaven-ſhale: the name wherof if any man would thinke with me, to come from the wing Saviniana or Sabiniana, I might the more confidently ſay, that it was that HVNNVM, where the Notice of Provinces reporteth the wing Sabiniana kept watch and ward.

Seaven-ſhale.

Gallana. Then, beyond Carraw and Walton, ſtands Walwick, which ſome coniecturally would haue to be GALLANA in Antonine: in all which places there be evident remaines of old fortifications. A

North-Tine. Here there runneth through the wall North Tine, which being now come downe a maine out of the mountaines in the marches of England and Scotland, firſt as hee

Tin-dale. paſſeth Eaſtward, watereth Tindale, a place taking the name of him, and in the end receiving into his boſome the river Rhead, which ſpringing out of Readſquire, a ſteepe

True plane. mountaine, where often times was the True-place, that is, a place of parly and conference for the Eaſt marches (for, the L L. Wardens of the Eaſt marches to both kingdomes, were wont here to decide matters and controverſies betweene the bor- B Rhedeſdale. derers) giveth his owne name to a dale too too voide of inhabitants by reaſon of depredations.

Both theſe dales breed noteable light horſemen: and both of them haue their hilles hard by, ſo boggy and ſtanding with water in the top, that no horſemen are able to ride through them: whereupon (and that is wonderfull) there by many very

Lawes. great heapes of ſtone, called Lawes, which the neighbour inhabitants bee verily perſwaded, were in old time caſt up and laid togither, in remembrance of ſome there ſlaine. In both of them alſo, there bee many ruinous remaines of old caſtles. In Tindale are Whitcheſter, Delaley, Tarſet, ſometimes belonging to the Comins. In C Rheadſdale, are Rocheſter, Green-cheſter, Rutcheſter, and ſome others, whoſe ancient names are aboliſhed and loſt by the injurie of long time. But ſeeing that at Rocheſter which ſtandeth neerer into the head of Rhead, in the brow of a rocky high mountaine, that over looketh the Country underneath a great way (whence it ſeemeth to haue taken this new name) there hath beene found an antique altar among the rubbiſh of an old caſtle with this inſcription.

D. R. S. D

*DVPL.N.EXPLOR.
BREMEN. ARAM.
INSTITVERVNT
N EIVS C CAEP
CHARITINO TRIB E VSLM.

F

*i. Duplares Numeri exploratorum Bremenij Aram inſtituerunt Numini eius Cæpione Charitino Tribuno votum ſoluerunt libenter meritò.

A May we not hence gueſſe, that BREMENIVM, for which there hath beene made ſo long and great ſearch, was heere? whereof Ptolomee hath made mention in this very ſite and poſition of the country, and from which Antonine the Emperour beginneth the firſt journey of Britaine? as from the utmoſt limit of the Romane Province in Britaine at that time. And the limits or Bounds of a Dominion were ſeas, great rivers, Mountaines, Deſert lands and unpaſſable, ſuch as be in this tract. Trenches alſo with their rampiers, walles, mounds of trees cut downe or plaſhed, and Caſtles eſpecially built in places more ſuſpected and daungerous than others: to all which there are to be ſeene remaines heere every where about. Certes, when the Barba-
B rous nations, after they had broken through the wall of Antoninus Pius in Scotland, harried all over the country and laid all waſt before them, and the wall of Hadrian lay neglected unto the time of Severus, we may well thinke, that even heere was ſet downe the limit of the Roman Empire: and that from hence the old Itenerarie which goes about under the name of Antoninus beganne thus, A limite, that is, From the Bound. As for that which is ſet to it, id eſt, A Vallo, that is, From the wall or rampier, may ſeeme a Gloſſe put down by the tranſcribers, conſidering that BREMENIVM is foreteene miles Northward diſtant from the ſaid wall: unleſſe it may ſeeme to have beene one of thoſe out Fieldſtations, which as I ſaid even now, were placed within the Barbarians ground, beyond the Wall.

C Scarce fiue miles from old BREMENIVM Southward, ſtandeth Otterburne, where there was a field moſt valiantly fought betweene the Scottiſh and Engliſh; in which the victorie waved alternatively too and fro three or foure times, and fell in the end to the Scottiſh. For Sir Henrie Percy, for his overforward ſpirit and youthfull heat, by-named Hot-Spurre, who had the leading of the Engliſh, loſt 15. hundred of his men in fight and was himſelfe led away priſoner: William Douglas alſo the leader of the Scots, with moſt of his companie was ſlaine, ſo that the Martiall valour of both nations was never more illuſtrious.

D There is alſo another towne beneath of ancient memorie, which Rhead watereth, or rather hath now well neere waſhed away: they call it at this day Riſingham, which is in the ancient Engliſh and German language, The Giants Habitation, as Riſingberg in Germanie, The Giants Hill. Many ſhewes are there, and thoſe right evident of antiquitie. The inhabitants report, that God Magon defended and made good this place a great while againſt a certaine Soldan, that is, an Heatheniſh Prince; Neither is this altogether a vaine taile. For that ſuch a God was heere honored & worſhipped, is plainly proved by theſe two altar ſtones lately drawen out of the river there, with theſe Inſcriptions.

E

 Deo Mogonti Cadenorum & numini Domini noſtri Auguſti M. G. Secundinus Beneficiarius Conſulis Habitanci Primas tam proſe & ſuis poſuit.*

F Out of the former of theſe, we may in ſome ſort gather, that the name of the place was HABITANCVM: and that he who erected it, was * Beneficiarius to a Conſull, and Primate beſide of the place. For certaine it is out of Codex Theodoſij, that the chiefe Magiſtrates of Cities, townes, and Caſtles were called Primates. Now, whether this God were the Tutelar and appropriate Genius of the Gadeni, whom Ptolomee placed as next neighbours to the Ottadini, I cannot averre: let others ſift and ſearch it out. Moreover, theſe Inſcriptions alſo were heere found: for, which, with Primas.

* Either promoted to that place by him, or by a diſpenſation exempt from ſouldiours ſervices.

with others, we are to thank the right worshipfull Sir Robert Cotton of Conyngton Knight who very lately both saw them copied them out, and most kindly imparted them to this worke. A

D. M.
BLESCIVS DIOVICVS FILIAE SVAE VIXSIT
AN. I. ET DIES XXI. B

CVI PRAEEST. M.
PEREGRINIVS SVPER TRIB.

COH. I. VANG
FECIT CVRANTE
IVL. PAVLO TRIB. C

DEAE TER
TIANAE SA
CRVM AEL.
TIMOTHEA --- P.
V. S. LL. M.

HERCV LIIVL.
PAVLLVS TRIB.
V. S. D

AVR. ANTONI
NI. PII AVG.M
MESSORIVS DILIGENS TRI-
BVNVS SACRVM. E

* Dea Diligentia. Or Cassandra. Or mentis Dea. Apud M. G. Scandinus Deam reginam hanc Cæliphi Italiæ vocat Primas tam præpotentem. Primas. * Rather preferring to the Goddesse placed as next neighbours to the Oracles. I cannot averre: for, which, and I search it out. Moreover, three Inscriptions also were heere found: for, which, with

F Deo

A

DEO · INVICTO
HERCVLI · SACR
B L · AEMIL · SALVANVS
TRB · COH · IVANGI
V · S · P · M ·

Cohors prima Vangionum.

C

ICOSCIPRE ·
N · AVRL · CAST
D VETVS TAECNABS

* Vetuſtate conlabſum.

And, that which farre ſurmounteth all the reſt for curious workmanſhip, a long table in this forme artificially engraven, ſet up by the fourth Cohort of the Gauls-Horſmen, and dedicated to the ſacred Maieſtie of the Emperours.

E

F

Sed

But now leaving these particularities, Rhead a little lower carrieth both his owne streame, and also other swelling brookes, that he receaueth unto him by the way into Tine, and so farre reacheth Rhedosdale. Which as we find in a booke of the Kings Exchequer the Vmfran Vills held of ancient feofament by regall power and service, that they should keepe the vale from theeves and robbers.

Testa Nouilli.

Heere every way round about, in the * Wasts as they tearme them, as also in Gilesland, you may see, as it were, the ancient Nomades, a martiall kind of men; who from the moneth of Aprill unto August, ly out skattering and sommering, (as they terme it) with their cattaile, in little cottages here and there, which they call Sheales and Shealings. Then, North Tine aforesaid passing downe by Chipches a towre belonging sometime to the Vmfranvills, afterward to the Herons and not farre from Swinborne a little Castle or Pile (which gaue name unto a worthy family, and was in old time parcell of the Baronie of the Hairuns, now commonly called Heron, a warlicke generation now a seat of the Woderingtonss; & so commeth to the Wall, running under it beneath Collerford, where a bridge of arches was made over, and where now are seene the ruins of a large castle. Which if it were not CILVRNVM, wherin the second wing of the Astures lay in garison: it was hard by at Scilicester in the wall: where, after that Sigga a noble man, had treacherously murdred Ethwald King of North-Humberland, there was a Church built by the faithfull Christians in honor of Saint Cuthbert and King Oswald: whose name so obscured the light of the other, that the old name being quite gone, it is now called Saint Oswaldes. This Oswald King of Northumberland, being at the point to give battaile unto Cedwall the Britaine (for so Bede calleth him, whom the Britans themselves named Caswallon) King as it seemeth of Cumberland, erected a Crosse, and humbly upon his knees, praied unto Christ, that hee would vouchsafe his heavenly aid unto his devoted servants: and presently with a lowd voice cried unto the armie in this wise: Let us all kneele downe, and beseech the Almighty, living, and true God, of his mercy to defend us from our proud and cruell enimie. No signe (saith Bede) doe we find of Christian faith, no Church, no altar thorough out the whole nation to have bin erected, before that this New-leader & conducter of an armie, directed thereto by faithfull devotion, did set up this signe of the holy Crosse, when he was to fight against a most savage and bloudie enimie. For, when Oswald perceived in this battaile the present assistance of Christ, which he had so earnestly implored, streightwaies he became a professed Christian, and sent for Aidan the Scot to catechise and instruct his people in the Christian religion: The very place of victorie was called heafenfield, that is Heaven-field, which at this day in the same sense, as some will have it, is named Haleden. Concerning which, haue heere these verses such as they be, out of the life of the said Oswald.

* In Vastis. Nomades. Sheales and Shealing. Clipches.

Cilurnum.

Scilcester. Hoveden.

Saint Oswald.

Cedwalla or Caswallo.

Bede lib. 2. cap. 2. About the yeere 634. Christian religion first beganne in Northumberland.

Heafonfield. now Haledon.

Tunc primùm sciuit causam cur nomen haberet
Heafenfeld, hoc est cœlestis Campus, & illi
Nomen ab antiquo dedit appellatio gentis
Præteritæ, tanquam belli præsaga futuri:
Nominis & caussam mox assignauit ibidem
Cœlitùs expugnans cœlestis turba scelestam.
Neue senectutis ignauia posset honorem
Tam celebris delere loci, tantique triumphi,
Ecclesiæ fratres Hangustaldensis adesse
Deuoti, Christumque solent celebrare quotannis.
Quoque loci persistat honos in honore beati
Oswaldi Regis, ibi construxere Capellam.

Then wist he first and not before, why this place tooke the name
Of Heafenfield, that is, the field of Heaven: for the same
By those that liv'd in alder time, unto it given had beene
As if by skill divine they had this future warre fore-seene.
And even the reason of this name, he there streightwaies expressed,

For

A For that from heaven an heavenly troupe, a wicked crew suppreſſed.
Now, that in time through negligence the fame might not miſeary
Both of the place ſo memorable and this ſo noble victorie,
The Monkes of Hanguſtald-Church in great devoutneſſe heere,
Are wont to be, and Chriſt to praiſe duly from yeere to yeer.
And that the honor of this place might ſtill remaine entier
In honor of Saint Oſwald King, they built a Chappell there.

And another in praiſe of him wrote in that unlearned age, not unlearnedly
B thus.

Quis fuit Alcides? quis Cæſar Iulius? aut quis
Magnus Alexander? Alcides ſe ſuperaſſe
Fertur. Alexander mundum, ſed Iulius hoſtem:
Se ſimul Oſwaldus, & mundum vicit, & hoſtem.

What was to Oſwald Hercules? what Iulius Cæſar? what Great Alexander? Hercules is named much, for that Himſelfe he wonne: Xander the world: Iulius made foes to flie, Oſwald at once conquer'd himſelfe, the world, and enimie.

C Beneath Saint Oſwalds both Tines meete in one, after that South-Tine (which keepeth juſt pace in parallele as it were with the wall, about two miles from it) hath paſſed by Langley Caſtle, where ſometimes, under King Iohn, Sir Adam de Tindale had his Baronie, which afterwards came to Sir Nicolas Bolteby, and of late belonged to the Percies; and at Aidon runneth under the wooden weake bridge, and ſhaking through the violence of the ſtreame Tine, by this time being now broader and broader continueth his courſe in one chanell apace toward the Ocean, by Hexham, which Bede calleth Hanguſtald, but the old Engliſh-Saxon, hexꝑoldeſham. That this was named in the Romans time Axelodvnvm: (where the firſt Cohort of the D Spaniards had their ſtation, both the name implieth, & the high ſituation upon an hil anſwerable to the name, when as the ancient Britans called an Hill, Dunum.) But as touching this, heare what Richard Prior of this place ſaith, who flouriſhed 500. yeeres agoe. Not farre from the river Tine Southward, there ſtandeth a towne, now in theſe daies verily but of meane bigneſſe and ſlenderly inhabited, but in times paſt, as the remaines of antiquity doe beare witneſſe, very large and ſtately. This place, of the little river Hextold running downe by it, and ſwelling otherwhiles like unto a floud with a ſwift ſtreame, is named Hextoldeſham: which towne Etheldreda the wife of King Egfrid gave unto Saint Wilfrid in the yeere 675. that hee ſhould exalt it with an Epiſcopall See; who built there a Church, that for the artificiall frame and paſſing beauty went beyond all the
E Minſters in England. Take with you alſo, that which William of Malmesbury wrote, This was Corwn-land, when Wilfrid the Biſhop exchanged with Queene Etheldreda other lands. It was wonderfull to ſee what buildings were erected there with mighty high walles, and how they were ſet out, and contrived with divers turnings in & out by winding ſtaires, all poliſhed and garniſhed by the curious workmanſhip of Maſons and Pargetters, whom the hope of his liberality had allured from Rome; ſo that theſe buildings carried a ſhewe of the Romaines ſtately magnificence, and ſtood very long ſtrugling with Time. The foreſaid King Egfrid placed an Epiſcopall See in this little citie. But, that dignity after the eighth Biſhop vaniſhed cleane away, whiles the Daniſh warres were at the hoteſt. And ſo ever ſince it was counted onely a Manour or townſhip belonging to the F Archbiſhops of Yorke, before the exchange made with King Henry the eighth; wherby they reſigned up their right. This place was alſo renowmed by reaſon of that bloudy battaile, wherein Iohn Nevill Marqueſſe Montacute, encountred the leaders of the Lancaſtrian faction with much courage, and with greater ſucceſſe put them to flight: and therefore was created Earle of Northumberland by King Edward the Fourth. But now all the glory that it hath, is in that ancient Abbay, a part whereof Hexham. Axelodunum.

Dunum.

is

is converted into a faire dwelling houſe, belonging to Sir Iohn Foſter Knight. As for the Church, it ſtandeth whole and ſound, ſave that the Weſt end onely thereof is pulled downe: and I aſſure you a right ſtately and ſumpteous building it is: within the quire whereof, is to be ſeene an ancient tombe of a noble man, of that warlike family of the Vmfranvills, as appeereth by his Eſcutcheon of Armes, lying with his legges a croſſe. After which faſhion in thoſe daies were they onely enterred (that I may note ſo much by the way) who tooke upon them the croſſe, and were marked with the badge of the croſſe for ſacred warfare, to recover the Holy land from the Mahometanes and Turkes. Hard by the Eaſt end alſo of this Church, upon the brow of an hill, are erected two moſt ſtrong bulwarkes of free ſtone, which belong, as I have heard, unto the Archbiſhop of Yorke.

Men buried with their legges a croſſe.

From hence we went Eaſtward, and came to Dilſton a manſion houſe of the Ratcliffes: In old evidence it is found written Diuelſton of a little river running into Tine, which Bede called Devilesburn, where as hee writeth, Oſwald having the faith of Chriſt for his armour and defenſe, in a ſet battaile ſlew Cedwalla the Britan that wicked and horrible Tyrant, who had already ſlaine two Kings of Northumberland, and depopulated the country all over. On the other banke of Tine, lieth CVRIA OTTADINORVM, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention; it may ſeeme by the diſtance thereof to bee CORSTOPITVM in Antonine, called at this day, of the Bridge, Corbridge, in Houedons Annales, Corobrige, and in Henrie of Huntingdon, Cure. It can ſhew nothing now but a Church, and a little towre hard by, which the Vicars of the Church built, and wherein they dwell. Howbeit there remaine ſtill ſundry reliques of antique worke: among which King Iohn ſearched for ancient treaſure, ſuppoſed to haue beene buried there: But hee was overtaken in his owne vanity, and deceived of his great expectation, no leſſe than Nero, when hee ſearched for the hidden wealth of Dido at Carthage. For, nothing found hee but ſtones ſigned with braſſe, iron and lead. But who ſo ſhal ſee the heape of rubbiſh that lieth thereby, and is called Colecester, will ſoone ſay, it was ſome hold of a Roman garriſon. Forward ſtill upon the ſame banke, wee ſaw Bnvell a proper faire caſtle, which in the reigne of King Iohn was the Baronie of Sir Hugh Balliol; for which he did owe, to the Ward of Newcastle upon Tine, thirty Knights [ſeruice.]

Bede lib. 3. cap. 1.

Treaſure in vaine. Hoveden. Tacitus. Colecester.

Beneath this Caſtle, there is a very goodly Weare for the catching of Salmons: and two ſolid piles of moſt firme ſtone, which in times paſt ſupported the bridge, ſtand up in the mideſt of the river. From hence Tine running underneath, looketh up to Prudhow Caſtle, in ancient bookes written Prodhow, ſituate very pleaſantly upon the ridge of an hill. This may I gueſſe to haue beene PROTOLITIA, which alſo is called PROCOLITIA, the ſtation of the firſt band of the Batavians, till Time tell me more and inſtruct mee better. But it is famous in this regard, that in King Henry the Second his daies, it valiantly gaue the check unto William King of Scots laying ſeege unto it: when, as William of Newborrough writeth, hee had taken great paines to no purpoſe, to his loſſe, and hurt. Afterwards, it belonged to the Vmfranvils, men of great eſtimation, among whom Sir Gilbert Vmfranvill flouriſhing in the profeſſion of armes, in right of his wife atteined the title of Earle of Anguiſh in Scotland in the raign of K. Edward the Firſt, and left that honour to his poſterity. But Eleonor daughter to the ſiſter: and heire of the laſt Earle was married at length into the familie of Talebois: and afterward this Caſtle by the Princes bountifull guift came to the Duke of Bedford.

But to retire to the Wall. Beyond Saint Oſwalds, there are ſeene in the wall, the foundations of two forts which they call Caſtle-ſteeds: then a place named Portgate; where there ſtood a gate in the wall, as may appeere by the word, that in both languages importeth as much. Beneath this, more within the country, is Halton-Hall: where flouriſheth the family of the Carnabies, in great name for their antiquity and militarie proweſſe: neere unto which is ſeated Aidon Caſtle, ſometimes part of the Baronie of that Hugh Balliole before named. But for as much as many places about

A about the wall cary this name Aidon, and the very same signifieth a Militare Winge, or a troupe of horsemen in the British tongue, of which sort there were many winges placed along the Wall (as plainely appeareth by the booke of Notices) in their stations; I would haue the reader throughly to consider, whether this name was not thereupon imposed upon these places, like as Leon, upon those townes, where the Legions had their standing campe. Well, hard by, there was digged up the fragment of an antique stone, wherein is the expresse portrait or image of a man lying in bed, leaning upon his left hand, and with the right touching his right knee, with these inscriptions.

B

NORICI. AN. XXX.
--ESSOIRVS MAGNVS
FRATER EIVS
DVPL. ALÆ SABINIANÆ.

C

M. MARI VS VELLI
A LONG
VS. AQVI
S HANC POSVIT
V. S. L. M.

D Then, the river Pont having his spring head more outwardly, and running downe nere to Fenwick-Hall, the dwelling house of the worthy and martiall familie of the Fenwickes, for certaine miles together gardeth the wall, and upon his banke had for a defense in garison the first Cohort of the Cornavij, at a place called PONS AELII, built as it seemeth by Aelius Hadrianus the Emperor, now called Pont-eland: as which, King Henry the Third, in the yeere 1244. concluded a peace; and nere unto this the first Cohort of the Tungri had their abode at Borwick, which in the Notice of Provinces is called BORCOVICVS. From Port-gate the wall runneth along to Waltowne, which, seeing the signification accordeth so well with the name, and that it standeth twelue miles from the East sea, I beleeue verily it is the same roial towne, which Bede called ADMVRVM, wherein Segbert King of the East Saxons was by the hands of Paulinus baptized and received into the church of Christ. Neere unto this was a fortification, called Old Winchester, I would gladly take it to be that VINDOLANA, which that Booke of Notice so often cited, recordeth to haue beene the Frontier-station in times past of the fourth Cohort of the Gaules. And then haue yea Rouchester, where we beheld very plainly the expresse footings in forme foure square of a garizon castle, that joyned hard to the wall. Neere unto it Headon sheweth it selfe, which was part of the Barony of Sir Hugh de Bolebec, who fetched his descent by his mother from the noble Barons of Mont-Fichet; and had issue none but daughters matched in wedlock with Ralph Lord Greistock, I. Lovell, Huntercomb, and Corbet.

Fenwick.

Pons Ælij Pont-Eland.

Borrovicus, Borwic.

Walton.

Ad-Murum.

Vindolana, Old Winchester.

Barony de Bolebec.

Now where the wall and Tine almost meet together, New-Castle sheweth it selfe gloriously, the verie eye of all the townes in these partes, ennobled by a notable haven, which Tine maketh, beeing of that depth, that it beareth very tall ships, and so defendeth them, that they can neither easily bee tossed with tempests,

New-castle upon Tine.

nor driven upon ſhallowes and ſhelues. It is ſituate on the riſing of an hill, very uneven, upon the North banke of the river (which hath a paſſing faire bridge over it.) On the left hand whereof ſtandeth the Caſtle: after that, a ſteepe and upright pitch of an hill riſeth: on the right hand you haue the Mercat place, and the better part of the Citty in regard of faire buildings. A

From whence the aſcent is not eaſie to the upper part, which is larger by farre. It is adorned with foure churches, and fortified with moſt ſtrong walls that haue eight gates in them, with many towres, what it was in old time it is not knowne. I would ſoone deeme it to haue beene GABROSENTVM, conſidering that Gateſ-head the ſuburbe, as it were, thereof, doth in the owne proper ſignification expreſſe that Britiſh name Gabroſentum derived from Goates, as hath beene ſaid before. The Notice alſo of Provinces placeth Gabroſentum and the ſecond Cohort of the Thracians in it, within the range of the wall. And moſt certaine it is, that both the Rampier and the Wall went through this city, and at Pandon gate there remaineth, as it is thought one of the turrets of that wall. Surely, for workemanſhip and faſhion it is different from the other. B

Gabroſentum.

More over whereas it was named before the Conqueſt Monk-Cheſter, becauſe it was as it ſeemeth in the poſſeſſion of Monkes; this addition Cheſter which ſignifieth a place fortified, implieth that it was anciently a place of ſtrength. But after the Conqueſt of the New Caſtle, which Robert the ſonne of William the Conqueror built out of the ground, it got this new name New-Caſtle, and by little and little encreaſed merveilouſly in wealth, partly by entercourſe of trafficke with the Germans, and partly by carrying out ſea coles, wherewith this Country aboundeth, both into forraine Countries, and alſo into other parts of England. In the reigne of Edward the Firſt, a rich man chanced to bee haled away priſoner by the Scottiſh out of the middle of the towne: who after hee had ranſomed him ſelfe with a great ſumme of money, beganne with all ſpeed to fortifie the ſame: and the reſt of the inhabitants moved by his example finiſhed the worke, and compaſſed it with faire ſtrong walles. Since which time, it hath with ſecurity avoided the force & threates of the enemies, & robbers, which ſwarmed al over the country; & withal fel to trading and merchandiſe ſo freſhly, that for quick commerce and wealth it became in very flouriſhing eſtate; in which regard King Richard the Second granted that a ſword ſhould bee carried before the Maior, and King Henry the Sixth made it a County, incorporate by it ſelfe. It is diſtant from the firſt Meridian or Weſt line 21. degrees and 30. minutes, and from the Æquinoctiall line toward the North pole 34. degrees and 57. minutes. As touching the ſuburbs of Gateſhead, which is conioined to New-caſtle with a faire bridge over the river, and apperteineth to the Biſhops of Durham, I haue al-ready written. Now in regard of the ſite of New-caſtle, and the aboundance of ſea cole vented thence, unto which a great part of England and the Low Countries of Germaine are beholden for their good fires, read theſe verſes of Maiſter Iohn Ionſton out of his Poem of the Cities of Britaine. C * D E

NOVVM CASTRVM.

Rupe ſedens celſâ, rerum aut miracula ſpectat
Naturæ, aut ſolers diſtrahit illa aliÿs.
Sedibus æthereis quid fruſtrà quæritis ignem?
Hunc alit, hunc terra ſuſcitat iſta ſinu.
Non illum toruo terras qui turbine terret;
Sed qui animam terris, detque animos animis.
Eliquat hic ferrum, æs, hic aurum ductile fundit,
Quos non auri illex conciet vmbra animos?
Quin (aiunt) auro permutat bruta metalla.
Alchimus hunc igitur prædicat eſſe deum.
Si deus eſt, cur tu dictas diuine Magiſter,
Hæc quot alit? quot alit Scotia noſtra Deos? F

NEW-

A

NEVV-CASTLE.

Seated upon high rock shee sees dame Natures wonders strange,
Or else to others wittily doth vent them for exchang.
In vaine why seeke yee fire to fetch from heaven to serue your turne?
The ground here either keepes it close, or quickly makes it burne.
Not that which folke with stony flash or whirlewind grim affrights,
But giveth life to earthly things, and mindes to living wights.
B This melteth iron, brasse, and gold so pliable and soft,
What mindes th' allectiue shade of gold stirres not, nor sets aloft?
Nay more than so, men say it doth dull mettals change to gold,
To say therefore, he is a God our Alchimists are bold.
If God he be, as thou giv'st out (Great Maister) of thy word
How many Gods then doth this place, and our Scotland afford.

Scarce three miles hence (for I over passe Gosseford, which was the Baronie in old time of Richard Sur-Teis, who came up under King Henry the First, and lived in in great honour) standeth a village named Wallsend. The very signification of the name sheweth, that this was a station of the Second Cohort of Thracians, which in the Booke of Notices is called VINDOBALA, in Antonine, VINDOMORA: for it may seeme, that in the provinciall language of the Britans, as the latter of them betokened The Walls-end, so the former, the Rampiers-end, considering that long since they tearmed a Wal, Mur, and a Rampier, Bal, Val, and Gual.

Barons Sur Teis.

C Vindobala. Vindomora. Walls end.

Neither is it credible that the Rampier or Wall reached any farther; seeing that beyond this place there are no tokens thereof: and Tine beeing now very neere unto the Ocean, with his exceeding deepe chanell serveth in steed of a most strong fense. Yet some there be who thinke, that the rampier and not the wall went as farre as to the very mouth of Tine which is called Tinmouth; and stifly affirme, that it was termed Tinmouth.

D Pen-bal-crag, that is, the head of the rampier in the rocke: whom I will not contradict. But I durst almost avouch, that this was in the Romans time TVNNOCELLVM, seeing that Tunnocellum foundeth as much as the Promontorie of Tunn or Tine, where the first Cohort Aelia Classica, enrolled (as it is propable by the very name) by Aelius Hadrianus the Emperour, was in pay for sea service. For, the Romans had certaine light Foists or Pinnaces, termed Lusoriæ upon the riverss in the marches: as well to represse the outrodes of them that dwelt thereby, as to quit them with like inrodes, as we may see in the bookes of Theodosius his Code, under the title, de Lusorijs Danubij, that is, touching The pinnaces of the river Danow. Under the Saxons Heptarchy it was called Tunnacester, not of Tunna the Abbot, as Bede writeth, but doubtlesse of the river; and a little monasterie it had, which was oftentimes rifled by the Danes: But now it is called Tinmouth Castle, and takes great glorie in a stately and strong castle, which, as an ancient writer saith, on the East and North-side is unpossible to bee entred, by reason of a mighty high rocke over the sea, and in other places such is the height of it, that it needes but small defense: Whereupon, Robert Mowbray Earle of Northumberland, made choise of it for his strongest hold, when hee rebelled against King William Rufus. But, as commonly it falleth out with rebells, he had but ill succesſe: who being forthwith very streightly besieged, with drew him selfe into a monastery hard by, which was counted a Sanctuary, and therefore not to be forced and broken; nevertheleſſe he was drawne out thence, and kept a long time close Tunnocellum.

Naves Lusoriæ.

Code.

E

F prisoner in misery; a just reward for his so perfidious treachery.

Now must I coast along the shore. On the backe side of the Promontory, on which Tinmouth is situate, next unto Seton, which under King Henry the Third was part of the Barony Dela-vall; Seghill sheweth it selfe called in old time SEGEDVNVM, a station of the third Cohort of the Lergi, by the wall or Rampier; and verily SEGEDVNVM, in British, is all one with Seghill in English.

Seton.

Segedunum. Seghill.

Some few miles from hence, the shore maketh roome for the river Blith to fall into the sea; which river, watering Belsey, belonging in times past to the Midletons, and Ogle a Castle of the Barons Ogle, is heere togither with the river Pont discharged into the sea. A

Barons Ogle. These Ogles, from the very beginning of Edward the Fourth his reign, flourished in the dignity of Barons, enriched by marrying the heires of Sir Bertram Bothall, of Alan Heton and of Alexander Kirkby. The issue male of these Barons went out lately, and expired in Cuthbert the seventh Baron of that house: who begat two daughters, Ioan married to Edward Talbot a younger sonne of George Earle of Shrewsbury, and Catharine wife to Sir Charles Cavendish knight. B

Wents-beck. Barony of Mitford. A little higher, the river Wents-beck is swallowed up of the Ocean; it runneth beside Mitford, which King Iohn and his Rutars set on fire, when in most greivous manner they over ranne these Countries. That age called forraine and willing souldiours, Rutars whom Falques de Brent and Walter Buc brought out of the Low Countries and from other parts to aide King Iohn. Brent a wilde madbraine, was at length banished out of the Realme: But Buc a more staied man after hee had done the King stout service, had given unto him by the King, possessions in Yorkeshire and Northamptou-shire: and his race flourished there, untill that Iohn Buc was attainted under King Henry the Seventh, whose great grand-son is Sir George Buc knight, a man well learned, of great reading, and Maister of the Kings Revells; C who (for I take pleasure to professe by whom I haue profited) hath observed many things in historie, and gently imparted the same to mee. This was sometimes the Baronie of William Bertram, whose issue male, soone had an end in Roger his grand-sonne; and his three daughters inheretrices were bestowed in marriage upon Sir Norman Darcy, T. Penbury, and William of Elmeley.

Rutarij or Ruptarij Alias de Breant.

Morpeth. From thence Wents-beck passeth through Morpeth, a famous little towne. For, on the North banke of the river is the towne situate, and on the South banke standeth the Church, and the Castle by it upon a shady hill beset with trees; which together with the towne came from Sir Roger Merley, whose Barony it was, unto the Lords of Greystock; and so from them to the Barons Dacre of Gillesland. Nothing I haue of any antiquity to say of this towne but that in the yeere of Christ 1215. it was set on fire by the inhabitants themselues in spitefull malice to king Iohn. From hence the river Wents-beck passeth by Bothall Castle, and the Barony sometimes of Richard Bertram, from whose posterity it was devolved unto the Barons of Ogle: Upon the bank whereof, I haue thought this great while (whether truely or upon a bare supposall I know not) that in old time GLANOVENTA stood, which was fortified by the Romans, with a garison of the first Cohort of the Morini, for defense of the marches. Which, the very situation doth as it were perswade, and the rivers name, togither with signification of the same induceth mee to thinke. For, it is seated within the raunge of the Rampire or wall, even where the Booke of Notices placeth it: the rivers name is Want-beck, and GLANOVENTA in the British tongue signifieth the Shore or Bank of Venta. Whence also Glanon a city in France upon the sea shore, whereof Pomponius Mela hath made mention, may seeme to haue drawn that appellation. D E

Hiftor. Malroffe.

Glanoventa.

Withrington Not farre hence, to let passe little piles and towres of lesse account, is to bee seene nere unto the shore, Withrington, or Woderington, in the English Saxon tongue, of old time called Wipingoun, an ancient Castle, which gaue the name unto the Withringtons Gentlemen of good birth, and Knights, whose valour in the warre hath beene from time to time remarqueable.

Coqueda the river. Then the river Coquet falleth into the sea, which springing among the rough and stony mountaines of Cheviot, not farre from his head, hath Billesdun upon it; from whence sprang the ancient familie of the Selbeies: and some-what lower South ward, Harbottle, in the English Saxons tongue herbottle, that is, The station of the Armie, whence the familie of the Harbottels descended, that in the afore-going ages flourished. F

Harbottle.

Halifton. A Castle it had in times past, but in the yeere of our salvation 1314. the Scottes rased it. Close unto this standeth Halyston, as one would say, Holy stone, where

A where the report goeth, that Paulinus in the primitiue Chruch of the Englisſh nation baptized many thouſands. And at the very mouth of Coquet, Warkworth a proper faire Caſtle of the Percies ſtandeth & defendeth the ſhore; where, there is a chappell wonderfully built out of a rocke heawen hollow, and wrought without beames, rafters, or any peeces of timber. This Caſtle King Edward the Third gaue unto Henry Percie, together with the Manour of Rochbury. Aforetime, it had beene the Baronie of Roger Fitz Richard, by the gift of Henry the Second King of Eng- land, who gaue alſo unto his ſonne, Clavering in Eſſex, whereof at the commande- ment of King Edward the Firſt, they aſſumed unto them the ſurname of Clavering, B leaving the ancient manner of taking their names, from the fore name or Chriſtian name of the father: for, before that time they were ſurnamed according to the fore- name of the father, as Robert Fitz Roger, Roger Fitz Iohn &c. Part of this inheri- tance the Nevills entred upon by Fine and Covenant, who afterwards were Earles of Weſtmorland; and part of it a daughter named Eue inherited, who was wedded to Sir Th. Vfford; from whoſe poſterity it came hereditarily unto the Fienes Barons of Dacres. But from the younger ſonnes, branched the Barons of Euers, the Evers of Axholme, and the Claverings of Kalaly in this County, and others. Hard unto this alſo lieth Morwick, which may likewiſe boaſt of the Lords it had, whoſe iſſue male had an end about the yeare of our Lord 1258. And ſo the inheritance paſſed over by C the daughters unto the Lumleies, Seimors, Bulmers and Roſcells.

Warkworth.

Rot. Parliament 5. Ed. 3. Clavering.

Morwick.

The ſhore after this, openeth it ſelfe to giue paſſage unto the river ALAVNVS, which beeing not yet bereft of that name, whereby it was knowne unto Ptolomee, is called ſhort, Alne: Upon the banke whereof, beſides Twifford, that is, A Duble fourd (where was holden a ſolemn Synod under King Egfrid) and Eſlington, the ha- bitation of the Collingwoods (men renowned for their warlike exploites) there ſhew- eth alſo it ſelfe Alan-wic in the Engliſh Saxon tongue Ealn-pic, now commonly cal- led Anwick, a towne ennobled by the victorie of Engliſhmen (wherein our anceſtors ſhewed ſuch valour and proweſſe that they tooke William King of Scots and pre- ſented him priſoner unto King Henrie the Second) and fortified beſides with a good- D ly caſtle: which when Malcome the Third, King of Scots, had by long ſiege enfor- ced to ſuch extreamity, that it was at the point how to be yeelded up, hee was ſlaine by a ſouldior, that making ſemblance to deliver unto him the keies of the Caſtle hanging at the head of a ſpeare, ranne him into the body with it. And with all, his ſonne Edward, whiles to revenge his fathers death he charged unadviſedly upon the enemie, was ſo wounded, that hee died thereof ſhortly after. This was a Baronie ſometimes belonging to the Veſcies. For, King Henry the Seccond gaue it unto Euſtach Fitz-Iohn, father to William Veſci, to bee held by the ſervice of twelue knights. Sir Iohn Veſcy, of this race returning out of the ſacred warre in the holy-land, was the firſt that brought with him into England the Friers Carmelits, and built for E them a Covent heere in Holme a deſert place, not unlike to mount Carmel in Syria. William the laſt of the Veſcies, made Antonine Bec biſhop of Durham his feofie up- on truſt, that hee ſhould deliver this caſtle with all the lands lying thereto, unto his baſe ſonne, the onely child that hee left behind him; but the Biſhop falſly conveied away from him the inheritance, and for ready money ſold it unto William Lord Per- cy: ſince which time it hath ever more belonged to the Percies.

Aulne river.

Alnewick.

1174.

1097.

Teſta Nevil- li.

Carmelites.

Hiſtory of Durham.

From hence the ſhore making divers angles and pointes, paſſeth by Dunſtaburge, a Caſtle belonging to the Duchy of Lancaſter, which ſome haue untruely ſuppoſed to be Bebban; for, Bebbane ſtandeth higher, and in ſteed of Bebbanburg is now called Bamborrow. Our Bede where hee reportes that this Caſtle was beſieged, and burnt F by Penda King of the Mercians, writeth that Queene Bebba gaue it this name. But the Flourgatherer recordeth, that Ida the firſt King of Northumberland built it, which hee fenſed firſt with great ſtakes or piles of timber, and after- ward with a wall. But, take heere with you the deſcription thereof out of Ro- ger Hoveden. Bebba (ſaith hee) is a moſt ſtrong City, not very great, but conte- ning the ſpace of two or three fields, having into it one hollow entrance, and the ſame Dunſtaburg. Bebban.

Bamborrow.

raiſed on high with ſtaires after a wonderfull maner, and on the pitch of an hill, a verie faire Church, and Weſtward on the toppe thereof, there is a well ſet out with merveilous workemanſhip, ſweet to drinke of and moſt pure to ſee to. A

But in our age it is counted a caſtle rather than a citie, yet ſo bigge and large, as that it may ſeeme to match with a city. Neither went it for any other but a caſtle, when King William Rufus having raiſed over againſt it a towre called Mal-voiſin, gaue aſſault continually to Mowbraie, while hee rebelled and lurked there, who at length privily ſtole away and eſcaped by flight. The greateſt part of the beauty ther-of was loſt long time after, in the civill warre, when Breſſie the Norman a redoubted ſoldiour, who ſided with the houſe of Lancaſter, exerciſed his rage againſt it very outragiouſly. Since then it hath beene ſore beaten with time, and the windes together, which haue blowne by drifts an incredible deale of ſand of the ſea into the fortreſſes. Hereto adjoyneth Emildon, ſometime the Baronie of John Le Viſcont, but Rametta the heire of that houſe ſold away the poſſeſſions to Simon de Montfort Earle of Leiceſter. In this was borne Iohn Duns, called Scotus, becauſe hee was deſcended of Scotiſh bloud, who being brought up in Merton Colledge at Oxford, became wonderfull well-learned in Logicke, and in that crabbed and intricate Divinity of thoſe daies: yet as one ſtill doubtfull and unreſolved, hee did overcaſt the truth of religion with miſts of obſcurity. And with ſo profound and admirable ſubtility, in a darke and rude ſtile, hee wrote many workes, that hee deſerved the title of the Subtile Doctor: and after his owne name erected a new ſect of the Scotiſts. But hee died pitifully, beeing taken with an Apoplexie and overhaſtily buried for dead; whiles upon returne of life, nature (though too late) was about to diſcuſſe the violence of the diſeaſe; and hee, making meanes in vaine by a lamentable noiſe to call for helpe, after hee had a long time knocked his head againſt the graue ſtone, daſhed out his owne braines and at laſt yeelded up his vitall breath. Whereupon a certaine Italian wrote thus of him.

*Male Vicina.

Viſcounts.

Io. Scotus the ſubtile Doctor flouriſhed in the yeere. 1300.

Paul. Iovius in Elogijs Doctorum.

B

C

Quæcunq; humani fuerant, iuriſque ſacrati,
In dubium veniunt cuncta vocante Scoto.
Quid? quod & in dubium illius ſit vita vocata,
Morte illum ſimili ludificante ſtropha.
Quum non anté virum vitâ jugularit ademptâ,
Quàm vivus tumulo conditus ille foret.

D

All learning taught in humaine bookes, and couch'd in holy writ,
Dan Scotus darke and doubtfull made by ſubtilty of wit.
No mervaile that, to doubtfull termes of life him ſelfe was brought,
Whiles with like wile and ſubtil tricke, death on his body wrought.
When as her ſtroke to kill out right ſhe would not him vouchſaue,
Untill the man (a piteous caſe) was buried quicke in graue.

E

That he was borne here in England, I avouch it ovt of his owne manuſcript works in the Librarie of Merton Colledge in Oxford, and upon their faithfull teſtimony, which conclude in this manner Explicit Lectura &c. that is, Thus endeth the Lecture of the Subtile Doctor in the Vniverſity of Paris, Iohn Duns borne in a certaine little village or hamlet within the Pariſh of Emildon called Dunſton, in the County of Northumberland perteining to the houſe of the Scholars of Merton Hall in Oxford.

The river Twede.

On this ſhore forward, there is nothing to be ſeene worth relation, but the Holy Iſland (whereof I will write in due place) untill a man come to the mouth of Twede, which parteth England and Scotland a great way a ſunder, and is called the Eaſt Limite: and thereupon our Necham thus writeth, inſinuating that the hither part of Scotland was called Pict-land.

F

Anglos à Pictis ſeiungit limite certo
Flumen, quod Tuedam priſtina lingua vocat.

The

A The river Twede, a certaine bound,
Divids * Pict-land from English ground.

This river breaking forth at a number of Springs, out of the mountaines of Scotland, wandereth a great while with many a crooked winding in and out, among the ranke riders and borderers (to give them no worse tearme) whose maner is, as one saith, to try their right by the swords point. But when he is come hard to a village called Carram, waxing a great deale bigger by reason of many waters fallen unto him, he beginnes to distinguish the Confines of the Kingdomes. And when he hath watered Werke, a Castle often assaulted by the Scotish, belonging in times past to
B the Rosses, and now to the Graies, who by feats of armes have wonne much honor, he is encreased more with the streame of Till, a river that hath two names. For, at the head, which is in the innermore part of this country, it is called Bramish, and upon it standeth Bramton, a little village, very obscure and almost of no reckoning: from whence it goeth Northward by Bengeley, which together with Brampton it selfe, with Browndum, Rodam (which hath given name to a stock in this tract of good note) Edelingham &c. was in King Henrie the Third his time the Baronie of Patricke Earle of Dunbar: who also as we read in the booke of Inquisitions, was Inborow and Outborow betweene England and Scotland, that is to say, if I mistake it not, he was
C to allow and observe in this part, the ingresse and egresse of those that travailed too and fro betweene both Realmes. For, Englishmen in ancient time called in their language, an Entry, and fore Court or Gatehouse, Inborow. Higher somewhat standeth Chevelingham, now called Chillingham hard by the river, which like as Horton not farre distant from it, had their Castles belonging to the Greies, ever since that those two families of the Greies were conjoined in one by marriage.

Then lieth neere unto it Wollouer, a Baronie, which King Henrie the First gave to Robert * Muschamp, who bare Azure three Butterflies or Papilions Argent: of whose race descended Robert, who in Henrie the third his reigne, was reputed the mightiest Baron in these North parts. But the inheritance was quickly dismembred and parted among the females: one of whom was married unto the Earle of D Stratherne in Scotland, a second to Sir William de Huntercombe, and a third to Odonell Ford. Then the river of Glen from out of the West augmenteth Till with his waters and nameth the vale that he runneth through, Glendal. Touching this little river, Bede writeth thus: Paulinus comming with the King and Queene into a Manour or house of the Kings, called Ad-Gebrin (at this day Yeuerin) abode with them 36. daies there, employed wholy in the Cathechizing and baptizing: during all which time he did nothing from morning, but instruct the people resorting to him in the saving word of Christ, and being thus instructed hee baptised them to the forgivenesse of their sinnes in the river of Glen, which was hard by. This house was in the time of the succeeding Kings neglected and another made for it in a place called Melmin: but at this day Melfeld.

E Heere within a little of Brum-ridge, by Brumeford, K. Athelstan fought a pitched field, with Aulafe the Dane, Constantine K. of Scots, and Eugenius or Owein Prince of Cumberland, with so fortunate successe, that this battaile was most famous farre and neere, yea and triumphantly described by the Historians and Poets of that time in the highest degree with stately stile and lofty verse in the language of that age, as well in barbarous Latin.

Heere Bramish loosing his owne name, comes to be called Till, and first saluteth Ford Castle belonging sometime to the warlicke and valiant house of the Herons, now to the family of the Carrs: then Etall, where, the family surnamed De Manerijs or Manours sometimes inhabited, reckoned in the ranke of worshipfull Knights, out
F of which flourished the right honorable Earles of Rutland at this day. Many small castles and piles in this tract I wittingly let passe: For, an endlesse peece of worke it were to goe through them all one by one, considering it is certaine, that in King Henrie the Second his time, there were eleven hundred and 15. Castles in England.

Carram.

Werk.

River Barmish.

Bramton. Inborow and Outborow what they signifie.

Wollouer. * de Musco campo. Fin. 35 H. 3. Glendale lib. 2. cap. 14.

Melfeld.

The battaile of Brunford.

See Henrie Huntingdon. William Malmesbur. and Ingulph.

Fort.

Etall.

Castles 1115. in England.

Right over against this Ford Westward, there mounteth aloft an high hill called Flodaon neere Bramton, memorable in regard of Iames the fourth, King of Scots, who was there slaine, and his armie overthrowen: who, whiles King Henrie the eight lay at the siege of Tournay in France, marched forward in great courage and greater hope with Banner displaied against England. But Thomas Howard Earle of Surrie, arraunged in good order of battaile, valiantly in this place received him: where the fight continued sharpe and hote on both parts, untill the night came upon them, uncertaine as then, whether side had the victorie. But the day ensuing manifested both the Conquerour and conquered: and the King of Scots himselfe with many a mortall wound, was found among the heapes of dead bodies. And heereupon was granted a new augmentation unto the Armes of the Howards, as I haue formerly specified. A B

Twede having now entertained Till, runneth downe with a fuller streame by Norham or Northam, in old time called Vbbanford, a towne belonging to the Bishops of Durrham. For, Egfrid the Bishop built it, and Raulph his successour erected a Castle upon the top of an high steepe rocke, and fortified it with a trench: in the utmore wall whereof, which is of greater circuit, are placed sundry turrets in a Canton toward the river: within, there is another enclosure or wall much stronger: in the mids of which, there riseth up the Keepe of great heigth: But the secure peace of our age, hath now a long time neglected these fortifications, albeit they stand in the borders. Vnder it lieth the towne in a plaine Westward, and hath in it a Church, wherein was enterred Ceolwulph King of Northumberland, unto whom Venerable Bede dedicated his booke of the Ecclesiasticall historie of England. And who afterwards renouncing the world, became a Monke in Lindiffarn Church, and served as a Christian souldiour for the Kingdome of heaven, and his body was conveied after that into the Church of Norham. Also when the Danes harried and spoiled the Holy Iland, where Saint Cuthbert, whom Bede so highly extolleth, both sat as Bishop and lay buried: and some went about by a devout and religious kind of stealth to transport his bodie over, by occasion that the winds were against them, They laid the sacred body downe with due honour at Vbbanford, (whether it were an Episcopall See or no, it is uncertaine) Hard by the river Twede, and there it lay for many yeeres together, untill the comming of K. Etheldred. Of this, and of other things I had information (for I will never conceale by whom I have found any good) by George Carleton borne heere, as who was the Castellanes sonne of this place; whom for that I have loved in regard of his singular knowledge in Diuinitie (which he professeth) and in other more delightfull literature, and am loved againe of him, I were not worthy I assure you of love, if I did not acknowledge thus much. Beneath Norham, at Killey a little village hard by, were found, as I have heard old men say in our grandfathers remembrance, the ornaments or Harnish of a Knights belt, and the hilt of a sword, of massie gold, which were presented unto Thomas Ruthall then Bishop of Durham. C D E

William Malmesbury. lib. 1. de Gestis Pontificum

In printed bookes corruptly yee, read Bubbeford.

A little lower appeereth the Mouth of Twede; upon the farther side whereof standeth Berwicke the utmost towne in England, and the strongest hold in all Britaine. Which name some derive from one Berengarius a Duke, whom they never heard of, unlesse it were in a dreame. Leland fetcheth it from Aber, which in the British tongue signifieth the mouth of a river, so that Aberwic should sound as much as The towne by the rivers mouth. But he that knowes what Berwic in the Charter of our Kings signifieth, wherein nothing is more common than these words, I give C. and D. that is, such and such Townes, cum suis Berwicis, surely he must needs understand the true Etymologie of this Berwicke. For mine owne part, I cannot conjecture what it meaneth, unlesse it be a Village or Hamlet annexed, as it were a parcell of the Demesne, unto some place of greater reckoning. For in the Donations of Edward the Confessor, Totthill is called the Berwicke of Westminster, and Wandlesworth the Berwicke of Patricseie, and a hundred such. But to what end is all this? Surely, we doe but loose this labour, if, as some will have it, the name thereof were in old time Beopnica-pic, in Ingulph expoundeth Berwicke, a Manour.

F

A in the Englifh Saxon tongue, that is, The towne or village of the Bernicians. Now that theſe countries were named Bernicia, it is better knowen, than can bee ſaid, and I haue already notified as much. But whence ſo ever it hath the name, it is ſo ſituate that it ſhooteth farre into the ſea, in ſo much as it is well neere compaſſed about with the ſea, and Twede together. And ſeated betwixt two moſt mighty Kingdomes, as Plinie hath reported of Palmyra in Syria, it was the firſt thing alwaies, that both nations tooke care of whenſoever they were at any diſcord: ſo that ſince the time that King Edward the Firſt of that name, firſt wreſted it perforce out of the Scots hands, the Scots have oftentimes repoſſeſſed it, and the Engliſhmen as often
B recovered it from them againe. But let us heere (if you pleaſe) abridge the Hiſtorie thereof. Of this Berwicke I have read nothing of greater antiquity than this, that William King of Scots being taken priſoner in the field by the Engliſh, delivered it up unto our King Henrie the Second, for his enlargement out of priſon, on this condition, that unleſſe by a certaine day appointed, he paid a ſumme of money for his ranſome, it ſhould belong unto the Crowne of England for ever; and preſently, as it is in the Polychronicon of Durham, the ſaid King Henrie fortified it with a Caſtle. Howbeit, King Richard the Firſt, upon paiment of the money releaſed it againe unto the Scottiſh. Afterwards King Iohn, as we read in the Hiſtorie of Melroſſe, wonne both the towne and Caſtle of Berwicke, what time as he with his Rutars burnt Werke, Roxburgh, Mitford, and Morpath, yea and laid all Northumberland waſt, becauſe the Barons of Northumberland had done homage at Feltun to Alexander King of the Scots. Many yeeres after, when Iohn Balliol King of Scots had broken his oath, King Edward the firſt in the yeere of ſalvation 1297. brought Berwicke under his ſubjection: yet within a little while after, when the fortune of warre beganne to ſmile upon the Scots, they ſurpriſed it ſtanding for let and neglected, but ſtreightwaies it was yeelded up, and the Engliſh became Maiſters of it. Afterward, in that looſe reigne of King Edward the Second, Peter Spalding betraied it unto Robert Brus King of the Scots, who hotely aſſaulted it: and the Engliſh laid ſiege unto it in vaine, untill that our Hector
D King Edward the Third in the yeere of Chriſt 1333. ſetting valiantly upon it, wonne it as happily. Howbeit in the reigne of Richard the ſecond, certaine Scottiſh robbers upon a ſudden ſuppriſed the Caſtle: but within nine daies, Henrie Percie Earle of Northumberland regained it. Scarce ſeven yeeres were ouerpaſſed, when the Scots recovered it againe, not by force, but by money: For which cauſe, the ſaid Henrie Percie, Governour of the place was accuſed of high treaſon: but he, with money likewiſe corrupted both their faith and fortitude, and ſtreightway got it in his hands againe. A great while after, when England was euen pyning by reaſon of civill warre, King Henrie the Sixth being now fled the realme into Scotland ſurrendred it up into the hands of the Scot, for to be ſecured of his life and ſafty iin Scotland. But after twenty two yeeres were expired, Sir Thomas Stanley not without loſſe of his
E men, reduced it under the commaund of King Edward the Fourth. Since which time, our Kings have at divers times fortified and fenſed it with new workes: but eſpecially Queene Elizabeth, who of late to the terrour of the enimie, and ſafegard of her ſtate, encloſed it about in a narrower compaſſe within the old wall, with an high wall of ſtone moſt ſtrangly compacted together, which ſhe hath ſo forewarded againe, with a counter ſcarfe, a banke round about, with mounts of earth caſt up by mans hand, and open terraces above head, that either the forme of theſe munitions, or ſtrength thereof, may juſtly cut of all hope of winning it. To ſay nothing all this while of the valour of the gariſon ſoldiers, the ſtore of great Ordinance and furniture of warre which was wonderfull. He that was wont to be cheife Governour of this F towne (that I may note thus much alſo) was alwaies one of the wiſeſt and moſt approved of the nobility of England: and withall Warden of theſe Eaſt marches anent Scotland. The Longitude of this towne, as our Mathematicians have obſerved is 21. degrees and 43. minutes: the Latitude 55. degrees and 48. minutes. And by this inclination and poſition of the heaven, the longeſt day is 17. houres and 22. minuts and the night but six houres & 38. minutes: so that there was no vntruth in Servius Honoratus, when he wrote thus, Britanni lucis dives &c, that is, Britaine is so plentiful of day light, that it affordeth scarce any time for the nights: neither is it any mervaile that souldiers without other light doe play heere all night long at Dice, considering the side light that the Sunne beames cast all night long: And therefore this verse of Iuuenal is true: A

the

Britaine hath day plenty.

Minima contentos nocte Britannos.
The Britans who with least night stand content.

Concerning Berwicke haue heere now for an Overdeale, B these verses of Maister I. Ionston.

Scotorum extremo sub limite, meta furoris
Saxonidum: gentis par vtriusque labor.
Mille vices rerum, quæ mille est passa ruinas,
Mirum, quî potuit tot superesse malis:
Quin superest, quin extremis exhausta ruinis,
Funere sic creuit firmior vsque suo:
Oppida vt exæquet iam munitissima. Ciuis C
Militis & censum, & munia Martis obit.
Postquàm seruitio durisque est functa periclis,
Effert letitiæ signa serena suæ:
Et nunc antiquo felix se iactat honore,
Cùm reddit Domino debita iura suo:
Cuius ab auspicijs vnita Britannia tandem
Excelsum tollit libera in astra caput.

Afront the bound of Scotish ground, where staid the furious broile
Of English warres; and Nations both were put to equall toile. D
Now wonne, then lost, a thousand turnes it felt of fortunes will,
After so many miseries, wonder, it standeth still.
And still it stands: although laid wast it were and desolate,
Yet alwaies after every fall it rose to firmer state.
So that for strength, best fensed townes it matcheth at this day
The Citizens were souldiers all, and serv'd in wars for pay.
But after service long perform'd and hard adventures past,
Of joy and mirth the gladsome signes it putteth forth at last.
And now her ancient honor she doth vaunt in happy plight,
When to her Sovereigne Lord she yeelds all service due by right. E
Whose blessed Crowne united hath great Britain now at last,
Whereby her head she lifts on high, since quarels all be past.

The Commentarie of Pius Secundus, set fourth in the name of Iohn Gebelin.

That which Aeneas Sylvius, or Pope Pius the Second, who when hee was a private person was Embassadour into Scotland about the yeere 1448. hath reported in his owne life by him selfe penned, and published under the name of another, touching the borderers that dwelt there round about, I thinke good heere to put downe, considering that as yet they haue nothing degenerated.

There is a river (saith hee) which spreading broad from out of an high hill confineth both the lands: This river when Aeneas had fried over, and turned aside into a great village about Sunne setting, where he supped in a countrie-mans house, with the Priest of the F
place, and his hoast many sorts of gruels and potage, hens, and geese were set on the bord, but no wine nor bread at all, and all the men and women of the village came running thither, as it were to see some strange sight: and as our countrymen are wont to wonder at Blackamores

A Mores or men of Inde, ſo they ſtood gaſing and gaping as aſtonied, at Aeneas; asking of the prieſt what countryman he was, upon what buſines he came? and whither he were a Chriſtian or no? Now Aeneas having beene enformed before, at what ſcarcitie of victuals hee ſhould find in thoſe parts, had received at a certaine Abbay ſome loaves of white bread, and a rundlet of red wine; which when they were brought forth, the people made a greater wonder than before, as who had never ſeene either wine or whit bread. There approched unto the table great bellied women, and their husbands who handling the bread and ſmelling to the wine, craved ſome part thereof, and their was no remedie but to deale and give all away among them. Now, when we had ſitten at ſupper untill it was two houres within night, the prieſt and our hoaſt togither with the children and all the men, left Aeneas, and
B made haſt away; for, they ſaid, they were to flee for feare of the Scots, unto a certaine pile that ſtood a great way off; which Scots, at a low water when the tide was paſt, uſed to paſſe over the river and fall to boot-haling. But they would in no wiſe take Aeneas with them, although he entreated them very inſtantly; no nor any woman, albeit amongſt them there were many both young maides and wives paſsing faire: For, they are perſwaded verily, that the enimies will doe them no hurt, as who reckon whoredome no hurt nor evill at all. So Aeneas remaines there alone with two ſervants & his guide, in company of an hundred women: who ſitting round in a ring, with a good fire in the mids before them, fell to hetchel and dreſſe hemp, ſat up all night without ſleepe, and had a great deale of talke with his interpreter. When the night was farre ſpent, what with barking of dogs and gagling of
C geeſe, a mighty noiſe and outcry was made: Then all the women ſlipped forth divers waies, his guide alſo made ſhift to be gone, & al was of an hurry, as if the enimies had bin come. But Aeneas thought it his beſt courſe to expect the event within his bedchamber (& that was a ſtable) for feare leaſt if he had runne forth of dores, knowing not the way, he ſhould haue become a prey and booty to him that ſhould firſt meete him. But ſee, ſtreightwaies the women returned with the Interpreter, bring word all was well, and that they were friends and not enimies were come thether.

There have beene in this country certaine pety nations called Seouenburgenſes, and Fiſburgingi; but to point out preciſely the very place of their abode in ſo great obſcurity, paſſeth my skill: Neither can I define whether they were Danes or Engliſh. But Florentius of Worceſter, publiſhed by the right honorable Lord William
D Howard, writeth, That when there was an aſſembly or Parliament holden at Oxenford, Sigeferth and Morcar, the worthier and mightier miniſters of the Seovenburgenſes, were ſecretly made away by Edrike Streona, Alſo that Prince Edmund againſt his fathers will married, Alfrith the wife of Sigefrith, and having made a journey to the Fiſburgings, invaded Sigeferth his land, and brought his people in ſubjection to him. But let other inquire farther into theſe matters.

Scovenburgenſey. Fiſburgenſes.

1013.

Clitonem. Prince of Fiſburgings.

1015.

This region (of North-humberland) being brought under the Engliſh Saxons dominion, by Oſca Hengiſts brother, and by his ſonne Iebuſa, had firſt officiall governors under the fealty to the Kings of Kent. After that, when the Kingdome of the Bernicij whom the Britans call Guir a Brinaich, as it were, Mountainers, was erected; that E which reached from Tees to the Scottiſh Frith, was the beſt part thereof, and ſubject to the Kings of North-humberland: who having finiſhed their period, whatſoever lay beyond Twede, became Scottiſh and was counted Scotland; Then Egbert King of the Weſt-Saxons laied it to his owne kingdome, when it was yeelded up to him. Afterwards King Aelfred permitted the Danes to poſſeſſe it, whom Athelſtane ſome few yeeres after diſpoſſeſſed and driue out: yet after this, the people ſet up Eilrick the Dane for their king, whom King Ealdred forthwith diſplaced and expelled. From which time forward, this Country had no more Kings over it, but ſuch as governed it, were termed Earles: Amongſt whom, theſe are reckoned up in order ſucF ceſſiuely in our Hiſtories, Oſulfe, Oſlake, Edulph, Waldeof the elder, Vchtred, Adulph Alred, Siward, Toſtie, Edwin, Morcar, Oſculph, and that right valiant Siward, who as he lived in armes, ſo would he die alſo armed. Then his Earldome and theſe parts were given unto Toſtie the brother of Earle Harold: but the Earldomes of Northampton and Huntington, Kings Dukes and Earles of Northumberland.

Bernicij.

Huntingdon, with other lands of his, were assigned to the Noble Earle Waldeof his sonne and heire. These words of Ingulphus have I put downe because some denie that hee was Earle of Huntingdon. And now will I adde moreover to the rest, that which I have read in an old manuscript memoriall of this matter, in the Librarie of Iohn Stow a right honest Citizen, and diligent Antiquarie of the Citie of London. Copso being made Earle of Northumberland by the gift of King William Conquerour, expelled Osculph, who notwithstanding within a few daies after, slew him. Then Osculph being runne through with a lavelin by a theefe, ended his life. After this, Gespatricke, purchased the Earldome of the Conquerour, who not long after deposed him from that honour; and then succeeded after him Waldeof Siwards sonne. His fortune was to loose his head; and in his roome was placed Walcher Bishop of Durham, who like (as Robert Comin his successor) was slaine, in a tumultuous commotion of the common people. Afterwards Robert Mowbray attained to the same honor, which hee soone lost through his owne perfidious treachery, when he deuised to depriue King William Rufus of his roiall estate, & to advance Stephen Earle of Albemarle a sonne to the Conquerors sister there unto. Then K. Stephen made Henrie the sonne of David King of Scotland (as we read in the Poly Chronicon of Durham) Earle of Northumberland: whose sonne also William, that afterwards was King of Scots, writ himselfe William de Warrenna Earle of Northumberland: for, his mother was descended out of the family of the Earles of Warren, as appeereth out of the booke of Brinkburn Abbay. After some few yeeres King Richard the First passed away this Earldome for a summe of money unto Hugh Pudsey Bishop of Durham for tearme of his life, scoffing that he had made a young Earle of an old Bishop. But when the said King was imprisoned by the Emperour, in his returne out of the Holy-land, and Hugh for his delivery had contributed onely 2000. pounds of silver, which the King tooke not well at his hands, because he was deemed to have performed but a little, whom he understood to have raised and gotten together a huge masse of money, under pretense of his ransome and release, he deuested and depriued him of his Earldome. After which time, the title of the Earldome of Northumberland lay discontinued about an hundred and fourescore yeeres.

Percies descended from Charlemaine.

But at this day the familie of the Percies enjoieth the same, which familie beeing descended from the Earles of Brabant, inherited together with the surname of Percie the possessions also of Percie, ever since that Ioscelin of Lovain, younger sonne of Godfrey Duke of Brabant, the true issue of the Emperour of Charles the Great by Gerberga, the daughter of Charles, a younger brother to Lothar the last King of France of the line of Charles, tooke to wife Agnes the daughter and sole heire of William Percy: of which William the great grandfather William Percy, comming into England with King William the Conquerour, was rewarded by him, for his service with lands in Tatcaster, Linton, Normanby and other places. Betweene this Agnes and Ioscelin it was covenanted, that hee should assume the name of Percies, and reteine still unto him the ancient Armes of Brabant, vz. A lion azure (which the Brabanters afterwards changed) in a shield Or. The first Earle of North-humberland out of this familie was Henrie Percy, begotten of Marie daughter to Henry Earle of Lancaster, who beeing descended of ancient bloud, and renowned for his martiall prowesse, was rewarded also by King Edward the Third with faire possessions in Scotland, created Earle of North-humberland by King Richard the Second on the day of his Coronation, and much enriched by his second wife Dame Maud Lucy (although by her hee had no issue) upon a fine levied unto her that hee should beare quarterly the Armes of the Lucies with his owne; and lived in great honour, confidence, and favour with King Richard the Second. Yet full badly hee requited him againe for all this singular good demerits. For, in his adversity hee forsooke him, and made way for Henry the Fourth to the kingdome, who made him Constable of England, and bestowed upon him the Isle of Man: against whom, within a while, hee feeling the corrosiue and secret pricke of conscience, for that King

Richard

A Richard by his meanes was injustly deposed, and besides taking at the heart indignantly, that Edmund Mortimer Earle of March the true and undoubted heire of the Kingdome and his neere ally, was neglected in prison, he conceiued inward enemitie, grieuously complaining, and charging him with periury, that whereas hee had solemnly sworne to him, and others that he would not challenge the Crowne, but onely his owne inheritance, and that King Richard should be governed during his life by the good aduice of the Peeres of the realme: he to the contrarie, had by imprisonment, & terror of death enforced him to resigne his Crowne; & vsurped the same, by the concurrence of his faction horribly murthering the said King, & defraud-
B ding Edmund Mortimer Earle of March of his lawfull right to the Crowne, whom he had suffred to languish long in prison vnder Owen Glendowr; reputing those traitours, who with their owne money had procured his enlargement. After the publication of these complaints, he confident in the promises of his confederates, who yet failed him, sent his brother Thomas Earle of Worcester, and his couragious sonne Henrie surnamed Hot-Spurre, with a powre of men against the King, who both lost their lifes at the battaile of Shrewsbury. Whereupon he was proclaimed Traitour & attainted; but shortly after by a kind of conuiuency receiued againe into the Kings fauour (unto whom hee was a terror) yea and restored too all his lands and goods, saue onely the Isle of Man, which the King resumed into his owne hands. Howbeit within
C a while after, being now become popular and over forward to entertaine new designes, and having procured the Scots to bandy and joine with him in armes, himselfe in person entred with banner displaied into the field against the King as an Vsurper, and on a sudden at Barrhammore in a tumultuary skirmish in the yeere 1408. was discomfited and slaine by Thomas Rokesby the high Sherife of Yorke-shire. Eleven yeeres after, Henrie this mans nephew by his sonne Henrie Hote-Spur (whose mother was Elizabeth daughter to Edmund Mortimer the elder, Earle of March, by Philippa the daughter of Leonel Duke of Clarence) was restored in bloud and inheritance by authority of Parliament, in the time of King Henrie the Fifth: which D Henrie Percy, whiles he stoutly maintained King Henrie the Sixth his part against the house of Yorke, was slaine at the battaile of Saint Albans, like as his sonne Henrie, the third Earle of Northumberland, who married Aeleonor the daughter of Richard Lord Poinings, Brian, and Fitz-Payn, in the same quarell lost his life in the battaile at Towton, in the yeere 1461. The house of Lancaster being now kept under and downe the wind, and the Percies with it troden under foot, King Edward the Fourth, made Iohn Nevill Lord Montacute, Earle of Northumberland: but he after a while surrendred this title into the Kings hands, and was created by him Marquesse Montacute. After this, Henrie Percy, the sonne of Henrie Percy aforesaid, recouering the fauour of King Edward the Fourth obtained restitution in bloud & heriditaments, who in the reigne of Henrie the Seventh was slaine by the country people, that a-E bout a certaine levie of money exacted by an Act of Parliament, rose up against the Collectours and Assessours thereof. After him succeeded Henrie Percy the fifth Earle, whose sonne Henrie by a daughter and Coheire of Sir Robert Spenser, and Æleonor the daughter likewise and Coheire of Edmund Beaufort Duke of Somerset, was the sixth Earle; who (having no children, and his brother Thomas being executed for taking armes against King Henrie the Eighth in the first difference about religion) as if now that family had beene at a finall end for ever) prodigally gave away a great part of that most goodly inheritance unto the King and other. Some few yeeres after, Sir Iohn Dudley Earle of Warwicke got to himselfe the title of Duke of Northumberland by the name of Iohn Earle of Warwicke, Marshall of England, Vicount Lisle, Baron Somery, Basset, and Ties, Lord of Dudley, Great Master, and Steward of the F Kings house; when as in the tender age of King Edward the Sixth, the Chieftaines and leaders of the factions, shared titles of honour among themselves, their fautors, and followers. This was that Duke of Northumberland, who for the time, like unto a tempestuous whirlewind, beganne to shake and teare the publicke peace of the state, state, whiles he with vast ambition plotted & practised to exclude Marie and Elizabeth the daughters of King Henrie the Eighth from their lawfull right of succession, and to set the Emperiall Crowne vpon Lady Iane Grey, his daughter in law (being seconded therein by the great Lawyers who are alwaies forward enough to humour and sooth up those that be in highest place). For which, being attainted of high treason, he lost his head, and at his execution embraced and publickly professed Poperie, which long before either seriously or colorably for his own advantage, he had renounced. When he was gone, Queene Marie restored Thomas Percy nephew unto Henrie, the sixth Earle, by his brother Thomas, unto his bloud, and by a new Patent created him, first, Baron Percy, and anon, Earle of Northumberland, to himselfe and the heires males of his body, and for default thereof, to his brother Henrie and his heires males. But this Thomas the seventh Earle, for his treason to Prince and Country, under maske of restoring the Romish religion againe, lost both life and dignity in the yeere 1572. Yet, through the singular favour and bounty of Queene Elizabeth, according to that Patent of Queene Marie, his brother Henrie succeeded after him, as the eight Earle. Who in the yeere 1585. ended his daies in prison, and had for his successor, Henrie his sonne by Katherin the eldest daughter and one of the heires of John Nevill Lord Latimer, the ninth Earle of Northumberland, of this family.

Iohn Harding Manuscript.

3. & 4. Philip and Marie.

A B C D E F

Parishes in Northumberland about 46.

SCOT-LAND.

SCOT

LAND.

A

B

SCOTLAND.

C NOw am I come to SCOTLAND, and willingly I assure you, will I enter into it; but withall lightly passe over it. For, I remember well that said saw, In places not wel knowne, lesse while we must stay: as also the Admonition of that Grecian, ΞΕΝΟΣ ΩΝ ΑΠΡΑΓΜΩΝ ΙΣΘΙ. that is, Art thou a stranger? Be no Medler. And verily I should play an unadvised part, if I would insist long in that, wherein Iam but little conversant. But yet, seeing Scotland also ioieth in the name of BRITAINE, let it be lawfull for mee (reserving the due honour to the Scotish) according to my purpose, having, boldly undertaken to illustrate BRITAN, to proceed with their good favour, leaue

D and licence, and by withdrawing a side in some sort the curtaine of obscure antiquity, to point out with my finger, if I shalbe able, some places of ancient note, and memorie. Certes, I assure my selfe that I shall bee easily pardoned in this point, the people themselues are so courtuous and well meaning, and the happinesse of these daies so rare and admirable, since that by a divine and heauenly opportunity is now fallen into our laps, which wee hardly ever hoped, and our Ancestours so often and so earnestly wished: Namely, that Britaine so many ages disioigned in it selfe and unsociable, should all throughout like one uniforme City, under one most sacred and happie Monarch, the

E founder of perpetuall peace, by a blessed Vnion bee conjoyned in one entire bodie. Who beeing through the propitious goodnesse of Almighty God elected, borne, and preserved to the good of both nations; as hee is a Prince of singular wisdome and providence, and fatherly affected to all his subiects, doth so cut off all causes and occasions of feare, of hope, of revenge, complaint, and quarell, that the dismale DISCORD which hath set these nations (otherwise invincible) so long at debate, might be stiffled, and crushed for ever; and sweet CONCORD triumph ioyously with endlesse comfort, when (as one sometime sung this tenour) Iam cuncti Gens una su-

F mus, that is, Wee all one nation are this day, whereunto as a Chorus both nations resound, Et simus in ævum, that is, God grant wee may so bee for aye.

But before my penne commeth to Scotland, thus much I thinke it good to advertise the reader afore hand, that I leaue the first originall of the Scottish nation to their own Hiſtorians: alſo the primitiue derivation of their name, to the learned among them baniſhing al conjectures whatſoever of others, which either haſty credulity or careleſſe negligence hath forged, as well in the late foregoing age, as in theſe our daies. And according to the ſame order which I kept before in England, I will premiſe ſome few lines, touching the Diviſion of Scotland, the States of the Kingdome, and the Tribunalls or Courts of Iuſtice: then, will I breifly touch the ſituations and Commodities of the ſoile in every ſeverall Region: what places there bee of greater fame and name, & what families more noble & notable than the reſt, haue moſt flouriſhed with the title and honour of Earles and Barons of the Parliament, ſo farre forth, as hitherto I could finde by reading or enquiry: And that ſo circumſpectly with ſuch an honeſt deſire and ſincere affection to truth, that I hope I ſhal not giue offence to the malicious; and with ſo compendious brevity, that I will not prevent their curious diligence, who are in hand to ſet out theſe matters with a fuller penſill, and to poliſh the ſame with more liuelie and laſting collours.

A

B

C

D

THE

E

F

DEUCALEDONIUS

OCEANUS

MARE HIBERNI

IRLANDIAE siue HIBER

NIAE PARS

ORCA

Pfoul skarie

Ardquhyrtr

Cap Wraight or Faro head

Herreford

Colme

Glan

Ardurne

Stra

Durnes

Laxfard

Handa

Killa

Gelle Sound

Bay Inchcolm

Foylles

Asinsloir

Kelsking

Allerot

Montes marmor

Kikaill

Skirasyn

Reurn

Alsin

Ardnaglas

Shyre

L. Brunne

Esbrew

Ossill

Ellan

Grunford

Zutz

Salm

Feuris

Brun

Roſ

Cogr

outh

L Lang

Kintaill

Gleneg

Loquha

L Orne

Sell

L Ark

L Louth

Montes Alabastri

Ard

bria

Cuthaber

Meer

Bay Irain

Ardermouth beach

Muk

Cannuyll

Maead

Beyer

Brig

Dunſtaffag

Lorna

Bregard

Grampi

Albayr

Lomhill

Argadia

Kylſaran

Madaw

Kelmont

Rosay

Ca

Arie

Dunwig ca

Gillecia ren

Ar

Sanda

Landallach

Dunwarg

Ardun

Cuſ

Gudsen ca

Caillo

Bargon

Blaqi

Barricta

Belche

Gallo

Gregargan

Penwlohn

Whithorne

Novantum promont

Estuarium Glotta

Dumbritan

CUM

Ila Insula Weſha

Giruard

Grume ca

Kilman

Colanzay

Oronsay

Skarba

Jone Inſ

Terrey

Ulway

Mula

MALEOS

Colleen

Scail

Erth

Barray

St Petrus

Brog

St Columbanus

Gilwall

HEBRI

DES

Insulæ

Eſsir

Stig

St Maria

Cannay

Dunſka ca

Brag

Knockeam

Tauncam

Scalpa

Skye

Valturneſs

St Patricius

Eſlan

EBU

DES

siue

Waterneſs

Dunbegan ca

St Clement

Quert

Boyn

Scalpa

Bladda

Trantu nes ca

Tranto

St Nicolaus

Altauik

Durin

Shent

Barray mynor

Barray maior

Dailnes ang

Radama ch

Leuis

St Columbanus

Rona

Nary

B Trande

St Stornwa

SCOTIA Regnum

MARE Septen-trionale

GERMANI-CUS

OCCIDENS

ORIENS

MERIDIES

Stronza
Rosa Pomona
Southrowsa Insula Penthland
skerry Aquernia
Cathnes
Fresik ca
Keys Wick Dunberth ca
Bartdail ca
Brora Clyne LITTVS ALTUM
PORTUS SALVTIS Tarbart
Tinlater ca
Rattry brigges
Newhall
Ainzia
Boena Buquhan Peterpolle
Buquhanes
Skarra
Slanes ca
Fuern ca
Strathdone ca
Strath Done
Tay flu Aberdone
Dee flu
Mosutak
Couy
Dumnatur ca
Badgenoth
Red ca
Athole
Perth
TAVS Æstuarium Andreas Bas skoldes
Dunbar ca
East ca
Haimouth Lamerton
Barwick Lethoxia
Laudonia
Howyn ca
Norham ca
Holy Il
Cubaly ca Durbrug
Cornwal
Padston Lanarkdaill Lanarktoun
Hawik
Twede flu Jedburt Capup Jedgarton Wheelkirk Hermitage Elighies
Mangerton Canonby Kirkpicticus
New caste
Tyne flu
Carlisle
Solway flu
ANGLIAE
PARS Mitharea Scotia
Gulf
Holz sculp

A

THE DIVISION OF SCOTLAND.

THe North part of the Iſland of Britaine, was of old time inhabited through out by the Picts, who were divided into two Nations, The DICALIDONII, and VECTVRIONES: of whom I haue ſpoken alreadie out of Ammianus Marcellinus. But when the Scots, became Lords and Rulers over all this part, it was ſhared into ſeven partes among ſeven Princes; as wee finde in a little ancient pamphlet, touching the diviſion of Scotland, in theſe words, and old names.

B

C

The firſt part conteined Enegus and Maern.
The ſecond, Atheodl and Goverin.
The third Stradeern with Meneted.
The fourth was Forthever.
The fift, Mar with Buchen.
The ſixth, Muref and Ros.
The ſeaventh, Cathanes, which, Mound, a mountaine in the mideſt divideth, running on forward from the Weſt ſea to the Eaſt.

Then afterwardes the ſame author reporteth, according to the relation of Andrew Biſhop of Cathanes, that the whole kingdome was divided likewiſe into ſeaven Territories.

D

The firſt from Frith, in the Britiſh tongue, called by the Romans Worid, and now Scotwade, to the river Tae.
The ſecond, to Hilef, according as the ſea fetcheth a compaſſe, to a mountaine in the North-eaſt-part of Strivelin named Athran.
The third from Hilef to Dee.
The fourth from Dee to the the river Spe.
The fifth from Spe, to the mountaine Brunalban.
The ſixth Mures and Ros.
The ſeventh, the kingdome Argathel, as it were the border and skirt of the Scots. Who were ſo called of Gathelgas their captaine.

E

Alſo according to the habitation of the people, Scotland is now divided into Highlandmen and Lawland-men: Theſe being more civil uſe the Engliſh language and apparaill: the other which are rude & unruly, ſpeake Iriſh, & go apparailed Iriſhlike, as I haue already ſaid. Out of this diviſion I exclude the Borderers, becauſe by reaſon of peace ſhining now upon them on every ſide, by a bleſſed and happy Vnion they are to bee ranged and reckoned in the very heart and mideſt of the Britiſh Empire, as who beginne to bee weary of warres and to acquaint them ſelues with the delightfull benefits of peace.

Highland-men. Lawland-men. Borderers.

F

Moreover, according to the ſituation and poſition of the places the whole kingdome is divided into two partes: the South, on this ſide the river Tay, and the North beyond Tay, beſides a number of Iſlands lying round about. In the South part theſe countries are more remarkeable then the reſt.

Teifidale.	Arran.
Merch.	Cluydesdale.
Lauden.	Lennox.
Liddesdale.	Stirling.
Eskedale.	Fife.
Annandale.	Strathern.
Niddesdale.	Menteith.
Gilloway.	Argile.
Carrick.	Cantire.
Kyle.	Lorn.
Cunningham.

A

B

In the North part are reckoned these Countries.

Loquabrea.	Buquhan.
Braidalbin.	Murray.
Perth.	Rosse.
Athol.	Sutherland.
Anguish.	Cathanes.
Mern.	Strathnauern.
Marr.

C

These are subdivided againe according to their civill government into counties which they cal Shiriffdomes, Senschalsies, commonly Stewarties, and Bailiwickes Or Bailerries.

Counties or Shiriffedomes.	Edenburgh.	Perth.
	Linlythquo.	Clackmannan.
	Selkirk.	Kinros.
	Roxburgh.	Fife.
	Peblis.	Kincardin.
	Berwick.	Forfair.
	Lanark.	Aberdene.
	Renfrew.	Bamff.
	Dunfreis.	Elgin.
	Wighton.	Forres.
	Aire.	Narne.
	Bute.	Innerness.
	Argyleand.	Cromartie.
	Tarbet.	Orknay and
	Dunbarton.	Shetland.

D

E

Seneschalsies or Stewarties. Menteith. Strahern. — Kircudbricht. Annandall.

Bailywickes or Baileries. Kile. Carick. Cunningham.

Hadington, a Constablerie.

Bishopricks. As touching the administration of that divine citie and common wealth, which we terme the Church, like as the Bishops in all the world besides, had no certaine diœceses, before that Dionisius Bishop of Rome about the yeere 268. did set out diœceses for Bishops: so the Bishops of Scotland executed their Episcopall functions in what place soever they came, indifferently, and without distinction, untill the time of King Malcolm the Third, that is, about the yeere of our redemption 1070. at which time the diœceses were confined within their bounds and limits.

F

After-

A Afterwards, in proceſſe of time: this Hierarchie, or Eccleſiaſticall government was eſtabliſhed in Scotland. Two Archbiſhops, one of Saint Andrews, the other of Gaſco: whereof the former is counted Primate of all Scotland: Vnder whom there be eight Biſhoprickes.

Dunkeld. Brechin.
Aberdon. Roſſe.
Murray. Cathanes.
Dunblan. Orkney.

B Vnder the Archbiſhop of Glaſco there be onely three.

* Candida Caſa, or Galloway. * Whiterne.
Liſmore, or Argile.
The Iles.

THE STATES OR DEGREES OF SCOTLAND.

C The Republicke or Common-wealth of the Scots, like as that of Engliſhmen, conſiſteth of a King, the Nobility, or Gentry, and Commons.

The King, that I may uſe the words of their owne Records is Directus totius Dominus, that is, The Direct Lord of the whole Domaine or Dominion, and hath roiall authority and iuriſdiction over all the States and degrees, as well Eccleſiaſticall as Lay, or Temporall.

Next unto the King is his eldeſt ſonne, who is called PRINCE OF SCOTLAND, and by a peculiar right, Duke of Rothſay, and Seneſchall, or Steward of Scotland. But all the reſt of the Kings children are named ſimply Princes.

Among the Nobles, the greateſt and moſt honorable were in old time, The Thanes.
D Thanes, that is, thoſe who (if my iudgement be ought) were ennobled onely by the office which they adminiſtred. For, the word, in the ancient Engliſh Saxon tongue, ſignifieth, The Kings Miniſter. Of theſe, they of the ſuperior place were called Abthans: the inferior, Vnder Thanes. But theſe names by little and little grew out of uſe, ever ſince that King Malcolm the third, conferred the titles of Earles and Barons, after the maner receaued from the Engliſh, upon Noble men of good deſert. Since when, in proceſſe of time, new titles of honors were much taken up, and Scotland as E wel as England, hath had Dukes, Marqueſſes, Earles, Vicounts and Barons. As for the title of Duke, the firſt that brought it into Scotland, was King Robert the third about the yeere of Salvation 1400: like as the Honorable titles of Marqueſſe and Vicount, were firſt brought in by our moſt gracious Soveraigne King Iames the Sixth. Theſe are counted Nobles of the higher degree, and have, both place and voice in the Parliaments, and by a ſpeciall name are called Lords, like as alſo the Biſhops.

Among the Nobles of a lower degree, in the firſt place are ranged Knights who Knights.
verily are doubbed with greater ſolemnity than in any other place throughout all Lairds.
Europe, by taking of an oth, and are proclaimed by the publicke voice of an Heralt. Gentlemen.
Of a ſecond ſort are they who are tearmed Lairds and Barons; among whom none
F were reckoned in old time but ſuch as held immediatly from the King, lands in Chef, and had jus furcarum, that is, powre to hang &c. In the third place are all ſuch as being deſcended from worſhipfull houſes, and not ſignall with any eſpeciall dignitie, be tearmed Gentlemen. All the reſt, as Citizens, Merchants, Artiſans, &c. are reputed among the Commons.

THE

A

THE IVDICATORIES or COVRTES OF IVSTICE.

Parliament.

THe ſupreme Court as well for dignity as authority, is accounted the Aſſembly of the States of the Kingdome, which is called by the very ſame name, as it is in England, A Parliament: and hath the ſame very power as abſolute. It conſiſteth of three States, of B Lords Spirituall, namely Biſhops, Abbots, and Priors: and of Lords Temporall, to wit Dukes, Marqueſſes, Earles, Vicounts and Barons: and Commiſſioners for Cities and Burghs. Vnto whom were adjoined not long ſince, for every County alſo two cõmiſſioners. It is appointed and ſolemnly called by the King at his pleaſure, at a certaine ſet time, before it beo holden. When theſe States above ſaid are aſſembled, and the cauſes of their aſſembly delivered by the King or the Chancellour; the Lords Spirituall chooſe out apart by themſelues eight of the Lords Temporall. Semblably, the Lords Temporall make choiſe of as many out of the Lords Spirituall. Then, the ſame all jointly together nominate eight of the Commiſſioners for the Counties, and as many of the Commiſ- C ſioners for the free Bouroughs regall, which make up in all the number of 32. And then, theſe * Lords of the Articles (ſo they are termed) together with the Chancellor, Treaſurer, Keeper of the Privy Seale, Kings Secretarie &c. doe admit or reiect, everie bill propoſed unto the States, after they have beene firſt imparted unto the King. Being allowed, by the whole aſſembly of the States, they are throughly weighed and examined: and ſuch of them as paſſe by the greater number of voices, are exhibited unto the King; who by touching them with his Scepter, pronounceth that he either ratifieth and approveth them, or diſableth and maketh the ſame void: But if any thing diſliketh the King, it is raſed out before.

* Domini pro Articulis.

The Second Court, or next unto the Parliament, is the Colledge of Iuſtice, or as D they call it, The Seſſion, which, King Iames the Fifth 1532. inſtituted after the forme of the Parliament of Paris, conſiſting of a Preſident, 14. Senatours, ſeven of the Cleargie? and as many of the Laity (unto whom was adjoined afterward the Chancellor, who hath the chiefe place, and five other Senatours) three principall Scribes or Clerkes, and as many Advocates as the Senatours ſhall thinke good. Theſe ſit and miniſter Iuſtice, not according to the rigor of law, but with reaſon & equity, every day (ſave onely on the Lords day and Monday) from the firſt of November to the fiftenth of March; & from Trinity Sunday unto the firſt Calends of Auguſt. All the ſpace betweene, as being the times of ſowing, and harveſt, is vacation, and inter- E miſſion of all ſuits and law matters. They give judgement according to the Parliament Statuts and Municipall lawes; & where they are defectiue, they haue recourſe to the Imperiall ciuill law.

The Seſſion.

There are beſides in every County inferiour civill Iudicatories or Courts kept, wherein the Sheriffe of the ſhire, or his deputy, decideth the controverſies of the inhabitants, about violent Eiections, intruſions, dammages, debts &c. From which Courts and judges, in regard of hard and unequall dealing, or elſe of alliance & partiality, they appeale ſometime to the Seſſion. Theſe Sheriffes are all for the moſt part hereditary. For, the Kings of Scots, like as of England alſo, to oblige more ſurely unto them the better ſort of Gentlemen by their benefits and favours, made F in old time theſe Sheriffes, heritable and perpetuall. But the Engliſh Kings ſoone perceiving the inconveniences thereby enſuing, of purpoſe changed this order and appointed them, from yeere to yeere. There be civill Courts alſo in every regality, holden by their Bailives to whom the Kings haue graciouſly granted roialties: as alſo in free Bourroughs, by the Magiſtrates thereof.

There are likewiſe Iudicatories, which they call Commiſſariats, the higheſt wherof

is

A is kept at Edenburgh: in which, before foure Iudges, actions are pleaded, concerning Willes, and Testaments, the right of Ecclesiasticall benefices, Tithes, Diuorces, and such other Ecclesiasticall causes. In every other severall part almost throughout the Kingdome, there sitteth but one judge alone in a place about these matters.

In Criminall causes, the Kings chiefe Iustice holdeth his Court for the most part at Edenburgh (which office the Earles of Argile have executed now for some yeeres.) And he doth depute two or three Lawyers, who have the hearing and deciding of Capitall actions concerning life and death, or of such as inferre losse of lims, or of all goods. In this Court, the Defendant is permitted, yea in case of high trea- Courts of Criminall matters.
B son, to entertaine a Counsellor or advocate to pleade his cause.

Moreover, in Criminall matters there are sometimes by vertue of the Kings commission and authority, Iustices appointed for the deciding of this or that particular cause.

Also, the Sheriffes in their territories, and Magistrates in some Burghs, may sit in judgement, of Man slaughter (in case the man-sleere be taken within 24. houres after the deede committed) and being found guilty by a Iury, put him to death; But if that time be once overpast, the cause is referred and put over to the Kings Iustice, or his Deputies. The same priviledge also some of the Nobility and gentry enjoy, against theeves taken within their owne iurisdictions. There be likewise that haue
C such Roialties, as that in Criminall causes they may exercise a iurisdiction within their owne limits, and in some cases, recall those that dwell within their owne limits and liberties from the Kings Iustice: howbeit with a caution and proviso interposed, That they iudge according to Law.

Thus much briefely haue I put downe, as one that hath but sleightly looked into these matters, yet by the information of the iudicious Knight Sir Alexander Hay, his Maiesties Secretarie for that Kingdome who hath therein given me good light. But as touching SCOTLAND, what a noble Country it is, and what men it breedeth (as sometimes the Geographer wrote of Britaine) there will within a while more certaine and more evident matter be deliuered; since that most high and mighty Prince hath set it
D open now for vs, which had so long time beene shut from vs. Meane while I will come unto the description of Places, the proiect that I intended especially.

GADENI, or LADENI.

E VPon the Ottadini, or Northumberland, bordered as next neighbours the ΓΑΔΕΝΟΙ, that is, GADENI, who also by the inversion or turning of one letter upside downe, are called in some Copies of Ptolomee LADENI, seated in that country which lieth betweene the mouth of the river Twede and Edenburgh Forth: and is at this day divided into many pety countries: the chiefe whereof, are Teifidale, Twedale Merch, and Lothien, in Latine Lodeneium, under which one generall name alone, the writers of the middle time compriſed all the reſt.

TEIFIDALE.

F TEifidale that is to say, the Vale by the river Tefie, or Teuiat, lying next unto England among the edges of high craggy hilles, is inhabited by a warlicke nation, which by reason of so many encounters in foregoing ages betweene Scotish & Englisſh, are alwaies most ready for service & sudden invasions. The first place among these that we meete with, is Iedburgh, a Bourrough well inhabited and frequented, standing neere unto the confluence of Teifie and Ied, whereof it tooke the name: also Mailros, a very ancient Monastery, A wherein at the beginning of our Church were cloistered Monkes of that ancient order and institution, that gaue themselues to praier, and with their hand labour earned their living; which holy King David restored and repleniſhed with Ciſtertian Roxburgh. Monkes. And more Eastward, where Twede and Teifie joine in one streame, Rosburg sheweth it selfe, called also Roxburg, and in old time MARCHIDVN, becauſe it was a towne in the Marches; where stands a Castle, that for naturall situation, and towred fortifications was in times past exceeding strong. Which beeing surpriſed and held by the Engliſh, whiles Iames the Second King of Scots encircled it with a siege, hee was by a peece of a great ordinance that brake, slaine untimely in the B very floure of his youth, a Prince much miſſed and lamented of his subjects. As for the castle, it was yeelded; and beeing then for the moſt part of it laied even with the ground, is now in manner quite vaniſhed and not to beeseene. The Territory adjoyning, called of it, the Sherifdom of Roxburg, hath one hereditarie Sheriffe, out of the familie of the Douglaſſes, who is usually called the Shrif of Teviot Dale. And now hath Roxburg also a Baron, Robert Kerr, through the favour of King Iames the Sixth out of the family of the Kerrs, a famous houſe and spred into a number of branches as any one in that tract: out of which the Fernherſts and others inured in martiall feats, haue beene of great name.

of

Twede afore said, runneth through the middeſt of a Dale taking name of it, repleniſhed with sheepe, that beare wooll of great requeſt. A very goodly river this C is, which springing more inwardly Eastward, after it hath paſſed, as it were, in a streight chanell, by Drimlar Castle; by Peblis a mercate towne which hath for the Sherif thereof Baron Zeſter, like as Selkirk hard by, hath another out of the familie of Murray of Fallohill, enterteineth Lauder a riveret, at which appeereth Lauder, together with Thirleſtan: where stands a very faire houſe of Sir Iohn Mettellan late Chancellor of Scotland, whom for his singular wiſdome King Iames the sixth created Baron of Thirleſtan. Then Twede beneath Roxburg, augmented with the river of Teviot reſorting unto him, watereth the Sherifdom of Berwick throughout, a great part whereof is poſſeſſed by the Humes (wherein the cheife man of that famiD lie exerciſeth now the iuriſdiction of a Sherif) and so paſſeth under Berwick the strongeſt towne of Britain (whereof I haue spoken already) where he is exceeding ful of Salmons, and so diſembogeth it selfe into the sea.

MERCHIA, MERCH or MERS.

MERCH which is next, and so named becauſe it is a march country, lieth wholy upon the German sea. In this, first Hume CaE stle sheweth it selfe, the ancient poſſeſſion of the Lords of Home or Hume, who beeing deſcended from the familie of the Earles of Merch, are growne to be a noble and faire spred familie: out of which, Alexander Hume, who before was the first Baron of Scotland and Sherif of Berwick, was of late advanced by Iames
Earle Hume. King of great Britaine to the title of Earle Hume. Neere unto which lieth Kelso, faKelso. mous sometime for the monastery, which with thirteene others, King David the First of that name built out of the ground for the propagation of Gods glory, but to the great empairing of the crowne land.

Coldingham. Then is to be seene Coldingham, which Bede calleth, the City Coldana, and the city
Colania. of Coludum, happily COLANIA mentioned by Ptolomee, a place conſecrated many F ages since unto profeſſed Virgins or Nunnes, whoſe chaſtity is recorded in ancient bookes. For that they together with Ebba their Prioreſſe, cut off their owne noſes and lips, chooſing rather to preſerue their virginity from the Danes, than their beauty and favour: and yet for all that, the Danes burnt their monaſterie and them with all. Hard by is Faſt-caſtle, a castle of the Lords Humes; so called, for their firmeneſſe

and

A and ſtrength thereof, at the Promontory of the ſaid Saint Ebbe, who beeing the daughter of Edilfria King of Northumberland, when her father was taken priſoner, got hold of a boat in Humber, and paſſing along the raging Ocean landed heere in ſafty, became renowned for her ſanctimonie, and left her name unto the place. But this Merch, is mentioned in the Hiſtoriographers a great deale more for the Earles thereof, than for any places therein: who for martiall proeſſe were highly renowned, and deſcended from Goſpatricke Earle of Northumberland, whom after he was fled from William Conqueror of England, Malcom Canmor, that is, With the great Head, King of Scotland, entertained, enriched him with the caſtle of Dunbar, and honored with the Earldome of Merch. Whoſe poſterity, beſids other goodly & faire lands
B in Scotland, held (as appeereth plainly in an old Inquiſition) the Baronie of Bengeley in Northumberland, that they ſhould be Inborrow, and Vtborrow, betweene England and Scotland. What the meaning ſhould be of theſe tearmes let others gueſſe; what my conjecture is I have ſaid already. In the reigne of King Iames the Firſt, George de Dunbar Earle of Merch, by authority of Parliament, for his fathers rebellion loſt the Propriety and poſſeſſion both of the Earldome of Merch, and the Seignorie of Dunbar. And when as he proved by good evidences and writings brought forth, that his father had beene pardoned for that fault by the Regents of the Kingdome, he was anſwered againe, that it was not in the Regents powre to pardon an offence againſt the State; and that it was expreſſely provided by the lawes, that children
C ſhould vndergoe puniſhment for their fathers tranſgreſſions, to the end that being thus heires to their fathers raſhnes, as they are to their goods and lands, they ſhould not at any time in the haughty pride of their owne powre, plot any treaſon againſt Prince or country. This title of Earle of March, among other honorable titles was given afterward to Alexander Duke of Albanie, and by him forfaited. And in our remembrance, this title of honor was revived againe in Robert, the third brother of Mathew Earle of Lennox, who being of a Biſhop of Cathanes made Earle of Lennox, reſigned up that title ſoone after unto his nephew, then created Duke of Lennox: and he himſelf in lieu thereof received of the King the name and ſtile of the Earle of Merch.

D

LAVDEN, or LOTHIEN.

E LOTHIEN, which is alſo called Lauden, named in times paſt, of the Picts, Pictland, ſhooteth out along from Merch, unto the Scottiſh ſea, or the Forth, having many hilles in it, & little wood; but for fruitfull cornfields, for courteſie alſo and civility of manners, commended above all other countries of Scotland. About the yeere of our ſalvation 873. Eadgar King of England (betweene whom and Keneth the third, King of Scots, there was a great knot of alliance againſt the Danes common enimies to them both) reſigned up his right unto him in this Lothien, as Matthew the * Flour- * Florilegus.
gatherer witneſſeth: and to winne his heart the more unto him, He gave unto him many manſions in the way, wherein both he and his ſucceſſours, in their comming unto the Kings of England and in returne homeward might be lodged: which unto the time of King Henrie the Second continued in the hands of the Kings of Scotland. In this Lothien, the first place that offereth it ſelfe unto our ſight upon the ſea ſide is Dunbar, a paſſing ſtrong caſtle in old time, and the ſeat of the Earles of Merch aforeſaid, who thereup-
F on were called Earles of Dunbar: a Peece many a time wonne by Engliſh, and as often recovered by the Scotiſh. But in the yeere 1567. by authority of the States in Parliament it was demoliſhed, becauſe it ſhould not be an hold and place of refuge for rebels. But Iames King of great Britaine conferred the title & honor of Earle of Dunbar, upon Sir George Hume for his approved fidelity, whom he had created before Baron Hume of Barwicke, to him, his heires, and Aſsignes. Hard by, Tine a little river after it hath runne a ſhort race, falleth into the ſea; neere unto the ſpring-head whereof, ſtandeth Zeiſter, which hath his Baron out of the family of the Haies Earles of Aroll, who alſo is by inheritance Sherife of the little territorie of Tweddall or Peblis. By the ſame riveret, ſome few miles higher, is ſeated Hadington or Hadina, in a wide and broad plaine: which towne the Engliſh fortified with a deepe and large ditch, with a mure or rampier alſo without, foure ſquare, and with foure bulwarks at the corners, and with as many other at the inner wall: & Sir James Wilford an Engliſh man valiantly defended it againſt Deſsie the Frenchman, who with tenne thouſand French and Dutch together fiercely aſſaulted it, untill that by reaſon of the plague which grew hote among the gariſon-ſouldiers, Henrie Earle of Rutland comming with a roiall armie, raiſed the ſiege, removed the French, and having laid the munitions levell, conducted the Engliſh home. And now of late, King Iames the ſixth, hath ranged Sir Iohn Ramſey among the Nobles of Scotland, with title and honour of Vicount Hadington, for his faithfull valour; as whoſe RIGHT HAND was the DEFENDER OF PRINCE & COVNTRY, in that moſt wicked conſpiracie of the Gowrees againſt the Kings perſon. Touching this Hadington, thus hath Maiſter I. Ionſton verſified. A B 1548.

Lauden.

Earles of Dunbar.

ver

Vicount Hadington.

Planities prætenſa iacet prope flumina Tinæ,
Fluminis arguti clauditur iſta ſinu.
Vulcani & Martis quæ paſſa incendia, fati
Ingemit alterno vulnere fracta vices
Nunc tandem ſapit icta. Dei præcepta ſequuta
Præſidio gaudet iam potiore Poli.

Before it, lies a ſpatious plaine, the Tine his ſtreame hard by,
In boſome of that river ſhrill, this towne enclos'd doth lie.
Which having ſuffered grievous ſmart of fire and ſword by turnes,
Grones under theſe misfortunes much, and for her loſſes mournes.
But now at length ſelfe-harmes have made it wiſe, and by Gods lore Directed, helpe it hath from heaven which ſteedeth it much more. C D Athelſtanford.

Within a little of Hadington ſtandeth Athelſtanford, ſo called of Athelſtane a chiefe leader of the Engliſh, ſlaine there with his men about the yeere 815. But, that he ſhould be that warlicke Athelſtane which was King of the Weſt-Saxons, both the account of the times and his owne death doe manifeſtly controule it.

Above the mouth of this Tine, in the very bending of the ſhore ſtandeth Tantallon Caſtle; from whence Archibald Douglaſſe Earle of Angus wrought Iames the fifth, King of Scots, much teen and trouble. Heere by retyring backe of the ſhores on both ſides is roome made for a moſt noble arme of the ſea, and the ſame well furniſhed with Ilands, which by reaſon of many rivers encountring it by the way, and the tides of the ſurging ſea together, ſpreadeth exceeding broad; Ptolomee calleth it BODERIA, TACITVS BODOTRIA, of the depth, as I gueſſe; the Scots. The Forth and Frith, we Edenburgh Frith; others, the Freſian ſea and the Scotiſh Sea, and the Eulogium, Morwiridh. Vpon this, after you be paſt Tantallon, are ſeated, firſt, North-Berwicke, a famous place ſometime, for an houſe there of religious Virgins: & then Dyrlton, which belonged in times paſt to the notable family of the Haliburtons, & now to S. Thomas Ereskin Captain of the gard whom Iames K. of great Britain for his happy valour in preſerving him againſt the traiterous attempts of Gowrye firſt created Baron of Dirlton, and afterward advanced him to the honorable title of Vicount Felton, making him the firſt Vicount that ever was in Scotland. Againſt theſe places, there lieth in the ſea, not farre from the ſhore, the Iland Bas, which riſeth up, as it were, all one craggy rocke and the ſame upright & ſteep on every ſide: yet hath it a Blockhouſe belonging to it; a fountaine alſo and paſtures: but it is ſo holowed with the waves working upon it, that it is almoſt pierced thorough. What a multitude of ſea foules, and eſpecially of thoſe geeſe which they call Scoutes and Soland E F

Bodotria.

Tantallon.

Dyrlton.

Vicount Felton.

geeſe

A geese, flocke hither at their times (for, by report, their number is such, that in a cleare day they take away the sunnes light) what a sort of fishes they bring (for, as the speech goeth, a hundred garizon souldiours that heere lay for defense of the place, fed upon no other meat but the fresh fish that they brought in) what a quantity of sticks and little twigges they get togither for the building of their nests, so that by their means the inhabitants are abundantly provided of fewell for their fire; what a mighty gaine groweth by their fethers and oyle: the report thereof is so incredible, that no man scarcely would beleeue it, but he that had seene it. Soland Geese which seeme to be Plinies Picarinæ.

Then, as the shore draweth backe, Seton sheweth it selfe; which seemeth to haue taken that name of the situation by the sea side, and to haue imparted the same un- Seton.
B to a right noble house of the Setons branched out of an English family, and from the daughter of King Robert Brus: out of which, the Marquesse Huntley, Robert Earle of Wentoun, Alexander Earle of Dunfirmling, advanced to honors by King Iames the Sixth, are propagated. Earle of Wentoun.

After this, the river Eske dischargeth it selfe into this Frith when it hath runne by Borthwic (which hath Barons surnamed according to that name, and those deriving their pedigree out of Hungarie) by Newbottle, that is, The new building, some- Borthwick. Newbottle.
times a faire monasterie, now the Baronie of Sir Marke Ker: by Dalkeith, a very plea- Dalkeith.
sant habitation of the late Earles of Morton, and Musselborow hard under which, in Musselborow.
the yeere of our Lord 1547, when Sir Edward Seimor Duke of Somerset, with an
C armie roiall had entred Scotland to claime and chalenge the keeping of a covenant made, concerning a marriage betweene Marie Queene of Scotland, and Edward the Sixth King of England, there hapned the heavieste day that ever fell to the adventurous youth of the most noble families in all Scotland, who there lost their liues. Heere I must not overpasse in silence this inscription, which Iohn Napier a learned man, hath in his Commentaries upon the Apocalyps recorded to haue beene heere digged up, and which the right learned knight Sir Peter Young, teacher and trainer of King Iames the Sixth in his youth, hath in this wise more truely copied forth.

D

APOLLINI GRANNO
Q. LVSIVS
SABINIA NVS
*PROC
AVG
*V. SS. L. V. M

E

* Procurator.

* Votum susceptum solvit Lubens meritò.

Who this Appollo Granus might bee, and whence hee should have this name, Apollo Grannus.
not one to my knowledge of our graue Senate of Antiquaries hitherto could ever tell: But, if I might bee allowed from out of the lowest bench to speake what I thinke, I would say that Apollo Granus amongst the Romans, was the same that Ἀπέλλων Ακεσεκόμης, that is, Apollo with long haire amongst the Greekes: for Isidor calleth the long haire of the Gothes, Grannos. But heere I may seeme to wander F out of my way, and therefore will returne to it.

Lower yet, and neere unto the Scotish Forth, is seated EDENBVROVGH, which Edenborrow.
the Irish Scots call Dun Eaden, that is, The towne Eaden, or Eden Hill, and which no doubt, is the very same that Ptolomee named Στεφανόπεδον πλεῶτον, that is, The Winged Castle, for, Adain in the British tongue signifieth a wing; and Edenborrow

(a word compounded out of the Britiſh and Saxon language) is nothing elſe but Th' Burgh with wings. From Wings therefore wee muſt fetch the reaſon of the name: and fetched it may be, if you thinke good, either from the Companies of Horſemen, which are called Wings, or elſe from thoſe Wings in Architecture, which the Greeke Maſter builders terme Pteromata, that is, as Vitruvius ſheweth, two Walles ſo riſing up in heigth, as that they reſemble a ſhew of Wings: Which, for that a certaine City of Cyprus wanted, it was called in old time (as wee read in the Geographers) Aptera, that is, Without Wings. But if any man beleeue, that the name was derived from Ebrauk a Britaine, or from Heth a Pict, good leaue haue hee for me, I will not confront him with this my coniecture. A

This City in regard of the high ſituation, of the holſome aire and plentifull ſoile, and many Noble mens towred houſes built round about it, watered alſo with cleere ſpringing fountaines, reaching from Eaſt to Weſt a mile out in length, and carrying halfe as much in bredth, is worthily counted the chiefe citie of the whole Kingdome; ſtrongly walled, adourned with houſes as well publike as private, well peopled and frequẽted, by reaſon of the opportunity from the ſea which the neighbour haven at Leth affourdeth. And, as it is the ſeat of the Kings, ſo is it the oracle alſo, or cloſet of the Lawes, and the very Pallace of Iuſtice. For, the high Courts of Parliament are heere for the moſt part holden for the enacting or repealing of lawes: alſo the Seſſion, and the Court of the Kings Iuſtice, and of the Commiſſariat, whereof I haue ſpoken already, are here ſettled and kept. B C

On the Eaſt ſide, hard unto the Monaſterie of Saint Croſſe or Holy ruide, is the Kings palace, which King David the Firſt built: over which, within a parke ſtored with game, riſeth an hill with two heads, called of Arthur the Britaine, Arthurs Chaire. On the Weſt ſide, a moſt ſteepe rocke mounteth up aloft to a ſtately heigth every way, ſaue onely where it looketh toward the City: on which is placed a Caſtle with many a towre in it, ſo ſtrong, that it is counted imprenable, which the Britans called Caſtle Myned Agned, the Scots, The Maidens Caſtle and the Virgins Caſtle, of certaine young maidens of the Picts roiall bloud who were kept there in old time, and which may ſeeme in truth to haue beene that Caſtrum Alatum, or Caſtle with Avving, aboue ſaid. D

How Edenborrow in the alternatiue fortune of warres was ſubject one while to the Scots, and another while to the Engliſh, who inhabited this Eaſt part of Scotland, untill it became wholy under the Scots dominion about the yeere of our ſalvation 960. what time the Engliſh Empire ſore ſhaken with the Daniſh wars lay, as it were, gaſping and dying.

How alſo, as an old booke, Of the diviſion of Scotland, in the librarie of the right honourable Lord Burghleie, late high Treaſurer of England ſheweth, Whiles Indulph reigned the towne of Eden was voided and abandoned to the Scots unto this preſent day, as what variable changes of reciprocall fortune it hath felt from time to time, the Hiſtoriographers do relate, and out of them yee are to bee enformed. Meane while, read if you pleaſe theſe verſes of that moſt worthy man Maiſter I. Ionſton in praiſe of Edenborrow.

Oppidum Eden.

E

Monte ſub accliui Zephyri procurrit in auras
Hinc Arx celſa, illinc Regia clara nitet.
Inter vtramque patet ſublimibus ardua tectis
Vrbs armis, animis, clara, frequenſq; viris.
Nobile Scotorum caput, & pars maxima Regni,
Penè etiam gentis integra regna ſuæ.
Raræ artes, & opes, quod mens optauerit, aut hîc F
Inuenias, aut non Scotia tota dabit.
Compoſitum hic populum videas, ſanctumque Senatum,
Sanctáque cum puro lumine iura Dei.
An quiſquam Arctoi extremo in limite mundi

Aut

A Aut hæc aut paria his cernere posse putet?
Dic hospes, postquàm externas lustraveris urbes,
Hæc cernens oculis credis an ipse tuis?

Vnder the rising of an hill, Westward there shootes one way
A castle high; on th' other side, the Kings house gorgeous gay.
Betweene them both the city stands, tall buildings shew it well,
For arm's, for courage much renown'd, much people therein dwell.
The Scots head city large and faire: the kingdomes greatest part,
B Nay, even the Nations kingdome whole well neere, by just desart.
Rare arts and riches: what ones minde can wish is therein found,
Or else it will not gotten be throughout all Scottish ground.
A civill people here a man may see, a Senate graue,
Gods holy lawes with purest light of preachers here yee haue.
In parts remote of Northren clime would any person ween,
That ever these or such like things might possibly be seene?
Say Travailer, now after that thou forraine towne hast knowne,
Beholding this, beleevest thou these eies that are thine owne?

C A mile from hence, lieth Leth, a most commodious haven, hard upon the river Leth, which when Dessey the Frenchman for the security of Edenburrow had fortified, by reason of many men repairing thither, within a short time, from a meane village it grew to bee a bigge towne. Againe, when Francis the Second King of France had taken to wife Marie the Queene of Scots, the French men who in hope and conceit had already devoured Scotland, and beganne now to gape for England, in the yeere 1560. strengthened it with more fortifications. But Elizabeth Queene of England sollicited by the Nobles of Scotland that embraced the reformed religion, to side with them, by her puissance and wisdome effected that both they returned into France, and these their fortifications were laied levell with the D ground, and Scotland ever since hath beene freed from of the French. Lyth.

Where this Forth groweth more and more narrow, it had in the midest of it the citie Caer-Guidi, as Bede noteth, which now may seeme to be the Island named Inch-Keith. Whether this were that VICTORIA which Ptolomee mentioneth, I will not stand to proove: although a man may beleeue, that the Romans turned this Guidh into Victoria as well as the Isle Guith or Wight into Victesis or Vecta: certes, seeing both these Islands bee dissevered from the shore, the same reason of the name will hold well in both languages. For, Ninius hath taught us, that Guith in the British tongue betokeneth a separation. More within, upon the same Forth is situate Abercorn, in Bedes time a famous Monasterie, which now by the gracious favour of E King Iames the Sixth, giveth unto Iames Hamilton, the title of the Earle of Abercorn. And fast beside it, standeth Blackneesse Castle, and beneath it Southward the ancient city LINDVM, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention: which the better learned as yet call Linlithquo, commonly Lithquo; beautified and set out with a very faire house of the Kings, a goodly Church, and a fishfull lake; of which Lake it may seeme to haue assumed that name: for, Lin, as I haue already shewed, in the British tongue, soundeth as much as a Lake. A Sheriffe it had in times past by inheritance out of the familie of the Hamiltons of Peyle: and now in our daies it hath for the first Earle Sir Alexander Leuingston, whom King Iames the sixth raised from the dignity of a Baron, wherein his Ancestours had flourished a long time, to the honour of an Earle: like F as within a while after hee promoted Mark Ker Baron of Newbottle aforesaid, to the title of Earle of Lothien.

Caer Gvidi.

Earle of Abercorn.

Black-neesse.

Linlithquo.

Earle of Linlithquo.

Earle of Lothien.

A

SELGOVÆ.

BEneath the GADENI, toward the South and West, where now are the ſmall territories of Lideſdale, Euſdale, Eskdale, Annandale and Nidſdale, ſo called of little rivers running through them, which all looſe themſelues in Solway Frith, dwelt in ancient times the SELGOVÆ, the reliques of whoſe name ſeeme vnto mee, whether vnto others I know not, to remaine in that name Solway.

B

Liddeſdale. In Lideſdale, there riſeth a loft Armitage, ſo called becauſe it was in times paſt dedicated to a ſolitarie life; now it is a very ſtrong Caſtle, which belonged to the Hepburns, who draw their originall from a certaine Engliſhman a priſoner, whom the Earle of March for delivering him out of a daunger, greatly enriched; Theſe were Earles of Bothwell, and a long time by the right of inheritance Admiralls of Scotland. But, by a ſiſter of Iames Earle of Bothwell the laſt of the Hepburns, married vnto Iohn Prior of Coldingham, baſe ſonne to King Iames the Fifth (who begat too too many baſtards) the title and inheritance both, came vnto his ſonne. Hard by, is Brankenſey, the habitation of the warlike familie of Baclugh ſurnamed Scot: beſide many little piles or forts of militarie men every where. In Euſdale, I would deeme, by the affinity of the name, that old VXELLVM mentioned by Ptolomee, ſtood by the river Euſe.

Hepburnes Earles of Bothwell. Brakenſey. Backlugh.

Euſdale. Vxellum.

C

In Eskdale, ſome are of opinion that the HORESTI dwelt, into whoſe borders Iulius Agricola, when hee had ſubdued the Britans inhabiting this tract, brought the Roman Armie: eſpecially, if wee read Horeſci, in ſteed of Horeſti. For Ar-Eſc in the Britiſh tongue betokeneth, a place by the river Eske. As for Aeſica in Eskdale, I haue ſpoken of it before it England, and there is no cauſe wherefore I ſhould iterate the ſame.

Eskedale. Horeſci.

ANNANDALE.

D

VNto this on the Weſt ſide adjoyneth ANNADALE, that is, The vale by the river Annan: into which the acceſſe-by-land is very difficult. The places of greater note herein are theſe, a caſtle by Lough-Maban, three partes whereof are environed with water, and ſtrongly walled: and the towne Annandale, at the very mouth almoſt of the river Annan. Which loſt all the glory and beauty it had, by the Engliſh warre in the reigne of Edward the Sixth.

Annandale. Lough Maban.

E

The Ionſtons. In this territorie, the Ionſtons are men of greateſt name: a kinred even bred to warre; betweene whom and the Maxwels there hath beene profeſſed an open enmity over long, even to deadly feude and bloudſhed: which Maxwels by right from their anceſtours haue the rule of this Seneſchalſie, for ſo it is accounted. This vale, Eadgar King of Scots, after hee was reſtored to his kingdome by auxiliarie forces out of England, gaue in conſideration and reward of good ſervice, vnto Robert Bruſe or Brus Lord of Cliueland in Yorke-ſhire; who with the good favour of the King beſtowed it upon Robert his younger ſonne, when him ſelfe would not ſerue the King of Scots in his warres. From him flowered the Bruſes Lords of Annandale, of whom Robert Brus married Iſabel the daughter of William King of Scots by the daughter of Robert Avenall: his ſonne likewiſe, Robert the third of that name, wedded the daughter of David Earle of Huntington and of Garioth; whoſe ſonne Robert ſurnamed The Noble, when the iſſue of Alexander the Third, King of Scots failed, chalenged in his mothers right the Kingdome of Scotland,

The Stewartry of Annandale.

The Bruſes.

F

before

A before Edward the First King of England, (as the direct and superiour Lord of the Kingdome of Scotland( so the English giue it out) or, an honorable Arbitratour, (for so say the Scots) as beeing neerer in proximitie in degree and bloud, to King Alexander the Third and Margaret, daughter to the King of Norway, although hee were the sonne by a second sister: who soone after resigning up his owne right granted and gaue over to his sonne Robert Brus Earle of Carrick, and to his heires (I speake out of the very originall) all the right and claime, which hee had or might haue to the Kingdome of Scotland. But the action and suite went with Iohn Balliol, who sued for his right, as descended of the eldest sister, although in a degree farther of: and sentence was given in these words,
B For that the person more remote in the second degree descending in the first line, is to bee preferred, before a neerer in a second line, in the succession of an inheritance that can not be parted. Howbeit, the said Robert, sonne to the Earle of Carrick by his owne vertue at length recovered the Kingdome unto himself, and established it to his posterity. A Prince, who as he flourished notably in regard of the glorious ornaments of his noble actes, so hee triumphed as happily with invincible fortitude and courage, over fortune that so often crossed him.

NIDISDALL.

C Close unto Annandale on the West side, lieth NIDISDALE, sufficiently furnished with corne-fields and pastures; so named of the river Nid, which in Ptolomee is wrongly written NOBIVS, for NODIVS, or NIDIVS: of which name there bee other rivers in Britaine full of shallow fourdes & muddy shelues, like as this Nid is also. It springeth out of the Lake Logh-Cure, by which flourished CORDA a towne of the Selgovæ. Hee taketh his course first by Sauqhuer a castle of the Creighons, who a long time kept a great port; as enioying the dignity of the Barons of Sauqhuer, and the authority besides of here-
D ditarie Sheriffes of Nidisdale: then, by Morton, which gaue title of Earle to some of the familie of Douglas: out of which others of that surname haue their mansion and abiding at Drumlanrig, by the same river: nere unto the mouth whereof standeth Dunfreys, betweene two hills, the most flourishing towne of this tract; which hath to shew also an old castle in it: famous for making of wollen clothes, and remarkable for the murder of Iohn Commin the mightiest man for manred and retinew in all Scotland; whom Robert Brus for feare he should fore-close his way to the kingdome ranne quite through with his sword in the church, & soone obteined his pardon from the Pope, for committing that murder in a sacred place. Neerer unto the mouth, Solway a little village reteineth still somewhat of the old name of Selgovæ. Upon E the very mouth, is situate Caer Laverock, which Ptolomee I suppose called CARBANTORIGVM, accounted an imprenable fort, when King Edward the First accompained with the floure of English nobility besieged and hardly wonne it: but now it is a weake dwelling house of the Barons of Maxwell, who beeing men of an ancient and noble linage, were a long time Wardens of these West marches, and of late advanced by marriage with the daughter one of the heires of the Earle of Morton; whereby Iohn Lord Maxwell was declared Earle of Morton: as also by the daughter and heire of Hereis Lord Toricles, whom I. a younger sonne tooke to wife, and obtained by her the title of Baron Hereis. Moreover, in this vale by the Lake side lieth Glencarn, whence the Cuninghams, of whom I am to write more in place convenient,
F bare a long time the title of Earle.

This Nidisdale together with Annandale nourisheth a warlike kind of men, who haue beene infamous for robberies and depredations: for, they dwell upon Solway Frith, a fourdable arme of the sea at low waters, through which they made many time outrodes into England for to fetch in booties, and in which the inhabitants there about on both sides with pleasant pastime and delightfull sight on horseback

The river Nid.
Corda.
Creightons Barons de Sauquer.
Earles of Morton.
Dunfreis.
Caer Lavarock.
Barons Hereis.
Clencar.
Salmons.

with speares hunt Salmons, wherof there is aboundance. What maner of Cattaile-stealers these bee that inhabite these vales in the marches of both kingdomes, Iohn Lesley, himselfe a Scottish man and Bishop of Rosse will tell you in these words. They goe forth in the night by troupes out of their owne borders, through desert by-waies and many winding crankes. All the day time they refresh their horses and recreate their owne strength in lurking places appointed before hand, until they be come thither at length in the darke night where they would bee. When they haue laied hold of a booty backe againe they returne home likewise by night, through blind waies onely, and fetching many a compasse about. The more skilful any leader or guid is to passe through those wilde deserts, crooked turnings and steepe downe-falls in the thickest mists and deepest darkenesse, hee is held in greater reputation as one of an excelling wit. And so crafty and wily these are, that seldome or never, they forgo their booty and suffer it to be taken out of their hands, unlesse it happen other whiles that they bee caught by their aduersaries following continually after and tracing them directly by their footing according as quick senting Slugh-hounds doe lead them. But, say they bee taken; so faire spoken they are and eloquent, so many sugred words they haue at will sweetly to plead for them, that they are able to moue the iudges and aduersaries both, be they never so austere and severe, if not to mercy, yet to admiration and some commiseration withall.

The behaviour of Scottish borderers.

NOVANTES, GALLOWAY.

FRom Nidisdale as you goe on Westward, the NOVANTES inhabited in the vales, all that tract which runneth out far and wide toward the West between the sea & Dunbritain Frith, or Clydsforth: yet so indented and hollowed with nowkes and creekes, that here and there it is drawne into a narrow roome: and then againe in the very utmost skirt it openeth and spreadeth it selfe broad at more liberty: whereupon some haue called it the CHERSOMESVS, that is, The Biland, of the NOVANTES. But at this day their country conteineth Galloway, Carick, Kyle and Cunningham.

Galloway.

Galloway, in the Latin writers of the middle time Gaelwallia and Gallouidia, so called of the Irish, who in times past dwelt there, and terme themselues short in their owne language Gael; is a country rising up every where with hills, that are better for feeding of cattaile than bearing of corne: the inhabitants practise fishing as well within the sea lying round about them, as in little rivers and the Loches or meeres in every place standing full of water at the foote of the hills: out of which, in September they take in Weeles and Weere-nets an incredible number of most sweete and savery eeles, whereby they make no lesse gaine than other do by their little nagges, which for being well limmed, fast knit and strongly made for to endure travaile, are much in request and bought from hence. Among these, the first place that offereth it selfe, by the river DEA mentioned in Ptolomee, which keeping the name still ful and whole, they call Dee, is Kircoubright the most commodious port of this coast, and the second Stewartie of Scotland, which belongeth also to the Maxwels: then, Cardines, a fort, set upon a craggy and high rocke, by the river Fleet, and fenced with strong walles. Neere unto it the river Ken, corruptlie read in Ptolomee IENA, runneth into the sea: after it, is Wigton an haven towne, with a narrow entrance unto it, betweene the two rivers, Bluidnoo and Crea, which also is counted a Sheriffdome, over which Agnew is Shirif. In times past it had for Earle, Archibald Douglasse, renowned in the French warre, and at this day by the favour of King Iames the Sixth, Iohn Lord Fleming, who deriveth his pedigree from the ancient Earles of Wigton.

Galloway nagges.

The river Dee.

Kircoubright.

Earles of Wigton.

Neere unto this Ptolomee placed the City LEVCOPIBIA, which I know not, to say truth, where to seeke. Yet the place requireth, that it should bee that Episcopall seat of Ninian, which Bede calleth Candida Casa, & the English and Scotish in the Leucopibia.

very

A very same sense Whit-herne: what say you then, if Ptolomee after his maner translated that name in Greeke Λευκὰ οἰκήματα, that is, White houses (in steed whereof the * transcribers have thrust upon vs Leucopibia) which the Britans tearmed Candida Casa. In this place, Ninia or Ninian the Britan, an holy man, the first that instructed the South-Picts in Christian faith, in the reigne of the Emperor Theodosius the younger, had his seat and built a Church consecrated to the memorie of Saint Martin, after a maner unusuall among the Britans, as Bede saith, who wrote that the English in his time held this country, and when the number of the faithfull Christians multiplied, an Episcopall See was erected at this Candida Casa. A little higher, there is a Biland hauing the sea insinuating it selfe on bothe sides with two Bayes, that by a narrow
B necke it is adjoined to the firme land: and this is properly called Chersonesvs and Promontorivm Novantvm, commonly the Mull of Galloway.

Hern a house or habitation.
* Or Copiers.

Beyond this, Northward, there is a Bay taking a great compasse and full of Ilands, into which very many rivers on every side doe out-lade themselues. But first of all, from the very cape or top of the Promontory, is Abravanvs, which being set a little out of his owne place, is so called of Ptolomee, for Aber-Ruanus, that is, The mouth of Ruan. For, at this day that river is named Rian, and the lake out of which it floweth, Logh-Rian, exceeding full of Herings and stone fishes.

This Galloway had in times past Princes and Lords over it: of whom the first recorded in Chronicles was Fergus, in the reigne of Henrie the first, King of England,
C who gave for his Armes A Lion rampant Arg. crowned Or in a shield Azur: who after many troubles that he had stirred, was driven to this exigent by King Malcolm, that he gave his sonne Vthred to the King for an hostage, and himselfe weary of this world tooke the habit of a Chanon at Holy Rood house in Edenburgh. As for Vthred, Gilbert his younger brother tooke him prisoner in battaile, and when hee had cut out his tongue, and plucked his eies forth of his head, he cruelly bereaved him both of life and inheritance. But within some few yeeres, when Gilbert was dead, Vthreds sonne recovered his fathers inheritance, who of a sister of William Morvill Constable of Scotland, begat Alan, Lord of Galloway, and Constable of Scotland:
D This Alan, by Margaret the eldest daughter of David Earle of Huntingdon had Dervolgilda wife to Iohn Balliol, and the mother of Iohn Balliol King of Scotland, who contended with Robert Brus for the Kingdome of Scotland; and by a former wife, as it seemeth, he had Helen married to Roger Quincy, Earle of Winchester, who thereby was Constable of Scotland, like as William Ferrars of Groby the Nephew of the said Roger by a daughter and one of the heires. But these Englishmen soone lost their inheritance in Scotland, as also the dignity of Constable: which the Comins Earles of Bucquan descended likewise from a daughter of Roger Quincy obtained; untill it was translated unto the Earles of Arroll. But the title of the Lords of Galloway fell afterward to the family of the Douglasses.

Lords of Galloway.

Constables of Scotland.

E

CARRICTA.

CARRICT.

NOw followeth Carrict upon Dunbritain Frith faire to be seene with fresh pastures; supplied both by land and sea with commodities aboundantly. In this province Ptolomee placed Berigonivm a Creeke, and Berigonivm a towne. For which Berigonivm is read in a very ancient copie of Ptolomee printed at Rome in the yeere 1480: So that we cannot but verily
F thinke, it was that which now is called Bargeney. A Lord it hath out of the family of the Kennedies, which came forth of Ireland in the reigne of Robert Brus, and is in this tract of high birth spred into many branches, and of great powre. The chiefe of which Linage is Earle of Cassile: For, this is the name of a Castle wherein he dwelleth by the river Dun: upon the banke whereof he hath also another Berigonium, Bargenie.

another Caſtle, named Dunnur: and he is the hæreditarie Bailive of this Country. A
For, this Carrict, together with Kyle and Cunningham, are counted the three Bailleries of Scotland, becauſe they that governe theſe with an ordinary powre and juriſdiction are called Ballives, by a tearme that came up in the middle times, and among the Greekes, Sicilians and Frenchmen ſignifieth a Conſervatour or Protector. But, in the age aforegoing, Carrict had Earles: For, to ſay nothing of Gilberts of Galloway, ſonne unto whom King William gave all Carrict to be poſſeſſed for ever, Earles of Carrict. Booke of Malroſſe. we read that Adam of Kilconath was about the yeere 1270. Earle of Carrict, and died ſerving in the Holy-land: whoſe onely daughter Martha fell extremely in love with Robert Brus a beautifull young Gentleman, as ſhe ſaw him hunting, thereupon B made him her husband, advanced him with the title of Earle and with poſſeſſions: unto whom ſhe bare Robert Brus that moſt renowned King of Scots, from whom the Royall line of the Kings is deſcended. But the title of the Earle of Carrict being left for a time to the yonger ſonnes of the family of Brus, afterwards among other honors encreaſed the ſtile of the Princes of Scotland.

KYLE.

MOre inward, from Clids-forth, followeth KYLE, plentifull in all C
Anno 750. things, and as well inhabited. In Bedes Auctarium it is called Campus Cyel, that is, The Feild Cyel, and Coil: where, it is recorded, That Eadbert King of Northumberland annexed this with other territories unto his owne Kingdome. In Ptolomees time, there was knowen a place heere named VIDOGARA, haply Aire, which is a Sherifdome, hath a townelet alſo of merchandiſe, and a well knowen port, by a little river of the ſame name. Touching which, I can thinke of no better thing to write, than theſe verſes ſent unto me from Maiſter Iohn Ionſton.

D

ÆRA, ſiue ÆRIA.

Parua vrbs, aſt ingens animus in fortibus hæret,
Inferior nulli nobilitate virûm.
Aeris è campis haurit puriſſima cœlum
Incubat & miti mollior aura ſolo.
Aeria hinc, non Æra prius, credo, illa vocata eſt,
Cum duris quid enim mollia iuris habent?
Infera cum ſuperis quod ſi componere fas eſt,
Aurea fors dici debuit illa prius

E

A Citie ſmall, but yet great minds in valiant bodies reſt:
For nobleneſſe of Gentlemen, matching the very beſt.
Out of the fields what aire it draw's, is right pure, freſh and kind
The ſoile is milde, and upon it there breath's a gentle wind.
Hence I ſuppoſe ARRIA firſt not Aera cald it was,
For what haue Elements to doe with matters hard, as Braſſe?
But to compare low things with high, if that I may be bold,
Then haply well it ſhould haue beene nam'd AVRRA of old.

F

Beſides the river Aire, there be other two riverets that water this litle territorie, having many villages ſkattering along their bankes: namely, Longar, neere unto which the Caufords; and Ceſnocke, by which the Cambels (families in this tract, of good worſhip) dwell: upon the banke whereof, ſtandeth Vchiltre caſtle the ſeat of the Stewarts, that are of the bloud roiall, as who iſſued from the Dukes of Albanie;

and

A and there upon are the Barons of Vchiltrey, out of which house was that noble Robert Stewart, who kept continually with the Prince of Condie as an unseparable companion & was with him slaine in France in battaile. The government of Kyle belongeth by an heritable right to Cambells of Louden, as Bailife thereof.

CVNNINGHAM.

B CVNNINGHAM adjoining to Kyle on the East side and the North, butteth upon the same Forth so close, that it restraineth the breadth thereof, which hetherto lay out and spred at large. The name, if one interpret it, is as much as the Kings Habitation, by which a man may gresse how commodious and pleasant it is. This territorie is watered with Irwin, that divideth it from Kile: at the spring-head well neere whereof, Kilmarnocke shewweth it selfe, the dwelling place of the Barons Boides: of whom in the reigne of Iames the first, Thomas by a prosperous gale of court fauour was advanced to the authoritie of Regent or Vice Roy, Robert his sonne, to the dignity of Earle of Aran and
C marriage with the Kings sister. But soone after, when the said gale came about and blew contrary, they were judged enemies to the State: Robert also had his wife taken from him and given unto Iames Hamilton; their goods were confiscate, fortune made a game of them, and when they had lost all, they died in exile. Howbeit, their posterity recovered the ancient honor of Barons, and honorably enioy it at this day. At the mouth of the river Irwin, standeth Irwin a Bourough, with an haven so barred up with shelves of sand, and so shallow withall, that it can beare none other vessels, but small barkes and boates: Ardrossan also a pile belonging to the Montgomeries, more above, standeth higher over the Greeke: this is a very ancient and famous family as any other, who have to shew for witnesse of their warlicke proesse Poununy a D fort built with the ransome money of Sir Henrie Percy surnamed Hot-Spurre, whom I. Montgomerie with his owne hand tooke prisoner in the battaile at Otterburn, and led away captiue. Not farre from Ardrossan is Largis, embrued with the bloud of the Norwegians by King Alexander the third. From whence, as you follow the shore bending and giving in, you meet with Eglington a faire Castle, which was the possession of certaine Gentlemen highly descended of the same surname: from whom it came by marriage unto the Montgomeries, who therby receaued the title of Earles of Eglington. But whence the said surname should come, a man can hardly tel: this I know, that out of Normandie it came into England: and that divers families there were of the same name: but that in Essex, from which Sir Thomas Montgome-
E rie, Knight of the order of the Garter descended in the reigne of Edward the fourth, gave Armes alittle different from these.

Montgomeries Earles of Eglington.

This noble linage is faire and farre spread, and out of those of Geuan, was that Gabriell de Lorges, called Earle of Montgomerie, Captaine of the gard of Scots (which Charles the fifth King of France instituted for defence of his owne person and his successors, in testimonie of their fidelity and his loue toward them) who in running at tilt slew Henrie the second King of Fraunce, by occasion that a broken splint of his speare, where the helmet chanced to be open, entred at his eie and pierced into his brain; & afterwards in that civill warre, wherein all France was in a broile, whiles he tooke part with the Protestants, he was apprehended & beheaded. But the Cunninghams in this tract are counted to be the greater & more numerous family, the chiefe
F whereof, enioying the honour of Earle of Glencarn dwelleth at Kilmauris and fetcheth his descent out of England, and from an English gentleman, who together with other killed Thomas Archbishop of Cantorburie; how true it is I know not, but they ground haply upon a probable conjecture taken from an Archbishops pall which the Cunninghams give in their coat of Armes.

Cuninnghams Earles of Glencarn.

ISLE

A

ISLE GLOTTA or ARRAN.

WIthin the ſight of Cunningham, among many ſundry other Ilands GLOTA the Iſle mentioned by Antonine the Emperour beareth up his head in the very Forth & ſaltwater of the river Glota or Cluyd, called at this day Arran, of a Caſtle bearing the ſame name. Inwardly it mounteth up altogether with high riſing hils, at the botome and foote whereof, along the ſhore it is wel inhabited. The firſt Earle heereof, that I can read off, was Robert Boide, whoſe wife and Earldome together, when Boide was baniſhed the realme, Iames L. Hamilton, as I ſaid, erewhile, obtained and his poſterity enioyed, the ſame Earldome, ſaving that of late Sir Iames Steward apppointed guardian to Iames Hamilton Earle of Arran when he was ſo defectiue in underſtanding that he could not manage his eſtate, tooke this title in the right of being Guardian.

Earles of Arran.

B

Neere unto this ſtandeth Buthe, ſo called of a little religious Cell which Brendanus founded (for ſo is a little Cell tearmed in the Scotiſh tongue) In this Iland is Rothſay Caſtle, which giveth the title of Dukedome unto the King of Scots eldeſt ſonne, who is borne Prince of Scotland, Duke of Rothſay, and Seneſchall of Scotland, ſince time that King Robert the third inveſted Robert his eldeſt ſonne, Duke of Rothſay, the firſt in Scotland that ever was created Duke. With which title alſo Queene Mary honored Henrie Lord Darly, before ſhe tooke him to be her husband. Then ſhew themſelves Hellan, ſometimes called Hellan Leneow, that is, as Iohn Fordon interpreteth it, The Saints Ilands, and Hellan Tinoc, that is, The Swines Iland, with a great number of other Ilands of leſſe note and reckoning in the ſame Forth.

C

Rothſay Dukedome.

D

DAMNII, CLVYDSDALE &c.

BEyond the NOVANTES, more inward, by the river Glotta or Cluyd, and farther ſtil even to the very Eaſt ſea, dwelt in times paſt the DAMNII in thoſe countries if I have any judgement (for in things ſo farre remote from our remembrance, and in ſo thicke a miſt of obſcurity, who can ſpeake of certainty?) which are now called Cluydſdale, The Baronie of Renfraw, Lennox, Strivelinſhire, Menteth and Fife.

E

Neere unto the head of Cluyd in Crawford Moor, among the wild waſts, certaine husbandmen of the country, after great ſtore of violent raine hapned to find certaine ſmall peeces like ſcrapings of gold, which have this long time given great hope of much richeſſe, but moſt of all in our daies, ſince that Sir Beamis Bulmer under tooke with great endevour to find out heere a mine of gold. Certes, there is Azur gotten forth every day without any paines in manner at all. Now the Caſtle of Crawford together with the title of the Earle of Crawford, was by Robert the ſecond, King of Scots, given unto Sir Iames Lindeſey, who by a ſingle combat performed with Baron Welles an Engliſhman wonne high commendation for his valour. Theſe Lindeſeies have deſerved paſſing well of their country and are of ancient nobility, ever ſince that Sir William Lindeſey married one of the heires of William of Lancaſter Lord of Kandale in England, whoſe neice in the third degree of lineall deſcent was married into the moſt honorable family of Coucy in France.

Earles of Crawford.

F

A France. Cluyd, after he hath from his ſpring head with much ſtrugling got out Northward, by Baron Somervills houſe, receiveth unto him from out of the Weſt the river Duglaſſe or Douglaſſe, ſo called of a blackiſh or greeniſh water that it hath: which river communicateth his name both to the vale through which he runneth called Douglaſdale, and alſo to Douglaſſe caſtle therein: which name, that caſtle likewiſe hath imparted unto the family of the Douglaſſes. Which I aſſure you is very ancient, but moſt famous ever ſince that Sir Iames Douglaſſe ſtucke very cloſe at all times as a moſt faſt friend unto King Robert Brus, and was ready alwaies with ſingular courage, reſolution, and wiſdome to aſſiſt him claiming the Kingdome in moſt troubleſome and dangerous times: and whom the ſaid King Robert charged B at his death to cary his heart to Ieruſalem, that he might be diſcharged of his vow, made to goe to the Holy-land. In memoriall whereof the Douglaſſes haue inſerted in their Coate of Armes a mans Heart. From which time this family grew up to that powre and greatneſſe, and namely after that King David the Second had created William, Earle of Douglaſſe, that they after a ſort awed the Kings themſelues. For at one time well neere, there were ſix Earles of them, namely of this Douglaſſe, of Angus, of Ormond, of Wigton, of Murray and of Morton: among whom, the Earle of Wigton through his martiall proweſſe and deſert, obtained at the hands of Charles the ſeventh King of France, the title of Duke of Tourain, and left the ſame to two Earles of Douglaſſe his heires after him.

Baronie Somervills.

Douglaſſe.

C Above the confluents of Douglaſſe & Cluyd is Lanric the hæreditarie Sheriſdome of the Hamiltons who for their name are beholden unto Hamilton caſtle, which ſtandeth ſomewhat higher upon Cluids banke in a fruitfull and paſſing pleaſant place; but they referre their originall, as they haue a tradition, to a certaine Engliſhman ſurnamed Hampton, who having taken part with Robert Brus received from him faire lands in this tract. Much increaſe of their wealth and eſtate came by the bounteous hand of King Iames the third, who beſtowed in marriage upon Sir Iames Hamilton, his owne eldeſt ſiſter whom he had taken perforce from the Lord Boide her husband together with the Earldome of Arran; but of honors and dignities, by the States of the Kingdome who after the death of King Iames the fifth ordained Iames Hamil-
D ton, grand ſonne to the former Iames, Regent of Scotland, whom Henrie alſo the ſecond, King of Fraunce aduaunced to be Duke of Caſteau Herald in Poictou: as alſo by King Iames the ſixth, who honoured his ſonne Iohn with the title of Marqueſſe of Hamilton, which honourable title was then firſt brought into Scotland.

Sheriſedome of Lanric.

Marqueſſe Hamilton.

The river Glotta or Cluyd runneth from Hamilton by Bothwell, which glorieth in the Earles thereof, namely Iohn Ramſay whoſe greatneſſe with King Iames the third was exceſſiue, but pernicious both to himſelfe and the King; and the Hep-burnes, whom I haue already ſpoken off, and ſo ſtreight forward with a ready ſtreame through Glaſcow, in ancient times paſt a Biſhops ſeat, but diſcontinued a great while, untill that King William reſtored it up againe: but now it is an Archbiſhops
E See and an Vniuerſity: which Biſhop Turnbull after he had in a pious and religious intent built a colledge in the yeere 1554. firſt founded. This Glaſcow is the moſt famous towne of Merchandiſe in this tract. For pleaſant ſite, and apple trees, and other like fruit trees much commended: having alſo a very faire bridge ſupported with eight Arches. Of which towne I. Ionſton thus verſified.

Earles of Bothwell.

Non te Pontificum luxus, non Inſula tantùm
Ornauit, diri quæ tibi cauſſa mali,
Glotiadæ quantum decorant te, Glaſcua, Muſæ,
Quæ celſum attollunt clara ſub aſtra caput.
F Glotta decus rerum, piſcoſis nobilis vndis,
Finitimi recreat iugera lata ſoli.
Aſt Glottæ decus & vicinis gloria terris
Glaſcua fœcundat flumine cuncta ſuo.

The

The ſumptuous port of Biſhops great hath not adorn'd thee ſo, A
Nor mitre rich, that hath beene cauſe of thine accurſed woe,
As Cluyds Muſes grace thee now, O Glaſcow towne: for why?
They make thee beare thy head aloft up to the ſtarry skie.
Cluyd the beauty of the world, for fiſhfull ſtreame renown'd
Refreſheth all the neighbour fields that ly about it round.
But Glaſcow, beauty is to Cluyd, and grace to countries nie:
And by the ſtreames that flow from thence, all places fructifie.

Reinfraw Baronie.

Along the hithermore banke of Cluid, lieth the Baronie of Reinfraw, ſo called of the principall towne, which may ſeeme to be RANDVARA, in Ptolomee, by the river Cathcart; that hath the Baron of Cathcart dwelling upon it, carrying the ſame ſur- B

Barons de Ros.

name and of ancient nobility; neere unto which (for this little province can ſhew a goodly breed of nobilitie) there border Cruikſton, the ſeat in times paſt of the Lords of Darley, from whom by right of marriage it came to the Earles of Lennox, whence Henrie the father of King Iames the ſixth was called Lord Darly: Halkead, the habitation of the Barons of Ros, deſcended originally from Engliſh bloud, as who fetch their pedigree from that Robert Ros of Warke, who long ſince left England

Paſſay.

and came under the alleageance of the King of Scots: Paſſay, ſometimes a famous Monaſterie founded by Alexander the ſecond of that name, high Steward of Scotland, which for a gorgeous Church and rich furniture was inferiour to few; But now by the beneficiall favour of King Iames the ſixth, it yeeldeth both dwelling place C and title of Baron to the Lord Claud Hamilton a younger ſonne of Duke Chaſteu Herald: And Sempill, the Lord whereof Baron Sempill, by ancient right, is Sherife of this Baronie: But the title of Baron of Reinfraw, by a peculiar priviledge doth appertaine vnto the Prince of Scotland.

Baron Sempill.

LENNOX.

ALong the other banke of Cluyd above Glaſcow, runneth forth D
Levinia or LENNOX Northward, among a number of hilles cloſe couched one by another, having that name of the riuer Levin, which Ptolomee calleth, LELANONIVS, and runneth into Cluyd out of Logh Lomund, which ſpreadeth it ſelfe heere under the mountaines twenty miles long & eight miles broad, paſſing well ſtored with variety of fiſh: but moſt eſpecially with a peculiar fiſh that is to be found no where elſe (they call it Pollac) as alſo with Ilands, concerning which many fables have beene forged, and thoſe rife among the common people.

As touching an Iland heere that floateth and waveth too and fro, I liſt not to E make queſtion thereof. For, what ſhould let, but that a lighter body and ſpungeous withall in maner of a pumiſh ſtone, may ſwimme above the water? and Plinie writeth, How in the Lake Vadimon, there be Ilands full of graſſe, and covered over with ruſhes and reeds, that float up and downe. But I leaue it unto them that dwelling neerer unto this place, and better know the nature of this Lake, whether this old Diſtichon of our Necham be true or no.

Ditatur fluuijs Albania, ſaxea ligna
Dat Lomund multa frigiditate potens.
With rivers Scotland is enrich'd, and Lomund there a Lake, F
So cold of nature is, that ſtickes it quickly ſtones doth make.

Round about the edge of this Lake, there be fiſhers cottages, but nothing elſe memorable, unleſſe it be Kilmoronoc, a proper fine houſe of the Earles of Caſſiles on the

A the East side of it, which hath a most pleasant prospect into the said Lake. But at the confluence where Levin emptieth it selfe out of the Lake into Cluyd standeth the old City called Al-Cluyd. Bede noteth, that it signified, (in whose language I know not) as much as The rocke Cluyd. True it is, that Ar-Cluyd signifieth in the British tongue, vpon Cluyd, or vpon the rocke, and Cluid in ancient English sounded the same that, a Rock. The succeeding posterity called this place Dunbritton, that is, The Britans towne (and corruptly by a certaine transposition of letters, Dunbarton) because the Britans held it longest against the Scots, Picts and Saxons. For, it is the strongest of all the castles in Scotland by naturall situa-

Al-Cluyd.

Dunbritton.

Britannodunum.

B tion, towring up on a rough, craggy and two headed rocke, at the very meeting of the rivers in a greene plaine. In one of the tops or heads aboue said, there standeth up a lofty watch towre or keepe: on the other, which is the lower, there are sundry strong bulwarks. Betweene these two tops on the North side, it hath one onely ascent, by which hardly one by one can passe up, and that with a labour by grees or steps, cut out aslope travers the rock. In steed of diches, on the West side serveth the river Levin, on the South, Cluid, and on the East a boggy flat, which at every tide, is wholy covered over with waters, and on the North side the very upright steepenesse of the place is a most sufficient defense. Certaine remaines of the Britans presuming of the natural strength of this place and their owne man-hood who,

C as Gildas writeth, gat themselues a place of refuge in high mountaines and hills, steepe and naturally fensed, as it were, with rampiers and ditches, in most thicke woods and forrests, in rockes also of the sea, stood out and defended themselues here after the Romans departure for three hundred yeeres, in the midest of their enemies. For, in Bedes time, as himselfe writeth, it was the best fortified city of the Britans. But in the yeere 756. Eadbert King of Northumberland, and Oeng King of the Picts with their joint forces enclosed it round about by siege, and brought it to such a desperate extremity that it was rendred unto them by composition. Of this place, the territorie round about it is called the Sherifdome of Dunbarton, and hath had the Earles of Lennox this long time for their Sheriffes, by birthright and inheritance.

R. Hoveden.

D As touching the Earles of Lennox themselues, to omit those of more ancient and obscure times, there was one Duncane Earle of Lennox in the reigne of Robert the Second, who died and left none but daughters behind him. Of whom one was married to Alan Steward, descended from Robert, a younger sonne of Walter the second of that name High Steward of Scotland; and brother likewise to Alexander Steward the second, from whom the Noblest and Roiall race of Scotland hath beene propagated. This surname Steward was given unto that most noble familie in regard of the honourable office of the Stewardshippe of the kingdome, as who had the charge of the Kings Revenewes. The said Alan had issue Iohn, Earle of Lennox and Robert, Captaine of that company of Scotishmen at Earles of Lennox.

Steward.

E Armes which Charles the Sixth K. of France first instituted in lieu of some recompence unto the Scottish nation which by their valour had deserved passing well of the Kingdom of France; who also by the same Prince, for his vertue sake was endowed with the Seignorie of Aubigny in Auvergne. Iohn had a sonne named Mathew Earle of Lennox, who wedded the daughter of Iames Hamilton by Marion daughter to King Iames the Second: on whom hee begat Iohn Earle of Lennox: he taking armes to deliver King Iames the Fifth out of the hands of the Douglasses and the Hamiltons, was slaine by the Earle of Arran his unkle on the mothers side. This Iohn was father to Mathew Earle of Lennox, who having susteined sundry troubles in France and Scotland, found fortune more friendly to him in England, through the

A tronpe of Scots in France.

F favour of King Henry the Eight, considering that hee bestowed upon him in marriage his Neice, with faire lands. By the meanes of this happie marriage, were brought into the world, Henrie and Charles.

Henry, by Mary Queene of Scots had issue Iames the Sixth, King of Britaine by the propitious grace of the eternal God, borne in a most auspicate & lucky houre, to knit and unite in one body of an Empire the whole Island of Britaine, divided as wel in it selfe, as it was heretofore from the rest of the world, and (as wee hope and pray) to lay a most sure foundation of an everlasting security, for our heires, and the posterity. As for Charles, he had issue one onely daughter Arbella, who aboue her sex hath so embraced the studies of the best literature, that therein shee hath profited and proceeded with singular commendation, and is comparable with the excellent Ladies of old time. When Charles was dead, after that the Earledome of Lennox, whereof he stood enfeoffed, was revoked by Parliamentary authority in the yeere of our Lord 1579. and his unkle by the fathers side Robert Bishop of Cathanes, had some while enjoied this title (in lieu whereof hee received at the Kings hands the honour of the Earle of March) King Iames the Sixth conferred the honorable title of Duke of Lennox upon Esme Steward sonne to Iohn Lord D'Aubigny yonger brother to Mathew aforesaid Earle of Lennox, which Lodowic Esme his sonne at this day honorably enjoieth. For, since the time of Charles the Sixth, there were of this line Lords of Aubigny in France, the said Robert before named, and Bernard or Eberard under Charles the Eight and Lewis the twelfth, who is commended with great praise unto posterity by P. Iovius, for his noble acts most valerously exploited in the warre of Naples, a most firme and trusty companion of King Henry the Seventh when he entred into England. Who used for his Emprese or devise a Lion betweene buckles, with this Mot DISTANTIA JVNGIT; for that by his means, the Kingdomes of France and of Scotland severed and disioined so farre in distance, were by a streighter league of friendship conjoined; like as Robert Steward Lord D'Aubigny of the same race, who was Marshall of France under King Lewis the eleventh, for the same cause used the roiall Armes of France, with buckles, Or in a borde Gueules: which the Earles and Dukes of Lennox haue ever since borne quarterly with the Armes of Steward.

Iames King of Britan.

Lords of Aubigny or Obigny.

Paradine.

STIRLING Sherisdome.

VPon Lennox North-eastward bordereth the territory of STERLING, so named of the principall towne therein, for fruitfull soile, and numbers of gentlemen in it, second to no province of Scotland. Heere is that narrow land or streight, by which Dunbritton Frith and Edenborrough Frith (that I may use the termes of this our age) piercing farre into the land out of the the West and East Seas, are divided asunder, that they meete not the one with the other.

Which thing Iulius Agricola, who marched hitherto and beyond, first observed; and fortified this space betweene with garrisons, so as all the part of Britaine in this side was then in possession of the Romans, and the enemies removed and driven, as it were, into another Island, in so much as Tacitus judged right truely, There was no other bound or Limite of Britaine to bee sought for. Neither verily in the time ensuing, did either the VALOVR of Armies, or the GLORIE of the Roman name, which scarcely could bee staied, set out the marches of the Empire in this part of the world farther, although with inrodes they other whiles molested and endammaged them. But after this glorious Expedition of Agricola, when himself was called back, Britaine, as saith Tacitus, became for-let, neither was the possession kept still, thus farre: for, the Caledonian Britans draue the Romans backe as farre as to the river Tine: in so much as Hadrian, who came into Britaine in person about the fortieth yeere after, and reformed many things in it, went no farther forward, but gaue commandement, that the GOD TERMINVS, which was wont to giue ground unto none, should retire back-ward out off this place, like as in the East, on this side Euphrates. Hence it is that Saint Augustin wrote in this wise: God TERMINVS, who gaue not place to Iupiter, yeelded unto the will of Hadrianus, yeelded to the rashnesse of Iulian yeelded to the necessity of Iovian. In so much as Hadrian had enough to doe, for to make a wall of turfe betweene the rivers Tine and Esk, well neare an hundred miles Southward on this side Edenborrough Frith.

God Terminus. Augustin. De Civitate Dei lib. 4. cap. 29.

But

A But Antoninus Pius, who beeing adopted by Hadrian bare his name, ſtiled thereupon TITVS ÆLIVS HADRIANVS ANTONINVS PIVS, under the conduct of Lollius Vrbicus, whom he had ſent hither Lieutenant, repelled the Northern enemies backe againe beyond BODOTRIA or Edenborrough Forth, and that by raiſing another wall of turfe, namely beſide that of Hadrianus, as Capitolinus writeth. Which wall, that it was reared in this very place, whereof I now ſpeake, and not by Severus (as it is commonly thought) I will produce no other witneſſes, than two ancient inſcriptions digged up here; of which the one faſtned in the wall of an houſe at Cader, ſheweth how the ſecond Legion Auguſta, ſet up the wall for the ſpace of three miles and more: the other, now in the houſe of the Earle Marſhall at Dunotyr, B which implieth, that a band of the twentieth legion Victrix, raiſed the ſaid wal three miles long. But ſee here the very inſcriptions themſelues as Servatius Riheley a Gentleman of Sileſia, who curiouſly travailed theſe countries, copied them out for mee.

The wall of Antoninus. Pius.

C

IMP. CÆSARI
T. ÆLIO HADRI-ANO ANTONINO.
AVG. PIO. P. P.
VEXILLATIO
LEG. XX. VAL. VIC. F.
PER. MIL. P. III.

IMP. CÆS. TIT. --- IO ÆLIO HADRIANO ANTON.
AVG. PIO. PP. LEG. II. AVG.
PER. M. P. III. D. CIXVIS.

At Cadir, where this latter inſcription is extant, there is another ſtone alſo erected by the Second Legion Auguſta, wherein within a Laurell garland ſupported by two little images reſembling victory, are theſe letters.

D

L E G.
II
A V G.
F E C.

E

And in a village called Miniabruch, out of a Miniſters houſe there was remooved this inſcription into a Gentlemans houſe, which is there new built out of the ground.

F

A

D. M.

C. IVLI.
MARCELLINI PRÆF.
*COH. I. HAMIOR.

B

*Cohors prima Hamiorum.

But when the Northern nations in the reigne of Commodus, having passed once over this wall, had made much wast and spoile in the Country, the Emperour Severus, as I haue already said, repaired this wall of Hadrian. Howbeit afterwards the Romans brought eftsoones the country lying betweene, under their subjection. For Ninius hath recorded, that Carausius under Diocletian strengthned this wall another time, and fortified it with seven castles. Lastly, the Romans fenced this place (when Theodosius the younger was Emperour) under the conduct of Gallio of Ravenna. Now, saith Bede, they made a turfe wall, rearing it not so much with stone as with turfes (as having no cunning artificer for so great a peece of worke) and the same to no use, betweene two Friths or Armes of the sea, for many miles in length: that, where the sense of water was wanting, there by the helpe of a wall they might defend their borders from the invasion of enemies: of which worke, that is to say, a very broade and high wall, a man may see to this day most certaine and evident remaines.

C

This wall beganne, as the Scots in these daies giue out, at the river Aven, that goeth into Edenborrow Forth, and having passed over the riveret Carron, reacheth unto Dunbritton. But Bede, as I said ere while, affirmeth that it beginneth in a place called Pen vaell, that is, in the Picts language as much as, The head of the wall, in the Britans tongue Pen-Gual, in English Penwalton, in Scottish, Cevall; all which names no doubt are derived from Vallum in Latin: and he saith, That place is almost two miles from Abercuruig or Abercurving. And it endeth, as the common sort thinke, at Kirk-Patrick, the natiue soile (as some writeth) of Saint Patrick the Irishmens Apostle, neere unto Cluyd: according to Bede at Alcluid; after Ninius, at the City Pen Alcloyt, which may seeme all one.

Ninius.

D

Abercorn.

Now, this wall is commonly called Grahams dyke, either of Graham a warlike Scot, whose valour was especially seene when the breach was made through it, or else of the hill Grampie at the foote whereof it stood. The author of Rota Temporum calleth it the wall of Aber-corneth, that is, of the mouth of the river Corneth: where, in Bedes time, There was a famous monasterie standing; as hee hath recorded, upon English ground, but neere unto that frith or arme of the sea which in those daies severed the Lands of the English and the Picts.

Grahams dyke.

E

Hard by this wall of turfe, what way, as the river Carron crosseth this Shirifdome of Sterling, toward the left hand are seene two mounts cast up by mans hand, which they call Duni pacis, that is, Knolles of peace, and almost two miles lower, there is an ancient round building, foure and twenty cubits high and thirteene broad, open in the top, framed of rough stone without lime, having the upper part of every stone so tenanted into the nether, as that the whole worke rising still narrow, by a mutuall interlacing and clasping upholdeth it selfe. Some call this the Temple of God TERMINVS, others Arthurs-Oven, who father every stately and sumptuous thing upon Arthur. Others againe, Iulius Hoff; and suppose it to haue beene built by Iulius Cæsar. But I would thinke rather, that Iulius Agricola built it, who fortified this frontier part; were it not that Ninius had already enformed us, that it was erected by Carausius for a Triumphall arch. For, hee, as Ninius, writeth, built upon the banke of Caron a round house of polished stone, erecting a Triumphall Arch in memoriall

Duni pacis.

Arthurs Oven.

F

A memoriall of a victorie : hee reedified also the wall and strengthened it with seven Castles. In the mideſt ſpace betweene Duni pacis and this building, on the right-hand-banke of Carron, there is yet to be diſcerned a confuſed face of a little ancient City: where the vulgar people beleeueth, there was ſome times a roade for ſhips, who call it Camelot, by a name that is rife in King Arthurs booke; and they contend, but al in vaine, to haue it that Camalodunum, which Tacitus mentioneth. But it would ſeeme rather by the name of the river Carron running underneath, to haue beene CORTA DAMNIORVM, which Ptolomee mentioneth in this tract. And now take with you that which George Buchanan that excellent Poet wrote of the limite of the Roman Empires at Carron. Coria Damniorum.

B Roma ſecurigeris prætendit mania Scotis,
Hic ſpe progreſſus poſitâ, Carronis ad undam
Terminus Auſonij ſignat divertia regni.
'Gainſt warlike Scots with axes arm'd, a mighty frontier wall,
The Romans raiſ'd. And limit there, which TERMINVS they call,
Nere Carron ſtreame, now paſt all hope more Britiſh ground to gaine
Markes out the Roman Empires end; whence they to turn were faine

C In this territorie of Sterling on the Eaſt ſide, there ſheweth it ſelfe Caſtle Callendar, belonging to the Barons of Levingſton. And the familie of the Barons Fleming dwelleth hard by at Cumbernald, which they received at the hands of King Robert Brus, for their ſervice valiantly and faithfully performed in defenſe of their country: whereby alſo they attained unto the hereditarie honour to be Chamberlains of Scotland. And even very lately, the favour of King Iames the Sixth, hath honoured this houſe with the title of Earle, what time as he created I. Baron Fleming Earle of Wigton. In a place nere adjoyning, ſtandeth Elpheingſton, which likewiſe hath his Barons, advanced to that dignity by King Iames the Fourth: And where Forth full of his windings and crooked crankes runneth downe with a rolling pace and hath a bridge over him, ſtandeth Sterlin, commonly called Strivelin and Sterlin Borrough; where, on the very brow of a ſteepe rocke, there is mounted on high a paſſing ſtrong caſtle of the Kings, which King Iames the Sixth hath beautified with new buildings, and whereof this long time the Lords of Ereskin haue beene Capitaines, unto whom the charge and tuition of the Princes of Scotland during their minority hath beene otherwiles committed. Whereas ſome there bee, that would haue the good and lawfull money of England, which is called Sterling money, to take the name from hence, they are much deceived: for, that denomination came from the Germans, of their Eaſterly dwelling, termed by Engliſhmen Eſterlings; whom Iohn King of England firſt ſent for to reduce the ſilver to the due fineneſſe and puritie: and ſuch moneys in ancient writing are evermore found by the name of Eſterling. Callendar. Barons Levingſton. Fleming Earle of Wigton. Sterling money.

E But concerning Sterlin towne the verſes that I. Ionſton hath made, ſhall ſupplie all the reſt.

Regia ſublimis celſa deſpectat ab arce
Pendula ſub biferis mœnia ſtructa jugis.
Regum auguſta parens, Regum nutricula natis,
Hinc ſibi Regifico nomine tota placet.
Hoſpita ſed cuivis quovis ſub nomine, amicus
Sive es, ſeu non es, hoſpes an hoſtis item.
Pro lucro cedit Damnum. Diſcordia triſtis
Heu quoties procerum ſanguine tinxit humum?
F Hoc uno infœlix, at fœlix cætera, nuſquam
Lætior aut cœli frons, geniuſve ſoli.

A regall pallace ſtately ſet, beholds from mount aloft,
Towne wall, built hanging on the ſide of hill with double coſt.

The ſacred mother unto Kings, of Kings babes eke the nource, A
Hence is it that ſhe prides her ſelfe in Kings names and no worſe.
But entertaineth every one, by name it skils not what,
A friend or ſo, friend gueſt or no, ſhee reakneth nought of that:
In ſteed of gaine this turn's to loſſe. Beſides, how oft alas,
Hath diſcord foule with Nobles bloud ſtein'd hence both ground & graſſe?
In this alone unhappy ſhe; elſe not: nor ſhall yee finde,
Elſe where the aire more mild and cleere, or ſoile of better kinde.

Banoc-bourn. About two miles hence, the Banoc-bourn runneth between exceeding high banks on both ſides, and with a very ſwift ſtreame in winter, toward the Forth: a bourne B moſt famous for as glorious a victory as ever the Scots had, what time as Edward the Second King of England was put to flight, who was faine to make hard ſhift and in great haſt and feare to take a boat and ſaue his life; yea and the moſt puiſſant army which England had before ſent out, was diſcomfited through the valiant proweſſe of King Robert Brus; in ſo much as for two yeeres after, the Engliſh came not into the Alauna. field againſt the Scots. About Sterlin, Ptolomee ſeemeth to place ALAVNA, which is, either neare the little river Alon, that here entreth into the Forth, or elſe, by Alway an houſe of the Ereskins, who by inheritance are the Sheriffes of all this territory without the Burgh. But I haue not yet read of any one dignified by the title of Earle of Sterlin. C

CALEDONIA.

WHat ſo ever part of Britain lieth Northward beyond Grahames Dyke, or the wall of Antoninus Pius before named, & beareth out on both ſeas, is called by Tacitus CALEDONIA, like as the people therof, Britans inhabiting CALEDONIA. Ptolomee divideth them into many nations, as CALEDONII, EPIDII, VACOMAGI, &c. Who were all of them afterward for continuing their D ancient maner and cuſtome of peincting their bodies, named by the Romans and the Provinciall people, PICTS: divided by Ammianus Marcellinus into two nations, the DICALEDONES and VECTVRIONES, touching whom I haue ſpoken already before. Howbeit in the approved and beſt writers, they goe all under the name of Caledonians: whom I would thinke to haue beene ſo called of Kaled a Britiſh word that ſignifieth Hard, and in the plurall number maketh Kaledion: whence the name Caledonij, may be derived, that is to ſay, hard, rough, uncivill and a wilder kind of people: ſuch as the Northren nations for the moſt part are: who by reaſon of the rigorous cold of the aire, are more rough and fierce, and for their abundance of bloud more bold and adventurous. Moreover, beſide the poſition of the E climate, this is furthered by the nature & condition of the ſoile, which riſeth up all throughout with rough and rugged mountainers: and mountainers verily, all men know and confeſſe, to be hardy, ſtoute, and ſtrong. But, whereas Varro alleageth out of Pacuvius, that Caledonia breadeth and nouriſheth men of exceeding bigge bodies, I would underſtand the place rather of Caledonia the region of Epirus, than this of Caledon Foreſt. ours: although ours alſo may juſtly challeng unto it ſelfe this commendation. Among this was the Wood CALEDONIA, termed by Lucius Florus, Saltus Caledonius, that is, The foreſt of Caledonia, ſpreading out a mighty way, and impaſſable by reaſon of tall trees ſtanding ſo thick, divided alſo by Grampe hil, now called Grantzbaine, that is, the Crooked bending mountaine. That Ulyſſes arrived in Caledonia (ſaith Solinus) appeareth plainely by a votiue altar with an inſcription in Greeke letters, but I would F
Vlyſſes his Altar. judge it to haue beene rather erected to the honour of Vlyſſes, than reared by Vlyſſes himſelfe: Martiall the Poet likewiſe in this verſe maketh mention of Caledonian
Caledonian beares. beares.

Nuda Caledonio ſic pectora præbuit Vrſo.

Thus

A Thus yeelded he his naked breſt,
To beare of Caledon forreſt.

Plutarch alſo hath written, that Beares were brought out of Britaine to Rome, and had there in great admiration: whereas notwithſtanding, Britaine for theſe many ages paſt hath bred none. What Caledonian monſter, that ſhould be, whereof Claudian wrote thus,

——Caledonio velata Britannia monſtro.
With monſter Caledonian Britaine all attired.

To tell you truth, I know not. Certes, it nouriſhed in times paſt a number of white
B wild buls, with thicke manes in maner of Lions (but in theſe daies few) and thoſe very cruell, fierce, and ſo hatefull of mankind, that for a certaine time they abhorre whatſoever they had either handled or breathed upon: yea, they utterly skorne the forcible ſtrength of dogges; albeit Rome in times paſt wondered ſo much at the fierceneſſe of Scottiſh dogges, that it was thought there, they were brought thither within yron grates and cages. Well, this tearme and name CALEDONII, grew ſo rife with Roman writers, that they uſed it for all Britaine, and for all woods of Britaine whatſoever. Heereupon L. Florus writeth, that Cæſar followed the Britans unto the Caledonian woods, and yet he neuer ſaw them in his life: Hence alſo Valerius Flaccus writeth thus to Veſpaſian the Emperour. Caledonian bulls.

C ——Caledonius poſtquam tua carbaſa vexit
Oceanus. that is, the Britiſh Ocean.

Hence likewiſe it is, that Statius verſified thus unto Criſpinus ſonne of Vectius Volanus Propretour of Britaine about the time of Vitellius.

Quanta Caledonios attollet gloria campos,
Cùm tibi longæuus referet trucis incola terræ;
Hic ſuetus dare iura parens, hoc ceſſite turmas
D Affari, ille dedit, cinxítque hæc mœnia foſſa;
Belligeris hæc dona deis, hæc tela dicauit:
Cernis adhuc titulos, hunc ipſe vacantibus armis
Induit, hunc regi rapuit thoraca Britanno.
How much renowned ſhall the fields of Caledonia bee,
When as ſome old inhabitant of that fierce land to thee
Shall in theſe tearmes report and ſay? behold, thy father oft
Was wont in Iudgement heere to ſit: upon this banke aloft,
To th'armed troups to ſpeake: it was he that walled this fort
That built thus ſtrong, and it with ditch entrenched in this ſort.
E By him to Gods of warre theſe gifts & arm's were conſecrate,
The titles (lo) are extant yet himſelfe this brave breſt plate
In time of battaile did put on: this cuirace finally,
In fight he pluckt by force of armes from King of Britannie.

But in theſe as in other things I may ſay,

Creſcit in immenſum facunda licentia vatum.
Poeticall licence is boundleſſe.

F For neither Cæſar, nor Volanus ſo much as ever knew the Caledonians. In Plinies time, as himſelfe witneſſeth, thirty yeeres almoſt after Claudius, the Romaines with all their warlicke expeditions had diſcovered no farther in Britaine than to the Vicinity of the Caledonian wood. For Iulius Agricola under Domitian was the firſt, that entred Caledonia: whereof at that preſent Galgac was Prince (who is named Galauc ap Liennauc in the booke of * Triplicites among the three worthies of Britaine) a man Galgacus the Britan. * Triadum.

of

of a mighty ſpirit and ſtout ſtomacke: who having put to flight the ninth Legion, in exceeding heat of courage joined battaile with the Romans and moſt manfully defended his country ſo long, untill fortune rather than his owne valour failed him. For then, as he ſaith, Theſe Northern Britans beyond whom there was no land, and beſide whom none were free, were the utmoſt nation verily of this Iland, like as Catullus called the Britans the vtmoſt of all the world, in that verſe unto Furius. A

Cæſaris viſens monumenta magni
Gallicum Rhenum, horribiles, & vltimoſq; Britannos.

Great Cæſars Monuments to ſee in his memoriall,
The Rhene in Gaull, and Britans grim, the fartheſt men of all. B

Argetocoxus. In the daies of Severus, as we read in Xiphilinus, Argetecox a pety Prince reigned over this tract, whoſe wife being rated and reviled as an adultereſſe by Iulia the Empreſſe, frankly and boldly made this anſwere: We Britaine Dames have to doe with the braveſt & beſt men: and you Romaine Ladies, with every lewd baſe companion ſecretly.

FIFE. C

Clarkmans. IN this large country of the Caledonions, beyond the Territorie of Sterlin, whereof I wrote laſt, and two countries or Sherifdomes of leſſe note, Clackmans, over which a Knight named de Carſſe: and Kinroſſe, over which the Earle of Morton, are Sheriffes, Fife a moſt goodly Biland, wedged, as it were, betweene the two armes of the Sea, Forth and Tau, ſhooteth out farre into the Eaſt. This land yeeldeth plenty of corne and forage, yea and of pit coles: the ſea beſides other fiſhes, affordeth Oiſters and ſhelfiſh in great abundance: and the coaſts are well beſpred with prety townlets re- D pleniſhed with ſtout and luſty mariners. In the South-ſide heereof by Forth, firſt appeereth Weſtward Cul-ros, which giveth the title of a Baronie to Sir I. Coluil: then, ſtandeth Dunfermling a famous monaſterie in old time, both the building and buriall place of King Malcolm the third. But now it giveth both name and honor of an Earle unto Sir Alexander Seton a moſt prudent Councellor, whom lately Iames King of great Britaine worthily raiſed from Baron of Fivy to be Earle of Dunfermling and Lord Chancellour of the realme of Scotland. Then Kinghorne ſtandeth E hard upon the Forth, from which place Sir Patricke Lion, Baron Glamys lately received at the bountifull hand of King Iames the Sixth, the title and honor of an Earle.

Dunfermling Earle of Dunfermling.

Earle of Kinghorn.

Diſert. After this, there is upon the ſhore, Diſert, ſituate on the riſing of an hill, from whence there lieth an open Heath of the ſame name, where there is a good large place which they call, The Cole-plot, that hath great plenty of an earthy Bitumen and partly burneth, to ſome damage of the inhabitants. Unto it adjoineth Ravins-Heuch, as one would ſay, They ſteepe hill of Ravens, the habitation of the Barons Seincler. A-

River Levin. bove it, the river Levin hideth himſelfe in the Forth: which river running out of the Wemmis. Lake Levin, wherein ſtandeth a Caſtle of the Douglaſſes now Earles of Morton, hath at the very mouth of it, Wemmis Caſtle, the ſeat of a noble family, bearing the ſame

Saint Andrews. ſurname: which King Iames the ſixth hath of late honored with the dignity of a Ba- F

Saint Regulus. ron. From hence the ſhore draweth backe with a crooked and winding tract unto Fif-neſſe, that is, The Promontorie, or Noſe of Fife. Above it Saint Andrews an Archiepiſcopall Citie hath a faire proſpect into the open maine ſea. The more ancient name of the place, as old memoriales witneſſe, was Regimund, that is, Saint Regulus mount: in which we read thus, Oeng or Vng King of the Picts, graunted unto God and

Saint

Saint Andrew, that it ſhould be the chiefe and mother of all Churches in the Picts Kingdome. Afterward there was placed heere an Epiſcopall See; the Biſhops whereof like as all the reſt within the Kingdome of Scotland were conſecrated by the Archbiſhop of Yorke, untill at the interceſſion of King Iames the Third, by reaſon of ſo many warres betweene the Scottiſh and Engliſhmen, Pope Sixtus the Fourth ordained the Biſhop of Saint Andrews to bee Primate and Metropolitan of all Scotland; and Pope Innocentius the eight bound him and his ſucceſſours to the imitation and precedent of the Metropolitane of Canterburie, in theſe words, That in matters concerning the Archiepiſcopall ſtate, they ſhould obſerve and firmely hold the offices, droites and rights of Primacy, and ſuch like Legacy, and the free exerciſe therof, the honours, charges, and profits: and that they ſhould endevour to performe inviolably the laudable cuſtomes of the famous Metropolitane Church of Canterburie, the Arch-Biſhop whereof is Legatus Natus of the Kingdome of England &c. Howbeit, before that, Laurence Lundoris and Richard Coruel Doctors of the Civill law, publickly profeſſed heere good literature, laid the foundation of an Vniverſity: which now for happy encreaſe of learned men, for three colledges, and the Kings Profeſſours in them, is become highly renowned. In commendation whereof Maiſter Ionſton the Kings profeſſour there in Divinity, hath made theſe verſes.

Ex Camera Apoſtolica lib. 24 fol. 24.

FANVM REGVLI, ſiue ANDREAPOLIS.

Imminet Oceano, paribus deſcripta viarum
Limitibus, pingui quàm bene ſepta ſolo?
Magnificis opibus ſtaret dum gloria priſca
Pontificum, hîc fulſit Pontificalis apex.
Muſarum oſtentat ſurrecta palatia cœlo,
Delicias hominum, deliciáſque Deûm.
Hîc nemus umbriferum Phœbi, Nymphæque ſorores
Candida quas inter præſitet Vranie.
Quæ me longinquis redeuntem Teutonis oris
Suſcipit, excelſo collocat inque gradu.
Vrbs nimium fœlix, Muſarum ſi bona noſſet
Munera, & æthery regna beata Dei.
Pelle malas peſtes urbe, & quæ noxia Muſis
Alme, Deus coeant Pax, Pietaſque ſimul.

SAINT REGVLVS Or S. ANDREWS.

Seated it is hard by the ſea at even and equall bounds,
Of ſtreates; how well encloſed beſides with fat and fertile grounds?
Whilom, when prelats ſtate was great and glorious withall,
There flouriſh'd heere in ſumpteous port a See pontificall.
Now Schooles it ſhew's and Colledges, both Gods and mans delight,
To Muſes which be dedicate and built to ſtately height.
Heere Phœbus hath his ſhady grove; heere dwell the Siſters nine,
And chiefe of them the Lady bright, Vranie divine.
Who when I was returned from farre coaſts of Germanie,
With welcome kind heere did me place in chaire of high degree.

Moſt

Moſt happy towne, wiſt it what were the gifts of learning true, A
The bleſſed Kingdome if withall of God in heaven it knew.
All plagues, good God; all nocive things to Muſes, hence repell
That in this Citie, Godlineſſe and Peace may jointly dwell.

Falkland. Hard by, there looſeth it ſelfe in the ſea, Eden or Ethan a little river, which ſpringing up neere unto Falkland (belonging in times paſt to the Earles of Fife, but now a retyring place of the Kings, very well ſeated for hunting pleaſures and diſports) runneth under a continued ridge of hilles, which devide this country in the mids, by Struthers (a place ſo called of a Reed plot) a Caſtle of the Barons Lindſey; and by B
Cuper. Cupre a notable Bourough, where the Sheriffe ſitteth to miniſter juſtice. Concerning which the ſame I. Ionſton hath thus verſified.

Studer.

CVPRVM FIFÆ.

ARVA inter nemoriſque vmbras & paſcua læta
Lenè fluens vitreis labitur Eden aquis.
Hûc veniat ſi quis Gallorum à finibus hoſpes,
Gallica ſe hîc iterum fortè videre putet.
Anne etiam ingenium hinc & feruida pectora traxit?
An potius patrijs hauſerit illa focis? C

By rich corn fields, by ſhady woods and paſtures freſh among,
The river Eden glideth ſoft, with criſtall ſtreame along.
Hither to come from coaſts of France if any ſtranger chance
Heere haply may he thinke he hath a ſight againe of France.
What: drew this place from thence their wit, and ſpirit hote trow yee?
Or rather had the ſame at firſt by native propretie?

Now, where the ſhore turneth inward a front Northward, hard by the ſalt water of Tau, there flouriſhed in old time two goodly Abbaies, Balmerinoch, built by D
Queene Ermengard, wife to King William, daughter of Vicount Beaumont in France. But lately King Iames of great Britaine advanced Sir Iames Elphinſton to the honor
Balmerinoch. of Baron Balmerinoch: and Lundoris, founded among the woods by David Earle of Huntington, and at this day the Baronie of Sir Patricke Leſley betweene which ſtan-Lundoris. deth Banbrich, the habitation of the Earle of Rothes, ſtrongly built caſtle wiſe. But as touching the townes of Fife planted along the ſea ſide, have heere now if it pleaſe you, theſe verſes of Maiſter Ionſton.

Oppida ſic toto ſunt ſparſa in littore vt vnum
Dixeris; inque vno plurima iuncta eadem E
Littore quot curuo Forthæ voluuntur arenæ,
Quotque vndis refluo tunditur ora ſalo;
Pene tot hîc cernas inſtratum puppibus æquor,
Vrbibus & crebris pene tot ora hominum.
Cuncta operis intenta domus, fœda otia neſcit;
Sedula cura domi, ſedula cura foris.
Quæ maria & quas non terras animoſa iuuentus
Ah: fragili fidens audet adire trabe?
Auxit opes virtus, virtuti dura pericla
Iuncta etiam lucro damna fuere ſuo. F
Quæ fecere viris animos, cultumque dedere;
Magnanimis proſunt damna, pericla, labor.

Who ſees how thicke town's ſtand upon this coaſt, will ſay anone,
They are but one, and yet the ſame all joined in that one.
How many ſands on crooked ſhore of Forth are caſt by tides,

Or

A Or billowes at the ſeas returne beat hard upon bankes ſides.
So many ſhips well here you may heere ſee to ſaile or ride,
And in thoſe townes ſo thicke, almoſt as many folke abide.
In every houſe they ply their worke: no idle drones they are:
Buſie at home with diligence, buſie abroad with care.
What ſeas or lands are there to which a voiage for to make,
In britle barkes, will not their youth courageous undertake.
By valour be they growne to welth, yet valour, meet with paines,
And perils too: ſome loſſes to haue they had with their gaines.
Theſe things have made them valiant: civill withall and courteous:
B Loſſe, perill, painfull toile availe all ſuch as be magnanimous.

The governour of this province, like as of all the reſt in this Kingdome, was in times paſt a Thane, that is, in the old Engliſh tongue, The Kings Miniſter: as it is alſo at this day in the Daniſh language: but Malcolm Canmore made Macduffe, who before was Thane of Fife, the firſt hereditarie Earle of Fife: and in conſideration of his good deſert and ſingular ſervice done unto him, granted that his poſterity, ſhould have the honor, to place the King when he is to be crowned, in his chaire; to lead the Vant gard in the Kings armie, and if any of them ſhould happen by caſualty to kill either Gentleman or commoner, to buy it out with a peece of money. And not Earles of Fife.
C farre from Lundoris, there is to be ſeene a Croſſe of ſtone, which ſtanding for a limite betweene Fife and Strathern, had an inſcription of barbarous verſes, and a certain priviledge of Sanctuary, that any Manſlear allied to Mac-duffe Earle of Fife within the ninth degree, if he came unto this Croſſe & gave nine kine with an * heipher, ſhould be quit of manſlaughter. When, his poſterity loſt this title, I could never yet find. But it appeereth out of the Records of the Kingdome, that King David the ſecond, gave unto William Ramſey this Earldome with all and every the immunities, and law which is called Clan-Mac-Duffe: and received it is for certaine, that the linage of the Wemeſies, and Douglaſſe, yea and that great kinred Clan-Hatan, the chiefe whereof is Mac-Intoskech, deſcended from them. And the moſt learned I. Skerne * Coplindaſh.
D Clerke of the Kings regiſter of Scotland, hath taught me in his ſignifications of words, that Iſabell daughter and heire to Duncane Earle of Fife, granted upon certaine conditions unto Robert the third King of the Scots for the uſe and behoufe of Robert Stewart Earle of Menteith, the Earledome of Fife: who being afterwards Duke of Albanie and affecting the Kingdome with cruell ambition cauſed David the Kings eldeſt ſonne to be moſt pitifully famiſhed to death which is higheſt extremity of all miſerie. But his ſonne Murdac ſuffred due puniſhment for the wickedneſſe both of his father and his owne ſonnes, being put to death by King Iames the 1424.
firſt for their violent oppreſſions, and a decree paſſed, that the Earledome of Fife ſhould be united unto the Crowne for ever. But the authority of the Sheriffe of Fife Earles of Rothes.
E belongeth in right of inheritance to the Earle of Rothes.

STRATHERN.

AS farre as to the river Tau, which boundeth Fife on the Northſide, Iulius Agricola, the beſt Propretour of Britaine under Domitian the worſt Emperour, marched with victorious armes in F the third yeere of his warlicke expeditions having waſted and ſpoiled the nations thitherto. Neere the out-let of Tau, the notable river Ern intermingleth his waters with Tau: which river The river Ern.
beginning out of a Lake or Loch of the ſame name, beſtoweth his owne name upon the country through which he runneth: For, it is called Straith Ern, which in the ancient tongue of the Britans, ſignifieth the Vale along Ern. The banke

banke of this Ern is beautified with Drimein Caſtle, belonging to the family of the Barons of Dromund, advanced to higheſt honors ever ſince that King Robert Stewart the third tooke to him a wife out of that linage. For, the women of this race have for their ſingular beauty and well fauoured ſweete countenance, wonne the prize from all others, inſomuch as they have beene the Kings moſt amiable paramours. Vpon the ſame banke Tulibardin Caſtle ſheweth it ſelfe aloft, but with greater ioility, ſince that by the propitious fayour of King Iames the ſixth, Sir John Murray Baron of Tulibardin was raiſed to the honor and eſtate of Earle of Tulibardin. Vpon the other banke, more beneath, Duplin Caſtle, the habitation of the Barons Oliphant, reporteth yet what an overthrow (the like to which was never before) the Engliſhmen that came to aide King Edward Balliol, gave there unto the Scots; in ſo much as the Engliſh writers in that time doe write, that they wonne this victorie not by mans hand, but by the power of God: and the Scotiſh writers relate, how that out of the family of the Lindeſies there were ſlaine in the field foureſkore perſons, and that the name of the Haies had bin quite extinguiſhed, but that the chiefe of that houſe left his wife behind him great with child. Not farre from it ſtandeth Innermeth, well knowen by reaſon of the Lords thereof, the Stewarts out of the family of Lorn. Inch-Chafra, that is, In the old Scotiſh tonge, the Iſle of Maſſes, hereby may be remembred when as it was a moſt famous Abbay of the order of Saint Auguſtin founded by the Earle of Strathern about the yeere 1200.

Barons of Dromund.

Earles of Tulibardin.

Duplin.

Baron Oliphant.

When Ern hath joined his water with Tau in one ſtreame, ſo that Tau is now become more ſpatious, he looketh up to Aberneth ſeated upon his banke, the roiall ſeat in old time of the Picts and a well peopled Citie: which, as we read in an ancient fragment, Nectane King of the Picts gave unto God and Saint Brigide untill the day of Dome, together with the bounds thereof, which lie from a ſtone in Abertrent, unto a ſtone nigh to Carfull, that is, Loghfoll, and from thence as farre as to Ethan. But long after, it became the poſſeſſion of the Douglaſſes Earles of Anguſe, who are called Lords of Aberneth; and there ſome of them lie enterred.

The firſt Earle of Strathern, that I read off, was Malſſe who in the time of King Henrie the third of England married one of the heires of Robert Muſchamp a potent Baron of England. Long afterward Robert Stewart in the yeere 1380: Then, David a younger ſonne of King Robert the ſecond, whoſe onely daughter given in marriage to Patricke Graham begat Mailiſe or Meliſſe Graham, from whom King Iames the firſt tooke away the Earledome as eſcheated after that he underſtood out of the Records of the Kingdome, that it was given unto his mothers grandfather, and the heires males of his body. This territory as alſo that of Menteth adjoining, the Barons Dromund governe hereditarily by Seneſchals authority, as their Stewarties.

Earles of Strathern. Fines 35. H. 3. n. 1.

Menteith, hath the name of Teith, a river, which alſo they call Taich, and thereof, this little province they tearme in Latin Taichia: upon the banke of which, lieth the Biſhopricke of Dunblan, which King David the firſt of that name erected. At Kirkbird, that is Saint Brigids Church the Earles of Menteith have their principall houſe or Honour: as alſo the Earles of Montroſſe comming from the ſame ſtocke, at Kin-Kardin not farre off. This Menteith reacheth, as I have heard, unto the mountaines that encloſe the Eaſt-ſide of the Logh or lake Lomund. The ancient Earls of Menteth, were of the family of Cumen which in times paſt being the moſt ſpred and mightieſt houſe of all Scotland, was ruinated with the ouer-weight and ſway thereof: but the latter Earles were of the Grahams line, ever ſince that Sir Mailiſe Graham attained to the honor of an Earle.

Menteith Stewartry. Dunblan.

Earles of Menteith.

ARGATHELIA

A

ARGATHELIA, Or ARGILE.

B BEyond the Lake Lomund and the West part of Lennox, there spreadeth it self nere unto Dunbriton Forth the large country called, Argathelia, & Argadia in Latin, but commonly ARGILE more truely Argathel and Ar-Gwithil, that is, Neere unto the Irish; or, as old writings haue it, The Edge or border of Ireland: For, it lieth toward Ireland; the inhabitants whereof, the Brians terme Gwithil and Gaothel. The country runneth out in length and breadth, all mangled with fishfull pooles: and in some places with rising mountaines very commodious for feeding of cattaile, in which also there range up and downe wild kine and red Deere: but along the shore it is more unpleasant in sight, what with rockes, and what with blackish baraine mountaines. In this part, as Bede writeth, Britaine received after the Britans and Picts, a third nation of Scots in that country where the Picts inhabited: who comming out of Ireland under the leading of

C Reuda either through friendshippe or by dint of sword planted heere their seat amongst them, which they still hold. Of which their leader they are to this very daie called Dalreudini: For, in their language, Dal, signifieth (a part). And a little after; Ireland (saith hee) is the proper Country of the Scots; for, beeing departed out of it they added unto the Britans and Picts a third nation in Britaine. And there is a verie great Bay or arme of the sea: that in old time severed the Nation of the Britans from the Picts: which from the West breaketh a great way into the land, where standeth the strongest City of all the Britans even to this day, called Alcluith. In the North part of which Bay, the Scots aforesaid when they came, got e themselues a place to inhabite. Of that name Dalreudin, no remaines at all, to my knowledge, are now extant, neither finde

D wee any thing thereof in writers, unlesse it bee the same that Dalrieta. For, in an old pamphlet, touching the division of Albanie, wee read of one Kinnadie (who for certaine, was a King of Scots and subdued the Picts) these very words; Kinnadie two yeeres before hee came into Pictavia (for so it calleth the Country of the Picts) entred upon the Kingdome of Dalrieta. Also, in an historie of later time there is mention made of Dalrea in some place of this tract, where King Robert Brus fought a field unfortunately.

Dalreudini. Dal. Dalrieta. Dalrea.

That Iustice should be ministred unto this Province by Iustices Itinerant at Perth, whensoever it pleased the King, King Iames the Fourth by authority of the States of the Kingdome enacted a law. But the Earles themselues haue in some cases their

E royalties: as beeing men of very great command and authority, followed with a mighty traine of reteiners and dependants: who deriue their race from the ancient Princes and potentates of Argile by an infinite descent of Ancestours, and from their castle Cambell tooke their surname: but the honour and title of Earle was given unto them by King Iames the Second, who, as it is recorded, invested Colin Lord Cambell, Earle of Argile, in regard of his owne vertue and the worth of his familie. Whose heires and successours standing in the gracious favor of the Kings, haue beene Lords of Lorne and a good while Generall Iustices of the Kingdome of Scotland, or, as they use to speake Iustices ordeined in Generall, and Great Maisters of the Kings roiall household.

Earles of Argile.

F

A

CANTIRE.

Logh Fin.

Epidium.

LOgh Fin, a lake breeding ſuch ſtore of herings at a certaine due ſeaſon as it is wonderfull, ſevereth Argile from a Promontorie, which for thirtie miles together growing ſtill toward a ſharpe point thruſteth it ſelfe forth with ſo great a deſire toward Ireland (betwixt which and it, there is a narrow ſea ſcarce thirteene miles over) as if it would conjoine it ſelfe. Ptolomee termeth this, the Promontorie EPIDIORVM, betweene which name and the Iſlands EBVDAE lying over againſt it, there is, in my conceit, ſome affinity. At this day, it is called in the Iriſh tongue (which they ſpeake in all this tract) CAN-TYRE, that is, The lands Head. Inhabited by the Mac-Conells, a familie that heere ſwaieth much, howbeit at the pleaſure and diſpoſe of the Earle of Argile, yea and other whiles they make out their light pinnaces and gallies for Ireland, to raiſe booties and pillage, who alſo hold in poſſeſſion thoſe little provinces of Ireland which they call Glines and Rowts. This Promontorie lieth annexed to Knapdale by ſo thinne a necke (as beeing ſcarce a mile broade and the ſame all ſandie) that the mariners finde it the nerer way to convey their ſmal veſſels over it by land. Which I hope a man may ſooner beleue, than that the Argonauts laid their great ſhip Argos upon their ſhoulders, and ſo carried it along with them, fiue hundred miles from Aemonia unto the ſhores of Theſſalia.

B

C

Plinius.

LORN.

Berogomum.

Logh-Aber.

SOmewhat higher toward the North lieth LORN, bearing the beſt kinde of barly in great plenty, and divided with Leaue a vaſt and huge lake: by which ſtandeth Berogomum a caſtle, in which ſometime was kept the Court of Iuſtice Or Seſsion: and not farre from it Dunſtafag, that is, Stephens Mount, the kings houſe in times paſt: aboue which Logh Aber a Lake, inſinuating it ſelfe from out of the Weſtern ſea windeth it ſelfe ſo farre within land, that it had conflowed together with Neſſe another Lake running into the Eaſt ſea, but that certaine mountaines betweene kept them with a verie little partition aſunder. The cheifeſt place of name in this tract is Tarbar in Logh Kinkeran: where King Iames the Fourth ordeined a Iuſtice and Sheriffe to adminiſter juſtice unto the inhabitants of the out Iſlands. Theſe countries and thoſe beyond them, in the yeere of our Lords Incarnation 605. the Picts held: whom Bede calleth the Northern Picts, where hee reporteth, that in the ſaid yeere Columbane a Prieſt and Abbat, famous for his Monkiſh profeſsion and life came out of Ireland into Britaine to inſtruct theſe in Chriſtian religion that by meanes of the high rough ridges of the mountaines, were ſequeſtred from the Southern countries of the Picts: and that they, in lieu of a reward, allowed unto him the Iſland Hij over againſt them, now called, I-Comb-Kill, of which more in place convenient. The Lords of Lorna in the age aforegoing were the Stewarts: but now, by reaſon of a femall their heire, the Earles of Argile; who uſe this title in their honourable ſtyle.

D

E

1503.

Lib.3.cap.4.

F

BRAID

A

BRAID ALBIN or ALBANIE.

B MOre inwardly where the inhabitable, lofty, and rugged ridges of the Mountaine Grampius beginne a little to slope and settle downward, is situate BRAID-ALBIN, that is, The heighest part of Scotland: for they that are the true and right Scots in deed, call Scotland in their mother tongue Albin; like as that part where it mounteth up highest Drum Albin, that is, the Ridge of Scotland. But in an old booke, it is read Brun Albin, where wee finde this written; Fergus Filius Eric &c. that is, Fergus the sonne of Eric was the first of the seede or line of Chonare, that entred upon the Kingdome of Albanie, from Brun-Albain unto the Irish sea and Inch-Gall. And after him the Kings descended from the seede or race of Fergus reigned in Brun-Albain or Brunhere unto Alpin the sonne of Eochall. Albanie.

But this Albanie is better knowne for the Dukes thereof than for any good guifts that the soile yeeldeth. The first Duke of Albanie that I read of, was Robert Earle of Fife, whom his brother King Robert the Third of that name advanced to that ho- Dukes of Albanie.
C nour, yet hee (ungratefull person that he was) pricked on with the spirit of Ambition famished to death his sonne David that was heire to the crown. But the punishment due for this wicked fact, which himselfe by the long-sufferance of God felt not, his son Mordac the second Duke of Albanie suffered most greivously, being condemned for treason and beheaded, when hee had seene his two sonnes the daie before executed in the same manner. The third Duke of Albanie was Alexander, second sonne to King Iames the second, who beeing Regent of the Kingdome, Earle of March, Marr, and Garioth, Lord of Annandale and of Mann, was by his owne bother King Iames the Third outlawed, and after hee had beene tormoiled with many troubles, in the end, as hee stood by to behold a Iusts and Tourneament in Paris, chanced to bee wound-
D ded with a peece of a shattered launce, and so died. His sonne Iohn, the fourth Duke of Albanie, Regent likewise and made Tutor to King Iames the Fifth, taking contentment in the pleasant delights of the French Court, after hee had wedded there the daughter and one of the heires of Iohn Earle of Auverne & Lauragveze, died there without issue. Whom in a respectiue reverence to the bloud roiall of the Scots, Francis the First, King of France, gaue thus much honour unto, as that he allowed him place betweene the Archbishop of Langres, and the Duke of Alenson, Tillet. Peeres of France. After his death, there was no Duke of Albanie, untill that Queene Marie in our memorie conferred this title upon Henry Lord Darly, whom within some few daies after shee made her husband, like as King Iames the Sixth granted
E the same unto his owne second sonne Charles beeing an Infant, who is now Duke of Yorke.

There inhabite these regions, a kinde of people, rude, warlicke, ready to fight querulous, & mischeeuous: they be commonly termed High-landmen who being in deed the right progeny of the ancient Scots, speake Irish, and call themselues Albinich; their bodies be firmely made and well compact, able withall and strong, nimble of foote, high minded, inbread and nuzeled in warlick exercises or robberies rather, Highlandmen. and upon a deadly fued and hatred most forward and desperate to take revenge. They goe attired Irish-like in stript or streaked mantles of divers collours, wearing thicke and long glibbes of haire, living by hunting, fishing, fowling, and stealing. In F the warre, their armour is an head-peece or Morion of iron, and an habergeon or coate of maile: their weopons bee bowes, barbed or hooked arrowes, and broade backswordes: and beeing divided by certaine families or kinreds which they terme Clannes, they commit such cruell outrages, what with robbing, spoiling and killing, that their savage cruelty hath forced a law to bee enacted, whereby it is lawfull. That if any person out of any one Clanne or kinred of theirs, hath tref-

Parliament. 1581. passed ought and done harme, whosoever of that, Clanne or linage chance to bee taken, hee shall either make amends for the harmes, or else suffer death for it, when as the whole Clan, commonly beareth feud for any hurt received by any one member thereof, by execution of lawes, order of iustice, or otherwise. A

PERTHIA or Perth Shirifdome. B

The river Tau.

OVt of the very bosome of Mountaines of Albanie, Tau the greatest river of all Scotland issueth: and first runneth a maine through the fields, untill that spreading broad into a lake full of Islands, he restreineth and keepeth in his course. Then gathering himselfe narrow within his bankes into a chanell, and watering Perth, a large, plentiful and rich country, he taketh in unto him Amund a small river comming out of Athol.

Athol. This Athol, that I may digresse alittle out of my way, is infamous for witches and wicked women; the country, otherwise fertile enough, hath valleies bespred with C

Caledon wood. forests: namely where that WOOD CALEDONIA dreadfull to see to for the sundry turnings and windings in and our therein, for the hideous horror of darke shades, for the Burrowes and dennes of wilde bulles with thicke manes (whereof I made mention heretofore) extended it selfe in old time farre and wide every way in these parts. As for the places heerein they are of no great account, but the Earles thereof are very memorable.

Earles of Athol. Thomas a younger sonne of Rolland of Galloway was in his wiues right Earle of Athol; whose sonne Patricke was by the Bissets his concurrents murdered in feude at Hadington in his bedchamber, and forthwith the whole house wherein hee lodged burnt, that it might bee supposed he perished by casualty of fire.

Chroniron Vailcosse. In the Earldome, there succeeded David Hastings, who had married the aunt D by the mothers side of Patricke: whose sonne that David surnamed of Strathbogy may seeme to bee, who a little after in the reigne of Henry the Third King of England beeing Earle of Athol, married one of the daughters, and heires of Richard base sonne to Iohn King of England, and had with her a very goodly inheritance in England. Shee bare unto him two sonnes, Iohn Earle of Athol, who beeing of a variable dispositon and vntrusty, was hanged up a loft on a gallowes fiftie foote hight; and David, Earle of Athol unto whom by marriage with one of the E daughters and heires of Iohn Comin of Badzenoth, by one of the heires of Aumar de Valence Earle of Penbroch, there fell great lands and possessions. His sonne David who under King Edward the Second was other whiles amongst English Earles summoned to the Parliaments in England, and under King Edward, Balliol made Lord Lieutenant Generall of Scotland, was vanquished by the valourous prowesse of Andrew de Murray and slaine in battaile, within the Forest of Kelblen in the yeere of our Lord 1335. And his sonne David left two yong daughters onely, Elizabeth wedded unto Sir Thomas Percie from whom the Barons of Burrough are descended, and Philip married to Sir Thomas Halsham an English Knight. Then fell the title of Athol unto that Walter Stewart sonne to King Robert the Second, who crueltie murdered Iames the First, King of Scotland, and for F this execrable cruelty suffered most condigne punishment accordingly: in so much as Aeneas Sylvius Embassadour at that time in Scotland, from Pope Eugenius the Forth gaue out, this speech; That hee could not tell whether hee should giue them greater commendations that revenged the Kings death: Or brand them with sharper censure of condemnation, that disteined themselues with so hainous a paricidie.

After some few yeeres passed betweene, this honour was granted unto Iohn Stewart

A wart of the family of Lorne; the ſonne of Iames, ſurnamed The Black Knight, by Ioan the widow of King Iames the Firſt, daughter to Iohn Earle of Somerſet and Neice to Iohn of Gant Duke of Lancaſter, whoſe poſterity at this day enjoy the ſame.

Tau bearing now a bigger ſtreame, by receiving Almund vnto him, holdeth on his courſe to Dunkelden, adorned by King David with an Epiſcopall See. Moſt writers grounding vpon the ſignification of that word, ſuppoſe it to be a towne of the Caledonians, and interprete it, The mount or Hill of Hazeles, as who would haue that name giuen vnto it of the Hazel trees in the wood Caledonia. From hence the Tau goeth forward by the carkaſſe of Berth a little deſolate City, remembring well Berth.
B enough what a great loſſe and calamitie hee brought vpon it in times paſt, when with an extraordinary ſwelling floud, hee ſurrounded all the fields, laied the goodlie ſtanding corne along on the ground, and carried headlong away with him this poore City with the Kings child and infant in his cradle and the inhabitants therein. In ſteed whereof, in a more commodious place, King William builded Perth, which ſtraightwaies became ſo wealthy, that Necham who lived in that age, Perth.
verſified of it in this manner.

Tranſis ample Tai per rura, per oppida, per Perth,
Regnum ſuſtentaut iſtius vrbis opes.
C By villages, by townes, by Perth, thou runn'ſt, great Tay, amaine,
The riches of this Citie Perth doth all the realme ſuſtaine.

But the poſterity enſuing called it of a Church founded in honour of Saint Iohn, Saint Iohns towne: and the Engliſh, whiles the warres were hote betwene the Braſes and the Balliols, fortified it with great bulwarkes, which the Scots afterwards, for Saint Iohn Towne.
the moſt part, ouerthrew and diſmantled it themſelues. Howbeit, it is a proper prety City, pleaſantly ſeated betweene two Greens: and for all that ſome of the Churches be deſtroied, yet a goodly ſhew it maketh: ranged and ſet out in ſuch an uniforme manner, that in euery ſeuerall ſtreet almoſt, there dwell ſeuerall artificers by D themſelues and the riuer Tau bringeth up with the tide, ſea commodities by lighters: whereupon I. Ionſton ſo often now by me cited, writeth thus.

PERTHVM.

Propter aquas Tai liquidas, & amœna vineta,
Obtinet in medio regna ſuperba ſolo.
Nobilium quondam Regum clariſſima ſedes,
Pulchra ſitu, & pinguis germine diues agri
Finitimis dat iura locis, moremque modumque
E Huic dare, laus illis hæc meruiſſe dari
Sola inter patrias incincta eſt mœnibus vrbes,
Hoſtibus aſſiduis ne vaga præda foret.
Quanta virum virtus, dextræ quæ præmia, norunt
Cimber, Saxo ferox, & genus hectoridum
Felix laude noua, felix quoq; laude vetuſta,
Perge recens, priſcum perpetuare decus.

PERTH.

Nere to the waters cleere of Tai, and pleaſant plaines all greene,
F In middle ground betweene them ſtands Perth, proudly like a Queene.
Of Noble kings, the ſtately ſeat and palace once it was,
Faire for the ſite, and ritch withall for ſpring of corne and graſſe.
To neighbour places all, it doth lawes, cuſtomes faſhions giue,
Her praiſe, to giue; theirs, to deſerue the ſame for to receiue:

Of all the Cities in theſe parts walled alone is ſhe: A Leaſt ſhe to foes continuall a ſcambling prey might be.
What Knights ſhe bred, and what rewards they wonne to knighthood due,
Danes, Saxons feirce, bold Britans eke the Trojans of-ſpring knew.
Happy for praiſes old, happie for praiſes new of late,
New as thou art, thine honour old ſtriue to perpetuate.

Earle of Perth. And now of late King Iames the Sixth hath erected it to the title of an Earldome, having created Iames, Baron Dromund Earle of Perth.

Baron Methwen. Vnto Perth theſe places are neare neighbours, Methven, which, Margaret an Engliſh Lady, widow unto King Iames the Fourth, purchaſed with ready mony for her B third husband Henry Steward deſcended of the roiall bloud, and for his heires; and withall obteined of her ſonne King Iames the Fifth for him the dignity of a Baron.

Rethuen or Reuven. More beneath is Rethuen a caſtle of the Rethuens, whoſe name is of damned memory, conſidering that the three ſtates of the kingdome hath ordeined, that whoſoever were of that name ſhould forgoe the ſame and take unto them a new: after that the Rethuens brethren in a moſt curſed and horrible conſpiracie had complotted to murder their ſoveraigne King Iames the Sixth, who had created William their father Earle of Goury, and afterward beheaded him being lawfully convicted when he would inſolently preſcribe lawes to his ſoveraigne. But of men condemned to per- C petuall oblivion I may ſeeme to haue ſaid over much, although it concerneth poſterity alſo for a Caveat, that wicked generations be notified, as wel as noyſome weeds, and venemous plants.

Goury. As for the Country Goury aforeſaid, famous for the corne fields and ſingular fertility of the ſoile, it lieth more plaine and flat along the other banke of Tay. In this

Scone. tract over againſt Perth, on the farther ſide of Tay, ſtandeth Scone, a renowned monaſtery in old time and of reverend reſpect for the coronation therein of the Kings of Scotland: ſince that time K. Keneth having hard by put the Picts for the moſt part to the ſword placed a ſtone heere encloſed within a chaire of wood for inauguration of the Kings of Scotland that had bin tranſported out of Ireland into Argile: which D ſtone Edward the Firſt, King of England, cauſed to be conveied unto Weſtminſter. Touching which I haue put downe this propheſie ſo rife in every mans mouth, ſince it hath now proved true and taken effect, as very few of that ſort doe.

Ni fallat fatum, Scoti quocunq; locatum
Inveniunt lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.
Except old ſawes be vaine,
And wits of wiſards blind:
The Scots in place muſt raigne:
Where they this ſtone ſhall finde.

Baron of Scone. But now Scone giveth title of Baron of Scone to Sir David Muxray whom K. Iames E for his good ſervice advanced lately to that honor.

Arrol. Earles of Arrol. Where Tay now growen bigger enlargeth himſelfe, there appeareth over it Arrol, the habitation of the noble Earles of Arrol, who ever ſince the Bruiſes daies, haue beene by inheritance the Conſtables of Scotland: and verily they deduce an ancient pedigree from one Hay, a man of exceeding ſtrength and excellent courage: who together with his ſonnes, in a dangerous battaile of Scots againſt the Danes at Longcarty, caught up an Oxe yoke, and ſo valiantly and fortunately withall, what with fighting, and what with exhorting, reenforced the Scots at the point to ſhrinke and recule, that they had the day of the Danes, and the King with the States of the king- F dome aſcribed the victory and their owne ſafety unto his valour and proweſſe. Wherupon in this place, the moſt battle and fruitful grounds were aſſigned unto him & his heires; who in teſtimony hereof, haue ſet over their coat a yoke for their creſt, o-

Huntly caſtle. ver their Armes, Three Eſcotcheons Geules in Argent: touching Huntley caſtle, that joyneth unto it, I haue nothing to write, but that it hath given title to a very potent, great, and honorable family: whereof I am to ſpeake hereafter.

ANGVSIA,

A

ANGVSIA, or ANGVS.

B

BY the out-let or mouth of Tay, and more within, beside the river North-Eske, Anguis, called by the naturall and true Scots Angeia, lyeth extended with goodly fields bearing wheat and corne of all kinds plentifully, with large hilles also and pooles, forrests, pastures, and meedowes, and also garnished with many forts and castles. In the very first entry into it from Goury, standeth Glamis, a castle, and the Baronie of a family surnamed Lions, which arose to honor and reputation, ever since that Sir I. Lion standing in the high favour of King Robert the Second, received this and the dignity of a Baron with the Kings daughter, for her marriage portion, & therewith, as I find written, the surname of Lion: with a Lion in his Armes, within a Treassure Floury, as the Kings themselves do beare, but in different colours: like as Sir Patrick, Lion Lord Glamys, who now liueth: was advanced very lately by King Iames the Sixth of that name to the honor of the Earle of Kinghorn.

Barons Glamys.

C

Not farre hence standeth Forfare, where for the administration of iustice, the Barone Greies are hereditary Sheriffes, who being descended from the Greies of Chillingham in the county of Northumberland, came into Scotland with King Iames the first, at his returne out of England: upon the first of whom named Andrew, the King of his bounteous liberality bestowed the Seignorie of Foulis, together with Helen Mortimer in marriage for his advancement.

Forfar Sheriffdome.

D

Hard by the mouth of Tay is situate Dundee, sometimes called Alectum: others terme it in Latin Taodunum; a towne verily of great resort and trade, and the Constable whereof by a speciall priviledge is Standerdbearer to the King of Scots. Hector Boetius who was heere borne expounded this name Dundee by way of allusion, to Donum Dei, that is, Gods gift. This Hector in the reflourishing time of learning, wrote the Scottish historie elegantly, and that out of such hidden and farre fetched monuments of antiquity, that Paulus Iouius wondered in his writings, there should be records exstant for above a thousand yeeres, of these remote parts of the world, Scotland, the Hebrides and the Orcades: considering that Italie the nource of fine wits, for so many ages after the Goths were cast out, was defectiue of writers and records. But of this place, Maister Ionston borne not farre from it, writeth thus.

Io. Skene de Verbor. Significat.

Hector Boetius.

TAODVNVM, or DEIDONVM.

E

Quà Notus argutis adspirat molliter auris,
Hâc placidè coeunt Taus & Oceanus.
Hîc facili excipiens venientes littore puppes
Indigenis vasti distrahit orbis opes.
Sæpe dolis tentata, & belli exercita damnis,
Inuictis animis integra præstat adhuc.
Fama vetus creuit cum Religione renatâ,
Lucis & hinc fulsit pura nitela alijs.

F

Alectum dixere priùs; si maxima spectes
Commoda, fors Donum dixeris esse Dei.
Tu decus æternum gentisque vrbisq; Boeti,
Cætera dic patriæ dona beata tuæ.

DONDEE

A

DONDEE or DVNDEE.

Where Southwind with his whiſtling blaſts, aloft doth mildly blow,
There Tay with ſtreame and Sea with tide, doe friendly meete below.
And heere Dundee, ſhips under ſaile harbring in gentle road,
The wide worlds-wealth to Inlanders both ſells and ſends abroad.
By wiles betraied, by force aſſailed oft times like to have beene,
With heart undanted to this day it ſtands ſound to be ſeene.
With new ſpring of Religion, her old fame more did grow:
Hence ſhone pure light, hence to the reſt cleere beames full bright did ſhow.
At firſt, Alectum clep'd it was. But if you marke withall,
Her gifts ſo great, perhaps you will it * Donum Dei call.
Thou Boeth now, this peoples praiſe and Cities joy for ay,
The bleſſings all beſides of thine owne native place ſhalt ſay.

* Gift of God.

Brochty Crag. 1547.

From hence ſtandeth within ſight, Brochty-cragge, a good fortreſſe, which the Engliſh gariſon-ſouldiers manfully defended and made good for many moneths together, what time as in their affectionate love to a perpetuall peace, they deſired and wiſhed for a marriage betweene Marie heire apparant of Scotland, and Edward the Sixth King of England; and upon promiſe thereof demanded it by force of armes: and in the end of their owne accord abandoned the ſaid piece. Then there lieth full againſt the open Ocean, Aberbroth, ſhort, Arbroth a place endowed with ample revenewes, and by King William dedicated in old time to Religion, in honor of Thomas of Canterburie; beſide which the * Red-head ſhooteth into the deepe ſea, and is to be ſeene a farre off: Hard by, South Eske voideth it ſelfe into the Ocean; which river flowing a maine out of a Lake, paſſeth by Finnevim Caſtle, well knowen by reaſon of the Lindeſa'es Earles of Crawford keeping reſidence there; of whom I have already written. Then upon the ſaid river ſtandeth Brechin, which King David the firſt adourned with a Biſhops See, and at the very mouth thereof, Mont-roſe, as one would ſay the Mount of Roſes, a towne in times paſt called Celurca, riſen by the fall of another towne bearing the ſame name, which is ſeated betweene the two Eskes, and imparteth the title of Earle to the family of the Grahams. Concerning which towne, Ionſton hath theſe verſes.

Arbroth. Red-head. * A promontorie.

Brechin.

Mont-Roſe.

CELVRCA ſiue MONS ROSARVM.

Aureolis vrbs picta roſis: mons molliter vrbi
Imminet, hinc vrbi nomina facta canunt:
At veteres perhibent quondam dixiſſe Celurcam,
Nomine ſic priſco & nobilitata nouo eſt.
Et priſca atque noua inſignis virtute, virúmque
Ingenijs, patriæ qui peperere decus.

MONT-ROSE.

With Roſes gay the towne is deckt: an eaſie Mount withall
Stands neere the ſame: and hence, they ſay, MONT-ROSE folke did it call.
In former times by ancient name Celurca men it knew,
Ennobled thus you ſee it is by name, both old and new:
Both old and new renowne it hath for proeſſe and for wit,
Of men that have their country grac'd and honor wonne to it.

Boſchain.

Not farre from hence is Boſchain, belonging to the Barons of Ogiluy, of very ancient nobility lineally deſcended, from Alexander Sheriffes of Angus, who was ſlaine in the bloudy battaile at Harley againſt the Mac Donald of the out Iſles.

As

A As touching the Earles of Angus. Gilchriſt of Angus renowned for his brave exploits under King Malcom the fourth, was the firſt Earle of Angus that I read off. About the yeere 1242. Iohn Comin was Earle of Angus, who died in France; and his widow (happly inheretrice to the Earledome) was married to Sir Gilbert Vmfranvill an Engliſhman. For, both he and his heires ſucceſſiuely after him were ſommoned to the Parliaments in England (untill the third yeere of King Richard the ſecond) by the title of Earles of Angus. Howbeit the Lawyers of England refuſed in their Brieves and inſtruments to acknowledge him Earle: for that Angus was not within the Kingdome of England: untill he had brought forth openly, in the face of the Court, the Kings writ and warrant, wherin he wa ſommoned to the Parliament, by the name of Earle of Angus. In the reigne of David Brus, Thomas Stewart was
B Earle of Angus, who by a ſudden ſurpriſe wonne Barwicke, and ſtreightwaies loſt it; yea and within a while after died miſerably in priſon at Dunbritton. But the Douglaſſes, men of hauty mindes and invincible hearts, from the time of King Robert the third, have beene Earles of Angus (after that George Douglaſſe had taken to wife the Kings daughter) reputed the chiefe and principall Earles of Scotland, and to whom this office belongeth to carrie the regall crowne before the kings at all the ſolemne aſſemblies of the kingdome. The ſixth Earle of Angus out of this ſtocke, was Archebald, who eſpouſed Margaret daughter to Henrie the ſeventh K. of England, and mother to Iames the fifth King of Scots, by whom he had iſſue Margaret wife to C Matthew Stewart Earle of Lennox, who after her brothers deceaſe that died childleſſe, willingly reſigned up her right and intereſt in this Earledome unto Sir David Douglaſſe of Peteindreich her unkles ſonne by the fathers ſide, and that with the conſent of her husband and ſonnes; to the end, that ſhe might bind the ſurer unto herſelfe by the linke alſo of a beneficiall demerite, that family which otherwiſe in bloud was moſt neere; what time as Henrie her ſonne went about to wed Marie the Queene; by which marriage KING IAMES our ſoveraigne the mighty Monarch of great Britaine was happily borne to the good of all Britaine.

Earles of Angus.

MERNIS.

D THeſe regions were in Ptolemeis time inhabited by the VERNICONES, the ſame, perhaps, that the VECTVRIONES mentioned by Marcellinus. But this their name is now quite gone, unleſſe we would imagine ſome little peece thereof to remaine in Mernis. For many times in common ſpeech of the Britiſh tongue, V. turneth into, M.

This ſmall province Mernis abutting upon the German Ocean, and of a rich and battle ſoile, lieth very well, as a plaine and levell Champion.
E But the moſt memorable place therein is Dunnotyr, a Caſtle advanced upon an high and unaceſſible rocke, whence it looketh downe to the vnderflowing ſea, well fenſed with ſtrong walles and turrets, which hath beene a long time the habitation of the Keiths, of an ancient and very noble ſtocke, who by the guidance of their vertue became hereditarie Earles Mareſchals of the kingdome of Scotland, and Sheriffes of this province. In a porch or gallerie heere, is to be ſeene that ancient inſcription which I mentioned even now, of a companie belonging to the twentieth legion; the letters whereof, the right noble and honorable Earle now living, a great lover of antiquity, cauſed to be guilded. Somewhat farther from the ſea ſtandeth Fordon,
F graced in ſome ſort and commendable in regard of Iohn de Fordon, who being borne heere, deligently and with great paines compiled Scoti Chromcon, that is, The Scotiſh Chronicle: unto whoſe laborious ſtudies the Scotiſh Hiſtoriographers are very much indebted: but more glorious and renowned in old time, for the reliques of Saint Palladius, beſtowed and ſhrined ſometime, as it is verily thought, in this place; who in the yeere 431. was by Pope Cæleſtinas, appointed the Apoſtle for the Scotiſh nation.

Dunotyr.

Keith.

Earles Marſhall.

Fordon. Sheriſdome of Kinkerdin or Mernis.

Saint Palladius.

MARRIA

A

MARRIA, or MAR.

FRom the sea in the mediterranean or inland parts above Mernis, MAR enlargeth it selfe, and runneth forward threeskore miles or there about: where it lieth broadest Westwards, it swelleth up with mountaines, unlesse it be where the rivers, Dee, which Ptolomee calleth DIVA, and Done, make way for themselves and enfertile the fields. Upon the bank of Done, Kildrummy standeth as a faire ornament to the country, being the ancient seat of the Earles of Marre: and not farre distant from it, the habitation of the Barons Forbois, who being issued from a noble and ancient stocke, assumed this surname; whereas before time they were called Bois, after that the heire of that family had manfully killed a savage and cruell Beare. But at the very mouth of this river, there be two townes, that giue greater ornament, which of the said mouth that in the British tongue they call Aber, borowing one name, are divided a sunder by one little field lying betweene: the hither more of them, which standeth neerer to Dee mouth, is much ennobled by an Episcopall dignity (which King David the First translated hither from Murthlake, a little village) by faire houses of the Chanons, an hospitall for poore people, and a free Grammer schoole; which, William Elphinston Bishop of the place in the yeere 1480. consecrated to the training up of youth, and is called New Aberdon: The other, beyond it named Old Aberdon, is most famous for the taking of Salmons. But I. Ionston a native hereof in these his verses depeinteth Aberdon thus.

Kildrummy.

Barons Forbois.

Salmons.

B

C

ABERDONIA.

Ad Boream porrecta iugis obsessa superbis,
Inter connatas eminet vna Deas.
Mitior algentes Phœbus sic temperat auras,
Non æstum vt rabidum, frigora nec metuas.
Fœcundo ditat Neptunus gurgite, & amnes
Piscosi: gemmis alter adauget opes:
Candida mens, frons læta, hilaris, gratissima tellus
Hospitibus: morum cultus vbique decens.
Nobilitas antiqua, opibus subnixa vetustis,
Martiaque inuicto pectore corda gerens.
Iustitiæ domus, & studiorum mater honoris
Ingenio ars, certant artibus ingenia.
Omnia ei cedunt, meritos genetricis honores
Pingere non vlla Ars, ingeniumue valet.

D

E

Beset with lofty tops of hilles, and Northward lying spred
Among her sister-townes, alone she beareth up her head.
The warme Sun-beames such temper give to sharpnesse of the aire,
That neither skorching heat you need, nor pinching cold, to feare.
The sea, the fishfull rivers eke, with plenteous gulfes and streames
Make this place rich, and one of them enricheth it with gemmes.
Plaine-hearted men, of lightsome lookes, and cheerefull, passing kind
To strangers: decent every thing neate you shall there find.
Their noble gentry ancient, their livings ancient were
And their demesnes: undanted hearts and martiall mindes they beare.
The Iustice Hall: as mother kind, she honors due doth deigne
Professions all; art strives with wit, and wits with arts againe.
All short of her. But praises all of this my genitresse
That shee deserv's, no wit, nor art is able to expresse.

F

It

A It is almoſt uncredible what abundance of * Salmons as wel theſe rivers, as others alſo in Scotland, on both ſides of the realme doe breed: This fiſh was altogether unknowne unto Plinie, unleſſe it were that Eſox of the Rhene: but in this North part of Europe paſſing well knowne, ſhining and glittering (as he ſaith) with his read bowels. In Autumne they engender within little rivers, and in ſhallow places for the moſt part, what time they caſt their ſpane and cover it over with ſand: and then are they ſo poore and leane, that they ſeeme to have nothing elſe in maner but their ſmall bones. Of that ſpawne in the ſpring next following, there comes a frie of tender little fiſhes, which making toward the ſea, in a ſmall time grow to their full bigneſſe; B and in returning backe againe to ſeeke for the rivers wherein they were bred, they ſtrive and ſtruggle againſt the ſtreame, and looke whatſoever lieth in their way to hinder their paſſage, with a jerke of their taile and a certaine leape (whence happly they had their name Salmons) to the wonder of the beholdets, they nimbly whip over and keepe themſelves within theſe rivers of theirs, untill they breed. During which time it is enacted by law they ſhould not be caught, namely from the feaſt of the Aſſumption of our Lady to the feaſt of Saint Andrew in Winter. And it ſhould ſeeme they were reputed among the greateſt commodities of Scotland, when likewiſe it was ordained that they ſhould not be ſold unto Engliſhmen but for Engliſh gold, and no other contentation. But theſe matters I leave for others.

* Bede and our writers called them in Latin, Iſicij.

C To come now unto the Earles of Marre. In the reigne of Alexander the third, William Earle of Marre is named among thoſe that were ſore offended and diſpleaſed with the King. Whiles David Brus reigned, Donald Earle of Marre Protector of the Kingdome, was before the battaile at Dyplin murdred in his bed by Edward Balliole and the Engliſhmen that came to aide him: whoſe daughter Iſabell King Robert Brus tooke to be his former wife, on whom he begat Mariorie mother to Robert Stewart King of Scots. Under the ſame David there is mention alſo made of Thomas Earle of Marre, who was baniſhed in the yeere 1361. Likewiſe in the reigne of Robert the third, Alexander Stewart is named Earle of Marre, who in the battaile at Harley againſt the Ilanders loſt his life in the yeere 1411. In the daies of King Iames D the firſt, we read in Scoto chronicon thus: Alexander Earle of Marre died in the yeere 1435. The baſe ſonne of Alexander Stewart Earle of Bucquan, ſonne to Robert the ſecond King of Scots after whom, as being a baſtard, the King ſucceeded in the inheritance. Iohn the ſecond ſonne of King Iames the ſecond afterwards bare this title, who being convict for attempting by art magicke to take away the king his brothers life, was let bloud to death. And after him Robert Cockeran was promoted from a Maſon to this dignity by king Iames the third, and ſoone after hanged by the Nobility. Since which time this honorable title was diſcontinued untill that Queene Marie adorned therewith Iames her baſtard brother: and not long after, when it was found that by ancient right the title of Earle of Marre appertainted to Iohn Lord Ereskin, in lieu of E Marre ſhe conferred upon him the honour of Earle Murray, and created Iohn Ereskin a man of ancient and noble birth Earle of Marre; whoſe ſonne bearing the ſame Chriſtian name now enjoieth alſo the ſame dignity, and is in both realmes one of the kings privie Counſell.

Earles of Marre.

Scotochronicon. lib. 12. cap. 33.

BVCHANIA. or BVQVHAN.

F THe Taizali mentioned by Ptolomee in ancient times inhabited where now Buquhan, in Latin Boghania and Buchania, above the river Done beareth forth toward the German ſea. Some derive this later name a Bobus, that is, From Oxen and Kine, whereas notwithſtanding the ground ſerveth better to feed ſheepe, whoſe woole is highly commended. Albeit the rivers in this coaſt every where breed River Ratra. breed great ſtore of Salmons, yet doe they never enter into the river Ratra, as Buchanan hath recorded: Neither let it bee offenſiue, if I cite his teſtimonie, although his bookes by authoritie of Parliament in the yeere 1584. were forbidden: becauſe many things in them contained, are to be daſhed out. Who alſo hath written, That on the banke of Ratra there is a cave neere unto Stangs Caſtle, the nature whereof ſeemeth not to be paſſed over. The water diſtilling by drops out of a Naturall Vault, preſently turneth into Pyramidall ſtones, and were not the ſaid cave or hole otherwhiles rid and clenſed by mans labour, the whole ſpace as far as up to the Vault would in ſhort time be filled therewith. Now the ſtone thus engendred is of a middle nature betweene yce and hard ſtone: for it is brittle and eaſie to crumble, neither groweth it ever to the ſolidity and hardneſſe of marble. Concerning thoſe Claike geeſe, which ſome with much admiration have beleeved to grow out of trees both upon this ſhore and elſe where, and when they be ripe to fall downe into the ſea, it is ſcarce worth the labour to mention them. That there be little birds engendred of old and rotten Keeles of ſhips, they can beare witneſſe, who ſaw that ſhip wherein Francis Drake ſailed about the world, ſtanding in a docke neere the Tamis: To the outſide of the Keele whereof a number of ſuch little birds without life and fethers ſtucke cloſe. Yet would I gladly thinke that the generation of theſe birds, was not out of thoſe logges of wood; but from the very Ocean, which the Poets tearmed the father of all things.

An admirable Water.

Claik-geeſe.

Amber. A mighty maſſe likewiſe of Ambar as big as the body of an horſe, was not many yeeres ſince caſt upon this ſhore. The learned call it Succinum Gleſſum, and Chryſo-Electrum: and Sotacus ſuppoſed that it was a certaine juice or liquor which diſtilleth out of trees in Britaine, and runneth downe into the ſea, and is therein hardned. Tacitus alſo was of the ſame opinion, when he wrote thus: I can verily beleeve, that like as there be trees in the ſecret and inward parts of the Eaſt, which ſweat out Frankincenſe and balme, ſo in the Ilands and other countries of the Weſt, there be woods and groves of a more fatty and firme ſubſtance, which melting by the hote beames of the Sunne approching ſo neere, runneth into the ſea hard by, and by force of tempeſts floteth up to the ſhores againſt it. But Serapio and the Philoſophers of later times write that it ariſeth out of a certaine clammy and bituminous earth under the ſea, and by the ſea ſide, and that the billowes and tempeſts caſt up part therof a land, and fiſhes devour the reſt. But I digreſſe extravagantly, I will into my way againe, and ſince I acknowledge my fault, let my confeſſion purchaſe pardon.

Concerning the maners of the Germans.

Earles of Buquhan. In the reigne of King Alexander the ſecond, Alexander Comin roſe up to the honor of Earle of Buquhan, who married the daughter and one of the heires of Roger de Quincy Earle of Wincheſter in England, and his neice by a ſonne brought the ſame title unto Henrie de Beaumont her husband: for he, in King Edward the third his daies, had his place in the Parliament of England by the name of Earle of Buquhan. Afterwards, Alexander Stewart ſonne to King Robert the ſecond, was Earle of this place; unto whom ſucceeded Iohn, a younger ſonne of Robert Duke of Albanie, who arriuing in France with ſeven thouſand Scotiſhmen to aide Charles the ſeventh King of France, bare himſelfe valiantly and performed ſingular good ſervice againſt the Engliſhmen, and that with ſo great commendation, as having victoriouſly ſlaine Thomas Duke of Clarence brother to Henrie the fifth King of England at Bauey and diſcomfited the Engliſh, hee was made Conſtable of France. But in the third yeere following, when the Fortune of warre turned, he with other moſt valiant Knights, to wit, Archebald Douglaſſe Earle of Wigton, and Duke of Touraine &c. was vanquiſhed at Vernoil by the Engliſh and there ſlaine. Whom notwithſtanding, as that Poet ſaid.

The valour of Scots in the warres of France.

——aternùm memorabit Gallia cives
Grata ſuos, titulos quæ dedit & tumulos.

France thankfully, will ay recount as citizens of her owne,
On whom both titles glorious, and tombs ſhe hath beſtowne.

Certes, whereas under the K.K. Charles the ſixth and ſeventh, France was preſerved, and Aquitain recovered, by thruſting out the Engliſh, the Frenchmen cannot chuſe

A chuſe but acknowledge themſelves much beholden to the fidelity and fortitude of the Scotiſh. But afterwards King Iames the firſtgave the Earldome of Buquhan unto George of Dunbar, moved thereto upon pity and commiſeration, becauſe he had deprived him before of the Earldome of March by authority of Parliament, for his fathers crime: and not long after, Iames the ſonne of Iames Stewart of Lorn ſurnamed the Black Knight, whom he had by Q. Ioan ſiſter to the Duke of Somerſet, and widdow to King Iames the firſt, obtained this honour and left it to his poſterity: but for default not long ſince of heires male, it came by a daughter married to Robert Douglas a younger brother of Douglas of Lochlevin to the family of the Douglaſes.

From Buquhan, as the ſhore bendeth backward and turneth full into the North, B lieth Boena, and Bamff a ſmall Sherifdome, alſo Aiuza a little territory of no eſpeciall account, and Rothamay Caſtle the dwelling place of the Barons of Salton, ſurnamed Abernethy. Beneath theſe lieth Strath-bolgy, that is, the Vale by Bolgy, the habitation in times paſt of the Earles of Athol, who of it aſſumed their ſurname; but now the principall ſeat of Marqueſſe Huntly. For this title King Iames the ſixth conferred upon George Gordon, Earle Huntley, Lord Gordon, and Badzenoth, a man of great honour and reputation, for his ancient nobleneſſe of birth, and the multitude of his dependants and followers; whoſe anceſters deſcended from the Setons, by Parliamentary authority tooke the name of Gordon (when as Sir Alexander Seton had taken to wife the daughter of Sir Iohn Gordon Knight, by whom he had a large and rich inhe-
C ritance) and received the honour of the Earle of Huntly at the hands of King Iames the ſecond in the yeere 1449.

Boen.
Barons of Salton.
Strathbolgy.
Marqueſſe Huntley.

MORAVIA, or MURRAY.

Vacomagy.
Murray bay.
Sinus Vararii

THe VACOMAGI remembred by Ptolome anciently inhabited on the further ſide of Crantz baine-mountaine, which, as it were, in a continued range by hils hanging one by another driveth out his ridge with many a winding as far as to Murray Frith, where now lieth Murray, in Latin Moravia, celebrated for the fertility,
D pleaſant ſite, and commodity of fruitfull trees. By this Province Spey a famous river maketh his iſſew into the ſea, wherein he lodgeth, when he hath watered Rothes Caſtle: whence the family of the Leſleys tooke the title of Earle, ever ſince that K. Iames the ſecond conferred the honor of Earle of Rothes upon Sir George Leſley: cõcerning this Spey, our Poet Necham hath thus written.

The river Spey.
Hiſtory of Iohn Leſley Biſhop of Roſſe.

Spey loca mutantis præceps agitator arenæ,
Inconſtans certas neſcit habere vias.
Officium Lintris corbis ſubit, hunc regit audax
Curſus Labentis nauta fluenta ſequens.

Spey raiſing heaps of ſands a maine, that ſhift oft times their place,
E In conſtant he, doth change eftſoones, and keeps no certaine race.
A panier ſerves heere for a boate: ſome venterous ſwaine it guides,
Who followeth ſtill the rivers courſe while downe the ſtream it glides.

The river LOXA mentioned by Ptolome, which now is called Loſſe, hideth himſelfe in the ſea hard by, neere unto which Elgina appeereth, in which and in Forres adjoyning I. of Dunbar of Cumnock deſcended from the ſtocke of the Earles of March hath his iuriſdiction as Shetif by inheritance. But where it is now redy to enter into the Sea, he findeth a more plaine and ſoft ſoile, and ſpreadeth abroad into a Meere full of ſwans, wherein the Hearbe Olorina plentifully groweth, he hath Spiny Caſtle
F ſtanding upon it; whereof now the firſt Baron is Alexander, of the linage of the Lyndſays: like as Kinloſſe alſo a neighbour by, ſometimes a famous Monaſtery (ſome call it Kill-flos, of certaine flowers miraculouſly there ſpringing up on a ſodaine, when the carcaſe of King Duff murdred and hidden in the ſame place was found) hath alſo for the Lord thereof Edward Brus M. of the Rols in England, and of the Kings Maieſties Privie counſell: whom King Iames the Sixth created Baron Brus of Kinloſſe.

The river Loxa.
Baron of Spiny.
Baron Kinloſ.

Banatia.

Thus much for the ſhore. More inward, where now ſtandeth Bean Caſtle (thought to bee BANATIA that Ptolomee mentioneth) there was found in the yeere 1460. a veſſell of marble artificially engraven, and full of Romane coine. Hard by, is Nardin or Narne an heritable Sherifdome, of the Cambels of Lorne; where there ſtood within a Biland, a fortreſſe of a mighty heigth, built with wonderfull bulwarkes, and in times paſt defended by the Daniſh forces againſt the Scotiſh. A little off, is Logh-Neſſe, a very great Lake, as reaching out 23. miles in length; the water whereof is ſo warme, that even in this cold and frozen climate, it never freezeth: from which, by a very ſmall Iſthim or partition of hils, the Logh Lutea or Louthea, which by Aber, letteth it ſelfe forth into the Weſt ſea, is divided. Nere unto theſe Loghs, there ſtood in old time two notable fortifications, the one named Innernes, the other Innerlothea, according to the names of the ſaid Loghs. Innernes hath for Sheriff thereof by right of Inheritance the Marqueſſe Huntley, who is of great command heereabout. But haue here what M. Ionſton hath written iointly of theſe two.

Narne Shirifdome.

Logh-Neſſe.

Innerneſſ.

A

B

INNERNESSVS & INNERLOTHEA.

Imperij veteris duo propugnacula quondam,
Primaque regali mœnia ſtructa manu.
Turribus oppoſitus aduerſo in limine ſpectat
Hæc Zephyrum, Solis illa orientis equos.
Amnibus hinc atque hinc cincta, vtraque piſcibus amnes
Fœcundi. hac portu perpete tuta patet.
Hæc fuit, at iacet heu, iam nunc ſine nomine tellus
Hoſpita quæ Regum, eſt hoſpita facta feris.
Altera ſpirat adhuc tenuis ſufflamina vitæ,
Quæ dabit & fati turbine victa manus.
Dic vbi nunc Carthago potens? vbi Martia Roma?
Troiaque & immenſæ ditis opes Aſiæ?
Quid mireris enim mortalia cedere fatis
Corpora? cum videas oppida poſſe mori.

C

D

INNERNES, and INNERLOTHEA.

Two mighty forts and holds theſe were in ancient kingdomes daies,
The firſt wall'd fenſes, as they ſay, that hand of Kings did raiſe.
Affront with towres oppoſ'd they ſtand; for, one of them regards
The Weſtern winde, but th' other lookes the Sun-riſing towards.
On both ſides they their rivers haue, and rivers full of fiſh:
One hath an haven frequented aye, and ſafe as heart can wiſh.
Such was it once; but now Alas, to waſt and deſert fields
Is turn'd, and that which lodged Kings, to wilde beaſts harbour yeelds.
The other yet draw's breath though deepe, and ſhewes that it doth liue,
But over match'd, to deſtinie at length bucklers giue.
What's now become of Carthage great? where is that martiall Rome?
Where Troy? of wealthy Aſia the riches all and ſome?
No mervaile now that mortall weights to death be ſubject, why?
Becauſe you plainely ſee that townes and Cities great may die.

E

F

Earles of Murray.

Under the reigne of Robert Brus, Thomas Randolph his ſiſters ſonne, who in his Countries behalfe undertooke exceeding great paines and moſt greivous quarrels, was highly renowned by the title of Earle of Murray. Under King Robert the Second, Iohn of Dunbarre, tooke to wife the Kings daughter, to make amends for for her devirgination, received this Earldome of Murray with her in marriage. Under King Iames the Second William Creichton Chancelour of the Realme and Archebald Douglas grew to great variance and ægre contention about this Earledome, when as against the lawes and ancient customes, Douglas who had married the younger daughter of Iames of Dunbar Earle of Murray, was preferred to the Earldom before Creighton who had wedded the elder, & that through the powrefull authority that William Earle Douglasse had with the King: which was so great that he advanced not onely him to the Earledome of Murray, but also another brother to the Earledome of Ormund, and made two cousines of his, Earles, the one of Angus, and the other of Morton. But this greatnesse of his, not to bee trusted upon, because it was excessiue, turned soone after to his owne confusion. Vnder King Iames the fifth his owne brother whom hee appointed his vicegerent in the government of the Kingdome, enjoied this honour: and within our remembrance, Iames the base sonne of King Iames the Fifth, received this honour of Queene Marie his sister; but he requited her basely, when conspiring with some few of the Nobility, hee deposed her from her Roriall estate and kingdome; a fowle precident and preiudiciall to all Kings and Princes. Which notwithstanding, was revenged, for shortly after hee was shot through with a bullet. His onely daughter brought this title unto her husband Sir Iames Stewart of Downe, who was also of the bloud roiall from the Dukes of Albanie: who beeing slaine by his concurrents left his sonne Iames to succeed him in this honour.

LOQHVABRE.

WHatsoever beyond the Nesse bendeth to the West coast, and adjoineth to the Lake Aber, is thereupon called Loghuabre, that is in the ancient tongue of the Britans, The mouth of the Lakes: as what lieth toward the North, is commonly Rosse.

Loqhuabre is full of fresh pastures and woods, neither is without yron mines, but not so free in yeald of corne; but for most fishfull pooles and rivers scarce inferiour to any country thereabout. At Logh-Lothey, Innerlothey fensed with a fort, and well frequented with Merchants, was of great name and importance in times past, but being razed by the piracies and warres of Danes and Norwegians, it hath lien for these many ages so forlet, that there remaneth scarce any shew of it: which, those verses that I alledged even now, doe imply. Loqhuabre hath had, so farre as I have read, no Earls: but about the yeere of our salvation 1050. there was a Thane over it of great fame and much spoken off, named Banqhuo, whom Macbeth the bastard, when with murder & bloudshed he had usurped the crowne, being fearefull and suspitious, caused to be made away: for that he had learned by a Propheste of certaine wise women, that his posterity, when the line of Macbeth was expired and extinct, should one day obtaine the Kingdome, and by a long successiue descent reigne in Scotland. Which verily hath fallen out accordingly. For, Fleanch the sonne of Banqhuo, who unknowen in the darke escaped the traines laid for him, fled into Wales: where for a time hee kept himselfe close, and having taken to wife Nesta the daughter of Griffith ap Lewellin Prince of North-wales, begat Walter; who returning into Scotland, with so great fame of his fortitude repressed the rebellion of the Ilanders, and with as great wisdome managed the Kings revenewes in this tract, that the King made him Seneschall, whom they commonly call Stewart, of the whole Kingdome of Scotland. Whereupon, this name of Office, impoſed the surname Stewart unto his posterity: who spreading throughout all parts of Scotland into a number of noble branches, after many honors heaped upon them, have flourished a long time, and from out of them, three hundred yeeres agoe and thirty, Robert Stewart by Marjorie his mother, daughter to King Robert Brus, obtained the Kingdome of Scotland:

Innerlothe.

Thane of Loqhuabre, Banqhuo.

The beginning of the Stewarts family.

and now lately Iames Stewart of that name the Sixth King of Scots, by Margaret his great grandmother daughter to King Kenry the Seventh (the divine powre of that most high and almighty Ruler of the world so disposing) is ascended with the generall applause of all nations, to the heigth of Monarchicall Maiestie over all Britaine, and the Isles adiacent. A ROSSIA.

The people Cantæ.

THe Province Rosse, so called by an old Scottish word, which some interprete to be a Promontorie, others a Biland, was inhabited by the people named Cantae (which terme in effect implieth as much) in the time of Ptolomee. This extendeth it selfe so wide and large, that it reacheth from the one sea to the other. What way it beareth upon the Vergivian or Western Ocean, by reason of huge swelling mountaines advancing their heads aloft, and many woods among them, it is full of stagges, roe buckes, fallow Deere, and wild foule: but, where it butteth up the German sea, it is more louely bedect with corne fields and pastures, and withall, much more civill. In the very first entrance into it, Ardmanech no small territory, whereof the second sonnes of the Kings of Scotland beare the title, riseth up with high mountaines, that are most trusty preservers of snow. As touching their heigth, some haue reported unto me strange wonders: and yet the ancient Geometers haue written, that neither the depth of sea, nor heigth of hils exceed by the plumb line tenne stadia, that is, one mile and a quarter. Which notwithstanding, they that haue beheld Tenariffe, amongst the Canarie Islands which is fifteene leagues high, and sailed withall the Ocean neere unto them, will in no wise admit for truth. In this part standeth Lovet Castle and the Barony of the worthy family of the Frasers, whom for their singular good service for the Scottish kingdome, King Iames the Second accepted into the ranke of Barons; and whom the Clan-Ronalds a most bloudie generation, in a quarrel and braule between them, had wholy destroied every mothers sonne, but that by the providence of God, fourescore of the principall persons of this family left their wiues at home all great with child, who being delivered of so many sonnes, renewed the house and multiplied the name againe. But at Nesse mouth there flourished sometimes Chanonry so called of a rich Colledge of Chanons, whiles the Ecclesiasticall state stood in prosperity, in which there is erected a See for the bishop of Rosse. Hard by, is placed Cromarty, where Vrqhuart a gentleman of noble birth, by hereditary right from his ancestours ministreth justice as Sheriffe to this Shirisdome: and this is so commodious and safe an harbourours for any fleet be it never so great, that both Sailers, and Geographers, name it Portvs-salvtis, that is, The haven of safety. B C D E

Baron of Ardmanoch.

The heigth of hils and depth of sea. Plutarch. in Pub. Æmilius, concerning Olimpus.

(Portus Salutis.

Littus Altum.

Aboue it is Littvs Altvm, whereof Ptolomee maketh mention, called now as it seemeth Tarbarth: for, there in deed the shore riseth to a great heigth, enclosed on the one side with Cromer a most secure and safe haven, and on the other with

The river Celnio.

Celnivs now Killian the river: and thus much of the places toward the East Ocean. Into the West sea, the river Longvs mentioned in Ptolomee, at this day named Cerones.

Lough Longus, runneth: then, the Cerones, anciently dwelt, where now is Assinshire, a country much mangled with many inlets and Armes of the sea inbosoming it selfe with manifold commodities.

Earles of Rosse.

As for the Earles of Rosse, it is full of difficulty to set them down in order successiuely out of writers. About foure hundred yeers past, we read, that Ferqhuard flourished & enjoied this title: But for default of issue male, it came by a daughter to Walter Lesley, who for his noble feats of armes courageously atchived under Lewis the Emperour, was worthily named The Noble knight, hee begat Alexander Earle of Rosse, and a daughter married unto Donald Lord of the Islands Hebrides. This Alexand had issue one onely daughter, who made over by her deed all her owne title F

and

A and right unto Robert Duke of Albanie: whereat, the ſaid Donald of the Iſlands, being highly enchaufed, and repining, ſtiled himſelfe in the reigne of Iames the Third, King of the Iſlands and Earle of Roſſe, having with fire and ſword laied waſt his natiue country far and nere. At length, the ſaid King Iames the Third, by authority of Parliament, in the yeere 1476. annexed the Earledome of Roſſe to the crowne; ſo, as it might not be lawfull for his ſucceſſours to alienate by any meanes from the crowne, either the Earledome it ſelfe or any parcell thereof, or by any deviſe to grant the ſame unto any perſon, ſaue onely to the Kings ſecond ſonnes lawfully borne: whence it is, that Charles the Kings ſecond ſonne, Duke of Yorke, at this day holdeth and en-
B joieth the title of Earle of Roſſe.

SVTHERLAND.

C BEyond Roſſe, Sutherland looketh toward the Eaſt Ocean a land more meete to breede cattaile than to beare corne: wherein there be hils of white marble (a wonderfull thing in this ſo cold a climate) but of no uſe almoſt, conſidering exceſſe in building and that vaine oſtentation of riches is not yet reached to theſe remote regions. Here is Dunrobin, a caſtle of very great name, the principall ſeat of the ancient Earles of Sutherland, deſcended, if I be not deceived, out of the familie of Murray. Among whom, one William under King Robert Brus is moſt famous, who married the ſiſter of the whole bloud to K. David, and had by her a ſon, whom the ſaid David declared heire apparant of the crowne, and compelled his nobles to ſwear unto him allegeance: but he, within a little after departed without iſſue, and the Earledome in the end came by a daughter and heire hereditarily unto A. Gordon, one of the line of the Earles of Huntly.

Mountaines of white marble.

Dun-Robin.

Earles of Sutherland.

CATHANES.

D HIgher lieth CATHANES, butting full upon the ſaid Eaſt-ſea bending inward with a number of creakes & compaſſes which the waues as it were indent: In which dwelt in Ptolomees time the CATINI, but written falſlie in ſome copies CARINI, among whom the ſelfe ſame Ptolomee placeth the river Ila, which may ſeeme to be the Wiſle at this day. The inhabitants of this province raiſed their greateſt gaine and revenewes, by grazing and raiſing of cattaile and by fiſhing. The cheife Caſtle therein is called Girnego, in which the Earls of Catneſſe for the moſt part make their aboad.

Catini a people.

E The Biſhops ſea is in Dornock a little meane towne otherwiſe, where alſo King Iames the Fourth appointed the Sherife of Catneſſe to reſide, or elſe at Wik, as occaſions ſhould require, for the adminiſtration of iuſtice.

The Earles of Catneſſe in ancient times were alſo Earles of the Orcades; but at laſt they became diſtinct, and by the eldeſt daughter of one Maliſe given in marriage to William Seincler the Kings Pantler, his heires ſucceſſiuely came to bee Earles of Catneſſe, and doe ſtill enjoie the ſame honor.

Earles of Cathneſſe.

STRATHNAVERN.

F THe utmoſt and fartheſt coaſt of all Britaine, which with the front of the ſhore looketh full againſt the North point, and hath the mideſt of the greater beares-taile, which, as Cardan was of opinion cauſeth tranſlations of Empires, juſt over head, was inhabited, as we may ſee in Ptolomee, by the CORNABII, among whom hee placeth the river NABEVS, which names are of ſo nere

Cornabij. The river Nabe.

nere affinity; that the nation may seeme to haue drawne their denomination from the river that they dwelt by: neither doth the modern name Strath-Navern, which signifieth the Valley by Navern iarre altogether in sound from them. The country it selfe is for the soile nothing fertile, and by reason of the sharpe and cold aire lesse inhabited: and thereupon sore haunted and annoied by most cruell wolues. Which in such violent rage not only set upon cattaile to the exceeding great dammage of the inhabitants, but also assaile men with great danger, and not in this tract onely, but in many other parts likewise of Scotland, in so much, as by vertue of an act of Parliament, the Sheriffes and inhabitants in every Country are commanded to goe forth thrice a yeere a hunting, for to destroy the wolues and their whelpes. But (if in this so Northerly a country, this be any comfort to speake of) it hath of all Britaine againe the shortest night and the longest day. For by reason of the position of heaven here distant from the Æquinoctiall line 59. degrees and forty minutes, the longest daie conteineth 18. houres and 25. scruples; and the shortest night not aboue 5. houres and 45. scruples. So that the Panegyrist is not true in this, who made report in times past, That the sunne in manner setteth not at all, but passeth by, and lightly glanceth upon the Horizon, happily relying upon this Authority of Tacitus, for that the extreme points and plaine levels of the earth, with their shade so low raised up no darkenesse at all But more truely Plinie (according to true reason) where hee treateth of the longest daies according to the inclination of the Sunnes circle to the Horizon. The longest daies (saith he) in Italie are 15. houres, in Britannie 17. where the light nights doe proue that undoubtedly by experience, which reason forceth credibly, that in Midsommer daies when the sonne approcheth neere to the Pole of the world, the places of the earth under the Pole haue day 6. moneths, though the light hauing but a narrow compasse, the night contrariwise when he is farre remote in middle winter.

Wolues.

The longest daies.

In this vtmost tract, which Ptolomee extendeth out farre East, whereas indeed it beareth full North (for which Roger Bacon in his Geography taxed him long since) where Tacitus said, That an huge and enorme space of ground running still forward to the farthest point groweth narrow like a wedge. There runne out three Promontories mentioned by the old writers: namely BERVBIVM, now called Vrdehead, neere to Bernswale a village: VIRVEDRVM, now Dunsby otherwise named Duncans-bay, which is thought to be the most remote promontory of Britain: ORCAS, now named Howburn, which Ptolomee setteth over against the Islands Orcades, as the vtmost of them all. This also in Ptolomee is called TARVEDRVM, and TARVISIVM, and so named if my conjecture faile mee not, because it is the farthest end of Britain: For Tarvus in the British tongue hath a certaine signification of ending, with which I accordingly will end this booke: purposing to speake of the out-Isles Orcades, Hebudes or Hebrides, and of Shetland in their due place.

Berubium. Virvedrum. Orcas.

Tarvisium. or Tarvodunum in Marcianus. Tarvus what it is. Shetland.

THus haue I breifely runne over Scotland, and verily more breifly, than the worth of so great a kingdome requireth: neither doubt I but that some one or other will set it forth more at large and depeinct it (as I said) with a more flourishing pensill, in greater certeinty, and upon better knowledge; when as our most mighty Monarch now openeth those remote places hitherto fore-closed from vs. Meane while, if I haue at any time dropt a sleepe (for the most watchfull may sometimes bee taken napping) or if some error in this vnknowne tract hath misleade me from the truth (as nothing is more rife and easie than error) I hope the courteous Reader will pardon it, upon my acknowledgement; and of his kindenesse recalling me from error, direct me in the right way to the truth.

IRELAND

IRELAND,
AND
THE SMALLER ILANDS
IN THE BRITISH OCEAN.

IRELAND,

AND

THE SMALLER ISLANDS

IN THE BRITISH

OCEAN.

A

B

THE BRITISH OCEAN.

C

NOw haue I rather passed over than thoroughly surveied, all BRITAINE, namely those two most flourishing Kingdomes ENGLAND and SCOTLAND: And whereas I am now to crosse the seas for IRELAND, and the rest of the Isles, if I præmise some few lines touching the British sea, I hope, it shall not seeme a crooked course, or an extrauagant digression. The British sea.

BRITAINE is incompassed round about with the vast and open maine Ocean, which ebbeth and floweth so violently with maine tides, that as Pytheas of Marsiles hath reported, it swelleth 80. cubits about Britaine: and Saint Basile hath tearmed it Mare Magnum &c. that is, The great Sea Lib. Hexameron. cap. 3.

D and dreadfull to Sailers: yea and Saint Ambrose wrote thus of it, The great Sea not adventured on by sailers, nor attempted by mariners is that, which with a roaring and surging current environeth Britaine, and reacheth into farre remote parts and so hidden out of sight, as that the very fables have not yet come thither. Certes, this sea sometimes overfloweth the fields adjoining, otherwhiles againe it retireth and leaveth all bare, and that I may use the words of Plinie, by reason of this open largenesse, it feeleth more effectually the force and influence of the Moone, exercising her powre thereupon, without British sea in times past vnknowen.

E impeachment: And it floweth alwaies up within the land with such violence, that it doth not onely drive backe the streames of rivers, but also either overtaketh and surpriseth beasts of the land, or else leaveth behind it those of the sea. For there have bin seene in every age to the great astonishment of the beholders, so many and so huge Sea-monsters left on drie land upon our shore, that Horace sang this note not without good cause.

Belluosus qui remotis
Obstrepit Oceanus Britannis.

F The Ocean, of Sea-monsters fraight with store,
Vpon the Britans farre remote doth rore.
And Iuvenall in the like tune.
Quanto Delphino Balæna Britannica maior.

As

As much as Whales full huge, that uſe to breede
In Britiſh Sea, the Dolphins doe exceede.

And ſo great an adventure and exploit it was thought, but to croſſe onely this our Sea, that Libanius the Græcian Sophiſter, in a Panegyricall oration unto Conſtantinus Chlorus, cried out in theſe words ὡς χείρονα πρόπαλιν τῦ μέλλειν φαίνεσθαι τὴν πλοῦν. that is, This voiage into Britaine ſeemed comparable to the greateſt triumph. And Iulius Firmicus, not that famous Aſtrologer, but another that was a Chriſtian, in a little Treatiſe of the errour of profane religions, written unto the Emperours Conſtans, and Conſtantius, brake out into this exclamation. In Winter time (a thing that never was done before nor ever will be done againe) yee trampled under your oares the ſwelling and raging billowes of the Britiſh Ocean. The waves of the ſea unknowen, in a maner, before time unto us, then trembled and quaked: and the Britans were terrified at the ſudden preſence of the Emperour. What will yee more? The very elements yeelded themſelves as conquered unto your valerous vertues.

Iul. Firmicus.

The famous learned man Iulius Scaliger in his Poeticalls affirmeth that Caurus the Northweſt wind ariſeth and bloweth from out of this Britiſh ſea, and that againſt the opinion of Lucan, who wrote thus.

The wind Caurus.

Primus ab Oceano caput exeris Atlantæo
Caure, mouens æſtus.

From Ocean call'd Atlanticke, Caur thou firſt
Thy head doſt ſhew, making ſeas fell and curſt.

Certes in Ireland he keepes foule worke and playes the tyrant; and Cæſar writeth that a great part of the yeere he ſtands in this coaſt.

The old twiggen or wicker-ſhips of the Britans.

But whereas ſome write that in this our Sea ſhips were firſt deviſed and uſed, I am not diſpoſed to beleeve them. But Plinie witneſſeth that the Britans uſed ſmall wicker veſſels covered over with hides (which at this day they tearme Corraghs) and with Plinie accordeth Lucane who verſifieth in this wiſe.

Primùm cana ſalix madefacto vimine paruam
Texitur in puppim, cæſóque induta iuuenco,
Vectoris patiens tumidum ſuper emicat amnem:
Sic Venetus ſtagnante Pado, fuſoque Britannus
Nauigat Oceano.

At firſt, wet twigges of willow grey, that long in ſoake had laine,
And covered over cloſe with hide of Oxe or Bullocke ſlaine.
(But wrought before unto the forme of litle barke or boat)
Vſed to carry paſſengers, the ſwelling ſtreames afloat.
Thus over Po that river large ſailes the Venetian,
And thus the Britan maketh way upon the ſpatious Ocean.

Semblably

A Semblably Solinus Polyhiſtor. In the ſea betweene Britaine and Ireland they ſaile in wicker bothoms, which they cover round about with Ox hides. And how long ſoever as the courſe holdeth, ſo long the ſailers forbeare food.

As for the commodities which this ſea affordeth, the warmth whereby it comforteth and cheriſheth the earth, the vapors wherewith it nouriſheth the aire and bedeweth the fields; touching alſo the great varietie of fiſhes that it breedeth, as Salmons (which Bede calleth Iſicios, as Plinie Eſox) Plaice, Pungers, Cods, Hadockes,
B Whitings, Herrings, Baſſe Maccarell, Mullets, Turbits, Scales, or ſea Calves, Rochets, Soles, Pilchardes, Raiſiſh, or Scale, Thornbacke, Oyſters, Lobſters, Crabfiſh, and an infinite number of others, whereof it maintaineth and feedeth innumerable skuls and beds: it is not materiall to ſpeake, they are ſo well knowne. Yet the Pearles are not to be overpaſſed in ſilence which King Iubas reporteth to bee ſhaped round, Pearles. & to ſwimme in the Britiſh ſea by flocks, or ſwarmes in maner of bees following their Captaine and leader.

C And Marcellinus, when he had ſpoken of the Perſian and Indian perles: which kind of gemme (ſaith he) we are not ignorant to be engendred and gathered in the Creekes of the Britiſh ſea, although they be not of that beauty and worth. Which although they be accounted by Plinie, ſmall ones and ill coloured, yet Suetonius writeth, that Cæſar made his voiage into Britaine in hope of them: and that they were of ſuch bigneſſe, as he tooke the peiſe of ſome of them by hand, and dedicated a breſt plate made of them unto Venus Genitrix, which hee alſo witneſſed by a ſubſcription. Origene likewiſe as touching theſe Pearles writeth thus: Sea pearles, ſuch as bee moſt notable, are found among the
D Indians, but the beſt are bred in the Red-ſea: In the next place are thoſe pearles which are taken in the Britiſh Ocean: but of a third ſort, and inferior in goodneſſe not to thoſe firſt only, but alſo to theſe of the ſecond degree, are they that be found in Boſphorus neere Scythia. And after a few lines. But that kind which they ſay is gotten in Britaine, for the ſuperficiall colour verily ſomewhat reſembleth a golden hew, but cloudy it is and troubled, and for the luſtre with the dimmeſt. Furthermore, our Venerable Bede, writing of the ſhelfiſhes of this our Sea: Among them (ſaith
E he) there be * Muſcles, wherein they find encloſed oftentimes the beſt * Muſculæ. pearle of all colours, of purple, violet, & greene, but eſpecially of bright white. There be cochles alſo in exceeding great abundance wherewith they die a ſcarlat colour: The moſt beautifull red hew whereof, no heat of Sunne nor injurie of raine is ever able to make pale: but the * older it is, the fairer it ſheweth. And Tertullian reproving the laviſh exceſſe and ſuperfluity in his time, If ambitious pride (ſaith he) may be main- * Vetuſtior. Venuſtior.
F tained from the Britiſh or Indian ſeas, there is a kind of ſhelfiſh more pleaſant in taſt, I ſay not than the purple fiſh or oiſter, but than the very Scallop it ſelfe.

This ſea which generally is called MARE BRITANNICVM, and OCEANVS CALEDONIVS, according to the diverſe ſituation of places hath ſundry and diſtinct names.

Eaſtward

Eaſtward, where it hath Germanie oppoſite unto it, they call it the GERMAN ſea: Northward, it is tearmed the Hyberborean ſea: which ancient writers reported untruly, to be dead, dull, and heavy for the oare, and in that reſpect not raiſed with winds: and Tacitus beleeved it was ſo; belike, becauſe as he writeth, the Lands, and Mountaines be rare, which miniſter cauſe and matter of tempeſts, and for that a deepe maſſe of continuat ſea, is more ſlowly ſtirred to worke, & rage. On the Weſt ſide it is named the OCEANVS DEVCALEDONIVS, and VERGIVIVS: both South and Weſt from Ireland. But all the way that it runneth betweene Britaine and Ireland, the HIBERNICVS, that is, IRISH ſea, and by Sea-men at this day, S. Georges Chanel. And ancient writers have recorded that it rageth all the yeere long with ſurging billowes and counter ſeas, and never is at reſt, nor navigable unleſſe it be in ſome few Summer daies. But Southward where it inter-floweth France & Britain, it is properly called the BRITISH ſea, & by the common mariners, The Chanel: by Engliſh ſailers, THE SLEEVE, and in the ſame ſenſe, Le Manche in french, becauſe it groweth narrow in maner of a ſleeve. And this name of the BRITISH-SEA, extended as farre as to Spaine, as writeth Pomponius Mela, being himſelfe alſo a Spaniard, where hee reporteth, that the Pyrene Mountaine runneth forth into the BRITISH OCEAN.

Iulius Solinus.

Lib. 2. c. 4.

Moreover there be certaine Ilands, which, as it were for a ſhew, Nature hath beſprinkled along theſe ſeas: fewer toward the Eaſt and South parts: but Weſtward and Northward more in number. For there, by their thicke ſtanding together, they doe after a ſort garniſh the ſea, yea and depaint it, as it were, with their colours in moſt pleaſant ſort. But for as much as Ireland farre excelleth all the reſt, in regard of the greatneſſe thereof, and frequencie of reſort thereto, it requireth by due right, that it ſhould firſt be treated of.

A B C D

HIBERNA

E F

MARE
PARS Occidens
Meridies

OCEANU NOTIVM
Prom Yal
Ca Galley
Clotter ca
Korbre ca
KER
RY
Ca Gregory
Dewnbay
Maine flu
SINEI flu
ostium Danchinllen
Tralies
Nene ca
Ca Lystoll
Donkrine
Ardbay
Ca Lough land ca
Ca Robert CLARE COMITATUS
Rosebryn ca
Knoe Patric
Ca Dr'geal
com toe
Ca Rorbet
Asketon
Tuam
Clare
Ca Mosteanes
DESMOND
Konne ca
Cade ca Rosse TWOMOND CON
COR K Bonraty
Colough c
More ca English cast Killalo LIMERIC
Calum ca
Donn ca
Cork Kinsale
COM Boleraut Limeric
Deneas ca
Kare ca
Shanon flu
OCEA
Blackrok ca
Kyn'edek Castleton
ORMOVND
O-Caroll
Kil SAVRANI flu
ostium
ITATVS
Redman ca
Tripperam Kelpheked
Holy crosse
New ca
Clone
Ca Grace
Lysmore Caſsel
Dorles
Kebberk
Ca Cadon
Sliew Bloemy REGINÆ
COM
ITA TVS
NUS
Sleav ca
Soughall
WATERFORD
Clonemet TIPERARI
Kilkenny
Cark
Neor flu
Quenes ton
Barrow flu
Donganon
Cleane ca
Doner ca
Donet ca
KILKEN
Waterford
Laglone
Kildar Caterlogh
KILDARE VERGI
Ca Testal
Ross CATERLOGH COMITA
TAT BIRGI flu
ostium Balinglas Febbert WEYSH FORD
Kildder ca
Ca Browne
Hamon ca
Ca Carik
Fernes
COM ITATVS
DVBLIN
Wexford
Canan ca
New cast
VI US
Ca Cloner
Wicklo Conerdal
B. Wicloe
Occidens
SACRVM Promontorium
Wicloe cast s Grounds Middle Grounds
N Grou
OVOCA flu Septentrio
MARE
Meridies
S.t Davides
PARS
Miliaria Ibernica Communia Pen brok
ANG LIÆ
Cardigan Orientalis

HIBERNIÆ
IRELAND Anglis. YVERDON
BRITANNIS ERIN incolis. IERNA
Orpheo & Arist. IRIS Diodoro Siculo
IVVERNA Iuuenali IOVERNIA Ptol.

OCCIDENTALIS

BORÆVM Promontorium

HIBERNI

PARS SCOTIÆ

TIR CONEL

TIR OEN

COMITATVS

MONAGHAN COMITATVS

LONGFORD COM

WEST MEATH COMI

EAST MEATH COM

LOVTH

COMOND COMI

LETRIM COMI TATVS

MAIO COM

SLEGO COMITA

CAVON COMI

ARMAGH COMI

DOVN COMITA

ANTRIM COMITATVS

REGIA TATVS

LOGIA

ROBOGDIVM Prom

VENICNIVM Prom

RICNEA

CANTIRE

Ens Bound

RAVII flu ostium

Calbegh Prom

Sligah

Dunganon

Slew Art

Baltarbet

Clogher

Ferney

Dungarvan

Dirrie

Rabogh

Fin castle

Ciffer

Read ca

Donluse

Banna flu

Lough Foyl

Strabane

Glancolkin

Colran

Newry

Dundalk

Drogheda

Mullingar

Roscomon

Letrum

Knockfagus

Older Fleet

Isle of Magio

Mull of Galloway

HIBERNIA, IRELAND.

IN the Vergivian ſea, which name is derived not à vergendo, that is, of bending towards, as ſome are of opinion, but of Mor-weridh; for, this name the Britans give it; or els of Farigi, by which name the Iriſh men call it, the moſt famous Iland HIBERNIA, that is to ſay, IRELAND, encloſeth the Weſt ſide of Britaine; an Iland which in times paſt challenged the third place amongſt all the Iſles of the then knowen world. For thus, as touching Ilands, writeth the ancient Geographer, Τῶν νήσων πρωτεύει ἡ Ἰνδικὴ ΤΑΠΡΟΒΑΝΗ μεγέθει καὶ δόξῃ, μεθ' ἣν ἡ ΒΡΕΤΑΝΝΙΚΗ, τρίτη ἐπέκεινα Βρεττανῶν, ἡ ΟΥΕΡΝΙΑ, that is, Of all Ilands, for greatneſſe, the Indian TAPROBANE is prime and principall; next after it BRITAINE; and in a third degree, another Britiſh Iland, named HIBERNIA, that is, Ireland; and thereupon Ptolemee called it LITTLE BRITAINE.

The Ocean Vergivius.

Libro Magnæ Conſtructionis.

This Iſle by Orphæus, Ariſtotle, and Claudian is named IERNA; by Iuvenall and Mela IVVERNA; by Diodorus Siculus IRIS; by Martian of Heraclea IOYERNIA; by Euſtathius OYERNIA and BERNIA; by the native inhabitants, Erin; by the Britans Yuerdon, and of Engliſh men Ireland. Whence theſe names have had their originall, ſundry and divers opinions have been conceived from time to time as in a doubtfull matter. Some derive Hibernia from Hiberno tempore, that is, from the Winter ſeaſon; others from Hiberus a Spaniard; and ſome againe, from the river Iberus: the author of the booke entituled Eulogium, from Duke Irnalph; Poſtellus, a fancifull man, when he read Pomponius Mela publikely in Paris, becauſe he would ſeeme to have a reach beyond other men, fetcheth the originall thereof from the Hebrewes: ſo that Irin ſhould be as much as Iurin, that is, the Iewes land: The Iewes, forſooth, ſaith he, being moſt wiſe Sages and learned Philoſophers, knowing by their learning that the Empire of the world ſhould be ſetled in the ſtrongeſt Angle, which lieth Weſt, ſeazed upon thoſe parts, and Ireland with the firſt: The Syrians alſo and Tyrians, to lay the foundation of their future Empire, endevoured all they could to inhabit thoſe Regions. Pardon me, I pray you, if I dare not ſubſcribe heereto, no nor give my conſent to that opinion moſt received, as touching the Winter ſeaſon aforeſaid; although I have read, that in this Iland the aire upon every winde is colde and Winterlike. As for Hibernia, Iuuerna, and OVERNIA, they came doubtleſſe from IERNA, ſpoken of by Orphæus and Ariſtotle: And the ſame Ierna, as alſo Iris, Yuerdhon and Ireland, from Erin, the terme that the inhabitants uſe. From this Erin therefore, a word proper unto the Nation, the originall muſt be deduced. Heere I, with thoſe great Philoſophers, ἐποχῶ, that is, I hold off and ſuſpend my iudgement: neither know I what to divine and ground my conjecture upon; unleſſe, peradventure, that name may come from Hiere, an Iriſh word, which with them ſignifieth the Weſt, or a Weſtern coaſt, whence Erin may ſeeme to be derived, as one would ſay, A Weſtern countrey. Of this opinion have I been, a good while ſince, induced thereto with my owne conceit and flattering conjecture, both becauſe it lieth furtheſt Weſtward of any region in all Europe (as being no more than twelve degrees diſtant from the utmoſt Weſt point) as alſo, for that the river running in the moſt remote Weſt part of this Iland, is in Ptolemee called IERNUS, like as the promontorie or cape bearing out fartheſt Weſt in Spaine, (from whence our Iriſh men came) is named by Strabo IERNE, and as the next river unto it, which alſo is moſt Weſt of all the rivers in Spaine, is called by Mela IERNA. Moreover, by reaſon of the Weſtern ſituation, Spaine is named Heſperia, and that Weſt Cape in Africk, Heſperium cornu, cornu, yea and even in Germanie, theſe countries, Weſtrich, Weſtphalen, &c. have A their denomination from that poſition and ſite: ſo that it is no marvell, if Ireland were termed Erin of the Weſtern ſituation. Beſides theſe names of Ireland which I have ſpoken of, the Iriſh Bards or Poets have uſually taken up in their ballads theſe termes, Tiruolas, Totidanan and Banno, as the moſt ancient names of this Iland, but upon what reaſon I wot not, unleſſe Banno were that Bannomanna which Pliñie men-Bannomanna. tioneth out of Timæus, whiles his pen coaſteth along the outmoſt ſides and skirts of Europe, and the ſhore of the Northren Ocean on the left hand from Scythia, even as farre as Cadis in Spaine. For, what countrey that ſame Bannomanna ſhould be,

The holy Iland. the Geographers have not yet found out. But Biaun in Iriſh ſignifieth Sacred or Ho- B ly: and verily Feſtus Avienus calleth Ireland SACRAM INSULAM, that is, The holy Iland, in that little booke entituled ORAE MARITIMAE, that is, The Sea coaſts, Orꝛ Maritimæ. which he compiled out of moſt ancient Geographers, namely Hecataus of Miletum, Hellanicus of Lesbos, Philæus of Athens, Caryandæus, Pauſymachus of Samos, Damaſtus, Euctemon, and others. But I will write downe his verſes: for when he had ſpoken of the Ilands Oſtrymides, thus he verſifieth:

Aſt hinc duobus in SACRAM, ſic inſulam
Dixere priſci, ſolibus curſus rati eſt.
Hæc inter undas multum ceſpitem jacit,
Eamq́ late gens Hibernorum colit. C
Propinqua rurſus inſula Albionum patet.

But to the SACRED Iſle (for ſo
They us'd to call it long ago)
From hence a courſe who ſo deſires,
Iuſt two dayes ſailing it requires.
Much turfe it caſts the waves among,
And Iriſh dwell therein along.
Now very neere to it againe,
The Albions iſle is kenned plaine. D

Oggia. In his booke de macula in Luna. that is, of the Spot in the moone.

If that OGYGIA, which Plutarch placed on the Weſt ſide of our Britajne were not ὄναρ but ὕπαρ, not a vaine dreame, but a matter in truth, he may ſeeme by that name plainely to point at Ireland, although the reports that he ſo ſadly telleth of it be meere poeticall fictions and Mileſian toies. Neither can any man redily tell, why they called it Ogygia? unleſſe haply of the antiquity; For the Grecians termed nothing by the name of Ogygia but that which was very ancient. And Robert Conſtantine ſee-Iſle Cerne. meth to have ſhot wide all the world over, when he affirmeth that CERNE mentioned in Lycophron was our Ireland, for Lycophron himſelfe, and Tzetzes that commenteth upon him, doe place Cerne toward the ſun riſing: and all the beſt learned-men thinke it to be Madagaſcar, ſituated as it were in another world, right under the Tropique of Capricorne, right over againſt Aethiopia. Thus much touching the names of Ireland, yet ſo, as we remember withall to take this by the way, that in Hibernia called Scotia. theſe later times it was called alſo SCOTIA, that is, Scotland by Iſidor and Bede, of the Scots who inhabited it: and that thence the name of Scotland, together with the Scots themſelves came into Britaine. But of this we have ſpoken already once before, and therefore have no cauſe to repeat here.

This Iland is ſtretched out from South to North, not broader than it is long, as Strabo hath recorded, but ſhaped in forme of a lentile, or an egge, nor of twentie
The ſtate of Ireland. dayes ſailing, as Philemon in Ptolemee hath ſet it downe: but according to the later writers, it taketh up three hundred miles and no more in length, and is ſcarcely one hundred and twentie miles broad. On the Eaſt ſide it hath England ſevered from it with a troublous and tempeſtuous ſea, which is called the Iriſh ſea: on the Weſt the

A huge main Westerne Ocean; on the North the Deucaledonian sea, and on the South the Vergivian sea worketh upon it.

The Country, if you would heare Giraldus Cambrensis to speake, is uneven, full of hils softe, wateriſh and boggy, wilde and overgrowne with woods, lying open to the Winds, and so full of Meeres or Loghs, that a man may see ponds and ſtanding waters even upon the mountaines. The aire (as Mela saith) is nothing good and favourable for ripening of corne: but the ground is so ranke of grasse, and the same not onely fresh and long, but sweete also withall, that the cattaile may fill their bellies in a small peece of the day, and unlesse they bee kept from grazing, and not suffered to feed long together, their bellies will burſt. Hence it is, that they haue such an infinite number of cattaile, as beeing indeed the chiefe B and principall wealth of the Inhabitants, and many goodly flockes of sheepe, which they sheare twice a yeere, and make of their course wool rugges or shagge mantles, Caddowes also or Coverlets, which are vented into foraine countries. They haue likewise excellent good horses (wee terme the Hobies) which haue not the same pace that other horses in their course but a soft and round amble seting one legge before another very finely. Their haukes also are right commendable; but these, as all other living creatures (besides men, women and Greyhounds) are smaller here than in England. Now, as well the aire as the ground is excessive moist, whence it is that very many there be sore troubled with loosenesse and rhewmes, but strangers especially: yet for the staying of the same, they have an * Aqua vitæ C of the best which inflameth a great deale lesse, and drieth much more than ours. Whereas Giraldus writeth, that those which are borne heere sicken never of any of the three kinds of fevers, it is daily found by experience to be false. As for the land it selfe (that I may use the testimony here of the said Giraldus) ie is of all countries most temperate, Neither doth any frying heat of Cancer drive folke to seeke shade, nor chilling cold of Capricorne call them in to the fire: but all times in maner, by reason of the pleasantnesse and temperat disposition of the aire, have a gentle kinde of warmth.

Giral. Cambrensis in Topographia. Hiberniæ.

Cattaile.

Irish mantles and rugges.

Horses called Hobies.

Haukes.

Diseases.

*Vske-bah.

Of Bees there are such numbers, that they be found, not onely in hives but also within the bodies of trees and holes of the earth. Likewise, it hath vines, but more for shade, than for any fruit they yeeld. For no sooner is the sunne passed out of Leo, D but cold blasts heere in this our climat are wont presently to follow, and in Autumne the after-noone heats are lesse effectuall and shorter both heere and in our Britajne, than to give the full and kinde ripening unto Grapes. Besides this, there is no snake in this country, nor any venemous thing whatsoever. Howbeit much noisance they have every where by Wolves: and that I may speake all at a word, whether a man respect the fertility of the soile, or the commodiousnesse of sea and havens, or the inhabitants themselves, who are stout, hardy, warlike, witty, proper men of bodie and goodly feature, of a wonderous soft skinne, by reason also of the tendernesse of muskles passing nimble; the Iland aboundeth in so many blessings, that Giraldus said not without just cause, That Nature had cast into this Western Kingdome of Zephyrus, a E more grabious eie than ordinary. Now in that otherwhiles there goeth of it an ill name, it is for that the inhabitants are in some places wilde and very uncivill, who in a mervailous contrariety of nature, both love idlenesse and withall hate quietnes: who also are immoderatly given to fleshly lust, and that over-soone. For among the wilder sort, they bestow their maidens in marriage, as ripe and ready for husbands, when they be once ten or twelue yeeres of age. Neither will they by any meanes stay for a competent maturity of yeeres: a thing observed in all other countries. But as touching the manners and qualities of the Irish-nation I will discourse more at large in the end of this booke. And now, if it please you, give Ireland the hearing, whiles she speaketh of herselfe and her commodities, in these verses of that most learned man Hadrianus Iunius. F

Why Grapes are not ripe in Britaine.

Illa ego sum Graijs olim glacialis Ierne
Dicta, & Iasoni & puppis bene cognita nautis:
Quæ Tarthessiacò propior se tingere soles

Flumine conſpicio, Cauro ſubiecta procaci :
Cui Deus, & melior rerum naſcentium origo
Ius commune dedit cum Creta altrice tonantis,
Noxia ne noſtris diffundant ſibila in oris
Terrificæ creti tabo Phorcynidos angues :
Et fortè illati compreſsis faucibus atris
Viroſo pariter vitam cum ſanguine ponant.
En ego cum regni ſceptro, Mauortia bello
Pectora, & horriferas hominum, nil fingo, figuras,
Qui curſu alipedes norint præuertere cernos,
Dedico, piſcoſoſque lacus, volucrumque paludes
Omnigenûm luſtris fœtas, ſtannique fodinas,
Et puri argenti venas, quas terra refoſsis
Viſceribus manes imos viſura recludit.

I am that frozen Iſle, which Greekes once did Ierne call,
Well knowne to Argo Iaſons ſhip and to her ſailers all.
Which ſubject unto Caurus curſt haue ſunne more nere in ſight,
When in Tarteſſus floud he ſets and ſeemes to drench his light.
Whom God and better Nature hath ſecured from this feare
(A gift imparted eke to Crete which Iupiter did reare)
That ſnakes of grim Meduſaes bloud ſo filthy that were bred,
Should dare in theſe my coaſts to hiſſe, and hurtful venome ſpred.
And ſay, that ſome by chance there were brought thither of that brood,
Throtled anone they looſe at once their life with poiſon'd bloud.
Lo here with regall ſcepter I, preſent moſt martiall mindes
And dreadfull ſhapes, (I fable not) of men who harts and hinds
So ſwift of foote in running can out-ſtrip and leaue behind,
With fiſhfull lakes beſides and fennes, where foules of every kind
Their eiries haue and harbours ſafe : moreover, Delfs of tin:
Rich mines likewiſe of ſilver pure, which wondrous farre within,
The earth hath kept, whoſe bowels now digg'd up for men to prie
As if ſhe ment even hell to ſee, ſhe ſhew's them to the eye.

Ireland, why called Ogygia.

If that be true which the Iriſh Hiſtoriographers record, this Iſland was not without cauſe by Plutarch termed Ogygia, that is, very ancient. For, they fetch the beginning of their hiſtories from the moſt profound and remote records of antiquity; ſo that in compariſon of them, the Antientneſſe of all other nations is but novelty, and, as it were, a matter of yeſterday. They write, that one Cæſarea Noah his Niece, inhabited it before Noahs floud: Then, that Bartholanus a Scythian came hither about three hundred yeeres after the ſaid Noahs Floud, and fought right doughty battailes with Giants: That many yeeres after Nemethus a Scythian arrived heere, and forthwith was caſt out by the Giants: After this, that Dela with certaine Grecians ſeized upon this Iſland, and ſoone after, that Gaothel with Scota his wife, daughter to Pharao King of Ægypt landed here, and nominated after his wiues name the Iſland Scotia, and according to his owne name the language, Gaothela: and that, about the time of the Iſraelits departure out of Ægypt. And the Britiſh hiſtorie reporteth, how ſome few ages after, Hiberus and Hermion (Ever and Erimon, the Iriſh writers terme them) the ſonnes of Mileſius King of Spaine, by the ſufferance of Gurguntius King of the Britans, planted colonies in this country, after it had beene diſpeopled by a peſtilence. My purpoſe is not either to averre theſe reports for true, nor yet to refute them: In ſuch things as theſe let Antiquity bee pardonable, and enioie a prerogatiue.

Surely, as I doubt not but that this Iſland became inhabited even of old time, when as man-kinde was ſpred over all quarters of the world: ſo it is evident, that the firſt inhabitantes thereof paſſed thither out of our Britaine: For (to ſay nothing of an infinit number of Britiſh words in the Iriſh tongue, together with the ancient

A ancient names which ſavour of a Britiſh originall); The Natures of the people and their faſhions, as Tacitus ſaith, differ not much from Britaine: of all ancient writers it is called A Britiſh Iſland: Diodorus Siculus termed Irin a part of Britaine: and Ptolomee named the ſame, BRITANNIA PARVA, that is, Little Britaine, as you may ſee, if you liſt to compare his Geographicks with his booke of Great Conſtruction. And the Epitome of Strabo calleth the Inhabitants in plaine words, BRITANS: The old Geographers alſo nameth it The Britans Iſland: yea and Feſtus Avienus ſheweth this out of Dronyſius Afer, when he treateth of Britiſh Iſlands, in theſe verſes.

Britans the firſt inhabitants of Ireland.

Little Britaine.

B Eminùs hîc aliæ gelidi prope flabra Aquilonis
Exuperant undas, & vaſta cacumina tollunt,
Hæ numero geminæ pingues ſolâ, ceſpitis ampli,
Conditur occidui quà Rheni gurgitis unda,
Dira Britannorum ſuſtentant agmina terris.

Here other Iſlands nere unto the chilling North-winds blaſt
The waues of ſea ſurmount aloofe, and ſhew their mountaines vaſt,
In number twaine: their ſoile is fat, their ground both large and wide
What way the Weſterne Rhene his gulfe and waters deepe doth hide:
Theſe Lands-feirce Britan-troupes mainteines, and thereon they abide.

C Neither is there any other countrey, out of which by reaſon of the vicinity they might paſſe over more commodiouſly into Ireland than out of our Britaine: from whence there is the like paſſage thether, in reſpect of the ſpace of ſea betweene, as is out of France into Britaine. But, afterwards, when the Romans had enlarged their Empire every way, many there were, no doubt, who out of Spaine, Gaule and Britane withdrew them ſelues hither, that they might ſhake of that intollerable yoke of the Romans ſlavery: Neither doe ſome otherwiſe underſtand theſe words of Tacitus: Ireland being ſituate in the middeſt betweene Spaine and Britainie, lying alſo very fitly for the French ſea, would aptly haue united to the great uſe and advantage of the one and the other, the ſtrongeſt members of the Empire togither: the landing places and
D ports whereof, by entercourſe of traffick, were better knowne than thoſe of Britane: And albeit, Iulius Agricola alſo kept with him a pety King or Prince of Ireland who was driven thence by occaſion of civill diſſention, that hee might haue the more advantageous opportunity thereby to invade the Iſland, which hee thought would be ſubdued and held with legion and a ſmall powre of Aid-forces; and was perſwaded withall, that the ſame would availe much for the affaires of Britaine, in caſe the Roman forces were planted every where, and hope of liberty baniſhed, as it were, farre out of ſight; yet wee reade not that the Romans gaue any attempt that way. Notwithſtanding ſome are verily perſwaded, that they aſſaied the conqueſt of it, and do gather the ſame hardly out of this place of Iuvenal.

E ——— Arma quid vltra
Littora Iuvernæ promovimus, & modò captas
Orcadas, et minima contentos nocte Britannos?

Why warred we paſt Iriſh coaſts, and the Orkneis lately wonne,
Beyond the Britans eke that haue leaſt night, and longeſt Sunne?

Yet the Panegyricall oration pronounced before Conſtantius the Emperor, implieth that Ireland was under his government: Britaine (ſaith hee) is ſo recovered, that even thoſe nations alſo, which joine upon the coaſts of the ſame Iſland, are become ſubject & o- F bedient unto your command. Alſo we find written in the Chronicles of later hiſtorians, that Ireland together with Britaine and Thule, at the diviſion of the Empire fell unto Conſtanſtine the ſonne of Conſtantine the Great. And that very fond fable of Cæſarea Noachs niece, carrieth before it the name of Cæſars ſo, as that therein may ſeeme covertly couched the comming of ſome Cæſar into Ireland. Howbeit I can hardly perſwade my ſelfe to beleeue, that this Country at any time became ſubject to the Romans. But a bleſſed and happy turne had it beene for Ireland, if it had at any time beene under their ſubjection. Surely, it had then beene reduced from barbariſme to civility. For, whereſoever the Romans were victours, they brought them whom they conquered, to civility: neither verily in any place elſe throughout Europe was there any civility, learning, and elegance, but where they ruled. And very inconſideratly alſo they may ſeeme to haue neglected this Iſland. For, from hence (to the plague and ſpoile of Britaine) brake out moſt dangerous enemies: which Auguſtus ſeemeth to haue foreſeene, when he tooke ſo ſmall care of Britaine, for the danger which hee preſaged to hover, and approch from the nations round about adjoining. But when the Roman Empire beganne now to decay, the nation of the Scots or Scythians (for, in times paſt, as Strabo writeth, al people Weſtward were termed Celto-Scythæ) grew mighty in Ireland, and beganne to bee renowned. Furthermore under the Emperors Honorius, and Arcadius, it was inhabited by the Scotiſh nations, as Oroſius hath written. Whereupon, Claudian living in the ſame age wrote thus.

Cæſarea.

Romane Conqueſts.

Scotorum cumulos flevit glacialis Ierne.
Yce-frozen Ireland wept amaine,
To ſee the Scots on heapes lie ſlaine.

And in another place.

——— Totam cùm Scotus Hibernem Movit ———
What time as Scots did make,
All Ireland armes to take.

Iriſhmen out of Spaine.

For, from hence it was that the Scots made their forcible invaſions into Britaine, and hither they were otherwhiles with great loſſes and overthrowes repulſed. But whence they came into Ireland, Ninnius a diſciple of Elvodugus, an author of good antiquity ſhall enforme you by his owne words. Who lived as himſelfe witneſſeth in the yeere 830. under Anaraugh King of Angleſey and Guineth or North Wales. For, after he had related, that in the third age of the world, the Britans came into Britaine, and in the fourth age, the Scythians or Scots into Ireland: hee proceedeth thus:

In other copies Tholanus.

Laſt of all came the Scots from the parts of Spaine into Ireland. But the firſt that arrived there, was Partholanus, with a thouſand men and women togither, and they grew after, to be foure thouſand: and there fell a mortality among them, ſo that in one weeke they all died, and there remained of them not ſo much as one aliue. The ſecond that landed in Ireland was one Nemeth, the ſonne of Aguomenes, who, by report, ſailed upon the ſea one yeere and an halfe: and afterward when he had ſuffered ſhipwrack fell with an haven in Ireland: and he returned into Spaine: and after that came three ſonnes of a Spaniſh knight, with thirty Ciules with them, and in every Ciule thirty wiues, and they continued there for the ſpace of one yeere. Laſt of all came Elam-Hoctor, and dwelt there with all his progenie and generation even to this day. With this Ninnius, accordeth Henry of Huntingdon. The Britans (ſaith he) in the third age of the World came into Britaine: and the Scots in the Fourth into Ireland.

And how ever theſe reports be not moſt certaine, yet ſure it is, that they came out of Spaine into Ireland: and part of them departing thence, came, and added a third nation unto the Britans an Picts in Britaine. The received opinion of the Iriſh is agreable hereunto, for they moſt willingly acknowledge themſelues, to be an offſpring of the Spaniards. Neither verily can it bee a marvaile, that a number of them withdrew themſelues into Ireland out of the North part of Spaine, which as Strabo writeth is moſt baraine, and wherein men liue moſt miſerably. Out of thoſe words of Ninnius a man may ſee, that thoſe entries made of Bartholanus and Nemethus, which fabulouſly they fetch ſo farre off out of moſt profound and remote antiquity, are to bee drawne backe unto later times. Neither is it needefull for mee to note againe, that this Iſland was of the Scotiſh inhabitance called SCOTIA.

Not

A Not many yeeres after, these Scots in Ireland beganne to professe Christianity, although they would needs appropriate unto themselves that history out of Rufinus, concerning the conversion of the Hiberians in Asia, and Cælestin Pope of Rome sent unto these Scots Palladius the Bishop. Whereupon Prosper Aquitanus writeth in this maner against Collator: Cælestin delivered the Britans from the Pelagians heresie, when he secluded certaine enemies of grace who held their owne native country, even from that unknowne part of the Ocean: and having ordained a Bishop among the Scots, whiles he laboured to keepe an Iland of the Romans in the Catholicke faith, he brought also a barbarous nation to be Christian. Yet Ninnius writeth, that Palladius being taken away by untimely death in Britaine effected nothing: who also reporteth out of the Irish writers, that Christian religion was published and preached throughout Ireland by Anno Christi 431. Palladius. Vincent. lib. 9. cap. 7.

B Saint Patricke. For he being a Britan borne, and that as some will in Cluidsdale, allied also to Sir Martin of Tourain, and a Disciple of Saint German, was appointed successour by Pope Cælestin to Palladius deceased, who with so good successe taught and sowed the seede of Christian religion over all Ireland, that hee converted the greatest part by farre thereof unto Christ, and deserved the name of the Apostle of the Irish Nation. Touching whom, an ancient writer Hiericus Antisiodorensis in his booke of Saint Germans miracles: For as much as (saith he) the glory of a Father appeareth bright in the governance of his owne sonnes, among many sonnes whom we beleeve Saint German had in Christ, and Disciples in religion, it shall suffice by way of compendious brevity to insert heere the mention of one onely, and the same of all others most famous,

C namely Patricke, as the whole course of his acts declareth, the peculiar Apostle of the Irish nation, wholly addicted for 18. yeeres unto his most holy discipline, out of the veine of so worthy a fountain drew no meane knowledge & learning in the heavenly scriptures. Whom also that most divine and godly Bishop, considering to be in religion magnanimous, in vertues excellent, and in learning powerfull: and deeming it mere folly, that so strong and able an husbandman should live idle in the tillage and ordering of the Lords Corn-field, directed him unto holy Celestine Pope of Rome, by Segetius a Priest of his, who should give testimonie unto the Apostolicall See, of Ecclesiasticall honesty in the behalfe of

D that right excellent man. Being therefore approved with the judgement, supported with the authority, & lastly strēgthned with the blessing of him, he made a voiage into Ireland, and being peculiarly appointed an Apostle of that nation, as he then lightned them with his Doctrine and miracles, so now also and for ever adorneth them with wonderfull priviledges of his Apostleship. The Irish scholars of Patricke profited so notably in Christianitie, that in the age next following, Ireland was tearmed Sanctorum Patria, that is, The native country of Saints, and the Scotish monkes in Ireland and Britaine highly excelled for their holinesse and learning, yea and sent out whole flockes of most devout men into all parts of Europe: who were the first founders of Luxeul Abbay in Burgundie, of Bobie Abbay in Italie: of Wirtzburge Abbay in Francland, of Saint Gallus in Sweitzerland, of Malmesbury, Lindisfarn, and of many other Monasteries in Bri- Monkes of Ireland holy men and learned.

E taine. For, out of Ireland came Cælius Sedulius a Priest, Columba, Columbane, Colman, Aidan, Gallus, Kithan, Maidulph, Brendan, and many other celebrated for their holy life and learning. Of these Monkes, is that Hieric above named of Auxerre to be understood when he writeth thus to the Emperour Charles the Bald: what should I speake of Ireland, which setting light by the dangers of sea, slitteth all of it well neere with whole flocks of Philosophers unto our shores? Of whom so many as are more skilfull and learned than the rest, doe voluntarily banish themselves, to attend dutifully upon the most wise Salomon, and be at his commande.

F This Monasticall profession, although but then newly come up, was far different in those daies from that of our time. They, desired to be that indeede which they were named to be; they were far from colourable dealing, or dissembling: Erred they in any thing? it was through simplicity, not through lewdnesse, much lesse of wilfull obstinacy. As for welth & these worldly things, they so highly cōtemned them that they did not only not seek after, but also refused the same, thogh they were offred unto thē descended descended by inheritance. For, a notable Apophthegme was that of Columbane (a monke of Ireland) who, as the Abbat Walafride writeth, When Sigebert King of the Franckners delt very earnestly with him, and that by way of many faire and large promises, that he should not depart out of his Kingdome; answered him after the same sort, as Eusebius hath reported of Thaddeus, namely, That it became not them to embrace other mens riches, who for Christs sake had forsaken their owne. And the Bishops of Britaine seeme no lesse to have despised riches; seeing they were so poore, that they had nothing of their owne: For, as we read in Sulpitius Severus, Three Bishops of Britain, in the Councel holden at Rimine for want of their own, lived of the publicke charges. The English Saxons also in that age conflowed & resorted from all parts into Ireland, as it were, to the mart of good learning: and hence it is, that we read so often in our writers, concerning Holy men thus: Such a one was sent over into Ireland for to be trained up in learning: and in the life of Sulgen who flourished 600 yeeres agoe.

Contempt of riches.

Exemplo patrum commotus amore legendi
Ivit ad Hibernos, Sophiâ, mirabile, claros.
The fathers old he following, for love to read good workes
Went unto Irish men who were (ô wonder) famous Clarkes.

English Saxons seeme to have had their letters and writing from the Irish.

And from thence it may seeme our forefathers the ancient English learned the maner of framing their letters, and of writing; considering that they used the selfe same character, which the Irish commonly use at this day.

Arts and piety sowed among nations in sundry ages.

And no cause have we to mervaile, that Ireland which now for the most part is rude, halfe-barbarous, and altogether voide of any polite and exquisite literature, was full of so devout, godly and good wits in that age, wherin good letters throughout all Christiendome lay neglected and halfe buried; seeing, that the Divine providence of that most gratious and almighty ruler of the world, soweth the seeds and bringeth forth the plantes of Sanctity and good arts, one-whiles in one nation and other whiles in another, as it were in garden beds and borders, and that in sundry ages: which being removed and translated hither and thither, may by a new grouth come up one under another, prosper, and be preserved to his owne glory, and the good of mankind.

But the outrage of warres by little and little quenched these hote affections and studies of holinesse and good literature. For, in the yeere 644. after Christs nativitie, Egfrid King of Northumberland, with fire and sword made spoile and havocke of Ireland, a nation most friendly unto England: For which cause Bede chargeth him after a sort in most grave and important termes. Afterward, the Norwegians under the leading of Turgese their Captaine, spoiled and wasted the country in most lamentable maner for the space of 30. yeeres: But when he was once slaine by a traine and ambush laid for him, the inhabitants fell upon the Norwegians and made such a bloudy massacre of them, that scarce any one survived to be a messenger of so great a slaughter. These Norwegians were no doubt those Normans, who as Rhegino saith, in the time of Charles the Great, setting upon Ireland, an Isle of the Scots, were by the Scots put to flight. After this, the Oustmans, as one would say, Esterlings or Eastmen, came out of the sea coasts of Germanie into Ireland; who having entred into certaine Cities, under the pretence of great trafficke, in a short space raised a most dangerous warre. About the very same time in maner, Eadgar that most puissant King of England, conquered also a great part of Ireland: For, thus we read in a certaine Charter of his: Vnto whom God of his gracious favour hath granted together with the Empire of England; dominion over all the Kingdomes of the Isles lying in the Ocean, with their most stout and fierce Kings even as farre as to Norway, yea and to subdue under the English Empire the greatest part of Ireland with her most noble City Dublin.

Oustmanni, who happly are those that Tacitus nameth Aestiones, and Eginardus, Aistι.

After these tempesteous foraine warres were allaied, there followed a most greivous storme of civill dissention at home, which made way for the English to conquere Ireland. For, Henrie the second King of England, taking occasion and opportunity

A tunity, by the privie diſlikes, heart burnings, and malicious emulations among the Iriſh Princes, grew into a ſerious deliberation with the Nobles of England in the yere of Salvation 1155. about the conqueſt of Ireland, for the behoofe of his brother William of Aniou: But through the counſell of his mother Mawde the Empreſſe, this project was reiected unto another time. Howbeit, not many yeeres betweene, Dermicius, the ſonne of Murchard (Dermot Mac Morrog they call him) who reigned over the Eaſt part of Ireland, which in Latin is called Lagenia, and commonly Leinſter, being for his tyrannie and luſtfull leawdneſſe thruſt out of his Kingdome (for he had raviſhed the wife of O Rorcke, a pety King of Meth) obtained aide & forces of Hen- Dermot Mac Morrog.
B rie the ſecond King of England, to be reſtored into his Kingdome againe: and made a covenant with Richard Earle of Pembroch, ſurnamed Strongbowe, of the houſe of Richard Strongbow.
Clare; that hee for his part ſhould aide him in the recovering of his Kingdome; and that himſelfe would aſſure unto the Earle together with his daughter Eua the ſaid Kingdome in ſucceſſion after him. Heereupon, the ſaid Earle having forthwith muſtered up and raiſed an armie of Welſh and Engliſh together, and joigned unto him to accompany him in the warres, the Fitz-Giralds, Fitz-Stephans and other gentlemen out of England and Wales, reſtored his father in law Dermot into his former Kingdome againe: and within few yeeres gat by conqueſt ſo great a part of Ireland into his owne hands, that his powre became now ſuſpected to the King of England;
C who by proclamation, & that with greevous menaces recalled home the ſaid Earle and his followers out of Ireland, and unleſſe they obeied without delay, pronounced them traytors and their goods confiſcate. Whereupon, the Earle granted unto the King by covenant and writing, whatſoever he either inherited in right of his wife, or won with his ſword, & as his tenant in vaſſailage, receiued from him the Earldomes Henrie the ſecond entreth Ireland. of Weisford, Oſſorie, Caterlogh and Kildare with certaine Caſtles. Then King Henrie the Second, having gathered a powre together in the yeere of Chriſt 1172. ſailed over into Ireland, and obtained the Princely title of ſoveraigne rule of the Iland.

For, the States of Ireland paſſed over unto him all their rule and powre, namely, Rothericke O Conor Dun, that is, The Browne, Monarch of Ireland, Girald.
D Dermot Mac Carti King of Corke, Donald O Bren King of Limiricke, O Carell Cambr. and a Manuſcript in the hands of Baron Houth.
King of Vriel, Macſhaglin King of Ophalie, O Rorke King of Meth, O Neal King of Vlſter, with the reſt of the Nobles and their people: and the ſame under their Charters ſubſcribed, ſigned, delivered, and tranſmitted to Rome. Which was ratified and confirmed moreover by a Patent of Pope Hadrian, by a ring deliuered unto him in token of his inueſture, and alſo by the authority of certaine provincial Synods. This King Henrie afterward delivered up the Seignory of Ireland, into the hands of his ſonne Iohn: which conveiance Pope Vrban confirmed by his Bull, and in teſtimonie of his confirmation ſent him a Coronet of Peacokes feathers broided and embrodred with gold. Whom, after he was once eſtabliſhed in his Kingdome, divers authors af-
E firme, to have granted by his Charter or Patent, Ireland and England both, unto the Church of Rome to be held of it ever after in fee, and to have received it againe from the Church, as a Feudatarie: alſo to have bound his ſucceſſours to pay three hundred markes unto the Biſhop of Rome: But that moſt worthy and famous Sir Thomas Moore, who tooke the Popes part even unto death, affirmeth this to bee falſe: For he writeth, that the Romaniſts can ſhew no ſuch grant; that they never demaunded the foreſaid monie; and that the Kings of England never acknowledged it. But by his leave, as great a man as he was, the caſe ſtood otherwiſe, as evidently appeereth by the Parliament Records, the credite whereof cannot be impugned. For, in an aſſembly of all the States of the Realme, in the reigne of Edward F the third, the Lord Chancellour of England propoſed and related, that the Pope would judicially ſue the King of England as wel for the Homage, as the tribute which was to be yeelded for England and Ireland: to the performance whereof King Iohn in times paſt had obliged himſelfe and his ſucceſſors: and of this point, which hee put to queſtion, required their opinion. The Biſhops deſired to have a day by them ſelves for to conſult about this matter: the Nobles likewiſe and the people or Communalty.

munalty. The day after, they all met, and with one generall accord ordained and enacted: That forasmuch as neither King Iohn, nor any other King whatsoever, could impose such servitude upon the Kingdome but with the common consent and assent of a Parliament; which was not done: and whatsoever he had passed, was against his oth at his coronation by him in expresse words religiously taken before God: Therefore, in case the Pope would urge this matter, they were most ready to the uttermost of their power, to resist him resolutely, with their bodies and goods. They also who are skilfull in scanning and sifting every pricke and tittle of the Lawes, cry out with one voice, That the said Grant or Charter of King Iohn was voide in Law, by that clause and reservation in the end thereof; Saving unto us and our heires, all our Rights, Liberties and Regalities. But this may seeme beside my text.

Ever since King Iohns time, the Kings of England were stiled Lords of Ireland, untill that King Henry the eighth in the memory of our fathers was in a Parliament of Ireland, by the States thereof declared King of Ireland; becaufe the name of Lord seemed in the judgement of certain seditious persons nothing so sacred and ful of majestie as the name of King.

This name and title of the Kingdome of Ireland were by the Popes Authoritie (what time as Queene Mary in the yeere 1555, had by her Embassadours in the name of the Kingdome of England tendred obedience unto the Pope Paul the fourth) confirmed in these wordes. To the laud and glory of almighty God, and his most glorious mother the Virgin Mary: to the honour also of the whole court of heaven, and the exaltation of the Catholike faith, at the humble request and suite made vnto us by King Philip and Queene Mary about this matter: wee with the advise of our brethren, and of plenary powre Apostolicall by our Apostolicall authority erect for ever Ireland to be a Kingdome and endow, dignifie, and exalt with the title, dignity, honor, faculties, rights, ensignes, prerogatiues, preferments, preeminencies royal, and such as other Realmes of Christians haue, use, and enjoy, and may haue, use, and enjoy, for the times to come.

And seeing that I haue hapned upon those Noblemens names, who first of all English, gave the attempt upon Ireland and most valiantly subdued it under the imperial crowne of England, lest I might seeme upon envie to depriue both them and their posterity of this due and deserved glory, I will set them downe heere out of the Chauncerie of Ireland, according as the title doth purport.

The names of them that came with Dermot Mac Morog into Ireland.

Richard Strongbow Earle of Pembroch, who by Eve the daughter of Morrog the Irish petie King aforesaid, had one only daughter, and shee brought unto William Mareschall the title of the Earledome of Pembroch, with faire lands in Ireland, and a goodly issue, five sonnes, who succeeded one another in a row, all childlesse: and as many daughters, which enriched their husbands, Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolke, Guarin Mont-chensey, Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloceſter, William Ferrars Earle of Derby, and William Breose, with children, honors and possessions.

Robert Fitz-Stephen.
Harvey de Mont-marish.
Maurice Prendergest.
Robert Barr.
Meiler Meilerine.
Maurice Fitz-Girald.
Redmund nephew of Fitz-Stephan.
William Ferrand.
Miles de Cogan.
Richard de Cogan.
Gualter de Ridensford.
Gualter and Alexander } sonnes of Maurice Fitz-Girald.

William

A William Notte.
Robert Fitz-Bernard.
Hugh Lacie.
William Fitz-Aldelm.
William Macarell.
Humfrey Bohun.
Hugh de Gundevill.
Philip de Hasting.
Hugh Tirell.
David Walsh.
Robert Poër.
B Osbert de Herloter.
William de Bendenges.
Adam de Gernez.
Philip de Breos.
Griffin nephew of Fitz-Stephen.
Raulfe Fitz-Stephen.
Walter de Barry.
Philip Walsh.
Adam de Hereford.

C To whom may be added out of Giraldus Cambrensis.
John Curcy.
Hugh Contilon.
Redmuvd Cantimore.
Redmund Fitz-Hugh.
Miles of S. Davids, and others.

The Government of the Kingdome of Ireland.

D

EVer since that Ireland became subject unto England, the Kings of England have sent over thither to manage the state of the Realme their Regents or Vicegerents, whom they termed in those writings or letters Patents of theirs (whereby authoritie and jurisdiction is committed unto them) first, * Keepers of Ireland: then afterwards according as it pleased them, Iustices of Ireland, Lieutenants, and Deputies. Which authoritie and jurisdiction of theirs is very large, ample, and roiall; whereby they have E power to make warre, to conclude peace, to bestow all Magistracies and offices, except a very few, to pardon all crimes, unlesse they be some of high treason, to dub Knights, &c. These letters Patents when any one entreth upon this honorable place of government, are publikely read, and after a solemne oth taken in a set forme of words before the Chauncelour, the sword is delivered into his hands, which is to be borne before him, he is placed in a chaire of estate, having standing by him the Chauncellour of the Realme, those of the privie Counsell, the Peeres and Nobles of the kingdome, with a King of Armes, a Serjeant of Armes, and other officers of State. And verily there is not (looke throughout all Christendome againe) any
F other Vice-Roy, th at commeth neerer unto the majestie of a King, whether you regard his jurisdiction and authoritie or his traine, furniture, and provision. There be assistant vnto him in Counsell, the Lord Chauncellour of the Realme, the Treasurer of the kingdome, and others of the Earles, Bishops, Barons and Iudges, which are of the privie Counsell. For Ireland hath the very same degrees of States that England hath, namely, Earles, Barons, Knights, Esquiers, &c.

The Vice-roys of Ireland.

* Custodes, or Wardens.

The states of Ireland.

The

The Courts of Iuſtice, or Tribunals of Ireland.

THe ſupreme Court of the Kingdome of Ireland, is the Parliament, which at the pleaſure of the Kings of England, is uſually called by the Deputie, and by him diſſolved: although in the reigne of King Edward the Second, a Law was enacted. That every yere there ſhould be Parliaments holden in Ireland, which ſeemeth yet not to have beene effected. There be likewiſe foure Tearmes kept, as in England, yeerely: and there are fiue Courts of Iuſtice; The Star-chamber, The Chauncery, The Kings Bench, The Common Pleas, and the Exchequer. There are alſo Iuſtices of Aſſiſes, of Niſi Prius, and of Oyer and Determiner, according as in England; yea and Iuſtices of Peace in every county for the keeping of peace. Moreover, the King hath his Serjeant at law, his Attournay Generall, his Sollicitour, &c.

Parlamentum Clauſ. anno 12. The Tribunals of Ireland.

Over and beſides in the more remote Provinces, there be governours to miniſter Iuſtice, as a principall Commiſſioner in Connaught; and a Preſident in Mounſter, who have to aſſiſt them in commiſſion certaine Gentlemen and Lawyers, and yet every of them are directed by the Kings Lieutenant Deputy. As for the common lawes, Ireland is governed by the ſame that England hath. For we read in the Recordes of the Kingdome thus, King Henry the Third in the 12. yeere of his raigne, gave commandement to his Iuſtice of Ireland, that calling together the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Barons, and Knights, he ſhould cauſe there before them to red, the Charter of King John: which he cauſed to be red accordingly: and the Nobles of Ireland to be ſworne, as touching the obſervation of the lawes and cuſtomes of England, and that they ſhould hold and keepe the ſame. Nevertheleſſe the meere Iriſh did not admit them, but reteined their owne Brehon lawes and leud cuſtomes. And the Kings of England vſed a connivence therin vpon ſome deepe conſideration; not vouchſafing to communicate the benefit of the Engliſh lawes but upon eſpeciall grace to eſpeciall families or ſects, namely the O Neales, O Conors, O Brien, O Maloghlins and Mac Murough, which were reputed of the bloud Royall among them. The Parlamentary or Statute Lawes alſo of England being tranſmitted, were uſually in force in Ireland unto the time of K. Henry the Seuenth. For in the tenth yeere of his reign, thoſe were ratified and confirmed by authority of Parlament in Ireland in the time of Sir Edw. Poinings government, but ever ſince they have had their Statutes enacted in their owne Parlaments. Beſides theſe civill Magiſtrates, they have alſo one military Officer named the Mareſhal: who ſtandeth heere in great ſteed to reſtraine as well the inſolency of ſoldiours, as of rebels, who otherwhiles commit many and great inſolencies. This office the Barons de Morley of England bare in times paſt by inheritance, as appeereth by Records, for King Iohn gave it to bee held by right of inheritance, in theſe very expreſſe words. We have given and granted unto Iohn Mareſchal for his homage and ſervice, our Mareſhalſhip of Ireland with all appertenances. We have given alſo unto him for his homage and ſervice, the Cantred, in which ſtandeth the towne of Kilbunny, to have and to hold unto him and his heires of vs and our heires. From whom it deſcended in the right line to the Barons of Morley. This Mareſhall hath under him his Provoſt Marſhall, and ſometime more than one according to the occaſions and troubles of the time, who excerciſe their authority by limitation under the great ſeale of Ireland with Inſtructions. But theſe and ſuch like matters I will leave to the curious diligence of others. Touching the order of Iuſtice and Government among thoſe more uncivill and wild Iriſh, I will write ſomewhat in place convenient, when I ſhall treat of their maners.

Mareſhall of Ireland.

Anno. 9. R. Ioannis.

THE DIVISION OF IRELAND.

Diviſion of Ireland.

IRELAND according to the manners of the inhabitants is divided into two parts: For they that refuſe to be under lawes and doe live without civility, are tearmed The Iriſhry, and commonly, The Wilde Iriſh: but ſuch as being more civill do reverence the authority of laws & are willing to appeere in court and judicially to be tried, are named Engliſh-Iriſh,

A Iriſh, and their country goeth under the tearme of The Engliſh pale, becauſe the firſt Engliſhmen that came thither, did empale for themſelves certaine limits in the Eaſt part of the Iland, and that which was moſt fruitfull: Within which there be even at this day, thoſe alſo that live uncivilly enough, and are not very obedient unto the lawes: like as others without the pale are as courteous and civill as a man would deſire. But if we looke into higher times according to the ſituatiõ of the country, or the number rather of governours in old time, it containeth fiue portions (for it was ſomtimes a Pentarchie) namely Mounſter, Southward: Leinſter, Eaſtward: Connacht in the Weſt: Vlſter in the North, and Meth, well nerre, in the very middeſt.

B

In Mounſter are theſe Counties
- Kerry.
- Deſmond.
- Cerk.
- Waterford.
- Limirick.
- Typperary with the County of holy Croſſe in Tipperary.

In Leinſter be theſe Counties.
- Kilkenny.
- Caterlough.
- Queenes County.
- Kings County.
- Kildare.
- Weiſhford.
- Dublin.

C

In Meth are theſe Counties.
- Eaſt Meath.
- Weſt Meath.
- Longford.

D

In Connaght are theſe Counties.
- Twomund.
- Galloway.
- Majo.
- Slego,
- Letrim.
- Roſcoman.

In Ulſter be theſe Counties,
- Louth.
- Cauon.
- Fermanagh.
- Monaghan.
- Armagh.
- Doun.
- Antrim.
- Colran.
- Tir-Oen.
- Tir-Conell or Donegall.

E

The Eccleſiaſticall State of Ireland was ordered anciently by Biſhops, whom either the Archbiſhop of Cantorburie conſecrated, or they themſelves one another. But in the yeere 1152, as we read in Philip Flatesbury, Chriſtianus biſhop of Liſmore Legate of all Ireland, held a moſt frequent and honourable councell at Mell, whereat were preſent the Biſhops, Abbats, Kings, Captaines, and Elders of Ireland. In which, by authority Apoſtolicall, and by the counſell of Cardinals, with the conſent of Biſhops, Abbats, and others, there in Conſiſtorie he ordeined foure Archbiſhopricks in Ireland, Armach, Dublin, Caſſile, and Tuem or Toam. Eccleſiaſtical Iriſdiction.

F The Biſhopricks which were Dioceſſans under theſe, ſeeing that now ſome of them are by the covetous iniquitie of the times aboliſhed, others confounded, and conjoined, others againe tranſlated another way; I am diſpoſed here to put downe (according as they were in olde time) out of an ancient Roman PROVINCIALL, faithfully exemplified out of the originall.

A

Under the Archbishop of Armagh Primate of all Ireland, are the Bishops of —
- Meath, or — Elnamirand.
- Dune, aliâs — Dundalethglas.
- Chlocor, otherwise — Lugundun.
- Conner.
- Ardachad.
- Rathbot.
- Rathluc.
- Daln-Liquir.
- Dearrih or Derry.

To the Archbishop of Dublin are subject the Bishops of
- Glendelach.
- Fern.
- Osseria alias — De Canic.
- Lechlin.
- Kil-dare alias — Dare.

B

Under the Archbishop of Cassile are the Bishops of —
- Laonie or — De Kendalnan.
- Limric.
- The Isle Gathay.
- Cellumabrath.
- Melite or of Emileth.
- Rosti aliâs Roscree.
- Waterford aliâs — De Baltifordian.
- Lismore.
- Clon, aliâs — De Cluanan.
- Corcage, that is, Cork.
- De Rosalither.
- Ardefert.

Unto the Archbishop of Tuam or Toam are subject the Bishops of —
- Duac aliâs — Killmacduoc.
- Mage.
- Enachdun.
- De Cellaiar.
- De Rosconmon.
- Clonfert.
- Achad.
- Lade aliâs Killaleth.
- De Conany.
- De Killmunduach.
- Elphin.

C

D

MOMONIA or MOVNSTER.

MOMONIA, in Irish Mown, and in ordinary construction of speech, Wown, in English Mounster, lieth Southward open to the Vergivian sea; separated in some place from Connaght by the river Siney or Shanon, and elswhere from Lemster by the river Neor: in times past it was divided into many parts, as Towoun, that is, North-Mounster, Des-woun, that is, South-Mounster; Hierwoun, that is, West-Mounster; Mean-woun, that is, Middle-Mounster; and Vrwoun, that is, The Front of Mounster: but at this E day, into two parts, that is, into West-Mounster, and South-Mounster. In the West-Mounster there dwelt in old time the LUCENI, the VELABRI, and UTERINI: in the South, the OUDIAE or VODIAE, and the CORIONDI: but at this day it is distinguished into seven Counties, Kerry, Desmond, Cork, Limiric, Tipperary, Holy Crosse, and Waterford.

Where Ireland lieth out most Westward, and treanding toward the Cantabrian Ocean, looketh afarre off Southwest, with a large inter-space to Gallitia in Spaine, there inhabited in old time the VELABRI and LUCENI, as Orosius writeth. The Luceni. LUCENI of Ireland (who may seeme to have had their name and beginning from the LUCENSII of Gallitia, in the opposite coast of Spaine, and of whose name some F reliques still remain in the Baronie of Lyxnaw) were seated as I suppose in the Countie of Kerry, and in Conoglogh hard-by upon the banke of the river Shanon.

THE

A

THE COVNTY OF KERRY.

THe County of Kerry neere unto the mouth of Shanon, runneth forth like a little tongue into the sea, beaten on with barking billowes on both sides: a country mounting aloft with woody, wild, and solitary mountaines: betweene which, there lie many vallies, in some places garnished with corn-fields, in others, beset also thicke B with woods. This is reputed a County Palatine, and the Earles of Desmond had in it the dignitie and priviledges of a Count-Palatine, and that by the bountifull gift of K. Edward the third; who granted unto them all Regall liberties, except foure Pleas, namely, of Burning, Rape, Forstall, and Treasure Trouue, with the Profit growing de Croccis, reserved for the Kings of England. But through the licentious iniquitie of the men, who neither would, nor knew how to use this libertie, it became of late a very sinke of mischiefes, and a common receptacle for rebels. In the entrance into this country there is a territorie called Clan-Morys, of one Moris descended from the stocke of Raimundle Grosse, whose heires successively were called the Barons of Lixnaw. A litle river now nameless (which the situation in some sort imC plieth to be DVR in Ptolomee) cutteth through the mids of this running by Trayley a small towne, laid now in maner desolate, (where the Earles of Desmond had an house) Hard by, standeth Ardart, where the Bishop called of Ardefert, a poore one God wot, hath his poore See. In the farthest point well neere of this, where it maketh a promontorie, there sheweth it selfe on the one side Dingle, a commodious port, on the other side Smerwic Sound, a road for ships, for so they terme it short, in steed of S. Mary-wic: at which, of late, when Girald Earle of Desmond a man notorious for deepe treacherie to his Prince and country, wickedly wasted Mounster with continuall harrying and raising booties out of the fields, there arrived certaine companies of Italians and Spaniards, sent underhand to aid him from Pope Gregory the D thirteenth and the King of Spaine; who heere fortifying a place which they called Fort del Ore, made their bragging bravadoes, and thundred out many a terrible threat. But the most noble and martiall Baron Arthur Lord Grey, Lord Deputie, with his very comming and first onset that he made upon them, decided the matter and ended the quarrell: For immediately they yeelded themselves, and the most part of them were put to the sword, which was in pollicie thought the wisest and safest course, considering in what tickelish termes the state of this Realme then stood, and how the rebels in every place were up in armes. And the Earle of Desmond himselfe at length in his fearefull flight being forced to take the woods hard by for his refuge, was soone after in a poore cotage by a souldiour or two rushing in upon him, first E wounded, and afterwards being knowen, cut shorter by the head, and so paid woorthily for his perfidious treason, and the wasting of his country.

Clan-Morys.

The river Dur.

Bishopricke of Ardart.

Dingle.

Smerwic.

Arthur Baron Grey.

1583.

Heere some man happly would thinke it not correspondent to the gravitie of this worke if I should but relate, what a ridiculous opinion hath fully possessed the minds of a number of the Irishry, yea and perswaded them verily to beleeve that he who in that barbarous Pharoh and out cry of the Souldiers which with great straining of their voice they use to set up when they joine battaile, doth not cry and hout as the rest doe, is suddainly caught up from the ground, and carried, as it were, flying in the aire, into these desert vallies, out of any country of Ireland whatsoeuer: where he eateth grasse, lappeth water, knoweth not in what state F he is, good or bad, hath some use of reason but not of speech; but shalbe caught at length with the helpe of houndes, and the hunters, and brought home to their owne homes.

Aridiculous conceit.

DESMONIA. or DESMOND.

A

Velabri.

BEneath those ancient Lvceni lieth Desmond stretched out farre and wide toward the South, called in Irish Deswown, in Latin Desmonia, inhabited in ancient times by the Vellabri and Iberni, which in some copies are written Vterini. As for these Velabri, they may seeme so named of Aber, that is, salt water weshes for that they dwelt upon such Friths, divided one from another by many and those notable armes of the sea running betweene: whence also the Artabri and Cantabri in Spain had their denomination. Among these armes of the sea, three promontories beside Kerry aforesaid, with crooked & winding shoares runne out into the Southwest, and those the inhabitants termed in old time Hierwoun, that is, West-Mounster. The first of them, betweene Dingle bay and the river Mair, is named Clan-Car, and hath a castle built at Dunkeran by the Carews of England. In this dwelt Donel Mac Carty More, Lord of the Irish bloud: who in the yeere 1566, reseigned up unto Queene Elizabeths hands his possessions and lands, and tooke them againe of her, to hold the same after the English maner by fee, doing homage and fealtie. And at the same time he was created Baron of Valentia, (an Island adjoyning) and Earle of Clan-Car. A marin this tract of great name and power, a most deadly foe in times past of the Fitz-Giralds, who disseized his aunce stours, kings (as he stifly avoucheth) of Desmond, of their ancient seat and habitation. But long enjoied not he this honour: and having but one onely daughter legitimate, he matched her in mariage with Florence Mac Carty, and departed out of this life an aged man.

B

C

1565. Barons of Valentia. Earle Clan-Carr.

Beare.

O Swilivant.

The second promontorie enclosed within two baies, Maire and Bantre, is named Beare, standing for the most part upon hungrie gravell, and a leane stony soile: In which, live O Swillivant Beare, and O Swillivant Bantre, descended both of one and the same stocke, men of great nobilitie in their conntry.

D

O Mahon.

Notium Promontorium.

The river Iërnus.

The third is called Eraugh, lying betweene Bantre and Balatimore or Baltimore, a Bay or Creeke passing well knowne by reason of the abundance of Herings taken there: whereunto resorteth every yeere a great fleet of Spaniards and Portugals, even in the mids of winter to fish for Cods. In this the O Mahons by the beneficiall gift of M. Carew received faire lands and Lordships. This is it that Ptolomee calleth Notivm, that is, the South-Promontorie: at this day named Mussen-head, under which (as we may read in him) the river Iernvs is disgorged into the Ocean. But what name the said river now hath, in so great obscuritie I hardly dare divine, unlesse it be that which they call Maire, and runneth hard under Dunk-eran aforesaide. Neither wot I how to guesse at those people, whom the same Ptolomee placeth upon these promontories, seeing that according to the varietie of copies they have sundry names, as Iberni, Ovterni, Iberi and Ivverni, unlesse peradventure, like as their neighbours the Lvceni and Concani did, they flitted hither from among the Iberi of Spaine. Well this name of Desmond in the foregoing ages stretched farre and wide in this tract, even from the sea unto the river Shanon: and was called also South-Monster. The Fitz-Giralds descended out of the house of Kildare, having subdued the Irish, became Lords heere of very large and goodly possessions; & of them Maurice Fitz-Thomas (unto whom Tho. Carew heire unto the Signorie of Desmond, had before passed away his right of Desmond) was in the third yeere of King Edward the third created the first Earle of Desmond. Among whose posterity many there were, great men for their valour and wealth, whose credit also and reputation reached farre. But a badde name there went and still doth of Iames, who having excluded his nephew from the inheritance, entred himselfe by force vpon it, and imposed upon the people those most grievous tributes of Coyne, Livery, Cocherings, Bonaghty, &c. For the maintenance of Galloglasses and souldiers to spoile and harry the country. Which when his sonne Thomas exacted and gathered of the poore people, he was by the commandement of Iohn Tiptoft Deputie Lieutenant,

E

Earles of Desmond.

F

beheaded

A beheaded in the yeere 1467, and ſo ſuffered due puniſhment for his owne and his fathers wickedneſſe. Howbeit, when his children were reſtored againe, in their ofſpring this honor continued, and deſcended in right of inheritance unto Girald that Rebell, whom erewhile I named, who wilfully ouerthrew a moſt noble and potent family. And when he was attainted by Parlamentorie authority, Deſmond was adjudged and annexed to the Crowne land, reduced into the ranke of Counties, and a Sheriffe was ordained to governe it from yeere to yeere. Neverthelesse in the laſt rebellion the rebels erected a titularie Earle, and againſt him Queene Elizabeth granted the title of Earle of Deſmond vnto Iames Fitz-Girald ſonne to the foreſaid rebell, who ſhortly after died iſſueleſſe in the yeere 1601. They that heerein beare the greateſt name and moſt puiſſance, are of the race of the Giraldines, or Fitz-
B giralds, although they have for ſundry reſpects aſſumed unto themſelves divers ſurnames.

VODIÆ, and CORIONDI.

AFter the Iberi, there dwelt far in the country the OTAIAI, who are tearmed alſo VODIAE, and VDIAE: the footing of which name doth more expreſſely ſhew it ſelfe in Idou and Idouth, two ſmall territories: like as the name of the CORIONDI, in the County of Corke bordering upon them. Theſe nations inhabited the Counties
C of Corcke, Tipperary, Limiricke, & Waterford.

Vodiæ, a people.

Coriandi, a people.

COMITATVS CORCAGIENIS, commonly called THE COVNTY OF CORKE.

THe County of Corcke, which in old time was reputed a Kingdome, compriſed the whole tract along the ſea from Liſmore unto Saint Brend, where it affronteth Deſmond Weſtward; hath in the midland
D parts thereof Muskeray, a wild and woody conntry; wherein Cormac Mac-Teg is of great name: and toward the ſea coaſt Carbray, in which the Mac-Carties beare the moſt ſway. By the ſea ſide, the firſt place that we meet with is Roſſe, a road and port in times paſt well frequented; but now leſſe reſorted unto by reaſon of a bar of ſand. From thence with a narrow neck runneth out a biland, called the Old head of Kinſale, neere unto which the family of the Curcies flouriſhed in ancient times, famous for their wealth; deſcended from a brother of Iohn Curcy the Engliſh man that ſubdued Vlſter: and out of which there remaineth heere ſtill Curcie Baron of Ringrom: but at this day (this is the world) of weake and meane eſtate.
E After it, at the mouth of the river Bany, in a fertile ſoile and well wooded, ſtandeth Kinſale a very commodious port and a towne fortified with old walles: under which in the yeere 1601. the Kingdome of Ireland lay a bleeding, and put it was upon the hazard, as it were, of one caſt of a die, whether it ſhould be ſubject to England or Spaine: what time as the Iland was endangered both with foraine and domeſticall warre: and eight thouſand old trained ſouldiers under the conduct of Don Iohn D'-Aquila, had of a ſudden ſurpriſed and fortified it, confident upon the cenſures and excommunications of Pius the fifth, Gregorie the thirteene, and Clement the eight,
F Popes of Rome diſcharged like thunder bolts upon Queene Elizabeth, and preſuming confidently upon the aids of rebels who had ſent for them, under a goodly ſhew of reſtoring religion (which in this age and variance about religion is every where pretended for to maske and cloke moſt ungracious and wicked deſignes.) But Sir Charles Blunt Baron Montjoy, Lord Deputy, preſently belaied it round about both by ſea and land, albeit his ſouldiers were tired, toiled out, and the ſeaſon of the yeere moſt incommodious, as being midwinter: and withall, made head alſo againſt a ra-Muskeray. Carbray.

Spaniard landed in Ireland, and from thence driven.

ble of rebels whom the Earle of Tir-Oen, O Donel, Mac-Gwyre, and Mac-Mahound had raiſed and gotten thither; and with ſuch valor and fortitude ſo fortunately daunted and repreſſed their malapert boldneſſe, that with one victorie hee both had the towne with the Spaniards in it yeelded unto him, and alſo wreſted, as it were, out of the hands of all Ireland throughout: now, at the point of revolt (for they that deliberate are revolted already) both ſword and fire. On the other ſide of the river from Kinſale lieth Kerry-Wherry, a little territorie, of late belonging to the Earles of Deſmond. Iuſt before which, runneth the river, that Ptolemee calleth DAVRONA, Giraldus Cambrenſis, by changing only one letter, Sauranus and Saverenus, which iſſuing out of Muskerey mountaines, paſſeth along by that principall Citie of the Countie graced with an Epiſcopall dignity (whereunto is annexed the Biſhops See of Clon) which Giraldus nameth Corragia, Engliſhmen Corcke, and the naturall inhabitants of the country Coreach: encloſed within a circuit of walles in forme of an egge, with the river flowing round about it and running betweene, not paſſable through but by bridges, lying out in length, as it were, in one direct broad ſtreet and the ſame having a bridge over it: Howbeit, a prety towne of merchandiſe it is, well peopled, and much reſorted unto: but ſo beſet on every ſide with rebels neighbouring upon it, that they are faine to keepe alwaies a ſet watch and ward, as if they had continuall ſiege laid unto their Citie, and dare not marrie their daughters forth into the country, but make marriages one with another among themſelves; whereby all the Citizens are linked together in ſome degree or other of kindred and affinity. The report goeth that Brioc that moſt devout and holy man (who in that fruitfull age of Saints flouriſhed among the Gauls, and from whom the Diœceſe of Sanbrioch in Britaine Armorica commonly called S. Brieu tooke the name) was borne and breed heere?

Kerry wherry.

Beneath Corcke the river parting in twaine, enuironeth a large and very pleaſant Iland, over a gainſt the principall dwelling houſe of that moſt ancient and noble family of the Barries, which thereupon is called Barry Court. For, that family is deriued from Robert de Barry an Engliſhman, a perſonage of great worth, and renowned: who notwithſtanding choſe rather among the firſt to be chiefe indeed, than to ſeeme chiefe: who in the winning of Ireland receaued wounds and hurt, and the firſt man he was in Ireland that manned and brought the Hauke to hand. His poſterity by their long approued loialty, and martiall proeſſe deſerved to receive of the Kings of England, firſt the title of Baron Barry, afterwards of Vicount Butiphant, and for their great lands and wealth, gat among the people the ſurname Barry more, that is, Barry the Great. Be-low Barry-Court, the river Saueren, hard by Imokelly a faire poſſeſſion long ſince of the Earle of Deſmond, looſeth it ſelfe in the Ocean affording at the very mouth commodious harbours, and havens.

Vicount Butiphant.

As Saveren watereth the neither part of this Country, ſo Broodwater, called in times paſt Aven more, that is, The Great River, moiſteneth the upper: upon which inhabiteth the Noble familie of Roch, which beeing tranſplanted out of England hath growne up and proſpered here very well and now enjoieth the title of Vicount Fermoy. Certaine it is, that in the reigne of Edward the Second, they were entituled with the honour of Parliament-Barons, conſidering that George Roch was fined in two hundered markes, becauſe upon ſummons given hee came not to the Parliament at Dublin: where Broodwater (which for a good while runneth as a bound betweene this County and the County of Waterford) entring into the ſea maketh an haven, ſtandeth Yoghall; no great towne, but walled round about, built in faſhion ſomewhat long and divided in two partes: The upper, which is the greater part, ſtretching out Northward, hath a Church in it, and without the wall a little Abbay; which they call North Abbay: the nether part, reaching Southward, called the Baſe-towne, had alſo an Abbay, called South Abbay: and the commodiouſneſſe of the haven which hath a well fenſed Kay belonging unto it, and the fruitfullneſſe withall of the Country adjoining, draweth merchants unto it, ſo as it is well frequented and inhabited, yea and hath a Major for the head magiſtrate.

Baron Roch Vicount Fermoy.

Yoghall.

The Kay.

Thus

A Thus farre in these daies reacheth the County of Corke, which in times past, as I said even now was counted a Kingdome, and went farther, as which conteined within it Desmond also. This kingdome King Henry the Second gaue and granted unto Sir Robert Fitz-Stephen, and to Sir Miles de Cogan in these words, Know yee, that I haue granted the whole Kingdome of Corck, excepting the City and Cantred of the Ousmans, to hold, for them and their heires of me, and Iohn my son by the service of 60. knights. And the Carewes of England were heires to that Fitz-Stephen, from whom Sir George Carew now Baron Carew of Clopton lineally and directly deriveth his descent, who not long since was the Lord President of Mounster, and in some of these obscure Irish matters (which I willingly acknowledge) hath directed mee by the light of B his knowledge.

The kingdome of Corke.

THE COVNTY OF WATERFORD.

IN the East coast of the Ireland the County of WATERFORD extendeth it selfe between the rivers Broodwater, West: Shour East, The Ocean from the South, and the County of Tiperary Northward: A goodly country, as well for pleasant sight as fertile soile. Vpon Broodwater, so
C soone as it hath left Corck-county behinde it, Lismor sheweth it selfe, well knowne for an Episcopall See in it; where Christian sat sometime the Bishop, and Legat of Ireland about the yeere 1148. a Prelate that deserved passing well of the Irish Church, trained in his youth at Clareuall in the same cloisture with Saint Bernard and Pope Eugenius.

Lismor. Christian a Bishop.

But now, since that the possessions in manner all haue beene alienated, it is united unto the Bishoprick of Waterford. But neere unto the mouth of the said river, standeth Ardmor a little towne, so called because it standeth nere the sea, of which and of this river, Necham long since versified thus.

Vrbem Lismor pertransit flumen Auenmor,
Ardmor cernit vbi concitus æquor adit-

Ard-mor.

The river named Aven-Mor through Lismor towne doth runne, Ardmor him sees, and there apace to sea he speeds anon.

D The little territory adjoyning unto it, is called Dessee, the Lord whereof one of the family of Desmond, received in our remembrance the honourable title of Vicount Dessee, but for that hee had no issue male, it vanished with him in a short time. Not farre from hence standeth Dungarvan upon the sea, a towne well fortified with a castle, and as commodious by reason of the roade for ships: which togither with the Baronie of Dungarvan King Henry the Sixth bountifully granted unto Iohn Talbot Earle Shrewsbury: but afterward seeing it stood handsomely to that part of Mounster, which was to be brought under, and reduced to order, it was by authority of Parliament annexed to the Emperiall Crowne of the Kings of England for ever.

Dessee.

Dungarvan.

E Nere unto it flourished the Poërs of ancient nobility (from the very first time that Ireland was conquered by the English) & afterward advanced to the honorable title of the Barons of Curraghmore. But upon the banke of the river Shour, Waterford the chiefe and principal City of this County maketh a goodly shew. Concerning which, old Necham writeth in this wise.

Poërs, Barons of Curragh-more.

Waterford.

Suirius insignem gaudet dicere Waterford,
Aequoreis vndis associatur ibi.
The river Shour
Hath great desire, faire Waterford rich to make:
For, in this place, hee hies apace,
F His course with sea to take.

This City, which the Irish & Britans cal Porthlargy, the English Waterford, was built by certaine Pirats of Norway; and although it standeth in an aire somewhat grosse, and upon a soile not very fruitfull, and the streetes therein bee with the narrowest thrust close and pent togither; yet such is the convenience and commodiousnesse

of

of the haven, that for wealth, freſh trading, and frequent reſort, it is the ſecond City in all Ireland, and hath alwaies ſhewed a ſingular loialty, fidelity, and obedience to the Imperiall crowne of England. For ever ſince that Richard Earle of Pembrok wanne it, it hath continued ſo faithfull, and quietly diſpoſed, that it performed at all times ſafe and ſecure peace unto the Engliſh on their backes, whiles they went on in the conquering of Ireland. Whence it is, that the Kings of England haue granted unto it very many and thoſe right large Franchiſes, which King Henry the Seventh augmented, and confirmed, becauſe the citizens had demeaned themſelues moſt manfully and wiſely againſt that Mock-Prince Perkin Warbeck, who beeing a young man of baſe condition, by hoiſing up the full ſailes of impudence went about to mount up aloft unto the Imperiall diadem, whiles hee a meere ſuborned counterfeite tooke upon him to bee Richard Duke of Yorke, the ſecond ſonne of King Edward the Fourth.

Earle of Waterford.

This Countie of Waterford together with the citie, King Henry the ſixth gave unto Iohn Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury aforeſaid, by theſe words, which becauſe they teſtifie the valerous vertue of that moſt martiall knight, to the end that vertue might have the due honour thereto belonging, I thinke it woorth my labour, and haply any man elſe would deeme no leſſe, to put downe out of the Record, which may be Engliſhed thus: We therefore, ſaith the King, (after other eloquent termes penned by the Secretaries of that age, when there was but ſimple Latin) weighing with due conſideration the valiant proweſſe of our moſt deere and faithfull couſin, Iohn Earle of Shrewsbury and of Weisford, Lord Talbot, Furnivall, and Le Strange, ſufficiently tried and approoved even unto his old age in the warres aforeſaid, upon his body no leſſe bedeawed with ſweat many a time than embrued with bloud; and conſidering in what ſort our Countie and Citie of Waterford in our land of Ireland, the Caſtle, Seignorie, Honour, Land, and Baronie of Dungarvan, and all the Lordſhips, Lands, Honours and Baronies with the pertinences within the ſame County, which by forfaiture of Rebels, by reverſion or deceaſe of any perſon or perſons, by Eſchaet, or any other title of law, ought to come into our hands or our progenitours, or in the ſame to be: by reaſon of the hoſtile invaſions of our enemies and Rebels in thoſe parts, are become ſo deſolate, and lie ſo much expoſed to the ſpoiles of warre, wholly as it were waſted, that they turne vs to no profit but haue and doe redound oftentimes to our detriment: in this regard alſo, that by the ſame our Couſin our foreſaid Land of Ireland may the more valiantly be defended in thoſe partes againſt ſuch attempts and invaſions of our enemies and rebells, doe ordeine, promote and create him Earle of Waterford, togither with the ſtile, title, name, and honour thereto belonging. And becauſe, as the highneſſe of his ſtate and degree groweth, all things conſequently of neceſſity grow withall, upon our ſpeciall grace, certaine knowledge, and meere motion, and for the eſtate of the Earle himſelfe our Couſin, to bee mainteined in more decent manner, wee haue given, granted, and by theſe our letters confirmed unto the ſame Earle, the County aforeſaid, togither with the foreſaid ſtile, title, name, and honour of Earle of Waterford: yea and the foreſaid City, with the fee ferme of the ſame, the Caſtles, Lordſhips, Honours, Lands, and Baronies with the pertinences within the County: likewiſe all and every ſort the Maners, Hundreds, Wapentakes &c. all along the ſea coaſt, from the towne of Toghall unto Waterford City aforeſaid. To haue and to hold the foreſaid County of Waterford, the ſtile, title, name and honor of Earle of Waterford, and the City Waterford aforeſaid, the Caſtle, Seignory, Honour, Land and Barony of Dungarvan: and all other Lordſhips, Honours, Lands and Baronies, within the ſaid County: as alſo all and every the foreſaid manours, Hundreds &c. unto the aboue named Earle and the heires males iſſuing out of his body, (to haue I ſay and to hold) of us and our heires, by homage, fealty, and the ſervice of beeing and to bee our Seneſchall, or Steward and that his heires bee the Seneſchals of Ireland to us and our heires, throughout our whole land of Ireland, to doe; and that hee doe, and ought himſelfe to doe in the ſame his office, that which his prædeceſſours, Seneſchalls of England were wont to doe hitherto in that office, for ever. In witneſſe whereof &c.

Steward of Ireland.

But when as (whiles the Kings of England and the Nobles who had large and goodly

A goodly possessions in Ireland, were much busied and troubled along time; first with the warres of France, and afterward with civill warres at home) Ireland lay in manner neglected, and the State of English there falling still to decay, was now in manner come to nothing: but the Irishry, by occasion of the others absence grew exceeding mighty: for to recover these losses and to abate the powre of the Irish, it was ordeined and enacted, by the States of the Realme in Parliament; that the Earle of Shrewsbury. For his absence and careleſneſſe in mainteining of his owne, should surrender into the hands of the King and his successours the Earldome and towne of Waterford: the Duke of Norfolke likewise, the Baron Barkley, the heires generall of the Earle of Ormond, and all the Abbats, Priors &c. of England who had any Lands should surrender up all their possessions unto the king and his successors for the same absence and neglect. An. 28. Henr. 8.

B

THE COVNTY OF LIMERICK.

HItherto haue wee gone over the Maritime Counties of Mounſter: two there remaine yet behind that be in-lands: Limerick and Tipperary, which wee are now to goe unto. The county of LIMERICK lieth behinde that of Corcke Northward, betweene Kerry, the river Shanon and the county of Tipperary. A fertile country, and well peopled, but able to shew very few places of any good account and importance. The more Western part of it is called Conilagh; Wherein among the hils, Knock-Patric, that is, Patricks hill, mounteth up of a mighty height, & yeelding a pleasant prospect into the sea, beholdeth a farre off the river Shanon, falling with a wide and wast mouth into the Vergivian or Ocean: Under which hill a sept of Fitz-Giralds or Giraldines lived honourably a long time, untill that Thomas, called the Knight of the Valley, or of the Glin, when his graceleſſe sonne that wicked firebrand suffered death (for to set villages and houses a fire is by the lawes of Ireland high treason) because himselfe advised his sonne and set him on to enter into these lewde actions, by authority of the Parliament was disseized of his goodly and large possessions. The head-City of this County is Limerick, which, Shanon a most famous river by parting his chanell, compasseth round about.

C

Conilagh. Knoc-Patric.

Knight of the Valley. Anno. xi. Reg. Elizab.

D

The Irish call it Loumeagh, and the English Limirck. A Bishops See this is, and a very famous mart towne of Mounſter; first forcibly wonne by Reimundo the Groſſe an Englishman, the sonne of William Girald, afterwards burnt by Dunenald an Irish pety King of Thuetmond: and then in processe of time Philip Breos an Englishman was enfeoffed in it, and King Iohn fortified it with a castle. At this daie it is counted two townes. The upper (for so they call it) wherein stand the Cathedrall Church and the castle, hath two gates opening into it, and each of them a faire bridge unto it of stone, with bulwarkes and little draw bridges: the one leading into the West, the other into the East: unto which the nether towne joyneth, fenced with a wall, with a castle also thereto, and a foregate at the entrance into it. More into the East standeth Clan-William: so named of the Sept or kinred of William, who came out of the familie de Burgo (The Irish call it Burke) which dwelleth therein: and out of which house Queene Elizabeth conferred upon William, who slew Iames Fitz-Moris that tempestuous troubler of his country, the title and honour of Baron of Castel-Conel, (where Richard the Red Earle of Vlster had strengthned a castle) togither with a yeerely pension; as a reward of his valour, and to his comfort and meede for the losse of his sonnes slaine in that encounter.

E

Limirick.

Clan-William.

Baron of Castle Connell.

F

In the South part of this county is Kil-Mallo, the second towne next to Limirick, both for wealth and for number of inhabitants; enclosed also with a wall about it: Likewise Adare, a little towne in old time fortified, standing upon the same river; which streghtwaies emptieth it selfe into Shanon: hard unto which lieth Clan-Gibbon; the Lord whereof Iohn Fitz-Girald, called Iohn Oge Fitz-Iohn Fitz-Gibbon, & for the grey haires of his head, The white Knight, was attainted by Parliament for Clan-Gibbon.

for his wicked acts: but his ſonne through the clemency of Queene Elizabeth was A 13. Elizab. reſtored to his full eſtate. Of great note and name aboue the reſt in this tract, be-Fitz-Geralds. ſides thoſe Bourks Giraldines, and Fitz-Giralds, are the Laceys, Browns, Hurleys, Cha-ceys, Sapells, and Pourcells all of the Engliſh race: alſo the Mac-Shees, Mac-Brien O-Brian &c. of Iriſh breede.

THE COVNTY OF TIPPERARY.

THE County Tipperary Weſtward is bounded with Limirick-ſhire aforeſaid and the river Shanon: Eaſtward with the county of Kilkenny: toward the South with the Counties of Corck and Waterford; and North, with the territorie of the O Carolls. The B
South part is an exceeding fertile country, and yeeldeth corne abundantly, fourniſhed alſo ſufficiently with good & frequent buildings. The Weſt part of it, the river Glaſon paſſeth through,
Emeley. and watereth with along courſe: not farre from the banke whereof ſtandeth Emely or Awn, a Biſhoppes See, which hath beene in times paſt, by report, a City very populous, and of great reſort. Through the mideſt of it runneth the Noble river Shower or Swire, which ſtreaming out of Bladin Hill, ſpeeding through
The Lower Oſſerie. the lower Oſſerie (which by the bountifull favour of King Henry the Eighth entituleth the Butlers Earles of Oſſerie) and through Thurles which honoureth them with The County of Holy Croſſe of Tipperary. the dignity of Vicounts, firſt goeth unto Holy Croſſe, a right famous Abbay C in times paſt (whence the Country alſo adjoyning is commonly termed the County of the Holy Croſſe of Tipperary) and enjoieth certaine peculiar freedomes granted in honour of a peece of Chriſts Croſſe there ſometimes preſerved. The whole
Wood of the Croſſe. world (ſaith Saint Cyrill) is full of peeces of this wood: and yet by a continuall miracle (as Paulinus ſaith) it hath never beene impaired.

Thus were Chriſtians perſwaded in ancient times. And incredible it is, what a confluence there is even yet of people continually upon devotion hither, as unto an holy place. So firmely doth this nation perſevere in the old religion of their forefathers, which the careleſſe negligence of their prelates and ignorance together, D hath beyond al meaſure encreaſed, when as there be none to inſtruct and teach them
Caſſile. otherwiſe. Then Shour paſſeth beſide Caſsile, beautified with an Archiepiſcopal dignity by Eugenius the third, Biſhop of Rome, which had under it in times paſt many biſhops as Suffraganes: From thence runneth the river downe, ſprinkling Iſlands here
Baron de Cahir. and there in the way, a fetcheth a compaſſe about Cahir Caſtle: which out of the familie of the Butlers hath a Baron advanced to that dignity by Queene Elizabeth: but his ſonne ſtained himſelfe with perfidious diſloialty, and ſuffered for it,
Clomell. when as the Caſtle was by the Earle of Eſſex taken in the yeere 1599. and him ſelfe caſt into priſon. Then holding on his courſe by Clomell a mercate towne well frequented and fenſed, as alſo by Carick Mac-Griffin, ſituate upon a rocke, whereof al-Earle of Carick. ſo it tooke name (the habitation of the Earles of Ormund, which together with the E honor of Earle of Carick King Edward the Second granted unto Edmund Boteler or Ann. 9. Ed 2. Butler) it leaveth Tipperary behind it, and ſerveth inſteed of a limite to confine the Counties of Waterford and Kilkenny.

Thus much of the places in the South ſide of this County. As for that which lieth Ormond. Northward, leane it is, and very barraine, peaking up with high tops of mountaines, and twelue aboue the reſt, as it were, hudled up together, which they terme Phelemge Modona. This part in latin is called Ormondia, in Iriſh Orwowon, that is, The Front of Mounſter: in Engliſh Ormond, and moſt men name it very corruptly Wormewood. All Butlers Earles of Ormond. An. 2. E. 3. the name and glorie whereof ariſeth from the Earles, of whom there hath beene a F number ſince Iames Butler, upon whom and his heires King Edward the Third conferred this title of honour for terme of life, With the Roialty alſo and other liberties with Knights Fees in the County of Tipperary, the which his poſterity through the favour of Earle of Tipperary. the kings of England ſtill enjoy: whence this County is reputed Palatine, and hee of ſome was ſtiled Earle of Tipperary.

The

A The anceſtours of this Iames were in old time the Butlers (an honorable office) of Ireland: and from thence came this ſurname Le Boteler or Butler impoſed upon them: and certaine it is that they were linked in moſt neere alliance unto Saint Thomas Becket Archbiſhop of Canterburie (as who derive their deſcent from his ſiſter): and that after he was murdered, they were by King Henrie the ſecond removed into Ireland, who ſuppoſed that he ſhould disburden himſelfe of the worlds hatred for that fact, in caſe he advanced the Kinsfolke and Allies of the ſaid Thomas to rich revenewes, and high honors.

The firſt Earle of Ormond in this family, was Iames ſonne to Edmund Earle of Caricke, who wedded the daughter of Humfrey Bohun Earle of Hereford, whom hee
B had by a daughter of King Edward the firſt: And heere was his firſt ſtep unto this honor: Heereupon Iames his ſonne by this marriage, came to be commonly named among the people, The noble Earle. The fifth Earle of theſe, named Iames (that I may not ſtand particularly upon every one) received at the hands of King Henrie the ſixth the title and honor of Earle of Wiltſhire to him and to the heires of his body: who being Lord Deputy of Ireland, as divers others of this race, and Lord Treaſurer of England; ſtanding attainted by King Edward the Fourth was ſtreightwaies apprehended and beheaded: but his brethren Iohn and Thomas likewiſe, proclaimed traytors, kept themſelves cloſe out of the way: Iohn died at Ieruſalem without iſſue. Thomas through the ſpeciall favour of King Henrie the ſeventh, was in the end
C reſtored to his bloud: who departed this life in the yeere 1515. leaving behind him two daughters, Anne maried to Sir Iames de Sancto Leodegano, called commonly Sellenger: & Margaret, unto Sir William Bollein: who bare unto him Sir Thomas Bollein: whom King Henrie the Eighth created firſt Viſcount Rochfort, afterwards Earle of Wiltſhire and of Ormund, and afterward tooke Anne Bollein his daughter to wife; who brought forth for England, Queene Elizabeth, a Prince of moſt happy memorie and with all thankfulneſſe to bee alwaies remembred by the Engliſh and Iriſh. When Thomas Bollein was dead leaving no iſſue male, Sir Pierce Butler, a man of great powre in Ireland deſcended of the Earles race, whom Henrie the Eighth had beforetime created Earle of Oſſerie, attained alſo to the title of Ormund, and left the ſame unto his ſonne Iames, who had iſſue by the daughter and heire of Iames
D Earle of Deſmond a ſonne named Thomas Earle of Ormund now living, whoſe faith and loyalty hath beene paſſing well tried and approved in many troubles and dangerous affaires: who alſo hath joined in marriage his onely daughter unto Theobald Butler his brothers ſonne, whom King Iames hath advaunced lately to the title of Vicount Tullo.

Whereas ſome of the Iriſh and ſuch as would be thought worthy of credit, doe affirme, that certaine men in this tract are yeerely turned into Wolves; ſurely I ſuppoſe it be a meere fable: unleſſe happly through that malicious humour of predominant unkind Melancholie, they be poſſeſſed with the malady that the Phiſitians call
E Λυκανθρωπία, which raiſeth and engendreth ſuch like phantaſies, as that they imagine themſelves to be transformed into Wolves. Neither dare I otherwiſe affirme of thoſe metamorphiſed Lycaones in Liveland, concerning whom many writers deliver many and meruailous reports. Wolf-men. The diſeaſe Lycanthropia.

Thus farre as touching the Province of Mounſter, for the government whereof Queene Elizabeth, when ſhee bethought herſelfe moſt wiſely, politickly, and princely, which way ſhe might procure the good and wealth of Ireland, ordained a Lord Preſident to be the reformer and puniſher of inconſiderate raſhneſſe, the direCtour alſo and moderator of dutie, together with one Aſſiſtant, two learned Lawyers, and a Secretary: and the firſt Preſident that ſhe made, was Sir Warham, S. Le-
F ger Knight a man of great experience in Iriſh affaires.

LAGENIA

LAGENIA, or LEINSTER.

THe second part of Ireland, which the inhabitants call Leighnigh, the Britans Lein, the Englisſh Leinſter, and Latin writers Lagenia, and in the ancient lives of the Saints, Lagen, lieth all of it on the Sea ſide Eaſtward, bounded toward Mounſter with the river Neor (which notwithſtanding in many places it paſſeth beyond) on Connaght ſide for a good ſpace, with Shanon, & toward Meath, with the peculiar knowne limits. The Country is fertile and fruitfull, the aire moſt mild and temperate, and the people there inhabiting come neereſt of all other to the gentle diſpoſition and civill converſation of England their neighbour Iland, from whence they are for the moſt part deſcended. In Ptolemees daies therein were ſeated the BRIGANTES, MENAPII, CAVCI, and BLANI: and peradventure from theſe Blani, are derived and contracted, theſe later and moderne names Lein, Leinigh, and Leinſter. But now it is devided into the Counties of Kilkenny, Caterlogh, Queenes County, Kings County, Kildare, Weisford, and Dublin: to ſay nothing of Wicklo, and Fernes which either be already, or elſe are to be laid thereto.

BRIGANTES, or BIRGANTES.

THe BRIGANTES ſeeme to have planted themſelves betweene the mouth of the river and the confluents of Neor and Barrow, which in Ptolemee is called BRIGVS. Now becauſe there was an ancient Citie of the Brigantes in Spaine, named BRIGANTIA, Florianus del Campo, laboureth tooth & nail to fetch theſe BRIGANTES out of his own country Spain. But if ſuch a conjecture may take place, others might with as great probability dreive them from the Brigantes of Britaine, a nation both nere and alſo exceeding populous. But, if that be true, which I find in certaine Copies, that this people were called BIRGANTES, both hee and the other have miſſed the marke: For, that theſe tooke their denomination of the river BIRGVS, about which they doe inhabite, the very name is almoſt ſufficient to perſwadeus. Theſe BRIGANTES, or BIRGANTES, whether you will, dwelt in the Counties of Kilkenny, Oſſerie and Caterlogh, watered all with the river BIRGVS.

THE COVNTY OF KILKENNY.

County of Kilkenny.

THe County of Kilkenny is bounded Weſt, with the County of Tipperarie: Eaſt, with the counties of Weisford and Caterlogh: South, with the County of Waterford. North, with Queenes County, and Northweſt, with Vpper Oſſerie. A country that with townes and caſtles on euery ſide maketh a very goodly ſhew, and for plenty of all things ſurpaſſeth the reſt. Neere unto Oſſerie the mighty and huge mountaines Sleiew Bloemy, which Giraldus calleth Bladinæ Montes, with their riſing tops mount up to a wonderfull heigth: out of the bowels whereof, as from their mothers wombe, iſſue the rivers, Shour aforenamed, Neor, and Barrow: which running downe in ſeverall chanels, before they enter into the Ocean, joine hand in hand altogether, whereupon they in old time tearmed them the Three Siſters.

Vpper-Oſſerie. Baron of upper Oſſery.

The Neor commonly called alſo Neure, runneth in maner through the mids of Kilkenny County: and when it is paſſed with a forward courſe by the Vpper Oſſerie, (the firſt Baron wherof was Barnabas Fitz-Patricke promoted to that honor by King Edward the Sixth) and hath watered many fortreſſes on both ſides, floweth beſide Kilkenny, which is as much to ſay, as the Cell or Church of Canic; who for the ſanctimonie of his ſolitarie life in this country, was highly renowned: A proper, faire, and wealthy

A wealthy Burrough towne this is, and farre excelling all other midland Boroughes in this Iland: Divided into the Iriſh towne and the Engliſh towne. The Iriſh towne is, as it were, the Suburbs, and hath in it the ſaid Canickes Church, which both gave name unto it, and now alſo affourdeth a See unto the Biſhop of Oſſerie. But the Engliſh towne is nothing ſo ancient, built, as I haue red, by Ranulph the Third Earle of Cheſter, and fortified with a wall on the Weſt ſide, by Robert Talbot a Nobleman, and with a caſtle, by the Butlers. And ſure it is, that in the diviſion of Lands betweene the daughters of William Mareſchal Earle of Penbroch, it fell unto the Third daughter, whom Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloceſter married.

B Somewhat beneath the ſame Neore, ſtandeth a little walled towne, named in Engliſh Thomas Towne: in Iriſh, Bala-Mac-Andan, that is, The towne of Antonies ſonne: For, it tooke both names of the Founder Thomas Fitz-Anthonie, an Engliſh man, who flouriſhed under King Henry the Third, whoſe heires are yet acknowledged the Lords thereof. Beneath this towne the river Callan voideth his ſtreame into Neore: upon which ſtandeth the third Burrough or Incorporate towne of this County, bearing the ſame name Callan. Like as Iniſe-Teog, which is the fourth. Thomas Towne. Callan. Inis Teog.

The familie of Butlers hath ſpred and branched farre and wide throughout this County, men that with much honour bare a great port, and for their worth and vertues were adourned with the titles of Earles of Carick Ormund, Wiltſhire in England, C and of Oſſerie, as is before ſaid: and at this day there remaine of their line, beſide the Earle of Ormund: Vicount Thurles, and Knight of the Order of Saint George, Vicount Montgarret, Vicount Tullo, The Barons of Dunboyn and of Cahyr, a goodly race alſo and progenie of Noble Gentlemen. The reſt of the Gentry in this Tract that are of better birth and parentage bee likewiſe of Engliſh deſcent, as the Graces, Walſhes, Lovells, Foreſters, Shortels, Blanch-felds, or Blanchevelſtons, Drilands, Comerfords &c.

THE COVNTY OF CATERLOGH.

D THe County of Caterlogh, by contraction Carlogh, toward the Sunne riſing adjoineth to the County of Kilkenny, wholy, in manner, ſituate betweene the rivers Barrow and Slane; of a fertile ſoile and ſhaded well with woods; hath two townes in it of better note and importance than the reſt, both ſtanding upon the Weſt banke of Barrow: namely Caterlogh, which Leonel Duke of Clarence beganne to wall; and Bellingham a moſt renowned Lord Deputie fortified with a caſtle; Alſo Leighlin, called in Latine Lechlinia, where there was an Epiſcopall Chaire, now vnited to the See of Fernes. Theſe townes haue both of them their wards or garizons, and Conſtables over them. And whereas the greateſt part of this County belonged in right of Inheritance unto the Howards Dukes of Norfolke (who by the Earles of Warren drew their deſcent from the eldeſt E daughter of William Mareſchall Earle of Penbroch) King Henry the eight by a generall conſent of the States of the Realme tooke unto himſelfe, both from them and alſo from other Noblemen, yea and from Monaſteries in England, all their lands and poſſeſſions in Ireland; for that the Lords thereof by neglecting in their abſence their owne private eſtates careleſly, brought therewith the publicke ſtate into danger, as is already ſhewed. The Statute of Abſenties.

From hence Barrow paſſeth through the Baronie Ydron, which by right belonged to the Carews, for Sir Iohn Carew an Engliſh knight, died ſeiſed thereof in the time of King Edward the Third: and which, Peter Carew within our memorie recove- F red as it were by a write of remitter, after it had beene unlawfully vſurped, and a-long time in the occupation of unjuſt deteiners. Barony Ydron.

Vpon the river Slane appeereth Tullo, memorable in this regard, that King Iames hath lately honoured Theobald Butler, the Earle of Ormunds brothers ſonne, with the title of Vicount Tullo. The Cavanaghs dwell a great many of them every way heere abouts, who beeing deſcended from Dovenald a younger ſonne, as they ſay, the Baſtard of Dermot the laſt King of Leinſter, are ſpred and branched out into a Cavanaghs.

very great ſept, or linage, a Warlicke generation renowned for their good horſmanſhip, and who as yet, though they bee exceeding poore beare themſelues in ſpirite anſwerable to their ancient Nobility. But being at deadly feud amongſt themſelues, for I wote not what manſlaughters, which many yeeres agoe they committed one upon another, they daily worke their owne miſchiefe by mutual wrongs & hurts. When as the Engliſh had ſet ſome of theſe to overſee and manage the poſſeſſions they had in this part of Ireland, about King Edward the Seconds time, they by little and little uſurped the whole country to themſelues, and aſſumed the name of O Mores, and taking into their ſocietie the Toles and Brenes, by little and little diſſeized the Engliſh of all the territorie betweene Caterlogh, and the Iriſh ſea.

O More. Out of a pamphlet of Patrick Finglas.

Among theſe is the confluence of Neore and Barrow, which after they haue travailed in a ioint ſtreame ſome few miles from hence in one chanell, preſent both their name, and their waters unto their eldeſt ſiſter the Shour, which ſtreightwaies is ſwallowed up at a mouth full of rockes within the gulfe of the Ocean: where on the left hand their ſhooteth out a little promontory with a narrow necke, that ſheweth a prety high towre unto the ſailers erected by the merchants of Roſſe, what time they were in their proſperity, for their direction, and ſafer arrivall at the rivers mouth.

Hooke-Towre.

QVEENES COVNTIE.

Leaſe.

ABoue Caterlogh toward the Northweſt there ſpeadeth out a little country full of woods and bogges, named, in Iriſh Leaſe, and QVEENES County in Engliſh; which Queene Mary ordeined to be a County, by commiſſion giuen unto Thomas Ratcliff Earle of Suſſex then Lord Deputy, who reduced it into the termes of civill order and government: whence it is, that the chiefe towne thereof is called Mary-Burgh: where certaine garizon ſouldiors with their Seneſchall keepe ward, and haue much a doe to defend themſelues againſt the O Mores (who beare themſelues as the ancient Lords thereof) againſt Mac-Gilpatric, the O Dempſies and others: miſcheiuous and tumultuous kind of people, who daily practiſe and plot all they can to annoy the Engliſh, and to ſhake off the yoke of Lawes. For to ſubdue this wilde and hoſtile part of the country, at the firſt entry of the Engliſh thither, Meilere was ſent: For whom, Hugh Lacy governour of Ireland erected one Caſtle at Tahmelio, like as a ſecond at Obowy, a third likewiſe upon the river Barrow, and a fourth at Norrach. But among the reſt, hee fortified Donemaws, an ancient Caſtle, ſtanding in the moſt plentifull part of the territory, which came hereditarily unto the Breoſes Lords of Brecknocke by Eua the younger daughter of William Mareſchall Earle of Penbroch, and what way as Barrow, which riſing out of Slew Blomey hilles Weſtward, runneth ſolitarie alone amongſt the woods, hee viſiteth that ancient RHEBA, mentioned by Ptolomee, which keeping the name ſtill entire is called at this day Rheban: but in ſteed of a city it is altogether, as one ſaith πόλις ἄπολις, that is, A City Cityleſſe, or The remains of that which was a City: even a few little cotages with a fortreſſe: Notwithſtanding it giveth the title of a Baronet unto that Nobleman Nicholas of Saint Michael, the Lord thereof, who is commonly called, The Baronet of Rheban.

Mary Burgh.

Donemaws.

Rheba.

Baronet of Rheban.

KINGS COVNTY.

LIke as the Queenes County aforeſaid, was ſo named in honor of Queene Mary, ſo the territory bordering next unto it Northward, divided with Barrow running betweene, and called in times paſt Offaly, was in honor of Philip King of Spaine her husband termed Kings County, and the principall towne in it Philips towne: where is placed a Seneſchall with a ward: and diverſe Gentlemen of Engliſh bloud are heere planted, namely the Warrens, Her-berts, Colbeis, Mores, and Leiceſters: amongſt the Iriſh ſepts of O Conor, unto whom a great part hereof in old time belonged; Mac Coghlan, Offalie.

Philips towne.

A Coghlan, O Maily, Fox, and others ſtand ſtoutly in defence of the lands wonne by their anceſtours, and left unto them. Now theſe naturall Iriſh inhabitants grumble and complaine, that their livings and patrimonies have beene taken from them, and no other lands aſſigned, and ſet out for them to live in: Hence it is, that taking hold of every occaſion to make uprores, they put the Engliſh dwelling among them to much trouble ever & anon: yea and oftentimes in revengefull minds feſtered and poiſoned with hoſtile hatred, they breake out furiouſly into open, and actuall rebellions.

THE COVNTY OF KILDAR.

B OVer againſt theſe, all along Eaſtward, affronteth the County of Kildar a moſt rich and plentifull country: concerning the paſtures whereof Giraldus Cambrenſis vſeth theſe verſes of Virgill.

Et quantum longis carpunt armenta diebus,
Exiguâ tantum gelidus ros nocte reponit.
And looke how much when daies are long the beaſts by grazing eate,
So much cold dewes make good againe by night when t'is not great.

Klidar. Saint Brigid.

C The chiefe and head towne of this ſhire is Kildar, much honored and graced in the firſt infancie of the Iriſh Church, by reaſon of Saint Brigid a Virgine right venerable and highly eſteemed of for her devotion and virginity (I meane not that Brigid which about 240. yeeres agoe erected that order of the ſiſters or Nunnes of Saint Brigid: namely that within one monaſterie, both Monkes and maidens ſhould live, divided a ſunder by walles, and ſuffered onely one to ſee another) but an other Brigid of greater antiquity by farre, as who was a Diſciple of Saint Patricke, of great fame and renowne throughout Ireland, England, and Scotland. Whoſe miracles and fire never going out, but kept by Nunnes, as it were, in that ſecret Sanctuary of Veſta, and of the aſhes that never encreaſe, are mentioned by writers. This Kildar is adorned with an Epiſcopall See, named in the Popes letters in old time, Epiſcopatus Darenſis. After the entrance of the Engliſh into Ireland it was the habitation
D of Richard Earle of Penbroch, then of William Mareſchall his ſonne in law, that married his daughter, Earle of Penbroch likewiſe: by whoſe fourth daughter Sibyll, it came to William Ferrars Earle of Derby, and by his daughter likewiſe begotten of her, unto William Lord Veſcy: Whoſe ſonne William Veſcy, Lord chiefe Iuſtice of Ireland, ſtanding in tearmes of diſfauour and diſgrace with King Edward the Firſt, for certaine quarrels arriſing betweene him & Iohn the ſonne of Thomas Fitz-Girald, and being bereft of his onely ſonne lawfully begotten, granted & ſurrendred Kildare and other his lands in Ireland unto the King, ſo that he might enfeoffe his baſe ſonne
E ſurnamed De Kildare, in his other lands in England. And a little while after, the ſaid Iohn, ſonne of Thomas Fitz-Girald, whoſe anceſtours (deſcended from Girald Windeſor, Caſtellan of Penbroch) had with paſſing great valour performed moſt painefull ſervice in the conqueſt of this Iland, was by Edward the ſecond King of England endowed with the Caſtle and Towne of Kildar, together with the title and name of Earle of Kildare. Ch. 9. Ed 2. N. 12.

Theſe Fitz-Giralds, or as they now tearme them the Giraldines, are a right noble family, and for their exploits highly renowned: by whoſe valour, as one ſaid, The Engliſhmen both kept the ſea coaſts of Wales, and alſo forced and wonne the walles of Ire-
F land. And verily this houſe of Kildare flouriſhed along time without taint of honor and name (as which never bare armes againſt their Prince) untill that Thomas Fitz-Girald the ſonne of Girald Fitz-Girald Earle of Kildare, and Lord Deputie of Ireland under King Henrie the Eighth, hearing that his father ſent for into England, and accuſed for miſgoverning Ireland, was put to death; upon this light and falſe rumour, unadviſedly and raſhly carried away with the heat of youth, put himſelfe into armes againſt Prince and Country, ſollicited the Emperour Charles the fifth to A enter and ſeize upon Ireland, waſted the land farre and neere with fire and ſword, laid ſiege to Dublin, and killed the Archbiſhop thereof: For which outrages, ſhortly after he with five of his unkles were hanged, when his father for very ſorrow was dead before. Howbeit Queene Marie reſtored the family unto their bloud and full eſtate, when ſhe advanced Girald brother unto the aforeſaid Thomas to be Earle of Kildare and Baron of Offalie: He ended this life about the yeere 1685. his eldeſt ſon Girald died before his father leaving one only daughter maried to Sir Robert Digby: Henrie his ſecond ſonne ſucceeded, who when he had by his wife L. Francis daughter to Charles Earl of Nottingham only two daughters, William the third ſon ſucceeded in the Earledome, who was drowned in paſſing into Ireland in the yeere B 1599. having no iſſue. And then the title of Earle of Kildare came to Girald Fitz-Girald ſonne to Edward their Vnckle, who was reſtored to his bloud in linage to make title by deſcent lineall or collaterall from his father and brother, and all his anceſtours, any attaindour or corruption of bloud to the contrary notwithſtanding. There be alſo in this County theſe places of better note than the reſt; Naas a mercate towne, Athie upon the river Barrow: Mainoth, a Caſtle belonging to the Earls of Kildare, and a towne unto which King Edward the firſt, in favour of Girald Fitz-Moris granted a mercate and Faire: Caſtle Martin, the chiefe ſeat of the family of Fitz-Euſtace: which deſcending from the Poers in the County of Waterford, for Barons Fitz-Euſtace. Pat. 2. Ed. 4. their valour received the honor of a Parliament-Barons, beſtowed upon Rowland C

Fitz-Euſtace by King Edward the fourth, together with the Manour of Port-leſter, and the title of Vicount Baltinglas, at the hands of King Henrie the eighth: which dignities with a faire patrimonie Rowland Fitz-Euſtace, ſeduced by the religious prætext into rebellion, and flying his country loſt by attaindour under Queene Elizabeth. The families heere remaining, beſides the Giraldines, that be of higher birth above others, fetch their deſcent alſo out of England, namely the Ougans, De-la-Hides, Ailmers, Walſhes, Boiſels, Whites, Suttons &c. As for the Giants daunce, which they talke of that Merlin by art magicke tranſlated out of this territorie unto Salisbury plaine, as alſo of that moſt bloudy battaile which ſhall be one day, betweene the Engliſh and the Iriſh at Molleaghmaſt, I willingly leave unto the credulous lo- D vers of fabulous antiquity, and the vaine beleevers of propheſies. For, my purpoſe is not, to give fond tales the telling. Theſe be the midland Counties of Leinſter, now are we to goe unto thoſe by the Sea ſide.

THE COVNTY OF WEISFORD.

BEneath that mouth, at which, Barrow, Neore, and Shoure, the ſiſter-like rivers, having embraced one another and joined hands, are laid up in the Ocean, there ſheweth it ſelfe Eaſtward in a promontorie where the ſhore fetcheth a compaſſe round, the County of Weisford E or Wexford. In Iriſh, County Reogh, where Ptolomee in times paſt placed the MENAPII. That theſe Menapians came hither from the Menapij, a nation in low Germanie, that dwelt by the Sea coaſts, the name doth after a ſort implie. But whether that Carauſius were of this or that nation, who taking upon him the imperiall purple robe ſeized upon Britaine againſt the Emperour Diocleſian, I leaue to others. For, Aurelius Victor calleth him a Citizen of Menapia, and the Citie Carauſius. Menapia is placed by the Geographers not in thoſe Low-countries of Germanie but in Ireland. In this County, upon the river Barrow, there flouriſhed ſometimes Roſſe, a great Citie, well traded by merchants and peopled with inhabitants, fenſed with a wall of great compaſſe by Iſabell daughter to the Earle Richard Strongbow: and F that is the only monument which now it ſheweth. For, by reaſon of diſcord & home broiles betweene the Citizens and the religious orders, it is a good while ſince brought in maner to nothing.

More Eaſt, Duncannon, a Caſtle with a gariſon, ſtandeth over the river, ſo as that it

A it is able to command the river, that no ships should passe either to Waterford, or to Rosse: and therefore it was thought good pollicie, to fortifie this place when the Spaniards hovered and gaped for Ireland, in the yeere 1588. From thence, at the very mouth of the river, there runneth out a narrow necke of land, which presenteth unto the sailers an high Turret, erected by the Citizens of Rosse, when they were in flourishing estate, that they might more safely enter into the rivers mouth. A little from hence standeth Tintern, upon the shore with many winding creekes; where William Mareschal Earle of Penbroch founded a notable Abbay, and called it De Voto, for that he had vowed to God, to erect an Abbay, when he was tossed in a sore and B dangerous tempest: and being after shipwracke cast up aland in this place, performed it heere according to his vow. Tintern Monasterie.

This very Promontorie Ptolemee calleth HIERON, that is, Holy: and in the same signification, I would make no doubt, but the inhabitants also called it. For, the utmost towne thereof, at which the English men landed, & set first foote in this Iland, they named in their native language Banna, which soundeth all one with Holy. Hieron a Promontorie

From this Holy point, the shore turning full upon the East, runneth forth along Northward; over against which there lie flats and shallowes in the sea that indanger many a ship, which the Mariners call The Grounds. In this place Ptolemee setteth the river MODONA, & at the mouth thereof the Citie MENAPIA which are so stript C out of their names, that I am out of all hope in so great darkenesse to discover any twy-light of the truth. But seeing there is one onely river that voideth it selfe in this place, which cutteth this County as it were just in the mids, and is now called Slane: seeing also at the very mouth thereof, where it maketh a Poole, there is a towne by a Germane name called Weisford, the Head place of the whole County, I may the more boldly conjecture, that Slane was that MODONA, and Weisford, MENAPA; and so much the rather, because this name is of a later date, to wit a meere German, and given unto it by those Germans, whom the Irish tearme Oustmans. This towne is, for bigenesse inferiour to many, but as memorable as any: because it was the first in all Ireland, that when Fitz-Stephan a most valiant Captaine assaulted it, yeelded D it selfe unto the protection of the English; and became a Colonie of the English: Whence this whole territorie is passing well peopled with English: who to this very day use the ancient Englishmens apparell and their language, yet so, as that they haue a certaine kind of mungrell speech betweene English and Irish. Dermot, who first drew the Englishmen over into Ireland, granted this and the territorie lying to it, unto Fitz-Stephan for ever: who beganne a Burgh hard by at Carricke: and albeit the place were strong by naturall situation, yet he helped it by art. But when as the said Fitz-Stephan had surrendred up his right into the hands of King Henrie the Second, he made it over to Richard Earle of Penbroch, that he should hold it in Fee from him and the Kings of England as superiour Lords. From whom by the Earles E Mareschals, the Valences of the Lusignian line in France, and the Hastings, it descended to the Greies Lords of Ruthin, who commonly in ancient Charters are named Lords of Weisford: although in the reigne of King Henrie the Sixth, Iohn Talbot is once called in the Records Earle of Shrewsburie and of Weisford. Touching this river, take with you this verse, such an one as it is, of Nechams making.

Ditat Enisfortum, flumen quod Slana vocatur,
Hunc cernit Weisford se sociare sibi.
The river which is called Slane enricheth Enisfort,
And this said river, Weisford sees, gladly with him to sort.

F For, Enisfort a Burrough or Incorporate-towne, is seated upon it. More inward by the same rivers side, yee have Fernes knowen onely for the dignity of an Episcopal See in it; which in old time the Giraldines fortified with a Castle. Hard by, but beyond the river Slane, dwell the Cavenaghes, Donels, Montaghs and O Moores, Irishmen of a stirring and tumultuous spirit: and among them the Sinottes, Roches, and Peppards, Englishmen: On this side Slane, the men of greatest name be the Vicounts Mont-Garret: of whom the first was Edmund Butler a younger sonne of Pierce Earle of Ormund, adorned with that title by Edward the Sixth, and many more of the same surname; the Devereuxes, Staffords, Chevers, Whites, Forlongs, Fitz-Harris, Browns, Hores, Haies, Cods, Maylers, all of the English race and bloud, like as be most of the common people. A CAVCI.

Cauci.

THe CAVCI, who were likewise a people inhabiting the Sea coast of Germany, seated themselves next unto the Menapij, but not so farre distant a sunder as those in Germany. Their country lying upon the B sea was that which the O Tooles and O Birns, families of Irishry dwell in, men fed, and maintained by wickednesse and bloudshed, impatient of rest and quietnesse; and who presuming upon the strength of their holds and fastnesses carry an obstinate minde against all lawes, and implacable hatred to English. For, the repressing of whose audacious outrage, and to strengthen the authority of lawes, there hath beene serious consultation had by most prudent and politike persons in the yeere 1578. that these small territories should be reduced into the forme of a County: and set out they were into six Baronies within certaine appointed limits, which should make the County of Wicklo or Arcklo. For, a place this is of greatest name, and the Earles of Ormonds Castle, who write themselves a- C mong other honorable titles in their stile, Lords of Arcklo: under which Castle, that river which Ptolomee calleth OVOCA falleth into the sea making a creeke, and as Giraldus Cambrensis writeth, The nature of this river is such, that as well when the sea floweth as when it ebbeth in this Creeke it retaineth still the tast of the naturall freshnesse, saving his owne water entier and void of all brackishnesse, even as farre as to the maine sea.

O Tooles.
O Birns.
Arklo.

COMITATVS DVBLINIENSIS.

The County of Diuelin.

BEyond the CAVCI inhabited the EBLANI; where now lieth the D County of DVBLIN or DIVELIN: which on the East side is wholy washed with the Irish Sea: on the West, bounded with the county of Kildare: on the South joyning to the little territories of the O Tooles and O Birns and those which they tearme the Glinnes, and limited Northward with the County of Meath and Nanny, a little river: The soile thereof bringeth forth corne abundantly, and yeeldeth grasse and fodder right plenteously, besides it is well stored with all sorts of living creatures that are gotten by hunting and hauking for the table: but so destitute, for the greatest part, of woods that in most places they use a clammy kinde of fat turfe, or Sea-cole out of England, for their fewell. In the South part thereof, which is lesse inhabited and more uncivill, and riseth up heere and there with an hilly ridge, full enough of woods, and under which lie hollow vallies shaded with trees, which they call Glynnes; every place is sore annoied with the two pernicious & mischievous Septs or Kinreds of the O Tooles and the O Birnes. Among these Glynnes, appeareth the Bishopricke of Glandilaw, but utterly desolate, ever since it was annexed to the Archbishoprike of Divelin. All this county besides, is passing well replenished with inhabitants and townes, and for welthy port, and a certaine peculier fineneſse and neatnesse that they use, surpasseth all other parts of Ireland, and is divided into fiue distinct Baronies, namely Rath down, New castle, Castle-Knoc, Cowloc, and Bal-rodry, which notwithstanding I am not able to goe through as I would, for that their bounds are unknown to mee.

Glynnes.

First therefore will I runne along the sea coast only, and from thence, as the courses of the rivers lead me, survey the more in-land places: for, there is no part of this County twenty miles from the shore. To beginne then at the South side, the first place that sheweth it selfe upon this coast is Wicklo: where there standeth over the Wicklo lately made a county, 1606.

narrow

A narrow haven a rocke, enclosed within a strong wall, in steed of a castle, over which, as divers other Castles besides of this kingdome, there can none by authority of Parliament bee set as Constable, but an Englishman borne, because to the hurt of the State, the Irish men that were Constables, had both defended the same badly, and also by a certaine connivency suffered the prisoners to make escapes. As touching this haven, harken what Giraldus saith, who termeth it Winchiligillo. There is an haven at Winchiligillo, on that side of Ireland where it lieth neerer unto Wales; that ordinarily and usually at every ebbe of the sea receiveth waters flowing into it: and againe at every returne of tide, dischargeth and voideth the said water which it entertei-
B ned; and when as the sea in the ebbe hath now by the going away of the tide forsaken the Creeke, yet the river that runneth in, by every chinke and winding cranke, becommeth bitter and salt, with continuall brackishnesse.

Then, from the top of an hill, New-castle looketh into the sea, and seeth the shelues of sand, which they call The Grounds lying opposite a great way in length: Howbeit, betweene them and the shore, it is reported to bee seven fathom deepe of water. A little higher, where the riveret Bray commeth into the sea, appeareth Old-Court the possessions of the Walshes of Carryckmain, who as they are of ancient stocke and gentry, so their familie hath shot forth many branches in this tract. Next unto it is Powers or Poërs-Court, belonging in times past, as appeereth by the name, unto the Poërs: a large and great castle, untill that Tirlaugh O Toole, after hee had revolted and rebelled, undermined and overthrew it. From Bray mouth the shore
C for to let in a creeke bendeth and windeth it selfe inward, and at the very bent of the elbow, lieth a little Island called Saint Benets, belonging to the Archbishop of Divelin.

The Grounds.

Old Court.

Poërs Court.

This Creeke or Bay is called Dublin Haven, into which Liffy the noblest river of this county out-powreth his streame: who albeit his spring head where hee riseth, bee but fifteene miles from his mouth; yet with so many winding crankes hee fetcheth such a compasse; that first hee turneth into the South by Saint Patrickes land; then Westward, afterwards North; watering the county of Kildare and at length into the East by Castle-Knoc, the Baronie in times past of the Tirills, whose inheritance by the females was devolved upon other, about the yeere 1370. and so by Kilmainam,
D an house in old time of Saint Iohns Knights of Ierusalem, now converted to a retyring place of the L. L. Deputies. This Liffy doubtlesse is mentioned by Ptolomee but through careleснesse of the transcribers banished out of his owne due place. For, the river LIBNIVS is set downe in the Copies of Ptolomee at the very same latitude or elevation of the Pole, in the other part of the Iland, where there is no such river at all: but let him if it please you by a writ of recovery, returne out of exile now to his owne City EBLANA, from whence unjustly hee hath been for a time alienated: and take withall, if you thinke good these verses of Necham as touching this river.

Liffy river which Giraldcalleth Aven-Liff.

Visere Castle-Knoc non dedignatur * Aven-Liff,
E Istum Dublini suscipit unda maris.
To see and visite Castle-Knock, Liffi doth not disdeine,
At Dublin ready is the sea, this streame to enterteine.

*That is, the river Liff.

For, seated it is seven miles from his mouth: which, alone Fame may celebrate for all the cities of Ireland. This is that very city, which Ptolomee called EBLANA, we DIVELIN, the Latine writers Dublinium and Dublinia: the Welsh Britans Dinas Dulin, the English Saxons in times past Duplin and the Irish Bala-cleigh, that is, The towne upon hurdles: for, men say when it was built, the foundation was laied upon Hurdles, the place was so fennish and moorish: like as Hispalis or Sivill in Spaine,
F which Isidore reporteth to haue beene so named, because it stood in a marish ground upon piles and stakes deepely pitched into the earth. For the antiquity of Dublin, I finde no certeinty: but that very ancient it is, the authority of Ptolomee perswadeth mee to thinke. Saxo Grammaticus writeth, how it was pitifully rent and dismembred in the Danish warres: afterwards it came under the subjection of Eadgar King of England, which his Charter before mentioned confirmeth wherein hee calleth it

Eblana. Dublin.

the

the most Noble City of Ireland. Then the Norwegians possessed themselves of it; Whence in the life of Gryffith Ap Cynan Prince of Wales; we read, that Harald of Norway when he had subdued the greatest part of Ireland, built Develin. This may seeme to be that Harald Harfager, that is, With the faire lockes or tresses who was the first King of Norway, whose line in descent goeth thus in the life of Gryffith: Harold begat a sonne named Auloed: Auloed begat another Auloed, he had a sonne named Sitric King of Develin: Sitric he begat Auloed; whose daughter Racwella was mother to Gryffith Ap Cynan borne at Dublin, whiles Tirlough reigned in Ireland. But this is extravagant. Develin at length when the English first arrived in Ireland, yeelded unto their valour, and by them was manfully defended, when Ausculph Prince of the Dublinians, and afterwards Gottred King of the Isles fiercely on every side assaulted it: within a while after a Colony of Bristow-men was deduced hither, unto whom King Henry the second granted this City (happily at that time dispeopled) for to inhabite, with all the Franchises and free Customes, which the men of Bristow have, and that by those very words which I have alleaged. Since which time it hath flourished every day, more and more, and in many tumultuous times and hard streights given notable proofe of most faithfull loyalty to the Crowne of England.

Who also is named Ablocus. Aulafus and Olavus.

This is the roiall City and seat of Ireland, a famous towne for Merchandize, the chiefe Court of Iustice, in munition strong, in buildings gorgeous, in Citizens populous. An old writer calleth it, a City, in regard of the people noble, of the site most pleasant, by reason of the sea and river meeting together, rich and plentifull in fish: For trafficke famous; for the green plaine delightfull and lovely; beset with woods of mast-bearing trees, environed about with Parkes harbouring Deere. And William of Newborrow of it writeth thus, Divelin a maritime citie, is the mother city of all Ireland, having to it a haven passing wel frequented, for trafficke and entercourse of Merchants matchable with our London. Seated it is in a right delectable and holesome place: for to the South yee have hils mounting up aloft, Westward an open champion ground, and on the East the sea at hand and in sight: the River Liffy running downe at North-East affordeth a safe roade and harbour for ships. By the river side, are certaine Wharfes or Kaies, as we tearme them, whereby the violent force of the water might be restrained. For, this verbe [Caiare] in old writers signified to Keepe in, to restrain and represse: which that most learned Scaliger hath well * noted. A very strong wall of rough building stone reacheth hence along by the sides of it (and the same toward the south fortified also with rampires) which openeth at six gates, from whence there run forth Suburbs of a great length.

Ioscelin of Furnes in the life of S. Patricke. Lib. 2. rerum Anglicar. c. 26.

Kaies.

* Vpon Ausonius l. 2. c. 22

Toward the East, is Dammes gate, and hard by standeth the Kings castle on high, most strongly fensed with ditches, towers, and an Armorie, or Store-house built by Henry Loundres the Archbishop, about the yeere 1220. In the East Suburbs neere unto Saint Andrew the Apostles Church, Henry the Second King of England, as Hoveden reporteth, caused a roial Pallace (or rather a Banquetting house) to be erected for himselfe, framed with wonderfull workmanship most artificially of smoothed watles after the manner of this country; Wherein himselfe with the Kings and Princes of Ireland kept a solemne fest upon Christmas day.

Dammensis.

From hence is to be seene just over against it a beautifull Colledge (in which place there stood in old time the Monastery of All-Hallowes) consecrated unto the name of the holy and indivisible Trinity, which for the exercise and polishing of good wits with good literature, Queene Elizabeth of most happy memory endowed with the privilidges of an Vniversity; and being furnished of late with a notable Library, giveth no small hope, that both religion and all the exquisit and liberall sciences wil returne eft-soones after their long exile, to Ireland, as to their ancient home (unto which, as unto a Mart of Arts and good learning, strangers sometime used to flocke and repaire). And verily in the reigne of Edward the Second Alexander Bicknor Archbishop of Divelin began to recall the profession of learning hither, having obtained from the Pope the priviledges of an Vniversity, and erected also publike Lectures, but the troublesome times that presently ensued, interrupted the laudable Al-hallowes. An Vniversity begun. 1591. 13. May was the foundation laid. 1593. Scholars were first admitted.

1320. A Manuscript of Baron Hoult.

A dable enterprise of that good man. The North gate openeth at the bridge built with arched worke of new hewen stone by King Iohn, and this joineth Ouſtmantowne to the City. For, heere the Ouſtmans, who came over as Giraldus writeth, out of Norway and the parts of the Northren Islands, planted themselues, as the Annals beare record about the yeere of salvation 1050.

In this Suburbe stood in times past the goodly Church of Saint Maries of Ouſtmanby (for so in a Charter of King Iohn it is called) an house also, founded for Preaching Friers, called of them Black Freers; unto which of late daies haue beene translated the Iudiciall Courts of the kingdome. In the South quarter of the City stand two gates, Ormunds gate and Newgate (which is their common house of correction) These leade unto the longest Suburbe of all called Saint Thomas ſtreete, and a mag-
B nificent Abbay of the same name, called Thomas Court, founded, and endowed in Thomas Court. times past with very ample reuenewes by King Henry the Second, for the expiation of the murther of Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury. Into the South openeth Paules gate, and that which taketh the name of Saint Nicholas, making way into Saint Patrickes Suburbe: wherein standeth the Archbishops Palace, knowne by the name of Saint Sepulchres: and a most stately Church dedicated unto Saint Patrick, right goodly to bee seene with faire embowed workes, stone pauements, an arched roofe ouer head of stone worke, and a very high towre steeple. What time this Church was first built, it is, to say truth, uncerteine. That Gregorie King of the Scots
C came unto it about the yeere 890. the Scotish historie doth record. The same afterward being much enlarged by Iohn King of England, was ordeined first to bee a Church of Prebends by Iohn Comyn Archbishop of Dublin in the yeere 1191. and Pope Celeſtine the Third confirmed the same. Then after him, Henry Loundres his succeſſour in the Arch-Bishoprick augmented it with dignities of Perſonages (for, I may be bold to use here the founders words) and framed it conformable to the immunities, orders, and approued cuſtomes of the Church of Salisbury. But in our daies it maintaineth a Deane, a Chaunter, a Chauncellour, a Treasurer, two Arch-Deacons and two & twenty Præbendaries; The onely light and lampe (that I may not conceale the Statut. Parli. 18. Hen. 8. c. 15. most ample testimony which the Parliament of the kingdome giveth unto it) of all Godly and Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline and order in Ireland.

D There is another Cathedrall Church also standing in the very heart of the Citie, which being consecrat unto the Holy Trinity, is commonly called Christs Church, touching the building thereof, thus we read in the ancient Records of the same Church: Sitric King of Dublin, the sonne of Ableb Earle of Dublin, gaue unto the bleſſed Trinity, and to Donatus the first Bishop of Dublin, a place to found a Church in, unto the holy Trinity, and not onely so, but gold and siluer also hee beſtowed ſufficiently, for the building of the Church and the whole Cloſe. This was done in the yeere 1012. in which, as Lancaruanenſis avoucheth, Sitric the sonne of Ableic (for so he calleth him) lived and flourished in great name. The worke begunne by Donatus, Laurence Archbi-
E shop of Dublin, Richard Strongbow Earle of Penbroch commonly called Earle of Srigulia (whose tomb is here to be seene repaired by Sir Henrie Sidney Lord Deputy) Robert Fitz-Stephan, and Reimund Fitz-Girald finished. Hard at the South side of this Church, there standeth a stately Towne-hall built of foure square stone, and called the Toleſtale, where causes are tried before the Major of the Citie, and where the Tole-ſtale. Citizens use to hold their Sessions, and publicke assemblies, for it enioieth many immunities. In times past this Citie had for the chiefe Magistrate a Provoſt. But in the yeere of our redemption 1409. King Henry the Fourth granted them licence to chuse every yeere a Major and two Bailifs: also that the Major should have a guilt sword carried before him for ever. But afterwards, King Edward the Sixth F changed the Bailiffes into Sherifs. Neither wanteth any thing heere which a man can wish for in a most flourishing City, saue only that an heape of sand which the ebbing and flowing of the sea casteth up into the mouth of Liffy, doth so dam up and bar the haven, that it is not able to bring up any great vessels but at high water. Thus much of Dublin, for the most part of which I acknowledge my selfe beholden unto the the diligence and learning of Iames Vsher Chancellor of S. Patrickes Church, whose variety of knowledge and iudgement, are far above his yeeres. A Marqueſſe of Doublin.

As touching Robert Vere Earle of Oxford, whom King Richard the Second, a Prince too too laviſh in giving honourable Titles, made Marqueſſe of Dublin, and afterwards Duke of Ireland, I haue ſpoken already, and reaſon I haue none, to repeate the ſame here. Yet I will note thus much which I haue ſince happened vpon in the Recordes. When as King Richard aforeſaid had advanced that Robert Vere Earle of Oxford to bee Marqueſſe of Dublin, and had given to him the Signiorie of Ireland during his life: hee deſirous to augment his honour by more enobliſhing him with honourable Armes, granted alſo that as long as hee ſhould liue, and hold B the ſaid Signiory, hee ſhould beare theſe Armes; Azure 3. Crownes Or in a Bordur, in his Standards, Pennons, Coate-armours, and other things wherein Armes are to beſhewed in all Marſhall matters, and elſewhere at his pleaſure. But this grant was ſoone after recalled and thoſe Armes aboliſhed.

* Pr. p. Pat. anno 9. Rich. 2. m. 1.

Where the River Liffy lodgeth himſelfe in the Ocean, Houth ſtandeth, compaſſed in manner round about with the ſea: of which, the Noblemen ſurnamed Saint Laurence, and dwelling there, become named Barons of Houth; men of rare felicity, for that in ſo long a deſcent of their line (for, they are able to derive their pedigree from the time of King Henry the Second) there hath of them, by report, none beene attainted of high treaſon, none left ward in his minority. And within a little of this C place is Malehide, or Molachid ennobled by the Lords thereof, the Talbots, Engliſh by their firſt originall.

Saint Laurence Barons of Houth.

Malchid.

More within the country, Northward, there adjoyneth hard to the county of Dublin, Fingall, that is, if you interpret it out of the Iriſh-language, a nation of forrainers, (for they uſe to nominate the Engliſh Gall, as one would ſay, ſtrangers, and Saiſſones, as it were, Saxons) a little country, but very good and paſſing well husbanded; even the garner and barn of this kingdome, ſo great ſtore of corne it yeeldeth every yeere. And heere the ſoile ſtriveth after a ſort with the painfull labour of the husbandman, which in other places throughout this Iland lying neglected, without tillage, and manuring, ſeemeth to make a very grievous complaint of the inhabitants ſloth, and D lazineſſe. There are planted every where throughout this County, right worſhipfull families nobly deſcended of Engliſh bloud, and namely beſides thoſe which I haue already mentioned, The Plunkets, Barnwells, Ruſſells, Talbots, Dillons, Nettervills, Holywoods, Lutterells, Burnells, Fitz-Williams, Gouldings, Vſhers, Cadleys, Finglaſes, Sarfelds, Blackneys, Cruceys, Baths &c.

Fingall.

Thus farre forth ſummarily of Leinſter, which in old time reached no farther. Now, I wote not whether it bee worth the laughing at, or the relating, that Thomas Stukeley when hee had in England and Ireland both, made ſhipwracke of his good name, credite, and fortunes, having wound himſelfe out of the daunger of the lawes curried ſuch favour with Pope Gregorie the thirteenth, what with making many faire promiſes, and what with bragging of great matters, that hee received at his hands theſe titles, Marqueſſe of Leinſter, Earle of Weisford and Caterlogh, Vicount Murrough, and Baron of Roſſe and Tdron. With which titles he being puffed up in pride, whiles hee thought to conquere Ireland, went a ſide into Africk, and there with the three Kings that were ſlaine in one battaile made up the interlude of his life with an honeſt cloſe, and Cataſtrophe.

Th. Stukeley.

Marqueſſe of Leinſter.

MIDIA or MEDIAMETH.

THe reſt of the Country of the Eblani was in ancient times a kingdome, and the fifth part of Ireland, within their owne natiue language they call Mÿh, the Engliſh Meth, Giraldus nameth it in Latin Midia and Media, perhaps, becauſe it is in the very middle of the Iſland. For, they ſay that Killair a caſtle in theſe parts which ſeemeth to be in Ptolomee LABERVS, is as it were, the Navill of Ireland

Laberns.

And

A And the very name implieth no leſſe: For, Lair in the Iriſh tongue ſignifieth The Middle. This Meth lieth ſtretched out from the Iriſh ſea as farre as to the river Shanon: For the ſoile thereof, as ſaith Bartholomæus Anglicus: Fertile it is in corne, paſture ground and Cattaile; plentifull in fiſh, fleſh, and other victuals of white meate: as Butter, cheeſe, and milke: watered alſo, with rivers. The ſituation is dilectable to the eie, and an wholſome aire. In regard of woods and mariſhes in the skirts and borders, it hath a very hard acceſſe and entrie unto it: And therefore, conſidering the multitude of people, the ſtrength of caſtles, and townes, it is commonly called for the peace thereof the CHAMBER of IRELAND. Within the memorie of our fathers, becauſe the country was
B too large for to be governed by one Sheriffe, and to the end that Iuſtice might with more facility be miniſtred, it was diuided by authority of Parliament in the 38. yeere of King Henrie the Eighth, into two parts, namely the County of Eaſt-Meth, and the County of Weſt-Meth.

THE COVNTY OF EAST-METH.

C THE County of EAST-METH is environed round about, with the county of Kildar, South: with the County of Dublin and the ſea, Eaſt; with the territorie of Louth, North, and with the County of Weſt Meath, on the Weſt. The whole is divided into 18. Baronies: Dueleke, Scrine, Slane, Margallen, Navan, Kenles, halfe the Baronie of Fower nere to Kenles, Killalou, Demore, Cloue, Moylagh, Logherne, Oldcaſtle, Luyn, Moyſeuraraghe, Deeſe, Rath-touth and Dunboyn.

Boyn, which Ptolomee calleth BVVINDA, Giraldus BOANDVS, a noble river, ſpringing out of the North ſide of the Kings County, runneth through this County. In the hither part on this ſide Boyn, theſe are the places memorable: Galtrim, where the Huſeys haue dwelt a long time: Killin Caſtile, which Hugh Lacy, Cuſtos of Ireland under King Henrie the Second built; and Dunſany, which have their Parliament-Barons, noble men of ancient deſcent out of the family of the Plonkets, which D others fetch out of Denmarke: but they beare the very ſame Armes in ſundry colours, which Alan Plonket of Kilpecke in England did: who alſo under King Edward the Firſt lived in the dignity and port of a Baron. Now this houſe of the Plonkets in Ireland came up and grew to be of high eſtimation, ever ſince that Sir Chriſtopher Plonket a valiant and wiſe man (Deputy, as they tearme him, unto Richard Duke of Yorke, Lord Lieutenant in King Henrie the Sixth his time) was advanced to the dignity of Baron of Killin, which fell unto him by his wife heire to the family of the Cuſakes: & his ſecond ſonne by his own worth & valor obtained the title of Baron Dunſany. On the farther ſide of Boyn, are Trimletſtoun, which hath his Baron out of the family of the Barnwells (for, King Edward the Fourth promoted Sir Iohn Barnwell to Barnwell. Baron Trimlet ſtoun.
E the honor of a Parliamentary Baron) Gormanſton, which now hath had honorable Vicounts, men of good deſert in the Common-wealth, deſcended from the line of the Preſtons (as it is verily thought) in Lancaſhire; and Slane, which is able likewiſe to ſhew Barons thereof out of the family of the Flemings: and among them ſtands Aboy a mercate towne well inhabited, and of good reſort, upon the river Boyn: Baron Slane.
which when it hath paſſed beſide Glan-Iores, that is, The Land of the ſonnes of George (this George was of the Birminghams progenie, whoſe heire by marriage brought a faire inheritance with the caſtle of Carbray unto the Preſtons) runneth under Trim a prety towne of trade, and one of the better ſort, where William Pepard erected a caſtle. This was an ancient Baronie of the Lacies, which accrewed unto the titles
F of the Dukes of Yorke, who ſtiled themſelves, Lords of Trim. Then floweth it beſide Navan. Navan, which hath a Baron or Baronet, but not of the Parliament houſe, and affordeth for the moſt part a dwelling houſe unto the Biſhop of the Diœceſe, who hath Baronet of Navan. now no Cathedrall Church, but doth all with the aſſent of the Clergy of Meth.

His See ſeemeth to have beene at Cluanarard, which is called alſo Clunart, where Biſhop of Meth. Hugh Lacy in times paſt built a caſtle: For, in the letters Apoſtolicall we read him thus, thus, Episcopus Midensis sive Cluanarardensis, that is, The Bishop of Meth or Cluanarard, and corruptly as it is to be thought, in a Romane Provinciall, Elnamirand. Boyn now by this time carrying a fuller streame, after it hath with an hasty course swiftly passed on certaine miles, neere unto Drodagh emptieth himselfe into the sea. Of this swift running, what if I should thinke this Boyn tooke his name. For, Boan both in Irish and in British also signifieth, Swift, and our Poet Necham of this river hath thus versified.

Ecce Boan qui Trim celer influit, istius undas
Subdere se salsis Drogheda cernit aquis.
Lo Boin, that swiftly unto Trim doth runne; and marke withall:
How at Tredagh his streame into the salt-sea-gulfe doth fall.

The men of greatest reputation and name in this County, besides those whom I rehersed before, to wit, The Polnkets, Flemings, Barnwells, and Husseys, are the Darceys, Cusakes, Dillons, Birminghams, De-la-Hides, Nettervills, Garuyes, Cadells, and others, whom if I doe name not at all; or if I reckon either these or others elsewhere not in their owne ranke, according to their worth and degree, I desire no imputation may be laid upon me therefore.

THE COVNTY OF WEST-MEAH.

THe County of West-Meth, so called in respect of the other aboue said, unto which it adjoineth on the West side, reacheth unto the river Shanon, and lieth betweene the Kings County, South; and Longford County, North: unto which it is not willing to giue place, either in fertility of soile, multitude of inhabitants, or any thing else whatsoever, unlesse happily it bee inferiour in civility of maners. Molingar by authority of Parliament, was ordeined to be the head and principall shire towne, because it lieth, as it were, in the very midest: & the whole country is laied forth into twelue Hundreds or Baronies, vz. Fertulogh: where the Tirells; Ferbille, where the Darcyes dwel: Delvin, which adorneth the old Noble stock of the Nogents (who came first out of England) with the title of a Parliament Baron: These are descended from that Sir Gilbert Nogent, whom Hugh Lacy the Conqueror of Meth, for his courageous and valiant service in the wars of Ireland, rewarded both with these lands and those also of Furrie, as that most learned Gentleman Richard Stanihurst hath recorded: Fourrie aforesaid, as also Corkery, where the Nogents dwell; Moyassell, where the Tuts and Nogents; Maghertiernan where very many of the Petits and the Tuts; Moygoisy where the Tuts and Nangles; Ratheomire, where the Dalions; Magirquirke where the Dillons, all propagated from English bloud doe inhabite: Clonlolan, where the O-Malaghlins, of the old roiall line of Meth; Moycassell, where the Magohigans, meere Irish beare sway: and others whose very names cary an harsh sound of more barbarousnesse: which notwithstanding, even as Martiall, the Poet when he had reckoned up certaine barbarous Spanish names of places, beeing himselfe a Spaniard said, That hee liked them better than British names, so the Irish loue these rather than the English: in so much as one of their great Potentats gaue it out, that hee would in no wise learne the English tongue, for feare he should in speaking English, get a wry mouth. Thus the crowe thinkes her owne birds faire st, and we all are given to like our owne to well, even with the disdaine and contempt of others.

Molingar.

Barons Delvin.

Nogents.

This Meth had in times past Kings or pety Princes rather to rule it. And as we read that Monarch or Sole King of Ireland, Slany, caused the revenewes of Meth to be assigned and appropriat to the furnishing of his royall table. But when the Englishmen had once set fast footing in Ireland, Hugh Lacy subdued a great part therof, and King Henry the second enfeoffed him in it, and made him Lord of Meth, who whiles he was building of a Castle at Derwarth, and holding his head downe to prescribe a Carpenter somewhat that he would have done, had by him his head stricken off with his ax.

Lords of Meth.

This

A This Hugh begat two ſonnes, Hugh Earle of Vlſter of whom I will ſpeake heereafter: and Walter Lord of Trim, who begat Gilbert that died before his father. By the daughters of this Gilbert, Margaret and Maud, the one part by the Genevils, who were (as they write) of the houſe of Lorrain; and by the Mortimers, came to the Dukes of Yorke, and ſo to the Kings domaine or Crowne: for Peter de Genevill, ſonne to that Maud begat Ioan eſpouſed to Roger Mortimer Earle of March: and the other part by Margaret wife to Iohn Lord Verdon, and by his heires who were Conſtables of Ireland, was devolved at length upon divers families in England, as Furnivall, Burgherſh, Crophul, &c. Genevils. Conſtables of Ireland.

B

THE COVNTY of LONGFORD.

VNto Weſt Meth on the Northſide joyneth the County of LONGFORD (reduced into this ranke of Counties a few yeeres ſince by the provident pollicy of Sir Henry Sidney Lord Deputy) called before time Analè, inhabited by a numerous Sept of the O-Pharols: of which houſe there be two great men & Potentates; one ruleth in the South part named O-pharoll Boy, that is, The Yellow: the other in the North, called O-pharoll Ban, that is, the white. And very few Engliſhmen are there among them, and C thoſe planted there but of late. Analè. O-Pharolli.

Along the ſide of this County paſſeth Sbannon the nobleſt river of all Ireland, which as I have ſaid runneth betweene Meth and Connaught, Ptolomee nameth it SENVS, Oroſius SENA, and ſome copies SACANA, Giraldus, Flumen Senenſe: but the people dwelling thereby call it Shannon, that is, as ſome expound it, The ancient river. He ſpringeth out of Therne hils in the County Le Trim, and forthwith euting through the lands Southward, one while overfloweth the bankes and enlargeth himſelfe into open Pooles: and otherwhiles draweth backe againe into narrow ſtraights, and after he hath run abroad into one or two Lakes, gathering himſelfe within his bankes, valeth bonet to MACOLICVM, now called, MALC, (as the moſt learned Geogra- D pher Gerard Mercator hath obſerved) whereof Ptolomee hath made mention, and then by and by is enterteined by another broad Mere (they call it Lough Regith) the name and ſituation whereof doth after a ſort imply, that the City RIGIA, which Ptolomee placeth there, ſtood not far off from hence. But when he hath once gotten beyond this Poole and draweth himſelfe to a narrower chanell within the bankes, there ſtandeth hard upon him the towne Athlon, of which I will write in place convenient. River Senus or Sineus. Shannin and Shannon. Macolicum. Malc. Rigia.

From thence, Shannon having gotten over the Water-fall at Killoloe (whereof I muſt ſpeake anon) being now able to beare the biggeſt ſhips that are, in a divided channel, as it were with two armes claſpeth about the City Limirick, whereof I have E ſpoken already. From hence, Shannon paſſing on directly for threeſcore miles or therabout in length, bearing a great breadth, and making many an Iland by the way, ſpeedeth himſelfe Weſtward; and in what place ſoever he becommeth ſhallow and affordeth fords at an ebbe or low water, there were planted little forts with wardes (ſuch was the carefull providence of our forefathers) to reſtraine the inroades of prey taking robbers. And ſo at length he runneth and voideth out at an huge mouth into the Weſt Ocean beyond Knoc Patric, that is, Patricks Hill: for ſo Necham tearmeth that place in theſe his verſes of Shannon, Which others call Mare Brodunicum.

Fluminibus magnis lætatur Hibernia, Sineus Inter Connatiam, Momoniamque fluit.
F Tranſit per Muros Limirici, Knoc Patric illum
Oceani clauſum ſub ditione videt.

Ireland taks ioy in rivers great, and Shannon them among Betwixt Connaught and Munſter both, holds on his courſe along
He runneth hard by Limrick ways: Knoc Patric then at laſt
Within the gulfe of th' Ocean, doth ſee him lodged faſt.

CONNACHTIA, or CONAGHT.

THe fourth part of Ireland, which beareth Westward, closed in with the river Shannon, the out-let of the Lake or Lough Erne, which some call Trovis, others Bana, and with the maine Western sea, is named by Giraldus Cambrensis, Conachtia and Conacia, in English Conaght and in Irish Conaughty. In ancient times, as we may see in Ptolomee, it was inhabited by the GANGANI, who also are named CONCANI, AVTERI and NAGNATAE. Those CONCANI or GANGANI, like as the LVCENI their next neighbours that came from the Lucensij in Spaine, may seeme both by the affinity of name and also by the vicinity of place to have beene derived from the CONCANI in Spaine; who in Strabo are according to the diversity of reading named CONIACI and CONISCI: whom Silius testifieth in these verses following, to have beene at the first Scythians, and to have usually drunke horses bloud (a thing even of later daies nothing strange among the wilde Irish)

Gangani. Concani. Auteri. Nagnatæ.

Et qui Massagetem monstrans feritate parentem,
Cornipedis fusa satiaris Concane vena.
And Concane though in savageneſſe that now resembling still Thy parents old the Massagets, of horse-bloud drink'st thy fill.

And beside him, Horace

Et letum equino sanguine Concanum.
And Concaine, who thinkes it so good
To make his drinke of horses bloud.

Unlesse a man would suppose this Irish name Conaughty, to be compounded of CONCANI and NAGNATAE. Well, this Province as it is in some place fresh and fruitfull, so by reason of certaine moist places (yet covered over with grasse) which of there softnesse they usually tearme Boghes, like as all the Iland besids every where, is dangerous, and thicke set with many and those very shady woods. As for the sea coast, lying commodious as it doth with many baies, creekes, and navigable rivers, after a sort it inviteth and provoketh inhabitants to navigation: but the sweetnesse of inbred idlenesse doth so hang upon their lazy limmes, that they had rather get their living from dore to dore, than by their honest labours keepe themselves from beggery. Conaught is at this day divided into these counties, Twomond or Clare, Gallway, Maio, Slego, Letrim and Roscoman.

The ancient CONCANI above said, held in old time the more Southerly part of this Conaught, where now lie Twomond or Clare, the County Gallway, Clan-Richards Country and the Barony of Atterith.

TWOMOND or THE COVNTY CLARE.

TWomon or Twomond, which Giraldus calleth Thuetmonia, the Irish Two woun, that is, The North-Mounster (which although it lie beyond the river Shannon yet was counted in times past part of Mounster, untill Sir Henry Sidny Lord Deputy laid it unto Conaught) shooteth out into the sea with a very great Promontory growing by little and little thin and narrow. On the East and South sides it is so enclosed with the winding course of the river Shannon, which waxeth bigger and bigger, like as on the West part with the open maine sea, and on the North side confineth so close upon the County Gallway, that there is no comming unto it by land, but through the Clan-Ricards territory. This is a country wherein a man would wish for nothing more, either from sea or soile; were but the industry of the inhabitants correspondent to the rest; which

A industry Sir Robert Muſcegros an Engliſh Nobleman, Richard Clare and Thomas Clare younger brethren of the ſtocke of the Earles of Gloceſter (unto whom King Edward the firſt had granted this country) ſtirred up long ſince, by building townes and caſtles, and by alluring them to the fellowſhip of a civil converſation; of whoſe name the chiefe towne Clare, now the dwelling place of the Earle of Twomond, tooke denomination, as alſo the whole tract, of it called the county of Clare. The places of greater note and name than the reſt, are Kilfennerag and Killaloe or Laon, the Biſhops ſeat. This in the Roman Provinciall is tearmed Epiſcopatus Ladenſis, where there ſtands a rocke in the mid chanell of the river Shannon, from which the water ruſh-
B eth downe a maine with a great fall and noiſe, and by ſtanding thus in the way as a bar hindreth the river that it can carry veſſels no further, which if it were cut downe or a draine made about it, the river were able to bring up veſſels much higher, to the great commodity of all the neighbour inhabitants.

Killaloe.

Catarracta.

Not far from the banke of Shannon, is ſeated Bunraty for which Sir Robert Muſcegros obteined from King Henry the Third the liberty of a Mercate and Faire, and when he had fortified it with a Caſtle, gave it at length unto King Edward the Firſt, who granted both this towne and the whole territory unto Richard Clare aforeſaid. And ſeven miles from thence, appeareth Clare the principall towne, at a Creeke (flowing up out of Shannon) full of Ilands: and theſe twaine are the onely Mercat
C townes heere, and thoſe but ſmall ones. Moſt of the Engliſh who were in times paſt brought hither to inhabit, are either rooted out, or become degenerate and growen Iriſh: But they who carry the whole ſway heere at this day, be of the Iriſh blood as Mac-Nemors, Mac-Mahon, O-loughton, and the mightieſt by far of all other, the O-Briens, deſcended from the ancient Potentates or Kings of Conaught, or as themſelves give it forth, from the Monarchs of Ireland. Of theſe, Morogh O-Brien was the firſt Earle of Twomond created by King Henry the Eight for tearme of life and after him to Donough his brothers ſonne, and his heires; who at the ſame time being made Baron of Ibarcan, ſucceeded in the Earldome and was ſlaine by his brother Sir Donel, O Brien. Connogher, O-Brien Donaghs ſon, was the third Earle, and father to Donaugh
D now the fourth Earle, who hath ſhewed ſingular good proofe of his faithfull loialty and couragious valour unto his Prince and Country in moſt dangerous times to his ſingular commendation.

Clare.

Earles of Twomond.

THE COVNTY OF GALLWAY.

THE County of GALLVVAY meereth, South upon Clare, Weſt upon the Ocean, North upon the County Maio; and Eaſt upon the river Shannon. A land very thankeful unto the induſtrious husbandman, and no leſſe profitable unto the Shepheard. The Weſt ſhore endented in E with ſmall in-lets and out-lets, or armes of the ſea, hath a border all along of greene Ilands and rugged rocks ſet orderly, as it were in a rew: among which, foure Ilands called Arran, make a Barony, and many a fooliſh fable goes of them, as if they were the Ilands of the living wherein none doe die: alſo Inis Ceath, well knowen in times paſt by reaſon of the Monaſtery of Colman a devout Saint founded for Scots and Engliſhmen: & Inis-Bouind, which Bede interpreteth out of the Scottiſh tongue, to ſignifie The Iſle of white Heighfers, whereas it is a meere Brittiſh word. But the Engliſhmen ſoone forſooke the Monaſtery, when the Scots and they could not well agree together. Further within lieth a Lake called Logh-Corbes (where F Ptolomee placeth the river AVSOBA) ſpreading out twenty miles or thereabout in length, and 3. or 4. in breadth, being navigable, and garniſhed with three hundred petty Ilands full of graſſe and bearing Pine-trees, which lake when it reacheth neere the ſea growing narrow into a river runneth under Gallway, in the Iriſh tongue Galliue, named ſo (or elſe I cannot tell) of the Gallaci in Spaine. The very principall City of this Province, and which would thinke hardly to be reckoned the third in Ireland. Surely a very proper and faire Citie it is, built almoſt round & in maner tower-like of en-

Ilands of Arran.

Bed. l. 4. c. 4. Eccleſiaſt. Hiſt.

Lough-Corbes.

Gallwey.

trie, and some stone, and hath beside to set it out a Bishoppes See: and withall through the benefit of the haven and roade aboue said under it, being well frequented with merchants hath easie and gainefull trafficke, by exchange of rich commodities both by sea and land. A

The battaile of Knoctoe. 1516.

Not full foure miles from hence standeth Knoc-toe, that is, the Hill of axes, under which, that Noble Girald Fitz-Girald Earle of Kildare, and by times for the space of three and thirty yeeres Lord Deputie of Ireland, discomfited and put to flight after a bloudy overthrow, the greatest rable of Rebels that ever was seene before in Ireland, raised and gathered togither, by William Burk, O-Bren, Mac-Nemare, and O-Carrall.

Aterith.

Not farre from hence, Eastward, standeth Aterith (in which remaine some footings of the name of AVTERI) commonly called Athenry, enclosed round about with a wall of great circuit, but slenderly inhabited. It glorieth much of that warlike Baron thereof, Iohn de Bermingham an Englishman: out of which familie the Earle of Louth descended: but these Berminghams of Aterith, being now as it were degenerate into barbarous Irishry, scarce acknowledge themselues to haue beene English originally. The Septs or Kinreds of the Irish here, that be of the better sort, are O-Kelleis, O Maiden, O-Flairtes, Mac-Deruis &c. B

Birminghams.

Clan-Ricard. Earles of Clan-Ricard.

Clan-Ricard, that is, The sonnes, kinred, or Tube of Richard, or The Land of Richards sonnes, confineth upon these, and lieth to this County. The name it tooke, after the Irish maner, from one Richard of an English familie, called de Burgh, that became afterwards of most high renowne and name in this tract, and out of which King Henry the Eight created Vlick Burgh Earle of Clan Ricard: whose eldest sonne carrieth the title of Baron Dun-Kellin. His sonne Richard, was the Second Earle, whose children begotten of sundry wiues stirred up many troubles to the griefe of her father, the ouerthrow of their owne country, and themselues. After Richard, who died an old man, succeeded his sonne Vlick the third Earle, and father to Richard the fourth Earle now living, whose fast fidelity and singular fortitude hath to his great praise euidently appeered, when the English and their whole estates in Ireland were in greatest danger. In this territorie is the Archbishops See of Toam, unto which in old time many Bishops were subject: but at this day the Bishoprickes of Anagchony, Duae, and Majo are annexed unto it. The Bishoprick likewise of Kilmacough, which in the old Provincial, unlesse the name be corrupt, is not mentioned, as also of Clonfert are seated in this part, and as I haue heard, united to the See of Toam. C D

Archbishoprick of Toam, or Tuen.

THE COVNTY OF MAIO.

THE County Maio, on which the Western-Ocean, beateth, lies bounded South, with the County of Gallway; East, with the County Rostoman; and North, with the County of Slego. A fertile Country and a pleasant, abundantly rich in Cattaile, Deere, Hawkes and plenty of hony: taking the name of Maio a little City, with a Bishops See in it, which in the Roman Provinciall is called Mageo. But that Episcopall seat is now annexed to the Metropolitane of Toam; and the neighbour inhabitans repaire for Eccleasticall iurisdiction to the Bishop of Killaley in the Barony of Tir-Auley. E

Majo.

Killaley. Bishoprick of Killaley.

In this Maio, if I deceiue not my selfe, Colman a bishop of Ireland, built, as Bede writeth, a Monasterie for thirty men or there about of the English Nation, trained in the profession of the monasticall life, whom he brought out of England into Ireland. But here what Bede saith. Colman found a place in the Isle of Ireland meete for building of a monastery, named in the old Scotish tongue Magio. And hee bought a part of it which was not much, of the Earle, unto whose possession it belonged, to found a Monastery therein: but with this condition annexed unto the sale, that the Monkes resiant there, should pray unto the Lord for him also that permitted them to haue the place. Now when hee had streight waies erected this monastery, with the helpe of the said Earle and all the neighbour inhabitants, hee placed the Englishmen there, leaving the Scots behinde in the Isle Bouind. Which very monastery is inhabited at this day by Englishmen: for, F

Lib. 4. cap. 4.

A the same it is, which now of a small one growen to bee great, is usually termed In Mago. And having now this good while turned all to better orders, it conteineth a notable covent of Monkes who beeing assembled there togither out of the Province of England, according to the example of the reverend fathers, under Regularity and a Canonicall Abbat liue in great continency and sincerity with the labour of their owne hands.

About the yeare of our Lord 1115. this monasterie was reedified, and flouriſhed in King Iohns time, who by his Patent confirmed many farmes and faire lands unto it. Neither verily is the there any other place, that I can finde memorable, unleſſe it be Logh-Mesk a good large and fiſhfull Lake, in two ſmall Iſlands whereof ſtand Logh-Mesk.

B ſure forts, that belonged to the familie of Burk. This county is not ſo famous for the townes therein as the Inhabitants, who are either of the Iriſh race, as O-Maylies, Ioies and Mac-vadus; or of the Scotiſh out of the Iſlands Hebrides, and out of the ſept of Donell, whereupon they bee called Clan-Donelles, all Galloglaſſes, and as it were, Galloglaſſes.
doughty mercinary ſoldiors, who fight with two edged axes, and be armed with habergeons or coates of maile, procured in times paſt to come hither by the rebells, and endowed here with lands: or elſe of Engliſh bloud, as the ſaid Burkes, Iordans, deſcended from one Iordan of Exceſter, Nangles of Caſtlough, Prendergeſt of Clan-Moris. But the moſt puiſſant be thoſe Burkes, who after a ſort are beholden both for their firſt beginning, and alſo for their glory unto William a yonger brother of Walter de Burgo or Burk of Vlſter. This William, highly renowned for his militarie prow-

C eſſe being led away priſoner into Scotland, and leaving his wife behinde him for an hoſtage, when hee was reſtored to his owne home, by his manhood recovered Conaght (out of which in his abſence all the Engliſh had beene expelled by Phelim O-Conor) having ſlaine in the field the ſaid Phelim O Conor, Mac Dermond, Tego and Kelly, and was himſelfe at laſt, in reveng, killed by Cormac Mac-Dormond. His grandſonne Thomas, by his ſonne Edmund ſurnamed Albanach (becauſe he was borne in Scotland) when he ſaw the goodly and rich inheritance of his owne familie, tranſlated by a female unto Leonell Duke of Clarence, tooke it to the heart, and therefore raiſing a powre of lewd lawleſſe and deſperate perſons (who will bee never wanting

D in Ireland nor elſe where) by force and wrong ſeized the Patrimony of the Earles of Vlſter in this County into his owne hands, and after the name of that Grandfather of his, whoſe glorious fame and gracious authority was then freſh in remembrance, called himſelfe Mac-William, that is, the ſonne of William. And his poſterity under that Mac-William who alſo is called Mac-William Eughter. Cuttings, Coyne, Liverey &c.
name and title uſurped a tyrannie in theſe partes, raging upon themſelues other whiles, with mutuall iniuries, and oppreſſing the poore people a long time with extorting, pilling and ſpoiling: in ſo much as they left ſcarce one village or houſe in the Country unraſed and unrifled. This powrefull violence of theirs Sir Richard Bingham principal Commiſſioner, or governor of Conaght, a man reſolute, ſeuere and valiant fit for ſuch a fierce and fell province, thought not to be endured. For, he well

E vnderſtood beeing prudent and politicke, that theſe iniuſt oppreſſions, pollings and pillings were the principall cauſes of the rebellions, of barbarouſneſſe, and baſe beggery of Ireland, yea and that they drew the people away from their due obedience and allegeance to their Prince, ſo, as that they would acknowledge no other ſoueraigne than their owne Lords and Captaines: he therefore to eſtabliſh (what hee might) the roiall powre and authority there, and to overthrow this tyrannicall government of this Mace William and of others getting head, emploied with all diligence his whole care and cogitations to the uttermoſt: and albeit he had from time to time many imputations, ſuggeſtions, and complaints eagerly vrged upon him, both before Queene Elizabeth and alſo the Lord Deputy, yet proceeded hee

F in his purpoſe. Contrariwiſe, thoſe of the familie of Burke, their followers and dependants, that refuſed to obey the lawes, tooke armes, and drewe to band and ſide with them, the Septs of the Clan-Donells, Ioies and other, who diſtruſted themſelues and their owne powre. Whom Bingham the Governour ſoone ſcattered, and having forced their forts, drave them into woodes and lurking hooles, untill the Lord Deputy taking pittie of them upon their humble ſupplication commanded by his Miſſives that they ſhould bee received upon tearmes of peace. But they who by war had troubled the peace, and knowing not how to lay down war for ſweetneſſe of peace, were no ſooner relieved and raiſed as it were from death, but they tooke armes againe, entred a freſh into actuall rebellion, drave booties every where, and made foule uprores in all places; crying out, That they would ſet vp their Mac-William or elſe ſend for one out of Spaine; That they would not admit a Sherif, nor yeeld obedience to lawes; and heerewith they cloſly procured the Scottiſh Ilanders from out of the Hebrides to come over for to aid them, promiſing them faire lands and poſſeſſions, whereupon the Lord Deputy commanded the Governour to repreſſe and bridle this their exceſſiue and malapert inſolence. He then immediately, when they rejected all equall and indifferent conditions offered unto them, aſſembled an armie, and purſued them ſo hotly through the woods and forreſts, that after ſix or ſeven weekes being grievouſly hunger-bitten, they moſt humbly ſubmitted themſelves. At which very time the auxiliary forces of the Scots aforeſaid came ſeeking through deſert by-waies, and untravailed out waies as cloſely as they could, to come into the County of Maio: but the Governor with continuall journeis affronted them by night and day ſo neere, and followed upon them ſo hard, that in the end he intercepted them at Ardnary, and valiantly giving the charge, put them to flight, after hee had killed and drowned in the river Moin, about three thouſand of them: A happy victory this was and of great conſequence, both for the preſent and future times: whereby the rebellion together with the title of Mac-William was extinguiſhed, Donell Gormy and Alexander Carrough, the ſonnes of Iames Mac-Conel and thoſe Ilanders who moſt of all had plauged Ireland were ſlaine. Theſe occurrents have I briefely ſet downe out of my Annales (impertinent though they be to my intended purpoſe) which for their worthineſſe ought more at large to be penned by ſome Hiſtoriographer.

Richard Bingham.

THE COVNTY of SLEGO.

SOmewhat higher lieth the County of Slego, a plenteous and battle country for feeding and raiſing of cattell, wholly alſo coaſting upon the ſea. Betweene it and Vlſter, Northward runneth the river TROBIS, which Ptolomee calleth RAVIVS, as an out-let of the Lake Erne: it is ſevered from the neighbour Counties Le Trim and Roſcoman, by the comberous Curlew hils; and the river Suc divideth it in twaine. In ſome place heereabout, Ptolomee ſetteth the City NAGNATA; but what City it was, it paſſeth my wit to finde out. He hath placed alſo the river LIENIVS in this tract, which through the rechleſneſſe of the tranſcribers, I reduced even now from out of exile to Dublin his owne City. But that place which Ptolomee heere pointeth out, is now called THE BAY OF SLEGO, a road full of harbours under Slego the principall place of this County: where ſtandeth a Caſtle, the ſeat at this day of the Sept of O-Conor, who of it take their addition of Slego, and fetch their pedigree, as they ſay themſelves, from that Rotheric O-Conor Dun, who being a great man and of much puiſſance, bare himſelfe as Monarch of Ireland, what time as the Engliſh entred firſt into Ireland, & hardly yeelded himſelfe unto K. Henry the ſecond, although in words he profeſſed ſubmiſſion: & oftentimes raiſing tumults (as an author without name of that age writeth) uſed ever & anon to cry out and ſay, That theſe words following of Adrian the Pope in his Patent or Charter made unto the King of England were prejudiciall unto him: Enter you into that Iland, and execute whatſoever ſhall concerne the glory of God, and the ſalvation of that Land: and let the people of the ſaid land receive you and honour you as their Lord: Vntill ſuch time as Pope Alexander the third by a new Bull or Charter of his, had confirmed in like maner unto the Kings of England their right to Ireland: for then became he more tractable and condeſcended unto more equall conditions, as I ſhall ſhew anon. After theſe O Conors, the greateſt men of name in this Territory are O Don, O Haris, O Ghar, and Mac-Donagh.

Nagnata.

Se Diploma. l. 2 c. 6. Girald. Cambren. de expugnatio. Hibern. p. 787.

THE

A

THE COVNTY of LE-TRIM,

THe County of Slego, Eaſtward, is encloſed with Breany, the Poſſeſſion of the ancient family of O-Rorck, which drew their deſcent from Rotherick Monarch of Ireland, whom they by contraction (which they take pleaſure in) terme Rorck untill that Brien O Rorck Lord of Breany and Minteroliſe, fed with vaine hopes by Pope Sixtus Quintus and the King of Spaine, had perfidiouſly caſt off his alleageance to Queene Elizabeth, and taken armes: who being ſtreightwaies chaſed into Scotland, and ſent backe into England, ſuffered for his inconſiderate raſhneſſe due puniſhment upon the gallowes,
B and his lands were adjudged to the Crowne. This Breany, by Iohn Perot Lord Deputie, was made a County, and of the chiefe towne, called Le-trim: which riſeth up throughout with hilles, full of ranke graſſe, yet not ſo, as that it ſhould be altogether true which Solinus reporteth of Ireland: Namely, that it is ſo full of forage, that unleſſe cattaile were kept other whiles from graſing, their fulneſſe would endanger them. And ſo much cattaile it feedeth, that within the little circuit which it hath, it may reckon at one time above a hundred and twenty thouſand head of beaſts. In this ſtandeth Achonry Biſhopricke, united now to the See of Elphin. And Shannon the Soveraigne of all rivers in Ireland, hath heere his ſpring-head; which being one while narrower, and another while broader, with divers turning and winding reaches that
C he makes, waſheth and watereth of either ſide, as I have ſaid, many a country. The principall families be, O Rorcke, O Murreies, Mac Lochleims, Mac Glanchies, and Mac Granelles, all mere and ſtarke Iriſh. Whereas Iohn Burgh, ſonne to Richard the Earle of Clan-Ricards was created by Queene Elizabeth Baron Le-trim, who was afterward ſlaine by his envious concurrents. I cannot ſay, whether he had that title of this Le-trim, or of ſome other place in this Kingdome.

THE COVNTY OF ROSCOMAN.

D VNder the County of Letrim Southward, lieth ROSCOMAN, ordeined to be a County by Henry Sidney Lord Deputie: lying out a good length but narrow; cloſed up betweene the two rivers Suc Weſtward: and Shanon Eaſtward, and on the Northſide bounded with Curlew mountaines. A territorie it is for the moſt part plaine, fruitfull, feeding many heards of cattaile, and with meane husbandry and tillage yeeldeth plenty of corne. Where it beareth Northward, the ſteepe mountaines of Curlew perke up aloft, and thoſe impaſſable, untill by the carefull induſtry of George Bingham there was a way cut out: which Curlews not long ſince became more notorious for the diſaſterous death of Sir Conners Clifford, and (by his default) for the ſlaughter with him of moſt valiant and experienced ſouldiers. In this County are reckoned foure Baronies. Under Curlew hilles,
E by the river Shanon, the Baronie of Boyle firſt commeth in view: where was founded in times paſt a famous Abbay, in the yeere 1152. together with the Abbay of Beatitude: and Mac Dermot ruleth all there, as Lord; then by the river Suc, lieth the Baronie Balin Tober; where O Conor Dun is of the greateſt commaund: and upon it ioineth Elphen an Epiſcopall See. Somewhat lower is Roſcoman, the Baronie of O Conor Roo, that is, Conor the Red; wherin is ſeated the chiefe towne of the whole Countie, fenſed in time paſt with a Caſtle by Robert Vfford Lord Iuſtice of Ireland; but all the houſes are meane & thatched; and more Southward, Athlone the Baronie of the F O Kellies, ſo named of the head towne: which hath a Caſtle and ward in it; alſo a moſt beautifull bridge of heawen ſtone, which to the great terrour of ſeditious rebels, Queene ELIZABETH in our memorie appointing Henrie Sidney Lord Deputie of Ireland overſeer thereof, cauſed to be built; with a purpoſe to conſtitute in that place (as moſt fitteſt of all others in Ireland to repreſſe ſeditions) the ſeat of reſidence for the Lords Deputies, and thus much for the Counties of Contagh.

Curlew hilles.

Baronie of Boyle.

Balin Tober.

LORDS

LORDS OF CONAGHT.

AS for the Lords of Conacht, we find it recorded in the Iriſh hiſtories, that Turlogh O Mor O Conor ruled abſolutely in old time this Country, and divided it wholly betweene his two ſonnes, Cahel and Brien. But at the Engliſhmens firſt arrivall into Ireland, Rothericke bare rule; who ſtyled himſelfe Monarch of Ireland, yet being put in feare with the great preparation for the Engliſh warre hanging ſo neere over his head, he betooke himſelfe into the protection of King Henrie the Second, without trying the hazard of battaile. But when as forthwith he brake his allegeance, and revolted, Miles Cogan was the firſt Engliſhman that gave the attempt upon Conaght, yet ſped he not in his enterpriſe. Howbeit, that King of Conaght aboveſaid, was driven to this exigent, as to acknowledge himſelfe the King of Englands Liege man, to ſerve him faithfully as his man, and to pay unto him yeerely of every tenth beaſt, one hide mercateable &c. And King Iohn granted, that the third part of Conaght ſhould remaine unto him ſtill, to be held hæreditarily for an hundred markes. But William Fitz-Adelm, whoſe poſterity are called in Latin de Burgo; and Burke or Bourke in Iriſh, Robert Muſcegros, Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloſter, and William de Bermingham, were the firſt Engliſh that fully ſubdued this country, and laboured to bring it to civill government. And William Bourke and his lineall poſteritie, being called Lords of all Conaght, governed this province together with Vlſter for a long time in great peace and tranquillity, yea and raiſed thereout rich revenews, untill the onely daughter of William Burke, ſole heire in groſſe of Conaght and Vſter both, was matched in marriage with Leonell Duke of Clarence, King Edward the thirds ſonne. But when as he abode for the moſt part in England, and the Mortimers his heires and ſucceſſours looked but negligently to their patrimonie and inheritance in Ireland, the Bourkes there allies whom they had appointed as overſeers of their lands, taking the advantage of their Lords abſence, and preſuming upon the troubles in England, deſpiſing the authority of lawes, entring into alliance with the Iriſh, and contracting marriage with them, ſeized upon all Conaght to their owne behoofe; and degenerating by little and little have laid downe Engliſh civility, and taken up Iriſh behaviour. Whereof ſome who fetched their pedigree from Richard Burke, were called Clan-Ricard: others, Mac William Oughter, that is, The upper: others, Mac William Eughter, that is, The Lower: even as they who in the County of Maio were of greateſt powre and authority affected to be tearmed ſimply Mac-William, as being a name full of honor, glory and authority, becauſe they deſcended from William De Burgo, or Burke, whom I mentioned erewhile, vnder countenance of which name they for a long time tyrannized over the poore inhabitants with moſt grieuous exactions.

Rog. Houenden. Anno 1175. pag. 312.

VLTONIA or VLSTER.

ALL the land beyond the mouth of the river Boyn, Meath, the County Longford and the mouth of the river Rauie that ſtretcheth Northward, is counted the fifth part of Ireland, called in Latin Vltonia and Vlidia, in Engliſh Vlſter, in Iriſh Cui Guilly, that is, The Province Guilly, and of our Welſh Britans, Vltw. Which Province was wholly inhabited in Ptolemees time, by the VOLVNTII, DARNI, ROBOGDII and ERDINI. A large country, beſpred with many and thoſe very large loghes or lakes, ſhaded with many and thicke woods, in ſome places fruitfull, in others baraine; howbeit, freſh and greene to ſee to in every place, and repleniſhed with cattaile. But, as the country for want of manuring is growne to be rough, ſo the

A the naturall diſpoſitions of the people, wanting civill diſcipline are become moſt wilde and barbarous. Yet to the end that they might bee kept within the bounds of their duty who were wont to breake in ſunder all bands of æquity, of honeſty, and of duty, the hether part of it was in times paſt divided into three Counties, Louth, Down, and Antrimme: and now the reſt is laid out into ſeven new Counties, that is to ſay, Cauon, Fermanagh, Monaghan, Armagh, Colran, Tir-Oen, and Donegall or Tir-Conell, by the provident care of Sir Iohn Perot L. Deputy: who being, a notable and worthy man, well acquainted with the humours and hauty ſpirits of the Province, foreſeeing that no pollicy would ſerue better to appeaſe the tumults of Ireland, than to reduce theſe parts of Vſter into order, and to keepe them downe; going thither B in a dangerous and tickliſh time, when the King of Spaine hovered and gaped both for Ireland and England; with his gravity and authority, whiles by barring all wrongs, hee did cut off the cauſes and quarels of warre, brought all the Potentates or Capitaines of Ulſter to this paſſe, that willingly they ſuffered their Seignories to bee divided into Counties, and Sheriſs to bee appointed for the government thereof. But hee beeing within a while after recalled home and climbing ſtill higher unto honours; the heavy diſpleaſure and envie of ſome, whom hee was not able to counterpoiſe, and his owne laviſh tongue togither for unadviſedly hee had let flie ſomewhat againſt the Princes Majeſtie (which to impaire in word, is a capitall matter) plunged him headlong ere hee was ware upon his deſtruction, as I C haue declared elſe-where more amply.

Iohn Perot Lord Deputy. 1585.

THE COVNTY OF LOVTH.

THe County of Lovth, in ancient bookes written Luua and Luda, called in the Iriſh tongue Iriel or Vriel (if that bee not rather a part of this territorie) ſituat beyond Meth and the mouth of the river Boyne, turning full upon the Iriſh ſea, runneth out with a ſhore much winding into the North; the ſoile whereof is ſo full of forage, and ſo fruitfull, that it ſoone anſwereth and recompenſeth the huſ- D band mans toile and charges.

Vriel, in Latine Vrgalia.

Neere unto Boynes mouth, is ſeated Drogheda or Droghda, in Engliſh Tredagh, a fine towne, well peopled and frequented, ſo called of the bridge, and divided by the river Boyne running through it. Unto which, King Edward the Second for Theobald Verdons ſake granted licence for a mercate and faire; the Kings confirmed many and great liberties; and among other a Mint. Neere unto this ſtandeth Mellifont Abbay founded by Donald a King of Vriel, and much praiſed by Saint Bernard: which Queene Elizabeth (when as the religious Monkes were before thruſt out) gaue unto Sir Edward More of Kent, for his good deſerts both at home, and abroad in the warres.

Tredagh.

Mellifont Abbay.

E Ardeth ſeven miles from hence is a drie in-land towne well knowne: and aboue it Dundalk with a commodious haven, and in times paſt ſtrongly walled; which Edward Brus brother to the King of Scots, who had proclamed himſelfe King of Ireland, burnt: but hee within a while after, was with eight thouſand two hundred of his men ſlaine neare thereabout. And in our remembrance, Shan O Neale laied ſiege unto it; but ſtreight waies hee was forced with ſhame enough to diſlodge. Eight miles from hence ſtandeth Carlingford a port alſo of good requeſt and reſort; neither bee there to my knowledge any other places in this County worth the naming.

Dundalk.

Carlingford.

F This Louth, had for Earle Sir Iohn Birmingham an Engliſhman, whom in reward of his martiall valour, when hee had diſcomfited and in a pitcht field ſlaine that Edward Brus, who aſſuming the title of King of Ireland for a time had made foule work with fire and ſword in Ireland, King Edward the Second advanced to the honour of Earle of Louth, to haue unto him and his heires males: and withall the dignity of Baron of Athenry, to him and his heires. But this honourable title as it beganne, ſo it ended in Birmingham who alſo is called Brimicham.

Earle of Louth.

in him; for he that in warre vanquiſhed his enimies, was ſoone after in a tumult of rebellious people vanquiſhed and ſlaine by his owne men in this territorie, with many other of his ſurname, leaving no iſſue behinde him. But in our fathers remembrance, King Henry the Eighth honored Sir Oliver Plonket with the title of Baron of Louth. There remaine in this county, the Verdons, Tates, Clintons, Bellews, Dowdals, Gernons, Hadſors, Wottons, Brandons, Mores, Warrens, Chamberlanes, and very many beſides of Engliſh bloud: and of the Iriſh, the Mac-Mathons, &c.

Baron Louth.

A

THE COVNTY OF CAVON.

NExt unto Louth to the Weſt, lieth the County of CAVON, called in times paſt, Eaſt Braenny, the habitation of the O-Reileys, who vaunt themſelues to haue had their beginning of the Ridleys in England, whereas in their whole courſe and manner of life, they bee meere Iriſh. Theſe O-Reileys, not long ſince were of great powre in horſemen: but to the end they might be that way leſſe powrefull, Sir Henry Sidney in his pollicy divided their county into ſeven Baronies: whereof the Lords out of that familie ſhould immediatly hold the ſame by ſervice, in fee, from the crowne of England. They dwell ſcattering in piles and forts, not in townes: A biſhop they haue of their owne and him a poore one, Godhe knoweth; whoſe See is at Kilmore: and yet is not hee ſo poore as thoſe Iriſh Biſhops were, who had no other rents and revenews than three milch kine, which the pariſhioners exchanged for others new milch, when they went dry according as Adam Bremenſis from their owne relation when they returned by Germany out of Italy, learned, and put downe in writing.

Eaſt Breany.

O Reiley.

Kilmore Biſhoprick.

Poore Biſhops.

B

C

THE COVNTY of FERMANAGH.

BEyond Cavon Weſt and North, FERMANAGH preſenteth it ſelfe: where ſometimes the ERDINI dwelt, a contry full of woods and very boggiſh. In the mids whereof, is that moſt famous and the greateſt Meere of all Ireland, Logh-Erne, ſtretching out 40. miles, bordred about with ſhady woods, and paſſing full of inhabited Ilands: whereof ſome conteine an hundred, two hundred and three hundred Acres of ground: having beſides ſuch ſtore of Pikes, Trouts, and Salmons, that the fiſhermen complaine oftener of too great plenty of fiſhes, and of the breaking of their nets, than they doe for want of draught. This Lake ſpreadeth not from Eaſt to Weſt (as it is deſcribed in the common Maps) but as I have heard thoſe ſay who have taken a long and good ſurvey thereof; firſt, at Bal-Tarbet which is a little towne fartheſt North of any in this County of Cavon, it ſtretcheth from South to North fourteene miles in length and foure in bredth. Anon it draweth in narrow, to the bigneſſe of a good river for ſix miles; in the chanell whereof ſtandeth Inis Killin, the principall Caſtle in this tract, which in the yeere 1593. was defended by the rebels, and by Dowdall a moſt valiant Captaine won. Then turning Weſtward, it enlargeth it ſelfe moſt of all, twenty miles long, and ten broad, as far as to Belek: neere unto which is a great downefall of water, and as they tearme it, that moſt renowned Salmons Leap. A common ſpeech is currant among the inhabitants thereby, that this Lake was once firme ground, paſſing well husbanded with tillage, and repleniſhed with inhabitants; but ſodainly for their abominable buggery committed with beaſts, overflowen with waters and turned into a Lake. The Almighty God (ſaith Giraldus) Creator of Nature, judged this land privy to ſo filthy acts againſt Nature, unworthy to hold, not onely the firſt inhabitants, but any others for the time to come. Howbeit this wickedneſſe, the Iriſh Annales lay upon certaine Ilanders one of the Hebrides, who being fled out of their owne Country lurked there: Among the Lords in this tract, Mac-Gwir was moſt noble and powerfull, vntill he overthrew himſelfe and his ſtate in the late rebellion. And they that be of that Sept dwell on both ſides, yet ſo as that thoſe beyond the Lake are reckoned of Vlſter, and they on this ſide of Conaght.

Lough-Ern.

Bal-tarbet.

Belek.

D

E

F

THE

A

THE COVNTY MONAGHAN.

ALong the Lough-Erne on the East side stretcheth out the County Monaghan, mounting aloft with hils, well attired with woods, but knowen by no town at all (unlesse it be Monaghan, which imparted the name unto the whole country) It is divided into fiue Baronies, & containeth Iriel, Dartre, Ferey, Loughty (which by authority of Parlament were for rebellion, given away from the Mac-Mahons) with the litle territory Donemain, which Queene Elizabeth bestowed upon Walter De Eureux Earle of Essex.

Those Mac-Mahons, that is, if we interpret it out of the Irish language, The Sons of Vrsus, or the Beare, ruled heere as tyrannicall Lords a long time, and derive their Genealogy from Walter Fitz Vrse, who embrued his hands with the bloudy murdering of Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury. The most puissant of these, after the maner of that Nation, tooke upon him to Lord it over the rest, and by way of excellency was tearmed Mac-Mahon. About which preheminence when as of late daies they of that Sept or Family were at most bitter debate by way of hard words, open armes, foule practises, yea & close corruptions, Sir William Fitz-William the L. Deputy came hither among them, and judicially convented Hugh-Roe, Mac-Mahon, whom he by his authority had set up in this Signiory, and being upon his triall condemned of treason, caused him to be hanged; and to the end that he might suppresse for ever both the name and Soveraignety of Mac-Mahon, he divided the territory betweene the kinred of the said Hugh, and certaine Englishmen, to have and to hold after the English Tenure, to them, and theirs.

Mac-Mahon.

Fitz-Vrse.

1590.

THE COVNTY ARMAGH.

On the East side againe lieth out in length the County of Armagh, so as that it is compassed as it were about, with the river Neury by East, with the County of Louth by South, and with the Black-water by North. A County as I have sundry times heard the Earle of Denshire Lord Lieutenant Generall say, that for a most rich and battle soile passeth all other parts of Ireland, in so much as if any compost be laid upon it to make it more fruitfull, it skorneth and disdaineth, as one would say, the same, and becommeth barraine. The first place in it that we meet with, is Fewes, a little territory belonging to Turlogh Mac-Henry, one of the family of O-Neile, thicke set with woods and by reason of loughes and bogges unpassable. Then have you Orry, as scarce of woods, where dwelleth O-Hanlon: and the fort Mont-Norris, built by Charles, Baron Montjoy when he was Lord Deputy, and so named in honour of Sir Iohn Norris under whom he had served first, and was trained in military discipline. Eight miles from hence neere unto the river Kalin, Armach maketh a poore shew albeit it is the Archiepiscopall see, and Metropolitane of the whole Iland. The Irish talke much, that it was so called of Queene Armacha: but in mine opinion it is the very same that Bede nameth Dearmach; and out of the Scottish or Irish language interpreteth it, The field of Okes. But it was named Drumsaileh before that Saint Patricke had built there a proper faire City, for site, forme, quantity, and compasse, modelled out, as he saith, by the appointment and direction of Angels. That Patricke, I say, who being a Britan borne, and Saint Martins sisters sonne, named at his Baptisme Sucat, was sould into Ireland, where he became Heard-man to King Milue, afterwards was named by S. German whose disciple he was, Magonius, as a Nourse-father out of British word, and by Pope Celestine, Patricius, as a Father of the Citizens, and by him sent over to catechize Ireland in the Christian faith. Which notwithstanding some had received there before, as we may gather out of an old Synodall, wherein is urged the testimony of Patricke himselfe against that Tonsure or shaving of Priests which had beene used before his time in Ireland; whereby they were shaven onely on the fore part of the head, and

Charles Blunt L. Montjoy.

Fewes.

Orry.

Mont-Norris

Armach.

S. Patricke. Vita Patricij. Marianus Scotus.

The Irish shaving.

and not on the Crowne. Which maner of ſhaving he ſeemeth by way of contempt to father upon a certaine Swinheard of King Lagerius the ſonne of Nell: and the writers of that age cried out, that it was Simon Magus his ſhaving and not S. Peters. In this place about the yeere of our ſalvation 610. Columbane built a moſt famous Monaſtery, Out of which very many Monaſteries afterwards were propagated by his diſciples, both in Britaine and in Ireland. Of this Armach S. Bernard writeth thus. In honour of Saint Patricke the Apoſtle of Ireland, who heere by his life time ruled, and after death reſted; it is the Archiepiſcopall ſeat and Metropolitane City of all Ireland, and of ſo venerable eſtimation in old time, that not onely Biſhops and Prieſts, but Kings alſo and Princes in generall, were ſubject to the Metropolitane thereof in all obedience, and he alone governed them all. But through the develiſh ambition of ſome mighty Potentates, there was taken up a very bad cuſtome, that this holy See ſhould be obtained and held in hereditary ſucceſſion, neither ſuffered they any to be Biſhops, but ſuch as were of their owne Clan, Tribe, and Family. Neither prevailed this execrable ſucceſſion a little, but continued this wicked maner for the ſpace well neere of fifteene generations.

See Bed. l.5.c. 22.

S. Bernard in the life of Malachie.

When in proceſſe of time, the Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline in this Iland was growne looſe, ſo as in townes and Cities, there was tranſlations and plurality of Biſhops according to the will and pleaſure of the Metropolitane: for reformation of this abuſe, Iohn Papirio a Cardinall was ſent hither from Pope Eugenius the fourth, as a nameleſſe writer then living, wrote in theſe words. In the yeere of our Lord 1142. Iohn Papyrio a Cardinall ſent from Eugenius the fourth, Biſhop of Rome, together with Chriſtian Biſhop of Liſmore Legate of all Ireland, came into Ireland. The ſame Chriſtian held a ſolemne counſell in Mell, at which were preſent, all the Biſhops, Abbots, Kings, Dukes, and Elders of Ireland: By whoſe conſent, there were eſtabliſhed foure Archbiſhoprickes, namely, of Armach, of Dublin, of Caſſile, and Toam. Wherein ſat and ruled at the ſame time, Gelaſius, Gregorius, Donatus, and Edanus: And ſo the Cardinall, beſtowing his bleſsing upon the Cleargy returned to Rome. For, before that time, the Biſhops of Ireland were wont to be conſecrated by the Archbiſhopes of Canterburie, in regard of the Primacie which they had in Ireland. This did the Citizens of Dublin acknowledge, when they ſent Gregorie elect Biſhop of Dublin, unto Raulph Archbiſhop of Canterburie for to be conſecrated, by theſe words, Anteceſſorum veſtrorum Magiſterio &c. that is, Vnto the Magiſtacie of your Prædeceſſours, we willingly ſubmitted our (Prelats) from which we remember that our Prelats have received their dignity Eccleſiaſticall &c. Which appeereth for certaine out of letters alſo bearing date of greater antiquity, namly of Murchertach King of Ireland written unto Anſelme (Archbiſhop) of Canterburie, for the ordaining and enſtalling of the Biſhops of Dublin and of Waterford: likewiſe of King Gothriche unto Lanfranke his predeceſſour, in the behalfe of one Patricke a Biſhop: of Lanfranke alſo unto Therdelnac a King of Ireland, unto whom he complaineth, That the Iriſhmen forſake and leaue at their pleaſure their wedded wives, without any Canonicall cauſe, and match with any others, even ſuch as be neere of kin, either to themſelves or the ſaid forſaken wives: & if another man with like wickedneſſe hath caſt of any wife, hir alſo raſhly and hand over head they ioine with, by law of marriage or fornication rather, an abuſe worthy to be puniſhed. With which vices, if this nation had not beene corrupted even unto theſe daies of ours, both the right of lineall ſucceſſion among them had beene more certaine, and as well the gentry as the communalty had not embrued themſelves ſo wickedly with the effuſion of ſo much bloud of their owne kinred, about their inheritances and legitimation, neither had they become ſo infamous in theſe reſpects among foraine nations. But theſe matters are exorbitant of themſelves, and from my purpoſe.

Long had not that Archepiſcopall dignitie & Primacie beene eſtabliſhed, when Vivian the Popes Legate confirmed the ſame againe; ſo that their opinion may ſeeme to be worthy of diſcredite and confutation, who affirme, that the Archbiſhop of Armach hath in regard of antiquity the priority and ſuperiour place of the Archbiſhop of Canterburie in the Generall or Oecumenicall Councells; whereas by the firſt inſtitution he is by many ages the latter. Neither according to the antiquity

of

A of places are the ſeats in Councells appointed. But all Prælates, of what degree ſoever they be, ſit among their Colleagues, according to their owne ordination, enſtalling, and promotion. Lib. 1. Ceremoniarū Sacramentum. Sect. 14

What time as that Vivian was Legate in Ireland, Sir John Curcy ſubdued Armach, and made it ſubject to the Engliſh: And yet did he no harme then, but is reported to have beene very good and bountifull unto the Church men that ſerved God there, and he reedified their Church, which in our memorie was fiered, & foully defaced by the rebell Shan O Neal, and the Citie withall, ſo that they loſt all the ancient beauty and glory, and nothing remaineth at this day but very few ſmall watled cota-
B ges, with the ruinous walles of the Monaſterie, Priorie, and Primats pallace. Among the Archbiſhopes of this place, there goes the greateſt fame and name of Saint Malachie, the firſt that prohibited Prieſts marriage in Ireland, a man in his time learned and devout, and who tooke no leſſe of the native barbarouſneſſe of that country, than ſea fiſhes ſaltneſſe of the ſea, as ſaith, Saint Bernard, who wrote his life at large: alſo Richard Fitz-Raulfe, commonly called Armachanus, is of famous memorie, who turned the edge of his ſtile about the yeere 1355. againſt the mendicant Freers, as deteſting in Chriſtians ſuch Voluntarie begging. Neere to Armach upon a riſing hill
C remaine the reliques of an old Caſtle (Owen-Maugh they call it) which was, as they ſay, the ancient habitation of the Kings of Vlſter. More Eaſt, glideth the Black-water (in the Iriſh tongue More, that is, Great) which is the limit betweene this ſhire and Tir-Oen: whereof I am to ſpeake in due place. In this country and about it, Mac-Genis, O Hanlon, O Hagan, and many of the ſept of O-Neal, aſſuming unto them ſundry additions and bynames, carry all the ſway after a ſort, and over-rule the reſt.

THE COVNTY OF DOWN.

NOw followeth Eaſtward the County of DOWN, and that verily large and fertile in ſoile, ſtretched out even as farre as to the Iriſh ſea; reaching on the Northſide to the lake Eaugh, by a new name called Logh-
D Sidney, and on the South to the County of Louth, from which the river Newry ſevereth it. Vpon this river, in the very firſt entrance into this ſhire within our remembrance, Sir Nicolas Bagnall Mareſchall of Ireland, who by his conduct atchieved heere diverſe exploits, and reduced the country to more civility, built and fortified a towne of the ſame name. Hard by it, the river called Bantheleſſe, iſſuing out of the deſert mountaines of Mourne, paſſeth through the country of Eaugh, which belongeth to the family of Mac Gynnis: Betweene whom and the O-Neales who tyrannized in Vlſter, there fel in times paſt a controverſie, whether they were vaſſals to O Neale and whether they ſhould find their followers and ſoldiers victuals &c. (this kind of ſervice they call Bonoghty) This hath unto it an Epiſco-
E pall See at Dromore, above which at the edge of Logh Eaugh, are the tracts of Kilwlto and Kilwarny, much encombred with woods and bogges. Theſe lie inwardly. But by the maritime coaſt, the ſea doth ſo wind it ſelfe in, and with ſundry creeks and bayes encroch within the land, yea and the Logh or Lake dilateth it ſelfe beſide Dyffrin a valley full of woods, the inheritance in old time of the Mandevils, afterwards of the Whites, in ſuch ſort that it maketh two Bilands; Lecall, Southward, and Ardes Northward. Lecall a rich and battle ground, beareth out fartheſt into the Eaſt of any part of Ireland, and is the vtmoſt Promontory or cape thereof, which the F Mariners now tearme Saint Johns Foreland, Ptolomee calleth it ISANIVM, perhaps of the Britiſh word Iſa, which ſignifieth Loweſt. In the very ſtreight whereof flouriſhed DVNVM, wherof Ptolomee alſo made mention (though not in the right place) now named Down, a towne of very great antiquity, and a Biſhops See, renowned by the tombe of Sant Patricke, Saint Brigid, and Saint Columbe, upon which was written this rude rhiming diſtichon:

Iſanium the Promontory. Dunum. Down.

Hij tres in Duno, tumulo tumulantur in uno,
Brigida, Patricius, atque Columba pius.

At Doun these three lie buried in one tombe A Brigid, Patricke, and that devout Columb.

Which monument of theirs, as the bruite runneth, was demolished by the Lord Leonard Grey, Deputy under King Henry the Eighth: and sure it is, that when he was arraigned for misgoverning, and condemned therefore to death, among other imputations he was charged that he had profaned this Cathedrall Church of Saint Patricke. But as touching the Sepulcher of Saint Patricke, the religious Priests were at variance, like as the Cities of Greece in times past strove about the native country of the Poet Homer: These of Downe challeng it to themselves, and that upon the authoritie of the verses aforesaid: those of Armagh put in their claime out of the B words of Saint Bernard which erewhile I alledged: The Monkes of Glastenbury in England averred it to be with them, and that, out of the old Records and evidences of their Abbay: and some Scots have likewise avouched, that as he was borne nere unto Glasco, so likwise he was entered there at Kirk-Patricke. Into this Down, Sir John Curcy, that Martiall Englishman and (for a Warrior) extraordinarily devout to Godward, after he had brought this country in subjection unto him, was the first that brought in the Benedictine Monkes: and hee translated the Monasterie of Cariche, which Mac Neal, Mac Eulef King of Vlster had founded in Erinaich nere unto S. Finins Fountaine, into the Isle called after his name Ynis-Curcy, & endowed the same with lands assigned for it. For, before time the Monkes of Ireland, as those of ancient C times in Egypt, whose maner and order that devout man Congell, that is, by interpretation, A faire pledge, brought over into Ireland, being wholly given to prayer earned for themselves and the poore, their living, with the labour of their owne hands. Howbeit, these Monasticall orders and customes (as all humane things) continued not long, when their maners and carriage grew to be worse, and riches had by little and little polluted piety, which, as a mother, had formerly bred them. Robert Abbat of Molisme in Burgundie studied and endeavored earnestly in times past to reduce & set on foote againe the said ancient Discipline: & perswaded his own Disciples to live with their handy labour, to leave Tithes and Oblations unto the Priests that served in the Diœcesse, to forbeare wearing of Breeches made of woven cloth, or of lea- D ther. But they labouring to the contrary, refused flatly to goe from the customes observed in the Monasteries of the West parts of the world, which were knowne for certaine, to have beene instituted and ordained by Saint Maure scholler to Saint Benet, and by Saint Columban. But I have digressed too farre, now will I returne againe. By the sea-side stand Arglas, where Saint Patricke by report, founded a Church: and Strangford called in old time Strandford, a safe harbour where the river Coyn with a great and violent streame breaketh into the Sea. Neere unto which, in the Biland Lecale Queene marry in her great bounty unto Noblemen liberally gave lands unto the Earle of Kildare. And heere, of the English race the Russells, Audleys, Whites, and the Bagnalls who came thither last, stoutly defend, among the wild and fierce Irish, E not without danger, what they and their ancestours wonne in these parts.

Ardes the other Biland called The Andes lieth over against it to the North, severed with a small chanell out of the Logh-Coin, which on the West side encloseth it, like as the sea on the East side, and the Bay of Knoc-Fergus, on the North. You may resemble it to the bent of the arme, which, by a very narrow Isthm or necke of land groweth to the rest of the Iland like as an arme to the shoulder. The soile is every where passing good and bountifull, but onely in the mids, where lieth out for twelve miles or thereabout in length, a moist, flat, and boggy plaine. The shore is sufficiently bespred with small villages: and in times past had a most renowned Monasterie, at the Bay of Knoc-Fergus, of the same institution order and name, as was that right F ancient and famous Abbay in England neere unto Chester, I meane, Banchor. Out of whether of these twaine that Archhereticke Pelagius came, it is uncertain, whiles some will needs have him to spring from hence, others from that in Britaine: but neither of them grounding upon any certaine warrant of authority. Howbeit, certaine

Saint Patricks Sepulcher.

Robert de Monts, de Immutatione Ordinis Monachorum.

Banchor Abbay.

A certaine it is, that he was of Britaine, as may appeere by other teſtimonies, as alſo by this diſtichon of Proſper Aquitanus, inveying againſt his impiety. Pelagius the Arch heretick.

I procul inſana impietas, arteſque malignas
Aufer, & authorem comitare excluſa Britannum.
Avaunt farre hence impiety, and leawd arts take with thee:
Once gone, with Britiſh fire of thine, keepe alwaies companie.

But touching this place, heare what Saint Bernard ſaith: A rich and mighty man In the life of Malachias.
B gave a place called Banchor unto Malachie, to build or rather to recdefie there a Monaſterie. It had beene, ywis, a moſt noble houſe before time under the firſt founder and father Congell, breeding many thouſand Monkes, and the head likewiſe of many Monaſteries. A holy place in truth, and a breeder of many Saints, moſt plenteouſly fructifying unto God: ſo that one of the ſonnes of that holy congregation named Luan, is reported to have beene the founder of an hundred Monaſteries. Which I have beene more willing to relate, that by this one, the reader may give a gueſſe, what a mighty multitude there was beſide. Thus at length the ſprouts thereof replenished Ireland and Scotland. From out of which Saint Columbane comming up to theſe parts of ours heere in France, built the Monaſterie at Luxouium, which grew to a mighty multitude. And ſo great an Abbay, by report, this
C was, that the ſolemnity of divine ſervice held out continually in one quire after another: ſo that there was not one moment of time, night or day, without ſinging praiſes. Take all this to be ſpoken of the ancient glory of Banchor Monaſterie. Malachia both in regard of the noble name that it bare, and of the ancient dignity, eſpecially liked this place although it was deſtroyed; as minding to replant it like unto a certaine garden or Paradiſe, as alſo becauſe many bodies of Saints ſlept there. For, to ſay nothing of thoſe that were buried in peace, it is reported, that 900. in one day were ſlaine by Pirats. Verily, the poſſeſſions belonging to that place were great: But Malachias contenting himſelfe onely with the ſite of the Holy place, ſurrendred the poſſeſſions and lands wholly to another: for, from the
D time that the Monaſterie was deſtroyed, there wanted not one to hold it with the livings thereto belonging: For they were ordained by election alſo, and called Abbats, keeping ſtill in name, though it were not ſo in deede as it had beene in old time. And when many gave adviſe not to alienate the poſſeſſions, but to retaine the whole together unto themſelves, this profeſſor of poverty, agreed not thereto, but cauſed according to the cuſtome one to bee choſen, for to hold the ſame, reſerving onely to himſelfe and his, the place, as I have before ſaid. Moreover within a few daies there was the Oratorie or Church finiſhed, of timber peeces, made ſmooth, but fitly and firmely knit together (a Scottiſh kind of worke, faire and E beautifull enough.) Afterwards Malachie thought it good to have a Church built of ſtone, proportioned like to thoſe which he had ſeene built in other countries. And when he had begunne to lay the foundation, the native inhabitants of the Country beganne to make a wonder thereat, becauſe there were not found in that land as yet ſuch maner of buildings: And thereupon one cried out, O good Sir, what meane you to bring in this new faſhion into our Countries? Scots we are and not French. What vanity is this? what neede was there of ſuch worke, ſo ſuperfluous, ſo proud, and ſo glorious?

More inward hard by the Lake is the Biſhops See of Conereth or Coner, where ſat the ſaid Malachie as Biſhop: But what maner of flocke this ſo holy a paſtour fed, liſten unto Saint Bernard. Malachie, in the thirtieth yeere almoſt of his age, was brought in and preſented a Conſecrated Biſhop of Conereth, for this was the Cities name. Now Biſhopricke of Coner.
F when as he beganne to execute his function according to his office, then perceived this man of God, that it was his lot to come not unto men, but unto beaſts. No where had he to that time experience of ſuch, in the moſt barbarous parts that ever he came unto: No where had he found ſo maners ſo froward, ſo rites ſo develiſh, for faith ſo impious, for lawes ſo barbarous, for diſcipline ſo ſtifnecked, and for life ſo filthy. Chriſtians they were in name, and Paganes in deede. Tithes and firſt fruits they gave none: lawfull marriage they contracted none: confeſſions they made none, to crave or to give pennance there could be found juſt none: And Miniſters of the Altar there were very few or none: but what needs many words? where the very paucity and fewneſſe among the lay Perſons, was in maner idle and imployed about nothing? No fruit was to be expected by their duties and functions among ſo leawd a people. For in the Churches there was heard neither voice of preacher nor ſound of ſinging. What ſhould the Lords champion doe in this caſe? either he muſt yeeld with ſhame, or bicker in jeopardie. But hee, who acknowledged himſelfe to be a Sheapherd, and not an hireling, choſe rather to ſtand to it than to flie; ready to give his life for his ſheepe, if it ſo behooved. And albeit they were all wolves and no ſheepe, in the mids of wolves hee ſtood as a fearles Shepheard: by all meanes caſting about, how to make of wolves ſheepe. Thus wrote Saint Bernard; and little better can he that is Biſhop there at this day, ſay, as I heare, of his wilde flocke hereabout. A

Savage. This Ardes, the Savages, an Engliſh familie in times paſt held in poſſeſſion: amongſt whom there goeth a great name of him, who ſaid no leſſe ſtoutly than pleaſantly when hee was mooved to build a caſtle for his defence That hee would not truſt to a caſtle of ſtones, but rather to a caſtle of bones, meaning thereby his owne bodie. Afterward, the O-Neals wreſted it out of their hands: who beeing attainted of high treaſon, by permiſſion of Queene Elizabeth, Sir Thomas Smith Knight, and the Queenes Secretary planted a Colonie there, not long ſince: a worthie adventure, but it ſped unhappily. For, after great expenſes deffraied, the Iriſh, by a traine caught his baſe ſonne, whom hee had made Captaine and ruler thereof, and cruelly caſt him to hungry dogges: for which barbarous cruelty, thoſe moſt wicked wretches ſuffered afterward moſt grievous puniſhment accordingly, beeing killed and given unto Wolues to bee devoured. Aboue Ardes, Weſtward the more Southern Clan-boy, that is, the Yellow Nation or Sept, or the kinred of Hugh the Yellow, a country very full of woods, reacheth as farre as to the bay of Knock-Fergus, inhabited by the Sept of the O-Neales, and is counted the fartheſt territorie of this County of Downe. B C

Vpper Clane. Boy.

THE COVNTY of ANTRIM.

Knoc-Fergus. THe next County in order unto Louth Northward, is that of Antrim, ſo called of Antrim a baſe townelet of ſmall reckoning at all, had it not imparted the name unto the whole country, which lieth betweene the Bay of Knoc-Fergus, Logh-Eaugh, and the river Ban. This Bay of Knoc-Fergus which Ptolomee tearmeth Vinderivs, tooke name of a towne ſituate upon it, which the Engliſh call Knoc-Fergus, the Iriſh, Carig-Fergus, that is, the Rock of Fergus, of that moſt renowned Fergus, who firſt brought the Scotiſh out of Ireland into Britaine, there drowned. This is well inhabited and more frequented than the reſt in this coaſt, by reaſon of the commodious haven, although the blockhouſes thereto be unfiniſhed, having a fortreſſe pitched upon an high rocke, a ward of garizon ſouldiours to keepe the country in awe and good order, with an ancient Palace converted now into a magazin. Hard by it lieth the Nether Clane-boy, which alſo was the habitation of O-Neales, notable for the death of that moſt leawd Rebell Shan or Iohn O-Neal, who after many robberies and ſacrileges committed, beeing in one or two skirmiſhes under the leading of Sir Herny Sidney Lord Deputy, vanquiſhed and weakened, was brought to that exigent, that hee was reſolued to goe unto the Deputy with an halter about his necke and ſubmiſly to craue pardon: but being perſwaded by his Scribe, to ſeeke firſt for aide of certaine Scots of the Iſlands, who under the conduct of Alexander Oge, had encamped themſelues here, and preied in the country, he came unto them, who gaue him friendly interteinment, and preſently maſacred him and all his company in revenge of their kinsfolke whom hee had beforeſlaine. By whoſe death, the warre being ended, and himſelfe withall thoſe that went into the field with him attainted, Queene Elizabeth granted this Claneboy unto Walter D' Eureux Earle of Eſſex, who croſſed over the ſeas hither, and, I wot not, whether under a goodly colour of honour (for choſen hee was Gouernour of Vlſter and Mareſchal of Ireland) hee was by the polliticke practiſe of ſome D E F

Neather Clane-Boy.

Courteours

A Courteours finely packed away into a Country alwaies rebellious and untamed. But whiles with the expenſe of a mighty maſſe of money, hee went about to reduce it to good order, after hee had beene croſſed and toſſed with many troubles both at home and abroade in the warres, hee was by untimely death taken out of this world, leaving unto all good men a wonderfull miſſe of himſelfe, and this Country unto the O-Neales and Brian Carragh, of the Mac-Conells race, who ſince that time haue gone together by the eares, and committed many murders one upon another, about the ſoveraignty of this Seignory.

Neere unto Knoc-Fergus there is a By-land, with a narrow necke (as it were) annexed to the maine, which notwithſtanding is called the Iſle of Magie, taking up Iſle of Magie.
B foure miles in length and one in bredth: wherein, as ſome ſuppoſe, flouriſhed that Monaſterie of Magio ſo highly praiſed by Bede: whereof I haue made mention before in the County of Majo.

Then the Glinnes, that is, the Valleys, beginne at Older-Fleet a bad roade for ſhips, Glinnes.
and runne out a great length upon the ſea. This country belonged in ancient Biſſets.
times to the Biſſets Noblemen of Scotland, who when upon private grudges and quarells they had made away Patrick Earle of Athol; were baniſhed hither, and through the beneficiall favour of Henry the Third King of England, received Lands here. For, Iohn Biſſet, who died in the beginning of Edward the Firſt his reigne, had large poſſeſſions heere, and under King Edward the Second, Hugh Biſſet for re-
C bellion loſt ſome of them. But in our fathers daies; the Highland Iriſh Scots, out of Cantire and the Hebrides, under the leading of Iames Mac-Conell Lord of Cantire in Scotland, made an entry upon the ſame, and he laying claime thereto challenged it, as deſcended from the Biſſets. Howbeit Shan O-Neale having ſlaine their Capitaine eaſily chaſed them away. Yet returned they, and in this tract committed continually robberies and outrages in cruell manner, yea and mainteined ſeditious commotions, untill that even of late Sir Iohn Perot Lord Deputy of Ireland brought firſt Donell Goran (who togither with his brother Alexander was ſlaine by Sir Richard Bingham in Conaght) and afterward Agnus Mac Conel, the ſonnes of Iames Iames Mac. Conell.
Mac-Conel, to that paſſe, that they betooke themſelues to the Queene of Englands
D protection, and upon their humuble ſuite received at her hands this county to bee held of her by ſervice under certaine conditions, namely to beare armes within Ireland under none other but the Kings of England, and to pay yeerely a certaine number of cowes and haukes &c.

Aboue this, as farre as to the river Bann, all the tract is called Rowte, the ſeat of the The Rowte.
Mac-Guillies, a familie of good reputation in their country: which, notwithſtanding Mac-Guilly.
the violence of the Iſlander Scots, and their continuall depredations, hath driven Surley Boy Chairly Boy.
them into a narrow corner: For, Surley Boy, that is, Charles the Yellow, brother unto Iames Mac-Conel, who poſſeſſed himſelfe of the Glines, became alſo in ſome ſort Lord hereof: untill that Sir Iohn Perot Lord Deputy, having wonne Donluſe Caſtle, a very Donluſe.
E ſtrong pile, ſeated upon a rocke that hangeth over the ſea, and ſevered from the Land with a deepe ditch, diſpoſſeſſed him and all his. Which for all that, hee recovered the next yeere following by treaſon, after hee had ſlaine Carie the Captaine thereof, who manfully defended himſelfe. But the Lord Deputy ſending againſt him Captaine Meriman an approved warrior who ſlew the two ſonnes of Iames Mac-Conel, and Alexander this Surley Boys ſonne, ſo courſed him from place to place, and drave away his cattaile the onely riches he had (for, hee was able to number of his owne ſtocke 50000. cowes) ſo that Surley Boy rendred Donluſe, came to Dublin, and in the Cathedrall Church openly made his ſubmiſſion, exhibited a ſupplication craving mercy, and afterwards being admitted into the Lord Deputies Great Cham-
F ber, ſo ſoone as hee ſaw the Picture of Queene Elizabeth upon a table, once or twice flung away his ſword, fell downe at her feet, and devoted himſelfe unto her Majeſty. Whereupon being received into favour and ranged among the ſubjects of Ireland, he abjured and renounced openly in the Courts of Chancery and Kings Bench all ſervice and allegeance to any foraine Kings whatſoever: and hee had given unto him by the bounteous liberality of Queene Elizabeth, foure territories (Toughes they call them) lying from the river Boys unto the Bay, Donſeverig, Loghill, and Balla-monyn, with the Conſtableſhip of Donluſe Caſtle, to him and the heires males of his bodie, to hold of the Kings of England with theſe conditions, That neither hee nor his, nor yet his poſterity, ſerue in the warres under any foraine Prince without Licence; That they keepe their people from all depredations: That they furniſh and finde twelve horſemen, and fortie footmen, at their owne charges for fortie daies in time of warre; and preſent unto the Kings of England a certaine number of cowes and hawkes yeerely &c. A

THE COVNTY OF COLRAN. B

River Ban.

BEyond the Glynnes, Weſt, ſtandeth Krine, which now they call the County COLRAN, of the principall towne therein, It lieth betweene the river Ban and Lough-foile, and confineth South upon the County of Tir-Oën. This Ban a paſſing faire river as Giraldus ſaith (which the name alſo witneſſeth) riſing out of the Mountaines of Mourne in the County of Downe, carrieth himſelfe and his name into Lough Eaugh or Lough-Sidney a large Lake: which name for all that, after thirty miles or thereabout (for ſo great length that Lake is eſteemed to be) at his going forth in the end he reſumeth againe at Tome Caſtle, and being beſet and ſhadowed along the ſides with woods, by Glancolkein, where by reaſon of thicke woods, & unpaſſable bogges there is the ſafeſt place of refuge for the Scottiſh Ilandes and the Rebels (and which the Engliſh felt who purſued Surley Boy whiles he lurked heere) carying a proud ſtreame, entereth into the ſea: breeding Salmons in aboundance above any other river in all Europe: becauſe as ſome thinke it paſſeth all the reſt for cleereneſſe, in the which kinde of water Salmons take ſpeciall delight. In this part, the O Cahans were of greateſt authority, the principall perſon of which family O Cahan is thought to be one of the greateſt of thoſe Potentates or Vraights, as they terme them, that ought ſervice unto O Neal the Tyrant of Vlſter: As who in that barbarous election of O-Neal, which with as barbarous ceremonies is ſolemnized in the open aire upon an high hil, performeth this honorable ſervice forſooth as to fling a ſhooe over the head of the elected O-Neal. Howbeit, he is not of power ſufficient to reſtrain the Scots Ilanders, who to ſave charges at home every yeere in Summer time flocke hither out of thoſe hungry and barraine Ilands (where is nothing but beggery) to get their living; ready upon every occaſion and opportunity to maintaine rebellions; in ſo much as provided it hath beene by law, under paine of high treaſon, that no perſon call them into Ireland, nor give them lodging, or entertainement.

Glan-Colkein.

Salmons.

O-Cahan.

Vraights.

The Election Of O-Neale.

Scottiſh Ilanders.

C D

But this County with other confining is eſcheated to the King: who gratiouſly purpoſing a civill plantation of thoſe vnreformed, and waſte parts is pleaſed to diſtribute the ſaid lands to his civill ſubjects, and the City of London hath undertaken to plant Colonies heere. E

THE COVNTY OF TIR-OEN.

BEneath Colran lieth Southward the County of TIR-OEN, in old bookes named alſo Tir-Eogain, that is, if a man interpret it, The land of Eugenius, which name the Iriſh have contracted into Eogain and Oën. This is altogether upland from the ſea, divided toward the Sunnes ſetting by the river Liffer from Tir-Conell, toward the riſing with the Logh Eaugh from the County of Antrim, and Southward with the Blackwater, which in Iriſh they call Aven More, F

that

A that is, The great Water, from the County of Armagh. A country though rough and rugged, yet fruitfull and very large, as which lieth out threescore miles in length, and thirty in bredth: divided by the Mountaines called Sliew Gallen, into the Vpper Tir-Oën Northward, and the Nether Southward. Vpper-Tir-Owen.

In it are first Cloghar a Bishopricke, and that a slender one; then Dunganon, the chiefe habitation of the Earles; which through the favour of King Henry the Eight gave the title of Baron unto Matthew sonne to the first Earle of Tir-Oën. And verily this is an house fairer built than commonly they be in this Country, but hath beene oftentimes by the Lords themselves defaced with fire, because it should not be burnt B by the enemy: also Vblogahell, where O-Neal that most proudly ruleth and oppresseth Vlster was wont to be inaugurated after that barbarous maner and tradition of the Country: And the Fort at Black-water or the River More, which hath susteined the variable changes and chances of warre, whiles there was no other way into this country, being the place of refuge for the Rebels: But now it is neglect ever since there was found another Ford more below, at which on both sides of the river, Charles Lord Montjoy, Deputy erected new Sconces, when with hot war hee pursued the rebels in these parts. Who likewise at the same time raised another garison-fort, called by his owne name Mont joy, at the Lake Eaugh (Logh Sidney in honor of Henrie Sidney, souldiers now tearme it) which encloseth the West side of this C shire, and is made, or much encreased by the river Bann, as I have said. Surely this is a goodly and beautifull Lake, passing fishfull, and very large, as stretching out thirty miles or thereabout, as the Poet saith. Bishopricke of Cloghter. Dunganon. Baron of Dunganon. Fort of black-water.

——Dulci mentitur Nerea fluctu.
Fresh water though it bee,
A Sea folke thinke they see.

And considering the variety of shew upon the bankes, the shady groves, the medowes alwaies greene, the fertile corne fields, if they be well manured; the bending D and hanging hilles, and the rills running into it, fashioned and shaped for pleasure and profite even by Nature herselfe, who seemeth as it were to be very angry with the inhabitants therby, for suffering all to grow wild and barbarous through their lasie litherneſſe. In the vpper Tir-Oen, stands Straban a Castle well knowne, wherin dwelt in our daies Turlogh Leinigh of the sept of O-Neals: who after the death of Shane O-Neale as I shall shew anone, by election of the people attained to the dignity of O-Neal: also some other Piles and Fortresses of smaller reckoning, the which (like as elsewhere in this Iland) be no more but towres with narrow loope holes rather than windowes, unto which adjoine Hauls made of turfes, and roufed over head with thatch: having unto them belonging large Courts or yards fense d round E about with ditches and hedges of rough bushes for defense of their cattaile against Cowe-stealers. But if this county have any name or glory at all, it is wholly from the Lords thereof, who have ruled heere as Kings and Tyrants rather: of whom there were two Earles of Tir-Oen, namely Con O-Neale, and Hugh his nephew by his sonne Matthew. But of these I will speake more at large by and by, when I am to to treat of the Earles and Lords of Vlster.

THE COVNTY OF DONEGALL or TIR-CONELL.

F WHatsoever remaineth now behind in Vlster toward the North and south, was possessed in ancient times by the ROBOGDII, & VENNICNII; but at this day it is called the County of DONEGALL or TIRCONELL, that is, as some interpret it, The land of Cornelius, or as others, The land of Conall; and in truth, Marianus plainly nameth it, Conallea.

Conallea. The County is all in a maner champian and full of havens, as bounded with A the sea on the North and West sides beating upon it, and disioyned on the East from Tir Oën with the river Liffer, and from Conaght with the Lake Erne. Liffer nere unto his spring head, enlargeth his streame, and spreadeth abroad into a Lake, wherein appeereth aboue the water an Island, and in it hard by a little Monastery, a very narrow vault within the ground, much spoken of, by reason of, I wot not what fearefull walking spirits, and dreadfull apparitions, or rather some religious horrour: Which caue, as some dreame ridiculously, was digged by Vlisses, when hee went downe to parlee with those in hell.

Patricks Purgatory. The Inhabitants terme it in these daies Ellan u' Frugadory, that is, The Isle of Purgatory, and Saint Patricks purgatory. For, some persons devoutly credulous, affirme, B that Patrick the Irishmens Apostle, or else some Abbat of the same name, obtained by most earnest praier at the hands of God, that the punishments & torments which the Godlesse are to suffer after this life, might here bee presented to the eye: that so hee might more easily root out the sinnes which stuck so fast to his Countrimen the Irish; and withall their heathenish errors. But seeing that this place is named in Regia. Saint Patricks life, Reglis, I would deeme it to bee the other Reglis. Regia that Ptolomee mentioneth: and the very situation of it in the Geographer: implieth no lesse. Besides this Patricks Purgatorie, their was another Purgatorie also of Sir Brendan in this Island; but since I could not finde out the place, take here with you that only which I found, namely Nechams Tetrastichon of it.

C

Asserit esse locum solennis fama dicatum
Brendano, quo lux lucida sæpe micat.
Purgandas animas datur hic transire per ignes,
Vt dignæ facie iudicis esse queant.

If common fame say true, a place of Brendan taking name,
There is: and often times cleere lights doe shine within the same.
The soules haue licence here to passe through Purgatory fire,
That worthily before that Iudge, they may at length appeere.

D

Where this river Liffer augmented by other waters comming unto it, approacheth nerer to the sea, it spreadeth out againe into a Lake, which Ptolomee called Logia, and now they usually terme it Logh Foyle and Logh Der, whereupon Necham hath these verses.

Lough Der aquis diues Lacus est, Vltonia novit:
Commodus indigenis utilitate placet.
Lough-Der a Lake in waters rich: This Vlster knoweth well,
Commodious, and pleasing much those that about it dwell.

Derry. Hard by this, there flourished sometime Derry a monasterie, and Episcopall See; E
Where, in the yeare 1566. Edward Randolph renowned for his long service in the warres spent his life in the behalfe of his Country to his everlasting fame, and gaue Shane O-Neal (who had then assembled and armed all the powre he could possibly against the English) such an overthrow, as that he could never after recover the losse he then susteined. But now of late, Sir Henry Docwra knight, who in the warres of Ireland quit him so well, that with great praise hee hath approved his singular valour, and martiall skill, brought hither first a garizon, and afterwards planted heere a Colony, to bridle the Earle of Tir-Oëns insolent pride: and established and settled the same with so good orders, that it both standeth in good steed for helpe against the Robogdij. Rebells and also traineth the barbarous people to their duties. The Robogdii F placed aboue Logia held all that Northren sea coast of Ireland, where O-Doghertie an obscure Potentate had great sway. Amongst these, Robogh a little Episco-Robogdium Promontory. pall towne reteineth the expresse footings of the old name, Robogdij. Which should be that promontory Robogdivm, unlesse it bee Faire Foreland, I know not. From hence

A hence the utmoſt ſhores all rockie bend backe againe by the mouth of Swilly Lake, which Ptolomee ſeemeth to call ARGITA.

Beyond theſe more Weſtward were the VENNICNII ſeated, where Mac Rwyn Faid, Mac Swyn Netoeth, and Mac Swyn Bannigh have great lands and large poſſeſſions. Among theſe, Ptolomee placeth the river VIDVA, which now is called Crodagh, and the Promontory VENNICNIVM which they now call Rames-head, and the Foreland BORAEVM, now S. Helens Head. Vennicnij. River Vidua. Boreum Promontory.

Upon the ſhore, as it twineth backe from hence Southerly, Calebeg affourdeth an Haven and commodious harbour for ſailers: then appeare the ruines and rubbiſh of Sligah Caſtle, which Maurice Fitz-Girald Lord Inſtice of Ireland built about the yeere 1242. when he had made himſelfe Lord of this Country. But John Fitz-Girald the B firſt Earle of Kildare was diſpoſſeſſed of this Caſtle and a goodly inheritance in this tract, fined alſo in a great ſum of mony, for that he had raiſed a civill and dangerous war againſt the Earle of Vlſter. Sligah.

Lower yet and not far from the mouth of Logh Earne, Donegal, that is, The towne of the Gallicians of Spaine, with an Abby ſheweth it ſelfe, whence this County when it was made a County, tooke the name. Donegall.

There have beene rulers over this territory for theſe many ages they of the houſe of O Donel, and thoſe extracted from the ſame ſtocke that the family of Oneals: neither had they any other title than O-Donell, and Lords of Tir-Conell. For the getting of which title, and that they might be by a certaine election of the people inaugurated with their due complements at a ſtone beſide Kilmacrenan, they were at deadly C diſcord, and committed outrages one upon another, untill that King Iames not long ſince by his honourable Letters Patents conferred the honour, title, and ſtile of Earle Tir-Conell upon Rory O-Donell the brother of that Hugh the rebell, who being fled out of his Country died in Spaine, and this Rory his ſucceſſour practiſing new treaſon againſt King Iames his advancer upon the terrour of a guilty conſcience fled the Realme in the yeare 1607. and died at Rome. Odonell.

The ancient inhabitants of this Vlſter, like as the reſt of all Ireland throughout, were by one name in times paſt cleped SCOTI, and from hence caried they over with them the name of Scots into the North parts of Britain. For as Giraldus writeth, Scoti.

D about the yeere of Salvation foure hundred, ſix ſonnes of Mured King of Vlſter ſeized upon the North parts of Britain, whereupon it was by a ſpeciall and peculiar name called SCOTIA. And yet it appeareth by the Scotiſh Annales, that this hapned long before. Alſo Ferguſe the ſecond, who reeſtabliſhed the Kingdome of Scots in Britain came from hence, unto whom Patricke had propheſied by way of Divination or Soothſaying in theſe words: Although thou ſeemeſt at this day baſe and contemptible in the eies of thy brethren, thou ſhalt ſhortly be the Prince and Lord of them all. And to avow the credit and authority of this prediction, the ſaid writer addeth moreover and ſaith: No long ſpace of time after this, Fergus according to the Holy mans propheſie, obteined

E the ſoveraignty in all that land, & his ſeed raigned for many generations together. From his ſtemme proceeded that moſt Valorous King Edan, the ſonne of Gabran, who ſubdued Scotland that is called Albanach, whoſe poſterity in linall deſcent and ſucceſſion reigneth there ſtill. In the life of S. Patrick.

The firſt Engliſhman that in the reigne of King Henry the Second attempted this Country was Sir Iohn Curcy, who having by force won Downe and Armach; either by dint of ſword conquered, or by ſurrender gat the whole into his owne hands, and was the firſt that was ſtiled Earle of Vlſter; but when his great exploits and fortunate atcheivements had wrought him ſuch envie, that through his owne vertues and o-F ther mens vices he was baniſhed out of the Realme, Hugh Lacy, the ſecond ſonne of Hugh Lacy Lord of Meth, who had commandement to purſue him by force and armes, was by King Iohn appointed his ſucceſſour, being created Earle of Vlſter, by the ſword, of which honour notwithſtanding the ſame King afterwards deprived him for his tumultuous inſolency: and he was in the end received into favour againe. But for the ſounder teſtimony heereof, it were good to exemplifie the ſame word Earles of Vlſter. Ann. 7. Ioannis.

for

for word out of the Records of Ireland. Hugh de Lacy ſomtime Earle of Vlſter, held al Vlſter (exempt & ſeperate from all other counties whatſoever) of the Kings of England in chiefe by ſervice of three Knights ſo often as the Kings ſervice was proclaimed: & he held al Pleas, in his own court, that pertain to a Iuſtice and Sheriff, & held a Court of Chauncery of his own &c. And afterward all Vlſter came into tht hands of our ſoveraign Lord K. Iohn by the forfaiture of the foreſaid Hugh: unto whom after that K. Henry the third dimiſed it for terme of the ſaid Hughs life. And when Hugh was deceaſed, Walter de Burgo did that ſervice unto Lord Edward K. Henry his ſon, Lord of Ireland before he was King. And the ſame Lord Edward feoffed the aforeſaid Walter in the ſaid land of Vlſter, to have and to hold, unto the ſame Walter and to his heires, by the ſervice aforeſaid, as freely and wholly as the above named Hugh de Lacy held it, excepting the Advowſons of Cathedrall Churches and the demeſne of the ſame, alſo the Pleas of the Crowne, to wit, Rape, Foriſtall, Fyring, and Treaſure Trouue, which our ſoveraigne Lord King Edward retained to himſelfe and his heires. This Walter de Burgo, who was Lord of Conaght and Earle of Vlſter, begat of the onely daughter of Hugh de Lacy, Richard Earle of Vlſter, who after he had endured many troubles and calamities died in the yeere 1326. Richard had iſſue Iohn de Burgo, who departed this life before his father, having begotten upon Elizabeth ſiſter & one of the heires of Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloceſter, William; who ſucceeded after his grandfather. This William being ſlaine by his owne men when he was young, left behind him a little daughter his onely child, who being married unto Leonell Duke of Clarnce beare one daughter likewiſe, the wife of Edmund Mortimer Earle of March, by whom the Earledome of Vlſter and Signiorie of Conaght came unto the Mortimers, and from them together with the Kingdome of Eangland unto the houſe of Yorke: and afterward Edward the fourth King of England adjoined it unto the Kings Domaine or Crownland.

See page 624. and 725.

And when as at the ſame time England was divided into ſides and factions, whiles the civill warre grew hote, and the Engliſh that abode heere returned out of Vlſter into England to follow the factions, O Neal and others of Iriſh bloud ſeized theſe countries into their owne hands, and brought them to ſuch wildneſſe and ſavage barbariſme, as it exceeded: In ſo much as this province which in times paſt paied a mighty maſſe of money unto their Earles, ſcarcely ever ſince yeelded any coine at all unto the Kings of England.

Ireland neglected.

And verily in no one thing whatſoever (pardon this my over-boldnes) have the Kings of England beene more defective in pietie and policie, than that they have for theſe ſo many ages ſeene ſo ſlightly to this Province, yea and to all Ireland, in the propagation of religion, eſtabliſhing the weale publicke, and reducing the life of the inhabitants to civility: whether it was for careleſſe neglect, ſparing, or a foreeaſt of dammage, or ſome reaſon of ſtate, I am not able to ſay. But that the ſame may be no longer thus neglected, it ſeemeth of it ſelfe by good right to importune moſt earneſtly, being an Iland ſo great, ſo neere a neighbour, ſo fruitfull in ſoile, ſo rich in paſtures more than credible, beſet with ſo many woods, enriched with ſo many mineralles (if they were ſearched) watered with ſo many rivers, environed with ſo many havens, lying ſo fit and commodious for ſailing into moſt wealthy countries, and thereby like to be for impoſt and cuſtome very profitable: and to conclude, breeding and rearing men ſo abundantly as it doth, who conſidering either their minds, or their bodies, might be of ſingular emploiment for all duties and functions as well of warre as of peace, if they were wrought and conformed to orderly ciuilitie.

A I Intimted even now, that I would speake touching the O-Neales who carried themselves as Lords of Vlster; and I promised not long since a friend of mine, that I would write of their rebellions raised in our age. And verily I will performe my promise, to his Manes, whom whiles hee lived I observed with all respect, and being now in heven I will not forget. Thus much onely will I promise by way of præface, that I have compendiously collected these matters out of my Annales, and heere conioined them which there are seuered and divided according to their seuerall times: and withall that whatsoever I shal write, is not vpon uncertain rumors, but gathered summarily from
B out of their owne hand writings, who managed those affaires, and were present in the Actions: And this will I doe with so sincere an affection to the truth, and so uncorrupt fidelity, that I doubt not, but I shall haue thankes at their hands who love the Truth and desire to understand the late affaires of Ireland, and not incurre the blame if any, unlesse they be such as having done ill, take it not well if themselves be accordingly censured.

C

THE O-NEALES, and Their rebellions in our time.

D TO say nothing of that Great Neale who ruled by force and armes in Vlster, and a great part of Ireland before the comming of Saint Patricke, nor of those in the midle times, who were but of meane note and memoriall to speake of; this familie, after the arriuall of the English in Ireland, lay close and obscure, in remote lurking corners, unlesse it were when Edward Brus brother to Robert King of Scotland, named himselfe King of Ireland. For then, in a troublesome time, Douenald O-Neale started and rouse himselfe out of his lurking holes, and in his misiues unto the Pope used this title in his stile, Douenald O-Neal King of Vlster, and in right of inheritance the undoubted heire of all Ireland: But after these sturres and troubles were laid, this new King soone vanished away: and Dovenalds posterity pluckt in their hornes and hid their heads, untill that, whiles England was all in a combustion, kindled by the furious firebrands of civill warres betweene the houses of Yorke and Lancaster for the imperiall Crowne; those English that served and lived heere, abandoning Vlster, & committing it to the keeping of the O-Neals, returned home to follow the factions. For then, Henrie O-Neal, the sonne of Oën or Eugenius O-Neal, espoused the daughter of Thomas, Earle of Kildare: and his sonne Con-More, that is, Con the Great, married the daughter of Girald Earle of Kildare his mothers brother.

Scoto-Chronicon lib. 12. cap. 26.

F These supported by the powerfull authority of the Earles of Kildare (who verily for many yeeres were Deputies of Ireland) carried their heads aloft, tyrannizing cruelly upon the people, & transported with the insolent spirit of pride, disdained all the titles of Prince, Duke, Marquesse, and Earles, in comparison of the name of O-Neal. Con the sonne of Con, surnamed Bacco, becaus he halted, succeeded his father in the the dignity of O-Neale, who curſed all his poſterity, in caſe they either learned to A ſpeake Engliſh, or ſowed wheat, or built houſes: beeing ſore affraied, leaſt by theſe inducements the Engliſh might bee allured to enter againe into their lands and * poſſeſſions: often ſaying that language bred converſation, and conſequely their confuſion, that wheat gaue ſuſtenance with like effect: and by building they ſhould doe but as the crowe doth, make her neſt, to bee beaten out by the hawke.

When as the greatneſſe of this Con O-Neale became very much ſpected of King Henry the Eight, and the Kings power, having now troden underfoot the familie of Kildare, in whoſe rebellion O-Neale had engaged himſelfe deepe, grew dreadfull to O-Neale alſo: into England he comes, and there renouncing the name of O-Neale, put his whole eſtate into the Kings hands: which within a while after B was granted againe by letters Patent under the great ſeale of England, to hold as in fee, togither with the title of the Earle of Tir-Oën, to him and to Mathew his falſe reputed ſonne and to the heires of their bodies lawfully begoten. And Matthew at the ſame time was created Baron of Dunganon. This Mathew beeing taken untill he was fifteene yeeres old for the ſonne of a black ſmith in Dindalk, was by the ſaid Shan or Iohn O-Neal. Smiths wife, whom Con had ſometime kept as his concubine, tendred unto Con as his owne ſonne, and hee accepted him for his owne ſonne: in deed rejected Iohn (Shan they call him) with the reſt, whom he had begotten on his owne lawfull wife.
Hereupon Shan, ſeeing a baſtard preferred before him, ſo much made of, and highly honoured, ſo dainely ſet his heart wholy againſt his father, and withall burned C in ſuch hatred with moſt bitter malice againſt Mathew, that hee murdered him out of the way, and ſo plagued and vexed his father with injurious indignities, whiles he went about to depriue him of his Seignorie, diſſeized him of his dwelling houſe, and ſtript him out of all hee had, that the old man for very thought and griefe of heart pined away, and died. Streight waies Shan being choſen, proclaimed and inau-gured O-Neal, by an old ſhoe caſt over his head, ſeized upon his fathers inheritance, and with all diligence ſought after the ſonnes of Mathew, that hee might bee ſecured from them; but they were fled and gone. Howbeit Brian the eldeſt ſonne not long after was ſlaine by Mac-Donel Totan one of the O-Neals race, ſuborned as ſome giue it out, by Shan to doe that feat. Hugh and Cormack by the meanes and D helpe of the Engliſh eſcaped, and yet remaine aliue. Shan hauing thus gotten all into his owne hands (as hee was a man cruell and barbarous) beganne to exerciſe exceſſiue cruelty over the great men of Vlſter, and made his vaunt, that Mac-Gen-nys, Mac-Guyr, Mac-Mahon, O Reali, O-Hanlon, O Cahan, Mac-Brien, O Hagan, O Quin, Mac Canna, Mac-Cartan, and all the Mac Donels, the Galloglaſſes were his ſubjects, and vaſſalles.

And when as Sir Henry Sidney Iuſtice for the time being, in the abſence of the Earle of Suſſex Lord Deputy, expoſtulated with him about theſe points, he anſwe-red, that he, the undoubted and lawfull ſonne and heire of Con O-Neal, as being borne of his lawfull wife, had entred upon his fathers inheritance: that Matthew was E a Blacke-Smiths ſonne of Dundalke, and by the ſaid Smith begotten, and borne after his mariage with Aliſon his wife, yet craftily obtruded upon Con as his ſonne, ther-by to intervert another way and to alienate the inheritance and honour of O-Neale: which howſoever hee would endure, yet none beſides of the Sept of O-Neals would ever beare and diſgeſt. As for the letter Patent of King Henry the Eight, they were of no validity, conſidering that Con had no right in that hee ſurrendered into the Kings hands, longer than his owne life: neither could hee ſurrender up the ſame without the conſent of the Nobles and people of Vlſter by whom hee had beene elected O-Neale: Neither were ſuch Patents of any force, unleſſe there were an undoubted heire apparent of the familie authentically ſignified before by inquiſiti- F on and the oth of twelue men: Which in this matter was never certified. Alſo, that himſelfe was by law both of God and man the true heire, as beeing the firſt begotten ſonne of his father, lawfully borne in wedlocke; that with the generall aſſent and conſent of Peeres and people he was choſen, declared, and proclaimed

O-Neale

A O-Neale according to the ancient law of Tanistry, whereby a man at his full yeeres is to be preferred before a Boy, and an Vncle before that Nephew, whose grandfather survived the father: neither had he arrogated unto himselfe any authority over the Peeres or Nobles of Vlster, other than his ancestours (as hee was able to proue by plaine proofes produced) had exercised in times past out of minde most rightfullie.

Howbeit, soone after he outraged and overthrew O-Raylie in the field, tooke Callogh O-Donell Lord of Tir-Conell prisoner, and cast him with his children into prison; carried away his wife, on whom hee begat children in adultery, seized upon his fortresses, lands, and goods, and bare himselfe as absolute King of all Vlster.

Thomas Earle of Sussex Lord Deputy.

But so soone as Thomas Earle of Sussex the Lord Deputy came with a powre in-
B to the field for to abate this insolency of his, hee was strangely terrified, and by the perswasion of Girald Earle of Kildare, whom Queene Marie had restored to his former estate, came into England unto Queene Elizabeth, cast himself prostrate at her feet in al submissiue and humble maner, & being received withal courtesie, after he had promised his allegiance, returned home; and for a while in his feeding & apparel conformed himself to all kind of civility: he assailed the Scottish & draue them quite out of Vlster, slew Iames Mac Conell their leader, kept himselfe and al his people in good order, and the poorer sort he carefully protected from wrongs: Howbeit, he tyrannized most cruelly and insolently over the Nobility: who when they had craved aide of the Lo. Deputy for to represse his intolerable violence, he thereupon growing
C more outrageous, in furious maner with fire and sword draue Mac-Guir Lord of Fermanagh (who underhand had accused him) out of house and home, set fire upon the Metropolitane Church of Armach, and burnt it, yea and laied siege unto Dundalik on every side; but his enterprise was made frustrate through the valour of the soldiers there in garizon, and William Sarfeild Major of Dublin, who went forth against him with the very floure of choise Citizens. Howbeit the neighbour Countries round about he harried and spoiled in all maner of hostility.

Sir Henry Sidney Lord Deputy.

Then Sir Henry Sidney the Deputy, to restreine and bridle the boldnesse of the 1565. man, came himselfe in person with an Armie into the field against him, and by politicke forecast sent before, Edward Randolph an old approved and renowned Co-
D ronell with seven ensignes of foote men and a cornet of horsemen by sea, into the North side of Ireland; who encamped at Dirry by Logh-foil, that he might charge upon the backe of the Rebell. Which hee fearing, came thither speedily with all the powre and forces that hee had, to remooue him; But Randolph in a pitcht field gaue him battaile, and there manfully fighting, with honour lost his life in his Countries service, but gaue him withall such an overthrow, that never after he was able to make head againe: and beeing elsewhere in light skirmishes foiled and by little and little forsaken of his owne followers, he was minded with an halter tied about his necke humbly to beseech the Lord Deputy his protection
E and mercy. But beeing by his Secretarie perswaded first to try the friendship of the Scottes, who under the conduct of Alexander Oge, that is, the younger, held their standing summer campe in Claneboy, having sent before hand Surley Boy Alexanders brother, whom he had kept prisoner a long time, to prepare the waie; he came unto them with the wife of O-Donell whom he kept: was kindely welcomed and admitted with some few into a tent; where after they had beene in their cups, they brake out into a brawle about Iames Mac-Conell Alexanders brother, whom Shan had slaine, and also about the honestie of Iames his sister, whom Shan had married and cast off: by which time Alexander Oge, and his brother Mac- 1567.
F Gillaspic being hote set upon revenge, after a signall given, with their drawen swords set upon Shan, & with many a wound hacked and hewed him to death: whereby the Province recovered, after grieuous oppressions and warre, the benefites of wished peace.

Within a while after, a Parliament was holden at Dublin, where by the authority of all the States of the Realme there assembled, Shan was attainted, and in all the Seignories lands, and goods which hee and his followers had, were inveſted in Queene Elizabeth her heires and ſucceſſours. And a law was enacted, that from that day forward no man ſhould aſſume unto him the name and title of O-Neale: And yet ſhortly after, Turlogh-Leinigh a brothers ſonne of Con-Mor O-Neal aforeſaid, tooke it upon him by a popular election, being a man farre ſtept in yeeres, and therefore more calme and quiet, and ſo much the rather, becauſe hee ſtood in feare of Shan O-Neales ſonnes, and Hugh Baron of Dunganon, the ſonne of Mathew, although he had given unto the ſaid Hugh his daughter in marriage; whom hee notwithſtanding quickly after did caſt off and repudiat, taking an other wife. This Turlogh beeing moſt obſequious and dutifull unto the Queene of England, put the Engliſh to no trouble at all, but hee moleſted O-Donell his neighbour and the Scots of the Iſlands, and in an encounter ſlew Alexander Oge, who had killed Shan O-Neal.

Hugh O-Neal Earle of Tir-Oën.

Hugh the ſonne of Mathew, commonly called Baron of Dunganon, who had lived a long time one while concealed in his owne country, other whiles in England in the retinew of Noble men, began now to put himſelf forth, and to raiſe himſelfe out of that obſcure condition, when Elizabeth had given him command of a company of horſemen in the warre againſt the Earle of Deſmond then in rebellion, and aſſigned to him a penſion of a thouſand Markes by the yeere. In that warre hee acquited himſelfe valiantly in all places againſt the Rebels; and at length exhibited a ſupplication in the Parliament houſe. That by vertue of letters patents, granted unto his Grandfather by King Henry the Eight, he might be admitted to the title and place of the Earle of Tir-Oën, and ſettled in his anceſtours inheritance. The title and place of Earle Tir-Oën was preſently granted: but as touching the inheritance, conſidering that upon the forfaiture and attainture of Shan O-Neal, the Kings of England were inveſted therein, the matter was referred unto Queene Elizabeth, who moſt bountifully granted the ſame unto him for his faithfull ſervice performed and to be performed. Yet ſo, as that the country ſhould be firſt ſurveied, and laied out into ſeverall diviſions: one or two places fit for garizons reſerved, & namely the fort at Blackwater: that good order might be taken for the maintenance of the ſonnes of Shan and Turlogh, and that he ſhould not be permitted to haue any authority at al againſt the noblemen his neighbours without the County of Tir-Oen. Theſe conditions he moſt willingly accepted, & rendred very great thankes, accordingly promiſing to perform whatſoever he was able with diligence, authority, ſtudy, and endeavor, in regard of ſo great benefits received: and verily hee failed not in his promiſe, nor omitted any duty that might be expected from a moſt loyall ſubject. A body hee had able to endure travaile, watching, and faſting: his induſtry was ſingular, his courage in warre great, and anſwerable to the moſt important affaires: good skill hee had in martiall feats, and a profound wit, and deepe reach to diſſemble and carry his buſineſſe cloſely: in ſo much as even then, ſome there were who gaue this prediction of him, that he was borne, either to the exceeding good, or as great hurt of Ireland. And ſuch proofes he made of his valour and fidelity, that Turlogh Leinigh at the Queenes interceſſion, reſigned up unto him his government upon certaine conditions. After whoſe deceaſe, hee uſurped unto himſelfe the title of O-Neal, which by law was a capitall crime, but excuſed himſelfe colourably, becauſe others ſhould not enter upon the ſame: & promiſed ſolemnely to renounce it quite, yet laboured he moſt earneſtly that he might not be urged thereunto by any oth.

1588. Not long after, when that moſt puiſſant Armada of Spaine, which had in vaine giuen the attempt upon England, was put to flight, many ſhips in their returne homeward were caſt away and loſt in the Vergivian ſea, and many of the Spaniards after ſhipwrack were caſt on ſhore; ſome of whom Tir-Oën is reported to haue enterteined and lodged, yea & to haue conſulted and complotted with them about entring into a ſecret confederacy with the King of Spaine. For which practiſe, Hugh Ne Gaveloc, that is to ſay, Hugh in the Fetters (ſurnamed ſo becauſe he had beene kept ſo long in fetters) a baſe ſonne of Shan O-Neal informed againſt him, and that upon

no

A no light but pregnant preſumptions: whom the Earle afterward intercepted, and commanded to be ſtrangled, but hardly could he finde any one, that for the reverent regard of the O-Neals bloud, would lay hands upon him. For which barbarous and inhumane murdering of his couſin german, he was charged in England; but the Queene of her roiall clemency, and for the hope that ſhee had conceived of the Earle craving with repentance forgiueneſſe of this fault, and ſubmitting himſelfe to diuerſe good orders, for his obedience, pardoned him to the great griefe of ſome good men. But this ſoone after more grieved him, yea pricked (as it were) and ſore galled him, that the Deputy had ſuppreſſed the name of Mac Mahon in the country next adjoining unto him; and withall, to abate and weaken the powre
B of that mighty family, had divided the country among many. Hee I ſay hereupon conceived a feare, leſt the ſame would befal unto him, & other Chieftanes of Vlſter. At which very time, there began ſome ſecret grudges, and heart burnings to ariſe betweene the Earle, and Sir Henry Bagnall the Marſhall, whoſe ſiſter the Earle had carried away and married. The Earle complained, that whatſoever hee had with the loſſe of his bloud and painefull travaile reduced to the obedience of the Prince, the Marſhall and not he, reaped the fruit and gaine thereof: that the Marſhall by ſuborning moſt baſe & vile perſons as witneſſes, had falſely brought him into queſtion for high treaſon, had incited Sir William Fitz-Williams then Lord Deputy his deadly enemy by corruptions and bribery to worke his deſtruction; and that he lay in waite to C take away his life. And in very truth the Deputies information againſt the Earle found credit in the Court of England, untill the ſaid Earle wrote his letters and offred, judicially to be tried either in England or in Ireland. This is for certaine known, that much about this time, he together with the chiefery, or greateſt men of Vlſter by ſecret parlees combined in an aſſociation, that they would defend the Romiſh religion (for Religion now a daies is made the mantle for all rebellion) that they would, in no wiſe admit Sheriffes or garizon ſoldiors in their territories, and mutually maintain one anothers right, yea and withſtand al wrongs offered by the Engliſh. The firſt champion thruſt forward to ſound the alarum, was Mac-Gwyr, a man of a turbulent ſpirit: He by way of preying all before him maketh a roade into Conagh, accompa-
D nied with Gauran a Prieſt, who beeing ordeined by the Pope Primate of Ireland, commanded him in the name, and with the helpe of God to try his fortune, and to fight the Lords battaile aſſuring him of moſt happy ſucceſſe: yet fell it out otherwiſe: for, Mac-Gwir through the valor of Sir Richard Bingham was diſcomfited, and put to flight, and the Primate with others ſlaine. Soone after, Mac-Gwir brake out into open rebellion; whom, the Earle himſelfe (together with the Marſhall) in a ſhew of dutifull attendance purſued, and in this ſervice with great commendation of his forwardneſſe was wounded in the thigh. Howbeit wholy intentiue to provide for his owne ſecurity, he intercepteth the ſons of Shan O-Neal, and makes them ſure for doing any harme: neither would he by any meanes (being requeſted thereto) ſet them E at liberty: but minding another matter, maketh moſt grievous complaints of the injuries offered unto him by the Deputy, the Marſhall, and the garizon ſoldiers, which notwithſtanding, within a while after he carried ſo covertly, that as if he had forgotten all quarels, he came under ſafe conduct unto the Deputy, ſubmitted himſelfe, & after hee had profeſſed all manner of dutifull obedience returned home with great commendation. When as now Sir William Fitz-Williams the Lord Deputy was revoked home out of Ireland, Sir William Ruſſel ſucceeded in that office. Vnto him repaired the Earle of his own accord, exhibited an humble ſubmiſſion upon his knees to the Lord Deputy, wherein he dolefully expreſſed his great griefe that the Queene had conceived indignation againſt him, as of one vndutifull and diſloiall. Hee ac-
F knowledged that the late abſenting himſelfe from the ſtate was diſagreable to his obedience; albeit it was occaſioned by ſome hard meaſures of the late Lord Deputie as though hee and the Marſhal had combined for his deſtruction.

He acknowledged that the Queene advanced him to high title, and great livings, that ſhe ever vpheld him, and enabled him, that ſhee, who by grace had advanced him was able by her force to ſubvert him, and therefore if hee were voide of gratitude, yet he could not bee ſo voide of reaſon as to worke his owne ruine. Furthermore he made liberall promiſes that he would moſt willingly do whatſoever ſhould be enjoyned him, (which hee alſo had promiſed in his letters ſent unto the Lords of the Counſell in England) and earneſtly beſought that he might bee received into favour againe with the Queene as before time, which he had loſt, not by any deſert of his owne; but through the forged informations and ſuggeſtions of his adverſaries. At the ſame time, Bagnal the Marſhall was preſent in the place, who exhibited articles againſt the Earle and accuſed him, that hee had underhand ſuborned and ſent Mac guir with the Primate aboue named into Conaght, that hee had complotted ſecretly with Mac-Guir, O-Donel & other conſpirators, and had aided them by Cormac-Mac-Baron the Earles brother, and Con the Earles baſe ſon & ſome of his ſervants in the waſting of Monaghan and beſieging of Inis-Kellin: and by means drawn away the Captaines of Kilulto and Kilwarny from their loialty and obedience to the Queene. Hereupon it was ſeriouſly debated among the Counſellors of the kingdome, whether the Earl ſhold be ſtaied to make his anſwere or no? The Deputy thought good, that he ſhould be deteined. But when it was put to queſtion generally, the more part either upon a vaine feare, or forward inclination to favour the Earle, were inſtant to haue him diſmiſſed & the matter to be put off unto a further day of hearing, pretending certaine waighty conſiderations, and that the Articles exhibited were without proofe or time. Thus the Deputie in a ſort was forced to yeeld to the experience of the Councel, and the Earle was permitted to depart, & his accuſers there preſent had no andience. Which troubled and diſquieted the Queene not a little, conſidering that his wicked deſignements and acts were now apparent to every one, and the Queene her ſelfe had given warning a fore hand, that hee ſhould bee deteined untill he had cleered himſelfe of thoſe imputations.

The Earle being now returned home, when he heard that a new ſupply of ſoldiors was comming out of England, and thirteene hundred beſides of old ſervitors out of the Low-countries, who had ſerved in little Britaine under Sir Iohn Norris, and that the Engliſh entended now to poſſeſſe themſelues of Balaſhanon and Belik, Caſtles upon the mouth of Logh-Earn, he being privy to himſelfe of his owne evill purpoſes and carrying a guilty conſcience, on a ſodaine aſſaileth the fort at Blackwater, by which the entry lay into Tir-Oën his owne country, and had it ſurrendred up unto him. And at the very ſame inſtant in maner (hee wavering in his minde) with one breath (as it were) by his letters offereth unto the Earle of Kildare his helpe againſt the wrongs done by the Deputy, and withall promiſeth the Earle of Ormond & Sir Henry Wallop Treaſurer of the kingdome, to continue firme in his allegeance, yea and beſeecheth in his letters Sir Iohn Norris appointed Lord General, that he might be more mildly dealt with, nor againſt his will be driven headlong upon the dangerous rockes of diſloialty. But theſe letters unto Norris, Bagnall the Marſhall intercepted, and (as the Earle complained afterward) ſuppreſſed to his greateſt prejudice & hurt. For, immediatly he, and his confederates were proclamed traitors both in Iriſh, and Engliſh, & pardon offered to all ſuch as had been ſeduced by falſe perſwaſions to take their parts and would now relinquiſh them & ſubmit themſelues to the Queene. At which time there were accounted to be with the Rebel in Vlſter about a thouſand horſemen, and 6280. footmen: and in Conaght 2300. who were al at the Earles command, very many of them trained ſoldiors: as who had beene exerciſed in armes, ever ſince that Sir Iohn Perot Lord Deputy had appointed to every Lord and Chieftain of Vlſter a certaine number to be exerciſed in their weapons for to reſiſt the Iriſh Scots of the Iſlands: or elſe had beene emploied in the warres of the Low countries, whom hee in no provident policy for the future time had cauſed to bee tranſported thither.

1595. Die. 12. Iunij.

And verily the Engliſh forces were equivalent in numbers, which were commanded by Sir Iohn Norris: for the Queene had ſelected him as a man of eſpeciall truſt and reputation to bee vſed martially in ſuch iourneys as the Deputie himſelfe in perſon could not vndertake, in conſideration that hee had performed diverſe honorable

A honorable ſervices was now Preſident of Monnſter, and had formerly commanded the Britain companies which were to ſerve principally in this action. Yet atchieued he no memorable exploite by reaſon of private miſconſtructions, ſuſpicious ſurmiſes, and diſlikes conceived betweene him and the Deputy. Onely the time was ſpent in preying, truce making, and friuolous parlies. And without doubt the Martiall men on both ſides were well content to have the war drawne out in length, and the Earle fed himſelfe every day with hope of ſuccour out of Spaine.

But among all theſe parlies, that was moſt memorable, which the two Commiſſioners Sir Henry Wallop Treaſurer of that Realme, and Sir Robert Gardener Chiefe

B Iuſtice, moſt graue perſonages and of approued wiſdome, had with the Earle of Tir-Oen and O-Donell: at which the, yand others of the Rebels both laied open their grieuances and exhibited alſo their petitions.

The Earle complained, that Sir Henry Bagnal the Mareſchal had cunningly withdrawen unto himſelfe the fruit of his labours; that with lies and indirect meanes, and ſubtile fetches he had thruſt him out of the Queenes fauour, and after a fort brought him into diſgrace: That to his great hindrance and prejudice, he had intercepted his letters written unto the Lord Deputy, unto Norris, and others; and ſtill deteined and withheld from him his wiues portion, and heerewith he proteſted: That he neuer negotiated with forraine Princes, before he was proclaimed Traitour.

C Now, he exhibited his petitions in moſt humble maner. That he, and all his followers might be pardoned for their crimes; That they might be reſtored to their former eſtates, that they might exerciſe freely their owne religion (& yet that had been alwaies tollerated) That the Mareſchall ſhould pay unto him a thouſand pounds of lawfull mony of England for the dowry of his wife now deceaſſed: That no Garizon ſouldiers, Sheriff, or other officer ſhould be appointed within his County and Earledome; That the company of fifty horſemen which he had led, with the Queenes pay thereunto, might be reſtored unto him, and that thoſe who had robbed and ſpoiled his people might be puniſhed accordingly.

O-Donell for his part, when he had rehearſed his fathers and anceſtours fidelity to

D the Kings of England, complained nevertheleſſe, that Captaine Boin was ſent from Perot the Lord Deputy with a band of ſoldiours into his Prouince under a colour of teaching his people ciuility, who being kindely entertained by his father, and having certain townes aſſigned unto him, offered all maner of iniurious indignity and rigour unto his father, and aduanced a certaine baſtard to the dignity of O-Donell: Alſo that the ſaid Deputy by ſending a Barke ſecretly intercepted him, thruſt him (innocent man) into priſon, & there unjuſtly kept him in dureſſe, until that by the Almighties goodneſſe he was delivered: Item that the Deputy Fitz-Williams, laid up faſt in cloſe priſon for ſeven yeeres together Sir Owen O-Toole, the ſecond man next to O Donell in this tract, notwithſtanding he was giltleſſe, and ſent for upon promiſe of his

E ſafe conduct: and that he oppreſſed his neighbours in Fermanaugh, with intollerable wrongs: neither could himſelfe deviſe any other meanes for his owne ſafety & ſecurity then to releeve his next neighbours thus vexed and moleſted. He likewiſe made the ſame requeſt that the Earle did, and moreover demanded certaine fortreſſes and lands in the county of Slego, which he challenged in right to be his inheritance, Shan Mac Brian Mac Phelim O-Neal laid downe his complaints, That Walter Earle of Eſſex had wrongfully taken from him the Iſle of Magy, and Sir Henry Bagnall the Barony of Maughery-Mourn, both of them his ancient inheritance: That he was himſelfe impriſoned, untill that by enforcement he had reſigned his right unto Bagnall, beſide

F other injuries infinite done unto him by the Garizon ſouldiers of Knoc-Fergus. Hugh Mac-Guir made a great matter of the inſolent outrages committed by the Garizon ſouldiers next unto him, in driving away his cattell as booties, and withall that the Sheriff who was ſent into his territories, had cut off the head of his next kinſman, and ſpurned it under foot.

Brian Mac-Hugh-Oge, Mac Mahon and Ever Mac-Couley came in with theſe their complaints, That over and aboue other wrongs Sir William Fitz-Williams the Deputy for great gifts and presents, had setled Hugh Roe in the dignity of Mac-Mahon: and A soone after, for that with banner displaied after the maner of the country he demanded a mulct or fine which he had impoſed, hanged him up, and granted his inheritance unto ſtrangers, thereby to extinguiſh the name of Mac-Mahon. In a word, they were petitioners every one ſeverally, for the ſame things that I have above rehearſed. When ſome of theſe their demaunds were thought reaſonable, and others

* againe to be referred unto the Queenes conſideration; The Commiſſioners alſo on the other ſide, propoſed certaine Articles unto the Rebells, that they ſhould lay downe their armes, diſperſe their forces, acknowledge ſubmiſſively their diſloialties, admit Sheriffes in their governments, reedifie the Forts they had defaced, ſuffer the garriſons to live without diſturbance, make reſtitution of ſpoiles taken, confeſſe B upon their oath how farre they have dealt with forraine Princes, and renounce all forraine aide, &c.

But theſe ſeemed ſo vnreaſonable to them in their conceit, being now growne inſolent, that after agreement of a Ceſſation from armes for a ſhort time, they departed on all hands; whereas the Queene, both then, and afterwards, as well to ſpare the effuſion of bloud, as to ſave expenſe of money was willing enough to condeſcend unto any conditions of peace, that might have ſtood with the honor of her Majeſtie.

Lord Generall of the Armie. The time of Ceſſation once expired, Norris (unto whom alone by the Queenes commaundement, the command of the militare forces was conferred in the Deputies abſence) marched with his armie againſt the Earle. Howbeit the Deputie joined with him, and with ſo great a terrour to the rebels, went forward as farre a Armach: ſo that the Earle leaving the Fort at Blackwater, ſet fire upon the villages all round about; and the towne of Dunganon, yea and plucked downe a great part of his owne houſe there, who bewailing now his owne eſtate as quite undone and paſt all recovery, he thought of nothing, but how to hide his head: when as they had marched ſo farre (they ſtayed there for default of victuals) and having proclaimed the Earle traitour within his owne territorie, and placed a garizon in the Church of Armarch, returned backe. In their returne, the Earle diligently attendeth and accoſteth them a farre off (yet they ſtrengthened the gariſon at Monaghan) and D when they were come neere unto Dundalke, the Deputie according to the purport of her Maieſties Commiſſion, rendred the proſequution of the warre unto Norris, & after many words paſſed to and fro betweene them with all the complements of kindneſſe and courteſie that might be, he retireth to Dublin, and providently looketh to the State of Leinſter, Conaght, and Mounſter.

Norris ſtaied in Vlſter, but atchieved no exploit anſwerable to the expectation raiſed of ſo worthy a Warriour: whether it were upon æmulation to the Deputie, or that Fortune altered and went backward (as who in the end is wont to croſſe great Commanders) or in favour of the Earle, unto whom he was as forward in kind affection as the Deputie was eſtranged from him. For, Norris ſeemed to blame the E
Deputie in ſome meaſure: for that intertaining an hard opinion of the Earle, his reſolution was to make no peace with him; for he in no wiſe would be otherwiſe perſwaded, but that he triffled out the time and made delaies for the nonce, expecting aide & ſuccour ſtill out of Spain: whereas Norris, in the meane while, more favourable to him, and credulous withall, had conceived very good hope to bring the Earle to conditions of peace; which hope he, working vnderhand, ſo fed and fomented ſtill in Norris, as that he alſo preſented unto him a feigned ſubmiſſion, ſubſcribed with his owne hand and ſigned, yea and humbly upon his knees craved pardon. Yet for all this, in the meane time he dealt by his ſpying agents and curreours earneſtly and ſecretly with the King of Spaine: what with writing, and what with praying to have aide from him: ſo farre forth, as that there were ſecretly ſent one or two meſſengers from the Spaniard to the rebels, with whom it was agreed, that in caſe the King of Spaine ſent at the time prefixed a competent armie able to vanquiſh the Engliſh, they would joine their owne forces; and if in the meane time he furniſhed them

A them with munition and proviſion for warre, they would reject all conditions of peace whatſoever. To theſe covenants, O Rorke, Mac-William, and others ſet to their hands, but not the Earle himſelfe being providently cautelous, and yet no man doubts but his conſent was thereto. And the letters which the King of Spaine wrote backe full of great promiſes, hee in outward ſhew of dutifull ſervice, ſent unto the Deputie, and withall relying himſelfe upon aſſured hope of helpe from Spaine, ſtarteth backe from that written ſubmiſſion aforeſaid, and faithfull promiſe made to Norris: for which, Norris through his owne credulity thus deluded, & engaged, taketh him up in hote & bitter tearmes, as if hee had gulled him. But he knowing well enough, how to temporize and ſerve the time, entreth againe into a parlie with Norris and Fenton the Secretary: and ſo by giving hoſtages, a peace ſuch as it was (or ra-
B ther covenants of agreement) was concluded: which ſoone after with the like levitie as before, he brake; alleaging for his reaſon and excuſe, that he could not otherwiſe thinke, but he was deceitfully dealt with, becauſe the Deputie and Norris agreed ſo badly; becauſe alſo the Deputie was diſcontented with them that in his behalfe travailed with him about peace, as though the Deputie deſired nothing but warre, conſidering that the troupes of horſemen were ſupplied out of England, the King of Spaines letter aboveſaid detained, and the Mareſchall his moſt heavie enemie, even then was returned with new commiſſion out of England.

Heereupon therefore hee falleth to harrie and waſt the countries confining, to burne townes and villages, to rouſe and drive away booties: but within a while
C pricked with ſome remorſe of conſcience for ſuch outrages committed, and hearing beſids, that there was a peace like to be treated betweene England and Spaine, hee ſued once againe for a parlie, & conditions of peace: it yrkes me to runne through all the cloakes of his diſſimulation in particular. But to be ſhort, when he was in any danger of the Engliſh, in ſemblance, countenance and words from teeth outward he ſo masked himſelfe under the vizard of ſubmiſſion, and prentended ſuch repentance for his former miſdemeanors, that he ſhifted off and dallied with them ſtill, untill they had forſlipt the opportunitie of purſuing him, and untill of neceſſity the forces were to be diſſolved and withdrawen. Againe ſuch was the ſlouthfull negligence of the Captaines in Ireland, the thrifty ſparing in England, the inbred lenitie of the D Queene who wiſhed that theſe flames of rebellion (for, warre it was not to be called) might be quenched without bloud, that his faire words and pretenſes were beleeved, yea and hope otherwhiles was offred unto him of pardon, leaſt his peeuiſh pervicacy ſhould be more and more enkindled.

In the yeere 1597. when as by this time all Vlſter throughout beyond Dundalke, except ſeven Caſtles with wards, namely, Newry, Knoc-Fergus, Carlingford, Greene Caſtle, Armach, Dondrom, and Olderfleet) yea and in maner all Conaght, was revolted; Thomas Lord Burrough, a man full of courage and polliticke withall, was ſent Lord Deputie into Ireland. And about that time Sir Iohn Norris diſtaſting himſelfe
E and the new Deputie ended his life.

Baron Burough. Lord Deputie. 1597.

At which time the Earle beſeeched by his letters a Ceſſation of armes; and verily it ſeemed good pollicie to graunt it for a moneth. After the moneth expired, the Deputie brought his forces together, and, which was thought to ſtand with his profit and honor both, at his firſt entry into government, araunged them in order of battaile againſt the Earle: and albeit hee was welcomed by the Earle with a doubtfull and dangerous peece of ſervice within the ſpace of the Moiry, yet made hee way through by his valour, and moſt valiantly wonne the Fort at Blackewater repaired and reenforced by the rebells, by which the way lieth into the County of Tir-Oen,
F and which beſids woods and mariſhes, was the onely ſtrength that the rebells had: and by this firſt attempt gave good proofe, that if the warre were well proſecuted, they might eaſily be vanquiſhed. The very ſame day whereon this Fort was taken, whiles the Deputie together with his armie were giving thankes unto God for this victorie, ſuddenly an allarum was given, and the enemie ſhewed himſelfe from an hill hard by: againſt whom, Henrie Earle of Kildare preſently marched, with a cornet net of horſe and certaine of the better ſort of Gentlemen voluntaries; and ſetting upon them, put them to flight. Yet were there ſlaine of the Engliſh part, Francis Vagham brother to the L. Deputies wife, R. Turner Serjeant Major a doughty and approoved ſervitour, two of the Earle of Kildares foſter bretheren: whoſe death he tooke ſo heavily, that himſelfe within few daies after for greefe of heart ended his life. For there is no love in the world comparable by many degrees to that of foſter-brethren in Ireland. A

But many more were wounded, and among the reſt Sir Thomas Waler, highly commended for his Martial forwardneſſe. After that this Fort was with new munitions reenforced; no ſooner had the L. Deputy withdrawen his army from thence, but the rebels waving now betweene hope, feare, and ſhame, thought it their beſt and ſafeſt courſe ſtreightly to beſiege it: For the Earle ſuppoſed it was the moſt important place to offend and annoy them, as that both his honour and fortunes were for ever at their downe-ſet if he might not recover it. With a ſtrong power therefore he beleagured it round about. Againſt whom the Deputy ſtreightway ſetteth forward and marcheth without intermiſſion: but alas, marching on thus in his full paſe to victory, hee was arreſted by violence of ſickneſſe, and cut off by untimely death, leaving a great miſſe of him to the State, and ſecurity to the ranging rebels. Certes, if he had lived longer, by the iudgement of wiſemen, he had abated their inſolencies, and the State had not beene plunged into ſo great perils. B

The Rebels underſtanding of the Deputies death, became exceeding ſtout and bold, and ſo eft-ſoones with mighty outcries and furious violence aſſaulted the Fort, but repulſed alwaies they were with the greater loſſe: they that gave the Scallado were throwen downe headlong, and moſt of them, by the Garizon ſoldiours ſallying reſolutely upon them borne down & troden under foot, in ſo much as diſtruſting now to maine force, they changed their copy and determined to protract the ſiege, being perſwaded that they within had victuals but for few daies; and beſides, they conceived good hope that the Garizon ſouldiours for very want would be wavering in their alleagance and turne traitours. But through the ſingular valour of Thomas Williams the Captaine, and of the band within, the place was manfully defended: who having ſuffered hunger, ſharpe fights, and all extremities, after they had eaten up their horſes, were driven to plucke up the weeds growing among the ſtones for their food, and endured all the miſeries that might be. C D

Now by this time the government was by authority from the Queene committed unto the Earle of Ormund under the title of Lieu-tenant Generall of the Armie, unto the Chancellor and Sir Rob. Gardiner. Then Tir-Oën recapitulateth in a long letter unto the ſaid Lievtenant all his greivances afore ſpecified: and leaving not out the leaſt inſolency either of ſouldiours, or of Sherifs, coldly excuſeth his breach of Covenants with Sir Iohn Norris. But principally he complaines, that Feogh-Mac-Hugh, a neere aſſociate and kinſman of his had beene perſecuted and executed: and in the end, That his letters unto the Queene were in England intercepted and ſuppreſſed: as alſo, that thoſe impoſitions & Compoſitions laid both upon the Nobles and Commons were intollerable. He addeth moreover and ſaith, he ſaw full well, that all the territories of the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland, would ſhortly be parted and ſhared among the Counſellors, Lawyers, Souldiors and Notaries. And heerewith he cloſely ſendeth ſuccour unto the ſonnes of Feogh, Mac-Hugh that they might kindle new coles in Leinſter. So that now, every man might ſee, that this war was begun, to no other end (whatſoever was pretended) but to extirpat the Engliſh quite out of Ireland. E F

All this while the Earle continued his ſiege about the Fort at Black-water; for the raiſing whereof, The Lieutenant Generall of the Army (for there was no Deputy as yet ſubſtituted) ſent the moſt choiſe troupes, fourteene Enſignes under the conduct of Sir Henry Bagnall, the Mareſchall, and the bittereſt adverſary the Earle had: upon whom as he marched with divided troupes, the Earle eadged with fretfull malice aſſailed moſt furiouſly neere unto Armagh, and forthwith (the Mareſchall againſt whom whom he had bent all his force, being ſlaine amongſt the thickeſt of his enemies) as he obteined a moſt ioyous triumph over his private adverſary, ſo he went away with a glorious victory ouer the Engliſh.

1598.

And verily, ſince the time that they ſet firſt footing in Ireland, they never had a greater overthrow; wherein thirteene valiant Captaines loſt their lives, and fifteene hundred of the common-ſouldiers; who being rowted, and put to ſhamefull flight, as they were diſparkled all over the fields were cut in peeces: and ſuch as remained alive, laid the fault reprochfully, not upon their owne cowardize, but their chiefe leaders unskilfullneſſe (a thing now a daies ordinary). Immediately upon this, followed the yeelding up of the Fort at Blackwater: when as the Garizon ſouldiers having held out with loyalty in heart, and weapon in hand unto extreame famine, being now driven to exceeding great diſtreſſe, ſaw all hopleſſe of ſuccour and reliefe. A notable victory this was, and of great conſequence to the rebels; who furniſhed themſelves heereby with armour and victuals: and now the Earle renowned all Ireland over, and magnified in every place as the founder of their freedome, above all meaſure ſwelled with hauty arrogancy: and ſent into Mounſter, Ouny-Mac-Rory-Og-O-More, & Tirel (who although by his firſt original he were of Engliſh bloud; yet none ſo maliciouſly bent againſt the Engliſh name as he) with 4000. preaying rogues: againſt whom Sir Thomas Norris, Preſident of that Province, advanced forward with a ſtrong power as far as to Kilmalock: but before hee ſaw the enemy he diſperſed his forces, and retyred backe to Corck.

Which when the Rebels underſtood, having a great rable of moſt leaud raskals flocking from all parts unto them, they fell to waſt the Country, to drive booties before them, to ranſake and burne where ever they went the Caſtles, houſes, and farme places of the Engliſh, and moſt cruelly in all places to kill them: Iames Fitz-Thomas one of the family of the Earles of Deſmond they ſet up as Earle of Deſmond; yet ſo, as he ſhould hold as tenant in Fee of the O-Neall or Earle of Tir-Oën: and thus after a Month, when they had kindled this fire, and ſet all in a flame in Mounſter, they returned backe looden with rich booties. The Earle by this time in his letters to the King of Spaine faileth not to reſound his owne victories with full mouth; and therewith beſeecheth him not to give eare and beleeve (if happily he ſhould heere any Engliſhmen report, that he deſired peace): for why, he had hardned his heart againſt all conditions of peace, were they never ſo indifferent, and would moſt firmely keepe his faithfull promiſe made unto the ſaid King. Yet in this while wrought he meanes of interceſſion by letters and meſſengers eft-ſoones ſent unto the Earle of Ormond, (but all colourably) about a ſubmiſſion, and his demands withall were moſt unreaſonable.

Robert Earle of Eſſex Lord Lievtenant. 1599.

In this deſperate eſtate ſtood Ireland when Queene Elizabeth choſe Robert Earle of Eſſex (then glorious for the winning of Cadis in Spaine) in regard of his approoved wiſdome, fortitude, and fidelity, Lieutenant and Gouernour generall of Ireland, to repaire the detriments and loſſes there ſuſteined, with moſt large and ample authority added in his Commiſſion, To make an end of the war; and that which by importunity, as it were, he wreſted from her, To remit and pradon all crimes even of high treaſon: which alwaies in the Patents of every Lord Deputy were thus in theſe very words before time reſtreined (all Treaſons and treacheries touching our owne perſon, our heires, and ſucceſſours excepted.) And verily with good and provident forecaſt he obtained the authority to pardon crimes of this kinde, conſidering that Lawyers doe reſolve and ſet downe, That all Rebellions whatſoever, touch the Princes perſon. There was committed to his charge as great an army as hee required, roially furniſhed, and provided, and ſuch as Ireland had never ſeene the like before, that is, ſixteen thouſand footmen; and thirteene hundred horſemen: which number was made up after twenty thouſand compleat: And he had ſpeciall charge given him, without regard of all other Rebels whatſoever to bend the whole puiſſance and force of the war upon the Arch-Rebell the Earle of Tir-Oën, as the head of all the reſt, and with all ſpeed to preſſe hard upon him with Garizons planted at Lough-Foyle, and Bala-Shanon:

Shannon: a thing that himſelfe had alwaies thought moſt important & in accuſatory A tearms charged, & challenged the former Deputies for their neglect in that behalfe.

Thus hee honorablie accompanied with the flowre of Noble gallants, and well wiſhing acclamations of the common people, yet with a ſtrange thunder clap in a cleare Sun-ſhine day he ſetteth forward from London toward the end of March: and being ſore toſſed and reiected with an adverſe tempeſt, at length arrived in Ireland. Where having after the maner, received the Sword, preſently contrary to his charge and commiſſion, by the adviſe of ſome of the Counſell of State there (who too much regarded their owne particular) hee neglecting the Arch-Rebell, advaunced forward withall his powre againſt pettie Rebels in Mounſter; and having taken Cahir, a caſtle of Edward Butlers Baron of Cahir (into which being environed a- B bout with the river Showr, certaine ſeditious perſons had betaken themſelves) and driven away a number of cattaile, he made himſelfe terrible to all the country farre and wide, and deſperſed the rebels every way into woods and forreſts. Yet in this while he received no ſmall foile and overthrowe by the cowardiſe of ſome who ſerved under Sir Henrie Harington, whom he puniſhed very ſeverely by martiall Diſcipline. Neither returned he before the latter end of Iulie, with his ſouldiers wearied, ſickly, and their number more than a man would beleeve, diminiſhed.

When upon his returne he underſtood, that the Queene was diſpleaſed at this expedition of his ſo coſtly, and yet damageable, and that ſhee urged ſtill a journey into Vlſter againſt the Earle, and no other; in his miſſiues unto her Majeſty, he transferred C all the fault from himſelfe upon the Counſell of Ireland, unto whom for their manifold experience in the affaires of Ireland hee could not chuſe but condeſcend: promiſing and proteſting moſt faithfully to ſet forward with all ſpeed into Vlſter. Scarce were theſe letters delivered, when he diſpatcheth others after them, wherein he ſignifieth, that upon neceſſity he muſt turne his journey aſide into Ophalie neere to Dublin againſt the O Conors, and the O-Moiles, who were there riſen, and in armes, whom he quickly, and fortunately vanquiſhed with light skirmiſhes.

Now returning, and having taken a review of his armie, he found it ſo weakened, and impaired, that by his letters ſubſcribed with the hands of the Counſellers of Ireland, hee craved a new ſupply of a thouſand ſouldiers for his expedition into Vlſter, D which he promiſed to vndertake ſpeedily with ſolemne proteſtations.

Being now fully reſolved to turne the whole warre upon Vlſter, he commaunded Sir Coigniers Clifford governor of Conaght, to goe with certain bands lightly appointed toward Bellike, to the end that the Earles forces might be diſtracted one way, whiles he himſelfe ſet upon him another way. Clifford forthwith putting himſelfe on his journey with a powre of 1500. commanded his ſouldiers out-toyled with travailing ſo farre, and having but ſmall ſtore of gunpouder, to paſſe over the mountaines of Curlew: And when they had gotten over the moſt part of them, the Rebels under the leading of O Rorcke aſſailed them on the ſudden. The Engliſh eaſily at the firſt cauſed them to recule; and marched on forward in their journey: but when the ene- E mies perceived once, that they were at a default already for gunpouder, they charged them a freſh, and for that they were tyred with ſo long a march, and not able to make reſiſtance, put them to flight, ſlew many of them, and among the reſt Clifford himſelfe, together with Sir Alexander Ratcliffe of Ordſall. Meane while, that ſupply which the Lord Lieutenant required was levied in England, and tranſported: ſome few daies after, he gave the Queene to underſtand by other letters, that hee could for this yeere performe no more, than with a thouſand and three hundred footmen, and three hundred horſe goe to the frontiers of Vlſter. Thither came he about the thirteenth day of September: before whom the Earle with his forces two daies together from the hilles made a Bravado, and ſhewed himſelfe: and in the end ſen- F ding Hagan before, he requeſted the Lieutenant, that they might parlie together: which he refuſed to doe; anſwering, that if the Earle would talke with him, he ſhould find him the next morrow in the head of his troupes. On which day after a light skirmiſh made, a horſman from out of the Earles troupes with a lowd voice delivered

as

A as a meſſage that the Earle was not willing to fight, but to parly with the L. Lievtenant : yet in no wiſe at that inſtant. The day following as the L. Lievtenant was marching forward Hagan meeteth him, who declareth that the Earle humbly deſired to have the Queenes mercy and peace, and beſought withal, that he might have but audience for a while : which if he would grant, then would he with all reverence, and obſervance expect him at the Fourd of the river hard by, (Balla-Clinch they call it.)

This Fourd is not far from Louth, the head towne of the County, and neere unto the Caſtle of Gerard Fleming. Thither ſent the L. Lievtenant before ſome of purpoſe to diſcover the place. Who found the Earle at the ſaid Fourd, and he told them, that
B although the river was riſen, yet might a man be eaſily heard from one ſide to the other. Heereupon the L. Lieutenant having beſtowed a troupe of horſmen in the next hill thereby came downe alone; the Earle riding his horſe into the water up to the belly, in dutifull and reverent ſort ſaluteth the Lievtenant, being on the banke ſide, and ſo with many words paſſing to and fro betweene them, without any witneſſes by to heare them, they ſpent almoſt an houre. Then both of them retire unto their companies : and Con a baſe ſonne of the Earles following hard after the L. Lieutenant beſought him in his fathers name that certaine principall perſons of his traine might be admitted to a conference. The L. Lieutenant aſſented thereto, ſo they were not above ſix. Then fourthwith the Earle taking with him his brother Cormoc,
C Mac Gennys, Mac Guir, Ever Mac Cowley, Henry Ovington and O. Quin, ſheweth himſelfe at the Fourd. Unto them the L. Lievtenant came downe, accompaned with the Earle of Southampton, Sir Gorge Bourchier, Sir Warrham St. Leger, Sir Henry Danvers, Sir Edward Wingfeld and Sir William Conſtable Knights. The Earle ſaluteth them every one with great courteſie ; and after ſome few words betweene them paſſed, thought good that certaine Commiſſioners ſhould the next day following treate of peace: between whom it was agreed, that there ſhould be a truce from that very day for ſix weeks, & ſo forward from ſix weeks to ſix weeks unto the firſt of May : yet ſo, as it might be free for both ſides, after fourteene daies warning given aforehand, to begin war afreſh. And if that any Confederate of the Earles would not yeeld his aſ-
D ſent heereto, he left him unto the L. Lievtenant to proſecute him at his pleaſure.

8. September 1599.

Whiles theſe things were a doing, thoſe letters of the Lord Lieutenant which I ſpake of erewhile, were deliuered to the Queene by Henrie Cuffe (a man very learned but as unfortunate.) Which when ſhe had peruſed through, and underſtood thereby, that her Lieutenant, with ſo great an armie, in ſo long time, and with the expenſe of ſo much money had effected juſt nothing, nor would doe ought that yeere ; ſhe being highly offended thereat, writeth backe againe to himſelfe, and to the Counſellers of Ireland in theſe tearmes. That his proceeding anſwered neither her direction, nor the worlds expectation, that ſhe could not but mervaile much, why the Lieutenant by prolonging thus from time to time, and by finding meanes ſtill of fur-
E ther delay, had loſt thoſe excellent opportunities which he had, of proſecuting war upon that Arch-Rebell : conſidering that himſelfe whiles he was in England adviſed nothing elſe, but to proſecute the Earle himſelfe, and none but him ; yea and in his letters otherwhiles ſeriouſly promiſed to doe the ſame. She expoſtulated, wherefore he had made thoſe vnprofitable journeys (even againſt his owne judgement when it was found) into Mounſter and Ophalie, whereof he had not certified her, nor given ſo much as any notice before they were undertaken ? which otherwiſe ſhe would expreſſely have contremaunded. If his armie were now broken, weake, and much empaired, why undertooke he not the action upon the enemie, whiles it was entire, ſtrong and complete? If the ſpring had not been a fit ſeaſon for to make war in F Vlſter, wherefore was the ſummer, wherefore was the Autumne neglected ? What was there no time of the yeere meet for that war ? Well, ſhe now foreſaw that her Kingdome of England muſt be impoveriſhed beyond all meaſure by ſuch expenſes, her honour blemiſhed among forrain Princes, and the Rebels incouraged by this unfortunate ſucceſſe : yea they that ſhall pen the Story of this time, will deliver unto poſterity, that ſhe for her part was at great charge to hazard her Kingdome of Ireland, land, and that he had taken great paines and had left nothing undone, to prepare for many purposes which perished without undertaking, if now at length he tooke not a course for the maine prosecution of the war. In tart tearmes therefore, she admoni-sheth both him, and the Counsellers of the Kingdome, to looke more consideratly to the good of the State, and not from thence forward to be transported contrary waies by indirect counsaile; commanding them withall to write, into what case they had brought the Kingdome of Ireland; and carefully to foresee, that all inconveniences from thence forth might be diligently prevented. A

28. Septemb. 1599. The L. Lievtenant startled or rather galled with these letters, speedeth in all hast, and sooner than any man would have thought into England, accompanied with some men of quality, and well and early in a morning comming upon the Queene at unwares; whiles she was most private and in her bed chamber, presents himselfe upon his knees unto her, who after she had welcomed him with a short speech (& not with that countenance as heeretofore) commanded him to withdraw himselfe unto his owne chamber, and there to keepe. For the Queene was highly offended with him, both because hee contrary to her commandement had left his charge so sodainly without her leave, and before he had setled the State: and also had treated with the rebels to her dishonour privately and upon equall tearmes with condition of tolerati-on of religion, and to her diservice, when as the Rebels made profit of all cessations: and moreover that he had agreed upon such a cessation as might every fourth-night be broken; whereas it was in his power by the authority that he had, to make a finall end with the Rebels, and to pardon their treason and rebellion. B C

What befell him afterwards in England, and how it appeared by pregnant pre-sumptions and some evidence that he aimed at other matters than war against Re-bels, whiles he could not finde in his heart to remit private distastes for the publike good, and relied too much upon popularity (which is alwaies momentany, and never fortunate) it is impertinent to this place, neither take I pleasure so much as to remem-ber the same.

The said cessation was scarcely once or twice expired, when the Earle of Tir-Oën drew his forces together, and addresseth himselfe againe to war. Unto whom there was sent from the State Sir William Warren to know of him wherefore he brake the Cessation that was made? Unto whom in the swelling pride of his hart he haughtily answered, That he had not broken the Cessation considering he had given fourteene daies warning before, that he ment to renew the war: & that he had just cause to war a fresh: for why? he understood that the L. Lievtenant, in whom he had reposed all his hope and whole estate, was committed in England: Neither would he have any thing to doe from thence forth with the Counsellours of the Kingdome, that had dealt before time so craftily and deceitfully with him. And as for the Cessation, would he never so faine, he could not revoke it, because he had already entred ano-ther course, and appointed O-Donel to goe into Conaught, and other of his confede-rates into other parts. D E

In this meane space, there ran among the Rebels rumours very rife (and the Earle of Tir-Oën questionles was the authour) that there should be within a while the grea-test and strangest alteration that ever were in England; and lewd persons began daily to encrease both in number and in courage. For they that were of the Irishry as-pired now to their ancient freedome and Nobility, contrariwise good and honest men of the English bloud were much deiected and discouraged, seeing so great ex-penses of the Prince came to nothing: who also complained one unto another, that they had beene of late excluded as meere strangers from bearing offices in the com-mon-Weale. But the Earle, all in a glorious ioylity giveth it out every where, and that with open mouth, That he would recover the liberty both of Religion and of his Country: he receiveth in every place busie and tumultuous persons into his protecti-on; he sends them succour and aide, strengthneth and comforteth the distrustfull, stoutly streineth and setteth to his helping hand to subvert the English government in Ireland: being drawen on and fed with hope which the King of Spaine by sending

A ding now and than munition, and ſome money made ſhew of, and the Pope by promiſes and indulgences maintained, as having ſent unto him before, the plume of a Phœnix: happily becauſe Pope Vrban the third had ſent in times paſt a little Coronet platted with peacocks fethers unto Iohn King Henry the Second his ſon, when he was inveſted Lord of Ireland.

And now triumphantly glorying of his victories, to the end that he might make a goodly ſhew of his greatneſſe in every place, and by his perſonal preſence ſet that fire to burne out light, which in his abſence hee had kindled in Mounſter; under a faire and religious pretence of viſiting a little peece of wood of Chriſts Croſſe (which is thought to be kept in the Monaſtery of the holy Croſſe in Tipperary) in Mid-winter
B thither hee goes a pilgremage, and ſent out into the grounds of true and faithfull ſubjects a number of preying robbers, under the conduct of Mac-Guir: He by chance hapned upon Sir Warrham Saint Leger, who runne him through with his lance, and was withall at the ſame inſtant himſelfe runne through by him. Whoſe funeralls when the Earle had performed, hee haſteneth home ſooner than all men looked for, as having heard, that the Earle of Ormond appointed Generall of the Armie was raiſing of a powre from al parts, and that Sir Charles Blunt, Baron Montjoy appointed the Lord Deputy, was comming. Vnto whom the Queene before time had purpoſed in her minde this government: but Robert Earle of Eſſex (who for to pleaſure militarie men and to deſerue the better of them, into whoſe loue he ſtudiouſly
C inſinuated himſelfe, ſought, though covertly, to compaſſe the ſame himſelfe) wholy oppoſed againſt him, as if he, the ſaid Lord Mountjoy, had ſeene no ſervice, nor beene experienced in the warres, more than in the Netherlands, had no followers and dependants, nor much aforehand with the world, and overmuch bookiſh. He arriveth in Ireland in the moneth of February, without any great noiſe and ſtir, accompanied with a ſmall traine, and ſo entered upon the Government. Now, hee found the ſtate of Ireland very diſtreſſed or rather deſperatly ſicke, and paſt all hope of recovery, yea at the point, as it were, to giue up the ghoſt: for, every good & honeſt meaning minde was diſmaied to ſee ſuch a confluence of calamities without all hope of remedie or any alleviation at all: but the worſt ſort, ſeeing all to goe
D well on their ſide, and proſper ſtill to their deſire, rejoiced and applauded one the other, and the Earle himſelfe without any reſiſtance had paſſed through the whole length of the Iſland in triumphant manner, even from the utmoſt part of Vlſter, into Mounſter. The Rebells moreover, to terrifie the Deputy now at his firſt comming, ſtrucke up an Al' arme in the very Suburbes of Dublin: But hee, full of good courage, deſired nothing more than to ſet upon the Earle himſelfe, who as hee had intelligence given him, was to returne out of Mounſter. Muſtering up therefore in all haſt ſuch a powre as hee could (for, the companies of choiſe ſouldiours were in Mounſter alreadie with the Earle of Ormond) hee haſtened to E ſtop the Earles paſſage in Fereal, and there to giue him battaile. But the Earle by celerity and quicke ſpeed prevented him, beeing privily enformed of the Deputies deſignes: For, certaine there were even of the Queenes counſell there, who alwaies highly favoured and tendered his proceedings.

The Deputy beeing returned to Dublin, was wholy buſied in muſtering of the old ſouldiours, that ſhould bee ſent by ſhipping to Logh-Foile and Bala ſhanon neere unto the mouth of Logh-Earn, that by placing garizons there, they might make ſallies upon the Earle both on backe and ſides; as alſo about ſending aide unto the garizon ſoldiours in Leaſe and Ophaly, a matter, by reaſon of ſo many enemies round about, of great danger and difficulty.

In the beginning of Maie, the Deputy put himſelfe on his march toward Vlſter,
F with this purpoſe to divert the Earle another way, whiles Sir Henry Docwra at Logh-foile, and Sir Mathew Morgan at Balo-Shanon planted the garizons: which they with ſmall adoe effected, for Sir Henry Docwra tooke Logh-foile, and Sir Iohn Bolle, who accompanied him, tooke Don-a-long and Lhiffer caſtles, ſuppreſſing the rebelles with diverſe overthrowes.

Charles Blunt Lord Deputy. 1600.

Whiles the Earle was every day kept occupied by the Deputy with light skirmi- A ſhes, wherein hee evermore had ſo bad ſucceſſe, that he perceived now the fortune of warre was turned, and himſelfe driven backe into his owne corners. The Lord Deputy, beeing returned in Mid-Iune, when as the garizons aforeſaid were placed accordingly, required out of England certaine companies of ſoulidors and victuals, for to beſtow and plant a garizon alſo in theſe parts at Armagh, thereby to bring the Rebels within a ſtreighter compaſſe.

Meane while hee tooke a journey into Leaſe, which was the place of refuge and receite of all the rebells in Leinſter; where hee ſlew Ony-Mac-Rory-Og the cheife of the O-Mores familie, a bloudy, bold, and moſt deſperate young man; who of late had B made ſo foule a ſturre in Mounſter: him I ſay hee ſlew with other moſt wicked and miſcheivous rebelles: and after hee had laied their fields waſt, hee chaſed them into woods and foreſts ſo, as that in thoſe partes they were ſcarcely ever after ſeene. When as now new ſuccours were come out of England, although hee wanted both corne and money, the Æquinox was paſt, and winter weather beganne already in that climate, yet marched he forward to the very entrance of Moyery, three miles beyond Dondalk. This paſſage is naturally the moſt cumberſom of all others well neere in Ireland: which the Rebells had fortified and blocked up with palliſadoes and fenſes, with ſtakes pitched into the ground, with hurdles joyned together and ſtones in the mideſt, and turfes of earth betwixt the hilles, woods, and C boghes, quite overthwart on both ſides, with great skill and greater induſtry, yea and manned the place with a number of ſouldiors. Beſides theſe difficulties in his way, the weather alſo was paſſing rigorous, by reaſon of much raine that fell continually for certaine daies togither, whereby the rivers ſwelling high and overflowing their bankes, were altogither unpaſſable.

But when the waters were fallen, the Engliſh couragiouſly brake through thoſe palliſadoes or fenſes aforeſaid, and having beaten backe their enemies, and overcome all difficulties, the Lord Deputy placed a gariſon eight miles from Armagh (for at Armagh the Rebells had eaten up and conſumed all) which in memorie of Sir Iohn Norris under whom hee had his firſt rudiments in the profeſſion of Armes, hee commanded to be called Mount Norris: over which he made Captaine E. Blany D a ſtout and valiant Gentleman, who afterwards in this part, like as Sir Henry Docwra in the other, troubled the rebells ſore, and with all kept them forcibly in awe. In his returne (that I may paſſe over with ſilence the skuffling skirmiſhes which happened every daie) the Rebells in the paſſe neere unto Carlingford, where they had ſtopped up the way, in a memorable overthrow, were diſcomfited, and put to fearefull flight.

Some few daies after, the Lord Deputy becauſe hee would looſe no time, entred in the very mideſt of winter the Glinnes, that is, the vallies in Leinſter, a ſecure receptacle of rebelles, where having waſted the Country, he brought Donell Spanioh, Phelim Mac-Feogh, and that tumultuous and pernicious Sept of the O Tooles unto E ſubmiſſion, and tooke hoſtages of them. Afterward, hee went as farre as Fereall, and draue Tirell the moſt approved warrior of all the Rebelles, out of his owne holds, or as they call it Faſtneſſes, (a place full of Boghs, and beſet thicke with buſhes) into Vlſter. Now by this time by fetching many a compaſſe was he come victorious in every place, as far as to the frontier of Vlſter: which hee entred, and firſt having ſlaine the two ſonnes of Euer Mac Cowly, hee laied the territory of Fernes waſt, and ſent out Sir Richard Moriſon to ſpoile the Fues. In Breany hee placed a garizon, by the conduct of Sir Oliver Lambard: and turning downe to Tredagh, hee received into his protection and mercy ſuch of the principall Rebels as ſubmitted themſelues, F namely Turlogh-Mac-Henry a great man and Potentate in Fues, Ever-Mac-Cowly, O-Hanlon, who glorieth in this, that by inheritance he is Standerdbearer to the Kings of Vlſter, and many of the Mac-Mahons, and O-Realies who delivered up for hoſtages their deareſt friends and kinsfolke. The ſpring now approaching, before all the forces were aſſembled and come togither, the Lord Deputie marcheth

to

A to Moyery, where by cutting downe the woods, he made the way passable, and there erected a fort: out of Lecall he expelled the Mac-Genisses who usurped lands there: and reduced all the Rebells fortresses and holds about Armagh to his obedience: Armagh also he fortified with a garizon. And so farre went he forward, that hee remooved the Earle from Black-water (who had very artificially encamped himselfe there) and purposed somewhat lower to set up a fort.

About which time many signified unto him by letters for certainty, that which he had heard before bruited by a common rumor still more and more encreased, namely that the Spaniards were arrived in Mounster. So that now he was of necessity to desist and giue over this prosecution in Vlster, and Ireland was to be defended, not
B so much from inward rebellion, as from foraine enimies. And yet, least what he had already recovered should be lost againe, after he had strengthened the garizons, he speedily posteth into Mounster, journeying continually with one or two companies of horse, commanding the Captaines of the footmen to follow hard after.

For, whiles he was earnestly busied about the warre in Vlster, the Earle, and his associates the Rebels of Mounster by their Agents, a certaine Spaniard elect Archbishop of Dublin by the Pope, the Bishop of Clonfort, the Bishop of Killaloe, and Archer a Iesuite, had obteined at length, with prying, intreating, and earnest beseeching at the King of Spaines hand, that succour should bee sent into Mounster to the C Rebels, under the conduct of Don Iohn D' Aquila, upon assured hope conceived, that all Mounster would shortly revolt, and the Titulare Earle of Desmond, and Florens Mac-Carty joyne great Aides unto them: But Sir George Carew the L. President of Mounster, had providently before intercepted them and sent them over into England.

Thus D' Aquila arrived at Kinsale in Mounster with two thousand Spaniards old souldiors and certaine Irish fugitiues, the last day of October: and streightwaies having published a writing, wherein hee gloriously stileth himselfe, with this title, [MAISTER Generall and Capitaine of the Catholick King in the warre of God, for holding and keeping the Faith in Ireland] endeavoreth to make the world beleeue, That
D Queene Elizabeth by the definitiue sentences of the Popes, was deprived of her kingdomes, and her subjects absolved and freed from their oth of allegeance, and that hee and his men were come, to deliver them out of the devills chawes, and the English tyranny: And verily with this goodly pretense, hee drew a number of lewd and wicked persons, to band and side with him.

The Lord Deputie having gathered togither all the Companies of souldiours that hee could, prepareth himselfe to the siege: and Sir Richard Leuison the Vice-Admirall, sent out of England with one or two of the Queenes shippes to impeach all accesse, fore closeth the haven. The English when they had now encamped themselues, beganne from land and sea to thunder with their ordinance upon the E towne, and more streightly to beleaguer it round about: which siege notwithstanding was by and by not so forcibly urged: for that, on the one side Levison with the sea souldiours was sent before against two thousand Spaniards newly landed at Bere-haven, Baltimor, and Castle Haven, of whose shippes hee sunke fiue: On the other side the President of Mounster at the same time was dispatched with certaine troupes to gette the start of O-Donell, who was now approaching, that hee should not joyne with that new supplie of the Spaniards. But hee, when as now all the Country was over frozen, had by speedie journeyes in the night through blinde by-waies, gotten to those Spaniards newly arrived, and was not so much as once seene.

F Some few daies after, the Earle of Tir-Oën also himselfe came with O-Rork, Raimund Burk, Mac-Mahon, Randall Mac-Surley, Tirell, the Baron of Lixnaw and the most select, and choise of all the Rebels: unto whom when Alphonso O Campo, the leader of the new-come-Spaniards had joyned his forces, they mustered themselues fixe thousand footemen and fiue hundred horse strong: in a confident hope of victory: because they were more in number, fresh, and better furnished with all kinde of meanes: whereas contrariwiſe, the Engliſh were out-wearied with the inconveniences that follow a winter-ſiege, excluded from victuals; and their horſes beſides with travaile and hunger together, altogether unſerviceable. A

In theſe difficulties and diſtreſſes, the Deputy conſulteth with the Captaines, what was to be done? Some thought the beſt way was to breake up the ſiege, to retire into Corke, and not to hazard the whole realme upon the fortune of one battaile: Contrariwiſe, the Deputy adviſeth and perſwadeth to perſiſt, and not to degenerate from the approved vertue of their anceſtors: adding that valiant men could not haue a more wiſhed opportunity preſented unto them, than that which was now fallen into their laps; namely, either to ſpend their lives with glorie, or to vanquiſh their enemies with honour. He urgeth therefore and plieth the ſiege with all the powre he had, with raiſing platformes, and continual battering he plaied upon the towne, and withall fortifieth his campe with new trenches. B

Upon the one and twenty day of December, the Earle of Tir-Oën ſheweth himſelfe with his horſe upon an hill about a mile from the campe: and there encamping himſelfe, maketh a bravado, likewiſe the next day in the ſame place: the night following, both the Spaniards ſallied forth of the towne, and the Iriſh alſo aſſaied to ſteale into the towne, but both were forced to retire. On the three and twenteth day, the Engliſh men diſcharge their greater peeces, upon the towne, as if they had not cared for the Earle now ſo neere at hand, and the very ſame day were the letters of D' Aquila unto the Earle intercepted: wherein hee importuned Tir-Oën, that the Spaniards newly arrived might be put into the towne, and that they might aſſaile the campe on both ſides. When the moone was ready to ſet under the horizon, the Deputy commanded Sir Henry Poer to leade forth into the field eight enſignes of old ſouldiours, and to make a ſtand on the Weſt ſide of the campe. Sir Henry Greame, who that night had the charge of the horſemen that watched, very earely in the morning advertiſed the Deputy, that the enemies for certaine would advance forward, for that a great number of their matches were lighted. Hereupon the al' arme was given throughout the campe, and companies placed, whereſoever there was any way to the towne. C

The Lord Deputy himſelfe, with the Preſident of Mounſter, and Sir Richard Wingfeld Marſhall, marcheth toward the watch, and withall by the adviſe of Sir Olivar Lambart, chooſeth out a plot, wherein hee might giue battaile to the enemies: Thither were brought the Enſignes, & Regiments of Sir Henry Folliot and Sir Olivar Saint Iohn, with ſixe hundered ſea ſouldiours under the conduct of Sir Richard Leviſon. But the Earle of Tir-Oën who reſolved (as afterwards it was knowne) to haue brought into Kinſale by darke night the new ſupplie of Spaniards, and eight hundred Iriſhmen, when hee ſaw now the day to breake, and beheld withall the Marſhall and Sir Henry Danvers with the powre of horſemen: and Poër with the Companies of old ſouldiors at the foote of the hill, beeing diſappointed of his hope, ſtood ſtill, and ſoone after by his bagpipers ſounded the retraite. No ſooner was the Deputy certified of this retrait of his ſo confuſed and diſordered, but hee commanded the purſuit, and himſelfe advanced before the vantgard, to marke the manner of their retrait, and according to the preſent occaſion to reſolve what to doe: but ſo thicke a miſt with a ſtorme beſide fell upon the earth, that for a time they could not ſee before them. D E

Within a while after, the weather cleering up againe, hee obſerved that they retired haſtily for feare in three great battailons, and with the horſemen placed behinde at their backes; hee fully determined therefore to charge upon them, having ſent backe the Preſident of Mounſter with three companies of horſemen into the campe, to reſtreine the Spaniards, if happily out of the towne they ſhould ſally and breake out upon them. And the Lord Deputie himſelfe followed after the Rebelles, with ſuch ſpeed in their retraite, that hee forced them to ſtand in the brinke of a bogge, whereunto there was no acceſſe but at a fourd: but when thoſe horſemen that kept the fourd, were by the valour of the Marſhall F

and

A and the Earle of Clan-Ricard diſcomfited, and put to rout the other and couragiouſly gave the onſet upon the maine troupes of the enemies horſmen; Which charge when Sir William Godolphin, who had the leading of the Deputies horſe, Sir Henry Danvers, Minſhaw, Taff, Fleming, and Sir Iohn Barkley Sergeant Major of the Camp, who ioyned with them, redoubled with ſo great alacrity, that the Rebels preſently brake, & fell in diſorder. But it was not thought good to follow the chaſe, but gathering their forces and power together, they charged upon the maine battaile now in feare & wavering; which they alſo brake. Tirell with his company and the Spaniards all this while kept their ſtanding, and made their ground good: againſt whom the Deputy putteth forward his rereward; and that he might accompliſh not onely the
B part of a leader in commanding, but alſo of a ſouldiour in fighting, with three companies of Oliver S. Iohns whereof Captaine Roe had the conduct, chargeth violently upon them, and ſo brake their arraies, that in great diſorder and confuſion they reculed backe & betooke themſelves to the Iriſh, by whom they were preſently left unto the edge of the ſword, and routed by the troupe of the Deputies horſemen, whereof Sir William Godolphin had the leading. Then Tir-Oën O-Donel and the reſt on all ſides put to flight, flung away their weapons, and made what ſhift they could to ſave themſelves. Alphonſo O Campo was taken priſoner with three other Captains of the Spaniards, and ſix enſigne bearers; ſlaine there were one thouſand and two hundred, niene enſignes taken, whereof ſix were Spaniſh. Of the Engliſh part ſcarce two men
C loſt their lives, many were wounded, and among them Sir Henry Danvers, Sir William Godolphin, and Croft: So little coſt this ſo great a victory. The L. Deputy after he had ſounded the retreat, and rendred thankes unto almighty God for this victory among the dead bodies of the enemies lying thicke in heapes, gave the order of Knight-hood to the Earle of Clan-Ricard for his right valiant ſervice in this battell: and thus with lucky acclamations returned victour into his campe, which he found ſafe and ſound from all dangers. For the Spaniards within the towne, ſeeing all places every way made ſure with guardes, and having experience before time, that all ſalleis were to their loſſe, kept themſelves at home in carefull expectation of the event.

D A noble victory this was, and in many regards important, whereby Ireland moſt miſerably diſtreſſed and ready to revolt, was retained, the Spaniards ejected, the Arch-rebell Tir-Oën repulſed into his ſtarting holes in Vlſter, O-Donell driven into Spaine, the reſt of the rebellious rable ſcattered into ſundry parts, the Princes regall authority by daunting the lawleſſe inſolency recovered, and within a while after a ſecure peace throughout the Iland firmely eſtabliſhed.

The morrow after, the L. Deputy commanded Captaine Bodley the Trench-maſter, who both in the fortifications and alſo in the battaile had manfully borne himſelfe, to finiſh the Mount begun, and to raiſe bankes and rampires neerer unto the enemy: about which when there had beene ſix daies ſpent, D' Aquila in his letters
E ſent by his Drum Major to the Deputy, craved that ſome Gentleman of credit might be ſent into the towne, with whom he might parly.

For this purpoſe was Sir William Godolphin choſen: Unto whom D' Aquila ſignifieth, that he had found the L. Deputy although he were his moſt ægre enemy, yet an honorable perſon, the Iriſh of no valour, rude and uncivill, yea and (that which he ſore feared) perfidious and falſe: That he was ſent from the King of Spaine his M. to aide two Earles, and now he doubted whether there were any ſuch in Rerum Natura, conſidering that one tempeſtuous puffe of warre had blowne the one of them into Spaine, the other into the North, ſo as they were no more to be ſeene. Willing therfore he was to treat about a peace, that might be good for Engliſh, and not hurtfull
F to Spaniards: albeit he wanted nothing requiſit, to the holding out of a ſiege, and expected every day out of Spaine freſh ſupplies to finde the Engliſh worke and trouble enough. To be briefe, being as they were on both ſides diſtreſſed, and weary of ſiege, they grew to this agreement upon the ſecond day of Ianuary, That the Spaniards ſhould yeeld up Kinſale, the Forts, and Caſtle at Baltimore, Berehaven, and Caſtle Haven, unto the L. Deputy, and ſo depart with life, with goods, and their Banners diſplaied; that the Engliſhmen ſhould allow them ſhipping, paying the ful price therefore, wherein they might at two ſeverall paſſages ſaile over into Spaine: Alſo if they hapned in their returne homeward to arrive at any Port in England, that they might be kindly entertained: and in the meane time whiles they remained in Ireland waiting for windes, have all neceſſaries for ſuſtenance miniſtred unto them, for their ready mony. A

Theſe things thus concluded, the Spaniards after certaine daies fitted with a good gale of winde ſet ſaile from the coaſt of Ireland with diſhonour, as having their companies much impaired, and weake. Meane while the Earle of Tir-Oën in feareB full flight got him away making as great journeis as poſſibly he could, through unknowen by-waies, and recovered his lurking holes in Vlſter, after he had loſt moſt of his men, whom the rivers riſen and running violently by reaſon of Winter flouds had ſwallowed up. And afterwards hee could not take his reſt without care, no not ſo much as breath without feare; whiles carrying an evill and burdened conſcience he dreaded the due reward of his deſerts, and diſtruſted every one, in ſo much as he ſought from day to day new blinde corners, and the ſame ſtreightwaies he abandoned. The Deputy to refreſh his wearied ſoldiors, beſtoweth them abroad in gariſons, and after he had ſetled the State in Mounſter, returneth to Dublin; And when the Winter ſeaſon was paſt, he by a gentle and eaſie march (thereby to ſpread a greaterC terrour all abroad) returneth into Vlſter with an armie well appointed: that he might with Forts and Gariſons planted round about, belay the Rebels on every ſide, as it were, within net and toile. When he was come as far as to Black-water, he tranſported his army upon floats, and having found a Fourd unknowen before, beneath the old fort, he erected a Fort upon the very banke, which after his owne Chriſtian name he called Charle-Mont. At which time the Earle of Tir-Oën being affrighted, ſet fire on his owne houſe at Dunganon. Then marcheth the Deputy forward from thence to Dunganon: and after he had encamped himſelfe, ſo ſoone as Sir Henry Docwra was come unto him from Logh-Foile with his company, he ſent out his ſouldiers every way: Then might you have ſeene the corn-fields ſpoiled, the villages onD every ſide and houſes, ſo many as they could deſcrie, ſet on fire and burned, and booties out of all parts harried. The Forts in Logh-Crew, Logh-Reogh, and Mogher Lecowe, (where Sir Iohn Barkley a moſt valiant Martiall man was ſhot through with a bullet) were yeelded up, he planted a Garizon at Logh Eaugh, or Logh Sidney, which after the title of his owne honour he named Mont-joy, and gave unto Sir Arthur Chicheſter (who by the demerite of his vertue is now Lord Deputy of Ireland) the charge and command thereof, another likewiſe at Monaghan, which he committed unto Sir Chriſtopher S. Laurence: who being leaders of great experience and greater courage, what with often ſalleis and what with traverſe journeis made tooE and fro, ſo courſed and croſſed the rebels, that they ſeeing themſelves environed with Garizons planted round about them, and every day hemmed in and penned in more ſtreightly; that now like wilde beaſts of a raskal kinde they muſt ſeeke holes and lurke among the thickets in Foreſts, and woods: moſt of them changed their copie, and as their fortune, ſo their fidelity altered: and every one of them began ſecretly to ſubmit themſelves to the Deputy, ſtriving a vie who ſhould be firſt; muttering and complaining cloſely of Tir-Oën, that he had engaged the ruine of the whole nation for his own private diſcontentments, that this war was only neceſſary to him, but moſt pernicious to them: neither was the Earle ignorant that both the force & fidelity alſo of his people and followers was now ſore ſhaken: He determined therefore to prevent F the worſt, as being weary of miſerie and calamity, and yet in ſome hope alſo of life, which ſometimes overmatch the ſtouteſt. By moſt ſubmiſſive letters therefore ſent now and then to the Queene, wherein with earneſt praiers and teares he beſought pardon for his fault, caſting himſelfe downe in humble and lowly wiſe; and ſhe obſerved in him ſuch tokens of true repentance that (as ſhe was a moſt milde & merciful Prince) ſhe gave authority unto the L. Deputy to take him to mercy and favour, in caſe

A caſe he earneſtly craved it. And crave it he did (when he had heard ſo much from thoſe that affected & loved him) continually by the moſt earneſt mediation of Arth Mac Baron his brother, and others: and being often rejected, at length in the moneth of February, after he had promiſed abſolutely, and without any condition to ſubmit his life and all that he had, unto the Queene; the Deputy, who had ſome intelligence out of the Court in England from his inward friends, that the Queene, now farre ſtept in yeeres was dangerouſly ſicke, condeſcended that the Earle might repaire unto Mellifont: and thither forthwith came he out of his lurking hooles, in all ſpeed, accompanied with one or two and no more. Being admitted into the chamber of
B preſence (where the L. Deputy with a number of martiall men about him was ſet in a chaire of eſtate, in the very entry of the place) he in poore and foule array, with a dejected countenance, bewraying his forlorne eſtate falleth downe upon his knees, and when he had ſo kneeled a while, the Lord Deputy ſignified unto him, that hee ſhould approch neerer, whereupon he roſe up, and after he had ſtepped in lowly maner ſome few paces forward he kneeled downe again, & caſt himſelfe proſtrate like a a moſt humble ſuppliant. Hee acknowledgeth his ſinne to God, and fault unto his moſt gracious Prince and ſoveraigne Ladie Queene Elizabeth, in whoſe royall clemencie and mercy lay the onely hope that he had now remaining, to whoſe pleaſure he permitteth wholy and abſolutely his life and whole eſtate. He moſt demiſely
C beſeecheth, that whoſe bountifull favour in times paſt, and mighty powre now of late, he had felt and found, he might now have experience of her merciful lenity, and that he might be for ever the example of her princely clemencie. For, neither was his age as yet ſo unſerviceable, nor his bodie ſo much diſabled, ne yet his courage ſo daunted, but that by his valiant and faithfull ſervice in her behalfe, he could expiate and make ſatisfaction for this moſt diſloiall rebellion. And yet, to extenuate his crime, he beganne to ſay, that through the malicious envie of ſome, hee had beene very hardly and unreaſonably dealt with. As he was enforcing this point further, the Deputie interrupted him; and cut of his ſpeech, and after a few words delivered with great authority (which in a martiall man doth ſtand in ſteed of eloquence) to this
D effect, that there was no excuſe to be made for ſo grievous and heinous a crime, with few other words; he commanded him to withdrawe himſelfe: and the next day carried him away with him toward Dublin, purpoſing to bring him from thence into England before Queene Elizabeth, that ſhe might determine at her pleaſure what to doe with him. But in this meane time, that moſt excellent Princeſſe, a little after that ſhe had intelligence (that nothing might be wanting to the accompliſhment of her glory) how this rebellion was extinguiſhed, which had not a little diſquieted her, departed godly and peaceably out of this tranſitorie life into the eternall.

Thus the warre of Ireland, or the rebellion rather of the Earle of Tir-Oen, begun upon private grudges and quarrels intermedled with ambition; cheriſhed at firſt
E by contempt, and ſparing of charges, out of England; ſpred over all Ireland (under the coulorable pretenſe of reſtoring libertie and Romiſh religion) continued by untoward emulation of the Engliſh, & covetouſneſſe of the old ſouldiers; protracted by the ſubtill wiles and feigned ſubmiſſions of the Earle; by the moſt combrous and diſadvantageous difficultie of the Countrie, and by a deſperate kinde of people, ſaving themſelves more by good footmanſhip, than their valour; confirmed through the light credulitie of ſome, and the ſecret favour of others that were in place of authoritie; hartned with one or two fortunate encounters, fed and fomented with Spaniſh money and Spaniſh ſupplies; in the eight yeere after it firſt brake out, under the happie direction of Queene Elizabeth of ſacred memorie, and the fortunate
F conduct of the Lord Deputie Sir Charles Blunt, Baron of Mont-joy, (whom afterwards in regard heereof King Iames created Earle of Devonſhire) was moſt happily diſpatched, and firme peace, as we hope, for ever eſtabliſhed.

THE

A

THE MANERS OF THE IRISHRY, BOTH OF OLD AND OF LATER TIMES.

The Maners of the Irishry or wilde Irish

THe place requireth now, that I should adde somewhat of the maners of this people: and that verily will I doe; as touching their ancient behaviour out of ancient Historiographers; and concerning the later, out of a moderne writer both learned and diligent, who hath set downe these matters most exactly. B

As concerning the Irish of ancient times, when as they were, as all other nations beside in this tract, barbarous and savage, thus much have old authors recorded.

πλυφάγοι but in the Epitome, πηφάγοι, that is, feeding upon herbes and weeds.

Strabo in his fourth Booke, Of Ireland (saith he) I can deliver nothing for certeine, but that the inhabitants thereof are more rude than the Britains: as who, both feede vpon mans flesh, and also devour exceeding much meat: yea, and they thinke it a point of honesty to eate the bodies of their dead parents, and wantonly to have company not onely with other mens wives, but even with their owne mothers and sisters. Which things verily we relate so as having no witnesses heereof, that be of sufficient credit. Certes the report goes, That the maner is of the Scythians, to eat mans flesh; and it is recorded of the C Gaules, Spaniards, and many more besides, that by occasion of urgent necessitie and extremities of siege, they have done the same.

Pomponius Mela in his third booke writeth thus; The inhabitants are uncivill, ignorant of all vertues, and utterly void of religion.

Solinus in the 24. chapter, When they have atchieved any victorie, the blood of those that are slaine, they first drinke, and then besmeare their faces with it: Right and wrong is all one with them. A woman lying in childbed, if she have at any time brought foorth a man-childe, laieth the first meat she gives it upon her husbands sword, and with the very point thereof putteth it softly into the infants mouth, in hansell as it were of the nourishment it shall have heereafter: and with certeine heathenish vowes wisheth, That it may die D no otherwise, than in warre and by the sword. They that endevour to be more handsome and civill than the rest, make their sword handles gaie with the teeth of great Whales and such sea monsters; for they be as white as Ivory. And why? the men take a principal pride and glory in the keeping of their weapons faire, and bright.

But these fashions savour of greater antiquity. Their conditions of the middle time Giraldus Cambrensis hath heere and there treated of, and out of him others: But now for their later demeanour, take them heere with you, out of that foresaid Modern writer a studious and painefull man, and that in his owne words: who, as I collect, was named I. Good, brought up in Oxford, by profession and calling a Priest, and who about the yeere of our Lord 1566. taught the Schoole at Limirick. But first, I will E breifely premise, according to my promise made even now, somewhat as touching the maner of the Iurisdiction that is used among the Mere Irish out of others.

O-prefixed to the names of Noblest men in Ireland, by way of excellency.

Their great men and Potentates whose names have the fourth vowel [O] put before them as a marke of preeminence and excellency, as O-Neal, O-Rork, O-Donel &c. and many of the rest to whose name [Mac] is prefixed have peculier rights and privilidges of their owne, whereby they dominere and Lord it most proudly, and what with tributes, exactions, paiments, and impositions upon their subjects for their souldiours, Galloglasses, Kearnes and Horsemen, whom they are to finde and maintaine, they so prey upon their goods and estates, and oppresse them at their owne pleasure, that the condition of all those which live under them is most miserable: and so often F as there be any civill wars risen among them, they sucke out of them their very marrow and hart bloud.

Brehons.

These Nobles or Potentates aforesaid, have their Lawyers belonging unto them, whom they tearme Breahons, like as the Gothes named theirs, Bellagines: who being

A ing a ſort of moſt unlearned men, upon certaine ſet daies, on the top of ſome exceeding high hill, ſit to miniſter juſtice unto the neighbour inhabitants, betweene ſuch as are at variance and goe to law. Before which Iudges, the Plaintifes with a pitiful voice make moane, & complain of the wrongs offered unto them: the defendants ſtand firmely upon their deniall. If any be convict evidently of theft, they give ſentence either to make reſtitution of the ſame, or recompenſe by a fine impoſed upon them. Theſe Potentates alſo have their Hiſtorians about them, who write downe their acts and deeds, they haue their Phiſitians alſo, and Rymers, whom they call Bards, yea and their harpers, who haue every one of them their ſeverall livelods and lands ſet out for them: and of theſe, there be in each territorie, ſeverall profeſſours and thoſe liable to ſome certaine & ſeverall families: that is to ſay, the Brehons be of
B one ſtocke and name, the Hiſtorians of another, and ſo of the reſt: who inſtruct their owne children or kinſmen, every one in their owne art, and have ſome of them alwaies to be their ſucceſſors. Now, among theſe great Lords and Nobles, there is no hæreditarie right of ſucceſſion obſerved, but whoſoever of any principall houſe is of greater puiſſance in regard of ſtrength, retinewes of followers, and boldneſſe, he by a certaine faction or election of the people in that province uſurpeth the Lordſhip and ſoverainty over the reſt; quite excluding the ſonnes, nephewes, and next in bloud of the party deceaſed: and ſo with certaine complements of barbarous ceremonies, is enthronized in the open aire upon a litle hil for that purpoſe appointed vpon a Stone for a chaire of eſtate. At which time alſo, by a certain law, called Taniſtry,
C there is ſometime nominated and declared a ſucceſſour, who is termed Taniſt, I wote not whether by a word borrowed from the Danes, among whom as among the Northren inhabitants of Britaine, Thane was a long time uſed for a noble man and the Kings eſpeciall officer.

Profeſsions hæreditary.

Taniſtry.

But whereas I haue incidently happened of better obſervations concerning this this Brehon law and Taniſtry diligently collected by Sir Iohn Davis his Maieſties Atturney generall in Ireland, I hope I may with his good leave, impart ſome of them to publicke knowledge in his owne words.

The ſeveral countries or territories poſſeſſed by the Iriſhry were in number 60. and upwards and ſome being greater and ſome leſſe, did in extent and ſcope of land containe two parts of the Kingdome at leaſt, in every one of theſe countries there was
D a chiefe Lord or Captaine, & under him a Taniſt which was his ſucceſſor apparent: both theſe were elected of the country, who commonly made choiſe of ſuch as were moſt actiue, and had moſt ſwordmen and followers depending upon him. The chiefe Lord had certaine lands in Demeſne which were called his Loghtij, or menſall lands in Demeſne where he placed his principal officers namely his Brehon, his Marſhall, his Cupbearer, his Phiſitian, his Surgeon, his Chronicler, his Rimer, and others: which offices and profeſſions were hæreditarie and peculiar to certaine ſepts and families.

E He had alſo ſmall rents of money, and Cowes, and cuſtomarie duties of Oatemeale, Butter, and the like out of the lands in the Countrie, except the lands of the Church, and ſuch of his kinſmen and followers to whom hee granted a ſpeciall diſcharge or freedome. Beſides he had a generall tallage or cutting high or low at his pleaſure upon all the inheritance, which hee tooke commonly when he made warre either with his neighbours, or againſt the Crowne of England, or made a iourney to the ſtate, or gaue any entertainment: ſo as the whole profits of the countrie were at his diſpoſition when hee liſted: and ſoe made the inhabitants like the villaines of England, upon whom their Lords had power Tallier Haut and Bas, as the F phraſe of our law is, whereupon the Engliſh call this kind of exaction by the name of cutting. This chiefe Lord had his Coſharies upon his tenants, that is he & his would lie upon them untill they had eate up all their prouiſions, he would likewiſe imploy upon them his horſemen, his kerne, his horſe boyes, his dogges boyes, and the like to be fed and maintained by them, which kept the poore people in continuall ſlauerie and beggery.

The

The Taniſt had alſo a ſpeciall portion of land, and certaine Cheifrie proper to the Taniſt, and within the limits of his portion he had alſo his cuttings and his Coſhiries: the reſt of the land being diſtributed among ſeuerall ſepts, every ſept had a Cheefe or Canſinie, as they called him with a Taniſt of that ſept, but which were choſen by the chiefe Lord or Captaine of the countrie, and had likewiſe their ſeuerall portions and Cheifries. Theſe Captainſhips or Cheifries were not partable, but were entirely enioyed by ſuch as were elected thereunto. A

All the reſt of the lands except the portions of the Cheefes and Taniſts deſcended in courſe of Gauelkind, and were partable among the Males only; in which diuiſion the baſtards had their portions aſwell as the Legitimate.

For offences and matters criminall, none was ſo heinous or of ſo high a nature as that it was capitall, for treaſon againſt the chiefe Lord and murder were fineable, the fine they called an Ericke, which was aſſeſſed by the Lord and his Brehons. B

In caſe of treaſon the Lord had all the fine, in caſe of murder the Lord had one moietie, and the kindred of the partie ſlaine the other moietie: ſo as they neuer forfeited their poſſeſſions or their lands for any offence: Howbeit their lands were ſeiſed by the Lord for their fines, untill the ſame were leuied thereupon and then reſtored. Rape was finable in like ſort, but theft deſerved praiſe and reward if the ſtealth were brought into the countrie; becauſe the Lord had a ſhare, and the countrie thereby became the richer.

But the theft committed in the countrie and carried out, if the thiefe were apprehended before his friend made offer of his fine he was commonly puniſhed with death. But the Lord in that caſe might take an Ericke if he would. C

Vpon the ſtealth of any cattell if the owner followed the tract (wherein the Iriſh are incredible cunning, inſomuch as they will find the ſame by the bruiſing of a graſſe in the ſummer time) if the party unto whoſe land the tract is brought cannot make it off to ſome other land, he is to anſwere the ſtealth to the owner. And this being an Iriſh law or cuſtome, is at this day obſerued both by the Engliſh and Iriſh, the ſame being ratefied by an act of Counſell in the Earle of Suſſex his government as fit and neceſſarie for that Kingdome.

The Brehons aſſiſted by certaine Schollers who had learned many rules of the ciuill and Cunon law rather by tradition then by reading, gaue iudgement in all cauſes and had the eleauenth part of the thing adiudged for their fee and the chiefe Lords Marſhall did execution. D

Theſe are the principall rules and grounds of the Brehon law which the makers of the Statutes of Kilkenny did not without cauſe call a leaude cuſtome, for it was the cauſe of much leaudneſſe and barbariſme. It gaue countenance and encouragement to theft, rape, and murder, it made all poſſeſſions uncertaine, whereby it came to paſſe that there was no building of houſes, and townes, nor education of children in learning or ciuility, no exerciſe of trades, or handicrafts, no improuement or manuring of lands, no induſtry or vertue in vſe among them, but the people were bred in looſeneſſe and idlenes, which hath beene the true cauſe of all the miſcheifes and miſeries in that Kingdome. E

Now forward, take with you the obſervations of the ſaid Good: and thus much will I ſpeake before hand for the man, that in nothing hee ſhooteth at reproch, but aimeth all at truth, and ſpeaketh onely of thoſe uncivill and meere Iriſh, that ly ſhrowded in the utmoſt coaſts, and haue not as yet ſuited themſelves with civill qualities and conditions.

And to ſpeake in generall of them all, this Nation is ſtrong of bodie, and paſſing nimble, ſtout and haughty in heart, for wit quicke, martiall, prodigall, and careleſſe of their lives, enduring travail, cold, and hunger, given to fleſhly luſt, kind and curteous to ſtrangers, conſtant in love, in enmitie implacable, light of beleefe, greedie of glory, impacient of abuſe and injurie: and as he ſaid in old time, in all affections moſt vehement and paſſionate: If they be bad, you ſhall no where meete with worſe: if they be good, you can hardly find better. F

Girald. Camren.

Generally,

A Generally, they give unto their children when they come to holy baptisme profane names, adding alwaies somewhat to the name, taken either from some event, or an old wife, or else some colour, as red, white, blacke: or else from a disease, scab, and peeldnesse, or from one vice or other, as theefe, proud &c. and albeit they be of all men most impatient of reproch, yet these noblemen of theirs, even they that have the letter [O] prefixed to their names, disdaine not those additions. The name of the Parent, or any of the same kinred then living, it is not lawfull to give unto children: for, they are perswaded, that their death is hastened thereby. But when the father is dead, then the sonne assumeth his name, least the name should be lost: and if any Auncestour of that name were a redoubted warriour, the like proesse and valour is expected from him. This opinion is encreased by their Poets, Bardes, or Rymers, who keepe the exploits of those ancient Progenitours recorded in wri-
B ting, which they peece out with many high praises and fables devised of their owne braine; wherby these Rymers or Bards grow rich. For, new wedded brides, and women in childbed thinke themselves discredited, if they bestow not upon one of these Praise-Praters, the best garments they have. Mothers, after six daies that they be brought a bed, company with their husbands a fresh, and put forth their young babes to nource.

They that be of the more noble parentage, shall have a number of nources repaire unto them streight waies from farre, which make suit for the nourcing of the infant; and of these foster-children they make more account than of their owne which they beare. And although they are most intemperate, by reason of the distemperature of the aire, and the moisture both of the ground, & of their meats; in regard also that all law is exiled; & albeit
C they thinke it is a shame for themselves to give their owne children the brest, yet for this their nurcelings sake, both man and wife abstaine from carnall company together. And if they doe otherwise, they entertaine another nource under them at their owne charges. And nources there be among them as many well neere as there are young wenches for their servants: and to have the suckling of the little child, they count a sufficient reward for being naught of their bodies. Now, if this infant fortune to be sicke, they all to besprinckle it with the stalest urine they can get; and for a preservatiue against all misfortunes, they hang about the childrens neckes, not onely the beginning of Saint Iohns Gospell, but also a crooked naile taken out of an horses shoe, or else a piece of a wolves skinne. And for that purpose, as well nources as infants, weare girdles platted of womens haire. To their lovers
D also, it is knowne, they send bracelets finely wrought of these haires: whether their minde is herein of Venus girdle called Cestos, I wote not: The Foster fathers, take much more paines, bestow more goods by farre, and shew greater love unto their foster children than they doe to their owne children: From them, these children not so much by due claime of right receive, as by force wrest, even with taking stresses and driving away booties, apparell, maintenance for their pleasures, money wherwith to buy them armour, yea and to spend in all kind of their leawdnesse, their dowries also and stockes of cattaile. All those that haue beene nourced by the same women, love one another more deerely, repose greater trust in them, than if they were their naturall whole brethren and sisters; insomuch as in compari-
E son of these and for their sakes, they even hate their naturall brethren and sisters.

Be they reproved at any time by their owne parents? they fly to these their foster-fathers and being hartened by them, breake out oftentimes even unto open warre against their said parents; taking instructions from them to all leawd and vilanous prankes, they become most ungracious and desperate. Semblably the nources traine up those maidens which they reare, to all obscurity and filthinesse. If any of these foster children chance to fall sicke, a man would not beleeve how quickly their nources heere of it, yea though they dwell many a mile off, how pensively they attend and watch by the sicke body night and day: To conclude the greatest corruptions of Ireland, are thought to spring from these foster-fathers & nour-
F ces, and from nought else.

That these Irish people are both of an hoter and moister nature than other nations, we may well conjecture. And this we gather by their wonderfull soft skinne: which doubtlesse commeth as well by the nature of the soile, as by certaine artificial bathings and exercise that they use. By reason also of the same tenderneesse of their muskles, they so excell in nimbleneesse and flexibility of all parts of the body, as it is incredible. Given they are to idleneesse above

above all things: they reckon it the greatest riches to take no paine, and count it the most A pleasure to enioy liberty. Delighted they are above measure in musicke, but especially in the harpe with wire-strings, which they warble upon with their nimble fingers most melodiously. Doe any of them betake themselves to religion? a wonder it is to see how they mortifie and keepe their bodies under, with a devout kind of austerity, watching, praying, and making themselves leane with much fasting: so that it is no mervaile which is written of their monkes in the age afore-going. Yea the very women and young maidens fast duly upon every Wednesday and Saturday, throughout the whole yeere. Some of them also fast upon Saint Catharines festivall day: and this they faile not to doe upon Christmas day if it so fall out, even when they be most grievously sicke. Some make this to be the cause for B maidens, that they may be sped with good husbands, for wives, that they may change for a better marriage, either by the death of their husbands, or by forsaking them, or at least wise by alteration of their conditions. But they that have once given themselves over to leawdnesse, are more leawd than leawdnesse it selfe. Their garments they die with the barkes of trees, that English men name Alders: they use also Elder-berries to colour their woole yellow. With the boughes, barke and leaves of the poplar tree bruised and stamped, they staine their large wide shirts with a saffran colour which now are almost out of use, and adding thereunto the rine of the wild Arbut tree, salt together, with saffran. And whatsoever they die, they doe not so much boile it long over the fire, as drench and steepe the same for certaine daies togither among other things in cold vrine of man or woman, that the yellow colour may be more durable. C

They account it no shame or infamy to commit robberies, which they practise every where with exceeding cruelty, when they goe to robbe, they powre out their praiers to God, That they may meete with a booty: and they suppose, that a cheat or booty is sent unto them from God as his gift: neither are they perswaded, that either violence, or rapine, or manslaughter displeaseth God: For, in no wise would he present unto them this opportunitie, if it were a sinne; nay a sinne it were if they did not lay hold upon the said opportunitie. You shall heare these Cutthroats and Incendiaries come out with these words, God is mercifull, and will not suffer the price of his bloud to be of no effect in me. Moreover, D they say, that they walke in their fathers steps; that this maner of life was left unto them: also, that it were a disparigement of their nobility, if they would get their living by handie labour, and forbeare committing such facts. As they are setting forth to a boot-haling, or to doe any other businesse, they marke whom they meet first in the morning: if they speed well, they lay for to meete with him oft: if otherwise, they heedfully avoid him. To sleepe and snore in a most stormie night, and not to dispatch a verie long way by night on foot, nor to adventure upon any daunger whatsoever in spoiling and robbing, they take to be tokens of a base and abject minde.

Of late daies, they spare neither Churches nor hallowed places, but thence also they fil their hands with spoile: yea and somtimes they set them on fire and kill the men that there lie hidden: And the cause hereof, is the most filthy life of their Priests, who of churches make E profane houses, and keepe harlots, who follow them whethersoever they goe; but when they are cast off, seeke cunning devises to doe mischiefe by poisons. The Priests Lemmons and their bastards, abide within the circuit of a Church, drinke untill they be drunke, lie together, shed bloud, and keepe up their cattell there.

Among those wild Irish, there is neither divine service; nor any forme of Chappell but outwardly: no Altars at all, or else they be filthily polluted: the image of the Rood or Crosse defaced, if there be any at all. The sacred vestiments are so foule and nasty that they would make one to cast up his stomacke: The Altar portable without any crosses emprinted upon it, and by some abuse or other polluted. The Missal or Masse booke all torne, and bereft of the Canon: yet the same is tendred to all othes and perjuries; the Chalice of lead without a cover F to it, the small vessels for wine made of a horne. The Priests minde nothing but gathering of goods and getting of children.

The Persons play the Vicars, and that of many Parishes together: they make a great shew of the Canon-Law, but have never a jot of learning.

They have their children to succeed them in their Churches, for whose illegitimation they are

A are dispensed with. These will not take the order of Priest-hood, but commit the charge to the Curates without any stipend, that they may live by the booke, that is, upon some small gift or oblation at the Baptisme, Inunction, and Burial, wherewith God wote, they live most bare and miserable.

These Priests sonnes that follow not their studies, proove for the most part notorious theeves. For they that carry the name of Mac-Decan, Mac-Pherson, Mac Ospac, that is, The Deanes or Deacons son, the Persons son, and the Bishops sonne, are the strongest theeves that bee, and the more able by their parents liberality, to raise a power of unrulie rebels, and the rather, because following their fathers steps they maintaine Hospitality.

B As for the daughters of these Priests, if their fathers be living, they are set forth with good portions in case they wed: But if their fathers be dead, either they beg, or prostitute their bodies.

At every third word it is ordinary with them to lash out an oth, namely by the Trinity, by God, by S. Patrick, by S. Brigid, by their Baptisme, by Faith, by the Church, by my God-fathers hand, and by thy hand. And albeit by these they sweare, with the sacred Bible, or Missal laid most religiously upon their bare heads, yea and be forsworne: yet if one say, they stand in danger of damnation for perjury, you shall heere them streightweies crie aloud, The Lord is mercifull, and will not suffer the price of his bloud shed for me, to be of no effect in me. Never shall I goe to hell, repent I, or repent I not. But for

C the performance of promise and that a man may beleeve them, these three points with them be of greatest weight to binde them. First, if one sweare at the alter touching the booke lying open, and the same laid on the crowne of his hed. Secondly, if he take to record some Saint whose crooked staf, or bell, he toucheth and kisseth. Thirdly, if he sweare by the hand of an Earle, or of his owne Lord, or some mighty person: For then if he be convict of perjury, by the two former he incurreth infamie: but in case he be forsworne by the third, the said mighty man will wring from him perforce a great summe of mony, and a number of Cowes; as if by that perjury the greatest abuse and injury that might be, were offered unto his name. For Cowes are their onely wealth and of greatest esteeme. Touching which cattaile, this seemeth not unworthy the observation.

D Most certaine it is (as he writeth) that Cowes in Ireland give no milke, unlesse their owne Calfe be set by their side alive, or else the skin of the dead Calfe stuffed with straw, so as it may carry the resemblance of a live-one, for in that skin they acknowledge the sent, as it were, of their owne wombe. If a Cow goe dry or hold up their milke, they send for a witch, who by herbes may cause her to cast her love upon another Cowes calfe, that so she may give downe her milke.

Towne-dwellers seldome make any contract of marriage with them of the Country, and these passe their promise not for present, but for the future time: or else give assent without any deliberation: whence it is, that for every light falling out, they part asunder, the husband to another woman, the wife to another husband; neither is it ever knowen for cer-

E tainty whether their contracts have beene true or false, before they give up their last gaspe. Hence rise contentions about the possession of lands, hence grow robberies, depredations, manslaughters, and deadly hatred. The women that are cast off goe to witches for counsell, who are thought verily to bring vpon the former husband or his new married wife, either barainnesse, or impotency in the act of generation, or else most dangerous diseases. For all of them are mervelously prone to incest, and nothing is there so common as divorces under pretence of conscience. The women as well as the men make very great account of the haire or glibbes of their heads, especially if they be of a golden colour and long withall: For they shew and lay them out plated to the full length in a bravery, and suffer them when they are

F finely and trimly curled to hange downe: when in the meane time they wrap in fouldes and rols about their heads many els of the finest linnen or sendal. This kinde of Coronet or headtire they all weare that are able to get it, after their childebirth, whether it be in wedlocke, or by playing the whores.

To these may be added a number of superstitions. I cannot tell whether the wilder sort of the Irishry yeeld divine honour unto the Moone; for, when they see her first after the change, commonly they bow the knee, and say over the Lords praier, and so soone as they A haue made an end, they speake unto the Moone with a lowd voice in this manner: Leaue us as whole and sound as thou hast found us. They take unto them Wolues to bee their Godsibs: whom they tearme Chari Christ, praying for them and wishing them well, and for hey are not affraid to bee hurt by them. The shoulder blade bone of a sheepe, when the flesh is cleane taken from it, they use to looke through, and thereby foretell of some corse shortly to bee carried out of that house, if they spie any darke and duskish spotte in it. They take her for a wicked woman and a witch what ever shee bee, that commeth to fetch fire from them on May-day (neither will they giue any fire then, but unto a sicke body, and that with a curse). For because, they thinke the same woman will the next summer steale awaie all their butter. If they finde an hare amongst their heards of cattaile on the B said May daie; they kill her, for, they suppose shee is some old trot, that would filch away their butter. They are of opinion, that their butter if it bee stollen will soone after bee restored againe, in case they take away some of the thatch that hangeth over the house of the doore, and cast it into the fire. And upon these Calends or first day of May, they fully beleeue, that to set a greene bough of a tree before their houses, will cause them to haue great abundance of milke all summer long.

In their townes, when any magistrate entreth first upon his office, the wiues along the streets, and the maidens out of windowes, bestrew them and their followers with wheat and salt. And before they sow their seed in the corne field, the goodwife or Mistresse of the house sendeth salt to the said field. That the Kites may not swoupe awaie their chickens, C they hange up in some place of the house roufe the eg-shels out of which the said chickens were hatched. To rubbe their horse heeles, or to currie their bodies with a currycombe, or to gather grasse to meate them with, it is not lawfull upon a Saturday;
whereas, they will not sticke to doe all this upon other daies bee they never so high and festivall.

If they never giue fire out of the house unto their neighbours, they are perswaded their horses shall liue the longer, and continue sound.

If the owners of horses eat egges, they must looke unto it, that they bee even in number, otherwise their horses will be in danger. Horse-breakers and horse keepers are forbidden to eate egges. A custome there is also among them, that horsemen after they haue eaten egges, D doe wash their hands. When an horse is dead, they hang up his feet and legges in the house, yea their verie houses are esteemed as an hallowed and sacred relique.

In no case must you praise an horse or any other beast, untill you say, God saue him, or unlesse you spit upon him. If any harme befall the horse within three daies after, they seeke him out that praised him, that hee may mumble the Lords praier in his right eare.
They thinke there bee some that bewitch their horses with looking upon them: and then they use the helpe of some old hagges, who saying a few-praiers with a lowde voice, make them well againe. There is a certaine small worme, breeding in their horses feete, which creeping on still by little and little breedeth a great many of the same kinde, and corrupteth the bodie: against this worme, they send for a wise woman, who is brought E to the horse on two severall Mon-daies, and one Thurs-day. Shee breatheth upon the place where the worme lieth: and after shee hath rehersed a charme, the horse recovereth.
This charme they teach many for a peece of money, making them to sweare, that they will not reveal it to any body.

Against all maladies and mischeifs whatsoever, the woman haue effectuall enchaunt-mentes, or charmes, as they suppose: divided and parted amongst them, each one her sever-all enchantment, and the same of divers forces: unto whom every man according as his mischance requireth, speedeth himselfe for helpe. They say alwaies both before and after their charmes, a Pater Noster, and an Ave Maria.

When any man hath caught a fall upon the ground, forthwith hee starteth uppe F againe on his fete, and turneth himselfe round three times toward his right hand, with his sworde, skein, or knife hee diggeth into the earth, and fetcheth up a turfe, for that, they say, the earth doth yeelde a spirite: and if within some two or three daies

A daies he fell ſicke, there is ſent a woman skilfull in that kinde unto the ſaid place, and there ſhe ſaith on this wiſe. I call thee P. from the Eaſt and Weſt, South, and North, from the foreſts, woods, rivers, meeres, the wilde wood-fayries, white, redde, blacke &c. And withall, bolteth out certaine ſhort praiers: then returneth ſhe home unto the ſicke party, to try whither it bee the diſeaſe called Eſane, which they are of opinion is ſent by the Fairies: and whiſtereth a certain odde praier with a Pater Noſter into his eare, putteth ſome coles into a pot ful of faire water, and ſo giveth more certaine iudgement of the deceaſe, than many of our phyſicians can.

Their warrefaire conſiſteth of horſemen, of ſouldiours ſet in the rere gard, whom they Galloglaſſes, Kernes.

B terme Galloglaſſes, who fight with moſt keene hatchets, and of light armed footmen called Kernes, whoſe ſervice is with dartes and skaines. To giue an acclamation, and ſhout vnto every footman or horſeman as he goeth out of the gate, is counted lucky, and fortunate: hee who hath no ſuch applauſe is thought to haue ſome miſcheife portended unto him. In warre they uſe the bagpipe in ſteed of a trumpet; they cary about them Amulets, they recite certain praiers, and in joyning battaile they crie as loud as poſsible they can, Pharroh (I ſuppoſe this to be that military Barritus which Ammianus ſpeaketh of) with this perſwaſion, that he who crieth not as loud as the reſt, ſhal haue this accident befall unto him, ſodainlie to bee taken up from the ground, and carried, as it were, flying in the aire (avoiding ever after the ſight of men) into a certaine vaile in Kerry, as I haue ſaid before. Barritus.

Such as viſite and ſit by one that lieth ſicke in bed, never ſpeake word of God, nor of the

C ſalvation of his ſoule, ne yet of making his will, but all to put him in hope of his recovering: If any one call for the ſacrament, him they count paſt hope and recovery. The wiues paſſe not for any will-making, becauſe it is growne now to bee a common cuſtome, that a third part of the goods ſhall bee given unto them, and the reſt to bee divided by even portions among the children; ſaving that when they come to enter upon the inheritance, he that is mightieſt, caricth away the beſt ſhare. For he, that is ſtrongeſt, be he unkle or nephew, moſt times ſeizeth upon the inheritance, and ſhutteth the children out of all. When one lieth ready to die, before hee is quite gone, certaine women hired of purpoſe to lament, ſtanding in the meeting of croſſe high-waies, and holding their hands all abroad, call unto him, with certaine out-cries fitted for the nonce, and goe about to ſtay his ſoule as it laboureth to get forth

D of the bodie, by reckoning up the commodities that hee enjoyeth of worldly goods, of wiues, of beauty, fame, kinsfolke, friends, and horſes; and demanding of him, why hee will depart, and whither? and to whom? yea they expoſtulate with his ſoule, objecting that ſhe is unthankefull. At length they piteouſly make moane and ſay, that the ſoule now readie to leaue the bodie, is going away to theſe kinde of haggiſh women that appeare by night and in darkeneſſe: But after it is departed once out of the bodie, they keepe a mourning and wailing for it, with loud howling and clapping of their hands together. Now they follow the corps when it goes to buriall, with ſuch a peale of out-cries, that a man would thinke the quicke as well as the dead paſt all recoverie. In theſe wailings and lamentations, the nources, daughters and concubines make the greateſt a doe and are moſt vehement.

E Neither doe they mourne with leſſe ſorrow and heavineſſe, for thoſe that are ſlaine in battaile, than ſuch as die of ſickneſſe: although they affirme, that they haue an eaſier death, who looſe their liues in fighting in the field, or in robbing. Yet notwithſtanding, they raile upon their enemies with moſt ſpiteſull words, and continue for a long time deadly hatred againſt all of that Sept and kinred.

They ſuppoſe that the ſoules of ſuch as are deceaſed, goe into the company of certaine men, famous in thoſe places, touching whom they reteine ſtill fables and ſongs, as of Giantes, Fin-Mac-Huyle, Osker Mac-Oſhin, and they ſay, that by illuſion they often times doe ſee ſuch.

As for their meates, they feed willingly upon herbs, & watercreſſes eſpecially; up- Watercreſſes.

F on Muſhromes Shamroots & rootes: ſo that Strabo not without good cauſe ſaid they Shamrootes.
were πωφάγοι, i. Eaters of herbs, for which in ſome copies is falſly read πολυφάγοι, i. Great Eaters. They delight alſo in butter tempered with ote meale, in milke, whey, beefe-broth, and fleſh oftentimes without any bread at all. As for the corne that they haue, they lay it up for their horſes provender, for whom verily they are e- A ſpecially carefull. When they be hunger-bitten in time of dearth, they diſdaine not to devour raw fleſh, after they haue preſſed out the bloud thereof: and for to concoct and digeſt it, they ſwill in and powre downe the throat Vskebah draught after draught. They let their kine bloud alſo, which when it is growne to a gelley and ſtrewed over with butter, they eat with good appetite.

They goe for the moſt part bare headed: unleſſe it be when they put on an head-peace. The haire of their head they weare long, and nothing ſet they greater ſtore by, than the glibbes or treſſes of their haires; and to haue the ſame plucked or twitched, they take it for a contumelious indignity. They uſe linnen ſhirts and thoſe verily exceeding large, with wide ſleeues and hanging ſide downe to their very knees, B which they were wont to ſteine with ſaffron. Littel jackets they haue of wollen, and thoſe very ſhort: breeches moſt plaine and cloſe to their thighs. But they caſt over theſe, their mantells or ſhagge Rugges, which Iſidore ſeemeth to cal Heteromalle, with a deepe fringed purfle, and the ſame deintily ſet out with ſundry collours: within which, they lappe themſelues in the night, and ſweetly ſleepe on the very ground. Such alſo doe the women caſt over the ſide garment that they weare downe to the foote, and with elnes (as I ſaid) of Sendall rolled up in wreathes, they rather load than adorne their heads: like as they doe their neckes with chaines and carkaneth, their armes alſo with bracelets. Theſe are the manners of the wilde Iriſh, otit of our author: In the reſt, for the moſt part all, that inhabite the Eng- C liſh pale (as they terme it) there is no point of courteſie and civility wanting: for which, they are beholden the Engliſh conqueſt: and for much more might the whole Iſland be beholden unto it, in caſe upon a certaine peeviſh and obſtinate loue they beare unto their owne country faſchions, they had not ſtopped their eares and ſhut up their hearts againſt better gouernance. For, the Iriſhry are ſo ſtifly ſettled in obſerving of the old rites of their country, that not only they cannot be with-drawn from them, but alſo are able eaſily to draw the Engliſh unto the ſame (ſo prone is mans nature to entertaine the worſt) that one would not beleeue in how ſhort a time ſome Engliſh among them degenerate and grow out of kinde. D

E

THE

F

A

A PRAEFACE TO THE ANNALES OF IRELAND.

B THus far forward was the Printers presse a going when the Honourable Lord William Howard of Naworth, for the love that he beareth unto the studies of Antiquity, willingly imparted unto me the Manuscript Annales of Ireland, from the yere of our Salvation MCLII. unto the yere MCCCLXX. Which I thought good to publish; considering that after Giraldus Cambrensis, there is nothing to my knowledge, extant
C better in this kind; and because, so noble and worthy a person whose they were by right in private before, permitted so much. Unto whom, the very same thankes in maner are dulie to be yeelded for bringing them to light, that were to be given unto the author himselfe, who first recorded them in writing. And albeit, they are penned in a stile somewhat rude and barrain (as D those times required) yet much matter is therein contained, that may illustrate the Irish Historie, and would have given good light unto me, if they had not come to my hands so late. Take them heere therefore truely and faithfully exemplified, even as I found them, with all their imperfections and faults; and if you have any better impart them with semblable courtesie unto us: If not, make use of these with us: untill some one come
E forth and shew himselfe, that wil helpe us to a fuller Chronicle, and happilie continue the same in length even unto our daies with more elegancie of F phrase, which verily would be no painfull worke to be performed.

THE ANNALES OF IRELAND.

ANno Domini. MCLXII. Gregory the first Archbishop of Dublin, a man praise worthy every way, slept in the Lord: after whom succeded holy Laurence O-Thothil, who was Abbot of S. Kemnus de Glindelagh. Thomas is made Archbishop of Canterbury.

MCLXVI. Rothericke O-Conghir, Prince of Connaght was made King and Monarch of Ireland.

MCLXVII. Died Maude the Empresse. The same yeere Almaricke King of Ierusalem tooke Babylon. And in the same yeere, Dermoc Mac-Murrogh Prince of Leinster, whiles O-Rork King of Meth was in a certaine expedition, carried away his wife, who was willing enough to be ravished. For herselfe made meanes to be taken as a prey, as we finde in Cambrensis.

MCLXVIII. Donate King of Vriell founder of Mellifont Monastery, departed in Christ. In the same yeere Robert Fitz-Stephen, neither unmindfull of his promise, nor a breaker of his faith, came into Ireland with thirty Knights.

MCLXIX. Earle Richard of Stroghul, sent before him into Ireland a certain yoong Gentleman of his owne family named Remund, with ten Knights about the Calends of May. The same yeere, the said Earle Richard accompanied with two hundred Knights or thereabout, and others to the number, as one would say, of a thousand, arrived on the even of S. Bartholomew the Apostle. Which Richard verily, was the sonne of Gilbert Earle of Stroghul, that is, Chippestow, sometime Strogull. This Richard also was the sonne of Isabell aunt by the mothers side of K. Malcome, and William King of Scotland and of David the Earle a Gentleman of good hope: and the morrow after the same Apostles day, they tooke the said City: and there, Eva, Dermots daughter was lawfully joyned in mariage unto Earle Richard, and her father gave her.

MCLXXI. S. Thomas Becket Archbishop of Canterbury was slaine. In the same yeere the City of Dublin was by the Earle and his company taken. And the same yeere was founded the Abbay De Castro Dei, that is, of Gods Castle.

MCLXXI. Dermot Mac-Morrogh, full of daies, was taken out of this world at Fernys, about the Kalends of May.

MCLXXII. The courageous King Henrie, with 500. Knights arrived at Waterford, and among other things gave Meth unto Sir Hugh Lacy. The same yeere was founded the Abbay de Fonte Vivo.

MCLXXIIII. Gelasius Archbishop of Armagh, the first Primate of Ireland, an holy man, aged and full of daies rested in Christ. This Gelasius, is said to be the first Archbishop, that wore the first pall. But others before him, were in name onely called Archbishops and Primates, for the reverent regard & honour of Saint Patricke, as being the Apostle of that Nation: whose See was from the beginning had of all men in so great reverence, that not only Bishops and Priests & those of the Cleargie, but Kings and Princes uniuersally were subject to the Bishop thereof in all obedience. After whom succeeded in the Archbishopricke, Gilbert, a Prelate of good memorie.

MCLXXV. William King of Scotland was taken prisoner at Alnewicke.

MCLXXVI. Bertram Verdon founded the Abbay of Crokisdenne.

MCLXXVII. Earle Richard about the Kalends of May died at Dublin, and was buried in the Church of the holy Trinity at Dublin. The same yeere Vivian a Priest, Cardinall entituled of Saint Stephan in Mount Cælius, came as Legat of the Apostolicall See into Ireland, sent from Pope Alexander.

MCLXXVIII.

A MCLXXVIII. The ninth day before the Calends of December, the Abbay de Samaria was founded. The same yeere was founded Rose Vale, that is, Rossglasse.

MCLXXIX. Miles Cogan, and Ralph the sonne of Fitz-Stephan, his daughters husband, were slaine betweene Waterford and Lismore &c. as we read in Cambrensis. The same yeere, Hervie Mont-Marish, entred the Monasterie of Saint Trinity in Canterburie: who founded the Monasterie of Saint Marie de Portu, that is, of Dozbroth.

MCLXXX. The Abbay of the Quire of Benet was founded. The same yeere was founded the Abbay of Geripount. The same yeere, Laurence Archbishop of Dub-
B lin, upon the 18. day before the Calends of December happily slept in the Lord within the Church of Saint Marie of Aux. After whom succeeded Iohn Cumin an English man borne in England at Euesham, chosen with good agreement and accord, by the Cleargy of Dublin (the King by his industry procuring the same) and confirmed by the Pope: which Iohn afterwards founded the Church of Saint Patricke in Dublin.

MCLXXXIII. The order of the Templars and Hospitaliers is confirmed. The same yeere is founded the Abbay de lege Dei, that is, Gods law.

MCLXXXV. Iohn the Kings sonne, Lord of Ireland by his fathers gift, came into Ireland in the 12. yeere of his age: in the thirteenth yeere after his fathers com-
C ming: after the comming of Fitz-Stephan the fifteenth, in the 14. yere from the comming of Earle Richard: and in the same fifteenth yeere returned.

MCLXXXVI. The order of the Cartusians and of the Grandians is confirmed. In the same yeere Hugh Lacy was killed at Deruath treacherously by an Irishman; because the foresaid Hugh would build a castle there: and as he was teaching of an Irishman how to labour with an yron toole, to wit, a Pykax; when Hugh bowed himself forward, he strok him to the ground with both hands, & as he held down his head, the said Irishman with an axe chopt of Hugh Lacy his head: and there was an end of the conquest. In the same yeere Christian, Bishop of Lismore, sometime Legate of Ireland, an earnest follower of the vertues which hee had seene and heard of his
D devout father Saint Bernard, and Pope Eugenius a venerable man, with whom hee was in the Probatory at Clarevall, who also ordained him to be the Legate in Ireland, after his obedience performed, within the monasterie of Kyrieleyson, happily departed to Christ. Ierusalem was taken with the Lords crosse, by the Soldan and the Saracens, after many Christians slaine.

MCLXXXVII. Vpon the Calends or first day of Iuly, was the Abbay of Ynes in Ulster founded.

MCLXXXIX. Henrie Fitz-Empresse departed this life: after whom succeeded his sonne Richard, and is buried in Font-Ebrard. In the same yeere was founded the Abbay, de Colle victoriæ, that is, of Cnokmoy.

E MCXC. King Richard, and King Philip make a voiage into the holy land.

MCXCI. In the Monasterie of Clarevall, the translation of Malachie Bishop of Armagh was honorably celebrated.

MCXCII. The Citie of Dublin was burnt.

MCXCIII. Richard King of England in his return from the holy land, was taken prisoner by the Duke of Austrich, and hee made an end by composition with the Emperour, to pay for his ransome one hundred thousand markes, and with the Empresse, to pay thirty thousand: also, with the foresaid Duke, 20. thousand markes, in regard of an obligation which he had made unto them for Henrie Duke of Saxonie. Now, hee remained in the Emperours prison, a yeere, six moneths and three daies: For F whose ransome, all the Chalices in maner throughout England were sold. In the same yeere was founded the Abbay de Iugo Dei, that is, of Gods Yoke.

MCXCIIII. The Reliques of S. Malachie Bishop of Clareval, were brought into Ireland, and with all honor that might be, received in the Monasterie of Mellifont and the rest of the Monasteries of the Cistertien order.

MCXCV. Matthew Archbishop of Cassile Legate of Ireland, & Iohn Archbishop of Dublin

Dublin carried away the corps of Hugh Lacy the conquerour of Meth, from the Iriſh: and ſolemnely enterred it in the Monaſterie of Bleſſednes, that is, Bectу. But the head of the ſaid Hugh was beſtowed in the Monaſterie of Saint Thomas in Dublin. A MCXCVIII. The order of Friers Preachers began in the parts about Toloufe, by Dominicke the ſecond.

MCXCIX. Richard King of England died: After whom ſucceeded Iohn his brother who was Lord of Ireland & Earle of Mortaigne: which Iohn ſlew Arthur the lawful heire, ſonne of Geffrey his whole brother.

And in this manner died Richard, when King Richard beſeeged the Caſtle of Chaluz in litle Britaine, wounded he was to death with an arrow by one of thoſe in the ſaid Caſtle, named Bertram Gurdon. And when he deſpaired of his life, he demiſed the Kingdome of England and all his other lands unto his brother to keepe. All his Iewells and one fourth part of his Treaſure he gaue unto his Nephew Otho, and another fourth part of his treaſure he gaue, and commanded to bee dealt among his ſervants and the poore. Now when the ſaid Bertram was apprehended & brought before the King, the K. demanded of him in theſe termes: what harme haue I done thee that thou haſt ſlaine me? Unto whom without any manner of feare, hee anſwered. Thus thou killedſt my father and two of my brethren with thine owne hand, and me alſo thou wouldeſt now haue killed: Take therefore what revenge ſo ever thou wilt of me, for, I paſſe not, ſo thou maiſt be ſlaine, that haſt wrought ſo many miſchiefs to the world. Then the King forgaue him his death, and commanded that he ſhould bee let goe at liberty and to giue him beſides one hundred ſhillings ſterling. But after the King was dead: ſome of the Kings Miniſters ſlaied the ſaid Bertram and hung him up. And this King yeelded up his vitall breath the eight day before the Ides of Aprill, which fell out to be the fourth daie of the weeke before Palme-Sunday, and the eleventh day after he was wounded: and buried hee was at Font Ebrad, at the feete of his father. Touching whoſe death a certaine verſifier ſaith thus. B C D

Iſtius in morte perimit formica leonem.
Proh dolor, in tanto funere mundus obit.
In this mans death, it is well ſeene, the Ant a Lion ſlaies,
And in ſo great a death (alas) the world doth end her daies.

The Corps of which King Richard is divided into three parts. Whence was this verſe made.

Viſcera Carceolum, Corpus Fons ſervat Ebrardi,
Et Cor Rhothomagum Magne Richarde tuum.
Thy bowels onely, Carceol keeps, thy Corps Font-Everard,
And Roan hath keeping of thy heart, O Puiſſant Richard. E

When King Richard was departed this life, his brother Iohn was guirt with the ſword of the Duchy of Normandy by the Archbiſhop of Rhoan, the ſeventh day before the Calends of Maie next enſuing after the death of the foreſaid King: which Archbiſhop did ſet upon the head of the ſaid Duke a Circle floure with golden roſes in the top round about. Alſo upon the ſixth day before the Calends of Iune, he was annointed and crowned King of England: all the Lords and Nobles of England being preſent, within the Church of Saint Peter in Weſtminſter, upon the daie of the Lords Aſcenſion: and afterwards was Iohn King of England called to a Parliament in France, by the King of France, to anſwere as touching the death of his Nephew Arthur: and becauſe he came not, he deprived him of Normandy. The ſame yeere was the Abbay of Commerer founded. F

MCC. Cathol Cronerg King of Conaght founder of the Monaſtery de Colle Victoriæ, that is, of the Hill of Victorie, is expelled out of Conaght. The ſame yeere

was

A was founded, the Monasterie de Voto, that is, Tynterne, by William Marshall, Earle Marshall and of Pembroch, who was Lord of Leinster, to wit of Weisford, Offerie, Caterlagh and Kildare, in regard and right of his wife: who espoused the daughter of Richard Earle of Stroghul, and of Eue the daughter of Dermot-Mac-Murogh. But because the foresaid William Earle Marshall was in exceeding great jeopardy both day and night in the sea, he vowed a vow unto our Lord Iesus Christ, that if he might be delivered from the tempest, and come to land, he would make a Monastery unto Christ and Mary his mother: and so it came to passe, when hee was come safe to Weisford, he made, I say the Monastery of Tyntern, according to his vow, and called it the Monastery De voto, that is, of the vow. In the same yeere was founded the Monastery de Flumine Dei, that is, of Gods river.

B MCCII. Gathol Cronerg or Crorobdyr, King of Conaght was set againe in his kingdome. The same yeere is founded the house of Canons or Regular Priests, of S. Mary, by Sir Meiler Fitz-Henry.

MCCIII. The Abbay of S. Saviour, that is, Dowisky, being founded, was in this yeere and the next following built.

MCCIIII. There was a field fought betweene Iohn Curcy Earle of Vlster, and Hugh Lacy at Doune: in which battaile many on both sids lost their lives. But Iohn Curcy had the upper hand in fight. Afterwards upon the Sixth day of the weeke being Good-Friday, when the foresaid Iohn was unarmed, and went by way of Pilgrimage barefoot and in his linnen vesture a visiting the Churches, as the maner is, treacherously he was taken prisoner by his owne people for a peece of mony given
C in hand and for a greater reward to be given afterward for a recompense; and so was delivered unto Hugh Lacy. But he bringeth him unto the King of England, who gave unto Hugh Lacy the Earledome of Vlster & the Seigniory of Conaught, which belonged unto Iohn Curcy. Then Hugh Lacy being Earle, rewarded all the foresaid Traitours that had betraied Iohn Curcy and gave unto them gold, and silver more or lesse: But straight-waies hung up all the Traitors aforesaid and tooke away all their goods: and so Hugh Lacy ruleth over all Vlster, and Iohn Curcy is condemned to perpetuall prison, because he had before time beene a Rebell to Iohn King of England, and would not doe him homage, and besides blamed him about the death of Arthur the rightfull heire unto the Crowne: But whiles he was in prison and in D extreame poverty, having but little allowance, and the same course and simple, for to eat and drinke, he said, O God, wherefore dealest thou thus by me, who have built and reedified so many Monasteries for thee and thy Saints? Now when he had many times wailed and made loud moane in this wise, and therewith fell a sleep; The Holy Trinity appeared unto him, saying: Why hast thou cast me out of mine owne seat, and out of the church of Doune, & placed there my S. Patrick the Patron of Ireland? (Because indeed, Iohn Curcy had expelled the Secular Canons or Priests out of the Cathedrall Church of Doune, and brought the Blacke Monks of Chester and placed E them in the said Church: And the Holy Trinity stood there in a stately shrine or seat: and Iohn himselfe tooke it downe out of the Church, and ordeined a Chappell for that image, and in the great Church set up the the image of S. Patrick which displeased the most High God): Therefore thus said God: Know thou well, that thou shalt never enter into thy Seigniory in Ireland.

Howbeit, in regard of other good deeds that thou hast done, thou shalt with honour be delivered forth of prison: which also came to passe. And now by this time, there arose a contention betweene Iohn King of England, and the King of Fraunce, about a Seigniorie and certaine Castles: and this suit or controversie still depending,
F the King of Fraunce offred unto him a Giant or Champion to fight for his right. Then the King of England called to remembrance his most valiant Knight Iohn Curcy, whom upon the information of others, he had before cast into prison; The King therefore sent for Iohn Curcy, and asked him, if he were able to helpe and stand him in steed in a combat: then Iohn answered and said I will not fight for thee, but for the right of the Kingdome: for which afterward hee undertooke to doe his endevour deavor in ſingle fight: and ſo refreſhed himſelfe with meate, drink, and bathing, and A tooke the vertue of his owne fortitude and ſtrength: and a day was appointed betweene theſe Gigants or Champions, namely betweene Iohn Curcy and the other. But when the Champion of Fraunce heard of his exceeding great feeding and of his ſtrength, hee refuſed the combat, and then was the ſaid Seignorie given unto the King of England: Then the King of Fraunce requeſted to ſee a ſtroke given by the hand of Iohn Curcy: and he ſet a ſtrong & doughty good morion full of maile upon a great blocke or log of wood: and the fore-ſaid Iohn taking his skeine or ſword, and looking backe round about him with a ſterne and grim countenance, ſmote the morion through from the very creſt downeward into the blocke, and the ſword ſtucke in the wood ſo faſt, that no other man but himſelfe was able to plucke out the B ſword: then Iohn at the requeſt of the Kings eaſily pluckt it forth. And the kings demaunded of the foreſaid Iohn, wherfore he looked behind him with ſo grime a countenance before he gave the ſtroke; who anſwered, that if he had failed in giving that ſtroke, he would have ſlaine them all, as well kings as others. And the kings gave unto him great gifts: yea and the king of England rendred unto him alſo his Seignorie of Vlſter: But Iohn Curcy attempted 15. times to ſaile over ſea into Ireland: but was alwaies in danger, and the wind evermore againſt him: wherefore he waited a while among the Monkes of Cheſter. At length hee returned into France and there reſted in the Lord.

MCCV. The Abbay of Wetheney in the County of Lymericke was founded by G
Theobald the ſonne of Walter Butler, Lord of Karryke.

MCCVI. The order of Freers Minors was begunne neere the Citie Aſſiſa, by Saint Francis.

MCCVIII. William Breos is expelled out of England and commeth into Ireland, England is interdicted for the tyrannie of king Iohn of England. Likewiſe a great overthrow and ſlaughter hapned at Thurles in Mounſter, committed upon the Lord Iuſtice of Irelands men, by Sir Geffery Mareys.

MCCX. Iohn king of England came into Ireland with a great fleet and a puiſſant armie: and for that the ſonnes of Hugh Lacy, to wit the Lord Walter Lord of Meth and Hugh his brother exerciſed tyrannie upon the Commons, & eſpecially becauſe D they ſlew Sir Iohn Curſon, Lord of Rathenny and Kilbarrocke (for, they heard that the foreſaid Iohn accuſed them unto the king) therfore I ſay the king drave the foreſaid ſonnes of Hugh Lacy out of the land: and they fled into Fraunce, and ſerved in the Monaſterie of Saint Taurin, as unknowne, working about cley and bricke and ſometime in garden, as Gardiners; but at length they were knowen by the Abbat of the ſaid monaſterie: and the ſaid Abbat entreated the king for them, becauſe he had baptized his ſonnes and was Godſib unto him as a Godfather many times: and Walter Lacy paid two thouſand and five hundred markes. And Hugh Lacy paid a great ſumme of money unto the king for this raunſome, and at the re- E queſt of the ſaid Abbat reſtored they were againe unto their former degree and Seignorie. And Walter Lacy brought with him Iohn the ſonne of Alured, that is, Fitz-Acory, ſonne to the foreſaid Abbats whole brother, and he made him knight and gave unto him the Seignorie of Dengle and many other Lord-ſhips. Item, hee brought Monkes with him out of the ſame monaſterie, and gave unto them many fermes, and the Cell called Foury in regard of charity, thankfulneſſe, and counſell: and Hugh Lacy Earle of Vlſter made a Cell for Monkes, and endowed them in Vlſter in a place called..... But Iohn king of England having taken many pledges and hoſtages as well of Engliſh as of Iriſh, and hanged a number of malefactours upon Iebbits, and ſetled the State of the land, returned into England the ſame yeere that F he came thither.

MCCXI. Sir Richard Tuit by the fall of a towre at Alone, was cruſhed and whindred to death. This Richard was founder of the Monaſterie de Grenard.

MCCXII. The Abbay of Grenard was founded. In the ſame yeere died Iohn Comyn Archbiſhop of Dublin, and was buried within the quire of the Church of the ſucceeded

A Holy Trinity: who was founder of Saint Patrickes Church of Dublin: after whom succeeded Henrie Londres, who is called Scorch Villeyn, by occasion of a certaine act of his: for that one day he called his tenants before him, to answere by what tenure they held of him. And those tenants shewed their deeds and charters. But hee commanded the charters or deeds of these husband men his tenants to be burned: and then the Freeholders evermore called him Henrie Scorch-Villeyn: which Henrie Archbishop of Dublin was Iustice of Ireland, and built Dublin castle.

MCCXIII. William Petit and Petre Messet departed this life. This Petre Messet was Baron of Luyn hard by Trym; but because he died without heire male, the inheritance passed unto three daughters: The eldest of whom the Lord Vernail marri-
B ed, the Second, Talbot wedded and the other Lounders espoused: and so they parted the inheritance betweene themselves.

MCCXIX. The citie of Damieta, in the Nones of September was about the still time of midnight miraculously wonn, so that in the forcing and taking therof, there was not one Christian lost his life. In the same yeere died William Mareshall the Elder, Earle Mareshall and of Pembroch, who begat on the daughter of Richard Strongbow Earle of Stroghul five sonnes; the name of the first sonne was William; the name of the second Walter; the name of the third Gilbert; the name of the fourth Anselme; the name of the fifth Richard: who was slaine in the warre of
C Kildare: and every one of these siue sonnes was Earle after their father by succession in their fathers inheritance: and none of these had issue, wherefore the inheritance went away unto the sisters, namely the daughters of their father: the first was named Maude Mareschall, the second Isabell Clare, the third Eua Breos; the fourth Iohan Mount Chensey, the fifth Sibill Countesse Ferrers. Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolck espoused Maude Mareschall, and he in right of his wife was Earle Mareschall of England: which Hugh begat Raufe Bigod, father of Iohn Bigod, who was the sonne of the Lady Bertha Furnival; also Isabell Lacy, wife to Lord Iohn Fitz Gefferey: and when Hugh Bigod Earle of Northfolke was dead, shee bare Iohn de Guaren Earle of Surry, and his sister Isabell Albeney Countesse of Arundell. Gilbert Clare
D Earle of Glocester espoused Isabell the second sister, who betweene them had issue Richard de Clare Earle of Glocester: and she was mother to the Lady Anise Countesse of Denshire, who was mother of Isabell wife to the Lord Robert Brus Earle of Carryeke in Scotland, and was afterwards king of the same Scotland. Of Eua Brus the third sister, was begotten Mawde, who was the mother of the Lord Edmund Mortymer, and mother to the Lady Eue Cauntelow, mother of the Lady Milsond Mohun, who was mother of Dame Eleanor, mother to the Earle of Hereford.

The Lord Guarin Mont Chensey espoused Iohan Mareschall the fourth sister, of whom came Iohan Valens. Sibyll the Countesse of Ferrers, to wit the fourth, had issue five daughters: The first, Agnes Vescy, mother to the Lord Iohn, and the Lord William E Vescy: the second Isabell Basset: the third Ioan Mohun wife to the Lord Iohn Mohun sonne of the Lord Reginald. The fourth, Sibill Mohun wife to Lord Fraun cis Bohun Lord of Midhurst. The fifth Eleanor Vaus, who was wife unto the Earle of Winchester. The sixth Agatha Mortimer, wife to the Lord Hugh Mortimer. The seuenth Maude Kyme Lady of Carbry. All these abouesaid as well males as females are of the Genealogie of the said William Earle Mareschall.

MCCXX. The Translation of S. Thomas of Canterbury. In the same yeere died the Lord Meiler Fitz-Henry, founder of the house of Connall, who is buried in the Chapter house of the same house.

MCCXXIIII. The Castle of Bedford was besieged, and the Castle of Trim in F Ireland.

MCCXXV. Roger Pippard died, and Anno. MCCXXVIII. died William Pippard sometime Lord of the Salmons-Leap: There departed likewise Henry Londres, alias, Scorchvilleyn Archbishop of Dublin, and is enterred in the Church of the Holy Trinity at Dublin.

MCCXXX. Henry King of England gave unto Hubert Burk, the Iusticeship of Ireland

This place is corrupted in the copie.

cc land, and the third penny of Rent, and made him Earle of Kent. And afterward, the A cc ſame Hubert was impriſoned : and great treuble aroſe betweene the King and his cc ſubiects, becauſe he adhered to ſtrangers more than to his owne naturall people.
cc MCCXXXI. William Mareſchall the younger, Earle Mareſhall and of Pembroke died, who is buried within the Quire of the Freers Preachers in Kilkenny.
cc MCCXXXIIII. Richard Earle Mareſhall and of Pembrock or Strughul, on the cc firſt day before the Ides of April was wounded in battaile, upon the plaine of Kildare:
cc and ſome few daies after died in Kilkenny : and there hard by his naturall whole bro-cc ther, to wit William, lieth buried within the quire of Freers Preachers, of whom it is cc thus written. B
cc Cujus, ſub foſſa Kilkenia continet oſſa.
cc Whoſe bones beſtow'd in grave ſo deep.
cc Kilkenny towne doth ſafely keep.
cc
cc MCCXL. Walter Lacy Lord of Meth departed this life in England, leaving behinde him two daughter his heires: whereof Sir Theobald Verdon maried the firſt, cc and Geffery Genevile eſpouſed the ſecond.

The whole yeere out of an old fragment.

cc MCCLII. The Caſtle of Slegah was built by Morice Fitz-Gerald Iuſtice of cc Ireland. King Edward the Firſt marched into Wales with a great army and ſent to cc the ſaid Iuſtice that he would come to him with ſome forces out of Ireland, who ac- C cc cordingly came with the flower of the Engliſh in Ireland, and Phelin O-Conor who cc was then King of Conacht in his company and ſhortly returned with victory and hocc nour. Afterward the ſaid Iuſtice preied the country Tirconnell and gave a moiete cc thereof to Cormac Mac-Dermot Mac-Rory, and carried with him pledges for the cc other moiety and left them in the caſtle of Sleagh. Another expedition was made cc by the ſaid Iuſtice and the Engliſh; firſt he came to Sleigagh, thence to Hohoſſerocc vie Mac-Morin the Tueſday after the feaſt of Peter and Paul, and Cormac-Mac-cc Dermot Mac-Rorye accompanied them. At that time O-Donnel aſſembled all Ki-cc neoill Conail againſt them at the ford of Ath-Shany ſo that he permitted neither D cc Engliſh nor Iriſh to paſſe over the ford: wherupon the Engliſh reſolved to ſend Cor-cc mac Mac-Rory O-Conor with a company of horſe into the champion Weſtward cc and they returned by an higher plaine over the Moores Eaſtward to the ford of cc Quylvain upon the water Earne, ſo that O-Donnel knew nothing of thoſe compacc nies of horſe untill he ſaw them on that ſide of the river that he himſelfe encamped, cc and when he ſaw the Engliſh, at his backe he encountred them, but his army was cc put to rout, and Moyls Haghlin O-Donnel commonly called King of Kineoil Conail cc was ſlaine with Gylly Cauinelagh Obugill and Mac-Derley King of Oreſgaell with cc the prncipall men of Kineoil Conail. And many of the army of the ſaid Iuſtice were cc drowned as they paſſed over the water of Fin Northward and among them in the E cc reſcuing of a prey there were ſlaine Atarmanudaboge, Sir W. Brit Sherif of Conacth cc and the yongue knight his brother. And afterward the ſaid army ſpoiled the coun-cc try and left the Signiory of Keneoil Conail to Rory O-Conor for that time.
cc There was another expedition alſo by the ſaid Iuſtice into Tirconnell and great cc ſpoiles made, and O-Canamayn was expelled out of Kenoilgaine, and he left the teritocc of ry Kenail Conail with Gorry Mac-Donald O-Donnel.
cc There was another expedition alſo by the ſaid Iuſtice into Tireogaine againſt O-Neale but he gave pledges for the preſeruation of his country.
cc There was another expedition be the ſaid Iuſtice in Leinſter againſt the Iriſhry cc whom he pittifully outraged, and ſpoiled their land.
cc In another expedition alſo the ſaid iuſtice deſtroyed Kenoilgaine, and all Vlſter in diſ- F cc pite of O-Neale tarrying three nights at Tullaghoge.
cc MCCXLIII. Hugh Lacy Earle of Vlſter died, and is buried at Crag-fergous in the cc covent of the freers Minours, leaving a daughter his heire: whom Walter Burk, who cc was Earle of Vlſter eſpouſed. In the ſame yeere died Lord Girald Fitz-Moris, and Richard Burk.

MCCXLVI. An

A MCCXLVI. In Earthquake over all the West about 9. of the clocke. ,, MCCXLVIII. Sir Iohn Fitz-Gefferey knight, came lord Iustice into Ireland. ,, MCCL. Lewis king of France and William Long Espee, with many other are taken ,, prisoners by the Saracens. In Ireland, Maccanewey, a sonne of Beliol was slaine in ,, Leys, as he well deserved. ,, MCCLI. The Lord Henry Lacy was borne. Likewise upon Christmas day, Alex- ,, ander king of Scotland a child eleven yeers old, espoused at Yorke Margaret the king ,, of Englands daughter. ,,
MCCLV. Alan de La Zouch is made lord justice, and commeth into Ireland. ,, MCCLVII. The lord Moris or Maurice Fitz-Gerald deceasseth. ,, MCCLIX. Stephen Long Espee commeth lord justice of Ireland. The Greene ,, B castle in Vlster is throwne downe. Likewise William Dene is made lord justice of ,,
Ireland. ,,
MCCLXI. The lord Iohn Fitz-Thomas, and the lord Maurice his sonne, are slaine in ,, Desmond by Mac-Karthy: likewise William Dene, lord justice of Ireland dejected, af- ,, ter whom succeeded in the same yeere Sir Richard Capell. ,, MCCLXII. Richard Clare earle of Glocester died: Item, Martin Maundevile left this ,, life the morrow after Saint Bennets day. ,, MCCLXIIII. Maurice Fitz-Gerald, and Maurice Fitz-Maurice tooke prisoners Ri- ,, chard Capell, the lord Theobald Botiller, and the lord Iohn Cogan, at Tristel-Dermot. ,, C MCCLXVII. David Barry is made lord justice of Ireland. ,, MCCLXVIII. Comin Maurice Fitz-Maurice is drowned. Item, Lord Robert Vfford is ,, made lord justice of Ireland. ,, MCCLXIX. The castle of Roscoman is founded. Richard of Excester is made lord ,, justice. ,,
MCCLXX. The lord Iames Audeley came lord justice into Ireland. ,, MCCLXXI. Henry the kings sonne of Almain is slaine in the Court of Rome. The ,, same yeere reigned the plague, famine and the sword, and most in Meth. Item, ,, Nicholas de Verdon and his brother Iohn are slaine. Walter Burk or de Burgo earle ,, of Vlster died. ,,
D MCCLXXII. The lord Iames Audeley, justice of Ireland, was killed with a fal from ,, his horse in Twomond: after whom succeeded lord Maurice Fitz-Maurice in the ,, office of chiefe justice. ,, MCCLXXIII. The lord Geffrey Genevile returned out of the holy land, and is ,, made justice of Ireland. ,, MCCLXXIIII. Edward the sonne of king Henry, by the hands of Robert Kelwarby ,, a Frier of the Order of preaching Friers, and archbishop of Canterbury, upon Saint ,, Magnus the Martires day, in the church of Westminster was annointed K. of England ,, and crowned, in the presence of the lords & nobles of al England: whose Protestation ,, and oth was in this forme. I Edward sonne and heire to king Henry, professe, protest & ,, E promise before God and his Angels, from this time forward to keepe without respect ,, the law, justice, and peace unto the holy church of God, and the people subject unto ,, me, so far forth as we can devise by the counsel of our leige and loial ministers also to ,, exhibite condigne & canonical honor unto the Bishops of Gods church, to preserue ,, inviolably whatsoever hath beene bestowed by emperors and kings upon the church ,, committed unto them, and to yeeld due honor unto Abbats and the lords Vessels, ,, according to the advise of our leiges &c. So helpe mee God, and the holy Gospels of ,, the Lord. In the same yeere died the lord Iohn Verdon: likewise the lord Thomas Clare ,, came into Ireland. Item, William Fitz-Roger, Prior of the Hospitalers with many o- ,, thers are taken prisoners at Glyndelory: and more there slaine. ,, F MCCLXXV. The castle of Roscoman is erected againe. In the same yeere Moydagh ,, was taken prisoner at Norragh by Sir Walter Faunte. ,, MCCLXXVI. Robert Vfford is made lord justice of Ireland the second time: Gef- ,, frey Genevile gaue place and deported. ,, MCCLXXVII. O-Brene is slaine. ,,

MCCLXXVIII. The lord David Barry died. Likewiſe the lord Iohn Cogan. A MCCLXXIX. The lord Robert Ufford entred into England, and appointed in his roome frier Robert Fulborne, biſhop of Waterford, in whoſe time the money was changed: likewiſe the Round table was holden at Kenilworth by the lord Roger Mortimer.
MCCLXXX. Robert Vfford returned out of England, lord Iuſtice as before. Alſo the wife of Robert Vfford deceaſſed.
MCCLXXXI. Adam Cuſack the younger ſlew William Barret and many others in Connaght. Item, Frier Stephen Fulborn is made juſtice of Ireland. Item, The lord Robert Vfford returned into England. B
MCCLXXXII. Moritagh and Arte Mac-Murgh his brother are ſlaine at Arclowe on the even of Saint Mary Mawdlen. Likewiſe the lord Roger Mortimer died.
MCCLXXXIII. The city of Dublin was in part burnt, and the Belfray of Saint Trinity church in Dublin, the third day before the Nones of Ianuary.
MCCLXXXIIII. The caſtle of Ley was taken and burnt by the Potentates or lords of Offaly; the morrow after Saint Barnabe the Apoſtle his day. Alphonſus the kings ſonne twelue yeeres old, changed his life.
MCCLXXXV. The lord Theobald Botiller died the ſixth day before the Kalends of October in the caſtle of Arclowe, & was buried there in the covent of the Freers preachers. Item, Gerald Fitz-Maurice was taken priſoner by his owne Iriſh in Offalie, and Richard Petit and Saint-Doget with many other: and a great overthrow was given at Rathode with much ſlaughter. C MCCLXXXVI. Norragh and Arſtoll with other townes were one after another continually burnt by Philip Stanton, the 16. day before the Calends of December. In theſe daies Alianor Queene of England mother of king Edward tooke the mantell & the ring at Ambresbury, upon the day of Saint Thomas his tranſlation, having her dower in the kingdome of England confirmed by the Pope to be poſſeſſed for ever. Likewiſe, Calwagh is taken priſoner at Kildare. The lord Thomas Clare departed this life.
MCCLXXXVII. Stephen Fulborne Archbiſhop of Tuam died: after whom there ſucceeded in the office of lord chiefe juſtice for a time, Iohn Sampford archbiſhop of Dublin. In the ſame year the king of Hungary forſaking the chriſtian faith became an Apoſtata: and when he had called fraudulently, as it were, to a parliament the mightier potentates of his land, Miramomelius a puiſſant Saracene came upon them with 20. thouſand ſoldiors carrying away with him the king with all the chriſtians there aſſembled on the even of Saint Iohn Baptiſts day: as the chriſtians therfore journeied, the weather that was cleere and faire turned to be cloudy: and ſodainely a tempeſt of haile killed many thouſands of the Infidels together: The chriſtians returned to their owne homes, and the Apoſtata king alone went with the Saracenes. The Hungarians therefore crowning his ſonne king, continued in the Catholicke faith. D E
MCCLXXXIX. Tripolis a famous city was laied even with the ground, not without much effuſion of chriſtian bloud; and that by the Soldan of Babilon: who commanded the images of the Saints to bee drawne and dragged at horſes tailes in contempt of the name of Chriſt through the city newly deſtroied.
MCCXC. Inclyta Stirps Regis Sponſis datur ordine legis.
In lawfull guiſe [by hand and ring]
Eſpouſed is the kings of-ſpring.
The lord Gilbert Clare tooke to wife the ladie Ioan, a daughter of the lord king Edward, in the Abbay or Covent church of Weſtminſter: and the marriage was ſolemnely celebrated in the moneth of Maie: and Iohn, the duke of Brabant his ſonne married Margaret the ſaid kings daughter alſo in the church aforeſaid, in the moneth of Iuly. The ſame yeere the lord William Veſcy was made Iuſtice of Ireland, entering upon the office on Saint Martins day. Item, O Molaghelin king of Meth is ſlaine. F

A MCCXCI. Gilbert Clare, the ſonne of Gilbert and of the lady Ioan of Acres, was borne the eleventh daie of May in the morning betimes. Item, there was an armie led into Vlſter, againſt O-Hanlon and other Princes hindering the peace, by Richard earle of Vlſter and William Veſcy Iuſtice of Ireland. Item, the lady Elianor ſometime Queene of England and mother of king Edward, died in the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, who, in the religious habite which ſhee deſired, led a laudable life for the ſpace of foure yeeres, eleven monthes and ſixe daies within the Abbay of Ambresby, where ſhe was a profeſſed Nun. Item, there reſounded certaine rumors in the eares of the lord Pope Martin, on the even of Saint Mary Maudlen, as touching the city Acon in the holy land, which was the only refuge of the chriſtians; namely that it
B was beſieged by Milkador the Soldan of Babylon and an infinite number of his ſoldiors; and that it had bin moſt feircely aſſaulted about forty daies, to wit, from the eight day before the Ides of April unto the fifteen Calends of Iuly. At length the wal was plucked down by the Saracens that aſſaulted it, and an infinite number of them entred the city, many chriſtians beeing ſlaine, and ſome for feare drowned in the ſea. The Patriarch alſo with his traine periſhed in the ſea. The king of Cypres, and Otes Grandiſon, with their companies pitifully eſcaped by a ſhip. Item, Granted there was unto the lord Edward king of England, by the lord Pope Martin, the tenth part of all the profits of eccleſiaſticall benefices for ſeven yeeres in Ireland, toward
C the releife of the holy land. Item, the eldeſt ſonne of the earle of Clare was borne.

MCCXCII. Edward king of England eftſoones entred Scotland and was elected king of Scotland. Lord Iohn Bailol of Galwey obteined the whole kingdome of Scotland in right of inheritance, and did homage unto the lord Edward king of England at New-caſtle upon Tyne, on Saint Stephens day. Florentius earle of Holland, Robert Brus earle of Carrick, Iohn Haſtings, Iohn Comyn, Patrick Dunbar, Iohn Veſcy, Nicholas Soules and William Roos, who all of them in that kingdome, ſubmitted themſelues to the judgement of the lord king Edward.

Item, A fifteene of al ſecular mens goods in Ireland was granted unto the ſoveraign lord king of England, the ſame to be collected at the feaſt of Saint Michael. Item, Sir
D Peter Genevile knight, died. Item, Rice ap Meredyke was brought to Yorke, and there at horſes tailes drawne &c.

MCCXCIII. A generall and open war there was at ſea, againſt the Normans. Item, No ſmall number of the Normans by fight at ſea was ſlaine by the Barons of the Ports of England and other their Coadiutours, betweene Eaſter and Whitſontide. For which cauſe, there aroſe war betweene England and France: whereupon Philip king of France directed his letters of Credence unto the king of England, that he ſhould make perſonall appearance at his Parliament, to anſwere unto Queſtions, which the ſame king would propoſe unto him: whoſe mandate in this behalfe beeing not fulfilled, ſtreight waies the king of France declaring by the counſell of the French, the E king of England to be outlawed, condemned him. Item, Gilbert Clare earle of Gloceſter entred with his wife into Ireland about the feaſt of Saint Luke.

MCCXCIIII. William Montefort in the kings counſel holden at Weſtminſter before the king died ſodainly; which William was the Dean of Saint Paules in London, in whoſe mouth the Prelats, Biſhops and Clergy putting their words which hee was to utter, & doubting how much the king affected and deſired to haue of every one of them, & willing by him to be certified, in whom alſo the king repoſed moſt truſt, being returned to the king, and making haſt before the king to deliver expreſly a ſpeech that he had conceived, became ſpeechleſſe on a ſodaine and fel down to the ground and was carried forth by the kings ſervants in their armes in pitteous manner. In re-
F gard of which ſight that thus happened, men ſtrucken with feare gaue out theſe ſpeaches: ſurely this man hath beene the Agent and Procuratour, that the Tenths of eccleſiaſticall benefices ſhould bee paied to the king; and another author and procurer of a Scrutinie made into the fold and flocke of Chriſt, as alſo of a Contribution granted afterwards to the king crying againſt William. Item, the city of Burdeaux with the land of Gaſcoigne adioyning, was occupied or held by the miniſters of " the king of France conditionally: but unjuſtly and perfidiouſly deteined by the king A

" of France; for which cauſe, Iohn Archbiſhop of Dublin and certaine other Lords of " the Nobility, were ſent into Almaine to the king thereof: and after they had their
" diſpatch and anſwere in Tordran, the Lord Archbiſhop being returned into England
" ended his life upon Saint Leodegaries day. The bones of which Iohn Samp-
" ford, were enterred in the church of Saint Patrick in Dublin, the tenth day before the " Calends of March.

" The ſame yeere there aroſe debate betweene Lord William Veſcy Lord Iuſtice of " Ireland for the time beeing, and the Lord Iohn Fitz Thomas: and the ſaid Lord Wil" liam Veſcy croſſed the ſeas into England and left Sir William Hay in his ſteed Iuſtice B
" of Ireland: but when both of them were come before the king to fight a combat,
" under an Appeal for treaſon, the foreſaid William Veſcy fled into France and would " not fight. Then the king of England gaue all the Seigniories and Lordſhips which " were the Lord William Veſcyes unto Sir Iohn Fitz-Thomas: to wit Kildare, Rathem-
" gan and many others.

" The ſame yeere Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloceſter returned out of Ireland into " England: likewiſe, Richard Earle of Vlſter, ſoone after the feaſt of Saint Nicholas was " taken priſoner by Sir Iohn Fitz-Thomas, and kept in ward within the caſtle of Ley,
" unto the feaſt of Saint Gregorie the Pope: whoſe enlargement was then made by " the counſell of the Lord the King in a Parliament at Kilkenny: for the taking of C
" whom, the foreſaid Sir Iohn Fitz-Thomas gaue all his lands, to wit, Slygah with the " pertenances, which he had in Connaght.

" Item, the caſtle of Kildare was won. Kildare and the country round about it is ſpoi-
" led by the engliſh and the iriſh. Caluagh burnt all the Rolls and Tallies of the earle.
" Great dearth and peſtilence there was throughout Ireland this yeer and the two next " enſuing. Item. Lord William Odyngzele, is made juſtice of Ireland.

" MCCXCV. Edward king of England built the caſtle de Bello-Mariſco, that is, Beau-
" maris in Venedocia, which is called, mother of Cambria, and of the common ſort
" Angleſey: entring unto the ſaid Angleſey ſtreight after Eaſter; and ſubduing the Ve- D
" nodotes, that is, the able men of Angleſey under his dominion: and ſoone after this " time, namely after the feaſt of Saint Margaret, Madock at that time the elect (Prince)
" of Wales, ſubmitting himſelfe to the kings grace and favour, was brought by Iohn
" Haverings to London, and there ſhut up priſoner in the towre, expecting the kings
" grace and benevolence. This yeere died lord William Odingzele juſtice of Ireland,
" the morrow after Saint Mary of Aegipt: whom ſucceeded ſir Thomas Fitz-Maurice
" in the juſtice ſhip.

" Item, about the ſame time the Iriſh of Leinſter waſted Leinſter, burning New-caſtle
" with other townes. Item, Thomas Torbevile a traitour of the king and the realme be" ing convicted, was drawne through the mideſt of London lying along proſtrate, E
" guarded with foure tormentours diſguiſed under vizards, taunting and reviling him,
" and thus in the end was hanged upon a iebbit in chaines, ſo as his carcaſe might not " be committed to ſepulture, but kites, carraine crowes and ravens celebrated his fu" nerals. This Thomas was one of them which at the ſiege of the caſtle of Rions were " taken priſoners and brought to Paris. Who ſpake unto the Peeres of France and
" ſaid, that hee would betray the king of England into their hands: and leaving there
" his two ſonnes for hoſtages returned from the parts beyond-ſea, joyning himſelfe un-
" to the king of England and his counſell: relating unto them all, how craftily he eſca-
" ped out of priſon: and when hee had gotten intelligence of the kings deſignement
" and the ordering of the kingdome, hee put all in writing and directed the ſame unto F
" the Provoſt of Paris. For which, being in the end convicted, he received the ſentence " of iudgement aforeſaid.

" Item, about the ſame time, the Scottes having broken the bond of peace,
" which they had covenanted with the lord Edward king of England, made a new " league with the king of France: and conſpiring togither roſe up in armes againſt
" their owne ſoveraigne lord and king Iohn Bailoll, and encloſed him within the

In-land

A Inland partes of Scotland, in a caſtle environed and fenſed round about with mountaines. They elected unto themſelves after the maner of Fraunce twelve Peeres, to wit, foure Biſhops, foure Earles, and foure Lords of the Nobility: By whoſe will and direction all the affaires of the kingdome ſhould be managed. And this was done in deſpite and to diſgrace the king of England, for that againſt the will and conſent of the Scots, the ſaid Iohn was by the king of England ſet over them to be their Soveraigne. Item, the king of England brought an armie againe toward Scotland in Lent following, to repreſſe the raſh arrogancie and preſumption of the Scots againſt their owne father and king. Item, Sir Iohn Wogan was made Iuſtice of Ireland, and the Lord Thomas Fitz-Maurice gave place unto him: Item the ſaid Iohn Wogan Iuſtice of Ireland made peace and truce to laſt for two yeeres betweene the B Earle of Vlſter, and Iohn Fitz-Thomas, and the Geraldines. Item, in theſe daies about the feaſt of Chriſt his Nativity, Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloceſter finiſhed this life. Item, the king of England ſendeth his brother Edmund with an armie into Gaſcoigne.

MCCXCVI. The Lord Edward king of England the third day before the Calends of Aprill, to wit, vpon Friday that fell out then to be in Eaſter weeke wonne Berwicke: wherein were ſlaine about 7000. Scots: and of the Engliſh one onely Knight, to wit, Sir Richard Cornwall, with ſeven footmen, and no more. Item, ſhortly after, namely, upon the fourth of May, he entred the caſtle of Dunbar, and tooke priſoners of the enimies about fortie men alive, who all ſubmitted themſelves to the Kings grace and mercy: having before defeited the whole armie of the Scots,
C that is to ſay, ſlaine ſeven hundred men of armes: neither were there ſlaine of the Engliſh men in that ſervice as well of horſe men as of footmen, but ... footemen onely.

Item, upon the day of Saint Iohn before Port-Latin, no ſmall number of Welſhmen, even about fifteene thouſand, by commandement of the King went into Scotland to invade and conquer it. And the ſame time, the great Lords of Ireland, to wit, Iohn Wogan Iuſtice of Ireland, Richard Bourke Earle of Vlſter, Theobald Butler, and Iohn Fitz-Thomas with others, came to aide, and ſailed over ſea into Scotland.
D The King of England alſo entertaining them upon the third day before the Ides of of May, to wit, on Whitſonday, made a great and ſolemne feaſt in the caſtle of Rokesburgh to them and other Knights of England: Item, upon the next Wedneſday, before the feaſt of Saint Barnabe the Apoſtle, hee entred the towne of Edenburgh, and wonne the caſtle before the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, and ſhortly after, even in the ſame ſummer, were all the caſtles within the compaſſe of Scotland rendred up into his hands: Item, the ſame Lord Iohn Balliol King of Scotland came, though unwilling, upon the Sunday next after the feaſt of the tranſlation of Saint Thomas the Archbiſhop, to the King of England, with Earles, Biſhops, and a great number of Knights beſide, and ſubmitted themſelves unto the Kings grace and will, ſaving
E life and limme, and the Lord Iohn Balliol reſigned up all his right of Scotland into the King of England his hand, whom the Lord the King ſent toward the parts about London under ſafe conduct.

Item Edmund the King of Englands brother died in Gaſcoigne.

MCCXCVII. Lord Edward, King of England ſailed over into Flanders with a powre of armed men, againſt the King of France for the warre that was raiſed betweene them: where after great expenſes and much altercation, a certaine forme of peace was concluded betweene them, with this condition, that they ſhould ſubmit themſelves unto the ordinance of the lord the Pope.

F From the one ſide and the other were ſent certaine meſſengers to the Court of Rome, but whiles King Edward abode in Flanders, William Walleis, by the common counſell of the Scots came with a great armie to the bridge of Strivelin, and gave battle unto Iohn Earle Warren: in which battaile on both ſides many were ſlaine, and many drowned. But the Engliſhmen were diſcomfited and defaited. Upon which exploit all the Scots at once aroſe & made an inſurrection as wel Earles

" as Barons againſt the King of England. And there fell diſcord betweene the King of A
" England, and Roger Bigod Earle Mareſchall: but ſoone after, they were agreed.
" And Saint Lewis, a Frier minor, ſonne of the King of Sicilie, and Archbiſhop of Co-
" lein, died. Alſo the ſonne and heire of the King de Maliagro, that is, of the Majoricke
" Ilands, inſtituted the order of the Freers Minors at the information of Saint Lewis,
" who ſaid, Go and doe ſo. Item, in Ireland, Leghlin with other townes were burnt by the " Iriſh of Slemergi.

" Item, Calwagh O-Hanlan and Yneg Mac-Mahon are ſlaine in Vrgale.

" MCCXCVIII. Pope Boniface the fourth, the morrow after the feaſt of the A" poſtles Peter, and Paul, after all tumults were appeaſed; ordained and confirmed a
" peace betweene the king of England and the king of Fraunce, with certaine con- B
" ditions that after followed. Item, Edward king of England ſet forth with an armie " againe into Scotland for to ſubdue the ſcots under his dominion. Item, there were " ſlaine in the ſame expedition, about the feaſt of Saint Marie Mawdlen, many thou-
" ſands of the ſcots at Fawkirke. The ſunne the ſame day appeered red as bloud over " all Ireland, ſo long as the battaile continued at Fawkirke aforeſaid. Item, about the " ſame time, the lord king of England feoffed his knights in the Earldomes & Barons
" of the ſcots that were ſlaine. More, in Ireland peace and concord was concluded be" tweene the Earle of Ulſter, and lord Iohn Fitz-Thomas, about the feaſt of the A" poſtles Simon & Iude. Alſo on the morrow after the feaſt of the 7. Saints ſleepers, the " ſunne beames were changed almoſt into the colour of bloud even from the mor- C
" ning: ſo that all men that ſaw it wondered thereat. Moreover, there died Sir Tho- " mas Fitz-Maurice knight, and Sir Robert Bigod, ſometime lord cheiſe juſtice of the " Bench. Item, in the Citie Artha, as alſo in Reathe in the parts of Italie, whiles
" Pope Boniface abode there at the ſame time, there hapned ſo great an earthquake,
" that towres and pallaces fell downe to the ground. The Pope alſo with his Cardi-
" nales fled from the Citie much affrighted.

" Item, upon the feaſt of the Epiphany, that is, Twelfe day, there was an earthquake,
" though not ſo violent, in England from Canterbury as farre as to Hampton.

" MCCXCIX. Lord Theobald Botiller the younger departed this life in the Manour D
" de Turby the ſecond day before the Ides of May: whoſe corps was conveied toward
" Weydeney, that is, Weney in the County of Limeric the ſixth day before the Calends " of Iune.

" Item, Edward king of England, tooke to wife the Lady Margaret ſiſter to the " noble king of France in the Church of the holy Trinity in Canterbury about the feaſt
" of the holy Trinity. Item, the Soldan of Babylon was defaited with a great armie of " Saracens by Caſſian king of the Tartars.

" MCCXCIX. The day after the feaſt of the Purification of the bleſſed Virgin Ma" rie, there were an infinite number of the Saracens horſemen ſlaine, beſide the foote-
" men who were likewiſe innumerable. Item, in the ſame yeere there was a battaile E
" or fight of dogges in Burgundie at Genelon caſtle: and the number of the dogges
" was 3000: and every one killed another, ſo that no dogge eſcaped alive but one a" lone. Item, the ſame yeere many Iriſhmen came to trouble and moleſt the Lord
" Theobald Verdon, to the Caſtle of Roch, before the feaſt of the Annuntiation.

" MCCC. The Pollard money is forbidden in England and Ireland. Alſo in the Au-
" tumne Edward King of England entred Scotland, with a powre of armed men: but at " the commandement of Pope Boniface he was ſtaied, and hee ſent ſolemne meſſen-
" gers unto the Court [of Rome] excuſing himſelfe of doing any injurie. Item, Thomas
" the Kings ſonne of England was the laſt day of May borne at Brotherton of Margaret " ſiſter to the King of France. Item, Edward Earle of Cornewall died without leaving " behind an heire of his owne body, and was enterred in the Abbay of Hayles. F

" MCCCI. Edward King of England entred into Scotland with an army: unto " whom ſailed over ſea Sir Iohn Wogan iuſtice of Ireland, and Sir Iohn Fitz-
" Thomas, Peter Bermingham and many others to aid the King of England. Alſo a " great part of the citie Dublin was burnt, together with the church of S. Warburga on

S. Columbs

A S.Columbs day, at night. More, Sir Geffrey Genevil eſpouſed the daughter of Sir Iohn Montefort: and Sir Iohn Mortimer eſpouſed the daughter and heire of Sir Peter Genevil. And the Lord Theobald Verdon eſpouſed the daughter of the Lord Roger Mortimer. At the ſame time the men of Leinſter made war in Winter burning the the towne of Wykyn'o and Rathdon with others: But they eſcaped not unpuniſhed: becauſe the more part of their ſuſtenance was burnt up, and their cattail loſt by depredation: and the ſame Iriſh had beene utterly almoſt conſumed, but that the ſeditious diſſention of certaine Engliſhmen was an hindrance thereto. Item, a defeature and ſlaughter was made by the Toolans upon a ſmall company aſſembled of the Brenies; in which were ſlaine almoſt three hundred Robbers. Item, Walter Power waſted a great part of Mounſter, burning many ferme houſes.

B MCCCII. There died the lady Margaret wife to Sir Iohn Wogan Iuſtice of Ireland the third day before the Ides of April: and in the weeke following Maud Lacy wife to Sir Geffery Genevil died: alſo Edward Botiler recovered the *Manour de*S. Boſco*, with the pertenances from Sir Richard Ferenges Archbiſhop of Dublin, by a concord made betweene them in the kings bench after the feaſt of S. Hilary.

* Happily Holly-wood.

Item, the Flemings gave an overthrow at Courteray in Flanders unto the army of the French the Wedneſday after the feaſt of the Tranſlation of S. Thomas, wherein were ſlaine, the Earle of Arthois, the Earle of Aumarle, the Earle of Hue, Ralph Neel Conſtable of France, Guy Nevil, Mareſchall of France, the ſonne of the Earle
C of Hennaund, Godfrey Brabant with his ſonne, William Fenys and his ſonne: Iames S. Paul loſt his hand, and fourty Baronets loſt their lives that day, with knights, Eſquires and others ſans-nombre.

Item, the Tenths of all Eccleſiaſticall benefices in England and Ireland were exacted by Boniface the Pope for three yeeres, as a ſubſidy to the Church of Rome againſt the king of Arragon: alſo upon the day of the Circumciſion, Sir Hugh Lacy raiſed booties from Hugh Vernail. In the ſame yeere Robert Brus then Earle of Carrik eſpouſed the daughter of Sir Richard Bourk Earle of Vlſter. Item, Edward Botiller eſpouſed the daughter of Sir Iohn Fitz-Thomas: alſo the city of Burdeaux with other cities lying round about it, which by the ſedition of the Frenchmen had beene at any time alienated from Edward king of England, were reſtored unto him againe D upon S. Andrewes even by the induſtry of the L. Haſtings.

MCCCIII. The Earle of Vlſter, to wit, Richard Bourk, and Sir Euſtace Pover, entred Scotland with a puiſſant army: but after that the Earle himſelfe had firſt made thirty three knights in the caſtle of Dublin, he paſſed over into Scotland to aide the king of England.

Item, Gerald the ſonne and heire of Sir Iohn Fitz-Thomas departed out of this world. In the ſame yeere Pope Boniface excommunicated the king and Queene of France and their children. He renewed alſo all the Priviledges granted at any time unto the Univerſity of Paris: and ſtreight after the Pope was taken priſoner, and kept E (as it were) in priſon three whole daies. And ſoone after the Pope died: likewiſe the Counteſſe of Vlſter deceaſed. Alſo Wulfran Welleſly, and Sir Robert Percivell were ſlaine the 11. day before the Calends of November.

MCCCIIII. A great part of Dublin was burnt, to wit the Bridg-ſtreet with a good part of the Key, and the church of the Freers Preachers, and the church of the Monkes with no ſmall part of the Monaſtery about the Ides of Iune, to wit, on the Feaſt day of S. Medard. Alſo the firſt ſtone of the Friers Preachers quire in Dublin was laid by Euſtace Lord Pover on the feaſt of S. Agatha virgin.

Likewiſe after the Feaſt of the Purification of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, the King of France invaded Flanders againe in proper perſon, with a puiſſant armie. Then
F bare he himſelfe bravely in the war, and fought manfully ſo long, untill two or three horſes of ſervice were ſlaine under him: but at laſt he loſt his cap that under his helmet was put upon his head: which the Flemings taking up carried by way of ſcornfull deriſion upon a launce as a banner, and in all the famous faires of Flanders, put it out

» out at the high window of ſome place or ſtately houſe like the ſigne of an Inne or Ta- A » verne, and ſhewed it in token of victory.
» MCCCV. Iordan Comyn with his complices ſlew Moritagh O-Conghir King of » Offalie, and Calwagh his whole brother, and certaine others in the court of Sir Piers
» Brymgeham at Carrick in Carbrey : likewiſe Sir Gilbert Sutton, Seneſchal of Weiſford
» was ſlaine by the Iriſh neere unto a village [or Houſe] of Haymund Grace, which » Haymund verily in the ſaid skirmiſh manfully carried himſelfe, but ſtourly eſcaped.
» Item, in Scotland, the Lord Robert Brus Earle of Carrick, forgetting his oath » made to the King of England, ſlew Sir Iohn Rede Comyn within the Cloiſture of the » Friers Minors of Dunfreſe, and ſoone after cauſed himſelfe to be crowned King of B » Scotland by the hands of two Biſhops, to wit, of S. Andrewes and of Glaſco, in the » towne of Scone, to the confuſion of himſelfe and of many others.
» MCCCVI. A great diſcomfiture was made in Offalie neere unto the caſtle of Geſ-
» hill on the Ides of Aprill, upon O-Conghor by O-Dympcies : in which was ſlaine O- » Dympcey, Leader of the Regans with a great traine accompanying him. Alſo O-Brene » King of Towmond died. Item, Donald Oge Mac Carthie ſlew Donald Ruff, that is, the » Red King of Deſmond. Item, a lamentable defaiture fell upon the part of Piers Bry-» megham the fourth day before the Calends of May in the Marches of Meth. Item, » Balymore in Leinſter was burnt by the Iriſh ; where, at the ſame time Henry Calſe
» was ſlaine : and there aroſe war betweene the Engliſh and the Iriſh in Leinſter : for » which cauſe, there was aſſembled a great army from divers parts of Ireland to bridle G
» the malice of the Iriſh in Leinſter : in which expedition, Sir Thomas Mandevil knight
» and a brave warriour, had a great conflict with the Iriſh, neere to Clenfell : in which » conflict he behaved himſelfe valiantly, untill his horſe of ſervice was ſlaine : and won » much praiſe and honour by ſaving many a man and himſelfe alſo. Item, M. Thomas » Cantock Chancellour of Ireland was conſecrated Biſhop of Ymelaſen, in the church
» of the Holy Trinity at Dublin with great honor : at whoſe conſecration were preſent
» the elders of all Ireland : where there was ſo ſumpteous and ſo great a feaſt made, » firſt unto the rich and afterwards to the poore, as the like had never beene heard of » before in Ireland. Item, Richard Feringes Archbiſhop of Dublin died in the Vigile D
» of Saint Luke, after whom ſucceeded Maſter Richard Haverings who occupied » the Archbiſhopricke almoſt five yeeres by Apoſtolicall diſpenſation. Who, » alſo reſigned up his Archbiſhopricke : After whom ſucceeded Iohn Leth.
» The occaſion and cauſe of his giving over ; (as the Arch-Deacon of Dublin » of good memorie his Nephew hath reported) was this, for that one night he » dreamed, that a certaine Monſter heavier than the whole world ſtood eminently » aloft upon his breſt : from the weight whereof he choſe rather to be delivered, than » alone to have all the goods in the world : but when he wakened he thought with » himſelfe, this was nothing elſe but the Church of Dublin : the fruits where-
» of hee received, and tooke no paines for the ſame. As ſoone as he could there» fore, he came unto the Lord the Pope, of whom he was much beloved, and there E » renounced and gave over the Archbiſhopricke. For hee had, as the ſame Arch » deacon avouched, fatter benefices and livings than the Archbiſhopricke came » unto.
» Item, Edward King of England in the feaſt of Penteco ſt, that is, Whitſontide, made » Edward his ſonne knight in London: at which feaſt were dubbed about 400. knights:
» and the ſaid Edward of Caernaruan newly knighted, made threeſcore knights of » thoſe aboveſaid: and kept his feaſt in London at the New Temple, & his father gave » unto him the Dutchy of Aquitaine.
» Item, the ſame yeere, in the feaſt of Saint Potentiana, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, F
» and the Biſhop of Worceſter by commandement from the Lord the Pope, excom» municated Robert Brus the pretended king of Scotland, and his confederates, for » the death of Iohn Rede Comyn. In the ſame yeere upon Saint Boniface his day, Aumar » de Valence Earle of Pembroch, & lord Guy Earle ..... ſlew many Scots, and the Lord

A lord Robert Brus was defaited without the town of Saint Iohns. And the ſame yere a- " bout the feaſt of the Nativity of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, king Edward went toward Scot- " land by water from Newarke to Lincolne. "

Item, the ſame yeere, the Earle of Aſceles, and the lord Simon Freyſell, and the " Counteſſe of Carricke, the pretended Queene of Scotland, daughter of the Earle " of Ullſter, were taken priſoners. The Earle of Aſceles and the lord Simon Freyſell, " were firſt torne and mangled. As for the Counteſſe, ſhe remained with the king in " great honor: but the reſt died miſerably in Scotland. "

Item, about the feaſt of the Purification of the bleſſed Virgin Marie, two bre- "
B thren of Robert Brus profeſſing piracie, went out of their Galleys a land to prey, and " were taken with ſixteene Scots beſides: and thoſe two themſelves were torne and " tormented at Carlele, the reſt hanged upon iebbits. "

Item, upon Saint Patrickes day, there was taken priſoner in Ireland Mac-Nochi " with his two ſonnes, neere unto New-caſtle, by Thomas Sueterby: and there Lorran " O-bovi a moſt ſtrong theefe was beheaded. "

MCCCVII. The third day proceeding the Calends of Aprill, was Murcord Bal- " ligh beheaded neere unto Marton by Sir David Caunton a doughty knight: and " ſoone after was Adam Dan ſlaine. "

Alſo a defaiture and bloudy ſlaughter fell upon the Engliſh in Connaght by Of- "
C cheles, on Philip, and Iacob the Apoſtles day. "

Item, the preading Brigants of Offaly pulled downe the caſtle of Caſhill and upon " the Vigill of the tranſlation of Saint Thomas, they burnt the towne of Ly, and " beſieged the caſtle; but ſoone after they were removed by Iohn Fitz-Thomas, and "
Edward Botiller. "

Item, Edward king of England departed this life: after whom ſucceeded in the " kingdome his ſonne Edward, who moſt ſolemnly buried his father at Weſtminſter, " with great reverence and honor. "

Item, the lord Edward the younger tooke to wife the Lady Iſabell daughter of " the French King in Saint Maries Church at Bologne: and ſhortly after they were "
D both crowned in the Church of Weſtminſter. "

Item, the Templars in the parts beyond ſea, being condemned (as it was ſaid) of " a certaine hæreſie, were apprehended and impriſoned by the Popes Mandat. In Eng- " land likewiſe they were all taken the morrow after the feaſt of the Epiphany. Alſo in " Ireland they were arreſted the morrow after the feaſt of the Purification and laid up " in priſon. "

MCCCVIII. The ſecond day before the Ides of Aprill died the Sir Peter or Peirs " Bermingham, a noble vanquiſher of the Iriſh. "

Item, on the fourth day before the Ides of May was burnt the Caſtle of Kenir, " and certaine warders in it ſlaine, by William Mac-Balthor and Cnygniſmi Othothi- " E les, and his abetters. "

More, on the ſixt day proceeding the Ides of Iune, Lord Iohn Wogan Iuſtice of Ire- " land, was defaited with his armie neere Glyndelory: where were ſlaine Iohn called " Hogelyn, Iohn Northon, Iohn Breton, with many other. Alſo, the ſixteenth day going " before the Calends of Iuly, were burnt Dolouan, Tobyr, and other townes and villa- " ges bordering upon them, by the foreſaid malefactours. "

Item, in England ſhortly after, was holden a great Parliament at London; wher- " in aroſe a diſſenſion and in maner a mortall conflict betweene the King and the Ba- " rons, occaſioned by Peirs Gaueſton, who was baniſhed out of the Kingdome of "
England the morrow after the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt his Nativitie: and hee paſ- " F ſed over ſea into Ireland about the feaſt of the Saints Quirita and Iulita, together " with his wife and ſiſter, the Counteſſe of Gloceſter, and came to Dublin with great " pompe, and there made his abode. "

Moreover William Mac-Balter a ſtrong theefe and an Incendiarie was condem- " ned, and had judgement in the Court of the Lord the King in Dublin before the " chiefe Iuſtice Lord Iohn Wogan, upon the twelfe day proceeding the Calends of " September: "

September: and was drawen at horſes tailes unto the gallowes, and there hanged A according to his deſerts.

Item, in the ſame yeere, there was erected a certaine ceſterne of marble, to receive water from the conduct head, in the Citie of Dublin, ſuch an one as never was there before: by the diſpoſe and providence of Maiſter Iohn Decer then Major of the Citie of Dublin, who of his owne money deffraied the charges for the building thereof: and the ſame Iohn a little before the time, cauſed a certaine bridge to be made beyond the river Aven-Liffy neere unto the Priorie of Saint Wolſtan: alſo the Chappell of Saint Marie to the Freers Minours, and there lieth he buried: the Chappell likewiſe of Saint Marie, to the Hoſpitall of Saint Iohns in Dublin &c.

Item, the ſame Iohn Decer was very beneficiall to the Covent of the Freers B
Preachers in Dublin: to wit, in making one Columne of ſtone in the Church, & giving one great broad Altar-ſtone, with the ornaments thereto belonging.

More, upon the ſixth day of the Weeke, he entertained the Freers & tabled them at his owne charges (thus ſay Elders to the younger) in regard of charity.

More, in the Autumne, Lord Iohn Wogan ſailed over the ſea unto the Parliament of England: in whoſe place, the Lord William Burke was made Cuſtos of Ireland.

Item, the ſame yeere, in the Vigil of Simon and Iude the Apoſtles day, the Lord Roger Mortimer arrived in Ireland with his wedded wife, the right heire of Meth, the daughter of the Lord Peter, ſon of Sir Geffery Genevil: they entred, I ſay, into Ireland and tooke Seiſin of Meth, Sir Geffrey Genevil yeelding unto them, and entring C into the order of the freers preachers at Trym the morrow after the day of S. Edwards the Archbiſhop.

Alſo, Dermot Odympoy was ſlaine at Tully by the ſervants of Sir Peter or Peirs Gaveſton.

More, Richard Burgo or Burk Earle of Vlſter kept a great feaſt at Whitſontide in Trym, and dubbed Walter Lacy and Hugh Lacy knights. And on the even of the Aſſumption, the Earle of Vlſter came againſt Piers Gaveſton Earle of Cornwall, at Tradag. And at the ſame time he went backe againe and tooke his paſſage into Scotland.

Item, in the ſame yeere, Maud the earle of Vlſters daughter ſailed over into Eng- D land to contract mariage with the earle of Gloceſter: and ſoone after within one Moneth the earle and ſhe eſpouſed one the other.

Alſo, Maurice Caunton ſlew Richard Talon: and the Roches killed the foreſaid Maurice.

Item Sir David Caunton is hanged at Dublin.

Item, Odo the ſonne of Catholl O-Conghir ſlew Odo O-Conghir King of Connaght.

Item, Athi is burnt by the Iriſh.

MCCCIX. Piers Gaveſton ſubdued the O-Brynnes, Iriſhmen, and reedified the new Caſtle of Mackingham, and the Caſtle of Kemny: he cut downe and clenſed E the Pas betweene Kemny Caſtle and Glyndelaugh, mawgre the Iriſh: and ſo departed and offered in the church of S. Kimny.

The ſame yeere Lord Piers Gaveſton paſſed the ſeas over into England on the Vigil of S. Iohn Baptiſts Nativity.

Item, the wife of the Earle of Vlſters ſonne, daughter unto the Earle of Gloceſter, upon the 15. day of October arrived in Ireland.

Alſo on Chriſtmas even the Earle of Vlſter returned out of England, and landed at the Port of Tradagh.

More, on the feaſt of the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, Sir Iohn Bone- F vile neere unto the towne of Arſtol was ſlaine by Sir Arnold Power and his complices: and buried at Athy in the church of the Freers preachers.

Item, a Parliament was held at Kilkenny in the Outas of the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary, by the Earle of Ulſter and Iohn Wogan Lord iuſtice of Ireland and other Lords: wherein was appeaſed great diſcord riſen betweene certaine Lords of

Ireland:

A Ireland: and many Proviſoes in maner of Statutes were ordeined, commodious and profitable to the land of Ireland if they had beene obſerved.

Item, ſhortly after that time, returned Sir Edmund Botiller out of England, who there at London was before Knighted.

Item, there croſſed the ſeas into England out of Ireland, the earle of Vlſter Roger Mortimer, and Sir Iohn Fitz-Thomas.

Item, Sir Theobald Verdon died.

MCCCX. King Edward and Sir Piers Gaveſton tooke their journey toward Scotland to fight againſt Robert Brus.

Item, in the ſaid yeere, great dearth there was of corne in Ireland: an eranc of Wheat was ſould for 20. ſhillings and above.

B Alſo, The Bakers of Dublin for their falſe weight of bread, ſuffered a new kinde of torment which was never ſeene there before; for that on S. Sampſon the Biſhops day, they were drawen upon hurdles through the ſtreets of the City at horſes tailes.

More, in the Abbay of S. Thomas Martyr at Dublin, died Sir Niele Bruin Knight, Eſchaetour to the Lord the King in Ireland: whoſe body was committed to the earth at the Friers minors, with ſo great a pompe of tapers and wax lights as the like was never ſeene before in Ireland.

The ſame yeere a Parliament was holden at Kildare, where Sir Arnold Power was acquit for the death of the Lord Bonevile, becauſe he had done this deed in his owne defenſe.

C Likewiſe on S. Patricks day, by aſſent of the Chapter, M. Alexander Bickenore was elected Archbiſhop of Dublin.

Item, the Lord Roger Mortimer returned into Ireland within the Octaves of the Nativity of the bleſſed Virgin Mary.

Alſo the ſame yeere, the Lord Henry Lacy Earle of Lincoln died.

MCCCXI. In Thomond at Bonnorathy, there was a wonderfull and miraculous diſcomfiture given by the Lord Richard Clare, unto the ſide of the Earle of Vlſter: Which Lord Richard aforeſaid, tooke priſoner in the field the Lord William Burk, and Iohn the ſonne of the Lord Walter Lacy, and many others. In which battaile verily there were ſlaine a great number as well of the Engliſh as the Iriſh, the 13. day before the Calends of Iune.

D Item, Taſlagard and Rathcante were invaded by the robbers, to wit, the O-Brines and O-Tothiles the morrow after the Nativity of S. Iohn Baptiſt. Whereupon ſoone after, in Autumne, there was a great army aſſembled in Leinſter, to make head and fight againſt the ſaid robbers, lurking in Glindelory and in other places full of woods.

Alſo, a Parliament was holden at London in Auguſt, betweene the King and the Barons, to treat about the State of the kingdome, and of the Kings houſhold, according to the ordinance of ſixe Biſhops, ſix Earles, and ſix Barons, as they might beſt

E provide for the good of the Realme.

Item, on the ſecond day before the Ides of November, the Lord Richard Clare ſlew ſix hundred of Galegalaghes.

More, on All Saints day next going before, Piers Gaveſton was baniſhed the Realme of England, by the Earles and Barons: and many good Statutes neceſſarie for the common wealth, were by the ſame Lords made. Which Piers, abjured the Realme of England about the feaſt of All Saints; and entred into Flanders: foure moneths after the ſaid Piers returned preſently upon the Epiphany, and by ſtealth entred into England, keeping cloſe unto the Kings ſide, ſo that the Barons could not

F eaſily come neere unto him. And he went with the King to Yorke, making his abode there in the Lent: whereupon, the Biſhops, Earles and Barons of England, came to London for to treat about the State of the Kingdome: for feare leaſt by occaſion of Piers his returne, the Common wealth ſhould bee troubled with commotions.

Item,

Item, Sir Iohn Cogan, Sir Walter Faunt, and Sir Iohn Fitz-Rery Knights died, A and were buried in the Church of the Friers Preachers at Dublin.
Item, Iohn Mac-Goghedan is slaine by O-molmoy.
Item, William Roch died at Dublin with the shot of an arrow by an Irish mountainer.
Item, Sir Eustace Power knight, died.
Item, in the Vigill of Saint Peters Chaire, beganne a riot in Vrgaly by Robert Verdon.
Item, Donat O-Brene is traiterously slaine by his owne men in Tothomon.
MCCCXII. Sir Peter or Piers Gauerston entred the castle of Scardeburgh, resisting the Barons. But soone after the Calends of Iune, he yeelded himselfe unto B Sir Aumare Valence, who had besieged him; yet upon certaine conditions named before hand: who brought him toward London: but by the way he was taken prisoner at Dedington by the Earle of Warwicke, and brought to Warwicke: whereupon, after counsell taken by the Earles and Barons, he lost his head the thirteenth day before the Calends of Iulie: whose bodie lieth buried in the coventnall Church of the Friers Preachers, at Langley.
Item, Iohn Wogan Lord justice of Ireland, led forth an armie, to bridle the malice of Robert Verdon and his abettours: which was miserably defaited the sixth day before the Ides of Iuly: in which fight were slaine Nicolas Avenel, Patricke Roch and many others: for this fact, the said Robert Verdon, and many of his complices yeel- C ded themselves unto the kings prison at Dublin, in expectance of favour and pardon.
Also, on Thursday, the morrow after Saint Lucie Virgin, in the sixth yeere of king Edward, the Moone was wonderfully seene of divers colours: on which day determined it was, that the order of Templers should be abolished for ever.
More, in Ireland Lord Edmund Botiller was made the Lieutenant of Lord Iohn Wogan justice of Ireland: which Edmund in the lent following besieged the O-Brynnes in Glyndelory, & compelled them to yeeld: yea and brought them almost to confusion, unlesse they had returned the sooner unto the peace of the Lord the king.
Item, the same yeere, on the morrow after Saint Dominicks day, Lord Maurice D Fitz-Thomas espoused Katherin daughter of the earle of Vlster, at Green-castle. And Thomas Fitz-Iohn espoused another daughter of the same earle the morrow after the Assumption, in the same place.
Also, the Sunday after the feast of the exaltation of the Holy Crosse, the daughter of the earle of Glocester, wife to the Lord Iohn Burke was delivered of a sonne.
MCCCXIII. Frier Roland Ioce Primate of Ardmach arrived at the Iland of Houth the morrow after the annuntiation of the blessed Virgin Mary: & rising in the night by stealth tooke up his Croisier, and advanced it as farre as to the Priorie of E Grace Dieu: whom there encountred certaine of the Archbishop of Dublins servants, debasing and putting downe that Croisier, and the Primate himselfe of Ardmagh, they chaced with disgrace and confusion out of Leinster.
Item, a Parliament was holden at London, wherein little or nothing was done as touching Peace: from which Parliament the king departed, and tooke his journey into France, at the Mandate of the King of France: and the king of England with many of his nobles tooke the badge of the Crosse.
Also the lord Iohn Fitz-Thomas Knighted Nicolas Fitz-Maurice & Robert Clonhull, at Adare in Mounster.
More, on the last day of may, Robert Brus sent certaine Gallies to the parts of Ull- F
ster with his rovers to make spoile: whom the men of Ullster resisted and manfully chased away: It is said, that the same Robert arrived with the license of the Earle, to take truce.
Item, in the same summer Maister Iohn Decer, a Citizen of Dublin, caused a necessarie bridge to be made from without the towne of Batyboght, unto the Causey

of

A of the Mil poole of Clontarf, whereas before time the passengers that way were much endangered. But after he had deffraied great charges thereabout by reason of a mighty inundation and floud, the bridge with the arches fell downe.

Also, Maister Iohn Leekes, archbishop of Dublin in the feast of Saint Laurence ended this mortall life. Then in a schisme and division of sides were elected for to bee archbishop of Dublin, Maister Walter Thornbury the kings chancellor in Ireland, and Maister Alexander Bicknore Treasurer of Ireland: but Walter Thornbury was drowned, and many others, to wit, about one hundred fifty and sixe tooke the sea and the night following were all drowned. At the time of the foresaid Walters
B death, Alexander Bicknore expected at home the Popes favor. The same Alexander was made archbishop of Dublin. Item, the lord Miles Verdon espoused the daughter of the lord Richard Excester. Item, the same yeere the lord Robert Brus overthrew the castle of Marne, and vanquished the lord Donegan, O-Dowill on Saint Barnabes day. And the lord Iohn Burck, heire unto Richard earle of Vlster died at Galwey on the feast of Saint Marcellus and Marcellianus.

Also, the lord Edmund Botiller dubbed thirty knights in Dublin castle on sonday and Saint Michaels day.

MCCCXIIII. The knights Hospitaliers had the lands given unto them of the Templars in Ireland.

C Item, Sir Iohn Parice is slaine at Pount. Also, lord Theobald Verdon came lord Iustice of Ireland on Saint Sylvesters day.

Item, Sir Gefferey Genevile a frier, died the twelfth day before the Calends of Novembér and was buried in his owne order of the frier preachers of Tryn: who was lord also of the liberty of Meth.

More, in the same yeere and upon Saint Mathew the Apostles day, Loghseudy was burnt: and on the friday following, the lord Edmund Botiller received his commission, to be lord Iustice of Ireland.

MCCCXV. On Saint Iohn Baptists day, the earle of Gloceſter had his deaths wound
D given him and died, when many others, as it were, without number were slaine in Scotland and more taken prisoners by the Scots. For which cause the Scots became bold and carried their heads aloft: and gat good land and Tributes out of Northumberland.

Item shortly after this, came the Scots and besieged the towne of Carlile where Iames Dowglis was squized to death by misfortune of a certaine wall falling upon him.

The same yeere, the Scots not contented with their owne land, arrived in the North-part of Ireland at Clondonne, with six thousand fighting men and expert warriours, to wit, Edward Brus whole brother to Robert King of Scots, and with him the Earle of Monteff, Iohn Meneteth, Iohn Steward, the Lord Iohn Cambel, Thomas
E Randolfe, Fergus Andressan, Iohn Bosco and Iohn Bisset, who seized Vlster into their hands and drave the Lord Thomas Mandevile and other leige men out of their owne possessions.

The Scots entred Ireland first on S. Augustines day, that was the Englishmens Apostle, in the moneth of May neere unto Crag-fergus in Vlster: betweene whom and the English the first conflict was neere unto the Banne: in which the earle of Vlster was put to flight: there were taken prisoners, William Burk, Iohn Stanton, and many others, and the Scots having slaine a number of the english prevailed and had the day.

The second conflict was at Kintys in Meth, wherein Roger Mortimer with his fol-
F lowers was put to flight.

The third conflict was at Sketheris hard by Arstoll the morrow after the conversion of S. Paul, wherein the Englishmen were chaced and the Scots had the better hand. And the foresaid Edward Brus, soone after the feast of Philip and Iacob, caused himselfe to be crowned King of Ireland: and they tooke Greene Castle, and left their men there, whom the Dublinians quickly after expelled, and recovered the

" ſaid Caſtle to the Kings behoofe, and finding Sir Robert Coulragh the Keeper of the A
" Caſtle there brought him with them to Dublin : who being impriſoned and put to
" ſhort diet ended his daies.

" Item, upon Peter and Paul the Apoſtles day came the Scots before Dundalk, and " won the towne, ſpoiled and burnt it, killing as many as made reſiſtance: and a great " part of Vrgale was burnt by the Scots. The Church of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary in " Atterith, being full of men, women and little children was burnt by the Scots and " Iriſh.

" In the ſame yeere the Lord Edmund Botiller, juſtice of Ireland, about the feaſt of " S. Mary Maudlen, aſſembled together a mighty powre out of Mounſter, Leinſter and " other parts: and the earle of Vlſter on the contrary ſide, as it were, comming from B
" the parts of Conaght with an infinite armie met alltogether about Dundalke, and " conſulted among themſelves to kill the Scots; but how it is not knowen: the Scots
" fled, otherwiſe, as hope was, they had beene taken priſoners.

" Which done, the earle of Vlſter, with the foreſaid juſtice and other great Lords
" tooke in hand, after they had ſlaine the Scots, to bring the Lord Edward le Brus
" quicke or dead to Dublin: which Earle followed them in chaſe as far as to the wa" ter of Branne, and afterwards the ſaid Earle retyred backe toward Coyners: which
" the ſaid Brus perceiving, warily paſſed over the ſaid water and followed him: whom
" with ſome others of the Earles ſide he put to flight, having wounded George Roch,
" and ſlaine others, namely Sir Iohn Stanton, and Roger de Sancto Boſco, that is, C
" Holy-Wood: likewiſe on the part of Brus many were ſlaine: and the Lord William
" Burk was taken priſoner the tenth day of the Moneth of September: and the Earle
" was defaited neere unto Coyners: and then, the Iriſh of Connaght and Meth roſe
" up in armes againſt the King and againſt the Earle of Ulſter, and burnt the Caſtle of " Atholon and of Raudon and many other Caſtles in the ſaid war of Coyners. The Ba" ron of Donell bare himſelfe there right valiantly: but he loſt much goods there: and
" the ſaid Scots manfully chaſed them as far as to Cragfergus: and there on the Earles
" ſide they fled, and ſome entred the Caſtle and valiantly kept it: and afterwards came " Mariners from the Havens and Port townes of England and on a night ſurpriſed the " Scots, and ſlew forty of them, and had away their tents and many things elſe. And D
" the morrow after the exaltation of the holy Croſſe; the Earle of Morreff paſſed the " ſeas into Scotland and tooke the Lord William Brus with him, ſeeking for more war-
" like and armed men, with foure Pirats ſhips full of the goods of Ireland: whereof one
" was ſunke; all which time, the ſaid Brus laid ſiege to the Caſtle of Cragfergus. At " the ſame time, Cathil Roge raſed three Caſtles of the Earles of Ullſter in Connaught,
" and many townes in the ſame Connaught he burnt and ſacked. And at the ſame time,
" the ſaid mariners went to the ſaid caſtle, and the Lords there skirmiſhed, and in the " meane time ſlew many Scots; at which time Richard Lan de O-ferivill was by a cer-
" taine Iriſhman ſlaine.

" Item, afterwards upon S. Nicolas day, the ſaid Brus departed out of Cragfergus, E
" unto whom the earle of Moreff preſented himſelfe with 500. men unto the parts a" bout Dundalk they came together: and to them many fled, and ſome gave unto them
" their right hands: and from thence they paſſe on to Nobee, where they left many of " their men about the feaſt of S. Andrew the Apoſtle: And Brus himſelfe burnt Kenlys
" in Meth, and Grenard Abbay: and the ſaid Monaſtery he rifled and ſpoiled of all the " goods in it: Alſo Finnagh and New-Caſtle he burnt, and all that country: and they " kept their Chriſtmas at Loghſudy, and then burnt it. And after this, they marched
" forward by Totmoy unto Rathymegan and Kildare, and the parts about Triſtelderмot
" and Athy and Reban, not without loſſe of their men. And then came Brus to Skethy
" neere Arſcoll in Leinſter: where there encountred him in fight the Lord Edmund F
" Botiller Iuſtice of Ireland, and Sir Iohn Fitz-Thomas, and Thomas Arnald Power and " other Noble-men of Leinſter and of Mounſter: In ſo much as one of thoſe Lords with " his army was ſufficient to vanquiſh the ſaid Edw. and his forces. But there aroſe a diſ-
" cord among them: and ſo beeing diſordered & in confuſion they leaue the field unto

the

A the ſaid Edward, according to that which is written, Every Kingdome diuided in it ſelfe ſhalbe made deſolate. There alſo was ſlaine a noble eſquire and faithfull to the king and the realme, Haymund Grace; and with him Sir William Prendregeſt, Knight. On the Scots part were ſlaine Sir Fergus Andreſſan, Sir Walter Morrey and many others: whoſe bodies were buried at Athy in the Covent of the Friers Preachers.

Afterwards, the ſaid Brus in his returne toward Meth burnt the caſtle de Loy: and then the ſaid Scots depart away from Kenlis in Meth, againſt whom the lord Roger Mortimer came with a great armie, well neere 15000. but, as it is thought, not true and faithfull amongſt themſelues, but now confederate with the lord Roger: who about three of the clock began to flie and turned their backes: and principally
B the Lacies, leaving the lord Roger alone with a few: whom it behoved then, to flie toward Dublin, and to Sir Walter Cuſake at the caſtle of Trim, leaving with the Scots that country, and the towne of Kenlis.

Alſo, at the ſame time, the Iriſh of the ſouth, to wit, the O-Tothiles and the O-brynnes, burnt all the ſouth-country, namely Arclo, Newcaſtle, Bree, and all the villages adjoyning. And the O-Morghes fired and waſted part of the Leys in Leinſter, whom for the moſt part the lord Edmund Botiller Iuſtice of Ireland ſlew, whoſe heads to the number of foureſcore were brought to the caſtle of Dublin.

Item, in the ſame yeere about the feaſt of the purification of the bleſſed Virgin
C Mary, certaine lords of Ireland, and the lord Fitz Thomas, the lord Richard Clare, lord Iohn Pover, and the lord Arnald Pover, for to eſtabliſh peace and greater ſecurity with the king of England, came to Sir Iohn Hothom, aſſigned there by the ſaid king of England, which ſaid lords and Nobles ſware to hold with the king of England come life come death, and to their powre to quiet the country and make peace, and to kill the Scots. For the performance whereof by the leaue and helpe of God they gaue hoſtages and ſo returned: which forme if other nobles of the land of Ireland would not keepe, they were generally held for the Kings enemies.

Item, there died Sir Iohn Biſſet. And the church of the new towne of Leys with the ſteeple & belfray was by the Scots burnt. The Scots wonne the caſtle of North-
D burgh in Vlſter.

Alſo Fidelmic O Conghir, king of Connaght ſlew Rorke the ſonne of Cathol O-Conghir.

More, Sir William Maundevile died: and the Biſhop of Conere fled to the caſtle of Crag fergus and his Biſhopricke was liable to an Interdiction: and Sir Hugh Antonie, is killed in Connaght.

Item, in the ſame yeere, on Saint Valentines day, the Scots abode nere Geſhil and Offaly: and the armie of the Engliſh about the parts of Kildare: and the Scots, endured ſo great famine, that many of them were ſtarved to death: and for the ſame
E cauſe they tooke their way cloſely toward Fowier in Meth. The ſondaie following, ſo feeble they were, what with hunger and what with travaile, that moſt of them died.

And afterwards the nobles came unto the Parliament, and did nothing there; but as they returned, ſpoiled all the country: and the lord Walter Lacy came to Dublin, for to cleere himſelfe of an imputation (touching his credite) laied upon him, and to tender hoſtages unto the lord the king as other nobles had done: and the ſame time Edward Brus peaceably abode in Vlſter.

Item, the O-Tothiles, and O-Brynnes, the Archibaulds and Harolds conſpired and banded togither: the towne of Wicklo and the whole country they laid waſt.
I

And in the firſt weeke of Lent, the earle of Moreff ſailed over into Scotland, and Brus held Plees in Vlſter, and cauſed many to be hanged.

Alſo in the mideſt of Lent, Brus held Plees and ſlew the Logans, and tooke Sir Alan Fitz-Warin, and carried him into Scotland.

" Alſo in the ſame yeere, Fennyngher O-Conghir ſlew Cale-Rothe and with him of A " Galloglahes and others about three hundred. The ſame yeere, in midlent wheat " was ſold for eighteene ſhillings, and at Eaſter following for eleven ſhillings.
" MCCCXVI. Lord Thomas Mandevile, with many others came from Tredagh to " Crag-fergus upon Maundy Thurſday, and joined battaile with the Scots, put them
" to flight, and ſlew thirty of the Scots: and afterwards on Eaſter even, the ſaid lord
" Thomas with his men charged upon the Scots, and ſlew many of them about the " Calends: and there was ſlaine the ſaid lord Thomas Maundevile in his own country,
" in defenſe of his right.
" Item, in the partes of Connaght many Iriſh were ſlaine, by lord Richard Clare and B
" lord Richard Bermingham.
" Item, on Saturday after the lords Aſcenſion, Donnyger O-Brynne a ſtrong theefe
" with twelue of his confederates was ſlaine by Sir William Comyn & his followers,
" keepers of the peace, whoſe heads were carried to Dublin.
" Item, the Dundalkers made a rode againſt O-Hanlan, and ſlew of the Iriſh a" bout two hundred: and Robert Verdon a warrelike eſquire, there loſt his life.
" Item, at Whitſontide the ſame yeere, Richard Bermingham ſlew of the Iriſh in " Mounſter about three hundred or more: and afterwards at the feaſt of the Nativity
" of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, came Brus to the caſtle of Crag-Fergus, and commanded the " keepers to render up the caſtle unto him, according to the covenant betweene them
" made, as hee ſaid, who anſwered, that they ought in deed ſo to doe; and willed him C
" to ſend thirty of his men about him: and required that he would grant them within
" life and limme: who did ſo: and after they had received thirty Scots into the caſtle,
" they ſhut them up and kept them in priſon.
" At the ſame time the Iriſh of O-mayll went towards the parts of Tullogh, & fought
" a battaile: whereupon of the Iriſh were ſlaine about foure hundred: whoſe heads
" were ſent to Dublin: and wonders were afterwards ſeene there. The dead, as it were,
" aroſe, and fought one with another, and cried out Fennokabo, which was their ſignal.
" And afterward about the feaſt of the tranſlation of Saint Thomas, there were rigged
" and made ready eight ſhips and ſet out from Tredagh to Cragfergus with victuals.
" Which were by the earle of Vlſter much troubled for the delivery of William Burk D
" who had beene taken with the Scots: and the ſaturday following, there were made " friends and united, at Dublin, the earle of Vlſter and the lord Iohn Fitz-Thomas, and " many of the nobles ſworne and confederate to liue and die for the maintenance of " the peace of Ireland.
" The ſame yeere, newes came out of Connaght, that O-Conghir ſlew many of " the Engliſh, to wit, lord Stephen of Exceſter, Miles Cogan, and many of the Barries
" and of the Lawleis, about foureſcore.
" Item, the weeke after Saint Laurence feaſt, there aroſe in Connaght foure Iriſh Prin-
" ces to make warre againſt the Engliſh: againſt whom came the lord William Burk,
" the lord Richard Bermingham, the lord of Anry with his retinew of the country: and E
" of the ſame Iriſh about eleven thouſand fell upon the edge of the ſword neere unto
" Anry: which town was walled afterwards with the money raiſed of armor and ſpoile
" gotten from the Iriſh: becauſe every one of the Engliſh that had double armors of " the Iriſh, gaue the one halfe deale toward the wals of the towne Anry. Slaine were
" there Fedelmic O-Conghir, a pettie king or Prince of Connaght and O Kelley, & ma" ny other Princes or Potentates. Iohn Huſee a butcher of Anry fought there, who the " ſame night at the requeſt of his lord of Anry ſtood among the dead to ſeeke out and " diſcover O-Kelley: which O-Kelley with his Coſtrell or eſquire roſe out of their lurking
" holes and cried unto the fore-ſaid man, to wit, Huſee, come with mee and I will F
" make thee a great lord in my country. And Huſee anſwered, I will not goe with " thee, but thou ſhalt goe to my lord Richard Bermingham. Then ſaid O-Kelly.
" Thou haſt but one ſeruant with thee, and I haue a doughty eſquire, therefore " come with mee, that thou maiſt bee ſafe: unto whom his owne man alſo ſaid:
Agree and goe awaie with O-Kelley that wee may bee ſaved and enriched, becauſe

they

A they are ſtronger than wee. But the ſaid Iohn Huſee firſt killed his owne ſervant, and " O-Kelley and his eſquire: and cut off all their three heads, and carried them to his " lord Richard Bermingham: and that Bermingham gaue unto the ſaid Iohn Huſee " faire lands and dubbed him knight, as he wel deſerved.

The ſame yeere about the feaſt of Saint Laurence, came O-Hanlan to Dundalk, " for to deſtreine, and the Dundalkers with their men killed a number.

Item, on monday next before the feaſt of the nativity of Saint Mary, came David " O-Tothill with foure more, and hid himſelfe ſecretly all night long in Coleyn wood: " which the Dublinians and the Sir William Comyn perceiving, went forth and man- " B fully purſued them for ſixe leagues, and ſlew of them about ſeventeene, and wounded " many to death.

Alſo, there ranne rumors to Dublin, that the lord Robert Brus king of Scotland en- " tred Ireland to aide Edward Brus his brother: and the caſtle of Crag Fergus in Vlſter " was beſieged by the foreſaid Scots. The monaſteries of Saint Patrick of Dune and of " Seball and many other houſes as well of Monkes, as of regular preaching friers and " Minors, were ſpoiled in Vlſter by the Scots.

Item, the lord William Burke, leaving his ſon for an hoſtage in Scotland is ſet free. " The church of Brught in Vlſter being in maner full of folke of both ſexes, is burnt by " the Scots and Iriſh of Vlſter.

C At the ſame time newes came from Crag-fergus, that thoſe which kept the caſtle " for default of victuals, did eate hides and lether, yea & eight Scots who before were " taken priſoners: great pitty and griefe, that no man relieved ſuch.

And the friday following newes were brought, that Thomas the ſonne of the earle " of Vlſter was dead.

Alſo the ſunday following the feaſt of the nativity of the bleſſed Virgin, died lord " Iohn Fitz-Thomas at Laraghbrine nere unto Maynoth, and hee was buried at Kildare " among the Friers Minors. Of which lord Iohn Fitz-Thomas, it is ſaid, that a little be- " fore his death, hee was created earle of Kildare: after whom ſucceeded his ſonne " and heire the lord Thomas Fitz-Iohn, a prudent and wiſe perſonage.

D And afterwards newes came that the caſtle of Crag-fergus was rendred to the " Scots, and granted there was to the keepers of it life and limme.

Alſo upon the day of the exaltation of the holy croſſe, Conghar and Mac-keley were " ſlaine, with fiue hundred of the Iriſh by the lord William Burke and Richard Ber- " mingham in Connaght.

Item, on monday before Holloughmas, happened a great ſlaughter of the Scots in " Vlſter, by Iohn Loggan, and Hugh Biſſet: to wit, one hundred with duble armor, and " two hundred with ſingle armor.

The number of thoſe men of armes that were ſlaine in all was three hundred be- " ſide footmen.

E And afterward in the Vigil of Saint Edmund king, there fell a great tempeſt of " winde and raine, which overthrew many houſes, and the ſteeple of Saint Trinity- " church in Dublin, and did much harme on land and ſea. Alſo in the Vigil of Saint Ni- " cholas, Sir Alan Stewart, taken priſoner in Vlſter by Iohn Loggan and Sir Iohn Sandale, " was brought unto the caſtle of Dublin.

In the ſame yeere newes arrived out of England, that the lord king of England " and the earle of Lancaſter were at variance, and that they were deſirous one to ſur- " prize the other: for which cauſe the whole land was in great trouble.

Item, in the ſame yeere, about the feaſt of S. Andrew the Apoſtle, ſent there were " to the court of Rome, the lord Hugh Deſpenſer, & the lord Bartholmew Baldeſmere, " F the Biſhop of Worceſter and the Biſhop of Ely about important affaires of the lord " king of England, for ſcotland: who returned into England about the feaſt of the pu- " rification of the bleſſed Virgin Mary.

Alſo, after the ſaid feaſt, the Lacies came to Dublin, and procured an inquiſi- " tion to proue that the Scots by their meanes came not into Ireland: which inqui- " ſition acquitted them. Wherevpon they had a charter of the lord the king, of peace: " and upon the Sacrament given unto them, they tooke an oath to keepe the peace of A the lord King of England, and to their powre to destroy the Scots.

And afterwards, even in the same yeere after the feast of Shrovetide, the Scots came secretly as farre as to Slane, with twenty thousand armed men; and the armie of Ulster joyned with them, who spoiled the whole Country before them.

And after this, on Monday next before the feast of Saint Matthias the Apostle, the Earle of Ulster was taken in the abbay of Saint Marie, by the Major of the Citie of Dublin, to wit, Robert Notingham, and brought to the castle of Dublin, where hee was kept in hold a long time, and the chamber wherein he lay was burned, and seven of the said Earles men were there killed.

In the same weeke, and upon the Vigill of Saint Matthias, came Brus with his B armie toward Dublin: and because he had quickly intelligence of the said Earles apprehension, hee tooke his journey toward the castle of Knocke, and entred the said castle, and tooke the Lord Baron of the same, namely the lord Hugh Tirell and his wife, who for a peece of money were delivered.

And the same night, by common consent, the men of Dublin for feare of the scots burnt Saint Thomas street; and with the said fire the Church of Saint Iohn with the chappell of S. Marie Maudlen was by casualty burnt: yea & all the Suburbs of Dublin were set on fire, together with the Monasterie of Saint Marie: and the Church of Saint Patricke in Dublin was by the said villaines spoiled.

Item, the said Major with the Communalty destroyed the Church of Saint Savi- C our, which is the place of the Friers Preachers: and carried away the stones of the same place toward the building of the Citie wall, which hee then enlarged on the North side above the Key: because the wall at first went along by the Church of Saint Owen, where a towre is to be seene beyond the gate, and in the Vintners street appeereth another gate: But afterwards the King of England commanded the Major and Communalty to make a covent Church of Friers as before. And after the feast of Saint Matthias, Brus understanding that the Citie was strongly walled and fortified, tooke his journey toward the Salmon leape, and there they pitched their tents, namely Robert Brus, King of the scots, Edward Brus, the Earle of Morrey, Iohn de Menteth, the Lord Iohn Steward, the lord Philip Mountbray, and abode D there foure daies, and burnt part of the towne, brake downe the Church and spoiled it, and afterwards marched on toward the Naas: and the Lacies against their oath conducted them and gave them counsell: and Sir Hugh Canon appointed Wadin White his wives brother to be their guide through the country, and they came to the Naas, and sacked the towne, brake into the Churches, opened the tombes in the Church-yard to seeke for treasure, and did much mischiefe whiles they remained there for two daies together. And afterwards they went on toward Tristeldermot, in the second weeke of Lent, and destroyed the Friers minours, the bookes, vestiments and other ornaments they had away, and then departed from thence to Baligaveran: and from Balligaveran leaving the towne of Kilkenny, they came as farre as E Kallan, about the feast of Sain Gregorie the Pope.

At the same time there came letters from the lord Edmund Botiller justice of Ireland, the lord Thomas Fitz-Iohn then earle of Kildare, the lord Richard Clare, the lord Arnald Power and the lord Maurice Fitz-Thomas, for the delivery of the earle of Vlster by Mainprise, and by a writte of the Kings: about which nothing was then done.

And afterward the Vlster men came with an armie, about two thousand, and craved the Kings aide for to destroy the Scots, as they said; for which cause the Kings standerd was delivered unto them: and when they had it, they did more harme F than the Scots, and fell to eating of flesh all Lent long, and wasted in manner the whole country: whereby they purchased the curse of God and man.

Item, A great overthrow was given unto the Irish, nere unto the desert of Dermot, that is, Trostil Dermot, by Edmund Botiller.

Also the same Edmund Botiller lord justice of Ireland for the time beeing gaue a great

A great overthrow to O-Morgh at Balilethan. Then Brus with the Scots marched forward as farre as Limericke. But after that the braveſt forces of the Engliſh in Ireland were aſſembled togither at Ledyn, they retired privily by night from the caſtle of Conniger.

And aboute Palme Sunday, there came newes to Dublin, that the Scots were at Kenlis in Oſſorie, and the Nobles of Ireland at Kilkenny, and there levied a powre to ſet forward againſt Brus: and the Monday following, the King gaue commandment to the men of Vlſter to ſpeed them againſt the Scots, whoſe leader and head the earle of Kildare, to wit, Thomas Fitz-Iohn was appointed to bee: and ſo they put themſelues on their journey: and then was the Brus at Caſhill, and hee marched
B from thence to Nanath, and there abode; and all the lands of the lord Buttler hee burnt and deſtroied quite.

MCCCXVII. Upon Mandy Thurſday, the Lord Edm. Botiller the Lord juſtice of Ireland, and Sir Thomas Fitz-Iohn Earle of Kyldare becauſe the King gave unto them the juriſdiction and liberty of the county of Kildare, alſo Richard Clare with the army of Vlſter, Sir Arnold Power Baron of Donnoyll, Maurice Roch-fort, Thomas Fitz-Moris and the Cauntons with their Retinew aſſembled themſelves togither about the Scots: and for one whole weeke abode about them and did nothing: whoſe forces were reckoned to be about 30000. ſtrong. And afterwards upon Thurſday in Eaſter
C weeke, arrived Roger Mortimer at Yoghall, with the Kings power, becauſe he was Lord juſtce, and the Monday following ſpeedily tooke his journy toward the army, and ſent his letters unto Edmund Botiller late (as it hath beene ſaid) juſtice, that he ſhold attempt nothing againſt the Scots before his comming: But before that Mortimer came, Brus was forewarned by ſome to depart from thence: who the night following tooke his journey toward Kildare, and afterwards in the weeke following every one of the Engliſh returned hence into their country: and the armie of Vlſter came to the Naas.

And at the ſame time, two meſſengers were diſpatched from the citie of Dublin,
D who paſſed the ſeas toward the King of England to aske adviſe, and to advertiſe as touching the State of Ireland, and about the deliverance of the earle of Ullſter.

Alſo at the ſame time, the Lord Roger Mortimer juſtice of Ireland, and the Nobles of Ireland were at Kilkenny to diſpoſe of Brus, but nothing effected they there at that time.

And about a moneth after Eaſter, Brus advanced with his army about 4. leagues neere unto Trim in a certaine wood, and there ſtaied a weeke and more to refreſh his men, who with hunger and travaile were almoſt periſhed, and for that many of them died there.

And afterwards on Philip and Iacob the Apoſtles day, the ſaid Brus entred on his iourny toward Vlſter: and after the ſaid feaſt came the Lord Roger Mortimer juſtice
E of Ireland to Dublin, accompanied with the Lord Iohn Wogan and Sir Fulk Warin, with thirty Knights and their traines: and they held a Parliament with all the Lords and Potentates of the land at Kilmaynan: but did nothing there ſave onely treat about the deliverance of the Earle of Ullſter.

And on the Sunday before the feaſt of our Lords Aſcenſion, there repaired againe unto the Parliament at Dublin, the ſaid Nobles of the Land, and there they delivered the Earle of Vlſter by Mainpriſe and Hoſtages and upon an Oth: And the ſaid Earle having an oath tendered unto him ſwore upon the Sacrament that he would never worke or procure by himſelfe or by any of his friends and followers harme or grievance upon the occaſion of his apprehenſion unto the Citizens of Dublin, but
F that which himſelfe might by order of law obteine or get aganiſt the offenders or tranſgreſſours in that behalfe, and thereupon he had time and day untill the feaſt of the Nativity of S. Iohn Baptiſt: at which day he came not.

Alſo in the ſame yeere, Corne and other victuals were exceeding deere. A Cranok of Wheat was ſold for three and twenty ſhillings and wine for eight denires: and the whole land in maner was waſted by the Scots and Vlſter-men: yea many houſhoulders

" houlders and ſuſteined and releeved a number of folke were driven to A
" begge: and a number were famiſhed : So great alſo was the death and dearth to" gether, that the poore were pined with famine and many died.
" At the ſame time came meſſengers to Dublin out of England, with Grants of " pardon which they had at their will and pleaſure: but before their comming the fore-
" ſaid Earle was delivered : and at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Mortimer the Lord chiefe ju-
" ſtice tooke his journy towards Tredagh, and from thence to Trim, and ſent his letters
" for the Lacies to repaire unto him, who contemptuouſly refuſed to come.
" And afterwards, Sir Hugh Crofts Knight, was ſent unto the Lacies to treat about a " peace, who by them was ſlaine, the more pity. And after that, Mortimer L. Iuſtice B
" aſſembled his army againſt the Lacies, who ſeized upon their goods, cattaile, and
" treaſure, and brought them to finall deſtruction, ſlew many of their men and chaced
" them into the parts of Connaght.
" And it was ſaid, that Sir Walter Lacy went foorth as farre as to Vlſter to ſeeke
" Brus.
" Item, in the towne of S. Cinere in Flanders, about the feaſt of Pentecoſt, the " Lord Aiumar Valence and his ſonne were taken priſoners and conveied into Almain.
" And the ſame yeere on Munday after the feaſt of the Nativity of S. Iohn Baptiſt, the " Potentates of Ireland aſſembled themſelves to the Parlament at Dublin : and there " was the Earle of Vlſter enlarged, who tooke his oath and found mainpriſers or C
" ſureties to anſwer the writs of law, and to purſue the Kings enemies, both Iriſh and
" Scots.
" Item, upon the day of the Saints Proceſſe and Martinian, Sir Iohn Atly encountred
" at ſea Thomas Dover a right ſtrong theefe, and tooke him, and about fourty of his " men well armed he ſlew, and his head he brought with him to Dublin.
" Alſo upon the day of the tranſlation of S. Thomas Sir Nicholas Bolſcot came out of " England with newes, that two Cardinals were come from the Court of Rome into " England to treat concerning a peace, and they brought a Bull to excommunicate
" all the troublers of the peace of the Lord the King of England. D
" Likewiſe the Thurſday next before the feaſt of S. Margaret, Hugh and Walter La-
" cies were proclaimed ſeducers and felons to the King, becauſe they had advanced
" their Banner againſt the peace of the Lord King of England.
" More, on the ſunday following, the Lord Roger Mortimer Iuſtice of Ireland, tooke
" his journey to Tredagh with all his ſouldiours.
" At the ſame time the Vlſter-men raiſed a booty neere unto Tredagh : and the " men of Tredagh went out and fetched the booty backe againe : Where was ſlaine
" Miles Cogan with his brother: and ſix other great Lords of Ulſter were taken priſoners
" and brought to the Caſtle of Dublin.
" And afterwards Mortimer the Lord juſtice, aſſembled his army againſt O-Fervill,
" and commanded the Mal-paſſe to be cut downe, and deſtroied all his houſes: and af- E
" terwards the ſaid O-Fervil rendred himſelfe to the peace and put in hoſtages.
" Alſo the Lord Roger Mortimer juſtice tooke his journey toward Clony, and made " an inquiſition or inqueſt, as touching Sir Iohn Blound, [to wit, White] of Rathregan :
" which inqueſt accuſed the ſaid Iohn : whereupon he was of neceſſity to fine for two " hundred marks: & afterward on Sonday after the feaſt of the Nativity of bleſſed Ma" rie, the ſaid Mortimer with a great power marched againſt the Iriſh of O-Mayll, and " came to Glinſely, where many were ſlaine both of Iriſh and Engliſh ; But the Iriſh
" went away with the worſt ; and ſoone after came O-brynn, and rendred him-
" ſelfe to the peace of the King. And Roger Mortimer with his company came to the F
" Caſtle of Dublin.
" And upon the day of Simon and Iude the Apoſtles, the Archbales had peace by " mainpriſe of the Earle of Kildare.
" And at the feaſt of Saint Hilarie following, there was a Parliament holden at Lin-
" colne, about a treaty of Peace betweene the Lord King of England, and the Earle of Lancaſter, and betweene the ſcots : And the ſcots continued in Peace, and by reaſon

of

A of that Parliament, the Archbishop of Dublin, and the Earle of Ullster staied in England by the Kings commandement. And about the feast of the Epiphanie, there came newes to Dublin that Sir Hugh Canon the Kings justice in his bench, was slaine by Andrew Bermingham, betweene Naas and Castle-Martin.

Item, at the feast of the Purification of the blessed virgin Mary, there came the Pops Bulls; so that Alexander de Bicknor was confirmed and consecrated Archbishop of Dublin: and those Buls were red & published in the Church of the holy Trinity. And at the same time was read another Bull, that the Lord Pope ordained peace betweene the Lord King of England, and the lord Robert Brus King of Scotland for two yeeres: to which time the said Brus refused to condescend and agree. These things passed about the feast of Saint Valentine.

B Item, the Sunday following came the lord Roger Mortimer to Dublin, and dubbed Iohn Mortimer Knight with foure of his fellowes: and the same day Mortimer kept a great feast in the castle of Dublin.

Item, at the same time, a great slaughter was made of Irishmen in Connaght through a quarrell betweene two Lords or Princes there: and slaine there were of both sides about foure thousand men: and afterwards there was taken great revenge upon the men of Vlster, who in the time that the Scots spoiled and preaded in Ireland, had done much harme, and eate flesh in Lent not of necessity: therefore much tribulation came upon them: insomuch as they did eate one another: so that of ten thousand there remained about 300. and no more: who escaped in maner all, for to

C be punished. And heere appeered the vengeance of God.

Item, it was reported of a truth, that some of the foresaid evill doers, were so hunger starved, that in Church-yards they tooke the bodies out of their graves, and in their Sculs boiled the flesh and fed thereupon, yea and women did eate their owne children for starke hunger.

MCCCXVIII. In the Quindene of Easter, news out of England arrived in Ireland, that the towne of Berwicke was betraied, and taken by the Scots: and afterwards in the same yeere, Maister Walter Islep the kings treasurer in Ireland, landed, and brought letters to the Lord Roger Mortimer, that he should addresse himselfe to repaire unto the King; who did so, and substituted the Lord William Archbishop of Cashil Custos of Ireland, who at one and the same time, was Lord Iustice of Ireland,

D Lord Chancellour and Archbishop.

And afterward, at the three weekes end after Easter, there came newes to Dublin, that the lord Richard Clare was slaine, and with him foure Knights, namely Sir Henrie Capell, Sir Thomas Naas, Sir Iames Cannon, and Sir Iohn Caunton: also Adam Apilgard with fourescore other men; by O-Brene, and Mac-Carthy, on the feast of Saint Gardian and Epimachus. And it was reported, that the said Lord Richard his bodie was in despitefull malice cut into small peeces. But his reliques were enterred in Limericke among the Friers Minors.

E Item, on Sunday in Mense Paschæ, that is, A moneth after Easter, Iohn Lacy was led forth of the castle at Dublin and brought to Trim, for to be araigned and to heare and receive his judgement there: who was adjudged to be strait dieted, and so he died in prison.

Item, the Sunday before the Lords Ascention, lord Roger Mortimer sailed over into England: but paied nothing for his victuals that he had taken up in Dublin and elsewhere, which amounted to the valew of one thousand pounds.

Also, the same yeere about the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist, the great grace and mercy of God was shewed: in that wheat which before was sold for fifteene shil-

F lings, was now not worth above seven shillings, and oates were bought for five shillings: great plenty there was of wine, salt and fish: and that in such sort, that about Saint Iames day there was new bread to be had of new corne: a thing that never or seldome had beene seene afore in Ireland: and this was a signe of Gods tender mercy, and all through the prayer of the poore and other faithfull folke.

Item, the Sunday after the feast of Saint Michaell, newes came to Dublin, that Lord

" Lord Alexander Bykenore then the Kings juſtice in Ireland and Archbiſhop of Dub- A
" lin was arrived at Yoghall. On Saint Denis day he came to Dublin, and with great
" proceſſion and honorable pompe of the religious perſons and of others, as well of " the Clergie as the Laity, he was received.
" Item, on Saturday, falling out to be the feaſt of Pope Calixtus, a field was fought
" betweene the ſcots and Engliſh of Ireland, two leagues from the towne of Dun-
" dalke: to which battaile came of the ſcots part, the Lord Edward Brus (who named
" himſelfe King of Ireland) the lord Philip Mowbray, the lord Walter Soules, the " lord Alan Steward with his three brethren: alſo Sir Walter Lacy, Sir Robert, and
" Sir Aumer Lacy, Iohn Kermerdyne, and Walter White, and about 3000. others. A-" gainſt whom came into the field of the Engliſh ſide, the lord Iohn Bermingham, B
" Sir Richard Tuit, Sir Miles Verdon, Sir Hugh Tripton, Sir Herbert Sutton, Sir Iohn Cu-
" ſacke, Sir Edward, and Sir William Birminghams: and the Primate of Armagh, who
" aſſoiled them all: Sir Walter Larpulke: and certaine came from Tredagh to the num" ber of twenty well appointed and choiſe ſouldiers, whom Iohn Mau-pas accompa" nied: and ſo they joined the ſaid battaile. The Engliſh were the firſt that entered " with great vigour upon the front and vaward, where the ſaid Iohn Maupas, manful-
" ly and with much honor in this conflict ſlew the lord Edward Brus: which Iohn alſo
" was found ſlaine upon the body of the ſaid Edward: and all the ſcots in maner were " killed up, even to the number of two thouſand or thereabout: whereby few of the " ſcots eſcaped, beſide the lord Philip Mowbray, who alſo was wounded to death: C
" and Sir Hugh Lacy, Sir Walter Lacy with ſome few others that were with them made
" ſhift hardly to ſave themſelves. This fortuned betweene Dundalk and Faghird.
" Now, the head of the foreſaid Edward, the ſaid lord Iohn Birmingham brought unto " the ſaid lord King of England: upon whom the King beſtowed at the ſame time, the " Earldome of Louth to him and to his heires males, and the baronie of Aterith. And " one quarter, with the hands and heart of the foreſaid Edward, were carried to Dub" lin, and the other quarters divided and ſent to other places.
" MCCCXIX. The lord Roger Mortimer returned out of England and is eftſoones " made Lord iuſtice of Ireland. The ſame yeere at the feaſt of All Saints, came a Bull
" from the Pope to excommunicate Robert Brus King of Scotland at every Maſſe. Al- D
" ſo the towne of Athiſell and a great part of the country, was burnt by the Lord Iohn
" Fitz-Thomas, whole brother of the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas. In this yeere the fore-
" ſaid Iohn Bermingham was created Earle of Louth. Alſo the Stonebridge of Kil-
" Coleyn was built by Maiſter Moris Iacke, Canon of the Cathedrall Church of Kil" dare.
" MCCCXX. In the time of Pope Iohn the 22. and of the lord Edward ſonne to King
" Edward, which Edward after the comming of Saint Auſtin into England was the " 25. King, alſo under Alexander Bicknore then Archbiſhop of Dublin, beganne the " Univerſity of the ſaid Citie of Dublin. The firſt that proceeded Maiſter in the ſame E
" Univerſity was Frier William Hardite, of the order of preaching Friers: which " William under the ſaid Archbiſhop, ſolemnely commenſed Doctor in Diuinity. The " ſecond Maiſter that proceeded in the ſame faculty, was Frier Henry Cogry, of the or" der of the Friers Minors: the third Maiſter that went forth was William Rodyard
" Dean of the Cathedrall Church of Saint Patricke in Dublin, who ſolemnelie com-
" menſed Doctor in the Canon law. And this William was made the firſt Chauncel-" lour of the ſaid Vniuerſity. The fourth Maiſter in ſacred Theologie or Divinity, that " went out, was Frier Edmund Kermerdin. Item, Roger Mortimer lord Iuſtice of Ire" land returned into England leaving in his place the lord Thomas Fitz-Iohn then " Earle of Kildare.
" Item, the Lord Edmund Botiller entred into England, and ſo came to Saint F
" Iames.
" Alſo the bridge of the towne of Leghelyn was built by Maiſter Moris Iacke Canon
" of the Cathedrall Church of Kildare.
" MCCCXXI. A very great overthrow with much ſlaughter of the O Conghors, was-given

A given at Balibogan the ninth day of May, by the men of Leinſter and of Meth. cc
Item, the Lord Edmund Botillet died in London, and lieth buried at Balygaveran in Ireland. Alſo Iohn Bermingham Earle of Louth, is made Lord Iuſtice in Ireland. Likewiſe Iohn Wogan departed this life. cc cc cc
MCCCXXII. Andrew Bermingham, and Nicolas de La-Lond, Knight, and many others are ſlaine by O-Nalan on Saint Michaels day. cc cc
MCCCXXIII. A truce is taken betweene the King of England and Robert Brus King of Scotland for 14. yeeres. Alſo, Iohn Darcy came chiefe Iuſtice of Ireland. Item, Iohn the firſt begotten ſonne of the Lord Thomas Fitz-Iohn, Earle of Kildare, cc cc cc
B in the ninth yeere of his age, ended this life.
MCCCXXIIII. Nicolas Genevile, ſonne and heire to the Lord Simon Genevile, departed out of this world; and was buried in the Church of the Friers Preachers of Trym. Item, there hapned a great wind on twelfe day at night. cc cc cc
Item a generall murraine there was of Oxen and Kine in Ireland.
MCCCXXV. Richard Lederede Biſhop of Oſſorie cited Dame Alice Ketyll upon her peruerſe hereticall opinion, and cauſed her to make perſonall appeerance before him: and being examined, as touching ſorceries, he found by an enqueſt that ſhe had practiſed ſorceries: among which this was one foule fact of hers, that a certaine ſpirit named Robyn Artyſſon lay with her: and that ſhe offered unto him, nine red cc cc cc cc cc cc cc cc
C cockes at a ſtone bridge, in a certaine foure Croſſe high way.
Item, that ſhe ſwept the ſtreets of Kilkenny with beeſoms, betweene Complin and Courefew, and in ſweeping the filth toward the houſe of William Vtlaw her ſonne by way of conjuring, mumbled theſe words. cc cc cc cc
Vnto the houſe of William my ſonne, cc
Hie all the wealth of Kilkenny toun.
Now the complices of the ſaid Alice and thoſe that agreed unto this diveliſh and wretched practiſe of hers, were one Pernill of Meth; and Baſilia the daughter of the ſame Pernil. When the aboue named Alice was by inquiſition attainted of theſe foreſaid imputations, the Biſhop puniſhed her by the purſe, and cauſed her utterly to ab- cc cc cc cc cc cc cc cc passed over: and never was it knowen whither she went. Now because it was found A by the inquisition and recognizance of the said Parnell condemned to be burnt, that William Vlaw was consenting to his mother in her sorcery and witch-craft: the Bishop caused him to be arrested and taken by the Kings writ, and to be kept in prison:

who in the end through the supplication of great Lords was set free: yet with this condition, that he should cause the church of S. Maries in Kilkenny to be covered all over with lead and to doe other almesdeeds by a certaine time; which almesdeeds, if hee performed not within the said tearme, then he should be in the same state wherein he stood when he was taken by vertue of the Kings Processe.

MCCCXXVI. A Parliament was holden at Whitsontide in Kilkenny: unto which B Parliament came the lord Richard Burke the Earle of Vlster, although he was somewhat weake and crazie: thither repaired also all the lords and Potentates of Ireland:
and there the said Earle made a great and noble feast unto the lords and the people.
Afterwards, the lord Earle taking his leave of those Nobles and lords, went to A-thisell, where he ended his life. And a little before the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist hee was there enterred. The lord William Burke became his heire.

MCCCXXVII. There arose a quarrell and a fray, betweene the lord Moris Fitz-Thomas, and the lord Arnald Power: and the lord Moris had in his traine and company, the lord Botiller and the lord William Bermingham: and the lord Arnald had in his retinew the Bourkeins: of whom the said lord Morrice Fitz-Thomas slew C many, and some he chased into Connaght.

In the same yeere after Michaelmas, the lord Arnald came to aide the Bourkeins: and by occasion of certaine rude and uncivill tearmes which the Lord Arnald had given out, in calling him Rymour, the said Morice raised an armie againe, and together with Botiller and the said William Bermingham with a puissant hoast burnt the lands and possessions of the said Lord Arnald in Ofath. Also the said William Bermingham fired the lands and Manour houses of the Lord Arnald Power in Mounster; and Kenlys in Offerie hee burnt: so that the lord Arnald was forced to fly with the Baron of Donnyl to Waterford: and there they remained a moneth, untill that D the Earle of Kildare then Lord Iustice of Ireland, and others of the Kings Counsell tooke a day betweene them: which day the Lord Arnald kept not, but came to Dublin and passed the seas into England about the feast of the Purification: and after that Arnald had sailed over, the said Moris Botiller and the lord William Berming-ham, with a great armie came, spoiled, harried and burnt the lands of the said Arnald: and by reason of those puissant forces that they had led, and the many mischiefes which they had done, the kings Ministers of his Counsell feared least hee would besiege Cities: and therefore the Cities made provision with more warding and watching the while betweene. And when the said lord Moris Botiller, and William heard, that the Cities made such provision and preparation before hand, E they gave intelligence unto the Kings Counsell that they would come to Kilkenny, and there cleere themselves, that they never thought to doe any noisance to the lands of their soveraigne Lord the King, but onely to be revenged of their enemies.
Unto which Parliament came the Earle of Kildare then justice of Ireland, the Prior of Kilmaynon to wit Roger Outlaw Chauncellour of Ireland: Nicolas Fastoll justice in the Bench and others of the kings Counsell: and the foresaid [Moris and William] demaunded the kings Charter of peace, but they of the kings Counsell warily making them answere tooke day, unto the moneth after Easter, that they might with their fellowes of the Counsell, treat upon this point.

In the same yeere before lent, the Irish of Leinster gathered themselves together, F and set up a certaine King, namely Donald, the sonne of Arte Mac-Murgh. Who being made king, determined to set up his Banner two miles from Dublin: and afterwards to passe through all the lands of Ireland. Whose pride and malice God seeing, suffered him to fall into the hands of the lord Henrie Traharn: who brought him to the Salmons leaps, & had of him 200. pound for his lives ransome: & then led him to Dublin: to waite there untill the kings Counsell could provide and take order what

to

A to doe with him: and after his taking many infortunities lighted upon the Iriſh of Leinſter, to wit, the lord Iohn Welleſley tooke David O-Thothiell priſoner and many of the Iriſh were ſlaine.

The ſame yeere, Adam Duff the ſonne of Walter Duff of Leinſter, and of the kinred of the O-Tothiles, was convicted: for that againſt the Catholicke faith, hee denied the Incarnation of Ieſus Chriſt, and held, that there could not be three perſons and one good: and he affirmed, that the moſt bleſſed Virgin Mary, mother of our lord, was an harlot: hee denied alſo the reſurrection of the dead: and avouched that the ſacred ſcriptures were fables and nothing elſe: and he imputed falſity upon the ſacred Apoſtolicall See. For which and for every of theſe articles, the ſame Adam
B Duff was pronounced an hereticke and blaſphemer: whereupon, the ſame Adam by a decree of the church was on the monday after the Octas of Eaſter the yeere 1328. burnt at Hoggis [Greene] by Dublin.

MCCCXXVIII. On tueſday in Eaſter weeke, Thomas Fitz-Iohn earle of Kildare & juſtice of Ireland died: after whom, ſucceeded in the office of juſtice frier Roger Outlaw Prior of Kilmaynok. The ſame yeere David O-Tothill, a ſtrong theefe, and enemy to the king, a burner of churches and deſtroier of people was brought forth of the caſtle of Dublin to the Tolſtale of the city before Nicholas Faſtoll and Elias Aſhbourne juſtices in the (kings) Bench: which juſtices gaue him his judgement,
C that he ſhould firſt be drawne at horſes tailes through the mideſt of the city unto the Gallowes and afterwards be hanged upon a jebbet, which was done accordingly. Item, in the ſame yeere, the lord Moris Fitz-Thomas raiſed a great army to deſtroy the Bourkeyns and the Poërs. The ſame yeere alſo, the lord William Bourk was knighted at London on Whitſonday, and the king gaue unto him his Seignory. Alſo in the ſame yeere, Iames Bottiller in England eſpouſed the daughter of the earle of Hereford and was created earle of Ormond, who before was called earle of Tiperary.

The ſame yeere a Parliament was holden at Northampton: where many of the lords and nobles of England aſſembled: and a peace was renewed betweene Scotland, England and Ireland by marriages betweene them: and it was ordeined, that D the earle of Vlſter with many nobles of England ſhould goe to Barwick upon Tweede to the eſpouſals and aſſurance making.

The ſame yeere after the ſaid eſpouſals and contract made at Barwicke, the lord Robert Brus king of Scotland, and the lord William Burk earle of Vlſter, the earle of Meneteth and many of the Scottiſh nobility arrived at Cragfergus peaceably, and ſent unto the juſtices of Ireland and to the Counſell, that they would come to Green caſtle, to treat about a peace of Scotland and Ireland. Now, becauſe the ſaid juſtices of Counſell failed to come as the ſaid king deſired, he tooke his leaue of the earle of Vlſter and returned into his owne country after the feaſt of the aſſumption of the bleſſed Virgin Mary. And the earle of Ulſter came to Dublin unto the Parliament,
E and there ſtaied ſixe daies and made a great feaſt, and after this went into Connaght.

The ſame yeere, about the feaſt of Saint Katherin Virgin, the Biſhop of Oſſerie certified the kings Counſell there that Sir Arnald Pover was convicted before him upon divers articles of perverſe hereſie. Whereupon, at the ſuit of the ſaid Biſhop, the ſaid Sir Arnald by vertue of the kings writ was arreſted and laied up in the caſtle of Dublin: and a day was given unto the biſhop, for to come unto Dublin to follow the foreſaid ſuit and action againſt the foreſaid lord Arnald: who made his excuſe, that hee could not then come, becauſe his enemies lay in waite for his life in the way: whereupon the kings Counſell knew not how to make an end of F this buſineſſe: and ſo the lord Arnald was kept in dureſſe within the caſtle of Dublin, until the Parliament following, which was in midlent: where, all the nobles of Ireland were preſent.

In the ſame yeere Frier Roger Vtlaw, Prior of the Hoſpitall of Saint Iohn of Ieruſalem in Ireland, Lord Iuſtice and Chancellor of Ireland, was diſfamed by the ſaid Biſhop, and ſlandered to be a favourer of Hereſie, a Counſellour alſo and abbettor of " the ſaid Lord Arnold in his hereticall naughtineſſe. And becauſe his perſon was thus villanouſly defamed, the ſaid Prior went to the Counſell of the King and put up a petition, that he might purge himſelfe: Whereupon they of the Kings Counſell tooke adviſe, and upon conſultation had, granted unto him, that he might make his purgation: And they cauſed it to be proclaimed for three daies, That if there were any perſon, who would follow ſuite and give information againſt the ſaid Frier Roger he might come in and put in his purſuite: But no man was found to follow the matter. Whereupon at the procurement of Sir Roger the Frier, there went out the kings writ to ſummon the Elders of Ireland. To wit Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and foure Majors of foure Cities, namely Dublin, Corke, Lymerick and Waterford, and of Tredagh: alſo the Sherifs and Seneſchals, yea and the Knights of the Shire with the Free-holders of the County that were of the better ſort, for to repaire unto Dublin: And there were choſen ſix examiners in the ſaid cauſe, to wit, M. William Rodyard Deane of the Cathedrall Church of Saint Patrick in Dublin, the Abbot of Saint Thomas, the Abbat of Saint Maries, the Prior of holy Trinity Church in Dublin, M. Elias Lawles, and M. Peter Willebey: Theſe Inquiſitours convented thoſe that were cited: and they examined every one ſeverally by himſelfe: Which examinats all upon their oathes depoſed, that he was honeſt and faithfull, a zelous embracer of the faith, and ready to die for the faith: and in regard of this great ſolemnity of his purgation, the ſaid Frier Roger made a royall feaſt to all that would come. A B

" Alſo the ſame yeere in Lent died the ſaid L. Arnald Power in the Caſtle of Dublin, and laie a long time unburied in the houſe of the Preaching Friers. C

" MCCCXXIX. After the feaſt of the Annuntiation of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, the Nobles of Ireland came unto the Parliament at Dublin, to wit, the Earle of Vlſter, the Lord Thomas Fitz-Moris, the Earle of Louth, William Bermingham, and the reſt of the Lords: and a peace was renewed there betweene the Earle of Vlſter, and the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas: and the ſaid Lords with the Kings Counſel ordeined there, that the Kings peace ſhould be fully kept: ſo that every Noble man and Chiefetain ſhould keepe in his owne ſept, retinew, and ſervants, and the ſaid Earle of Vlſter made a great feaſt in the Caſtle of Dublin: and the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas the morrow after kept a great feaſt within the church of Saint Patrick in Dublin: and Frier Roger Outlaw juſtice of Ireland feaſted likewiſe upon the third day at Kylmaynon, and ſo they departed. D

" The ſame yeere on the Vigill of Saint Barnabee the Apoſtle, Sir Iohn Bermingham Earle of Louth was ſlaine at Balybragan in Vrgal, by thoſe of Vrgal: and with him Petre Bermingham the ſaid Earles legitimate and whole brother, alſo Robert Bermingham the ſame Earles putative brother, Sir Iohn Bermingham the ſonne of his brother Richard Lord of Anry, William Finne Bermingham, the Unkles ſonne by the mothers ſide of the foreſaid Lord of Anry, Simon Bermingham the ſame Willams ſonne, Thomas Bermingham the ſonne of Robert of Conaght, Peter Bermingham the ſonne of Iames of Conaght, Henry Bermingham of Conaght, and Richard Talbot of Malaghide a valiant man in armes, and two hundred with them whoſe names are not knowen. E

" Item, after the foreſaid ſlaughter, the Lord Simon Genevile his men invaded the country of Carbry, for to ſpoile and harry them, in regard of their robberies and man ſlaughters committed many times in Meth: but before the ſaid invaſion, they of Carbry aroſe, and ſlew of the ſaid Simons men threeſcore and ſixteene.

" Alſo the ſame yeere on the morrow after holy Trinity Sunday there came to Dublin, Iohn Gernon and Roger Gernon his brother in the behalfe of thoſe of Vrgal, and made humble requeſt, that they might ſtand to be tried at the Common Law. And on Tueſday which was the morrow after the feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, Iohn and Roger hearing that the Lord William Bermingham was comming, departed out of Dublin. The ſame yeere, on the Vigill of Saint Laurence, the lord Thomas Botiller went with a great powre into the parts of Ardnorwith, and there encountred the ſaid lord Thomas Williams Mac-Goghgan with his forces: and there was the ſaid L. Thomas F

ſlaine

A to the great losse of the land of Ireland, and with him were killed the lord Iohn Ledewich, Roger Ledewich, Thomas Ledewich, Iohn Nangle, Meiler Petit, Simon Petit, David Nangle, Sir Iohn Waringer, Iames Terel, Nicholas White, William Freines, Peter Kent, Iohn White, and togither with them one hundred and forty men, whose names are unknowne. And on the tuesday next before the feast of Saint Bartholomew, the body of the said lord Thomas Botiller was conveied to Dublin, and bestowed in the house of the preaching friers, but as yet not buried: and the sunday next ensuing the feast of the beheading of Saint Iohn Baptist, the said lord Thomas his corps was very honorably carried through the city, and enterred in the church of the preaching friers: and the wife of the said lord Iohn that day made a feast.

In the same yeere Iohn lord Darcy came justice of Ireland the second time: and
B the said lord Iohn espoused the lady Ioan de Burk Countesse of Kildare, the third day of July, at Maynoth.

Item, Philip Stanton is slaine. Also, Henry lord Traharn is treacherously taken in his owne house at Kilbego by Richard the sonne of Philip Onolan.

More the lord Iames Botiller earle of Ormond burnt Foghird against Onolan, for the foresaid Henries sake brother of Botiller.

The same yeere, on wednesday next after the feast of the Ascension of the blessed Virgin Mary, Iohn lord Darcy justice of Ireland went toward the partes of Newcastle, of Mac-Kingham and Wikelow, against the O-Brynnes: and the monday following, certaine of Lawles were slaine and many wounded, and namely Robert Locam
C was hurt, and of the Irish the better sort were slaine, many likewise wounded and the rest fled. But Murkad O-Brynne yeelded himselfe an hostage togither with his sonne, unkle, and unkles sonne, and they were brought to the castle of Dublin. But afterwards delivered for other hostages, the better sort of their sept and kinne.

The same yeere, the lord justice, namely the Iohn Darcy and those of the kings Counsell in Ireland, about the feast of the Circumcision of our lord, charged the lord Moris Fitz Thomas of Desmond, that himselfe should come into the field with his forces for to vanquish the kings enemies: giving him to understand, that their soveraigne lord the king, would provide for to defray the charges of him and of his army: and the said Moris came with his powre, and Briene O-Brene was in his company: and their armie consisted of tenne thousand men: and the said lord Moris ad-D vanced with his army first against the O-Nolanes, vanquished them, gat a great booty, and wasted their lands with fire: and the O-Nolanes fled, and afterwards delivered hostages who were sent unto the castle of Dublin. And afterwards the said lord Moris made a journey against the O-Morches, who did put in their hostages, for to keepe the kings peace. The same time, the castle of Ley which O-dympcy had won and kept, was rendred up to the said Moris. The same yeere after the Epiphany of our lord, Donald Arts Mac-Murgh made an escape out of the castle of Dublin by a cord which one Adam Nangle had bought for him: which Adam afterwards was E drawne and hanged.

MCCCXXX. Mighty winds were up in divers places, about the feast daies of Saint Katherine, Saint Nicholas and of the Nativitie of our lord by which winde, part of the wall of a certaine house fell down and killed the wife of Sir Miles Verdon with his daughter, on Saint Nicholas even; such winds as the like were never seene in Ireland.

Item, there was such an inundation of the water of Boyn, as never had beene knowne before: by which floud, al the bridges as well of stone as of timber standing over the said water were utterly cast downe, unlesse it were Babe bridge. The water also carried away divers milles, and did much hurt to the friers minors of Trym and
F Tredagh, in breaking downe their houses. The same yeere, about the feast of Saint Iohn Baptist, there began a great dearth of corne in Ireland, and continued unto Michaelmas. Item, a cranoc of wheat was sold for 20. shillings: also a cranoc of otes for eight shillings, & one cranoc of peason, beanes and of barley for 8. shillings. And this dearth hapned by occasion of abundance of raine: so that much of the standing corne could not be reaped before the feast of Saint Michaell.

The ſame yeere, the Engliſh of Meth made a ſlaughter of the Iriſh (to wit, of Mac-Goghigans people) about lent, nere unto Loghynerthy, whereupon the ſaid Mac-Goghigan in anger burnt in thoſe parts 15. ſmall villages and ſacked them: which the Engliſh ſeeing, gathered themſelues together againſt him, and of his men ſlew one hundred, and among whom were ſlaine three lords ſonnes of the Iriſh. A

Item, the lord William Burgh Earle of Vlſter led forth an army out of Vlſter into Mounſter againſt Briene O-Brene.

Alſo the ladie Ioan Counteſſe of Kildare was at Maynoth delivered of William her firſt ſonne, that the lord Iohn Darcy had by her, whiles the lord Iohn abode in England.

Item, Reymund Lawles is ſlaine treacherouſly at Wickelowe. B

More, a parliament was holden at Kilkenny, by Frier Roger Vtlaw the Prior of Kylmainon, then Lieutenant under the lord Juſtice, at which were preſent, Alexander archbiſhop of Dublin, the lord William earle of Vlſter, the lord Iames earle of Ormund, and the lord William Bermingham, and Walter Burk of Conaght: and every of them with a great powre ſet forward to expel Briene O-Brene out of Urkiff neere Caſhill.

Alſo, Walter Burk with his armie of Connaght harried the lands of the lord Moris Fitz-Thomas, bringing backe with him the booty to Urkiff.

Item, the lord earle of Vlſter, and the earle of Deſmond, namely the lord Moris Fitz-Thomas (for this is the firſt time that I call him earle) are appointed to the ſafe C keeping of the Marſhall, at Lymeric by Frier Roger Vtlaw Iuſtice of Ireland. But the earle of Deſmond by a wile eſcaped out of the cuſtodie of the ſaid Marſhall and went his way.

MCCCXXXI. The lord Hugh Lacy with the kings pardon and peace entred Ireland. Alſo, the earle of Vlſter entred England.

Alſo there was given an overthrow to the Iriſh in Okenſeley by the Engliſh the one and twenty day of April.

Item, the ſame day, on the Vigil of Saint Marke the Euangeliſt, the O-Tothely, came to Tanelagh, and robbed Alexander archbiſhop of Dublin, tooke away three hundred ſheepe, and ſlew Richard White and other honeſt men of his company. D Then ran rumors to Dublin of that depredation and ſlaughter: and Sir Philip Bryt knight, and frier Moris Fitz-Gerald knight of the order of knights Hoſpitalers, Hamnud Archdekyn, Iohn Chamberlane, Robert Tyrell, and the two ſonnes of Reginald Bernewall, and many others, but eſpecially of the retinew of the lord archbiſhop of Dublin were by a traine or ambuſh ſlaine by David O-Tothill in Culiagh.

Alſo the lord William Bermingham led forth a great army againſt the foreſaid Iriſh, and did much harme unto them, but more would haue done, had he not beene empeached by the falſe promiſes of the Iriſh.

Item, thoſe of the Engliſh pale at Thurles gaue a great overthrow unto Briene O- E Brene and ſlew many of the Iriſh, in the moneth of May.

Item, at Finnagh in Meth the Engliſh of the ſaid pale defeited the Jriſh upon the eleventh day of June.

Alſo, when famine encreaſed much in Ireland, the mercy of God ſo diſpoſed, that upon the ſeven and twenty day of June there came to land a mighty multitude of great ſea fiſhes, to wit, Thurlhedis, ſuch as in many ages paſt had never beene ſeene, which by the eſtimation of many men amounted to the number of fiue hundred: and this hapned nere unto Connyng and the water called Dodyz in the haven of Dublin, about evening: and Anthony lord Lucy then Juſtice of Ireland with his owne people and certaine citizens of Dublin, amongſt whom was Philip Cradock, killed of the foreſaid fiſhes aboue two hundred, and no man was forbidden to carry away, the F ſame Juſtice giving order therefore.

Item, Anthony lord Lucy juſtice of Ireland ordeined a common Parliament at Dublin in the Vtas of Saint Iohn Baptiſt: unto which certaine of the ancients of the land came not. Then the ſaid juſtice remooved to Kilkenny, proroging the

ſaid

A said Parliament, from the foresaid Octaves unto the feast of Saint Peter ad Vincula. Vnto which place, there repaired the lord Thomas Fitz-Thomas and many other nobles of the land, who came not in before, submitting themselues to the kings grace and mercy. And the king, for his part as much as concerned himselfe under a certeine forme of pardon gratiously forgaue all the mischeifs committed by the foresaid persons, in the land.

Also the castle of Fernis is taken by the Irish perfidiously, and burned in the month of August.

Item, the said lord Moris Fitz-Thomas of Desmond is taken by order from the counsell at Lymerick by the said lord Justice; the morrow after the assumption of the B blessed Virgin Marie, & with the Justice brought to the casile of Dublin, the seventh day of October.

Item, Henry Maundevile is apprehended in the month of September, and led to the castle of Dublin, by vertue of a warrant from Simon Fitz-Richard Justice in the [kings] Bench.

Item, Walter Burck, with his two brethren of whole bloud are taken in Connaght by the earle of Vlster in November, and conveied by the same earle unto the castle of North-burg, in the month of February.

Also, the lord William Bermingham, with his son Walter Bermingham are attach-
C ed at Clomell, by the said Justice in the moneth of February, notwithstanding the kings charter of pardon given unto them before, by the Iustice aboue named, and are brought unto the castle of Dublin the nineteenth day of April.

Item, the Irish of Leinster made spoile of the English and burnt churches, and in the church of Freinesion they burnt about foure score men and women and a certaine chaplaine of the said church arraied in his sacred vestiments and with the body of our lord they repelled backe with their javelins when he would haue gone forth, and burnt him with the rest in the church. These newes came unto the eares of the lord Pope, who sent his Bull or briefe unto the archbishop of Dublin, commanding him to excommunicate the said Irish and all their adherents, together with their re-D tinew and followers, and to interdict their lands. Now, the archbishop fulfilled the commandement of the lord Pope: but the said Irish, contemning the said Bull, excommunication, interdiction and chastisement of the church, and continuing still in their wickednesse, drew themselues againe togither and invaded all the county of Weisford, as farre as to Carcarne, and spoiled the whole country. Whom the English made head against, to wit, Richard White, and Richard Fitz-Henry, with the Burgesses of Weisford and other English: slew of the Irish about foure hundred: and many others of them, as they fled were drowned in the river which is called Slane.

MCCCXXXII. William Bermingham is put to death and hanged at Dublin by the said lord justice, the eleventh day of July: and Walter his sonne is set free. The fore-
E said Sir William was a noble knight, & among many thousand knights, most renowned and excellent for feats of armes, alas the day, great pity it was of him: for who relating his death can forbeare teares? But at length enterred hee was in Dublin among the preaching friers. Also, the castle of Bonraty was forced and rased to the very ground by the Irish of Totomon in Iuly. Also the castle of Arclo, by the said justice, with the citizens of Dublin and the helpe of the Englsh within the pale was won from the Irish, and in the kings hand, on the eight day of August, and in part is newly erected. Also the lord Antony Lucy justice of Ireland is put out of his Office, and returneth into England with his wife and children in the month of November. In whose place also is set Iohn lord Darcy justice of Ireland: and hee entred Ireland the F thirteenth day of February. Item, the English of the pale gaue a great overthrow to Briene O-Brene and Mac-Karthy, and slew many Irish in the parts of Mounster. Item there deceassed Iohn Decer a citizen of Dublin, and lieth buried in the church of the Freers Minors: a man that did many good deeds. Also a certaine Maladie named Mauses reigned all over Ireland as well in old folke men and women, as in young and little ones.

» Item, the hoſtages abiding in the Caſtle of Lymerick ſlew the Conſtable of the A » ſame Caſtle, and ſeized the Caſtle into their owne hands : but after that the Caſtle
» was recovered by the Citizens, the ſame hoſtages were put to the ſword and killed.
» Likewiſe the hoſtages tooke the Caſtle of Nenagh: and when part of it was burnt, re» covered it was againe, and the hoſtages were reſerved.

» Alſo one P... of Wheat about Chriſtmas was commonly ſould for 22. ſhillings:
» and ſtreight after Eaſter and ſo forward, for twelue pence.

» Item, the Towne of New-caſtle of Lions was burnt and ſacked by the O-Tothiles.

» MCCCXXXIII. The Lord Iohn Darcy arrived L. Iuſtice of Ireland at Dublin. Item, » O-Conghirs loſt a great booty, two thouſand Cowes and above, by the Berminghams B » of Carbery.

» Item the L. Iohn Darcy juſtice of Ireland cauſed the Pas at Ethergovill in Offalie to » be cut downe, againſt O-Conghir.

» Item, the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Deſmond is taken forth of the priſon of » Dublin, after he had beene empriſoned one yeere and a halfe, having gotten many » Mainpriſers firſt, even the greateſt and nobleſt perſonages of the land to be bound for » him, in the forfeiture of life, loſſe of al their goods, if then the ſaid Lord Moris attemp» ted ought againſt the King, and if thoſe Nobles aboveſaid preſented not his perſon » unto the King for his demerits.

» Alſo William Burk Earle of Vlſter, betweene the New-towne and Cragfergus in C » Vlſter was traiterouſly (the more pitty) ſlaine by his owne company, in the twentieth » yeere of his age and the ſixt day of the Moneth Iune, Robert the ſonne of Mauriton
» Maundevil was he that gave him his firſt wound. Upon the hearing of which rumors
» the Earles wife being then in the parts of Vlſter with her daughter and heire preſently » embarked and went over into England. After whoſe murdering, Iohn Lord Darcy
» Lord chiefe juſtice of Ireland, to revenge the Earles death, by adviſe of all the States
» of the land aſſembled in the ſaid Parliament, forthwith with his armie tooke his jour» ney, and by ſhip arrived at Cragfergus upon the firſt day of Iuly. Now the people of » the Country rejoycing at the Lord juſtice his comming, and thereby taking hart » unto them againſt the murderers of the ſaid Earle of Vlſter, with one aſſent roſe up to D
» reuenge the killing of him, and in a pitched field obtained victory : Some they tooke » priſoners, others they put to the ſword. The things thus diſpatched the ſaid juſtice
» with his ſaid armie went into Scotland leaving in his place M. Thomas Burgh Trea» ſurer at that time of Ireland.

» Item, many Nobles of the land and the Earle of Ormond with their retinew and » followers aſſembled together at the houſe of the Carmelit (Friers) in Dublin the 11.
» day of Iune, and during this ſaid Parliament, whereas they were going out of the » Court-yard of the ſaid Friers, ſodainly within the preaſſe of the people Murchard or » Moris the ſonne of Nicholas O-Tothill was there murdered. At whoſe ſodaine killing
» all the elders of the land fearing and ſuppoſing there was ſome treaſon, were ſtrucken
» with an extraordinary and ſtrange affright, and much troubled. And he that killed E
» the ſame Murchard ſtoutly eſcaped all their hands: but neither the party himſelfe nor » his name they ever knew.

» Alſo Iohn Lord Darcy returned juſtice of Ireland.

» Item, Sir Walter Bermingham, ſonne to the Lord William Bermingham is delive» red out of the caſtle of Dublin, in the moneth of February.

» More, the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earl of Deſmond by a fall off his Palfrey brake
» his legge.

» Item, it fell out to be a faire and drie Summer in ſo much as at the feaſt of Saint Pe- » ter ad vincula bread made of new Wheat was eaten and a Peck of Wheat was ſould F
» for ſixpence in Dublin.

» Alſo Sir Reimund Archdekon Knight and many others of the ſame kinred were ſlain » in Leinſter.

» MCCCXXXVII. In the Vigil of Saint Kalixt Pope, ſeven Partridges (& unknowen it is what ſpirit moved them) leaving the plaine field made way directly unto the city

of

A of Dublin, and flying moſt ſwiftly over the mercate places ſetled on the top of the Brew-houſe: belonging to the Canons of holy Trinitie in Dublin. To which ſight ſome Citizens came running, and wondered much at ſo ſtrange a prodigie. But the boyes of the citie caught two of them alive, a third they killed. And the reſt skared therewith mounting up higher tooke their ſwift flight and eſcaped into the fields, over againſt them. Now, what this accident (not heard of in the ages before) did portend, I leave to the judgement of thoſe that are cunning and skilfull.

Alſo Sir Iohn Charleton Knight and a Baron, with his wife, ſonnes, and daughters, and his whole familie came at the feaſt of Saint Calixtus Pope, as chiefe juſtice of Ireland: and of his ſonnes and houſhold ſome died.

Alſo Lord Thomas Charleton, Biſhop of Hereford & brother in the whole bloud
B unto the ſaid juſtice, came the ſame day with his brother, as Chauncellour of Ireland, together with Maiſter Iohn Rees treaſurer of Ireland, and Doctor in the Decretals, bringing with them many Welſhmen to the number of two hundred, and arrived in the haven of Dublin.

Alſo whiles Iohn Charleton was Lord juſtice and held a Parliament at Dublin, Doctor David O-Hirraghey Archbiſhop of Ardmagh being called to the Parliament, made his proviſion for houſekeeping in the Monaſterie of Saint Mary nere unto Dublin: but becauſe he would have had his Croiſyer before him, hee was impeached by the Archbiſhop and his Clerkes, and permit him they would not.

Item, the ſame yeere, died the ſame David Archbiſhop of Ardmagh: after whom
C ſucceeded Doctor Richard Fitz-Ralph Deane of Lichfield, a notable Clerke; who was borne in the towne of Dundalke.

Item, Iames Botiller the firſt Earle of Ormond departed this life the ſixth day of Ianuary, and lieth buried at Balygaveran.

MCCCXXXVIII. Lord Iohn Charleton at the inſtigation of his whole brother, to wit, Thomas Biſhop of Hereford, is by the king diſcharged of his Office, and returneth with his whole houſhold into England: and Thomas Biſhop of Hereford, is by the king ordained Cuſtos and juſtice of Ireland.

Item, Sir Euſtace Pouer, and Sir Iohn Pouer his Vnkle, are by the ſaid juſtice
D brought out of Mounſter to Dublin, and committed to priſon in the caſtle, the third day of February.

Alſo, in the parts of Ireland the froſt was ſo vehement that Aven-Liffie, the river of Dublin was ſo frozen, that very many danced and leaped upon the yce of the ſaid river, they plaied at [Foot] ball and ranne courſes there: yea they made fires of wood and of turfe upon the ſame yce, and broyled herrings thereupon. This yce laſted very many daies. And as for the ſnow alſo in the parts of Ireland that accompanied the ſame froſt a man need not ſpeake any more, ſeeing it was knowen to lie on ſuch a wonderfull depth. This hard time of weather continued from the ſecond day of December unto the tenth day of February: the like ſeaſon was never heard of E before, eſpecially in Ireland.

MCCCXXIX. All Ireland was generally up in armes. Item, an exceeding great ſlaughter there was of the Iriſh and a number of them drowned, even 1200. at the leaſt, by the meanes of the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Deſmond and the reſt of the Geraldines in the parts of Kernige.

Item, the Lord Moris Fitz-Nicolas, Lord of Kernige, was apprehended and impriſoned by the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Deſmond: and died in priſon, being put to ſtrait diet, for that he openly went out and rebelled with the ſaid Iriſh, againſt the Lord King of England, and againſt the Lord Earle.

F Item, a number of the O-Dymcies and other Iriſh were killed and drowned in the water of Barrow by the Engliſh, and the hote purſuit of the Earle of Kildare.

Alſo a great booty of cattaile of ſundry ſorts, and ſuch a booty as had not beene ſeene in the parts of Leinſter, by the ſaid Lord Thomas Biſhop of Hereford and juſtice of Ireland, and with the helpe of the Engliſh of that country was taken from the Iriſh in the parts of Odrone, in the end of February.

MCCCXL.

cc MCCCXL. The said Bishop of Hereford and justice of Ireland, being sent for by A cc the king, returned into England the tenth day of Aprill, leaving in his place
cc Frier Roger Outlawe Priour of Kylmaynon. Also this Sir Roger Lord Priour of cc Kylmainon, justice and Chauncellour of the said land died the thirteenth day of Fe-cc bruary.
cc Item, the king of England graunted by his letters patents unto Iohn Darcy the of-cc fice of Lord justice of Ireland for tearme of life.
cc MCCCXLI. Sir Iohn Moris knight came Lord justice of Ireland in the moneth of cc May, as Lieutenant unto Iohn Darcy in the foresaid land.
cc Item, this wonderous prodigie following, and such as in our age had not beene cc heard of before, hapned in the County of Leicester: where a certain waifaring man B cc as he travailed in the kings high way, found a paire of gloves fit, as he thought, for cc his owne turne: which as he drew upon his hands, forthwith in steed of a mans voice cc and speech, hee kept a strange and mervailous barking like unto a dogge: and from cc that present, the elder folke and full growen, yea and women too throughout the cc same County barked like big dogges: but the children and little ones waughed as cc small whelpes. This plague continued with some 18. daies, with other a whole cc moneth, and with some for two yeeres. Yea this foresaid contagious maladie en-cc tred also into the neighbour shires and forced the people in like maner to barke.
cc Also, the King of England revoked all those gifts and grants that by him or his fa-cc ther had beene conferred by any meanes upon any persons whatsoever in Ireland, C cc were they Liberties, lands, or other goods: for which revocation great displeasure cc and discontent arose in the land: and so the land of Ireland, was at the point to have cc beene lost for ever, out of the King of Englands hand.
cc Item, by the Kings Counsell there was ordained a generall Parliament of Ireland cc in the moneth of October. To the same Parliament Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of cc Desmond came not. Before which time, there was never knowen so notable and cc manifest a division in Ireland: betweene those that were English by birth, and cc English in bloud. The Majors besides of the Kings Cities in the same land, toge-cc ther with all the better sort of the nobility and gentry of the said land with one con-cc sent upon mature deliberation and counsell had; among other their Conclusions, D cc decreed and appointed a common Parliament at Kilkennie in November, to the uticc litie and profit both of the King and the land beforenamed: without asking any cc counsell at all of the Lord justice and the kings officers aforesaid in this behalfe.
cc Now, the Lord justice and the rest of the kings Ministers, in no wise presumed to cc come unto the same Parliament at Kilkenny. The elders therefore of the cc land aforesaid, together with Auncients and Majors of the Cities, agreed and or-cc dained as touching solemne Embassadors to be sent with all speed unto the king of cc England, about releeving the State of the land, and to complaine of his Ministers in cc Ireland, as touching their unequall and uniust regiment of the same, and that from cc thence forth they neither could not would endure the realme of Ireland to be ruled E cc by his Ministers, as it had wont to be. And particularly they make complaint of the cc foresaid Ministers by way of these Questions.
cc Imprimis, How a land full of warres could be governed by him that was unskilcc full in warre?
cc Secondly, how a Minister or Officer of the kings, should in a short time grow to so cc great wealth?
cc Thirdly, how it came to passe, that the King was never the richer for Ireland?
cc MCCCXLII. The eleuenth day of October, when the moone was eleven daies old, cc there were seene by many men at Dublin 2. Moones in the firmament well and early F cc before day. The one was according to the course of Nature in the West and appeecc red bright: the other to the quantity of a round loafe appeered in the East, casting cc but a meane and slender light.
cc MCCCXLIII. S. Thomas street in Dublin was casually burnt with fire upon the cc feast of S. Valentine Martyr.

Item,

A Item, the 13. day of Iuly, the Lord Ralph Vfford with his wife, the Counteſſe of Vlſter came Lord chiefe juſtice of Ireland : Vpon whoſe entering, the faire wether changed ſodainly into a diſtemperature of the aire, and from that time there enſued great ſtore of raine with much abundance of tempeſtuous ſtormes, untill his dying day. None of his predeceſſours in the times paſt, was (with griefe be it ſpoken) comparable unto him. For this juſticer bearing the office of juſtice-ſhip, became an oppreſſor of the people of Ireland, a robber of the goods both of Clergy and Laity, of rich and poore alike: a defrauder of many under the colour of doing good : not obſerving the rights of the church, nor keeping the Law of the Kingdome, offering wrongs to the naturall inhabitants, miniſtring juſtice to few or none, and altogether diſtruſting (ſome few onely excepted) the inborne dwellers in the land. Theſe things
B did hee ſtill, and attempted the like miſled by the counſell and perſwaſion of his wife.

Item, the ſaid juſtice, entring into Vlſter in the moneth of March through a Pas called Emerdullan, was feircely ſet upon by Mac-Carton, the which Mac-Carton verily having encountred with the ſaid juſtice, ſpoiled him of his cloathes, mony, utenſils, ſilver, plate and horſes : yea and ſlew ſome of his men. But in the end, the foreſaid juſtice with the helpe of the men of Ergale gat the victory, and entred into the parts of Vlſter.

C MCCCXLV. The ſeventh of Iune, a common Parliament was holden at Dublin unto which the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas came not.

Item, the Lord Raulph Vfford juſtice of Ireland, after the feaſt of S. Iohn Baptiſt, with the Kings Standerd raiſed (yet without the aſſent of the Elders of the land) againſt the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earl of Deſmond, marcheth forward into Mounſter, and there ſeized into the Kings hand the Earles lands: and theſe lands ſo ſeized letteth out to farme unto others for a certaine yeerely rent, to be carried unto the King.

Item, the ſaid juſtice being in the parts of Mounſter delivered unto Sir William Burton Knight two writs: the one whereof, the ſaid William ſhould deliver unto the Lord Moris Fitz-Thamas Earle of Kildare: The contents of which was this, That up-
D on paine of forfaiting all his lands, he ſhould with all ſpeed repaire unto him to aid the King and him, with a ſtrong power: Now in the other writ conteined it was, that the ſaid Sir William ſhould apprehend the ſaid Earle of Kildare, and ſo apprehended commit him to priſon. But Sir William ſeeing that this could not poſſibly be brought about and effected accordingly by himſelfe, with coulorable words framed for the nonce perſwaded the ſaid Earle, whiles he was preparing himſelfe with his army, and levying a powre unto the foreſaid juſtice, that before his departure out of the Country, he ſhould repaire unto the Kings Counſell at Dublin, and that by the unanimity and joint counſell of the ſame ſo deale as to provide for the ſafe keeping of his owne lands in his abſence : And if after that any hurt ſhould befall unto his lands
E whiles he was abſent, it would be imputed unto the Kings Counſell and not to him. The Earle therefore giving credit unto the Knights words, and thinking of no treacherous practiſe in this behalfe diſpoſed and addreſſed himſelfe to come unto Dublin. When he was come altogither ignorant of any treachery toward, whiles himſelfe ſat in conſultation with others of the Kings counſell in the Exchequer-court, ſodainly he was by the ſaid Sir William betraied, attached or arreſted and apprehended, and brought to the caſtle of the ſaid city and there clapt up in priſon.

Item, the ſaid juſtice entred with his army the parts of O-Comill in Mounſter, and by a treacherous deviſe taketh two caſtles of the Earle of Deſmonds, to wit, the ca-
I ſtle of Ynyskiſty and the caſtle of the Iland, in which caſtle of the Iland, thus taken, the knights being within the ſame caſtle, namely Sir Euſtac le Pore, Sir William Graunt, and Sir Iohn Cotterell, were firſt drawen and afterward in October openly hanged untill they were dead.

Alſo the ſaid Earle of Deſmond with ſome other of his Knights, were by the ſaid juſtice baniſhed. The foreſaid juſtice having atcheived theſe exploits in Mounſter, returned returned in the Moneth of November with his company unto his wife then great A with child, remaining at Kylmaynon, which is neere to Dublin: over and beſides thoſe things which had beene done againſt the Laity by inditing and empriſoning ſome of them, & turning them out of their goods, he alſo cauſed the eccleſiaſticall perſons as well Prieſts as Clarks, to be endited, and ſtanding endited, attached and impriſoned them, and fetched no ſmall ſummes of mony out of their purſes.

Item, as touching the grants and demiſes of their lands, to wit, whom before he had deprived of their lands he beſtowed the ſame upon divers tenants (as hath beene ſaid) as alſo the very writings concerning thoſe grants, ſo ſealed as they were by him and with the Kings ſeale, he revoked, tooke the ſame from them, cancelled, defaced B and wholly anulled them.

Item, all the mainpernours of the ſaid Earle of Deſmond, in number twenty ſix as well Earles, as Barons, Knights and others of the Country, whoſe names be theſe,
To wit, Lord William Burk Earle of Vlſter, Lord Iames Botiller Earle of Ormond, Sir Richard Tuit Knight, Sir Euſtac Le Poer Knight, Sir Gerald De Rochfort Knight, Sir Iohn Fitz-Robert Poer Knight, Sir Robert Barry Knight, Sir Moris Fitz-Gerald
Knight, Sir Iohn Welleſley Knight, Sir Walter Lenſaunt Knight, Sir Roger De La Rokell
Knight, Sir Henry Traharn Knight, Sir Roger Pover Knight, Sir Iohn Lenſaunt Knight, Sir Roger Pover Knight, Sir Matthew Fitz-Henry Knight, Sir Richard Wallis Knight, Sir Edward Burk Knight; The ſonne of the Earle of Vlſter, David Barry, William Fitz-Gerald, Fulke Aſh, Robert Fitz-Moris, Henry Barkley, Iohn Fitz-George Roch, C and Thomas De Lees de Burgh: their owne travailes and proper expenſes which ſome of them with the ſaid juſtice in his war had beene at, and in purſuing the ſaid Earle of Deſmond, notwithſtanding; he by definitive ſentence deprived of their lands and diſinherited, and awarded their bodies to the Kings pleaſure, excepting foure perſons onely of all the forſaid ſureties whoſe names be theſe, William Burk Earle of Vlſter, Iames Botiller Earle of Ormond, &c.

MCCCXLVI. Upon Palme-ſunday, which fell out to be the ninth day of April, the above named Lord Raulph Vfford juſtice of Ireland went the way of all fleſh. For whoſe death his owne dependants together with his wife ſorrowed not a little: for whoſe death alſo the loyall ſubjects of Ireland rejoice no leſſe: the Clergy and peo- D ple both of the land, for joy of his departure out of this life with merry harts doe leap, and celebrate a ſolemne feaſt of Eaſter. At whoſe death, the flouds ceaſed, and the diſtemperature of the aire had an end, and in one word, the common ſort truly and hartily praiſe the onely ſonne of God. Well, when this juſtice now dead, was once faſt folded within a ſheet and Coffin of lead: the foreſaid Counteſſe (with his trea-ſure not worthy to be beſtowed among ſuch holy reliques) in horrible greefe of heart conveied his bowels over into England there to be enterred.

And againe, in the Moneth of May, and on the ſecond day of the ſame Moneth, behold a prodigious wonder ſent, no doubt, miraculouſly from God above: For lo, ſhe that before, at her comming entred the City of Dublin ſo glorioufly with the E Kings armes and enſignes, attended upon with a number of ſouldiers in her guard and traine along the ſtreets of the ſaid City, and ſo from that time forward (a ſmal while though it were) living royally with her friends about her, like a Queene in the Iland of Ireland: now at her going forth of the ſame city privily by a poſterne-gate of the Caſtle, to avoid the clamour of the common people calling upon her for debts, in her retyre homeward to her owne country departed in diſgrace, ſad and mournfull with the dolefull badges of death, ſorrow and heavineſſe.

Item, after the death of the ſaid juſtice of Ireland, the Lord Roger Darcy with the aſſent of the Kings Miniſters and others of the ſame land, is placed in the Office of ju- F ſtice for the time.

Alſo the Caſtles of Ley and Kylmehede, are by the Iriſh taken and burnt in the mo-neth of April.

Item, Lord Iohn Moris, commeth Chiefe juſtice of Ireland the fifteenth day of May.

Alſo

A Alſo the Iriſh of Uliſter gaue a great overthrow unto the Engliſh of Urgale, wherin were ſlaine three hundred at the leaſt, in the moneth of Iune. Alſo, the ſaid Lord John Morus juſtice of Ireland, is diſcharged by the king of England, from that office of juſticeſhip; and the Lord Walter Bermingham ſet in the ſame Office by the foreſaid king: and a little after the foreſaid ſlaughter committed, entreth with Commiſſion into Ireland in the moneth of Iune.

Item, unto the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Deſmond the maintenance of peace for a certaine time is granted by the king of England. Which being granted, upon the Vigill of the exaltation of the holy Croſſe, hee together with his wife and
B two ſons take ſea at the haven of Yoghall and croſſeth over into England, where he followeth the law hard, and requireth inſtantly to have juſtice for the wrongs done unto him by the Raulph Ufford late Lord juſtice of Ireland above named.

Item, unto the ſaid Earle, by commandement and order from the Lord king of England, there are granted from his entrance into England twenty ſhillings a day, and ſo day by day ſtill is allowed for his expenſes.

Alſo, the Lord Walter Bermingham juſtice of Ireland, and the Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas, Earle of Kildare roſe up in armes againſt O-Merda and his complices, who burnt the Caſtle of Ley and Kilmehed: and they with their forces valiantly ſet upon and invade him and his complices, ſpoiling, killing and burning, in ſo much as the
C ſaid O-Morda and his complices (although at the firſt they had manfully & reſolutely made reſiſtance there with many thouſands of the Iriſh) after many wounds and a great ſlaughter committed, were conſtrained in the end to yeeld; and ſo they ſubmitted to the kings grace and mercy, and betake themſelves full and whole unto the ſaid Earles devotion.

MCCCXLVII. The Earle of Kildare with his Barons and knights goeth unto the king of England in the moneth of May, to aid him lying then at the ſiege of Caleys.

Alſo the towne of Caleys was by the inhabitants upon the fourth day of Iune rendred up into the king of Englands hands.

D Item Walter Bonevile, William Calfe, William Weleſley, and many other noble gentlemen and valiant knights, as well of England as of Ireland died of the ſickneſſe in Caleys.

Alſo, Mac-Murgh, to wit, Donald Mac-Murgh the ſonne of Donald Art Mac-Murgh, king of Leinſter upon the fifth day of Iune is treacherouſly ſlaine by his owne people.

More, Moris Fitz-Thomas, Earle of Kildare is by the king of England made knight.

Alſo the towne called Monaghan, with all the territorie adjoining, is by the Iriſh burnt on the feaſt day of S. Stephen Martyr.

E Item, Dame Ioaue Fitz-Leques, ſometime wife to the Lord Simon Genevile departed this life, and is buried in the Covent Church of the Friers Preachers at Trym, the ſecond day of Aprill.

MCCCXLVIII. And in the 22. yeere of King Edward the third, reigned the firſt peſtilence, and moſt of all in Ireland, which had begunne afore in other Countries.

Item, in this yeere, Walter Lord Bermingham Lord juſtice of Ireland came into England and left Iohn Archer Prior of Kylmainon his Lieutenant in his roome. And he returneth againe the ſame yeere juſtice as before: and the King conferred upon the ſame Walter, the Baronie of Kenlys which is in Oſſerie, becauſe hee led a great
F armie againſt the Earle of Deſmond, with Raulfe Ufford, as before is ſaid: which Baronie belonged in times paſt unto the Lord Euſtace Power, who was attainted and hanged at the Caſtle of the Iſle.

MCCCXLIX. Lord Walter Bermingham the beſt juſtice of Ireland that ever was, gave up his office of juſticeſhip; after whom ſucceeded the Lord Carew Knight and Baron both.

MCCCL.

cc MCCCL. And in the 25. yeere of the foresaid King Edward, Sir Thomas Rokesby A cc Knight was made Lord justice of Ireland.
cc Item, Sir Walter Bermingham Knight Lord Birmingham, that right good justice
cc sometimes of Ireland died in the Even of Saint Margaret Virgin in England.
cc MCCCLI. Kenwrick Sherman sometime Major of the Citie of Dublin died, and cc was buried under the Belfray of the Preaching Friers of the same City: which Bel-cc fray and Steeple himselfe erected, and glazed a window at the head of the Quire, cc and caused the rouse of the Church to be made with many more good deedes. In cc the same Covent he departed I say the sixt day of March: and at his end he made his cc will or Testament amounting to the valew of three thousand markes: and bequeacc thed many good Legacies unto the Priests of the church, both religious and secular, B cc that were within twenty miles about the City.
cc MCCCLII. Sir Robert Savage Knight began in Vlster to build new Castles in di-cc vers places and upon his owne Manours: who while he was a building said unto his cc sonne and heire Sir Henry Savage, let vs make strong walles about us, least happily
cc the Irish come and take away our place, destroy our kinred, and people and so we cc shall be reproched of all Nations: Then answered his sonne, where ever there shalbe cc valiant men, there is a Castle and Fortresse too, according to that saying: The Sons
cc encamped, that is to say valiant men are ordeined for war; and therefore will I be acc mong such hardy men, and so shall I be in a Castle: and therewith said in his vulgar
cc speech, A Castle of Bones is better than a Castle of Stones: Then his father in a fume C cc and chafe gave over his worke, and swore an oath that he would never build with cc stone and morter; but keepe a good house, and a very great family and retinew of ser-cc vants about him: but he propheſied withall, that heereafter his sonnes and posterity cc should grieve and waile for it: which indeed came to passe: for the Irish destroyed all cc that country for default of Castles.
cc MCCCLV. And in the thirty yeere of the same King, Sir Thomas Rokesby Knight cc went out of his office of justice the six and twenty day of July: after whom succeecc ded Moris Fitz-Thomas Earle of Desmond, and continued in the office untill his cc death.
cc Item, upon the day of Saint Paules conversion, the same Lord Moris Fitz-Thomas D
cc died justice of Ireland in the Castle of Dublin, not without great sorrow of his friends
cc and kinsfolke, and no lesse feare and trembling of all other Irish that loved peace.
cc First, he was buried in the quire of the Preaching Friers of Dublin: and at last enter-cc red in the Covent Church of the Friers Preachers of Traly. This man was a rightecc ous justicer, in that he stucke not to hange up those of his owne bloud for theft and cc rapine, and misdemeanours, even as soone as strangers: and chasticed the Irish cc very well.
cc MCCCLVI. And in the one and thirty yeere of the foresaid King, Sir Thomas cc Rokesby was made the second time justice of Ireland, who tamed the Irish very well cc and paied as well for the victuals he tooke, saying, I will eat and drinke out of Treen E cc vessels, and yet pay both gold and silver for my food and apparel, yea and for my pen-cc sioners about me.
cc The same yeere died that Sir Thomas, justice of Ireland, within the Castle of cc Kilka.
cc MCCCLVII. Also in the two and thirty yeere of the same Kings reigne, Sir Al-cc marick de Saint Amand, was made chiefe justice of Ireland, and entred into it.
cc At this very time beganne a great controversie, betweene Maister Richard Fitz- cc Ralfe Archbishop of Armagh, and the foure Orders of the begging Friers: but in cc the end the Friers got the maistry, and by the Popes meanes caused the Archbishop F cc of Armagh to hold his peace.
cc MCCCLVIII. In the 33. yeere of the same King Sir Almarick Sir Amand chiefe cc justice of Ireland passed over into England.
cc MCCCLIX. In the 34. yeere of the same king Iames Botiller Earle of Ormond was cc made chiefe justice of Ireland.

Item,

A Item, the Lady Ioan Burke Counteſſe of Kildare departed this life on Saint Georges day: and was buried in the Church of the Friers Minors of Kildare, neere unto her husband, the Lord Thomas Fitz-Iohn, Earle of Kildare.

MCCCLX. And in the 35. of the foreſaid King, died Maiſter Richard Fitz-Ralfe Archbiſhop of Armagh in Hanault the ſixteenth day of December: whoſe bones were conveied into Ireland by the reverend father Stephen Biſhop of Meth to be beſtowed in Saint Nicolas Church at Dundalke, where he was borne: But doubted it is whether they were his bones or ſome other mans.

Jtem, Sir Robert Sauage a doughty knight dwelling in Ulſter departed this life: who with a few Engliſhmen ſlew of the Iriſh three thouſand neere unto Antrim: but be-
B fore that he went forth to that battaile, hee tooke order that there ſhould be given unto every Engliſhman one good draught or Pot of wine or ale, whereof hee had a number of hogſheads and barels full: and the reſt he ſaved againſt the comming of his friends: he cauſed alſo to be killed ſheepe, oxen, tame foule crammed fat, wild foule, and for veniſon red Deere: that they might be dreſſed and made ready for ſuch as returned winners out of the field, whoſoever they were. And he was wont to ſay, a ſhame it were, if gueſts ſhould come and not find what to eate and drinke. But when it pleaſed God to give the Engliſh victorie, he invited them all to ſupper,
C and they rejoiced with thankſgiving: and himſelfe ſaid, I give God thankes: For better it is thus to keepe it than to let it runne forth upon the ground, as ſome gave me counſell. Buried he was in the covent Church of the Preaching Friers of Conlrath, neere to the river of Banne.

Alſo, the Earle of Ormund Lord juſtice of Ireland entred England: in whoſe place Moris Fitz-Thomas, Earle of Kildare, was made Lord juſtice of Ireland, by this Charter and Commiſſion as appeereth Omnibus ad quos &c. that is, To all whom theſe letters ſhall come unto Greeting: know yee that we have committed to our ſweet and faithfull ſubject, Moris Earle of Kildare, the office of our L. juſtice of our land of Ireland: and our land of Ireland with the Caſtle and all pertenances thereto, to keep and governe ſo long as it ſhall pleaſe us: and to receive at our Exchequer in Dublin,
D yeerely, ſo long as he ſhall remaine in that office, fiue hundred pounds: for which he ſhall keepe that office and land, and he ſhall be himſelfe one of the twenty men in armes (whom he ſhall finde) with as many horſes armed continually, during our foreſaide commiſſion. In witneſſe whereof &c. Given by the hands of our beloved in Chriſt, Frier Thomas Burgey Prior of the Hoſpitall of S. Iohn of Ieruſalem in Ireland, our Chancellour of Ireland: at Dublin the thirtieth day of March, and of our reigne the thirty fiue yeere. Alſo Iames Botiller Earle of Ormond came againe out of England Lord juſtice of Ireland, as before, unto whom the Earle of Kildare reſigned up the office of juſticeſhip.

MCCCLXI. Leonell, Earle of Ulſter, in right of his wives inheritance, and being
E the kings ſonne of England, came into Ireland as the kings Lieutenant, and arrived at Dublin the eigth day [of September] being the feaſt of the bleſſed Virgins nativitie, bringing his ſecond wife Elizabeth, daughter and heire of the Lord William Burke Earle of Ulſter.

In the ſame yeere was the ſecond peſtilence. There died in England Henrie Duke of Lancaſter, the Earle of March, the Earle of Northamton.

Alſo on the ſixth day of Ianuary, Mons Doncref a Citizen of Dublin was buried in the Churchyard of the Friers Preachers of the ſame Citie: unto which covent or brotherhood, he gave forty pounds toward the glazing of their Church.

Item, there departed out of this life the Lady Ioane Fleming, wife to the Lord
F Geffrey Trevers, and the Lady Margaret Bermingham wife to the Lord Robert Preſton, on the Vigill of Saint Margaret, and were buried in the covent Church of the preaching Friers of Tredagh.

Alſo, the Lord Walter Bermingham the younger, died on Saint Laurence day, who diuided his inheritance betweene his ſiſters, the one part thereof the foreſaid Preſton had for his ſhare.

cc Item, the foresaid Lord Leonell, after hee was entred into Ireland and had rested A cc some few dayes, made warre upon O-Brynne, and proclaimed throughout his armie, cc that no man borne in Ireland should come neere unto his campe: and an hundred cc of his owne Pensioners were slaine. Leonell seeing this, forthwith reduced the whole cc people as well of England as of Ireland into one, and so hee prospered: and strucke
cc many battailes round about in all places with the Irish, by the helpe of God and the cc people of Ireland. Hee made also many knights of English and Irish: and among cc them, Robert Preston, Robert Holiwood, Thomas Talbot, Walter Cusacke, Iames de cc La Hide, Iohn Ash or de Fraxius, Patricke, and Robert Ash, or de Fraxius, and many cc besides.
cc Also, he removed the Exchequer from Dublin to Carlagh, and gave fiue hundred B cc pounds to the walling of that towne.
cc Item, on the feast of Saint Maur Abbat, there rose a mighty wind, that shooke and cc overthrew Pinnacles, Batlements, Chimneys, and other things higher than the rest, cc trees without number, divers steeples and namely the Steple of the Preaching cc Friers.
cc MCCCLXII. Also, in the 36. yeere of the same king, the Church of Saint Patricke cc in Dublin through negligence was set on fire and burnt, the eight of Aprill.
cc MCCCLXIIII. And in the 38. yere of the foresaid King, the lord Leonell Earle of cc Ulster entred England the 22. of Aprill, and left his Deputy-justice of Ireland, the cc Earle of Ormond: and the same Leonell Duke of Clarence returned the eight of C cc December.
cc MCCCLXV. Also in the 39. yeere of the said king, the same Leonell Duke of Clacc rence passed over into England, leaving behind him Sir Thomas Dale knight his De-cc puty-Custos, and Iustice of Ireland.
cc MCCCLXVII. Great warre beganne betweene the Berminghams of Carbry and cc the men of Meth, because many robberies by the foresaid were committed in Meth.
cc Then Sir Robert Preston knight, and Lord chiefe Baron of the Exchequer set a strong cc guard in the castle of Carbry, and laid forth a great deale of money, against the kings cc enemies, to defend his owne right, in regard of his wife.
cc Item, Gerald Fitz-Moris Earle of Desmond was made Lord justice of Ireland.
cc MCCCLXVIII. And in the 42. yeere of the same king, in Carbry, after a certaine D cc Parliament ended betweene the Irish and English, there were taken prisoners, Frier cc Thomas Burley Prior of Kylmaynon, the kings Chauncellour in Ireland, Iohn Fitz- cc Reicher Sheriffe of Meth, Sir Robert Tirell Baron of Castle-knoke with many besides, cc by the Berminghams and others of Carbry. Then Iames Bermingham who had cc beene kept in the castle of Trim in yron manacles and fetters as a traytour, was deli-cc vered out of prison, in exchange for the foresaid Chancellour: the other were put to cc their ransomes.
cc Item, the Church of Saint Maries in Trim was burnt with the fire of the same Mo-cc nasterie.
cc Also in the Vigill of Saint Luke the Euangelist, the Lord Leonell Duke of Clarence E cc died at Albe in Pyemont. First he was buried in the Citie of Papie, hard by Saint cc Augustin the Doctor: and afterward enterred at Clare in the covent Church of Au- cc stin Friers, in England.
cc MCCCLXIX. And in the 43. yeere of the foresaid king, Sir William Windesore cc knight a doughty man in armes and courageous, came as the kings Lieutenant into cc Ireland the twelfth day of Iuly: unto whom gave place in the Office of justice-ship, cc Gerald Fitz-Moris Earle of Desmond.
cc MCCCLXX. And in the 44. yeere of the same king, beganne the third pestilence cc and the greatest in Ireland, in which died many noble men and gentlemen, Citizens F cc also, and children innumerable.
cc The same yeere, Gerald Fitz-Moris Earle of Desmond, the Lord Iohn Nicolas and cc the Lord Thomas Fitz-Iohn and many other noble persons were taken prisoners upon cc the sixth of Iuly, neere unto the Monastery of Maio, in the County of Limericke by

O-Breen

A O-Breen and Mac-Comar of Thomond; and many wete ſlaine: in regard of which occurrent, the ſaid lieutenant went over to Limericke to the defenſe of Mounſter, leaving the warres againſt the O-Tothiles and the reſt in Leinſter.

In this yeere died, lord Robert Terel Baron of caſtle Knocke, the lady Scolaſtica his wife, and their ſonne and heire: by reaſon whereof, Ioan Terel and Maude Terel, ſiſters of the ſaid Robert parted the inheritance betweene themſelues.

Item, there departed this life, lord Simon Fleming Baron of Slane, lord Iohn Cuſak Baron of Colmolyn; and Iohn Tailour ſometime Major of Dublin, a rich and mighty monied man.

B That which followeth was copied out of the Manuſcript Chronicles of Henry Marleburgh.

MCCCLXXII. Sir Robert Aſheton came lord juſtice of Ireland.

MCCCLXXIII. Great warring there was betweene the Engliſh of Meth, and O-Ferdle, in which warre many of both ſides were ſlaine.

Item, in May, lord Iohn Huſſe Baron of Galtrim, Iohn Fitz-Richard Sheriff of Meth, and William Dalton, in Kynaleagh were killed by the Iriſh.

MCCCLXXV. Thomas archbiſhop of Dublin died: and in the ſame yeere was C Robert of Wickford conſecrated archbiſhop of Dublin.

MCCCLXXXI. There departed this life Edmund Mortimer the kings lieutenant in Ireland, earle of March and Ulſter, at Cork.

MCCCLXXXIII. There was a great peſtilence in Ireland.

MCCCLXXXV. The bridge of the city of Dublin fell downe.

MCCCXC. Robert Wickford archbiſhop of Dublin died.

The ſame yeere Robert Waldeby archbiſhop of Dublin, of the order of Auſten friers, was tranſlated.

MCCCXCVII. There hapned the tranſlation and death of frier Richard Northalis archbiſhop of Dublin, one of the Carmelits order.

D Alſo in the ſame yeere Thomas Crauley was conſecrated archbiſhop of Dublin.

The ſame yeere the lord Thomas Burgh and the lord Walter Bermingham ſlew ſix hundred of the Iriſh and their captaine Mac-Con.

Item, Roger earle of March, lieutenant of Ireland waſted the country of O-Bryn with the helpe of the earle of Ormond: and dubbed there ſeven knights, to wit, Chriſtopher Preſon, Iohn Bedeleu, Edmund Loundris, Iohn Loundris, William Nugent, Walter de la Hyde and Robert Cadell, at the forcing and winning of a moſt ſtrong Manor houſe of the ſaid O-Bryn.

MCCCXCVIII. Upon the Aſcenſion day of our lord; the Tothills ſlew forty Engliſh; among whom, Iohn Fitz-William, Thomas Talbot, and Thomas Comyn were kil-
E led, which was a pitifull miſhap.

In the ſame yeere on Saint Margarets day, Roger earle of March the kings lieutenant, was with many others ſlaine at Kenlys in Leinſter, O-Bryn and other Iriſh of Leinſter, in whoſe place and office Roger Grey is choſen juſtice.

In the ſame yeere upon the feaſt of Saint Marke Pope and Confeſſor, came to Dublin the noble duke of Sutherey, as the kings lieutenant in Ireland: with whom at the ſame time arrived Maiſter Thomas Crauley, archbiſhop of Dublin.

MCCCXCIX. And in the 23. yeere of king Richard, upon Sunday which fel out to be the morrow after Saint Petronill or Pernill the Virgins day, the ſame glorious king Richard arrived at Waterford with two hundred ſaile.

F Item, the ſixth day of the ſame weeke, at Ford in Kenlys within the county of Kildare, were ſlaine of the Iriſh two hundred, by Ienicho and other Engliſh: and the morrow after the Dublinians made a rode into the country of O-Bryn & ſlew of the Iriſh 33. and foure ſcore men and women with their little children they tooke priſoners.

The ſame yeere, the ſaid king came to Dublin the fourth daie before the Calends of Julie: where hee heard rumours of Henrie the duke of Lancaſter his

" his comming into England: wherupon himself passed over with speed into England. A
" MCCCC. In the first yeere of King Henry the fourth, at Whitsontide, the constable " of Dublin castle and many others encountred the Scots at sea before Stranford in " Vlster: whereupon fell out a lamentable accident, for that many of the English were
" slaine and drowned there.
" MCCCCI. In the second yeere of King Henry the fourth, Sir John Stanley the " K. Lieutenant passed over into England in the month of May, leaving in his roome,
" Sir William Stanley.
" In the same yeere, upon the Vigil of Saint Bartholomew, there entred into Jre-
" land Stephan Scroope, as deputy to the lord Thomas of Lancaster, the Kings lieu- B
" tenant in Ireland.
" The same yeere on the day of Saint Brice Bishop and confessor, the lord Thomas " of Lancaster the Kings sonne arrived at Dublin, lieutenant of Ireland.
" MCCCCII. On the fifth of July, was the church of the friers preacher at Dublin de" dicated by the archbishop of Dublin: and the same day John Drake the Maior of " Dublin, with the citizens and men of the counrry, slew in battaile of the Irish, neere
" unto Bree, 493. and were victorious over the Irish.
" The same yeere in the month of September, a parliament was holden at Dublin:
" at which time in Uriel, Sir Bartholomew Verdon, Iames White, Stephen Gernon,
" and their complices, slew John Dowdal Sheriff of Louth.
" MCCCCIII. In the fourth yeere of king Henry (the fourth) and in the moneth of C
" of May, was killed Sir Walter Beterley a valiant knight, then Sheriffe there and with " him thirty men.
" In the same yeere about the feast of Saint Martin, there passed over into England
" Thomas the kings sonne, leaving Stephen Scroop his Deputy, who also himselfe up-
" on the first day of lent, returned into England: and then the lords of the land chose
" the earle of Ormond lord justice of Ireland.
" MCCCCIIII. In the fifth yeere of King Henry died Iohn Cowlton archbishop of " Armagh the fifth of May; whom Nicholas Fleming succeeded. The same yeere
" on Saint Vitalis day, began a parliament at Dublin before the earle of Ormond then D
" lord justice of Ireland: wherein were confirmed the Statutes of Kilkenny and of Dub- " lin: also the charter for Ireland.
" In the same yeere, Patricke Savag in Vlster was treacherously slaine by Mac-Kil-
" mori: and Richard his brother given for an hostage, who likewise was murdred in pri" son, after he had paied two hundred Markes.
" MCCCCV. In the sixth yeere of king Henry, and in the month of May, were taken " three Scotish Galions or Barkes, two at Green-castle, and one at Dalkay, with the " captaine Thomas Mac-Golagh.
" The same yeere, the merchants of Tredaght entred Scotland, tooke pleadges and " preies.
" The same yeere, Stephen Scroope crossed the seas into England, leaving the earle E
" of Ormond lord justice of Ireland.
" And the same yeere, in the month of June, the Dublinians entred Scotland at Saint
" Ninians, and there behaved themselues manfully: then landed they in Wales and
" did much hurt to the Welshmen there: yea and carried a way the shrine of Saint
" Cubie unto the church of the Holy Trinity in Dublin.
" Also, the same yeere on the Vigill of the blessed virgin, died James Botiller earle of " Ormond whiles he was lord justice (to the griefe of many) at Baligauran: unto whom
" there succeeded in the office of lord justice, Gerald earle of Kildare.
" MCCCCVI. And in the seventh yeere of King Henry, on Corpus Christi day the Dub-
" linians with the people of the Country about them manfully overcame the Irish, F
" and killed some of them: they tooke three ensignes, and carried away divers of their " heads to Dublin.
" The same yeere, the Prior of Conall fought valiantly in the plaine of Kildare and vanquished two hundred Irish well armed, killing some and putting others

to

A to flight: there were in the Priors company not aboue twenty Englifh: and thus God regardeth thofe that repofe truft in him.

In the fame yeere, after the feaft of Saint Michael, Sir Scroop Deputy juftice under the lord Thomas the kings fonne lieutenant of Ireland, entred into Ireland.

The fame yeere died Pope Innocentius the feventh, after whom fucceeded Pope Gregory.

The fame yeere, beganne a Parliament at Dublin on Saint Hilaries day, which ended at Trym in Lent: and Meiler Bermingham flew Cathol O-Conghir in the end of February, and Sir Gefferey Vaulx a noble knight in the County of Carlagh died.

MCCCCVII. A certaine Iriſh man, a moſt falſe villaine, named Mac-Adam Mac-
B Gilmori (who cauſed fortie churches to bee deſtroied) one that was never chriſtened, and therefore termed Corbi, tooke Patricke Savage priſoner, and received of him for his ranſome two thouſand markes, and yet killed him afterwards with his brother Richard.

The ſame yeere, in the feaſt of the exaltation of the Holy Croſſe, Stephen Scroop, Deputy under Thomas the kings ſonne lieutenant of Ireland, accompanied with the earles of Ormond and Deſmond, and the Prior of Kylmaynon with many out of Meth, ſet forth from Dublin: and in hoſtile manner invaded the land of Mac-Murgh: where the Iriſh had the better of the field in the forepart of the day: but afterwards they were manfully by the ſaid captaines repulſed: where O-Nolam with his ſonne and others were taken priſoners. But hearing then and there, that the C Burkeins and O-Keroll in the county of Kilkenny had for two daies together done much miſcheife, ſodainely the ſaid captaines rode in all haſt with bridle on horſe neck unto the towne of Callan, and there meeting with the ſaid enemies manfully put them to flight. O-Keroll, and to the number of eight hundred they killed in the place.

The ſame yeere Stephen Scroop ſailed over into England, and Iames Butler earle of Ormond was by the country choſen lord juſtice of Ireland.

MCCCCVIII. The ſaid L. juſtice held a Parliament at Dublin, in which Parliament were confirmed the Statutes of Kilkenny and of Dublin: and a Charter granted under the great ſeale of England, againſt Purveyouris.

D The ſame yeere, the morrow after S. Peters day ad Vincula, the Lord Thomas of Lancaſter the Kings ſonne, arrived as Lievtenant of Ireland at Cartingford, and in the weeke following came to Dublin: and arreſted the Earle of Kildare as he came unto him, with three of his houſe: and all his goods he loſt by the ſervanrs of the ſaid Lieutenant: and in the Caſtle of Dublin he impriſoned him, untill he made paiment of 500. marks for a fine.

The ſame yeere on Saint Marcellus day, died the Lord Stephen Scroop at Triſtell Dermot.

E The ſame yeere, the ſaid Thomas of Lancaſter was wounded at Kylmainok and hardly eſcaped death: and afterwards cauſed Proclamation to be made, that whoſoever by his tennures owed ſervice to the King ſhould appeare at Roſſe. And after S. Hillaries feaſt, he held a Parliament at Kilkenny, for to have a Tallage granted. And afterwards upon the third day before the Ides of March, he paſſed over into England, leaving the Priour of Kylmainon his Deputy in Ireland.

In this yeere, Hugh Mac-Gilmory was ſlaine at Cragfergus within the Oratory or Church of the Friers Minors, which Church hee before had deſtroyed, and broken the glaſſe windowes thereof for to haue the iron barres therin, at which his enemies,
F to wit, the Savages, entred.

MCCCCIX. In the tenth yeere of king Henry and in the month of June Ianico of Artoys with the Engliſh ſlew foureſcore of the Iriſh in Vlſter.

MCCCCX. On the thirteenth of June began a Parliament at Dublin and continued three weekes, the Prior of Kylmainon ſitting as lord juſtice.

The ſame yeere on the tenth day of July the ſame juſtice beganne the caſtle of Mibracly in O-Feroll, and built De la Mare: and a great dearth there was of corne. A

In the ſame yeere, the juſtice entred the land of O Bryn with a thouſand and fiue hundred kernes: of whom eight hundred departed unto the Iriſh: and had not the Dublinians beene there, there would haue beene wailing and many a woe: and yet Iohn Derpatrick loſt his life there.

MCCCCXII. About feaſt of Tiburce and Valerian, O-Conghir did much harme to the Iriſh in Meth, and tooke priſoner 160. men.

The ſame yeere O Doles a knight, and Thomas Fitz-Moris Sheriff of Limerik killed one another.

In the ſame yeere, the ninth of June, died Robert Monteyn Biſhop of Meth, after whom ſucceeded Edward Dandiſey ſometime Archdeacon of Cornwall. B

MCCCCXIII. The ſeventh of October, there landed in Ireland at Cloncarſe, Iohn Stanley the kings Lieutenant in Ireland, who died the ſixth of January in Atterith.

The ſame yeere after the death of Iohn Stanley lord Lieutenant, Thomas Crauley archbiſhop of Dublin was choſen on the eleventh day of februarie lord juſtice of Ireland. A parliament eftſones began at Dublin the morrow after Saint Matthias the Apoſtles day & laſted fifteene daies: during which time, the Iriſh fell to burning in divers places as they had done often in Parliament times; wherefore a tallage was demanded but not granted.

MCCCCXIIII. The Engliſh ſlew of the Iriſh, the O-Mordries and O-Dempſies nere to Kilka, even whiles the juſtice of Ireland Thomas Crauley archbiſhop of Dublin went in Proceſſion at Triſteldermot, praying with his clerks: and his ſervants with their countrymen overthrew of the Iriſh an hundred. C

Vpon the feaſt day of Saint Gordian and Saint Epimachus, a foile or diſcomfiture was given to the Engliſh of Meth, and there was ſlaine Thomas Maurevard, Baron of Scrin: and taken priſoners there were Chriſtopher Fleming, Iohn Dardys, and many others ſlaine by O-Conghir and the Iriſh.

In the vigill of Saint Martin, arrived the lord Iohn Talbot lord Furnivall, as Lieutenant of Ireland, at Dalkay.

MCCCCXV. In the month of November, died Robert Talbot a nobleman, who walled the Suburbs of Kilkenny. D

Item, after the feaſt of Al-Saints died frier Patricke Baret biſhop of Ferne, and a Canon of Kenlis, where he was buried.

MCCCCXVI. On the feaſt day of Gervaſſe and Prothaſius, the lord Furnivall had a ſonne borne at Finglas. About this time, the reverend lord Stephen Fleming archbiſhop of Armagh departed this life: unto whom ſucceeded Iohn Suanig. And at the ſame time the lord biſhop of Ardachard, frier Adam Lyns of the order of preaching friers.

Item, on Saint Laurence day, died Thomas Talbot lord of Furnivall, lately borne at Finglas, and is enterred in the Quire of the preaching friers church of Dublin, with in the covent of the ſaid preachers: a parliament was holden at Dublin, in the time E whereof the Iriſh fel upon the Engliſh and ſlew many of them, among whom Thomas Balimore of Baliquelan was ſlaine.

This Parliament laſted in that place ſixe weekes and then was removed to Trym the eleventh day of May, and there it continued eleven daies: and granted there was unto the Lieutenant a ſubſidy of foure hundred markes.

MCCCCXVII. On the even of Philip and Iacob Apoſtles, Thomas Crauley archbiſhop of Dublin paſſed over into England, and died at Farindon: hee was buried in the New colledge at Oxford: a liberall man hee had beene and an almes-giver, a great clerke, a doctor in Divinity & excellent preacher, a builder of the places wherein he dwelt, beautifull, ſumpteous, of ſanguine complexion, and tall of ſtature: ſo that F in his time it might well be ſaid unto him. Faire art thou and of a goodly preſence aboue the ſonnes of men, grace is ſeated all over thy lips for the eloquence of thy tongue. Foureſcore yeeres old he was, and for the ſpace almoſt of twenty yeeres he governed the church of Dublin peaceably.

MCCCCXVIII.

A MCCCCXVIII. The feaſt of the annuntiation of our Lady fell out to be on good Friday and ſtreight after Eaſter, the Lord Deputy ſpoiled the Tenants of Henrie Crus and Henry Bethat.

Item, at Slane, on the day of Saint Iohn, and Saint Paul, were arreſted the Earle of Kildare, Sir Chriſtopher Preſton, and Sir Iohn Bedleu, and committed to ward within the caſtle of Trym, becauſe they were deſirous to common with the Prior of Kylmaynon. The fourth of Auguſt, died Sir Mathew Huſee Baron of Galtrim: who lieth buried at the Preaching Friers in Trim.

MCCCCXIX. The eleventh of May, Edmund Brel ſometime Major of Dublin departed this life, and was buried at the Friers preachers of the ſame Citie. A-
B Counſell roiall was holden at Naas: and there a ſubſidy of 300. Markes was granted to the Lord Lieutenant.

At the ſame time died Sir Iohn Loundres. On the fifth day of the weeke falling out to be Mandie Thurſday, O-Thoill tooke 400. kine that belonged to Balimore, ſo breaking the peace againſt his oath.

The fourth of May, Mac-Morghe chiefe Captaine of his owne Sept and of all the Iriſh in Leinſter, was taken priſoner. And the ſame day Hugh Cokeſey was made knight.

The laſt day of May, the Lieutenant, the Archbiſhop of Dublin and the Major together, raſed the caſtle of Kenini.

C The morrowe after the feaſt of Proceſſus and Martinian, the Lord William Burgh and other of the Engliſh ſlew 500. of the Iriſh, and tooke O-Kelly priſoner.

On the feaſt of Mary Magdalen, the Lieutenant Iohn Talbot paſſed over into England, leaving for his Deputy the Archbiſhop of Dublin: carrying with him the curſes of divers, for that he payd little or nothing for his victuals, and was endebted unto many.

About the feaſt of Saint Laurence, divers there were that died in Normandie, and by name, Frier Thomas Botiller Prior of Kilmainon with many others.

After whom ſucceeded in the Priory; Frier Iohn Fitz-Henry. The Archbiſhop being Deputy, fell upon the Scohies, and ſlew of the Iriſh 30. neere unto Rodi-D ſton.

Item, upon the Ides of February, died Frier Iohn Fitz-Henry Prior of Kylmainon: whom ſucceeded, Frier William Fitz-Thomas, elected and confirmed the morrow after Saint Valentines day.

Alſo, the morrow after the feaſt of Saint Peter in Cathedra, the Lord Iohn Talbot lord of Furnivall yeelded the place into the hands of the Lord Richard Talbot Archbiſhop of Dublin, who afterward was choſen lord juſtice of Ireland.

MCCCCXX. Vpon the fourth day of Aprill, the Lord Iames Butler Earle of Ormond arrived at Waterford, Lieutenant of Ireland: and quickly cauſed a combat to E be fought betweene two of his couſins: of whom the one died in the field, and the other was carried forth of the place ſore hurt and lamed, unto Kilkenny. On Saint Georges feaſt day, the ſame Lieutenant, held a Counſell at Dublin, & ſummoned a Parliament there. And in the meane while hee raiſed great booties from O-Raly, Mac-Mahon, and Mac-Guyr: And the eight day of Iune beganne a Parliament at Dublin, and there were graunted unto the Lieutenant 700. markes: and that Parliament continued for 16. daies: and the ſame was prorogued unto the Monday after Saint Andrewes day: alſo in the foreſaid Parliament were caſt up the debts of the Lord Iohn Talbot late Lieutenant, which aroſe to a great ſumme.

F Alſo the morrow after Saint Michaels day, died Michaell Bodley.

On the Vigil of Saint Frauncis, there departed this life Frier Nicholas Talbot, Abbot of Saint Thomas the Martyr in Dublin. After whom ſucceeded Frier Iohn Whiting.

The morrow after the Apoſtles Simon, and Iudes day, was the caſtle of Colnolin taken by Thomas Fitz-Geffery.

Alſo

Alſo in the Vigill of S. Katherine Virgin, Botiller the ſonne and heire of the Earle of Ormond was borne. A

Item, on Monday after the feaſt of Saint Andrew the Apoſtle, the ſaid Parliament beganne at Dublin, and continued 13. daies: and granted there was to the Lieutenant there three hundred markes: and the Parliament was adjourned eſtſoones unto the Monday after Saint Ambroſe day.

Then rumors reſounded, that the Lord Thomas Fitz-Iohn Earle of Deſmond died at Pariſe on Saint Laurence feaſt day; and was buried there at the friers Preachers covent, the King of England being preſent at his funerals. After whom ſucceeded in that Seignorie Iames Fitz-Gerald his Vnkle by the fathers ſide, who had three times thruſt him out of his patrimonie: and laid an imputation upon him that hee was a prodigall ſpendthrift, and had waſted his patrimonie both in Ireland and England: and that he gave or would give lands to the Abbay of Saint Iames, at Kernisham. 1421. The Parliament beganne upon prorogation the third time at Dublin the Monday after the feaſt of Saint Ambroſe: and there certaine perſons were ordained to be ſent in meſſage to the king, as touching the redreſſe of the land, namely the Archbiſhop of Armagh and Sir Chriſtopher Preſton knight. B

At the ſame time Richard O-Hedian Biſhop of Caſſell was accuſed by Iohn Geſe Biſhop of Liſmore and Waterford, upon thirty Articles laid to his charge. After all that, he charged him, that hee made very much of the Iriſh, and loved none of the Engliſh: that he beſtowed no benefice upon any Engliſh man: and gave order likewiſe unto other Biſhops, that they ſhould not conferre the leaſt living that was upon them. C

Item, that he counterfaited the king of Englands ſeale, and the kings letters patents, that he went about to make himſelfe king of Mounſter: alſo that hee tooke a ring away from the image of Saint Patricke, which the Earle of Deſmond had offered, and beſtowed it upon an harlot of his: beſide many other enormities, which hee exhibited in writing. And the Lords and Commons were much troubled betweene theſe twaine.

Now in the ſame Parliament, there was debate betweene Adam Pay, Biſhop of Clon, and another Prelate: for that the ſaid Adam went about to unite the others Church unto his, but the other would not, and ſo they were ſent and referred unto the Court of Rome, and this Parliament laſted xv iii. daies. D

In the Nones of May there was a ſlaughter committed by O-Mordris upon the family or retinew of the Earle of Ormond, Lievtenant, neere unto the Monaſtery of Leys, where were ſlaine of the Engliſh 27. The principall parties were Purcell and Grant. Then gentlemen of good birth were taken priſoners: and 200. fled unto the foreſaid Monaſtery, and ſo were ſaved.

In the Idees of May, died Sir Iohn Bodley Knight, and Geffery Galon ſometime Major of Dublin, and was buried in the houſe of the Preaching Friers of the ſame Citie. E

About this time Mac-Mahon an Iriſhman played the diuell in Vrgal, waſting and burning where ever he went.

The ſeventh of Iune the Lievtenant entred into the country, to wit, of Leys againſt O-Mordis, and led thither a moſt puiſſant army, having the killing of his enemies for foure daies together, and untill the Jriſh promiſed all peace and quietneſſe.

Unto the feaſt of Michael the Archangel, Thomas Stanley accompanied with all the Knights and Squires of Meth and Jriel, tooke Moyle O-Downyll priſoner: and ſlew others, in the 14. yeere of king Henry the ſixth his reigne.

F

Thus far forth were continued the Annales of Ireland which came to my hands, and upon which I have beſtowed theſe few pages

A pages, to gratifie them that may delight therein. As for the nice and deintie readers who would have all writings tried to the touch of Augustus his daies, I know they can yeeld no pleasing relish to them, in regard of the harsh words and the saplesse dry stile, familiar unto that age wherein they were penned. Nevertheless, I would have those to remember,
B That History both beareth, brooketh, and requireth the Authours of all ages: Also, that they are to looke as well for reall and substantiall knowledge from some, as for the verball and literall learning from others.

C

THE SMALER ILANDS IN THE BRITISH OCEAN.

NOw will I at length way anchor and set saile out of Ireland, and launching fourth take survey of the Ilands scattered heere and there along the coasts of Britain. If I durst repose any trust in D my selfe, or if I were of any sufficiency, I would shape my course to every one. But sith it is my purpose to discover and inlighten Antiquity: such as are obscure and of lesse account I will lightly coast by: and those that carry any ancient name and reckoning above the rest, I will enter and visit, yea and make some short stay in them, that now at last in a good and happy houre they may recover their ancienty againe.

And that in this voiage I may at first set out orderly and take a streight and direct course, I will, to begin, saile out of Ireland into the Severn sea, and by the Irish sea (after I have doubled the utmost point of Scotland) follow my course down into the E Germain Ocean, and so from thence through the British sea (which extendeth as far as to Spaine) hold on my race as prosperously as I can. But I am afraide, least this my ship of Antiquity, steared by me so unskilfull a Pilot, either run and be split upon the rockes of errours, or else be overwhelmed with the waves of ignorance, yet venter I must. Τόλμα, saith Antiphilus τῶν ἀγχόρων that is, Adventure is a good Sea Captaine: and he that saileth the same voyage a second time, may happly speed much better and finish his desired course.

First and formost, because it seemeth not impertinent to my matter, I wil set down what Plutarch out of a fabulous nartation of Demetrius (who seemeth to have lived in Hadrians time) reporteth generally as touching the Ilands lying neere to Britaine.
F Demetrius made report, That most of those Ilands which coast upon Britaine, lie desert, desolate and scattering heere and there: whereof some were dedicated to the Dæmones, and Heroes: also that himselfe by commission from the Emperour, sailed toward one that was neerest of those desert Iles for to know and discouer somewhat: the which he found to have in it few inhabitants, and those he understood were reputed by the Britans sacred and Inviolable. Within a while after he was landed there, the aire and weather (as he said) became came foully troubled, many portenteous ſignes were given by terrible tempeſts, with extraordinary ſtorms, flaſhing and violent lightnings and fiery impreſſions: which after they were appeaſed, the Ilanders certified him, that ſome one of great eminency was dead. And a little after. Now he ſaid moreover, that there was a certaine Iland there wherein Saturne was by Briareus cloſed up and kept in priſon found a ſleepe (for ſleepe was the meanes to hold him captive) about whoſe perſon there were many Dæmones at his feet, that ſtood attending as ſervitours. Thus they tooke pleaſure in old time, as now alſo at this day, boldly to deviſe ſtrange wonders and tales of places farre remote in a certaine ſecure veine of lying as it were by authority. A

In the narrow ſea of Severn, there peep up firſt of all two ſmall Ilands, whereof the one, becauſe it lieth flat and with an even ground, is by us called Flatholme, in the ſame ſenſe that Planary is named Italy: the other Step-holme, becauſe it riſeth ſteepe, in the Brittiſh tongue Reoric: both of them, when the Britans bare rule, were tearmed Echni: like as in our age Holmes: for ſo the Anglo-Saxons called greene plaines encloſed within water: neither were they in ancient times famous for any thing elſe, but for that the Danes lay there at road: and for the tombe of one Gualchus, a Britan of ſingular devoutneſſe, whoſe Diſciple Barruch left his name to the Iland Barry in Wales (as an ancient monument of the church of Landaff witneſſeth) which Iland in like maner hath given name to a noble houſe of the Barrayes in Ireland B

This hath lying hard to it, the little Iland Silly upon the coaſt of the ancient Silures, of whoſe name it ſeemeth to retaine ſtill, more than a ſhadow; like as a ſmall towne over againſt it, in Glamorgan-ſhire: yet dare I not avouch it to be Silura or Inſula Silurum, the Iland that Solinus mentioneth, ſeeing there be other Ilands bearing the ſame name; yet, farre diſtant from the Silures. C

From thence we come to Caldey, in the Britiſh Imis-Pix, lying nere unto the ſhore; and to Londey farther within the ſea, over againſt Caldey, & belonging unto Devonſhire; from the promontory or cape wherof, named Hert-neſſe, it lieth 14. miles. Larger this is counted of the twaine, howbeit reported to be not much more than two miles long and one mile broad; ſo encircled with rockes and cliffes round about, that there is no avenue unto it but in one or two places. A fort or ſconſe it had: the ruins wherof, like as of Saint Helens Chappell, are yet to be ſeene. That it had beene in time paſt eared with the plough, the ridges and furrowes in it doe evidently ſhew: now all the commodity and profit that it yeeldeth doth ariſe from ſea foule, whereof it hath great ſtore. Trees it hath none but ſtinking Elders, which the Stares haunt in ſuch multitudes, that uneth for their dung there is any comming to them. But what meane I to ſtand heereupon? conſidering that Sir Thomas De la-Mere Knight (in reporting how that ſilly king Edward the ſecond, when his froward and unreaſonable wife, together with the Unruly Barons thundred out threats and denounced terrible menaces, was minded to withdraw himſelf hither, as to a place of refuge) hath in old time deſcribed it in this wiſe: Londay (ſaith he) is an Iland lying in the mouth of Severn two miles long over way, full of pleaſant paſtures: it affordeth Connies in great ſtore: Doves and ſtares (which Alexander Necham termeth Ganimedes birds) it hath continually from time to time ready to lay: it ſerveth the inhabitants beſides, with freſh water, walming abundantly out of ſprings, though it ſelfe be on all ſides compaſſed with the ſea. One way of entrance it hath into it, wherein can two men hardly goe afront together on foote: On every part beſides, the dreadfull rockes bearing out a mighty heigth, hinder all ingreſſe. But ſcarcely doe our Hiſtorians make any mention of it, ſave onely how William de Mariſco a moſt leaud and miſchievous rover in the reigne of king Henry the third, from hence ſore infeſted theſe coaſts in times paſt: and that in King Edward the third his daies it was part of the Lutterells inheritance. D E

From thence in the very bent and turning of Pembrochſhire, we meete with Greſholme, Stockholme, and Scalmey; in which is plenty of graſſe, & wild thyme groweth very freſh and pleaſant. The day was, when I thought Scalmey to have beene that SILIMNVS which Plinie in old time wrote of; but the truth hath now made me change my opinion. For, that SILIMNVS of Plinie (as the affinity of the word implieth) F

Greſholme Stockholme and Scalmey. Silimnus.

A implieth) seemes to be Ptolemee his LIMNI. That this heere is the Britans Lymen, the word it selfe (if I should say nothing) sheweth evidently, which the Englishmen by a new name have now a daies tearmed Ramsey. This lieth full against the Episcopall sea of Saint Davids, whereunto it belongeth, and was in the foregoing ages very famous for the death of one Iustinian a most holy man; who after he had withdrawne himselfe hither out of little Bretaine in Fraunce, in that age that brought forth so many Saints, and led a long time an Eremits life, wholly devoted to the service of God, being in the end slaine by a page, was registred in the roll of Martyrs. In whose life we find it oftentimes written, Lemeneia insula. Which denomination verily, together with the British name Limen, by which name it is knowen unto the B Britans themselves, checketh and taxeth his drowzinesse who maketh the Iland lying next above it to be Ptolemees Limnon: which the Britans now, name Enhly, and English Berdsey, as one would say the Isle of Birds. But that this should be it, that Ptolemee calleth EDRI, and Plinie ANDROS or ADROS (as it is in some place read) I durst more boldly guesse by the signification of the word: for, Ader in the british tongue signifieth a Byrd, and in the very same sense the Englishmen afterward called it Berdsey. As for Enhly, it is a name of a later stampe, and came by occasion of a certaine holy and devout man, who heere lived as an Eremite.

For, this Iland, which toward the East mounteth aloft with an high promontory,
C but Westward lieth plaine, and is of a fertile mould harboured in old time so many holy men, that beside Dubrith and Merlin the Caledonian, ancient histories record there were twenty thousand Saints buried heere. Next unto this lieth MONA, that is, Anglesey, which the Britans also name Mon, Tir-Mon, and Ynis Dowyll, that is, A darke or shady Iland, the Saxons Monege, whereof I have treated already in the page 671.

To Mone or Anglesey there adjoine three smaller Ilands, Moyl-Rhoniad, that is, The Isle of Seales, upon the North-west; which after it had beene withheld by certaine that unjustly seized upon it, from the Bishops of Bangor, unto whom it belonged, Henrie Deney Bishop of Bangor (as we read in the historie of Canterbury) with a D fleet manned with souldiers in King Henrie the seventh his time, recovered. Eastward lieth Ynis Ligod, that is, The Isle of mice: and more beneath, Prest-home, that is, The Isle of Priests: and nothing saw we in it but the towre steeple of Saint Cyriacs chappell, which sheweth it selfe to the beholders a farre off. Incredible it is, what the neighbours report of the infinite multitude of sea-foule that heere doe breed: as also what they tell of a Causey or banke which went from hence through the sea to the foot of that huge mountaine Pen-Maen-Maur, for their use who of devotion went on pilgrimage to visit this place, held in times past so holy and religous. I passe over Lambey a little Iland opposite unto this toward the coast of Ireland, although our Metall-men have to their great charges sought there of late for Alum.

E More Northward lieth that Mona whereof Cæsar maketh mention, in the mids of the cut, as he saith, betweene Britaine and Ireland.

Ptolemee, tearmeth it MONOEDA, as one would say Mon-eitha, that is, if I may be allowed to conjecture, The more Remote Mona, to put a difference betweene it and the other Mona, that is, Anglesey: Plinie, MONABIA, Orosius MENAVIA, and Bede Menavia Secunea, that is, The second Menavia, where he tearmeth Mona or Anglesey, Menavia Prior, that is, The former Menavia, and calleth them both, Ilands of the Britans: in which writers notwithstanding, it is read amisse Mevania: Ninius who also goeth abroad under the name of Gildas, nameth it Eubonia and Manaw. The Britans Menow, the inhabitants Maning, and we Englishmen, The Yle of Man: stret-
F ched out just in the mid levell (as saith Girald Cambrensis) betweene the Northren coasts of Ireland and Britaine; about which Isle, and namely to whether of the two countries it ought of right to appertaine, there arose no small doubt among those in ancient times. At length the controversie was taken up in this maner. For as much as this land fostered venemous wormes brought over hither for triall, adiudged it was by a common cenſure and dome, to lie unto Britain. Howbeit, the inhabitants both in language and manners come nigheſt unto the Iriſh, yet ſo as they therwith ſavour ſomewhat of the qualities of Norvegians. A

was

It lieth out in length from North to South much about thirty Italian miles: but reacheth in breadth, where it is wideſt, ſcarce above fifteene miles, and where it is narroweſt eight. In Bedes daies it conteined in it three hundred families, like as Angleſey. 96.: but now it numbreth ſeventeene Pariſh Churches. Flax and hempe it beareth abundantly: it hath freſh paſtures, and fields by good manuring plenteous of Barley, and Wheat, but of Oates eſpecially: whence it is that the people there eat moſt of all Oten bread: Store of cattell every where and mighty flockes of ſheepe: but both their ſheepe and other cattell alſo be ſmaller of body there, like as in Ireland neighbouring upon it, than in England, and nothing ſo faire headed. And conſidering it hath few or no woods at all, they uſe for fewell a kinde of clammy turfe, which as they are digging out of the earth, they light many times upon trees buried under the ground. B

In the middeſt it riſeth up with hils ſtanding thicke, the higheſt whereof is Sceafull; from whence a man may ſee on a cleere and faire day Scotland, England, and Ireland. Their chiefe towne they count Ruſſin, ſituate on the South-ſide, which of a Caſtle wherein lieth a Garizon, is commonly called Caſtle-Towne: where, within a little Jland Pope Gregory the fourteenth inſtituted an Epiſcopall See: the Biſhop whereof named Sodorenſis (of this very Jland as it is thought) had juriſdiction in times paſt over all the Jlands, Weſt Iriſh Jles or Hebrides, but exerciſeth it now onely upon that Jland, and is himſelfe under the Archbiſhop of Yorke. Howbeit, he hath no place nor voice in the aſſembly of the States of England in Court of Parliament, Duglaſſe is the beſt peopled towne and of greateſt reſort; becauſe the haven is commodious and hath a moſt eaſie entrance; unto which the Frenchmen and other forrainers uſe to repaire with their Bay-ſalt, having trafficke with the Jlanders and buying of them againe leather, courſe wooll and poudred Beefe. C

But on the Southſide of the Jle ſtand Bala-Curi (where the Biſhop for the moſt part is reſiant) and the Pyle; a Block-houſe ſtanding in a little Jland; where alſo there are ſouldiours in Garizon. Alſo before the very ſouth point, there lieth a prety Jland called the Calfe of Man, wherein are exceeding great ſtore of ſea foule called Puffins, and of thoſe duckes and drakes which (breeding of rotten-wood as they ſay) the Engliſhmen call them Bernacles, the Scots Clakes, and Soland Geeſe. D

Bernacles.

That which heere followeth, J will ſet downe out of a letter which that learned and reverend father in God John Meryk Biſhop of this Jle wrot unto me. This Iland, for cattaile, for fiſh, yea and for Corne, rather through mens induſtry than by any goodneſſe of the ground hath not onely ſufficient for it ſelfe, but alſo good ſtore to ſend into other Countries. Yet happier it was for the government thereof, as being defended from neighbour enemies by ſouldiours preſt and ready, at the expences of the Earle of Darby, upon which he employed the greateſt part of his yeerely revenew in this Iſle. All controverſies are decided without writings or any charges by certaine Iudges, whom they choſe from among themſelves, and call Deemſters. For the Magiſtrate taketh up a ſtone and when he hath given it his marke, delivereth it unto the plaintif who by vertue of it citeth his adverſary and witneſſes. If there fall out any doubtfull caſe and of greater importance, it is referred to twelue men whom they tearme The Keyes of the Iland. It hath certaine Coroners, and thoſe they call Annos, who ſtand inſteed of Sheriffes and execute their office. The eccleſiaſticall Iudge doth cite perſons and determine cauſes, within eight daies they ſtand to his award, or they are clapt up in priſon. E

They had, as I have heard ſay, as a peculier language of their owne, ſo alſo their peculiare lawes, which are ſignes of a peculiar Seignory. There Eccleſiaſticall lawes, next after this Canon Law, come neereſt unto the Civil. Vpon any Iudge or Clerks of the Court for making of proceſſe or drawing Inſtruments the people never beſtoweth ſo much as one pennie. As for that which Engliſh writers report of miſchiefes done by witchcraft and ſorcery, it is meere falſe. They that are of the wealthier ſort and hold faire poſſeſſions, and for their F good

A good housekeeping, and honeſt carriage, are conformable to imitate the people of Lancaſter. The women whitherſoever they goe out of their dores, guird themſelves about (as mindfull of their mortallity) with the winding ſheet that they purpoſe to be buried in. Such of them as are by law condemned to die, are ſowed within a ſacke and flung from a rocke into the ſea. They are all of them in this Iſle as farre from the cuſtomary practiſe of theeving or begging from dore to dore, as may be: wonderfull religious, and moſt redy everie one to entertaine the forme of the Engliſh church. The diſorders as well civill as eccleſiaſtical of their neighbour nations they deteſt: and whereas the whole Iſle is divided into two parts, South and North: this in common ſpeech reſembleth the Scotiſh, the other the Iriſh.

Happily it were woorth my labour if I ſhould heere inſert a little Hiſtory of this
B Iland, which Truth of due demandeth at my hands, that ſo I may keepe alive and in remembrance ſtill, the Acts heertofore atchieved; which if they be not buried, yet are waxen old, and have as it were one foote in the grave of oblivion. That the Britans held this Iland, as they did all Britaine, it is confeſſed by all. But when the Nations from the North, like violent tempeſts overflowed theſe South parts, it became ſubject to the Scots. For under the Emperours Honorius and Arcadius (as we read in Oroſius) it was inhabited as wel as Ireland by the Scottiſh Nations: and Ninnius hath written that one Biule a Scot was Lord of it. But (as the ſame writer recordeth) the Scots were driven out of all the Britiſh Countries and Ilands by Cuneda,
C Grandfather of Maglocunus, whom Gildas (for the foule worke that he made in theſe Ilands) tearmed the Dragon of the Iles. After this, Edwin king of Northumberland, brought this Iland, like as the foreſaid Angleſey, under the ſubjection of the Engliſh: if we underſtand them both by the name of Menaviæ, as writers perſwade vs: at which time it was reckoned an Iland of the Britans. But when the North had ſent abroad his brood the ſecond time, I meane the Normans, Danes, and Norwegians: theſe Norwegians who with their manifold roberies and roveries did moſt hurt from the Northern ſea, tooke up their haunt into this Iland and the Hebrides, and therein ere-
D cted Lords and Pety-kings, whoſe breife hiſtory I wil heere put downe word for word out of an old Manuſcript, leaſt it ſhould be utterly loſt, which is entituled The Cronicle of Man, ſeeming to have beene written by the Monkes of the Abbay of Ruſsin, which was the principall place of religion in this Iſle.

ACHRONICLE OF THE KINGS OF MAN.

E ANno Dominj, MLXV Edward of bleſſed memory, King of England, departed this life: after whom ſucceeded in the Kingdom Harald the Son of Godwin; againſt whom Harald Harfager King of Norway came into the field and fought a battaile at Stainford-bridge; and the Engliſh obtaining the victory put them all to flight: out of which chaſe Godred, ſurnamed Crovan, the Son of Harald the Black, of Iſeland, came unto Godred the ſonne of Syrric, who then reigned in Man, and by him was honorably received.

The ſame yeere, William the BASTARD conquered England: and Godred the F ſonne of Syrric died, after whom ſucceeded his ſonne Fingal.

MLXVI. Godred Crovan aſſembled a great fleet and came to Man, fought with the people of the land; but was overcome and put to rout. A ſecond time he rallied his forces and his fleet, ſailed into Man, joyned battaile with the Manksmen, was vanquiſhed and driven out of the field: A third time, he gathered a great multitude together, and by night arrived in the Haven called Ramſa, and hid three hundred men within a wood, which ſtood upon the hanging hollow brow of an hill called Scacafel. A Now when the ſunne was riſen, the Mankſmen put their people in order of battaile, and with a violent charge encountred with Godred. And when the fight was hot, thoſe three hundred men ſtarting out of the ambuſh behind their backes, began to foile the Mankſmen and put them to the worſt, yea and forced them to flie. Now, when they ſaw themſelves diſcomfited, and no place for them of refuge to eſcape, (for the Sea water comming in with the tide had filled the channell of Ramſa river, and the enimies on the other ſide followed the chaſe hard): they that then remained alive tooke up a pittiful crie and beſought Godred to ſave their lives. And he moved with compaſſion pittying their wofull calamity, (as who for a certaine time had beene nourced and brought up among them) ſounded the retraite, and forbad his B hoaſt to purſue them any longer.

Godred the morrow after propoſed this choiſe unto his owne army, whether they would rather divide Man among themſelves and therein dwel, or onely take the ſubſtance and pillage of the country, and ſo returne unto their owne homes? But they choſe rather to waſt and ſpoile the whole Iland, and with the goods thereof to enrich themſelves, and ſo returne home. But Godred himſelfe with thoſe few Ilanders that remained with him inhabited the South part of the Iland, and granted to the re-maines of the Mankſmen the North part, with this covenant and condition, That none of them ſhould at any time venture and preſume to challenge any part of the land by right of inheritance. Whereby it came to paſſe that even unto this day, the C whole Iſle is the Kings domain alone, and all the revenewes therof belonging unto the crown. Godred then reduced Dublin & a great part of Leymiſtir under his ſubiection.
As for the weſtern ſcotiſh, he ſo overawed them, as that no man who built ſhip or cog boat durſt drive into it above three nailes. Now he reigned ſixteene yeeres, and died in the Iland that is called Yle. He left behind him verily three ſonnes, Lagman, Harald and Olave.

Lagman the eldeſt taking upon him the Kingdome, reigned ſeven yeeres. And Harald his brother a great while rebelled againſt him, but at length being taken pri-ſoner by Lagman, he had his members of generation cut off, and his eies plucked out of his head. After this Lagman repenting himſelfe that he had pulled out his bro- D thers eies, gave over the Kingdome of his owne accord, and wearing the badge of the Lords Croſſe, tooke a journey to Ieruſalem, in which he died.

MLXXV. All the Nobles and Lords of the Iſlands, hearing of the death of Lagman diſpatched their Embaſſadours to Murecard O·Brien King of Ireland, requeſting that he would ſend ſome induſtrious and woorthy man of the bloud Royall to be their King, untill Olaue Godred ſonne came to full age. The King very willingly yeelded to their requeſts, and ſent unto them one Dopnald the ſonne of Tade, warning and charging him to governe the Kingdom (which by right belonged to another) with all gentleneſſe and modeſty. But he after he was come to the Crowne, not weighing of the charge that his Lord and M. gave him, abuſed his place and Lorded with E great tyranny, and ſo committing many outrages and villanies, reigned cruelly three yeeres. Then all the Princes of the Ilands agreed together in one conſpiracy, roſe up againſt him, and expelled him out of their coaſts. Who fled into Ireland and never looked them in the face after.

MLXXVII. One Ingemund was ſent from the King of Norway, to take upon him the dominion of the Ilands: and when he was come to the Iſle Leodus, he ſent meſſengers to all the Nobles of the Ilands, with a commandement that they ſhould meet together and ordaine him their King: Meane while, himſelfe with his compa-ons did nothing elſe but rob, ſpoile, make good cheere and banquet, diſhonour and abuſe maried wives, deflower young maidens, yea and give himſelfe over to filthy F pleaſures and fleſhly luſts. But when tidings heerof came to the Nobles of the Ilands now aſſembled to make him King, they were ſet on fire with furious wrath and ſped themſelves in all haſt toward him: and ſurpriſing him in the night burnt the houſe wherin he was, & with fire and ſword made a quick diſpatch of him and his company.

MXCVIII.

A MXCVIII. The Abbay of S. Mary at Ciſtertium or Ciſteaux, was founded. Anti- " och was won by the Chriſtians: And a Comet or blazing ſtar appeared. The ſame " yeere there was a field fought between thoſe of the Iſle of Man, at Stantwat: and the " Northren men gat the victory: In which battaile were ſlaine Earle Other and Mac- " Maras, generals of both the ſides. In the ſame yeere, Magnus King of Norway, the " ſon of Olaue, ſonne of Harald Harfager, deſirous to trie whether the corps of S. Olaue " King and Martyr remained uncorrupt, commanded that his tombe ſhould be ope- " ned: And not withſtanding the Biſhop and Clergy withſtood it, the King himſelfe " came boldly thither, and by force that he brought with him cauſed the Coffin to be " opened: now, when he had both ſeene and handled the body uncorrupt and nothing " periſhed, ſodainly there was a great feare fell upon him, and in all haſt he departed "
B thence. The next night following Olaue King and Martyr appeared unto him in a " dreame ſaying thus: Chuſe thou one of theſe two things, either to loſe thy life and " kingdome both within thirty daies; or to depart from Norway and never ſee it again. "
When the King awakened, he called unto him his Princes and Elders, and declared " unto them his dreame and viſion; And they being ſore afraid, gave him this counſel, " to depart with all ſpeed out of Norway. He without delay cauſed a fleet to be rigged " and put in redineſſe, of an hundred and threeſcore ſaile, and cutteth over to the Iſles " of Orkney, which he forthwith ſubdued, and making way by dint of ſword thorowout "
C all the Iſles, and bringing them to his ſubjection, went forward ſtill as far as to Man, " and when he was arrived and landed, he came unto S. Patrikes Iſle, to ſee the place wherein the field had beene fought a little before, betweene the Manksmen, becauſe " as yet many of their bodies that were ſlaine lay there unburied. Now when he ſaw " this moſt goodly, and beautifull Iland it pleaſed his eie, and he choſe it to ſeat him- " ſelfe therein; built fortreſſes in it, which unto this day carry his name. And thoſe of " Galway he held in ſo great aw, that he compelled them to cut downe wood for tim- " ber and to bring it unto the ſhore, that therewith he might build his Forts and bul- " warkes. To Angleſey, then called Monia (an Iland in wales) he ſailed, and found " in it two Earles by the name of Hughes: the one he ſlew, the other he put to flight, " and ſubdued the Iland. But the Welſhmen preſented him with many gifts, and ſo " D he bad them farwel and returned unto Man. Vnto Murcard king of Ireland he ſent his " ſhoes, and commanded him to carry them on his ſhoulders through the middeſt of " his houſe on Chriſtmas day, that he might thereby underſtand, he was ſubiect unto "
King Magnus. Which the Iriſhmen as ſoone as they heard of it tooke grievoſly, & diſ- " dained exceeding much. But the King following a wiſer courſe, I had rather ſaith " he, not onely carry his ſhooes, but alſo eat them, than king Magnus ſhould deſtroy " one Province in Ireland. He fullfilled therefore his commandement, and honourab- " ly entreated his meſſengers. Many preſents alſo hee ſent over by them unto King " Magnus, and entred into league with him. Theſe meſſengers beeing returned unto " their lord, related unto him many things touching the ſituation of Ireland, the plea- " E ſantneſſe thereof, the abundance of corne and holſomneſſe of aire. When Mag- " nus heard this, ſtraightwaies hee thought of nothing elſe but to conquere Ireland, " and bring it wholy under his dominion. Hee commanded therefore his men to " prepare a navy. And himſelfe in perſon ſetting forward with ſixteene ſhips, defi- " rous to take a view of the countty, as hee unwarily departed a ſide from his ſhip- " ping, was ſoudainely compaſſed about by the Iriſh, and ſo loſt his life togither with " all thoſe in manner that were with him. And hee was buried hard by Saint Pa- " tricks church in Doun. He reigned ſixe yeeres: after whoſe death the Princes of the " Ilands ſent for Olave the ſonne of Godred ſurnamed Crovan, who lived in the Court " of Henry king of England, ſonne of King William. " F MCII. Olaue, the ſonne of Godred Crovan aforeſaid, beganne his reigne and " reigned fortie yeere: a peaceable Prince, having al the kings of Ireland and Scotland " to bee his confederates. Hee tooke to wife Affrica the daughter of Ferguſe of " Gallway: of whom he begat Gadred. By his concubines he had Regnald, Lagman " and Harald, beſide many daughters, whereof one was wedded to Summerled Prince "

" of Herergaidel, who was the cauſe of the ruine of the whole Kings of the Ilands. On A
" her he begat foure ſonnes, Dulgall, Raignald, Engus and Olaue.
" MCXXXIII. There hapned ſo great an Eclipſe of the Sun, upon the fourth Nones
" of Auguſt, that the day was turned into night.
" MCXXXIIII. Olaue gave unto Yuo Abbat of Furnes a plot of his land in Man, to " build an Abbay, in a place called Ruſſin: and both enriched with revenewes and endowed with privilidges the eſtate of the church in the Ilands.
" MCXLII. Godred, Olaues ſon ſaileth over ſea to the King of Norway, whoſe name
" was Hinge, and did his homage unto him, and ſtaied there being honourably enter" tained of him. The ſame yeere three ſonnes of Harald Olaues brother (who had beene " brought up in Dublin) raiſing a great number of men together and all thoſe who B
" were fled from the King, came to Man, demanding of the ſame King to have the one
" moiety of the whole kingdome of the Ilands to be given unto them. But the King,
" when he had heard their demand, being willing to pacifie them, anſwered, That he " would take counſell of the matter. Now when they had appointed the time and " place where the counſell ſhould be held, in the meane while thoſe moſt lewd and " wicked villaines complotted among themſelves the Kings death. At the day appoin" ted both parts met at the haven which is called Ramſa, and ſat in order by rewes, the " king with his counſell on the one ſide, and they togither with their companie on the " other. And Reginald (who was to diſpatch him) was in the mids betweene, and ſtood
" talking apart with one of the Peeres of the land. But when the king had called him C
" and he was come unto him, he turned toward the king as though he would ſalute
" him, and therewith lifting up a glittering ax a great height, at one blow cut off the " Kings head. And forthwith as ſoone as they had committed ſuch a bloudy murder
" they devided the land among themſelues: and after ſome few daies, having gathe" red a navie together, ſailed over to Galway, deſirous to bring it alſo under their ſub-
" jection: But thoſe of Galway ſticking cloſe and round together, gave a faire onſet,
" and joyned battaile with them. They by and by turning their backes fled in great
" diſorder to Man: And as for all the Galwaymen that dwelt therin, ſome of them they
" ſlew, others they expelled.
" MCXLIII. Godred Olaues ſon returning out of Norway was created King of Man, D
" and to avenge his fathers death, he cauſed two of Harolds ſons, to have their eies pul" led out, and ſlew the third.
" MCXLIIII. Godred begun his reigne, and reigned thirty yeeres. In the third yeere
" of his reigne, the people of Dublin ſent for him and created him king of Dublin, a-
" gainſt whom Mare-card king of Ireland raiſed war, and encamping himſelfe before
" the Citie which is called Coridelis, ſent his halfe brother (by the mother ſide) Oſibeley,
" with three thouſand men of armes to Dublin, who was by Godred and the Dublini-
" ans ſlaine, and all the reſt put to flight. Theſe exploits atchieved Godred, returned to " Man, began to uſe tyranny, and turned noblemen out of their inheritances, whereof
" one called Thorfin, Oters Son, mightier than the reſt, came to Sumerled and made E
" Dubgall Sumerled ſonne, king of the Iſlands, ſubduing unto him many Ilands. When " Godred had intelligence of theſe things by one Paul, he prepared a navie, and ſetteth
" forward to meet with Sumerled, who was comming with a fleet of 80. ſaile. And in " the yeere 1156. there was a battaile fought at ſea, on Twelfe day at night, and after
" many a man ſlaine on both ſides, the next day after they grew to a pacification,
" and devided among themſelves the kingdome of the Ilands: and ſo it became two
" ſeverall kingdomes from that very day unto this preſent time. And this was the cauſe
" of the overthrow of the kingdome of the Iſles, ſince time that Sumerleds ſon ſei-
" zed upon it.
" MCLVIII. Sumerled came to Man with a fleet of 53. ſail: put Godred to flight & wa- F
" ſted the Iland. Godred then croſſed over to Norway, to ſeek for aid againſt Sumerled.
" MCLXIIII. Sumerled gathered togethera fleet of 1000. and 60. ſhips & arrived at " Rhinfrin, coveting to ſubdue all Scotland: But by the juſt iudgement of God, he was
" vanquiſhed by a few, togither with his ſon & an infinite number of people, there ſlain.
"

The

A The same yeere there was a field fought at Ramsa between Reginald brother of Godred, and them of Man: and by the deceitfull practise of a certaine Earle, those of Man were put to flight.

Then Reginald began to raigne and on the fourth day after, came Godred upon him out of Norwey with a great multitude of armed men, and tooke his brother Reginald, whom he bereft both of his eies, and of his genitall members. The same yeere died Malcolm K. of Scotland, and his brother William succeeded him in the Kingdome.

MCLXVI. Two Comets or Blazing-stars appeared before Sun-rising in the Moneth of August, the one in the South, the other in the North.

B MCLXXI. Richard Earle of Penbrock failed over into Ireland and subdued Develin with a great part of Ireland.

MCLXXVI. Iohn Curcy conquered Vlster, and Vivian Legat of the Apostolicke Sea came into Man, and caused King Godred to be lawfully espoused unto his wife Phingola, daughter of Mac-Lotlen, son to Murkartac King of Ireland, to wit, the mother of Olaue then three yeeres old. Sylvan the Abbat married them: unto whom the very same day Godred gave a peece of land at Miriscoge, where he built a Monastery; but at length the ground was together with the Monkes granted to the Abbay of Russin.

C Reginald sonne to Eac-Marcat, one of the royall bloud, comming into Man with a great band of men in the Kings absence, at the first conflict put to flight certain warders that kept the shore, and killed about 30. men. Afterwards the Manksmen gathering their forces together, the same day slew him and almost all his company.

MCLXXXIII. O-Fogolt was Sheriffe of Man.

MCLXXXV. There fell out to be an eclipse of the Sun on Saint Philip and Iacobs day.

MCLXXXVII. On the fourth Ides of November died Godred King of the Ilands: and the next summer was his body translated to the Isle of Hy. He left behind him three sonnes, Reginald, Olaue, and Ywar. In his life he ordeined his sonne Olaue to be D his heire, because he onely was borne in lawfull wedlock. But the people of Man, seeing that Olaue was now scarce ten yeeres old, sent for Reginald out of the Isles, and set him up for their King.

MCLXXXVIII. Reginald Godreds son began to raigne over the Ilands: and Murchard a man of great power throughout all the kingdome of the Isles was slaine.

MCXCII. A battaile was fought betweene Reginald and Engus the sonnes of Sumerled, but Engus won the victory. The same yeere was the Abbay of Russin translated to Dufglas: but after foure yeeres the Monks returned to Russin.

MCCIII. Michael Bishop of the Isles died at Fontans, after whom succeeded Nicolas.

E MCCIIII. Hugh Lacy came with an army into Vlster and gave Iohn Curcy battaile, tooke him prisoner, and conquered Vlster. Afterward, he set Iohn at liberty: who came to King Reginald: and he honourably entertained him, because he was his brother in law: for Iohn Curcy had taken to wife Affrica Godreds daughter: who founded the Abbay of S. Mary de Iugo Domini, and was there buried.

MCCV. Iohn Curcy and Reginald King of the Isles having entred into Vlster with one hundred ships, in the haven which is called Stranford, slackly beseeged the fortresse of Rath: but Walter Lacy comming upon them with an army, put them to flight: after this, Curcy never recovered his land.

MCCX. Engus Sumerleds sonne, was with three of his sonnes slain.

F Iohn King of England at the same time brought a navie of 500. saile to Ireland and subdued it: who sending a certaine Earle named Fulk unto Man, in one fortnight and a day wholy in a manner wasted it: and taking hostages returned thence into their country. King Reginald and his Nobles were not in Man.

MCCXVII. Nicolas Bishop of the Ilands departed this life and was buried in Vlster within the house of Benchor, after whom succeeded Reginald.

Heere I thinke good to write somewhat againe of Olaue and Reginald, Brethren.

"REginald gave unto his brother Olaue the Isle called Lodhus, which is said to be larger than the rest of the Ilands: but slenderly inhabited because it stands much upon mountaines, is stony besides, and almost all unfit for tillage. The inhabitants therof live for the most part by hunting and fishing. Olaue therefore went to possesse himselfe of this Iland, and dwelt in it, leading a poore life. And when he saw it would not suffice to maintaine himselfe and his army, he came boldly unto his brother Reginald who then made his abode in the Ilands, and spake unto him in this maner. Brother, saith he, My Soveraigne Lord the King, Thou knowest that the Kingdome of the Ilands belonged unto me by inheritance, But since the Lord hath elected thee to sway the Scepter thereof, I envy thee not, nor take it grievously that thou art exalted to that royall dignity. Now thus much I hartily beseech thee, that thou wouldest provide me some portion of land in the Isles, wherein I may live honestly according to mine estate. For, the Iland Lodhus which thou gavest unto me is not sufficient to sustaine me. Reginald his brother after he had given him the hearing, said he would take Counsell upon the point: and the morrow after, when Olaue was sent for and came in place to parle of the matter, Reginald commandeth that he should be apprehended and brought unto William King of Scotland: that with him he might be kept in prison: And Olaue lay prisoner in Irons and chaines almost seven yeeres. In the seventh yeere died William King of Scotland, after whom succeeded his sonne Alexander. Now before his death he gave commandement that all prisoners should be set free. Olaue therefore being enlarged and at liberty came to Man: and soone after, accompanied with no small traine of Noblemen, he went to S. Iames: and after he was thus returned Reginald his brother caused him to marry a noble mans daughter of Kentyre, even his owne wives whole sister, named Lauon and gave him Lodhus in possession to enjoy. Some few daies after Reginald Bishop of the Ilands, having called a Synod, Canonically divorced Olaue the sonne of Godred and Lavon his wife, as being the couzen-german of his former wife. After this Olaue wedded Scristine daughter of Ferkar Earle of Rosse.

For this cause Reginalds wife, Queene of the Ilands was wroth, and directed her letters in the name of Reginald the King, into the Isle Sky, unto Godred her son that he should kill Olaue. As Godred was devising meanes to worke this feat, and now entring into Lodhus, Olaue fled in a little Cog-boat unto his father in law, the Earle of Rosse aforesaid. Then Godred wasteth and spoileth Lodhus. At the same time Pol the sonne of Boke Sheriff of Sky, a man of great authority in all the Ilands, because he would not give his consent unto Godred fled & together with Olaue lived in the Earle of Rosses house: and entring into a league with Olaue they came both in one ship to Sky. At length having sent forth their spies and discoverers, they learned that Godred laie in a certaine Iland called S. Columbs Isle, having very few men with him misdoubting nothing. Gathering therefore about them all their frinds and acquaintance with such voluntaries as were ready to joyne with them, at midnight with fiue ships which they drew from the next Sea-shore, distant from the Iland aforesaid some two forlongs, they beset the Isle round about. Godred then, and they that were with him, rising by the dawning of the day and seeing themselves environed on every side with enemies, were astonied: But putting themselves in warlike armes assaied right manfully to make resistance, but all in vaine. For about nine a clock of the day Olaue and Pol the foresaid Sheriff set foot in the Iland with their wholl army: and having slaine all those whom they found without the enclosure of the Church, they tooke Godred, put out his eies and guelded him. Howbeit, to this deed Olaue did not yeeld his consent, neither could he withstand it, for Bokes sonne, the Sheriff aforesaid. For this was done in the yeere 1223.

The

A The Summer next following, Olaue, after he had taken hoſtages of all the Lords and potentates of the Iſles, came with a fleet of 32. ſaile toward Man, and arrived at Rognolfwaht. At this very time Reginald and Olaue divided the Kingdome of the Ilands betweene themſelves, and Man was given to Reginald over and beſide his owne portion, together with the Title of King.

Olaue the ſecond time having furniſhed himſelfe with victuals from the people of Man, returned with his companie to his portion of the Iland. The yeere following, Reginald taking with him Alane Lord of Galway, went with his ſoldiers of Man to the Iland-parts, that hee might diſſeize his brother Olaue of that portion of land
B which he had given unto him, and bring it under his owne dominion. But becauſe the Mankſmen were not willing to fight againſt Olaue and the Ilanders for the love they had to them, Reginald and Alan Lord of Galway returned home without atchiving their purpoſe. After a little while, Reginald under pretenſe of going to the Court of his Soveraigne Lord the King of England, tooke up of the people of Man an hundred markes, but went in very deede to the Court of Alan Lord of Galway. At the ſame time, hee affianced his daughter unto the ſonne of Alan in marriage. Which the Mankſmen hearing, tooke ſuch a ſnuffe and indignation thereat, that they ſent for Olaue and made him their King.

MCCXXVI. Olaue recovered his inheritance, to wit, the Kingdome of Man and of C the Ilands which his brother Reginald had governed 38. yeeres & reigned quietly two yeeres.

MCCXXVIII. Olaue accompanied with all the Nobles of Man, and a band of the ſtrongeſt men of the country, ſailed over unto the Ilands. A little after, Alan Lord of Galway, and Thomas Earle of Athol, and King Reginald, came unto Man with a puiſſant armie: all the South part of Man they waſted, ſpoiled the Churches, and ſlew all the men they could lay hold of, ſo that the South part of Man was layd in maner all deſolate. After this, returned Alan with his armie into his owne country, and left his bailiffes in Man, to gather up for him the tributes of the country. But King Olaue came upon them at unwares, put them to flight and recovered his owne D kingdome. Then the people of Man which before time had beene diſperſed every way, began together themſelves to gather, and to dwell with confidence & ſecurity.

In the ſame yeere, came King Reginald out of Galway unlooked for, at the dead time of night in Winter, with five ſhips, and burnt all the ſhipping of his brother Olave, and of the Lords of Man at Saint Patrickes Iland: and ſuing to his brother for peace, ſtayed forty daies at the haven of Ragnoll-wath. Meane while he wonne and drew unto him all the Ilanders in the South part of Man: who ſware they would venture their lives in his quarell, untill hee were inveſted in the one halfe of the Kingdome: on the contrary part Olaue, had the Northen men of the Iſle to ſide with him: and upon the 14 day of February, at a place called Tingualla, there was a battaile
E ſtrucke betweene the two brethren: wherin Olaue had the victorie: and King Reginald was by ſome killed there without his brothers knowledge. And certaine Rovers comming to the South part of Man waſted and harried it. The Monkes of Ruſsin tranſlated the body of King Reginald unto the Abbay of S. Mary de Fournes, and there enterred it was in a place which himſelfe had choſen for that purpoſe. After this went Olaue to the King of Norway, but before that he was come thither, Haco, King of Norway ordained a certaine noble man named Husbac, the ſonne of Owmund, for to be King of the Sodorien Jlands, & called his name Haco. Now the ſame Haco together with Olaue and Godred Don, Reginalds ſonne, and many Norwegians came unto the Ilands, and at the winning of a fort in the Iland Both, Haco chan-
F ced to be ſmit with a ſtone, whereof he died, & lieth buried in Iona.

MCCXXX. Olaue came with Godred Don and the Norwegians to Man: and they divided the Kingdome among themſelves: Olaue held Man: and Godred being gone vnto the Jlands was ſlaine in the Iſle Lodhus: ſo obtained Olaue the Kingdome of the Jſles.

MCCXXXVII. On the twelfth Calends of Iune died Olaue the ſonne of Godred king

" King of Man, in Saint Patrickes Iland: and was buried in the Abbay of Ruſsin. Hee A " reigned eleven yeeres, two by his brothers life, and nine after his death.
" Harold his ſonne ſucceeded him, being 14. yeeres of age and reigned 12. yeeres.
" In the firſt yeere of his reigne, he made a journey to the Jlands, and appointed Lo-
" glen his couſin, Cuſtos of Man. In the Autumne following, Harald ſent three ſonnes
" of Nell, namely Dufgald, Thorquill Mormore, and his friend Ioſeph to Man, for to " conſult about affaires. On the 25. day therefore, they meete at Tingull: and by oc-
" caſion of a certaine envious quarell that aroſe betweene the ſonnes of Nell and Log-
" len, there was a ſore fight on both ſides, wherein were ſlaine Dufgald, Mormore, and
" the foreſaid Ioſeph. In the ſpring enſuing, King Harald came to the Jſle of Man, and " Loglen, as he fled toward Wales, periſhed by Shipwracke, with Godred Olaues B
" ſonnes his foſter child and pupill, with 40. others.
" MCCXXXVIII. Goſpatricke and Gilleſcriſt the ſonne of Mac-Kerthac, came from " the King of Norway into Man; who by force kept Harald out of Man, and tooke tri" butes to the Kings behoufe of Norway, becauſe he refuſed to come unto the King of " Norwayes court.
" MCCXL. Goſpatric died and is buried in the Abbay of Ruſsin.
" MCCXXXIX. Harald went unto the king of Norway, who after two yeres confirmed
" unto him, his heires and ſucceſſours under his ſeale, all the Ilands which his predeceſ-
" ſours had poſſeſſed.
" MCCXLII. Harald returned out of Norway to Man, and being by the inhabi- C
" tants honorably received, had peace with the Kings of England and of Scotland.
" Harald like as his father before him, was by the King of England dubbed Knight,
" and after he had beene rewarded with many gifts returned home. The ſame yeere,
" he was ſent for by the King of Norway and married his daughter.
" And in the yeere 1249. as hee returned homeward with his wife, and Laurence,
" King elect of Man, and many other nobles and gentlemen, he was drowned in a tem-
" peſt nere unto the coaſts of Radland.
" MCCXLIX. Reginald the ſonne of Olaue, and brother to Harald beganne his " reigne the day before the Nones of May, and on the thirtieth day thereof was ſlaine
" by one Yvar a Knight and his company, in a medow nere unto the Holy Trinity D
" Church, on the South ſide: and lieth buried in the Church of S. Marie of Ruſsin.
" At that time, Alexander King of Scots rigged and brought together many ſhips,
" meaning to ſubdue the Jland: and in the Iſle Kerwaray he died of an ague.
" Harald the ſonne of Godred Don uſurped the name of King in the Ilands: all the " Nobles of Harald King Olaves ſonne he baniſhed, and placed in their ſteed all the " Princes and peeres that were fled from the ſaid Harald.
" MCCL. Harald the ſonne of Godred Don, being by miſſives ſent for, went unto " the King of Norway, who kept him in priſon becauſe he had unjuſtly intruded him-
" ſelfe into the Kingdome.
" The ſame yeere, there arrived at Roghalwaght, Magnus the ſonne of Olave, and E
" Iohn the ſonne of Dugald, who named himſelfe King: but the people of Man taking
" it to the heart that Magnus was not nominated, would not ſuffer them to land there:
" many of them therefore were caſt away and periſhed by ſhipwracke.
" MCCLII. Magnus the ſonne of Olave came to Man, and was made King: The " next yeere, he went to the king of Norway, and ſtayed there a yeere.
" MCCLIIII. Haco King of Norway ordained Magnus, Olaves ſonne, king of the " Iſles, and confirmed the ſame unto him and his heires, and by name unto his brother
" Harald.
" MCCLVI. Magnus king of Man; went into England, and was knighted by the king
" of England. F
" MCCLVII. The church of S. Maries of Ruſsin was dedicated by Richard of Sodore.
" MCCLX. Haco King of Norway, came unto the parts of Scotland, and without any " exploit done, turned to the Orkneys: where, at Kirwas he endeth his daies and lieth
" enterred at Bergh.

A MCCLXV. Magnus, Olaues ſonne king of Man and of the Jlands departed this life at the Caſtle of Ruſsin, and was buried in the Church of S. Marie de Ruſsin.

MCCLXVI. The kingdome of the Ilands was tranſlated, by reaſon of Alexander king of Scots.

That which followeth was written in another hand, and of a later character.

MCCLXX. The ſeventh day of October, a navy ſet out by Alexander King of Scots, ar-
B rived at Roghalwath: and the next morrow before Sun-riſing a battaile was fought be-tweene the people of Man and the Scots, in which were ſlaine of the Mankſmen 537: where-upon a certaine verſifier playd thus upon the number.

L. decies X. ter, & penta duo cecidere,
Mannica gens de te, damna futura cave.
L. Ten times told, X. thrice, with fiue beſide and twaine,
Ware future harmes, I reed, of thy folke Man, were ſlaine.

MCCCXIII. Robert King of Scots beſieged the Caſtle of Ruſſin, which Dingawy
C Dowyll held againſt him: but in the end the King wonne the caſtle.

MCCCXVI. On the Aſcenſion day, Richard le Mandevile and his brethren with o-ther Potentates of Ireland, arrived at Ramaldwath, requeſting to be furniſhed with vic-tuals and ſilver, for that they had beene robbed by the enimies warring upon them conti-nually. Now when the comunalty of the country had made anſwer, that they would not give them any: they advanced forward againſt thoſe of Man, with two troups or ſquadrons, un-till they were come as farre as to the ſide of Warthfell hill, in a field, wherein Iohn Man-devile remained, and there in a fought battaile the Iriſh vanquiſhed the Mankſmen, ſpoiled the Iland and rifled the Abbay of Ruſſin: and after they had continued in the Iland one whole moneth, they returned home with their ſhips fraught with pillage.

D Thus endeth the Chronicle of the K K. of Man.

The Proceſſe or courſe of the Hiſtorie following, I will now continue ſummarly out of other writers.

E WHen Alexander the third, king of Scots, had gotten into his hands the We-ſterne Ilands, partly by way of conqueſt, and in part for ready money paid un-to the king of Norway, hee attempted the Ile of Man alſo, as one of that number; and through the valiant proweſſe of Alexander Stewart brought it under his domi-nion: yea and placed there a pety king or Prince, with this condition, that he ſhould be ready alwaies at his commande to ſerve with ten ſhips in his warres at ſea. How-beit, Marie the daughter of Reginald king of Man (who was become the Liege man of Iohn king of England) entred her ſuit for the Iland before the king of England: but anſwere was made unto her, that ſhe ſhould demaund it of the king of Scots, for that he then held it in poſſeſſion. And yet her grand child, Iohn Waldebeof (for the F ſaid Marie married into the houſe of Waldebeofe) ſued for his ancient right in Par-liament, holden in the 33. yeere of king Edward the firſt, before the king of England, as the ſuperiour Lord of the kingdome of Scotland. But, none other anſwere could he have than this (if I may ſpeake the words out of the very authenticall Records) Se-quatur coram Iuſtitiarijs de Banco Regis &c. that is, Let him ſue before the Iuſtices of the Kings bench, let him be heard, and let Iuſtice be done. But that which he could not ob-

taine

taine by right, Sir William Monteacute, his kinſman (for come he was of the race of the kings of Man) wonne by his ſword. For with a band of Engliſh muſtered up in haſt, he drave all the Scots out of the Iland. But being by this warre plunged deeply in debt, and not having wherewith to make ſome payment thereof, he mortgaged it for ſeaven yeeres, to Antonie Bec Biſhop of Durham and Patriarch of Ieruſalem, and made over the profits and revenewes thereof unto him: yea and ſoone after, the king granted it unto the ſaid Antonie for tearme of life. Afterwards, king Edward the ſecond paſſed a grant thereof unto his minion Piers Gaueſton, what time as he created him Earle of Cornwall: and when the ſaid Piers was rid out of the way, he gave it unto Henry Beaumont, with all the domaine and regall iuriſdiction thereto belonging. But ſhortly after, the Scots under Robert Brus recovered it; & Robert Randulph that right warlicke Scot like as a long time after, Alexander Duke of Albany, uſed to ſtile themſelves Lords of Man: & bare the ſame cote of armes, as did the later kings of Man, namely, three armed legges of a man, linked together, and bending in the hammes: ſuch for all the world, as the Iſle Sicilia gave the three legges naked in like forme in her coines of money in old time, to ſignifie three Promontories. Notwithſtanding, before time, the kings of Man uſed for their armes, as we haue ſeene in their Seales a ſhip, with the ſaile hoiſed up, with this title in the circumference, Rex Manniæ & Inſularum, that is, King of Man and of the Ilands. Afterward about the yeere 1340. William Montacute the younger, Earle of Salisbury wreſted it by ſtrong hand and force of armes from the Scotiſh: who in the yeere of our Lord 1393. as Thomas Walſingham ſaith, ſold for a great ſumme of money, Man, with the crowne thereof; unto William Scrope. Who being for high treaſon beheaded and his goods confiſcate, it came unto the hands of Henrie the fourth king of England: who granted this Iland unto Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland (as a conqueror triumphing over William Scorpe, whom he as yet a private perſon had intercepted and beheaded, when he aſpired to the Crowne) with this condition: that himſelfe and his heires, ſhould when the kings of England were enſtalled and crowned, carry before them that ſword, which the ſaid Henrie wore by his ſide, what time he came backe againe out of exile into England, commonly called Lancaſter ſword. But I thinke it good to ſet this down out of the Record in the very words of the king himſelfe. De noſtra gratia ſpeciali dedimus. that is, Of our ſpeciall grace, we have given and granted unto Henrie Earle of Northumberland, the Iſle, Caſtle, Pile, and Seignorie of Man, and all the Ilands and Lordſhips to the ſaid Iſle belonging, which were Sir William le Scrops, Knight, now deceaſed, (whom in his life time we conquered, and have decreed him ſo to be conquered) and which by reaſon of our conqueſt of him, we tooke into our hand as conquered: which conqueſt verily and Decree in our preſent Parliament, with the aſſent of the Lords Temporall in the ſame Parliament being, as touching the perſon of the foreſaid William, and all, the lands, tenements, goods, and chattells of his, as well within our Kingdome, as without, at the petition of the Communalty of our Kingdome, ſtand confirmed &c. To have and to hold unto the ſaid Earle and his heires &c. by ſervice of carrying at the daies of our Coronation, and of our heires, at the left ſhoulder, and the left ſhoulders of our heires, either by himſelfe or a ſufficient and honorable Deputy of his, that ſword naked which we ware, and were girt with, when we arrived in the parts of Holderneſſe, called Lancaſter ſword &c.

Annales of Th. Otterborn. Anno 7. Hen. 4.

But in the fifth yeere following, the ſaid Henrie Percie entred into open rebellion, and the king ſent Sir Iohn Stanley, and William Stanley to ſeize the Iſle and caſtle of Man, the inheritance whereof hee granted afterward to Sir Iohn Stanley, and his heirs, by Letters Patent with the Patronage of the Biſhopricke &c. And ſo his heires and ſucceſſours. Who were honoured the title of Earles of Derby, were commonly called Kings of Man.

From Man, untill we come to the Mull of Gallaway, we meet with none but very ſmall Iſlands: But, after we be once paſt it, in the ſalt water of GLOTTA, or Dunbritton Frith appeereth the Iland GLOTTA, whereof Antoninus maketh mention, which the Scots now call Arran: wherof the Earles of Arran in Scotland were ſtiled; & neighbouring unto it is that, which was in times paſt named Rothesia, now Buthe

of

A of a ſacred Cell which Brendan erected (for ſo they tearme a little Cell, in Scottiſh) thence come we to Hellan, in times paſt called Hellan Leneaw, that is, as Iohn Fordan interpreteth it, The Iſle of Saints: and to Hellan Tinoc, that is, The Iſle of Swine: and theſe Ilands are ſeene in the ſame Frith or Forth. But of theſe I haue ſpoken before.

Without this Bay or Frith lie a number of Jlands very thicke together, which the Scots themſelves that inhabite them, call Inch-Gall, that is, happly, The Iſles of the Gallicians: the Engliſh and the reſt of the Scots, The Weſterne Iſles. The writers of the former age, HEBRIDES, but the ancient Ethnickes, Bettoricæ, and Giraldus other where, Inchades and Leucades: Plinie, Solinus & Ptolemee name them EBVDAS,
B HEBVDAS, and EC*Sas*, which names haue ſome conſonant affinitie with Epidium the promontory of Britaine oppoſite unto them, and an Iſle among theſe ſo named. The reaſon of the name I cannot picke out, unleſſe I ſhould thinke they were ſo called, becauſe there groweth heere no corne or graine.

For, Solinus writeth, that the inhabitants of theſe Ilands are not acquainted with corne, and live onely upon fiſh and milke, and Eb eid in Britiſh, ſoundeth as much as without corne. The inhabitants, as ſaith the ſame Solinus, haue no skill or knowledge of corne, they live of fiſh and milke onely. They all haue but one king: For, how many ſo ever they be, they are ſevered one from another by a narrow enterflow of the Sea betweene. Scottiſh or Weſterne Iſles.

C The king hath nothing that hee may ſay is his owne: all things are common to them all: and held hee is to equity by certaine lawes: and leaſt hee ſhould for covetouſneſſe ſwarue aſide from the truth, by his poore eſtate he learneth juſtice, as who hath no houſe, furniture and proviſion of his owne, but all his maintenance is from the common coffer.

No woman is he allowed to have in propriety, but by turnes he taketh for to uſe, whomſoever he fancieth, whereby he neither can have his wiſh, nor hope of children.

Of theſe Ilands, the common people affirmeth, there be 44. whereas, in truth, there are many more. Plinie wrote that there were 30. of them. But Ptolemee
D reckoneth up but fiue. The firſt is RICINA, Plinie calleth it RICNEA, Antoninus RIDVNA, now tearmed Racline: and I think it ſhould be read in Antonine Riclina: for [cl] eaſily maketh a [d] by joining a [c] at the backe unto it. A ſmall Jland, this is, butting full upon Jreland; knowne unto the ancient writers, for that it lieth in the very narrow ſea, betweene Jreland and Scotland: famous at this day for no cauſe elſe, but for the overthrow and ſlaughter of the Scottiſh Iriſh, who otherwhiles poſſeſſed themſelves of it, and were thruſt out by the Engliſh, under the conduct of Sir William Norris in the yeere 1575. The next is EPIDIVM; which, by the name, I would gueſſe, with that excellent Geographer Gerard Mercator, lay neere unto the promontorie of the Epidij, and to the ſhore. And ſeeing there ſtandeth apparently in E the ſame ſituation, an Iland called Ila, of good largeneſſe and of a fruitfull plaine and champion ſoile, I dare avouch, that this was, Epidium, or the Iſle of the Epidij; for, in ſome places it is read Επιδιον. This carrieth in length 24. miles, and is 16. miles broad: ſo plentifull of cattaile, wheat, & heards of red deere, that it was the ſecond ſeat next unto Man, for the King of the Jlands, as it is at this day of the Mac-Connells, who heerein have their Caſtle at Dunyweg. Betwixt Ila and Scotland lieth Iona, which Bede tearmeth Hy and Hu, given by the Picts unto the Scottiſh Monkes, for propagating and preaching of the Goſpell among them: where ſtood a Monaſterie, famous by reaſon of the Scotiſh Kings tombes and the frequent converſing of holy men therein: among whom, Columba the Apoſtle of the Picts was the principall: of F whoſe Cell, the Iland alſo is called Columb-Kill, like as the man alſo himſelfe: by a compound name, was tearmed Columbkill, as Bede witneſſeth. And heere at length, as ſome will have it, a Biſhops ſeat was ordained, in Sodore, a little towne, whence all the Iſles were called alſo, Sodorenſis; for, that it is reckoned to be in his Diœceſſe. Then have you MALEOS, that Ptolemee writeth of, now called Mula: whereof Plinie ſeemeth to make mention, when he ſaith, Mella is reported to be 25. miles larger than the reſt. For, ſo we read in the moſt ancient edition of Plinie printed at Venis, A whereas in the Vulgar copies, in ſteed of Reliquarum Mella, is read, Reliquarum nulla, that is, None of the reſt &c. The Eaſterne HEBVDA now called Skie, from hence lieth out in a great length over againſt the ſhore or coaſt of Scotland: the Weſterne HEBVDA bending more Weſtward, is now called Lewis (the Lord whereof is Mac-Cloyd) & in the ancient hiſtorie of Man is named Lodhus, full of ſteep & craggy little hilles, ſtony, & very ſlenderly inhabited: howbeit the largeſt of thē all; from which, Euſt is diſioined with a very narrow waſh. All the reſt ſave onely Hyrtha, are of ſmall account, being either very ſtonie, or elſe inacceſſible by reaſon of craggy cliffes, and skarce clad with any green-ſord. Yet the Scots purchaſed all theſe with their ready money of the Norwegians (as I have ſaid before) as if they had beene the very B buttreſſes or pillers of the Kingdome: although they reape very ſmall commodity thereby: conſidering that the inhabitants, the ancient true Scots or Iriſh, being men of ſtout ſtomackes and deſperate boldneſſe, will by no meanes be ſubject to the ſeverity of lawes, or awed by juſtice. As touching their maners, apparell and language, they differ nothing at all from the wild Iriſhry of whom we have ſpoken before: ſo that we may eaſily know thereby, that they be one and the ſelfe ſame nation originally. They that beare the ſway and doe rule in theſe Ilands are the families of Mac-Conel, Mac-Alen, whom others tearme Mac-len, Mac-Cloyd of Lewis, and Mac-Cloyd of Harich. But the mightieſt houſe of them all is that of the Mac-Conells, who glory in their pedigree, as derived from Donald, who in the reigne of Iames the C third, ſtiled himſelfe King of the Ilands, and with all kind of cruelty in moſt ſavage and barbarous maner plagued Scotland: which notwithſtanding, his ſonne being outlawed paid deerely, as forced to ſubmit his whole eſtate abſolutely unto the Kings will and pleaſure, and had of his gift ſome poſſeſſions aſſigned to him in Cantire. In the foregoing age of this ſtocke their flouriſhed Donel Gormy, Mac-Conell, that is, The Blewe, happly ſo ſurnamed of his apparel. He had iſſue two ſonnes, Agnus Mac-Conell, and Alexander, he who leaving this baraine and hungry Cantir, invaded the Glinnes in Ireland. Agnus Mac-Conell aforeſaid, was father of Iames Mac-Conell ſlaine by Shan O Neal, and of Surley Boy; upon whom Queene Elizabeth of her bounty beſtowed lands in Rout within Ireland. Iames Mac-Conell had iſſue Agnus D

than

Mac-Conell, of whom I have ſpoken before, betweene whom and Mac-Clen, there was ſuch a deepe and inveterate hatred, that the force of conſanquinity was never able to quench the fuid: but that they polluted themſelves moſt wickedly with one anothers bloud. From theſe Hæbudes, if you hold ſailes along by the ſhore toward the North-eaſt, you may at length diſcover the ORCADES, now called ORKNEY being thirty Ilands or there about, ſundred by the Ocean which hath his walke and currant betweene them. A certaine ancient fragment ſo calleth them, as one would ſay Argat, that is, as the ſame interpreteth it, Above the Getes: but I would rather expound it, Above Cath: for, it lieth over againſt Cath, a country of Scotland, which of the Promontory they uſe to call Cathneſſe: the inhabitants whereof ſeeme to be named E amiſſe by Ptolemee CARINI for CATINI. In Solinus his time no man dwelled in them, but overgrowen they were Vinceis or Iunceis, herbis, that is, With binding or ruſhy weeds: but now, inhabited indeede they are, yet deſtitute of woods, bearing barley good ſtore, and altogether without wheat. Among theſe, Pomonia famous for an Epiſcopall See, is the principall: called by Solinus POMONA Diutina, for the length of the daies there: now the inhabitants tearme it Mainland, as if it were the continent or maine; adorned with the Biſhops ſeat in Kirkwale a little towne, & with two caſtles: it yeeldeth plenty of tinne and of lead. OCETIS alſo is reckoned by Ptolemee in number of theſe, which now we gueſſe to be named Hethy.

But whether Hey, which is counted one of theſe, be Plinies DVMNA or no, I could F never yet reſolve. Surely if it be not, I would thinke, that Faire Iſle, the onely towne whereof (for it hath but one) they call Dumo, is that Dumna rather than with Becanus judge Wardhuys in Lappeland to be it. Iulius Agricola, who firſt of all ſailed round about Britaine with his fleet, diſcovered out of theſe Iſles of Orkney, which till that time

A time were unknowen and ſubdued them, if we may beleeve Tacitus, but queſtionleſſe they were knowen in the time of Claudius the Emperor, for Pomponius Mela who then lived mentioneth them. Yet doubtleſſe Oroſius is vntrue in that he writeth that Claudius conquered them, & ſo far is it off that Claudius ſhould conquer them (which is avouched in S. Hieroms Chronicles) that Iuvenal in Hadrians time not long after Agricola wrot thus of them.

Arma quid ultra
Littora Iuvernæ promovimus, et modo captas
B Orcades, & minima contentos nocte Britannos?

Why warred we paſt Iriſh coaſts, and Orkneys lately wun?
Beyond the Britans, where there is leaſt night and longeſt Sun?

Afterward when the Romans Empire in Britaine was vtterly decaied, now the Saxons, as it ſeemeth, were ſeated in them: for Claudian the Poet plaied upon them in theſe tearmes.

——Maduerunt Saxone fuſo.
C Orcades.——

With Saxons bloud that there were ſlaine
The Orkneys was imbrued againe.

Ninnius alſo writeth, that Octha and Ebiſſus Saxons, who ſerved for pay under the Britans, ſailed round about the Picts with 40. Cyules, that is, Flyboats or Roaving Pinnaces, and waſted the Iles of Orkney. After this, they came into the hands of the Norwegians (whence it is, that the inhabitants ſpeake the Gothes language) by the grant of Donald Ban, who after the death of his brother Malcom Can-Mor, King of D Scots, by excluding his nephewes, had uſurped the Kingdome, that by their helpe, he might be aſſiſted in that intended ambition: and the Norwegians held the poſſeſſion of them unto the yeere of ſalvation 1266. for then, Magnus the fourth of that name, King of Norway, being by the Scots that warred upon him brought to diſtreſſe ſurrendred them up againe unto Alexander the third King of the Scots by covenant and compoſition, which Haquin King of the Norwegians confirmed unto King Robert Brus, in the yeere 1312. And at length in the yeere 1498. Chriſtian the firſt, King of Norway and of Denmarke, renounced all his right for himſelfe and his ſucceſſours, when he affianced his daughter unto Iames the third King of Scots, and made over all his intereſt to his ſaid ſonne in law and his ſucceſſours: and for the ſtronger
E aſſurance thereof, the Popes confirmation was procured to ratifie the ſame.

To ſay nothing of the Earles of Orkney, that were of more ancient times, who alſo in right of inheritance obtained the Earldomes of Cathneſſe and of Strathern, at the laſt the title of Orkney came by an heire female unto Sir William Sent-cler: and William the fourth of this line called The prodigall Earle, for waſting his patrimony, was the laſt Earle of this race. Howbeit, his poſterity enjoyed the honour to be Baron Sent-cler, unto theſe daies. And the title of Cathnes remaineth ſtill in the poſterity of his brother. But within our remembrance this honourable title of the Earle of Orkney and Lord of Shetland was conferred upon Robert a baſe ſon of King Iames the fifth; and Patrick Steward his ſonne enjoyeth the ſame at this preſent. Earles of Orkney.

F Beyond the Iles of Orkney and above Britaine, the author of that ancient Commentary upon Horace, placeth the Fortunate Ilands, wherein as they write, none dwel but devout and juſt men, and the Grecians in their verſes celebrate the pleaſantneſſe and fertility of the place, calling them the Elyſian fields: But as touching theſe Fortunate Iſles, take with you, if you pleaſe, another relation of that od fabulous Grecian, Iſacius Tzetzes out of his notes upon Lycophron: In the Ocean (ſaith he) is there a Britiſh Iland, betweene Weſt Britaine and Thule that looke toward the Eaſt. Thither men A ſay the ſoules of the dead are tranſported over: For on the ſhore of that ſea wherein the Iland of Britain lieth, there dwelt fiſher-men, ſubiect unto the French but paying them no tribute, becauſe (as they ſay) they ferry over the ſoules of folke departed. When theſe fiſhermen returne home in the evening: within a while after, they heare ſome knocking at the dore, and heare a voice calling them unto their work. Then riſe they, and to the ſhore they goe, not knowing what cauſeth them for to goe, where they ſee boates prepared, but none of their owne, and no men in them: which when they be entred into, they fall to their oares, and feele the weight of the ſaid boates, as if they were loden with men, but ſee no body. After that, with one puſh, they come to a Britiſh Iland in a trice, whereas otherwiſe in ſhippes of their owne they could hardly get thither with a day and nights ſailing. Now when they are B come into the Iland, then againe they ſee no creature, but heare a voice of thoſe that receive them that are a ſhip bord, and count them by the kinred of father and mother, yea and call them one by one according to their dignity, art, and name. But they, after that the ſhippe is diſcharged of her load returne home againe with one yerke of their oares. Hence it is, that many men thinke theſe be the Ilands of bleſſed ghoſtes.

Of the ſame ſtampe alſo may that Poeticall Geographer ſeeme to be, of whom Muretus maketh mention in his Variety of readings: who hath written that C. Iulius Cæſar went thither once in a great galley, with an hundred men a board: & when he was willing to haue ſeated himſelfe there (as being wonderouſly delighted with the incredible pleaſantneſſe of the place) hee was full againſt his will, and ſtrugling C what he could to the contrary, throwen out by thoſe inviſible inhabitants.

Thule. Five daies and nights ſailing from the Iſles of Orkney, Solinus placeth THVLE: An Iland, if any other, often celebrated by the Poets, whenſoever they would ſignifie any thing very remote and farre off, as if it were the furtheſt part of the whole world. Heereupon ſaith Virgill, Tibi ſerviat ultima Thule, that is, Let Thule moſt remote thee ſerve: Seneca, Terrarum ultima Thule, that is, Thule the furtheſt land that is: Iuvenall, De conducendo loquitur jam Rhetore Thule, that is, Now Thule ſpeakes, how Oratours to hire: Claudian, Thulen procul axe remotam, that is, Thule farre remote under the Pole, and in another place, Ratibuſque impervia Thule, And Thule whither ſhips can paſſe: Statius, Ignotam vincere Thulem, that is, To conquere Thule all unknowne: And Ammianus Marcellinus, by way of an Adage or proverbiall ſpeech, uſeth it in theſe words, Etiam ſi apud Thulem moraretur, that is, Although he made his abode even in Thule: To paſſe over other teſtimonies, give me leave yet to note thus much moreover, that the ſaid Statius uſed Thule, for Britaine, in theſe his verſes. D

Thule for Britaine.

Cærulus haud aliter cùm dimicat incola Thules,
Agmina falcifero circumuenit acta couino.
Even ſo the Blew inhabitants of Thule, when they fight,
Environ battailes, marching on with ſithed chariots might.

E

As alſo in this place of his Poem entituled Sylvæ, as it ſeemeth:

—— refluo circumſona gurgite Thule.
Thule that doth reſound amaine,
With Sea which ebbes and flowes againe.

Suidas writeth, that it tooke the name of Thules a King of Ægypt: Iſidore, of the Sunne: Reynerus Reneccius, of the Saxon word Tell, that is, A Limit, as if it were the bound of the North and Weſt.

But yet for all this, Syneſius doubteth, whether there were any Thule or no; and F our Giraldus Cambrenſis writeth, that it is no where extant to be ſeene: and the better ſort of learned men are of ſundry judgements concerning it. Moſt of them have affirmed Iſland, that is ſubiect to extreame ſharp cold and continuall winter, to have beene called in times paſt Thule.

Iſland.

But

A But Saxo Grammaticus, Crantzius, Milius, Iovius, & Peucerus are of a contrary opinion. Neither am I ignorant, that the vaſt and huge country of Scandia is deſcribed by Procopius under the name of Thule. But if that be true which the moſt learned Peucer hath recorded in his booke entituled De Dimenſione terræ, that is, Of the meaſuring of the Earth, That ſailers call Shetland, Thilenſel (neither dare I impeach his credit) then ſurely we have found Thule, and the matter is now at an end and queſtionleſſe. For this Shetland is an Iſle under the Scotiſh dominion, environed with other Iſlets, and the ſame is nipped with froſt and chilly cold, lying open alſo on every ſide unto bitter ſtormes; the inhabitants whereof, like as thoſe of Iſland uſe in ſteede of bread-corne, dried fiſh and the ſame braied and beaten, which we call Stockfiſh. And although it B have not the North-pole ſo elevated, that there is continuall day ſix moneths together, as Pitheas of Marſils hath feigned of Thule (for which he is juſtly taxed by Strabo): and this hapneth not to Iſland it ſelfe, where there is in manner a continuall Winter, and an intolerable ſetled cold: yet that a man ſhould thinke this Shetland to have been Thule, firſt the ſituation therof in Ptolemee may induce him, being ſet 63. degrees from the Aequinoctial, as Thule is in Ptolemee: againe for that it lieth betweene Norway and Scotland, where Saxo Grammaticus placeth Thule: then becauſe it is two daies ſailing diſtant from the point of Caledonia or Cathnes, according to which diſtance Solinus placeth Thule: Alſo, Tacitus ſaith, that the Romans kenned Thule a far off as they ſailed round about Britain by the Orcades: Laſtly becauſe it faC ceth the ſhore of Bergæ in Norway, againſt which place Thule lieth according to Pomponius Mela; in which Author the reading is corruptly Belgarum littori, in ſteed of Bergarum. For, Bergæ a Citie in Norway lieth over againſt Shetland: and Pliny nameth in this tract Bergos, which I doubt not but it is that little Country, wherein Bergae flouriſheth, like as no man will deny that Norway is Nerigon ſpecified by Pliny. But enough of this Thule, which ſnow and Winter weather, as one ſaith, hath hidden from the ancient writers, and from us to, I aſſure you: neither is any one of them able to ſay, which of the Northren Ilands they meant, when they ſpake ſo much of Thule. As touching the length of daies in that unknowen Iland, Feſtus Avienus, when he treated of Britaine, tranſlated out of Dionyſius theſe verſes.

Bergos. Nerigon.

D

Longa dehinc celeri ſi quis rate marmora curret,
Inveniet vaſto ſurgenten gurgite Thulen;
Hic cum plauſtra Poli tangit Phœbeius ignis,
Nocte ſub inluſtri rota Solis fomite flagrat
Continuo, clarumque diem nox æmula ducit.

E From hence if one with pinnace ſwift along the ſeas doth ſaile,
Thule above the Ocean vaſt to finde he ſhall not faile:
Heere, when about the Northren pole the Suns fyre doth ſejourne.
The night is lightſome, and his wheeles continually do burne,
The night, I ſay, reſembling day faire light makes ſoone returne.

Which Pomponius Mela likewiſe hath noted in theſe words. Oppoſite unto the coaſt of Bergæ lieth Thule; an Iland much renowned both in Greeke poems and in oures alſo. In it, for that the ſun riſeth and is to ſet far of, the nights verily are ſhort; But in Winter time, as elſewhere, darke; in Summer light: becauſe al that time he mounteth very high, although F his body be not ſeene, yet with his neere brightneſſe he doth lighten the parts next unto him. But about the Solſtice there be no nights at all, by reaſon that he being then more apparent, not onely caſteth bright beames from him: but ſheweth alſo the greateſt part of himſelfe.

Above theſe Ilands the ſea is termed, The ſlow, frozen, and Icy ſea, for that it is ſo rough by occaſion of the heaps of Ice, and ſcarce navigable.

The frozen ſea, or Cronium.

It is alſo named of Ancient writers CRONIVM, or Cronian ſea of Saturne; becauſe heere in a Britiſh Iland, as Plutarch recordeth, there goeth a tale, how Saturne is kept ſleeping in a deepe cave or botome of a golden pumiſh ſtone: that he is by Iupiter caſt into a moſt deepe and dead ſleepe which ſerveth inſteed of bonds: that birds bring him Ambroſia the divine meat, with the odoriferous ſmel whereof all the place is perfumed: Alſo that he hath many ſpirits or dæmones attending about him as ſervitours, who reverence him, ſerve him, and attend upon him: By which prety fable, (unleſſe I be deceaved) is covertly couched by a Mythiology that there lie hidden in theſe Ilands, veines or mines of Mettals, over which Saturne is preſident which notwithſtanding are forlet, and out of requeſt for want of wood to maintaine the fornaces. A

Now beneath Thule, Southward, the German ſea ſpreadeth it ſelfe wide, wherein as Pliny affirmeth, there lie diſperſed the ſeven ACMODAE, Mela tearmeth them HAEMODES; But ſeeing it is knowen for certaine, that theſe be Ilands belonging to Denmarke in the Codan Gulfe, namely Zeland, Fuynen, Lagland, Muen, Falſtor, Layland and Femerem, there is no cauſe wherefore I ſhould ſay any more; neither of the Iſle GLESSARIA or ELECTRIDA, ſo called of Amber caſt up there out of the Sea: which Sotacus ſuppoſed to drop forth of trees in Britain. But ſeeing that the ancient Germans called Amber Gleſſe, willing enough I am to thinke with that moſt learned man, Eraſmus Michael Lætus, that the Iland Leſſe, hard by Scagen, or Promontory of Denmarke, was in times paſt called GLESSARIA. Now within the German ſea on that ſide where it beateth upon Britaine, apeere very few Ilands, unleſſe they be thoſe that lie in Edenburrowgh Frith, namely, May, Baſſe, Keth, and Inche Colme, that is, Columbs Iſle. On the coaſt of Northumberland, over againſt the river Lied, one ſheweth it ſelfe, namely Lindiſ-farn: the Britans call it Inis Medicante, which, that I may uſe Bedes words, as the ſea ebbeth and floweth at his tides, is twiſe aday iundated and compaſſed about with water in maner of an Iland, and twice likewiſe made continent to the land, as the ſhore is laid bare again: whereupon he aptly termed it, a Demy Iland. The Weſt part of it being the narrower, and left unto conies, joyneth to the Eaſt ſide by a very ſmall ſpange of land: and this part which bendeth toward the South is much broader, having a prety towne in it with a Church, and a Caſtle: where ſometimes had beene that Epiſcopal See which Aidan the Scot (called thither to preach the Chriſtian faith unto the people of Northumberland) inſtituted, as being much delighted with the ſolitary ſituation, as a moſt fit place of retire. In this ſmall Iland there ſat eleven Biſhops. But afterwards when the Danes rifled and robbed all the Sea-coaſts, the Epiſcopall See was tranſlated to Durham. Vnder the towne, there is a good commodious haven, defended with a Block-houſe ſituate upon an hill toward the South Eaſt. B C D

Lindiſ-farne.

Holy Iland.

This, for the habitation therein of holy Monkes, is called in Engliſh Holy Iland. Concerning which, Alcuin in an epiſtle unto Egelred King of Northumberland writeth thus. A place more venerable than all the places in Britaine is left to the ſpoile of Pagans and Miſcreants: and where after the departure of S. Paulinus from Yorke, Chriſtian religion in our Nation firſt began; there it hath felt the firſt beginning of miſery and calamity. E

Farn Iſle.

Seven miles from hence South-Eaſtward, Farn Iſle ſheweth it ſelfe diſtant almoſt two miles from Banborrow Caſtle, encloſed within the moſt deepe Ocean and encircled about with craggy clifts, and this hath alſo in the middle well nere, a Fort belonging to it. Even in that place, as the report goeth, where Cuthbert Biſhop of Lindiſſarn, that Tutelar Saint and Patron of the Northren Engliſhmen, to the end he might wholy give himſelfe to the ſervice of God, built, as Bed ſaith in his life, a City fitting his government, and erected houſes in this City ſorting well thereto. For the whole building ſtood almoſt round in compaſſe, reaching from wall to wall the ſpace of foure or fiue perches. The wal it ſelfe on the Coaſt ſide was more than a mans height: for on the inſide with hewing downe into a mighty rock, he had made it far higher, ſufficient to withhold and keep in the wanton laſciviouſnes either of eies or thoughts, & to elevate the whole F

Bede in the life of Cuthbert.

intention

A intention of the minde up to heavenly desires, in such sort as that the devout inhabitants thereof could out of his mansion place behold nothing but the heaven. Which wall verily he made not of cut squared stone, or of bricke; nor laid the same with strong morter but raised altogether of coble and unpolished rough stones, and turffe betweene, which with digging he had taken out of the middest of the place. Of which stones verily, some were of that huge bignesse, as foure men were uneth able to lift one of them. Within this Mansion he had two houses, a Chappell, and a dwelling roume for common uses. The wals whereof he brought up of very natural earth, by digging much of it within and without round about, or else by paring it up. And roufes over them of timber without all forme and straw thereupon. Moreover, at the Haven of this Iland, there stood a greater house, wherein the B brethren that came to visit him might be entertained and lodged, and not farre from it a fountaine meet for their uses. Upon this, there adjoyne other smaller Ilands toward the North, as Widopens, Staple Iland, which lieth two miles off, Bronsman, and two lesser than these, which they call the Wambes.

After these, the Iland commonly called Coquet, lieth right before the mouth of the river Coquet, wherein is a plentifull veine of Sea-cole. Neither are there any more Ilands to be seen in this Coast: but over against it be the Saxonum Insulæ, that is, The Saxons Ilands, now named Heilich lant, that is, The Holy-Ilands, and they lie, as it were, in a continued range along East and West Frislands: Among which that was best knowen unto the Roman Captains, which Strabo called BIRCHANIS, Pliny BIRCHANA, and the Romans FABARIA, of the resemblance of a certaine
C Graine or Pulse comming up there of the owne accord: which that I may restore it againe to the due place (although it be nothing pertinent to my purpose) the very name it selfe witnesseth to be that Borkun which lieth over against the mouth of Ems. Somewhat lower upon the shore of Holland, where in ancient time was the mouth of Rhene, the foundations of a most ancient Store-house, Magazin or Armory are covered over with the waves, which being very seldome discovered and laide bare at a low eb of the Ocean, sheweth both an admirable spectacle of reverend antiquity, and also a most noble modell and forme of building; which, Abraham Ortelius the repairer of ancient Geography and my entire and inward friend hath preserved out of the maine Ocean by his exact discription thereof. I have mentioned this D the more willingly because the Hollanders call it in their language Huis te Britten, that is, the British house, so that it belongeth at least wise in name to Britain, and therfore not impertinent to my purpose. For as it is evident & cõfessed of all, that the Emperour C. Caligula, when he intended the conquest of Britaine, in that ridiculous voiage of his, built it for a watch-towre: so an ancient Inscription there digged up doth testifie, that the Emperour Septimius Severus, after it was fallen to decay rebuilt it. But whence it was named Britten, let him tell that best can guesse. Probable it is that it tooke this name from the Britans: for that Bretta the natall place of Philip Melanchthon tooke name of the Britans, he himselfe was fully perswaded: and that Mounts in Heinault were of the Britans tearmed Breten, we have read elsewhere. But E yet (that I may speake as Plinie doth) seeing he mervaileth why the Herbe that is peculier unto Holland as growing no where else, is called Britannica; unlesse perhaps, those that bordered upon the Ocean dedicated it unto Britaine so neere unto it: so for my part I wonder as much, why this towre should be tearmed Britannica, or Bretten, unlesse the Holanders consecrated it to our Britain, lying opposite unto it. Pliny calleth a place in Picardy Portum Morinorum Britannicum, that is, The British haven or Port of the Morines, either for that they tooke ship there to passe over into Britain, or because it kenned Britain over against it on the other side of the sea. Why then should not this towre by the same reason be called Britannica or Breten? For that the Britans often arrived heere, and that from hence out of Germany there was a com-
F mon passage into Britain, it is most certaine; considering that Zosimus hath given the iust measure of the sea betwixt Britain and this mouth of Rheine, to be 900. stadia over, as though it had beene an usuall passage: and written beside, that corne was wont to be brought by ships out of Britaine to this place, and from thence with barges and boates haled up the Rhene against the streame to serue the Roman garisons:

Saxon Ilands. Lib. 7.

Birchanis.

Borkun.

The British Armory or Store-house.

Holland coast.

Briten huis.

Portus Morinorum Britannicus.

The Chamaui dwelt therby, as appereth out of the Embassages of Eunapius.

seeing that Iulian the Emperour built Garisons as Marcellinus saith, wherein might be A inned and kept thecorne that the Britans usually transported thither.

At which time, this said Armory may seeme to have beene converted into a Burgus what it is. Garner or Store-house for Corne, and of the said British Corne tearmed Britannicum: and so much the rather, because in the old Records of Holland, we finde it written Britanburg: for that age tearmed Castles standing commodiously, and such as were stored with plenty of Corne, Burghs, as we read in the history of the Burgundians. Moreover, what if the Britans (that in this doubtfull matter, I may run out of one conjecture to another) sometimes held it in their owne hands, and so adopted it into their owne name? Considering they invested Magnus Maximus, whom some name Clemens Maximus in the purple Robe, and proclaimed him Emperour against B Gratian? For he arrived at this mouth of Rhene. If againe, it had not as yet taken this Zosimus l. 4. name Britannicum, what if the Saxons tearmed it Huis te Britten, for that they tooke ship from hence into Britaine when they annoied our shores with their Cyules? for so they tearmed their Pinnaces or Brigantines. Verily Zosimus sheweth that the Saxons after they had driven out the Frankers called Salij, planted themselves in Batavia, that is, Holland: and that from thence they put over by multitudes into Britaine, it is most cleere and evident. Which also as I said before, Ianus Douza, a noble Gentleman indeed and passing well learned, in his Ode of Leyden seemeth to imply: yet Saxons in Holland. Ianus Douza In his Nomenclator.
Britten an Herbe. heare againe, lest I might seeme too forward and lavish in setting fourth the glory of Britaine; considering, That the right learned Hadrian Iunius, borne and C bred in Holland, hath fetched the originall of the Herbe Britannica from Britten a word of his owne country, because it groweth plentifully upon those turffes which they call Britten, and whereof they raise great bankes and dikes against the violence of the encroching Ocean; it will be no absurdity, if one should reduce this Huis te Britten, unto the same originall: and suppose it to have beene so called because it was fensed with bankes of turffe, or of Britten, set opposite against the forcible surges of the waves; which when the surges if the sea had once pierced and overthrowen, it may seeme to have borne downe this house also. But let them see to these matters who have a deeper insight into the nature of the word and the situation of the place: and pardon me withall, if heere I have thrust my sicle into anothers harvest. D Zeland. In that Coast, there be also Isles of Zeland compassed about with the rivers Scaldt
See pag. 333. & 441. Toliapis. Caunus. Canvey. See in Essex. Shepey. Maese, and the Ocean, Touching which I will only adde thus much, That the name of Valachria (for of these this is the chiefe) as Lemnius Levinus conjectureth, came from our Welshman. Over against Zeland, Tamis the goodliest and noblest river of Britain discharged himselfe into the sea: in which place Ptolomee setteth TOLIAPIS and CAVNA, or CONVENNON. Of Toliapis which I suppose to be Shepey, see in Kent. Of Convennos I have spoken in Essex in the page 441.

More Eastward without Tamis mouth, there lieth along before the Iland Tenet, a place full of shelves and sands, and very dangerous for saylers, which they call Goodwins sands, where our Annales doe record, that in the yeere 1097. an Iland which E
Goodwin Sands. was the patrimony of Goodwin Earle of Kent, was quite swallowed up and sunke in the sea: Concerning which, Iohn Twin writeth thus. This land was very fruitfull, and full of plenteous pastures, lying somewhat lower and more flat than Tenet; out of which, there was a passage by boat or barge three or foure miles long. This Iland in an unusuall tempest of winds, and boisterous fury of stormy raines, and uncouth rage of the sea, was drowned, and lieth overwhelmed with sand cast up after an incredible manner, and without all recovery is turned into a middle or doubtfull nature of land and sea. For I wot well what I say, because one while it wholy floteth, and another while at a low water after an eb, it beareth walkers upon it. Happily this is Toliapis, unlesse you had rather read Thanatos, for Toliapis, and in some Copies we read it Toliatis, of which we have treated in F
Some call it Lomea. Kent. See the 345. page.

In this very place, the huge vastnesse of the sea gathereth into such a streight, that the gullet of the Ocean betweene the firme land of France and Britain, is not aboue
The Brittish narrow Sea. thirty miles over, which Streights some call the Narrow sea of Britain, others of France (and the bound it is of the British sea) which by little and little removeth the shores

A ſhores farther aſunder, that were in maner meeting together, and by the driving backe of the lands on both ſides equally, floweth betweene Britaine and France from Eaſt to Weſt. At this beginneth the Britiſh Sea: wherein firſt you meete with the Jland, or byland rather, Selſy; in the Engliſh Saxon tongue, Seolf-ea, that is, according to Bede, The Ilanā of Sea-calves, which in our tongue we call otherwiſe Seales. But heereof I have ſpoken already in the page 308.

Somewhat higher, lieth the Iſle Vecta, in the Britiſh tongue Guith, in the Saxon, Wuiht-land, and Wicht-ea, for the Saxons tearmed an Iland ea, wee The Iſle of Wight, and Whight. Whereof alſo I have written before in the 273. page. *

B Of Port-land likewiſe, which now is no Iland, but annexed to the continent, I haue treated heeretofore in Dorſetſhire in the page 210.

Hence will I cut over to the ſhore of France juſt againſt it; where from Beer-fleet in Normandie unto the mids of the Chanell, the ſea, by the Mariners ſaying, is paved, as it were, and overſpred with rockes and cragges: among which, William ſonne to King Henrie the firſt, and heire both of England and of Normandie, whiles he croſſed the ſeas out of Normandie into England, in the yeere of Salvation 1120. was by wofull ſhipwracke, together with his ſiſter, his baſe brother and others, of the flowre of Nobility, drowned. Whereupon a Poet of that age thus verſified.

C Abſtulit hunc terræ matri maris vnda nouerca,
Proh dolor! occubuit Sol Anglicus, Anglia plora:
Quæq; priùs fueras gemino radiata nitore,
Extincto nato viuas contenta parente.

Him, from the land his mother kind, the Sea a ſtepdame caught;
Now Englands Sunne, alaſſe, is ſet: weepe England, weepe for thought
And thou that didſt enjoy the beames of twofold light before,
Since Sonne is gone, content thy ſelfe with father and no more

Funus plangendum, priuat lapis æquoris vnus,
D Et ratis vna ſuo principe regna duo.

O dolefull day: one rocke in Ocean maine,
One barke, of Prince bereaveth kingdomes twaine.

And another Poet at the ſame time, hammered out theſe verſes touching that ſhipwracke.

Dum Norman nigenæ Gallis claris ſuperatis,
Anglica regna petunt, obſtitit ipſe Deus:
Aſpera nam fragili dum ſulcant æquora cymba,
Intulit excito nubila denſa mari.
E Dumq; vagi cæco rapiuntur tramite nautæ,
Ruperunt imas abdita ſaxa rates.
Sic mare dum ſuperans tabulata per vltima ſerpit
Merſit rege ſatos, occidit orbis honos.

Whiles Normans after victories of Noble Frenchmen wonne,
Make ſaile for England, God himſelfe withſtood them all anon.
For as the rough and ſurging waves they cut with brittle barke,
He brought upon the troubled ſea thicke fogges and weather darke.
Whiles ſailers then in coaſts unknowen were driven and hal'd, aſtray
Upon blind rockes their ſhips were ſplit and quickly caſt away.
F Thus when ſaltwater entred in, and upmoſt hatches caught,
Drown'd was that Roiall progenie, worlds honor came to naught.

More Weſtward, certaine Ilands affront France, yet under the Crowne of England: and firſt of all, upon the coaſt of Normandie, or the Lexoby (whom our Britans or Welſhmen tearme Lettaw, as one would ſay Littorales, that is, Coaſt-men, lieth Alderney, Alderney. Alderney, which in the Records is named Aurney. Aureney and Aurigney: ſo that it may ſeeme to be that ARICA, which in Antonine, according to the King of Spaines copie is reckoned among the Iſles of the Britiſh ſea. Others hold it to be that EBODIA or EVODIA whereof Paulus Diaconus onely hath made mention, who had ſmall skill of this coaſt; which he placeth thirty miles from the ſhore of Seine, and telleth of a rumbling & roaring noiſe of waters falling into a gulfe or Charibdis that is heard a far off. This Alderney lieth in the chiefe trade of all ſhipping paſſing from the Eaſterne parts to the Weſt: three leagues diſtant from the coaſt of Normandie, thirty from the neareſt part of England, extended from South Eaſt to the North Weſt, and containeth about eight miles in circuit, the South ſhore conſiſting of high cliffes. The aire is healthfull, the ſoile ſufficiently rich, full of freſh paſtures and cornfields: yet the inhabitants poore through a cuſtome of parting their lands into ſmal parcels by Gavelkind. The towne is ſituate well neere in the midſt of the Iſle having a Pariſh Church and about 80. families, with an harbour called Crabbic ſome mile off. On the Eaſt ſide there is an ancient fort, & a dwelling houſe built at the charge of the Chamberlans: For the fee farme of the Iſle was granted by Queene Elizabeth to G. Chamberlane ſon to Sir Leonard Chamberlane of Shirburne in Oxfordſhire when he recovered it from the French. And vnder this fort, the ſand with violent drifts from the Northweſt overlaied the land, ſo that now it ſerveth thereabout, moſt for conies.

I know not whether I were beſt to relate of a Giants tooth, one of the grinders, which was found in this Iland, of that bigge ſize, that it equalled a mans fiſt; ſeeing Saint Auguſtine writeth of one, that himſelfe ſaw ſo bigge, that if it were cut in ſmall peeces to the proportion of our teeth, it ſeemed it might have made an hundred of them.

Hence Weſtward there runneth out a craggy ridge of rockes, which haue their ſeuerall eddies, and therefore feared of the Mariners, who tearme them Caſquettes. Out of one of the which properly named Caſquet there guſheth a moſt ſweet ſpring of freſhwater to the great comfort of the Iland-fiſhermen beating up and downe heereabout. At theſe, to remember incidently (that the memorie of a well deſeruing patriot may not periſh) the fleet which Iohn Philipot Citizen of London ſet forth and manned at his owne priuate charges, had a glorious victorie over a rable of pirates who impeached all traffique, taking their capitaine and fifteene Spaniſh ſhips that conſorted with them. Which worthy man alſo maintained 1000. ſouldiours at his owne pay for defenſe of the realme againſt the French who ſore infeſted the Southern coaſt in the beginning of the reigne of King Richard the ſecond, to omit his great loanes to the K. and other good and laudable offices to his country. Under theſe, lieth Southward, CAESAREA, wherof Antonine hath written, ſcarce twelve miles diſtant from Alderney, which name, the Frenchmen now haue clipped ſo ſhort, as the Spaniards haue CAESARAVGVSTA in Spaine: for they, call it Gearzey, like as Cherburgh, for Cæſarisburgus, and Saragoſe, for Cæſar auguſta. Gregorius Turonenſis calleth it, The Iland of the ſea that lieth to the Citie Conſtantia, where he reporteth, how Pretextatus Biſhop of Roan was confined hither: like as Papirius Maſſonius termeth it, The Iſle of the coaſt of Conſtantia, becauſe it butteth juſt upon the ancient City Conſtantia, which may ſeeme in Ammianus to be named CASTRA CONSTANTIA, and in the foregoing ages, Moritonium. For Robert Montenſis writeth thus: Comes Moritonij, id eſt Conſtantiarum: if that be not a gloſſe of the tranſcriber. For, Moritonium, which now is Mortaigne, is farther diſtant from the ſea.

Gerney.

Caſtra Conſtantia. Moritanum.

This Iſle is thirty miles or there about in compaſſe, fenced with rockes & ſhelves, which are ſhallow places, dangerous for ſuch as ſaile that way. The ground is fertile enough, bearing plenty of ſundry ſorts of corne, and breeding cattaile of divers kinds: but ſheepe eſpecially, and moſt of them with faire heads carrying foure hornes a peece. The aire is very wholſome and healthy, not ſubject to any other diſeaſes but agues in September, which thereupon they tearme Setembers, ſo that there is no being for Phiſicians heere. And, for that it is ſcarce of fuell, in ſteed of Caſquettes.

fire

A fire wood they uſe a kind of Sea weed which they call Vraic, deemed to be that Fucus Marinus which Plinie mentioneth, and groweth every where about in craggy Ilands, and on rockes moſt plenteouſly. This being dried at the fire ſerveth for to burne, with the aſhes whereof (as it were with Marle and the fat of the Earth) they dung commonly their fields and fallows, & therby make them very battle and fruitfull. Neither are they permitted to gather it, but in the Spring and ſummer ſeaſon; and then, upon certaine daies appointed by the Magiſtrate. At which time, with a certaine feſtivall mirth, they repaire in numbers from all parts to the ſhore with their carres, as alſo to the rockes neere unto them they ſpeed themſelves a vie with their
B fiſherbotes. But whatſoever of this kind the ſea caſteth up, the poore may gather for their owne uſe. The inward parts of the Iſle gently riſe and ſwell up with prety hilles: under which lie pleaſant vallies watered with riverets, and planted with fruitfull trees but aple trees eſpecially, of which they make a kind of drinke. Well ſtored it is with farme places and villages, having within it twelve Pariſhes, & furniſhed on every ſide with creekes and commodious rodes: among which, the ſafeſt is that in the South part of the Iſle, betweene the two little townes, Saint Hilaries, and Saint Albans: which harbour hath alſo a little Iland belonging to it fortified with a gariſon, having no way of acceſſe unto it: wherein, by report, Saint Hilarie Biſhop of Poictiers after he had beene baniſhed hither, was enterred. For, the towne dedica-
C ted to his name juſt over againſt this Iland is accounted the principall towne, both in regard of the mercate and trafficke there, as alſo of the Court of Iuſtice which is there eſtabliſhed. On the Eaſt-ſide, where it faceth the Citie Conſtantia, there is ſeated upon a ſteep rocke a moſt ſtrong Caſtle, with an haughty name called Mont Orgueil, which is much beholden unto King Henrie the fifth who repaired it. The Gouernour of the Iſle is Captaine thereof, who in times paſt was called the Cuſtos of the Iſle, and in Henrie the third his reigne had a yeerely penſion of 200. pound. On the South ſide, but with longer diſtance betweene, Saint Malo is to be ſeene, having taken that new name of Maclou a very devout man where before time it was called the Citie Diablintum, and in the ancient Notice ALETVM: For in a Manuſcript of Iſi-
D dor Mercator, we read thus in expreſſe tearmes, Ciuitas Diablintum &c. that is, The Citie Diablintum which by another name is called Aletum. As for the inhabitants, they freſhly practiſe the feat of fiſhing, but giue their minds eſpecially to husbandry: & the women make a very gainfull trade by knitting of hoſe, which we call Iarſey Stockes or Stockings.

As touching the politicke ſtate thereof, a Gouernour ſent from the King of England is the chiefe Magiſtrate: hee appointeth a Bailiffe, who together with twelve Iurates or ſworne Aſsiſtants, and thoſe choſen out of the twelve ſeverall Pariſhes, by the voices of the Pariſhioners, ſitteth to miniſter juſtice in Civill cauſes: in criminall matters, he ſitteth but with ſeven of the ſaid ſworne aſſiſtants, and in cauſes of E Conſcience to be decided by equity and reaſon with three.

Twenty miles hence North-weſt, lieth another Iland which Antonine the Emperour in ancient time named SARNIA, we at this day Garnſey, lying out Eaſt and Weſt in faſhion of an harpe, neither in greatnes nor in fruitfulneſſe comparable to Ierſey: for it hath in it only ten Pariſhes: yet is this to be preferred before it, becauſe it foſtereth no venemous thing therin, like as the other doth. It is alſo better fortified by naturall fenſes, as being encloſed round with a ſet of ſteepe rockes, among which is found that moſt hard and ſharpe ſtone Smyris (which we tearme Emerill) where-F with Goldſmiths & Lapidaries cleanſe, burniſh and cut their precious ſtones, & glazers alſo divide and cleave their glaſſe. Likewiſe it is of greater name, for the commodiouſneſſe of the haven and the concurſe of merchants reſorting thither. For, in the fartheſt part well nere, Eaſtward, but on the South-ſide, it admitteth an haven within an hollow Bay bending inward like an halfe moone, able to receive tall ſhips; upon which ſtandeth Saint Peters, a little towne built with a long and narrow ſtreet, well ſtored with warlike munition, and ever as any war is toward mightily repleniſhed with Merchants. For by an ancient priviledge of the Kings of England, heere

is Vraic.

Fucus Marinus

Sarnia.
Garnſey.
Haply Granaby a tranſpoſition of letters, which the Notitiæ placeth in the Tract of Armorica.
Smyris.

is alwaies a continuall truce, as it were : and lawfull it is for Frenchmen and others, A how hote soever the war is, to have repaire hither to and fro without danger, and to maintaine entercourse of trafficke in security. The entry of the haven, which is rockie, is fortified on both sides with castles. On the left hand there is an ancient bulwarke or blockhouse, and on the right hand over against it, standeth another (called Cornet) upon an high rocke, and the same at every high water compassed about with the sea. Which in Queene Maries daies, Sir Leonard Chamberlan, governour of the Iland, as also under Queene Elizabeth, Sir Thomas Leighton, his successour, caused to be fortified with new workes. For, heere lieth for the most part the governour of the Iland, and the garison souldiers: who will in no hand suffer Frenchmen, & women to enter in. On the Northside there is La-vall a biland adjoining unto it, B which had belonging thereto a covent of religious persons, or a Priory. On the West part neere unto the sea, there is a lake, that taketh up a mile and halfe in compasse, repleniſhed with fish, but carpes especially, which for bigneſſe and pleasant tast are right commendable. The inhabitants are nothing so industrious in tilling of the ground as those of Iarsey, but in navigation and trafficke of merchandise, for a more uncertaine gaine they be very paintull. Every man by himselfe loveth to husband his owne land, so that the whole Iland lieth in severall, and is divided by enclosures into sundry parcels: which they find not onely profitable to themselves, but also a matter of strength against the enimie. Both Ilands smile right pleasantly upon you, with much variety of greene Gardens and orchards: By meanes whereof, they C use for the most part a kind of wine made of aples, which some call Sisera, and we Sydre. The inhabitants in both places are by their first originall, either Normans or Britans and speake French: yet disdaine they to be either reputed or named French; and can very well be content to be called English. In both Ilands likewise they burne Vraic for their fuell, or else sea coles brought out of England: and in both places they have wonderfull store of fish, and the same maner of civill government.

Normandie lost.

These Ilands with others lying about them belonged in old time to the Dukedome of Normandie, but when as Henrie the first King of England had vanquished his brother Robert in the yeere of our Lord 1108. he annexed that Dukedome and these Ilands unto the kingdome of England. Since which time, they have continued firme D in loyalty unto England, even when Iohn King of England being endited for murdering Arthur his nephew, was by a definitive sentence or arrest of confiscation depriued of his right in Normandie, which he held in chiefe of the French King, yea moreover when the French had seized upon these Isles, hee through the faithfull affection of the people twice recovered them. Neither revolted they when Henrie the third King of England had for a summe of money, surrendred his whole interest and right in Normandie. And ever since, they have with great commendation of their constancy persisted faithfull unto the Crowne of England, and are the onely remaines, that the Kings of England have of the ancient inheritance of William the Conquerour, and of the Duchie of Normandie: although the French other- E whiles have set upon them, who from the neighbour coast of France, haue hardly this long time endured to see them appertaine not to France but to England. And verily Euan a Welsh gentleman descended from the Princes of Wales, and serving the French King suppriſed Garnsey in the time of King Edward the third: but Tillet.

soone lost it. And also in the reigne of King Edward the fourth, as appeereth by the records of the Realme, they seized upon the same: but through the valour of Richard Harleston, valect of the Crowne (for so they tearmed him in those daies) they were shortly disseized, and the King in recompense of his valorous service gave unto him the Captainship both of the Iland and of the Castle. And in the yeere 1549. when England under King Edward the sixth a childe, was distressed with domesticall F troubles, Leo Strozzi Captaine of the French Gallies gave the attempt to invade it, but with the losse of many of his men had the foile, & desisted from his enterprise.

As touching the Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction, they were under the Bishop of Constance in Normandy, untill that he in our remembrance refused to abjure the Popes authority

authority in England (as our Biſhops doe). Since which time, they were by Queene Elizabeth ſevered from the Diœceſſe of Conſtance, and united for ever to the Diœceſſe of Wincheſter, ſo as the Biſhop of Wincheſter and his ſucceſſours execute every thing appertaining to the Epiſcopall iuriſdiction: yet their Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline is conformable to the Church of Geneva, which the French Miniſters haue brought in. As for the civill cuſtomes of theſe Ilands, I could now note ſome of them out of the Kings Records, namely, How King Iohn inſtituted twelve Coroners ſworne to keepe the pleas and rights belonging to the Crowne, and granted for the ſecurity of the Ilanders, that the Bailiffe henceforth by adviſe of the Coroners, might plead without writ of a new deſſeiſin made within the yeere, of the death of any anceſtours and predeceſſours within a yeere, of dowry likewiſe within a yeere &c. Moreover, that the ſaid Iuries may not delay their iudgements beyond the tearme of one yeere: likewiſe that in Cuſtomes and other things they ſhould be dealt withall, as naturall inborne inhabitants and not as ſtrangers or forrainers. But theſe points I think good to leaue unto others, who may ſearch more curiouſly into particulars. Generally, the cuſtomes of Normandy take place heere in moſt caſes.

Touching Serke a little Iland, that lieth betweene theſe above named, walled about, as it were, with mighty ſteepe rockes, in which I. de S. Owen of Iarſey (whoſe antiquity of deſcent ſome avouch (I know not upon what credit & authority) from before Saint Owens time, by commiſſion from Queene Elizabeth, and for his owne commodity, as the report goeth, made a plantation, whereas before time it lay deſolate: as touching Iethow, which for the uſe of the Governour of Garnſey ſerveth in ſteed of a parke, to feed cattaile, to keepe Deere, conies, and pheſants: as alſo touching Arme, which being larger than the other, was firſt a ſolitary place for Regular Chanons, and after for the Franciſcane Friers; ſeeing they are not mentioned by the old writers, I have no reaſon to ſpeake much of them. Serke.

After theſe, upon the ſame coaſt, LIGA, whereof Antonine maketh mention, ſhooteth up his head, which retaineth the name ſtill and is now called Ligon. Then, lie there ſpred and ſcattered ſeven Ilands, tearmed by Antonine SIADAE, of the number: for Saith in the Britiſh tongue betokeneth ſeven; which the Frenchmen at this day tearme Leſet Iſles: and I ſuppoſe theſe Siades to be corruptly called Hiadate by Strabo: for, from theſe, as hee ſaith, it is not a daies ſailing into the Iland of Britaine. From theſe SIADAE to BARSA, whereof Antonine alſo hath made mention, there is the diſtance of ſeven furlongs: The Frenchmen call it The Iſle de Bas and Engliſh Baſepole: For, the Britans tearme that Bas, which is ſhallow, and the Mariners by ſounding find the ſea in this place to be more ebbe and ſhallow: as which lieth not above ſeven or eight fathoms deepe: whereas along all the ſhore beſide, the ſea carrieth 12. 18. and twenty fathoms of water, as we may ſee in their Hydrographicall cards. Howbeit, betweene theſe Ilands and Foy in Cornwall this our Britiſh ſea, as mariners have obſerved, is of a mighty depth which they meaſure to be in the chanell fifty eight fathoms deepe, or there about. From hence I will now cut over to the coaſts of our owne Britaine, and keeping along the ſhore, as I paſſe by Ideſton, Mouſhole, & Longſhips (which be rather infamous and dangerous rockes than Ilands) at the very utmoſt point of Cornwall, lieth Antonines LISIA, now called of them that dwell thereby Lethowſow; but of others The Gulfe, ſeene onely at a low water when the tide is returned. I take this to be that Liſia which ancient writers doe mention; becauſe Lis (as I have heard among our Britans in Wales) ſignifieth the ſame. For, Liſo ſoundeth as much as to make a noiſe with a great rumbling or roaring, ſuch as commonly we heere in Whirlepits: and in that place the currant or tide of the Ocean ſtriveth a maine with a mighty noiſe both Northward and Eaſtward to get out, as being reſtreined and pent in, betweene Cornwall and the Ilands which Antonine calleth SIGDELES, Sulpitius Seuerus SILLINAE, Solinus SILVRES, Engliſhmen Silly, the low country Sea-men, Sorlings, and the ancient Greeke writers tearme HESPERIDES, and CASSITERIDES. For, Dionyſius Alexandrinus named them Heſperides of their Weſterne ſituation, in theſe verſes. Set-Iles. Barſa. Baſepole. Where the Britiſh ſee is deepeſt. Liſia by tranſpoſition of letters Silia.

---αὐτὰρ

A

.....αὐτὰρ ἔπ' ἄκρην
Ἴρλιν ἣν ἐνέπουσι κάρλιν ἔμεν Ευρωπείης
Νήσους δ' Εσπερίδας, τὰς δὴ κραιπνότερον γενέθλη,
Ἀφρικοὶ ναίουσιν ἀγαυῶν παῖδες Ἰβήρων.

Which Priſcian tranſlated thus:

*Sed * ſummam contra Sarcam, cognomine dicunt*
Quam caput Europæ, ſunt ſtanni pondere plenæ Heſperides, populus tenuit quas fortis Iberi.

* Sacrum promontorium.

Which may be Engliſhed thus.

Now juſt beneath that Iſle which Sacred High,
And head of Europe, men are wont to call,
The Ilands nam'd Heſperides doe lie,
And thoſe well ſtor'd with Tin a rich mettall.
But would yee know the people? then note well,
The glorious wealthy Spaniards therein dwell.

B

Theſe alſo, Feſtus Avienus, in his poeme entituled Oræ Maritimæ, that is, The ſea coaſts, called Oſtrymnides; touching which, he inſerted theſe verſes, as they are found in the Pariſe edition, and the notes upon the ſame:

In quo inſulæ ſeſe exerunt Oeſtrymides
Laxè iacentes, & metallo diuites
Stanni atque plumbi: multa vis hìc gentis eſt,
Superbus animus, efficax ſolertia,
Negotiandi cura iugis omnibus
Noluſque cumbis turbidum latè fretum
Et belluoſi gurgitem Oceani ſecant;
Non hi carinas quippe pinu texere
Facere morem non abiete, vt vſus eſt,
Curuant phaſello: ſed rei ad miraculum
Nauigia iuncta ſemper aptant pellibus,
Corioque vaſtum ſæpe percurrunt ſalum.

C

Non uſque navibus: we read in the Notes of Pariſe.

Wherein, the Iſles Oeſtrymnides doe ſpread,
And ſhew themſelves broad lying all about,
In mettals rich as well of tin as lead:
The people ſtrong, their ſtomackes high and ſtout,
Active and quicke, freſh merchants all throughout:
No troublous waves in Frith or Ocean maine,
Of monſters ful, with ſhips cut they in twaine.
For why? no skill at all have they to frame,
Of Pine tree, keels for barke or galion:
Nor know they how to make ores to the ſame,
Of fyrre or maple wood, where ſailes are none,
As others uſe: But, which is wonder one,
Of ſtitched hides they all their veſſels make,
And oft through ſea in lether, voiage take.

D

E

Like veſſels unto which were uſed in this our Sea, in the yeere of ſalvation 914. For we read of certaine devout men, that in a Carab (or carogh) made of two tanned hides onely and an halfe, ſailed out of Ireland into Cornwall. Afterwards alſo of the ſaid Ilands the ſame Avienus wrote thus:

Tartesijſque in terminos Oeſtrymnidum
Negotiandi mos erat, Carthaginis
Etiam colonis

F

Thoſe of Tarteſſus eke, as well,
As they in Carthage towne that dwell,
Were wont to trade for merchandiſe,
To skirts of Iſles Oeſtrymnides.

Other

A Other Greeke writers termed these, Cassiterides, of Tinn: like as Strabo nameth a certaine place among the Drangi in Asia, CASSITERON, of Tinn: and Stephanus in his booke of Cities reporteth out of Dionysius, that a certaine Iland in the Indian sea was called CASSITERA, of Tinn. As for that MICTIS, which Plinie citeth out of Timæus, to bee sixe-daies sailing inward from Britain, and to yeeld mines of white lead; that it should be one of these, I dare scarcely affirme. Yet am I not ignorant, that the most learned Hermolaus Barbarus read it in manuscript bookes, Mitteris for Mictis, and doth read for Mitteris, Cartiteris. But that I should avouch these to be those CASSITERIDES so often sought for, the authority of the ancient writers, their
B site, and the mines of Tinn, are motiues to perswade me. Full opposite unto the Artabri, saith Strabo (over against which the West parts of Britaine doe lie) appeere those Ilands Northward which they call Cassiterides, placed after a sort in the same clime with Britaine. And in another place: The sea betweene Spaine and the Cassiterides is broader than that which lieth betweene the Cassiterides and Britaine. The Cassiterides looke toward the coast of Celtiberia saith Solinus: And Diodorus Siculus, In the Ilands, next unto the Spanish sea, which of Tinn are called Cassiterides. Also Eustathius, There be ten Islands called Cassiterides lying close togither Northward: Now, seeing these Iles of Silly, are opposite unto the Artabri, that is, Gallitia in Spaine, seeing they bend directly North from them, seeing they are placed in the same clime with Bri-
C taine, seeing they looke toward the coast of Celtiberia, seeing they are disioyned by a farre broader sea from Spaine than from Britaine, seeing they are next unto the Spanish sea, seeing they lie hard one by another toward the North, and ten onely of them be of any good account, namely Saint Maries, Annoth, Agnes, Samson Silly, Brefer, Rusco or Trescaw, Saint Helens, Saint Martins and Arthur, and that which is most materiall, seeing they haue veines of Tinn, as no other Iland haue beside them in this tract, & considering that two of the lesse sort, to wit, Minan Witham and Minuissand, may seeme to haue taken their name of Mines, I would rather thinke these to bee CASSITERIDES, than either the Asores, which beare too far West, or Cisarga with Olivarius, that lieth in maner close unto Spaine, or even Britaine it self with Ortelius;
D consid'ring there were many Cassiterides; and Dionysius Alexandrius after hee had treated of the Cassiterides, writeth of Britaine a part by it selfe.

If any man by reason of the number deny these to be CASSITERIDES, for that they be more than ten, let him also number the Hæbudes & the Orcades; and if after the account taken, hee finde neither more nor fewer with Ptolomee than fiue Hæbudes and thirty Orcades, let him search in any other place but where they are now extant, and with all his searching by reckoning of the numbers, I know for certaine hee shall not easily finde them. But the ancient writers had no certaine knowledge of these most remote parts and Ilands of the earth in that age, no more than wee in these daies of the Iles in the Streights of Magellane, and the whole tract of New Guiny.

E And that Herodotus had no knowledge of these, it is no mervaile: for, himselfe confesseth, that he knew nothing for certaine, to make report, of the farthest parts of Europe. But lead was brought first from hence into Greece. Lead, saith Plinie in his eight booke, and in the chapter of the first inventours of things, Midacritus first brought out of the Island Cassiteris. But as touching these Islands, listen what Strabo saith in his third booke of Geography toward the end. The Ilands Cassiterides bee in number ten, neere one unto another, situate in the deepe sea, Northward from the haven of the Artabri. One of them is desert, the rest are inhabited by men wearing blacke garments, clad in side coates, reaching downe to their ankles, guirt about the brest, and going with staues like unto the Furies in Tragedies. They liue of their cattaile,
F stragling and wandering after a sort, as having no certaine abiding place. Metall mines they haue of tinne and of lead, in lieu whereof and of skinnes and furs they receiue by exchange from the Merchants, earthen vessels, salt, and brasen workes. At the beginning, the Phanicians onely traded thither from Gades, and concealed from others this their navigation.

But when the Romans followed a certaine Maister of a shippe (that they themselues might learne this traffique of Merchandiſe) hee upon aſpitefull envy, ranne his ſhip for A the nonce upon the ſands, and after hee had brought them that followed after into the ſame daunger of deſtruction, himſelfe eſcaped the ſhipwracke, and out of the common Treaſury received the worth of the commodities and wares that hee loſt. Howbeit, the Romans after they had tried many times, learned at length the voiage hither. Afterwards, Publius Craſſus when hee had ſailed thither, and ſeene how they digged not verie deepe in theſe mines, and that the people were lovers of peace and lived quietly, deſirous alſo to ſaile upon the ſea; hee ſhewed the feat thereof to as many as were willing to learne: although they were to ſaile a greater ſea than that, which reacheth from thence to Britaine.

But to diſcourſe no farther whether theſe were the ancient Caſſiterides, or no, and B to returne to Silly. There bee about a hundred forty and fiue Ilands carrying this name, all clad with graſſe, or covered with a greeniſh moſſe, beſides many hideous rockes, and great craggy ſtones raiſing head aboue water: ſituate as it were in a circle round, eight leagues from the lands end or utmoſt point of Cornewall West South-weſt. Some of them yeeld ſufficient ſtore of corne, but all of them haue abundance of conies, cranes, ſwannes, herons and other ſea foule. The greateſt of them all is that, which tooke the name of Saint Marie, having a towne ſo named, and is about eight miles in compaſſe, offereth a good harbour to ſailers in a ſandie bay wherein they may ancker at ſixe, ſeuen, and eight fatham; but in the entrie lie ſome rockes on either ſide. It hath had anciently a caſtle which hath yeelded to the force of Time. But for the ſame Queene Elizabeth in the yeere 1593. when the C
Stella Maria. Spaniards called in by the leaguers of France began to neſtle in Little Britaine, built a new caſtle with faire and ſtrong ravelines and named the ſame Stella Maria in reſpect both of the ravelines which reſemble the raies of a ſtarre, and the name of the Iſle; for defenſe whereof ſhee there placed a garriſon under the command of Sir Francis Godolphin.

Doubtleſſe theſe are thoſe Ilands, which (as Solinus writeth) a troublous and rough narrow ſea ſeparateth by the ſpace of two or three houres ſayling from the coaſt of the Danmony, & the inhabitants whereof obſerue the cuſtome of ancient times. They haue no faires nor mercats, and refuſe mony; they giue and take one thing for another, they prouide D themſelues of neceſſaries, by waie of exchange rather than by priſing and giuing of money; they ſerue the Gods deuoutly: both men and women will bee counted wizards and skilfull in foretelling things to come.

Euſtathius out of Strabo termeth the inhabitants Melanchlanos, becauſe they were clad in blacke garments reaching downe to the ankles: and as Sardus was perſwaded, they depart out of this world for the moſt part ſo long livers, that they deſire to liue no longer. For, from the top of a rocke (as hee ſaith) they throw themſelues into the ſea, in hope of a more happie life: which, doubtleſſe, was the perſwaſion of the Britaine Druides.

Hither alſo the Roman Emperors were wont to ſend perſons condemned to work E in the mines. For, Maximus the Emperour, when hee had condemned Priſcillanus to death for hereſie, commanded his ſectaries and diſciples, Inſtantius a Biſhop of Spaine and Tiberianus, after their goods were confiſcate to bee carried away into the Ilands of Sylly: and Marcus the Emperor baniſh him, that in the Commotion of Caſſius had propheſied and uttered many things, as it were, by a divine inſtinct of the Gods, into this Iland, as ſome are verily perſwaded, who willingly for Syria inſula, read Sylia inſula, that is, the Iſle of Silly, conſidering the Geographers as yet know no ſuch Iland as Syria. This confining or packing away of offendors into Ilands, Vlpian lib. 7. de Mathematicis. was in thoſe daies a kinde of exile: and the Governors of Prouinces might in that manner baniſh, if they had any Ilands under them: if not, they wrote unto the Emperor, that himſelfe would aſſigne ſome Iland for the party condemned: neither was F it lawfull without the privity of the Prince, to tranſlate elſe whither, or to bury the bodie of him that was thus baniſhed into an Iland.

In the writers of the middle time, wee finde not ſo much as the name of theſe

A theſe Ilands of Sylly, but onely that king Athelſtane ſubdued them, and after his returne built a church in honour of Saint Beriana or Buriena, in the utmoſt promontory Weſtward of Britan, where he landed.

Full againſt theſe on the French coaſt, lieth Plinies AXANTOS, an Ile right before the Oſiſſimi, or Britaine Armorin, which keeping ſtill the name whole, is called Vſhant: Antonine termeth it VXANTISSENA in which one word, two Ilands grew togither, to wit, VXANTIS and SENA. For, this Iland, lieth ſomewhat lower, now called Sayn, which butting full upon Breſt, is named in ſome copies SIAMBIS, and of Plinie, corruptly, Sounos: about which from Eaſt to Weſt, for ſeven miles togither or there about, there ſhoot forth a number of rocks rather than Ilands, ſtanding very thick togither. Touching this Sain, take with you that which Pomponius Mela reporteth. SENA (ſaith hee) lying in the Britiſh ſea oppoſite unto the ſhores of the Oſiſſimi, is famous by reaſon of the Oratle of a French God: whoſe ſhee-prieſtes, vowing perpetuall virginity, are ſaid to be nine in number: the French men call them Zenas or Lenas (for, ſo read I with Turnebus, rather than Gallitenas) and men are of opinion, that they being endued with eſpeciall endowments of nature, are able by enchantments, to trouble the ſea and raiſe up winds, to turne themſelues into what living creatures they liſt, to heale al thoſe maladies, which with others are incurable, for to know alſo and to foretell things to come &c.

Axantos Vſhant.

Siambis.

Mariners call it the Seame.

Beneath theſe, there lie other Ilands in length, namely, Iſles aux Mottons, nere unto Pen-Mac, that is, the horſe-head; Gleran over againſt old Blavie (which at this day is Blauet) Grois and Belliſle, all which Plinie calleth VENETICAE. For, they lie oppoſite unto the Veneti in little Britaine, who I wote not whether they were ſo named, as one would ſay, Fiſhermen: for Venna in the ancient language of the Galls ſeemeth to ſignifie ſo much. Theſe Strabo ſuppoſeth to haue beene the founders and ſtockfathers of the Venetians in Italy: who writeth alſo, that they intended to haue given Cæſar battaile at ſea, when he minded the conqueſt of Britaine. Theſe Ilands VENETICAE, ſome out of Dionyſius Afer terme NESIDES, whereas in the Greeke booke we read Νησιαδων πλους. that is, the Tract of the Ilands. Of which, Priſcian out of him, writeth thus,

Veneti. Inſulæ Venéticæ.

Neſidæ. Vannes. Venna Caroli. 1. Charles Fiſhing: as Helgardus ſaith.

Nec ſpatio diſtant Neſsidum littora longè,
*In quibus vxores * Amnitum Bacchica ſacra*
Concelebrant hederæ foliis, tectæque corymbis.
Non ſic Biſtonides Abſinthi ad flumina Thraces
Exertis celebrant clamoribus orgia.

* Sampitum.

Nor diſtant farre from hence, the ſhores doe lie,
Of Ilands, which Neſides many call:
Wherein the wiues of Amnites ſolemnly,
Concelebrate their high feaſts Bacchanall
With Ivy leaues and beries cover'd al.
The Thracian dames make not ſo loud a cry,
At Bacchus feaſt, the river Abſynts by.

Which Feſtus Auienus alſo hath expreſſed in theſe verſes.

Hinc ſpumoſus item ponti liquor explicat æſtum,
Et breuis è pelago vortex ſubit: hîc chorus ingens
Fœminei cœtus pulchri colit Orgia Bacchi,
Producit noctem ludus ſacer: æra pulſant
Vocibus & crebris latè ſola calcibus vrgent.
Non ſic Abſynthi propè flumina Thraces, & almæ
Biſtonides, non quà celeri ruit agmine Ganges,
Indorum populi ſtata curant feſta Lyæo.

From hence likewiſe the foming ſea diſplai's his ſwelling tide,
And from the deepe, ſhort whirle puffs riſe. Here, by the water ſide,
A mighty ſort of women meet, the feaſt of Bacchus faire
To celebrate: their ſacred ſports laſt all night long. The Aire

Rings over head with voices ſhrill: and under foot, the ground
With many a friske and ſtamp of theirs in dancing doth reſound.
Like noiſes make not Thracian Dames, the Biſton wiues, I ſay
Along Abſynthus river, while they uſe to ſport and play:
Not Indians nere ſwift Ganges ſtreame ſarre in ſuch frantick wiſe
What time to God Liæus they their ſet feaſts ſolemnize.

Bacchus.

Now, that Belliſle is one of theſe foreſaid Neſsidæ, the authority of Strabo from the faithfull report of other, doth proue ſufficiently. For, it lieth before the mouth of the river Loire: and Ptolomee placed the SAMNITÆ in a coaſt of France oppoſite unto it. For thus writeth Strabo. Moreover (they ſay) there is a little Iſland in the Ocean lying not farre in the deepe ſea, full againſt the mouth of Ligeris: that in it inhabite the wiues of the Samnitæ, which are inſpired with the inſtinct or divine powre of Bacchus, and by ceremonies and ſacrifices procure the favour of Bacchus: that no man cometh thither: but themſelues taking their barkes ſaile awaie and company with their owne husbands, and ſo returne againe into the Iſland. Alſo that a cuſtome it is among them, to take away the rouſe of their temple yeerely, and to cover it againe the very ſame daie before the Sunne ſetteth; every one of the women bringing their burden: and looke which of them letteth her burden fall, ſhee is by the others torne in peeces: and that they gathering together the peeces as they goe unto the temple, make not an end before they bee out of this furious fit: and that it alwaies uſually happeth, that one of them by falling downe of her burthen is thus torne peece meale.

Thus old Authors, writing of the utmoſt parts of the world, tooke pleaſure to inſert prety lies and frivolous fables. But what things are reported of Ceres and Proſerpine, they carry with them, ſaith hee, more probability. For, the report goeth of an Iſland neere unto Britaine, wherein they ſacrifice to theſe Goddeſſes after the ſame manner that they doe in Samothrace.

Then follow the Iſles Aux Mottouns, Gleran, Grois, Belle-iſle, upon the coaſt of little Britaine, Neirmouſtier, and L'iſle de Dieu, upon the coaſt of Poictou, and Liſle de Re, Iſlands full well knowne and much frequented for the plenty that they yeeld of bay ſalt: but for as much as they are not once mentioned by the ancient Geographers, it may be ſufficient for me that I haue named them. Onely the next Iſland at this day knowne by the name of Oleron, was knowne to Pliny by the name of VLIARVS, which lieth, as he ſaith, in the bay of Aquitaine at the mouth of the river Charonton, now Charent, and had many immunities granted from the kings of England, then dukes of Aquitaine. At which time it ſo flouriſhed for marine diſcipline and glory that theſe ſeas were governed by the lawes enacted in this Iland in the yeere 1266. no leſſe then in old time the Mediterranean ſea by the lawes of Rodes.

Oleron. Vliarus.

Lex Rhodia.

Hitherto haue I extended the Britiſh ſea both upon the credite of Pomponius Mela who ſtreatcheth it to the coaſt of Spaine, and upon the authority of the lord Great Admiral of England, which extendeth ſo far. For the kings of England were, and are rightful lords of al the North and Weſt ſea-coaſts of France (to ſay nothing of the whole kingdome and crowne of France) as who, to follow the tract of the ſea-coaſt wan the county of Guines, Merke and Oye by the ſword, were true heires to the county of Ponthieu and Monſtreuil by Eleanor the wife of king Edward the Firſt the onely heire thereof. In like maner moſt certaine heires to the Duchie of Normandy, by king William the Conquerour, and thereby ſuperior lords of Little Britaine dependant thereof; vndoubted heires of the counties of Anjou, Touraine, and Maine from king Henry the Second, whoſe patrimony they were: likewiſe of the county of Poictou, and Dutchy of Aquitaine, or Guyenne by Eleanor the true heire of them, wife to the ſaid Henry the Second; to omit the counties of Tholouſe, March, the homage of Auergue &c. Of all which the French by their arreſtes of pretended forfeitures, and confiſcations haue deſſeized the crowne of England, & adnexed them to the crowne of France; taking advantage of our moſt unhappie, civill diſſentions, whereas in former ages the French kings were ſo fore-cloſed by theſe territories, as they had no acceſſe at all to the Ocean.

Admirall of of England.

Hereditary territories in France belonging to the crowne of England.

Nothng

A Nothing remaineth now, seeing my penne hath with much labour strugled and sailed at length out of so many blind shelues and shallowes of the Ocean and craggy rocks of antiquity, saue onely this, that as seamen were wont in old time, to present Neptune with their torne sailes, or some saved planks according to their vow; so I also should consecrate some monument unto the ALMIGHTY and MOST GRACIOVS GOD, and to VENERABLE ANTIQVITY: which now right willingly and of duty I vow, & God willing in convenient time I will performe & make good my vow. Mean while, I would haue the Reader to remember, that I haue in this worke wrastled with that envious and ravenous enemy, TIME, of which the Greeke Poet sung very aptly
B in this note.

Ἀγαλέως φέρεπι πολιὸς χρόνος, ἀλλὰ παρέρπων,
Καὶ φωνὰς κλέπτει φθεγγομένων μερόπων.
Καὶ μὴ φαινόμενος τοὺς φαινομένους ἀφανίζει.
Καὶ ὢν φαινόμενος, εἰς φανερὸν προφέρει.

Hore-headed TIME full slowly creeps, but as he slie doth walke,
The voices he as sliely stealeth of people as they talke:
Unseene himselfe, those that be seene he hides farre out of sight,
And such againe as are not seene he bringeth forth to light.

But I for my part am wont ever and anon to comfort my selfe with this Distí-
C chon of Mimnermus, which I know to be most true.

Τλῆθι δὰ θυμὲ φρένα τέρπε, δυσηλεγέων δ' ἀνθρώπων
Ἄλλος τις σὲ κακῶς, ἄλλος ἀμείνονα ἐρεῖ.

Heart take thine ease:
Men hard to please
Thou haply maist offend,
Though one speake ill
Of thee, some will Say better: there an end.
D

SOLI DEO GLORIA.

THE SHIRES OF ENGLAND.

Barke-ſhire.	279	Mildeſex.	419
Bedford-ſhire.	399	Monmouth.	631
Buckingham-ſhire.	393	Northforlk.	467
Cambridge-ſhire.	485	Northampton-ſhire.	505
Cheſ-ſhire.	601	Nottingham-ſhire.	547
Cornewall.	183	Northumberland.	799
Cumberland.	765	Oxford-ſhire.	373
Darby-ſhire.	553	Richmond-ſhire.	727
Deuon-ſhire.	199	Rutland-ſhire.	525
Dorſet-ſhire.	110	Shrop-ſhire.	589
Durham.	735	Somerſet-ſhire.	220
Eſſex.	439	Stafford-ſhire.	581
Gloceſter-ſhire.	357	Suffolk.	459
Hant-ſhire.	258	Suſſex.	306
Hereford-ſhire.	617	Surrey.	294
Hertford-ſhire.	405	Warwick-ſhire.	561
Huntington ſhire.	497	Weſtmorland.	759
Kent.	324	Wilt-ſhire.	241
Lanca-ſhire.	745	Worceſter-ſhire.	573
Leiceſter-ſhire.	517	Yorke-ſhire.	689
Lincolne-ſhire.	529

THE SHIRES OF WALES.

Angleſey.	671	Flint-ſhire.	679
Brecknock.	627	Glamorgan-ſhire.	641
Cardigan-ſhire.	657	Merioneth-ſhire.	665
Carmarden-ſhire.	649	Mountgomery.	661
Carnaruon-ſhire.	667	Penbrooke-ſhire.	651
Denbigh-ſhire.	675	Radnor-ſhire.	623

The

The first Index or Table, seruing from the beginning of BRITAIN to the end of ENGLAND.

A

A, The first letter, thus shaped, A. 762.c
Aaron a martyr. 73.f. 636.f
Ab-adam a Baron. 364.d
Aballaba. 761.a
Abendon or Abington. 279.d
Aber. 21.f
Aber Avon. 645.f
Aberbury castle. 592.f
Aber Convey. 669.e
Aberford. 696.b
Aberfraw. 672.f
Abergevenny. 635.a
Abergevenny castle defamed for treason. 635.b
Abergevenny lords. ib.
Abtots, a family. 579.b
Abus, the same that Humber. 710.d
Academia in Attica. 486.f
Accabler. 21.f
Ackmancester. 234.d
Acmunderness. 752.e
Actons. 364.a
Acton Burnel. 591.f
Adam de Portu. 269.a
Ad Ansam. 448.c
Adeliza Queene her praises. 309.a
Aden what it signifieth. 117.c
Aderborne a river. 245.d
Adington. 510.b
Ad Lapidem. 262.d
Adminius. 418.c
Admirals court. 180.b
Ad murum. 819.c
Adraste a goddesse among the Britains. 31.c
Adrian the Emperor in Britain. 65.d
Ad Rotam, &c. 449.c
Adulph reedifieth Peterburgh abbey. 512.f
Aeleonor K. Edward the First his wife. 397.a Aeleonor K. Henry the Third his widow liueth in a Nunrie. 254.c
Aeleonor Cobham. 304.a
K. Aelfred, a Prince much troubled. 224.b.c. First Monarch of England. 158.c. Second founder of Oxford Universitie. 376.b
Aelfritha K. Edgars wife. 254.c 262.b. a cruell and hatefull stepdame. 211.d
Aelward Meaw, that is to say, white. 217.b
Aeneus Sylvius, that is, Pope Pius Secundus. 818.e
Aequity courts in England. 178
Aequivocation of Adam bishop of Hereford. 363.b
Aesica. 781.d
Aestij. 21.f
Aeternalis Domus what it is. 645.d
Aethelbald the good king of the Mercians. 554.a. stabbed to death. 569.e
Aethiopians why so named. 23.c 26.b
Aethling, that is, the Prince. 614.a
Aeton. 393.f
Aeton or Eton schoole. 288.f
Agelocum. 545.f
Iul. Agricola Lieutenant of the twentieth legion in Britain. 53.e. Propretour in Britain. 54.b. discomfiteth the Ordovices. 54.c.d. conquereth Anglesey. ib. his civill and politicke government in Britain. 54.f. his martiall skill. 55. his other vertues and behavior. 55.56. he vanquisheth the Caledonians. 57. his patience. 57. his Oration to his souldiers. 59. his victorie. 61. his modestie. 62
Agrippina the Empresse her hautie minde. 44.e.f
Aidon castle. 808.f
Ailesburies gentlemen. 395.d
Ailesburie. 395.c
Ailesford. 331.f
Ailwin Healf Koning. 499.e
Ainsbury or Ainulphsbury. 497.c
Ainulph a religious man. ib.
Airmins a family. 543.a
Akemanstreet-way. 377.b
Alabaster stone. 544.c
Alabaster stone about Burton upon Trent. 586.b
Alan a river. 194.c. 246.d
Alan the sonne of Flaold. 589.f
Alaricus king of the Goths. 86.b
Alaun a river. 259.c. 813.c
Alban a country. 126.c
Albanes whence they tooke their name. 26.b
S. Alban of Verlam our Stephen and Protomartyr of Britain. 73.f. 409.f
Albanie. 126
S. Albans a town. 408.e
S. Albans church & town. 410.c 412.d
S. Albans battails. 413.c
Albenies Earles of Sussex. 320.e
Albinus. 126
Albina. 24.b
Albinus created Cæsar. 68. hee usurpeth the Empire. 69. is slaine. ib.
Albion. 1.23. whence it tooke name. 24.a Albrighton. 594.a
Alchester. 377.b
Alcwin a learned English Saxon. 137.f. 704.c
Alborow. 701.c. 731.c. 466.a
Aldelme Abbat. 244. a singular scholar and a devout man. ib.
Aldersgate in London. 423.d
Aldgate in London. 423.e
Aldingham. 755.d
Ale the ancient English mens drinke. 554.f
Alen a riveret. 676.f. 681.f
Alexander of Hales a great clerke. 365.a
Alexander the bountifull bishop of Lincolne. 383.e. 539.d profuse in building. 549.d
K. Alexander the Great never in Britain. 32.d
Alfreton. 555.e
Algar earle. 379.a
Alheale. 14.d
Alford in Lincolnshire. 542.b
Alingtons a familie. 489.e. knights. 406.d
Alipius. 79
Allabany. 126
Allectus his treacherie. 73. is vanquished and slaine. ib.
Allobrogæ. 19
Almans whence they tooke their name. 26.b. 124
Almondbury. 692.d
Alne river. 566.a. 813.c.
Alnwick or Anwich. 813.c.
Alon a river. 801.e
Alone. 794.d
Alpes of Britain. 667.e
Alpes why so called. 24
Alresford. 262.e
Alsoule College in Oxford. 382
Alsten more. 799.e
Alt a river. 748.e

Althorp. 508.d
Altars of the Gentiles and their Religion. 751.d.e
Alterynnis. 617.c
Altmouth a towne. 748.e
Alverton shire. 723.e
Alum made. 217.a
Alum earth discovered by Sir Th. Chaloner knight. 721.d
Alured. See Ælfred.
Alwena a devout woman. 494.d
Ambacti. 16
Amboglana. 760.b
Ambleside. ibid.
Ambresbury. 254.b
Ambro. what it is. 127
Ambrones. ibid.
Ambrosius Aurelius. 128
Ambrosius Aurelianus. 254.b
Amersham. 394.e
Amphibalus a martyr. 636.f
Ampthil. 401.d
Anas a river. 297.a. why so called. 245.c.
Ancaster. 537.b
Ancaster heath. 537.d
Andate or Andates a goddesse among the Britains. 31. 457.e
Andradswald. 306.c
Andragathus a traitour drowneth himselfe. 83
Anderida the weald. 329.d
Anderneſſe. 752.e
Androgeus, Cynobelinus his sonne, the same that Mandrubatius. why so called. 417.e
Anesty in Hertfordshire. 405.f
Angel a Province in Dania. 130
Angels. 610.c
Ri. Angervil Philobiblos. 381.f
Angles or Englishmen whence they came. 130
Anglesey 671 why so called 672.c conquered by king Edward the first. ibid.d. invaded by Suetonius Paulinus. 49
Argotby. 545.a
Angre. 440.b
Ankam a river. 543.a
Ankre the river. 569.c
Anne wife to king Richard the second. 297.d
Anne Bullen mother to Queene Elizabeth. 256.f
Anna a Christian king. 466.a
Annius Viterbiensis. 24
Anselm against Priests mariage. 201.b
Anstly or Ancient liberty. 707.a
Ant or Anton a river. 260.e
Anciveſtæum. 187
Anthony. 193
Antoninus Pius Britannicus. 66
Philosophus. ibid.
Anubis Latrans. 17
Apelby. 761.a
Apennini. 18
Apollinaris an herbe. 98
Appropriat churches what they be, and how many. 161
Apthorp. 514.c
Aquila his propheſie. 214.e
Aquileia the city commended. 83
Aquitania why so called. 27
Ar. 21
Ara. ibid.
Arar. 20
Araris a river in France. 694.a
Arat. 20.
Arbeia. 769.c
Arches a court. 181
Archbishop of Canterbury. 136
Archbishops three in Britaine, 155. In England two. 160
Arconfield. 618.a
Archdeacons. 222.e
Archdeaconries in England how many. 161
Archigubernius. 66
Arduawy. 665.e
Areol. 594.e
Are a riuer. 693.f. why so called. 694.a
Arians what they were. 81
Arelate. 21
Aremorica. 19
Arfast bishop of East England. 471.f
Ardenforeſt. 358.b
Arden a forest in Warwickeshire. 565.c
Arderns a family. 604.b
Argentons. 406.d.489.e
Arians condemned. 77
Arianisme in Britaine. 78
Ariconium. 618.d
Aristobulus mentioned by Saint Paul, in Britaine. 68
Arlech castle. 665.e
Armanthwaite. 777.f
Armaturæ what they were. 783.
Armes of Ailsburies. 395.d
Armes of Will. de Albeney. 320.e
Armes of the Alfretons Barons. 555.e. of the Bainards. 271.d of the Argentons. 406. d. of the Bardolphs. 481. e. of the Blewets. 271. d. of the Bowes. 737. b. of the Bohuns. 311. f. of Brabant. 820. e. of Charleton Lord of Powis. 663. c. of Colcheſter. 451. a. of Cusanz. 271. d. of Ela Counteſſe of Salisbury. 249. d. of the Ferrars. 526. a. of Sir Hen. Guildford 352. b. of Harold. 617. d. of Hollands knights. 749. d. of Th. Howard Duke of Norfolk. 483. c. Of the first Kings of England of Norman bloud. 724. of the Lucies. 768. f. of Lumlies. 742. b. of the Mauleis. 719. of Montfichets. 453 of the Monthaults. 690. e. of the Mortimers de Attilborough. 473. b. of the Musards. 555. f. of the Muschamps. 815. c. of Saier Quincy and Roger his sonne. 267.
Armes of the Percies. 768. of the Percies and Lucies. ibid. of Redvers Earles of Denshire. 207. e. of the Scales. 405. e. of the Segraues, 568. f. of the Sturmies. 254. f. of the Lord Stourton. 245. b. of Vaulx. 786. e. of Vermandors. 304. b of Vesey 723. a. 722. f. of Viponts. 763. of Warren Earle. 304. b
Armie of God and Holy Church. 509. d
Armorica what it signifieth. 111
Armorica. 19. 12
Armorican Britons whence they came. 5
Arnulph of Montgomery conquerour of Penbrochsh. 655. a Arrow a river. 565. d
Arrow a towne. 566. a
Arthur a British Prince. 128
Arthurs place of Natiuitie and death. 194
Ap. Arthur a writer. 632. f
Arthurs battaile against Mordred. 194
Arthurs sepulchre. 227. f
Arthurs epitaph. 230. a. b
Arthurs table. 776. d
K. Arthurs palace. 221. b
Artisans or Craftsmen. 177
Arvandus his children killed. 262. d. 276. a Arviragus. 62
Arundell Earles. 309. 310
Th. Arundel Baron of Wardour 246 a. Count of the Empire. ib
Arundale. 308. d
Arundels knights. 193
Arwerton. 463. c
S. Asaph a bishops See. 679. d
S. Asaph a godly and vpright man. ibid. e
Ascohes knights 543. a Ascot. 396. a Ashbie Marcs. 507. b

Asbbie de la Zouch. 519.a
Asbburnham. 317.e
Asbburne in the Peake. 553.d
Asble manour. 481.f
Asbdown, 442.f
Asbridge. 395.a
Asbford. 335.d
Asbwell. 406.a
Asbwell Thorp. 472.d
Askerton castle. 782.f
Askes a family. 729.f
Asserius a learned Monk. 378.c
Assises what they are. 445.e
Astbury. 608.f
Astley castle. 569.b
Astleies Barons. 569, b
Astleies a noble family. 581.d
Astleis Knights. 217.a
Astons a family. 584.e
Th. Aston the first head-schoole-master of Shrewsbury. 596.b
Astroites a stone. 536.c
Astwell. 505.e
Athelney. 224.b
Athelwold murdered by Edgar. 262.b
Atherston. 569.d
Attrebatij. 278
Attacotti. 79. 127
Attal-Sarisin. 185
Attilbridge. 473.d
Attilburgh. 473.b
Attila the scourge of God. 197.a
Atton a place and family. 722.b
Avallon an Iland. 225.e
Aubrey a family. 628.e
Audience court. 181
Audre causey. 459.d
Audre. 492.e
S. Audre or Etheldreda. 492.f
S. Audries Ltberties. 493.c
Aventon. 258.d
Aven a river in Hantshire. 258.e
Avens a family 485.d
Averham or Aram a place. 549
Auson river. See Nen.
Augusta. See London.
Augusta what they be. 424.d
Augustus Cæsar intended a voyage into Britaine. 39. he neglecteth Britaine. ibid.
Augustine Apostle of the English nation. 336.d 136. where enterred. 337.f. S. Augustines crosse. 342.a. Augustines oke. 578.d.e
Aulus Atticus slaine. 61.
Aulus Plautius sent into Britaine, 40. his exploits there. 41
Mercate Aultun. 269.a
Awdleys or Aldeleghs, Baront. 583.c
Henry Awdley. 583.f 584.a
Iames Lord Awdley. 584.a
Awdley end. 452.d
Baron Awdley of Walden. 452.d
Awkenbury 501.c
Awkland. 738.d
Aulaf the Dane adopted. 261.f
Aulbemarle Earles. 715.b
Auldby. 709.e
Aulcester. 566.b
Aulton castle. 587.c
Avon a river in Somersetshire. 236.c
Avon what it signifieth. 358.a
Avon a river in Wiltshire. 242.a
Avon river the lesse. 515.b. 517
Avon a river in Wales. 665.e
Avon-well. 515.b
Aure a yellow or golden colour. 26
Aurelius Conanus a tyrant. 113
Aurelius Ambrose. 259.a
Aurenches or de Abrincis. 349.b
Ausley castle. 588.e
Anst-cliue. 363.d
S. Austins Church in Canterburie. 337.e
Ax a river. 206.f
Axanminster. 206.f
Axelholme an Isle. 544.b

B

Bablac. 373.c
Babthorp, name of a place and familie. 710
Babthorps father and sonne. ib. b
Bacons a family. 463.e
Sir Nicholas Bacon: L. Keeper. 461.f
Iohn Baconthorpe the resolute Doctor. 479.b Bad. 21
Badbury hill. 216.e
Baddeley. 607.e
Bartholmew Lord Badilsmere. 331.d
Badesley. 566.d
Baggington. 562.e
Bagots. 586.e
Bagmere Poole. 609.b
Baines or Bathes much used. 732
Bainards castle in London. 424.b
Bainards. 243.f
Bailliol colledge in Oxford. 381.c
Baine a river. 727.f
Baixhams 359.a
Baintbrig. ibid.
Baskewell a river. 557.b
Bala a towne. 666.e
Baldach. 473.f
Baldock. 406.c
Baldwine a Iustice. 395.e
Baldwine le Pettour. 464.b
Balshall a Commander of the Templars. 566.d
Bamborow. 813.e
Bampfeilds a family. 203.e
Bampton. 207.b
Ban a river in Lincolnshire. 541
Banbury. 376.a
Banchor or Bangor Monasterie. 603.a
Bannavenna, that is, Wedon. 508
Bannes Downe. 234.b
Bandogs or Mastiues. 434.e
Banerets, what title of Gentrie. 171.a
Baram Down. 345.a
Barangi. 154
Barbacan in London. 433.d
Bard. 4.14.15
Bard. 19.
Bardolphs Lords, their tenures of certaine lands. 302.d
Bardus. 19
Bardney Abbay. 540.f
Bardolphs Barons. 481.e. 548.f
Bariden a riuer. 473.d
Barkley Barons 239.a
William Vicount Barkley Earle of Notingham. 551.c
Barklow. 452.a
Bark-shire. 129
Barkway. 405.f
Barnard castle. 736.e
Saint Barnard Colledge in Oxford founded. 382.b. reedified. 383.b
Barley a towne and family. 405.f
Barly the best. 485.b
Barnwel Abbay. 487.f. Castle. 510.c
Barnet. 415.e
Barnet field. 415.d
Barry an Island. 643.a
Barries Vicounts in Ireland. 643
Baringtons a family. 453 d
Barington Hall. ibid.
Baro what it signifieth. 168
Barons what degree of honor 168
Baronies many in Northumberland. 799.c
Barons to Count-Palatines. 601
Barons to the Count Palatine of Chester. 612.a. their office. ib.
Barow. 521.b
Barows or Burrows. 255.b
Barton upon Humber. 542.f
Baruch an holy man. 643.a
Bascaads or Baskets. 491.e
Basilicæ. 743.f
Basile. 473.f
Basing. 269.b. the honour of the Barons S. Iohn Poinings and Powlets.

Basing Stoke. 269.b
Basing Werk. 680.b
Baskervils worthy knights. 620.c
Bassets a notable familie. 581.f
Bassets of Welledon. 514.d
Bassets of Brailesford. 553.d
Baston. 21
Batable ground. 782.a
Bateau. 21.
Baterſey. 303.a
Batherton. 607.e
Bathgate. 557.
Bath Earles. 235.a
Bath Knights. 172. their dubbing. ibid.
Bath Citie. 233.b. the hote Waters thereof. ibid.
Battaile Bridge, alias Stanford Bridge. 709.e
Battaile Abbay founded. 317.b
Battaile of the Standard. 724.a
Battaile field. 596.c
Battaile at Nevils croſſe. 741.b.
Battaile at Solon Moſſe. 782. a Battaile a towne. 317.c
Bauchada. 19
Bawdes a family in Eſſex. 426.b
Bawdſey haven. 465.d
Beachy point 313.d
Beacons. 272.d
Beavons of Southhampton. 250.e
Beamfleot. 441.b
Beare the badge of the Earles of Warwicke. 570.b
Beanfield. 695.a
Beauchamps. 399.d
Henry Beauchamp Earl of Warwicke and of England his ſtile. 570. b. Duke alſo of Warwick. ibid.
Iohn Beauchamp Baron of Keddermiſter. 574. b
Richard Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke. 563. e. his tombe and epitaph. 564. a Beauchampes Barons, Lordes Brooke. 223.f
William Beauchamp the blind Baron. 574.b
Beauchamps court. 565.f
Beauchamp Aaron of Powich. 565.f
Beauchiefe Abbay. 555.e
Beaucliffe. 313.d
Beaudley. 573.e
Beaudeſert. 585.a
Sir Thomas Beaufoe of ancient deſcent. 564.e
Iohn de Beanfort Earle of Sommerſet. 230. refuſeth the title of Marqueſſe Dorſet. 217.d
Beafortes Dukes of Sommerſet. 414.e
Beaulieu. 260.b
Beaumanour parke. 521.d
Beaumariſh. 672.d
Beaumeis. 594.a
Iohn Beaumont the firſt Vicount in England. 521
Beaumonts of Cole Orton aunciently and highly deſcended 519
Beaumont a family in Yorkeſhire 693. a Rob. Beaumont of Pont Audomar Earle of Mellent and of Leceiſter. 523.c his race or progenie. ib.e
Beauior or Beluior caſtle. 536.b
Beauvoir or Belvoir Vale. 535.d
Bebba. 813.f
Bebham. ib.e
Ant. Bec or Beck Biſhop of Durham vntruſty to his ward. 328. a. 723. a Tho. Becket ſlaine by Courteours 337.b
Becco. 20
Beda. 6.a learned Engliſhman. 137
Beda venerabilis. 744. a Bedw. 19
Beddington. 302.c
Bedfordſhire. 399
Bedford town. 399. e
Bedford Lords, Earls & Dukes 402.f
Iohn Duke of Bedford his ſtyle and monument. 403. a Bedifoyd. 208. a
Bedingfeild a place and family 468. b
De la Beech knights. 282. e
Beeſton a caſtle and family. 607.b
Saint Bees. 766. a
Saint Bega a devout Iriſh woman ib
Beichiad. 19
Belerium what cape. 1
Belgæ in Gaule and Britaine. 219. b. whence ſo named. ib. d
K. Beleus his Habergeon. 11
Robert de Belesmo rebelleth. 591. d. a cruell man. 599. b
Belliſma æſtuarium, a frith. 752
Belliſter caſtle. 799.e
Belin, Melin & Phelin, all one. 98
Belingsgate in London. 423.e
Belinuntia. 98
Belinus a god. ibid. what it ſignifieth. 391.e
Belleland or Biland. 723.b
Bellaſiſe a family. 723. b
Bellers a noble family ſometime. 522.f
Bellotucadrus. 691.d
Benefician, what towne. 478.f
Benedictine Monks. 226.d
Benington. 407.f
S. Benno. 680.c
S. Bennauenta, is Wedon. 508.c.d
S. Bennit in the Holme an Abbay. 478.c
Bengley. 815.b
Ben-Gorion. 125
Benſted a family. 407.f
Benſbury, for knebenſbury. 302 f
Benſon. 388.d
Bently. 463.e
Bere park or Beau park nere to Durham. 741
Bericus a traitour to Britain. 40
Berengarius le Moigne, that is, Monke. 510.c
Berkhamſted. 414.e
Bermingham or Bremicham, a towne and family. 567.b
Bermondſey Abbay. 434.b
Bernack. 514.c
Benrers a family. 405.d
Bernicia. 817.a. 797.b
Bernwood. 393.e. 395
Berohdon or Baradon. 525.f
Beroſus confuted. 10
Berry by Wicomb. 393.e
Berſtaple. 208.b
Bertelin an Eremite. 584.d
Berwick towne. 816.e
Berwics what they be. 816.f
Berwic in Elmet. 696.b
Bery. 594.d
Bery Pomerie. 202.a
Betula or Betulla. 19
Betheney, See Stafford
Betony. 20
Beverley a towne. 711.d
Iohn of Beverley. ib.
Bevers in Tivy river what creatures they be. 657.e
Beverſton caſtle. 364.d
Beuſes of Lancaſhire. 745.e
Bevils a family. 192. 502. a Bezants or Bezantines what they be. 421.a
Bibroci. 286.d
Bie what it ſignifieth. 543.b
Begleſwade. 401.e
Bigod, the name of Rollo the Norman. 144
Hugh Bigod, L. chiefe Iuſtice of England. 482.e
Hugh Bigod Earle of Norfolke. 482.b
Bigod, the name of hypocrites and and superstitious. 144

Bigods a family. 465.d
Bigots a family. 633.c
Bigrames a family. 501.c
Billesdun. 812.f
Biland or Belleland. 723.b
Th. Billing Lord chiefe Iustice of the Kings bench. 505.e
Bindon. 212.f.b
Bincheſter. 738.e
Bincheſter penies. ibid.
Binbrige Isle. 274.a
Birdlip hill. 365.f. 366.c
Birinus the Apoſtle of the West-Saxons. 384.c
Birling. 332.d
Birthin a river. 636.c
Birtport or Burtport, 210.e
Biſcaw wonne. 188
Biſham. 286.b
Biſhops of Durham. 735
Biſhops of Bath and Wells. 232.c
Biſhops caſtle. 189.e
Biſhops Thorps. 707.c
Biſhops whether they might hold caſtles. 244.c
Biſhops gate in London. 423.d
Biſhops their place and precedency in England. 161
Biſſemed. 401.b
Biſſets an honourable familie. 245. 574.a
Bittleſden. 396.d
Bitumen, that is, Sea cole 735.c
Biwell caſtle. 808.c
Bihan caſtle. 537.a
Bithric Lords of Gloceſter. 368
Bizacium in Africke. 478.e
Blackborne. 752.d
Blackburneſhire. ibid.e
Blacklow hill. 564.d
Blackelead. 767.b
Blackemere a Baronie. 598.d
Blacekmore foreſt. 213.f
Blackeamore, 717.b
Blacketaile Poinct. 213
Blackewater a Creeke. 443.a
Rob. Blanchmains. 518.b
Blackeney. 479.a
Mercate Blandford. 215.e
Blatum Bulgium. 775.c
Blean Leveney caſtle. 628.d
Blatherwicke. 514.b
Blechindon. 377.a
Blencarn a brooke. 763.c
Blenkenſop a place and family. 800.b
Bleſtium. 617.c
Blickling. 478.b
Bletſo. 399.d
Blewets. 224.c
Bliſworth. 507.a
Blith. 551.a
Blith a river. 586.d. 466.e. 812.a
Bliphborough. 466.e
Blithfield. 586.e
Charles Blount or Blunt, Lord Montjoy Earl of Devonſhire. 208.d
Blounts or Blunts of Kinlet. 574
why ſo called. 591.b
Blunts Barons Montjoy. 555.c.
Gilbert Blund. 461.d.
Boadicia or Bunduica wife to K. Prasutagus. 49.
Boadicia, or Bunduica a noble and warlike Lady. 406.c. 51.
is vanquiſhed & poiſoneth hirſelf. 52.
Bocking a fat Perſonage. 446.a
Bocton Malherb. 331.b
Bodine what he conceiueth of the name Britaine. 5
Sir Th. Bodley a ſingular benefactor to Oxford librarie. 382.c
Bodman. 191. Boduari. 679.c
Boeth what it ſignifieth. 732.c
Bohuns Earles of Hereford &c. 621.e
Humfrey de Bohun Earle of Eſſex. 454
Hugh de Bolebec. 396.a
Bolebec Baronie. 809.e
Bolebec Caſtle. 396.a
Bolerium. 187
Bollin a riuer. 610.b
Bollingbrooke. 541.f
Bolſouer Caſtle. 556.c
Bonoſus a notorius bibber hangeth himſelfe. 71
Boniface. ſee Wimifride
Bonvill Lord. 206.c. 231.b. his calamities. ib.c
Bolton caſtle. 729.a
Borrodale. 767.a
Bone-well. 619.f
Bonhommes a religious order 395.a.
Bonhommes Colledg. 244.
Bonium. 602.e
Booth a family. 610.c
Borſarſe alias Brentwood. 442.
Borwick. 809.d
Borrovicus. ib
Boſcaſtle. 195
Boſeham. 306.f
Boſtoke a place and family. 609.d
Boſton. 532.c
burnt and ranſacked. 532.d
Bothal caſtle. 812.d
Boſworth towne. 518.d
Boſworth field. 518.d
Botereux caſtle. 195
Botereux a family. 566.b
Botherwic. 544.d
Botontines. 515.d
Bottlebrig or botolph bridg. 502
Boughton. 510.a
Bouium. 643.c
Bourchiers Earls of Bath. 598.c 207.c
Bourchier Baron of Berners. 405.d
Bourchiers de Berners Lords. 472.d
Bourchiers an honorable family 450.d
Bowes or Bough a worſhipfull family. 731.c. 737.a. why ſo called. 732.c
Bowland foreſt. 750.b
Bowtetorts a family. 465.b
Boxley. 332.c
Brachæ. 19
Bradenham. 393.c
Brance. 19
Brati. ibid.
Bradburn a place and family. 553
Bradford. 244.f
Bradewardin a place. 618.c
Bradwardin the profound Doctor 618.c
Bradſtons auncestors of Vicount Montacute and Barons Wentworth. 364.a Braibrooke caſtle. 513.c
Braibrookes Barons. 513.c
Brackley. 505.d
Braibrook, 329.c
Brakenbake. 724.c
Brackenburies a family of good note. 737.c
Brambles. 274.c
Brampton. 783.a
Bramton. 815.b
Bramton Brian caſtle. 619.c
Bramiſh a riuer. 815.b
Bancaſtre. 408.a
Brian de Brampton. 619.c
Brand. 568.e
Brandons a family in Suffolke. 465.c
Branſpeth caſtle. 739
Branonium. 575.d
Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolke. 470.c
Brannodunum. 480.a
Bransford or Bensford-bridge. 517.c
Braſon weapons. 188
Braſen noſe Colledge in Oxford. 383.a
Braſmatias, a kinde of Earthquake. 620.c
Bray. 286.d. Lord Bray. 297.b

The breach by Greenwich. 328.a
Nicolas Breakspeare. that is, Pope Adian the fourth. 414.f
Breakspeare a place and family. 419.b
Brechanius his 24 daughters all Saints. 627.a
Breden foreſt. 224.a
Breedon hils. 577.c
Breedon a village. ibid.
Breertons a family. 608.f. their death foreſhewed. 609.b
Breerton a place. 609
Brechnockſhire. 627.
Brechnock towne. 628.a
Brechnock meere. ibid.
Brcchnock Lords. ibid.
Brechnock made a ſhire. 677.e
Bremenium. 803
Brember caſtle. 313.c
Bremetonacum. 753.c
Bremicham or Bermingham a town and familie. 567.
Bren what it ſignifieth. 677
Bremin, what it is. 33
Brennus. 677
Brennus a renowmed king. 33
Bretenham. 463.b
Breton a river. ibid.
Brent a river. 421
Brent. See Faikes de Brent.
Brentmarſh. 230.c
Brentford. 421
Brentwood. 442.a
Brentwell or Brounſwell. 421
Breoſes Barons. 113.c.201.f
Breoſes a family. 553.d
Will. de Breos, or Braus a ſtronge Rebell. 629.b
Breoſes Lords of Brechnock. 623
Bretons a family. 556.b
Bretts. 128.f
Breuſais. 138.f
Brian, who ſo called. 117
Bridlington. 714.d
John of Bridlington. ibid.
Brewood. 583.a
Bricols. 400.e
Bridge Caſterton. 534.b
Bridgford by Nottingham. 548
Brig for Glansford. 543.a
Brigantes in Britaine rebelled. 43
Brigantes. 685. wherof they tooke name. ibid.
Brill for Burihill. 395.b
Brient Eitz Conty. 282.a
Brients. 202.c.d
Brients Barons 215.d
Brinklo. 568.f
Brienſton. 215.e
Brimsfeild. 365.f
Bridgewater. 225.a
Earle of Bridgewater. 225.c
Bridkirk. 768.b
Briewer Baron. 222.e
Briſtoll or Briſtow, a citie. 237.a the reaſon of the name. ibid.b
Brit the Primitiue of the Britains. 26
Brit or Brith the firſt name of the Britains. 25
Brith, what it ſignifieth. 26
Britaine or Britanny whence it tooke name. 27. why late diſcovered and knowne. 33. mentioned by Lucretius, firſt of any Latin writer. ib. twice Schoole-Miſtres to France. 138
Britaine the great, that is, England. 155
Britaine the leſſe, that is, Scotland. 155
Britaine how divided. 154. 155
Britaine what names it hath, 1. the ſite thereof, 1. the forme of it. ibid. why called another world. 24. the diuiſion and compaſſe of it. 2.4
Britaine hath ſundry names. 23. the poſition thereof in reſpect of the Heauens. 4. how fruitfull and commodious. 3. her firſt inhabitants. 4. the name. 5
Britaine under what ſigne or Planet. 182
Britaine protracted in womans habite. 24. the Roman world. 45. diſcoured to be an Iland. 61 a province Præſidial. 62. How it was governed under and after Conſtantine the Great. 62. 76. how it became ſubiect to the Romans. 62. infected by Barbarians. 79. brought to ciuilitie. 63. called Romania, and Romaine Ile. 88
Britains ruin and downfall. 107
Britaine & France whether euer conioined. 346.a
Britains came firſt out of Gaule. 11.12
Britans, in Religion, language and maners agree with the Gauls. 13.14.15.16.17
Britans emploied by Cæſar in baſe ſeruices. 38
Britans generally rebell. 49. their grieuances. ibid.
Britans caſt off the Romans yoke. 86
Britans how they may deriue their deſcent from the Trojans 88
Britans in Armorica. 110
Britans of Wales and Cornewale 112.113
Britans ſend Embaſſadours to the Saxons. 128
Britans retaine their ancient language. 23
Britans long liued. 555.b
Britans painted themſelues blue with wood. 20
Britans maners and cuſtomes out of Iulius Cæſar. 29. out of Strabo. ibid. out of Diodorus Siculus. 29. out of Pomponius Mela. ibid. out of Cornelius Tacitus. 30. out of Dio Nicæus. ibid. out of Herodian. ibid. out of Pliny. 31. out of Solinus. ibid.
Britaine Burſe. 428.d
Britannica the herbe. See Scorby or Scruuigraſſe.
Britanniciani what they were. 111
Briten huis. 40
Brithin a kind of drinke. 5
Britiſh tongue full of Greeke words 28
Britiſh States ſubmit to Cæſar. 37
Britiſh Iles mentioned by Polibius. 33
Of Britiſh Perle a breſtplate. 38
Britiſh names import colours. 26
Britiſh townes what they were. 29
Britwales or Welſhmen. 113
Briua what it ſignifieth. 414
Brockets knights. 406.f
Brocovum. 762.d
Broge. 19
Brokesby a place. 522.f. a family. 523.a Brome. 467.f
Bromeſgraue. 574.e
Bromefield. 677.a
Walter Bronſcorn Biſhop of Exceſter. 190
Brookes a family of ancient deſcent. 611.a
Brooke, L. Cobham. 329.c
Barons Brooke. 244.c
Bronholme. 478.e
Brougham, 762.d
Brotherton. 695.b
Sir Anthonie Browne firſt Vicont Montacute. 482.b
Sir Ant. Browne Marqueſſe Montacute. 222.d
Broughton. 376.e
Broughton in Hantſhire. 262.c
Brundenels a family. 514.b
Bruges Baron Chandos. 365.b
Bruin a family. 442.b

Brug-morfe or Bridge-North. 591.b
Robert Brus the noble. 500.e
Baron Brus of Skelton. 720.c
Bruſes a noble family. 526.b
Brutus 5. why ſo called. 8
Bucken, that is, Beech trees. 393
George Buck. 22.d
Buchonia & Buckenham. 393.a
Buckinghamſhire. 393
Buers a family. 463.b
Walter Buc and his race. 812.b
Buckingham town. 396.c. Earles 397.d
Buckhurſt Baron. 320
Buelth. 627.e
Bugden. 497.d
Bulchobaudes. 79
Buldewas or Bildas. 593.e
Bulkley a towne and family. 607
Anne Bullen or Bollen Marchianeſſe of Penbroch. 655.e
Bullen or Bollen Earle of Wiltſhire. 256.e
Bullen or Bollogne in France, the ſame that Geſſoriacum and Bononia. 348.d
Th. Bullen Earle of Wiltſhire died for ſorrow. 257
Bulleum Silurum. 627.e
Bulley or Buſley a noble Norman. 551.a Bulverith. 316.e
Buly caſtle. 761.c
Bulneſſe. 775.c
Bumſted Helion. 452.a
Bungey. 468.b
Burdos or Burdelois. 473.a
Burford in Shropſhire. 590.f
Burnt Elly. 463.d
Burgeſſes. 177
Burgh vnder Stancmore. 760
Burgh caſtle. 468.e
Burgh Clere. 272.e
Burgi what they were. 760.f
Burly a faire place. 526.b
Burons an ancient family.
Burrium. 636.e
S. Buriens in Cornwal. 188. why ſo called. ibid.
Burnel Baron. 330.c
Burceſter. 337.b
Burdet 566.c
Bunbury for Boniface burry. 607
Burgherſh alias Burgwaſh. 320
Bartholomew Burgwaſh a Baron 320.b
Burghley. 514.e
Burgh. 727.f
Burghſted. 442.e
Burgh or Burrow Barons. 543.f
Burne a Barony. ibid.
Burnels a family. 591.f
Burrowes what they are. 515.e
Burrow banke. 452.e
Burrow hill. 522.a
Burrow bridg. 701.a
Burrow a town. 522.b
Baron Burrow or Burgh. 303.f
Burrough a towne and family. 522
Burrough of Southwarke. 303.d
Burthred the laſt king of Mercians. 554.a
Burſe of London or Roiall Exchange. 439.b
Burgh upon Sands. 775.e
Burgundians brought into Britaine. 71
Burton Lazers. 522.a
Burton vpon Trent. 586.b
Burwell caſtle. 490
Buriall of men with legs a croſſe. 808.a
Bury Abbay. 460.e
Buſtlers a family. 489.e
Buſleys or Buſſeies a family. 535
Buſy Gap. 800.f
Butlers of Wem. 592.c
Butler of Woodhall. 592.c
Butler Earle of Wiltſhire. 256.d
Butlers a family. 748.b
Butlers or Botelers of Ireland. 752.f
Butterby. 739
Butſiet. 20
Buttington. 662
Burton wel. 557.c
Byliricay. 442.e

C

Cablu. 21
Cadbury. 221.c
Cadier Arthur or Arthurs chair an hill. 627.c
Cadocus Earl of Cornwall. 197.b
Cadugan ap Blethin. 658.c. 662.c a renowned Britaine
Cærulus & Cærulum. 24
Cæſars entry into Britaine. 343.c where he paſſed over the Tamis. 295.e
Cæſaromagus. 442.b
Cæſarea the name of manie Cities 442.b
Iul. Cæſar his temperance and ſmall port. 38 his patience. ib conquered not Britaine. 38
he neglected Britaine. ib
Cæſares. 164
Caer what it ſignifieth. 204.a
Caer Caradock an Hill. 590.a
Caer Cuſteineth 668.d.
Caerdiff. 642.d
Caerfuſe. 661.e
Caer Gai. 666.a
Caer Guby. 673.a
Caer Guortigern. ibi.
Caerhean ibid.
Caer Leon. ibid.
Caermardenſhire. 649
Caermarden city. 649.e
Caernarvonſhire. 667
Caernarvon-towne. 668.e
Caer Palladur. 270.a
Caer Philli caſtle. 642.a
Caer Segonte. 270.a
Caer Vorran. 800.e
Caerwent 633.d
Caerwisk. 679.d
Caihaignes a family. 395
Caius Cæſar ment o[illegible] de Britane, 40. his vanitie, his voiage thither. 41. his triumph ouer Britaine. 42
Cainſham. 236.e
Calaterium nemus. 723.d
Caiſhoberry. 415.a
Calc. i. lime. Calcaria. 699.a
Calder the riuer. 691.a
Caldwell. 731.c
Caledonians make head againſt the Romans. 56
Caloughdon. 568.e
Calphurnius Agricola. 66
Calſhot or Caldſhore. 260.d
Calveley a place and worthy family. 608.d
Sir Hugh Calueley a valiant knight. 608.d
Callais no auncient towne. 348.b
Calthrops a family. 463.e
Cam a river, why ſo called. 486.a
Cam. 21
Camalet. 221.b. Camalet townes. ib.c
Camalodunum. 43. loſt. 50
Cambodunum 449. Camb-alan-riuer. 194
Camboritum. 486.a
Camden or Camp-den 364.f
Camden the Author his opinion of the name of Britannia, and the original of Britans. 9.
Cambridge in Glocesterſhire. 362.c
Cambridge ſhire. 485
Cambridge defaced and burnt. 488.b
Cambridge towne and Vniverſitie 486.c when it became an Vniverſitie 489.a Camulus a God. 446.e

Camell a river. 194
Camelsford. ibid
Candish or Cavendish. 554. b
Camois Barons. 312. c
Candocus see Cadocus.
Cambridge Earles. 495. c
Camvills a family. 569. a Camur. 21. Candetum. 20
Cangi a people in Britaine. 611. b
231. a. subdued. 43
Cank-wood. 583. e
Canterium. 19. Cantroed. 20
Cantelowes an honorable family. 514. a Cantlow. 201. f
Th. Cantlow a Bishop and Saint 619. c
Cantium what cape. 1
Canterbury Colledge in Oxford. 381. d
Canterbury. 336. c. Canterbury Archbishops Primates of Britain. 338. e
Cantred what it is. 650. b
Cantred Bitham. ib
Cantred Maur. 650. c
Can a river. 759. c. 445. d
Cancefeilds a family. 755. d
Candale or Kendale a Barony. 759. c
Canel Cole. 735. d
Canonium is Chelmesford. 445. d
Cantabri and Scithians of like manners. 121
Canvey Isle. 441. a
Cantaber a Spaniard founder of cambridge vniuersitie. 487. a Canutus his Apophth. 261. e
Canvills a family. 515. c
Capgrave his legends. 646
Capitatio a Tribute. 100
Caradauc Vrichfas. 590. c
King Caradock. 633. e. f. deliuered vnto Ostorius. 590. a taken prisoner by Queen Cactismana 44. his vndaunted courage. ib
Caratacus Prince of the Dimeiæ 657. e. 43
Caranton. 220
Cardiganshire. 657. Lord there of. 658. c
Cardigan towne. 657. e
Careg castle. 650
Carleton a towne and family. 472. d
Carews of Surry. 302. c
Carews a family. 652. c
Carew castle. ib
Carew of Anthony. 198. d
Carewes a noble family. 202. e. 282. d
Caries. 202. e
R. Carew. 193
Carew Baron of Clopton. 565. b
Careston. 517. c
Carlile. 778. d. Old Carlile. 773. b. Carlile had one Earle 780. d
Carnabies a family. 808. f
Carthismandua wife to Venusius a stout lady. 48. her loose life and adultery. 53
Carmelite Friers. 351. e. brought first into England. 813. d
Carthmell. 755. a Caribec. 121
Caresbrook. 275. c
Careswell a castle and family. 587
Carausius vsurpeth the Empire 72. gouerneth Britaine wel. ib. slaine by Allectus. 72
Carus & Carinus Emperors. 73
Carminow. 190
Carrs a family. 815
Carr a riuer. 210. c
Carmouth. 210 b
Carram. 815. a
Carvills a family. 481. a Carvilius. 37
Henry Cary Baron of Hunsden. his high and noble descent. 408 408. d
Sir Edmund Cary knight of high descent. 414. e
Cassibelinus Generall of the Britaines armie. 36
Cassibellinus or Cssiavelanus encountereth Cæsar and the Romans. 37. is repulsed. ib. treateth about peace with Cæsar. 37
Cassii. 391. c. why so called. ib. f
Caster. 473. d
Caster in Huntingdonshire. 502. a
Castigand an high hill. 501. d
Castle in the Peake. ib. 502. a Castls Acre. 481. c. 557. d
Castle Asshby 509. e
Castle Camps. 488. f. 489. f
Castle Cary. 696. b
Castle Coch. 662. b
Castle Colwen or of Maudin Colewent. 623. b
Castle Crest by Lichfeild. 582. e
Castle Comb. 243. e
Castle Dinas Bran 677. c
Castle Dinas. 628. d
Castleford. 695. a
Castle Gard. 345. a. 201. c
Castle Paine. 623. b
Castlesteeds. 783 b. 793. d. 808
Castor. 542. d
Cataduna or waterfalls. 759. f
Castellan Denis. 194
Catesby a towne. 508. b. an ancient family. ib. tainted by Rob. Catesby of Asbie Saint Leger. ib. 431. d
Catheri Heretickes. 84
Catlidge. 491. b
Catmose a vale. 525. f
Caterna. 18
Caterva. ibi.
Cattieuchlani. 391
Catarick. 730. c. d
Caturactonium. 730. c
Caturfa. 18
Caudariver. 778. b
Caudbeck. 778. c
Sir Will. Cavendish or Candish Baron of Hardwick. 556. a Caves, a family. 515. b
A Caue wonderfull in Glamorganshire. 643. b
Caurse castle. 592. e
Causeies or highwaies in Britain. 63. what names they haue in divers authors 64. by whom and how they were made 64. In Italy and else where 64.
Cawood. 707. d
Caxton. 485. c
Cecily Nevill, mother to king Edward the fourth. 511. b. an unfortunate Lady. ibid. b. c. her tomb subverted. 510. c
Rob. Cecil Baron of Essendon, Viscount Cranburn. 217. c
Rob. Cecil earle of Salisbury. 250. e
Thomas Cecil earle of Excester 206. a
Sir Wil. Cecil baron Burghley. 514. e
Cedos, Cæsar. 18
Centuries, see hundreds.
Celtæ, whence derived. 20.
Cerdick a warlike Saxon. 477. d
Cerdick sand. ibi.
Cerdick shore. ib.
Cerastis. 184
Cerealis vanquished 50. hee conquered the Brigantes. 54
Cerne Abbay. 212. b
Cerygy Drudion. 675. c
Cester an addition to cities. 517.
Cester Over. ib.
Cley-Cester. 518. b
Chad a famous bishop of Lichfield. 585 e. 441. a Canonized a Saint. ib.
Sir Thomas Chaloner a learned knight. 721. d

Chambre

Chambre in the forest. 607.a
Chamberlains sometime Tankervils. 389.d
Chamberlainship of England. 489.f
Rob. Chamberlain an Archrobber. 531.e
Champernouns or Campernulhs. 201.c
John Chandos made Baneret. 171.365.b
Chandos Baron. 365.b
Chariot fight of the Britans. 36
Charing crosse. 432.c
Charles the eight king of France his Apophthegm. 403.a
Charleton in Worcestershire. 578.b
Charleton castle. 594.a
Charletons Lords of Powis. ib.
Charlecot a place. 564.f. a family. 565.a
Charnewood or Charley forest. 521.d
Charta de Foresta. 293.e
Charter house in London. 433.d
Chartley castle. 584.f
Chare, a fish. 755.d
Chateries or Cheatrish. 494.d
Chatmosse. 747.a
Chattesworth. 554.b
Chaucer our English Homer borne at woodstock. 375.f
Chaucombs, a family. 568.e
Chaumonds. 196.b
Chauncerie. 80
Chauncellour. 180
Chgworths a family. 395.e. 555. descended from Cahors in Quercy. 549.c
Cheapen what it signifieth. 243.d
Cheardsley. 395.f
Cheasford hundred. 442.c
Cherkley. 587.d
Cheadse. 587.d
Chellington. 581.e
Chelmer river. 444.d
Chelmerford or Chenceford 445
Chelsey. 421.c
Cheney Baron of Horsford. 466
Chencies or Cheimies an house 394.a
Sir Henry Cheiney Baron. 401
Chepstow. 633.b. Lords thereof ibid.c
Cherry trees brought into Britain. 324.b
Chertford. 258.e
Chertsey. 294. the monastery thereof founded. 294.d
Cherwel the river 373.b. his head. 507.e
Chesil a banke or sandrige. 210.e
Cheeses of the best. 601
Cheshire. 601
Countie Palatine. 601.b
Chesham bois. 394.f
Chesterfield 452, e in Scardale. 556
Chester earles. 611.f
Chester earle Count Palatine 612.a, what barons he had under him. ibid.
Chester earldome made a principality. 612.f
Chester, or West Chester city. 604.c
Chester, and Cheshiremen described. 602.a
Chesters what they are 793.d
Chester in the wall. 800.f
Chester upon the street. 742.c
Little Chester. 554.c
Chesterton under Lime. 583.c
Chetwoods a family. 399.d
Chevalry court. 190.
Chevin. 698.d
Cheviot hills. 812.e
Chic, or Chick, the old name of Saint Osiths. 451.c
Chidleys. 203.a
Chicheley, Archbishop of Canterbury. 510.b
Chichester. 307.c. earles of Chichester. ibi.f
Chicksand. 401.e
Chillingham. 815.c
Chilterne 389.c. 393.c. why so called. ibi.
Chippenham. 243.d
Chirke. 677.c
Christs church in Hantshire. 259.c
Christianity flourisheth in Britain. 75. 67. 68.
Christs church in Oxford. 383.a
Chrisanthus Bishop of the Novatians. 84
Churne the river. 366.a
Churnet a river. 587.c
Cholmondley a towne and family. 607.d
Chopwel a riveret. 735.b
Christs church in Canterbury. 337.b
Cirncester. 366.b
Cinque ports. 318. a. which they be. 325
Cilurnum. 806.b
Cimbrica Chersonesus. 129
Citizens. 177
Cisbury. 312.d
Cistertien Monkes. 295.a
Civilis a deputy in Britaine. 80
Civitas or cittie what it signifieth in Cæsar. 417.d
Cities by what ceremonies built by Romans. 102
John Clapham a brave warriour. 697. b
Clare a noble village. 462.a noble family of Earles. ibid. b
Clarence. 462. b. Dukes thereof. ibid.
Claridon. 250,e
Clares Earles of Glocester. 330
Richard de Clare his commendation. 416.a
Earles of Clare whence so stiled. 415.e
Claudia Rufina, a British Ladie. 62.68
Claudius Cæsar honoured as a God in a Britaine. 448.b
Clausentum. 261.a
Claudius Cæsar first that vanquished the Britains. 45. hee brought the South part of Britaine to be a Province. 101
Claudius Contentus. 341.e
Clavering. 453.b
Clavering the name of Fitz Richard. 81.a
Claxton. 738.a
Claxtons a family. ibid.
Clay-Hill. 245.d
Clemens Maximus an Vsurper. 341.c
Clee Hill. 591.a
Cleres a family. 478.b
Cley brooke. 518.b
Cliftons a family in Nottingham. 547
Sir Gerva Cselifton, Baron Chfton. 502.d
Cliff a towne. 329.d
Clifford castle. 618.a
Cliffords Earles of Cumberland. 618.b
Clistons a family Earles of Lincolne. 545.
Clipsby a town and family. 478.d
Clithero castle. 750.a
Clives ad Hoo. 329.d
Cliveland. 720.b
Clopton a towne & family. 565
Clodius Albinus propretor in Britain. 67
Cloudesbury. 749.e
Cluid a river in Wales. 676.c
Cluid a river. 679.d
Clun castle. 589.e
Clun or Colun, a river. ibid.e
Clyro, that is, the Prince. 164. an Addition given all the kings sonnes. ibid.

Cnobersburg.

Cnobersburg. 468.e
Cnouts or Canuts delf. 501.b
Cobham town. 329.c
Cobham Barons. ibid.b
Lords Cobham of Sterborrow. 303.e
Coc a river. 696.b
Coch or Coccus. 19
Coch what colour. 36
Coccium. 745.f
Cockar a river. 767.f
Cockington. 202.e
Cockley chappel. 745.f
Cockseies a worshipfull family. 574.a
Codanus Sinus, that is, the Oost sea. 141
Codenor castle. 555.d
Cœnobies what they are. 603.c
Cogans. 207.c
Cogeshal a towne. 446.a
Cogeshal a family. 446.b
Coine antique of Æmilianus & Marius &c. 643.e
Coined peeces of embased silver. 65.a.d
Coines British and Roman in Britain. 88.&c.
Coinage of Tinn. 186
Coigniers a noble family. 737.d
Coigniers Barons. ibid.
Coitie. 643.e
Cokains a family. 553.d
Cokar a river. 753.c
Cokarsand Abbay. ibid.
Cokermouth. 767.f
Sir Edward Coke knight. 481.c his commendation. ibid.
Cokerington. 542.c
Cole a river. 394.a
Col a river neere Saint Albans. 414.a Colbrook. 394.a
Colepits on fire. 581.d
Coles giue evidence of ancient mere-markes. 515.d
Coles-Hull or Hill. 681.d
Coleshul. 567.c
Cole Overton, or Cole Orton why so called. 519.c
Colbrand the Giant. 267.a
Collinweston. 514.d
Colchester. 450.e
Coloceſter. 808.c
Colham. 419.c
Colingwoods a warlike family. 813.c
Collerford. 806.b
Colne a river. 450.a
Carles Coln. ibid.
Wakes Coln. ibid.
Whites Coln. ibid.
Calne a towne. ibid.
Coln Engain. ibid.
Colepepers a family. 526.b
Colonies. 703.a
Colonie what it is. 448.a
Colvils. 537.a
Columbe a river. 203.a
Columbton. ibid.
Saint Columbs. 193
Comata. 20
Comati. ibid.
Comb what it signifieth. 207.b 393.d
Comb Marton. 20.a
Comb. 21
Comb Abbay. 569.a
Combat appointed between Henry of Lancaster and Thomas Mowbray duke of Norfolke. 428, f. Betweene Roger Bishop of Salisbury, and Willi. Montacute earle of Salisbury. 249.a. Betweene Edmond and Cnute. 360.b
Comes Britanniarum. 76
Comes Littoris Saxonici. 76. 325.a Comes Sacrarum Largitionum. 77
Comes privatarum. ibid.
Comes a title of dignity. 166
Comites what they were at first 165. See more in earles.
Comitatus Cæsaris. 166
Comius Atrebas or of Arras. 35.37
Commodus the Emperor. 66
Common Plees Court. 178
Compton in the Hole. 561.c
Sir Henry Compton Baron. 561.
Compton Murdack. 565.a
Composition betweene King Stephen and Henry duke of Anion. 482.b
Composition of names. 27
Concani a nation in Cantabria. 121
Condate. 608.e
Condercum. 742.c
Condover. 592.a
Congar. 231.d
Congersbury. 231.d
Congleton. 608.e
Conquests a family. 401.e
Willi. Cannings his monuments. 237.f
Coningsbees. 415.d. a family of good name and worth. 620.d
Connisborow castle. 689.f
Constable Burton. 714.b
Constables a great family. ibid.
High Constables of England. 621.c
Constantius Chlorus riddeth Britain of usurpers. 73. elected Emperor. 74. espoused Helena mother of Constantine the great. 74. putteth her away. ibid. weddeth Theodora. 74.a Godly Emperor. ibid. died at Yorke. ibid. buried there. 703
Constantin the Great, Emperor. 74. his warlik exploits. 75. advanceth christian religion. 75. proclaimed Emperor in Yorke 703.e.f. his renowned titles. 76. first entituled Dominus Noster. 76. taxed for subverting the Roman Empire. ibid. altereth the state of the government. ibid.
Constantine the younger ruleth Britain. 77. slaine by his brother Constans. ibid.
Constans an Emperiall Monke. 264.c. 85. is killed. ibid.
Constans Emperour in Britain. 77. holdeth a councell at Sardica. ibid. killed by Magnentius. ibid.
Constantius the yonger Emperor. ibid. favoureth Arianus. 78. holdeth a councell at Arimimum. 79
Constantine created Emperor in Britain for the name sake. 270.d. 85. his exploits. ibid. his gourmandise. ibid.
Constantine a tyrant among the Danmonii in Britain. 113
Constitutions of Clarindon. 251.
Conwey a river. 667.b. 669.d
Conwaie a towne. 669.e
Convocation. 181
Converts their house. 428.b
Sir Th. Cooke a rich Maior of London. 441.f
Counts Palatine. See earles.
Th. Cooper Bishop of Lincolne. 540.c
Copes, a family. 376.e
Copper or brasse mines. 767.a
Coperas made. 217.a
Copland or Coupland. 765.d
John Copland or Coupland, a braue warrior. 755.e. made Baneret. 171.
Coquet the river. 812.c
Copthall. 439.e
Corbets a great family. 592.e 594.e
Corbet a forename. ibid.
Sir Willi. Cordall knight. 462.c
Corinea and Corineus. 184

Cornineus & Gogmagog. 200.c
Coritani. 504
Corndon hill. 662.b
Cornelius Nepos, for Ioseph of Exceſtre. 32
Cornavii. 614.560
Cornovaille in little Britain 184
Cornage. 787.a
Cornwalleis a family. 467.f
Cornwailes of Burford highly deſcended. 590.f
Cornwall a dukedome. 198. c. why ſo called. 184
Cornwallians ſoone ſubiected to the Saxons. 114
Corpus Chriſti Colledge in Oxford. 383.a Court Barons. 168
Corniſhmens maners. 186
Corniſh Chough. 188
Corham in Coverdale. 729
Corbridge. 808.b
Corby caſtle. 777.f
Corſtopitum. ibid.
Corve a river. 590.c
Corveſdale. ibid.
Coway ſtakes. 296.a
Cowling caſtle. 329.d
Coſham. 243.c
Coughton. 565.e
Covinus. 18
Coſtrells. See eſquires.
Coy-ſi a convert Biſhop of the heathen. 711.c
Coteſwold, why ſo called. 364.c
Henry Courtney Marqueſſe of Exceſter. 206.a
Courtneys knights. 206.b. earles of Denſhire. 207. 208. Courtneys. 190.f
Cottons, knights. 313.e
Coverts, knights. 313.e
Cottont of Cambridgeſhire knights. 491.a
Cottons of Cunnington. 526.c
Sir Robert Cotton of Cunnington a learned knight, highly deſcended. 500.d
Covetouſneſſe complained of. 562.e
Coventry. 567.c
Coventry Lords. 568.a
Councell of the Marches. 590.e
Cow, a towne Weſt and Eaſt. 274.c
Cowbridge. 643.c
Cradiden. 493.a
Cranburn. 217.b
Crecan or Crey a river. 328.f
Creeke Lade. 241.e
Credendon or Credon. 396.
Creplegate in London. 423.d
Creſſy, a family. 550.e
Crevequeurs. 331.c
Crawdundale. 761.f
Crew, a place & notable family. 608.c
Creden a river. 203.d
Crediantun or kirton. ibid.
Craven. 694.b
Creak in Cliveland. 723.e
Le Craux. 21
Croco or Croke a river. 609.b
De Croeun or de Credonio a Barony. 532.f
Crococalana. 537.b
Croidon. 302.b
Cromwells, knights. 497.d
Sir Th. Cromwell. 526. b. earle of Eſſex. 454.e
Cromer. 479.a
Croft caſtle. 619.
Crofts knights, an ancient family. 619.f
Crophuls a family. 620.c
Crouch, a Creeke. 443.b
Crowland. 530.b
Crowland Abbay. 530. the foundation and building of it. 531. c. d. e
Crux Maur. 537.c
Crux Occhidient. ibid.
Cuckmere. 315.d
Cucul. 19
Saint Cudman. 313.c
Cuentford a brooke in Coventry. 567.d
Culchil. 747.e
Culfurth. 461.e
Cumberland. 765.
Kings & earles of Cumberland. 788.a Cumbermer Abbay. 607.e.799
Cumero. 21
Cuneglaſus a Tyrant in Britain. 113
Cuno what it ſignifieth. 98
Cunobelinus. 418.a
Cunobelin. 447.b
Curia Ottadinorum. 818.b
Curiales what they were. 771.a
Curſons a family. 553.e
Sir Rob. Curſon Baron Imperiall. 553.e
Robert Curthoſe an unfortunate Prince. 361.d
Curcies. 221.a
John Curcie his vertues. ibid.
Curtius Montanus a deinty toothed glutton. 342.e
Saint Cuthberts partimony. 735
Saint Cuthbert Biſhop of Lindefarn. ibid.
Cworwf. 20
Curwens knights. 769.a
Cuſtodes or Captaines in every ſhire. 159
Cuthred, king of the Weſt Saxons. 373.f
Cyprus called Keraſtis. 184
Cyrch. 18
Cythariſtes. 21

D

Dabernoun. 297.b
D'acre Barons of Gilleſland. 594.e
Dacre caſtle. 776.c
D'acre, Baron. 776.c
Leonard D'acre a traitour & Rebel. 784.f
Dacor a river. 776.c
D'airells or D'Hairells. 369.e
Dalaley caſtle. 593.
Daliſon or D'alanſon a family. 544.a Dalreudini. 126
Dan or Daven, a river. 608.d
Danby. 721.f
Danbury. 446.b
Dancaſtre. 690.b
Danewort. See Walwart.
Danes infeſt the coaſts of England. 139. why ſo called. 141 they land in England. &c. 142
Danes maſſacred by the Engliſh. 143
Their Deteſtable ſacrifice. 142
Danegelt a tribute. 142
Danmonii. 183. whence their name commeth. ibid.
Daning-ſchow a riveret. 608.e
Danteſey, a towne. 243.c
Danteſeys knights. ibid.
Dantrey towne. 508.a. The fort there. ibid.
Henry Baron Danvers of Danteſey. 243.c
Darby ſhire. 553
Darby towne. 554.c
Darby Lords and earles. 558.d
Darcies de Nocton. &c. 543.e
Darcies Barons de Chich. 451.c
Darent river. 328.d
Darenford or Dartford. 328.e
Darwent a river and city. 709
Davenport or Damport a place and notable family. 609.a
Saint Davids land. 653.c
Saint Davids, an Archbiſhops See. 653.d
David Biſhop refuteth the Pelagians. 657.b

Davery, or de alta rupe. 312.b
Dawns of Vtkinton, foresters of Delamere. 607.a
Deben a river. 465.b
Debenham or Depenham. ibid.
Dee a river. 594. c. whence so called, 602. c. Dee-mouth. 604.b
Dee head. 666.b
Devonshire or Denshire. 199.a. Walter, and Robert Deureux earle of Essex. 455.a
John Dee, a famous Mathematician. 745.c
Decimes. See Tithings.
Decuman a Saint. 220.e. murdered. ibid.
Decuriones what they were. 771
Saint Decombs. 220.e
Deale or Dole. 343.a
Deanries how many in England. 161
Deanforest. 358.b
Deane a place. 514.a
Deanes a family. ibid.
Deifying of Roman Emperours. 79
Deiri, that is, Hol-der-Nesse. 136
De la-mares. 233.a
De la mere forest. 607.a
De-la-pree, a Nunnery. 509.b
D' eincourts Barons of Blankenay. 535.f
Edmund Daron D'eincourt desirous to perpetuate his name. 536.a
De la cres Abbay. 587.c
John De la Pole earle of Lincoln, slaine. 549.a. 388.f
De la bere, an ancient family. 620.c
D'elveseyes, a family. 607.e
Delgovitia. 711.b
Delgowe what it signifieth. 711.b
De la val Baronie. 811.f
De la ware. 364.c
Dench-worths townes. 281.a
Denelage. 153.159
Dengy, or Dauncing hundred. 443.c
Dengy towne. ibid.
Dengy Nesse. 352.a
Dennington castle. 284.a
Edward Deny Baron of Waltham. 439 b
The Denisses. 206.c
Denbigh-shire. 675
Denbigh towne. 675.d
Denbigh Baron. 676.b
Denbigh made a shire. 677.e
Depford. 326.c
Depenbach. 603.e
Deping. 534.c
Derlington. 737.d
Derwen a river. 752.d
Derwent a river. 553.b
Derwent fells. 767.a
Deorhirst. 360.a
Deorham or Derham. 364
Dercoma. 20
Derechel. 21
Dereham. 482.a
Derchefu. 21
Dert a river. 201.d
Dertinton. 201.e
Dertmore. 201.d
Dertmouth. 202.c
Despencer, a noble family. 322.b
Hugh le Despencer. 267.c
Despensers Barons. 636.a
Devia river. 258
Devy bishop of Saint Davids. 226
Deverril, why so called. 245
Dewsborrough. 693.a
Devonshire earles. 207.c
Despota. 164
Dianaes chamber. 426.a
Digbies an ancient race. 525.e
Sir Everard Digby. 525.f
Alane de Dinant Baron of Burton. 510.a Dimetæ. 647
Dimocks a worshipfull family. 535.f. 541.c
Dimocks the Kings champions 541.c
Dilston a towne. 808.b
Dinever castle. 649.c
Dinleys or Dingleys, a family. 578.b
Dishmarch. 690.e
Ditches or Forefenses in Cambridgeshire. 490.a
Dinhams a family. 395.f. 207.b or Dinants.
Aul. Didius lieutenant in Britain. 48
Dicalidones, or Deucalidones rather, why so called. 117
Dignities ecclesiasticall how many in England. 161
Diamonds in Cornwall. 186
Diamond or Diamants neere Bristoll. 239.a.b
Dictum. 669.f
Diganwy. ibid.
Dioceses vnder every seuerall Bishop. 160.161
Disce or Dis a towne. 472.e
Distentons, gentlemen. 766.f
Disart castle. 680.b
Dives a family. 399.e
De Divisis a monastery. 513.e
Division of countries threefold. 154
Divils or Devilsburne a river. 808.b
Divils or Devils dike. 459.490.c
Divils or Devils. 609.c
Divils or Devils bolts. 701.b
Divona. 17
Divitiacus, a mighty Prince. 34
Dobuni. 354. whence so named. ibid.
Dodo or Dudo an English Saxon. 581. 359.c
Dod of S. Quintins a writer. 142
Dodington. 607.e
Dogs of Britaine. 263.d. 126. of Scotland.
S. Dogmael or S. Tehwell. 654.d
D'oilyes of Hoch Horton, Barons 375.b
Dolegethle. 665.e
Dolphins. 164
Domesday booke. 153
Domitian tormented with envie. 61
Don or Dune a river. 689.d
S. Donats castle. 643.e
Dor, a riuer. 176.d
Dormceaster. 501.e
Dormers knights. 395.f. 396.a Dornford. 501.e
K. Dorn his pence. 212.b
Dorchester. 384.b. 212.c
Dorsetshire: 209
Dorset Marquesses and Earles. 217.c
Dotterell, a bird. 543.c
Dove or Dow a river. 587.b
Dover. 344.b
Dover castle. ibid.
Dovy a river. 665.
Dowbridge upon Watlingstreet 508.d
Dowgate or Dourgate in London 423.e
Downes. 313.d
Downham. 494.c
Draicot a towne in Staffordshire, and a family. 587.e
Dragons in Banners. 195
Sir Francis Drake. 200.e. where borne. ibid. his navigation. ibid.
Draiton. 419.c
Draiton in Shropshire. 594.b
Draiton Beauchamp. 394.f
Draiton Basset. 581.f
Draiton in Northamptonshire. 510.b
Drax a village. 707.e
Driby a towne and family. 542.c
Driffield. 711.d

Droit-wich or Durtwich. 574.e
Dropping well. 700.a
Druide. 4. 12. 13. 14. the Etymologie of their name. 14
Druide in Britain did service in war. 49. they held one God. 68
Druide seated in Anglesey. 671.d
Drumbough castle. 775.e
Druries a family. 461.e
Dryfstocke. 325.e
Duddensand. 754.f
Dudden a river. 581.c
Ambrose Dudley Earle of Warwicke. 571.a
Iohn Dudley Earle of Warwicke beheaded. ibid.
Dudleys 280.e
Iohn Dudley duke of Northumberland his stile and demeanor. 821.e.f
Rob. Dudley Earle of Leicester. 524.b
Dulcitius a redoubted captaine. 80
Dulverton. 220.c
Duina first Bishop of Lichfield. 585.d
Dugleſſe a riveret. 749.c
Dun a notorious theefe. 402.d
Dunbriton frith. 56
Dunham. 610.c
Dunmaw. 444.e
Dunnington. 521.f. 567.c
Dunſtable 402.a. the crosse there ibid.
Dunſter castle. 220.d
Dunſtan Abbot. 227.d
Dunſtan putteth downe married Prieſts. 576.b. 243.d
Dunſtaburg. 812.e
Dunſley. 718.d
Dunum. 21.
Dunwich. 466.c. a Bishops See. ibid.
Dunus Sinus. 718.d
Iohn Duns alias Scotus. 814.b
Durobrivæ 501.e
Dur and Dour, beginnings and terminations of places what they signifie. 209.d
Durham citie. 739.e
Durham Colledge in Oxford founded. 381.f. reedified. 383
Durham Bishopricke a County Palatine. 736.a
Durſley. 364.c
Durance an house of the Wroths. 437.e
Durocobrivæ. 413.e
Durnovaria what it signifieth. 212.c
Duroſiponte. 498.d
Durotriges whence derived. 209
Dŭ what colour. 26
Dutton a place and worthy family 602.f
Dwr. 20
Dux Britanniarum. 76
Dux or Duke what title of honor. 164. under a Count or Comes. ib
Dux and Comes the same. ibid.
Dux or Duke a title of charge. ibid. a title of honour. 165
Dukes inveſture or creation. ibid.
Dukes hereditary. ibid.

E

EAdburga a Lady profeſſed religions. 395.c
Eadburton a towne. ibid.
Eadelmton or Edmunton. 437.d
K. Eadgar ſtyled Monarch of whole Albion, his triumph. 605.b
K. Eadgar the Peaceable. 130.a Eadred ſtiled King of Great Britaine. 139.a
Ealburg. 701.e
Ealdermen. 164
Ealphege a learned Prieſt married. 201.b
Ealpheg Archbiſhop of Canterbury executed 326.d
Earle what title of honour. 165
Earles by office. 502.c
Earles or Eorles hereditary. 166
Earles how created. ibid.
Earle Apoſtolicall. 239.e
Earle Imperiall. ibid.
Earles Coln. 450.d
Earles dike. 714.d
Earth. 155
Earth turning wood into ſtone. 401.e
Earth a rampier in Cornwall. 189
Eaſton Neſſe. 467.a
Eaſt-riding. 709
Eaſt-Angles. 456. 458.
Eaton in Bedfordſhire. 401.a Earth by divers occaſions altered. 1
Eatons what they be. 63
Eaye. 467.f
Saint Ebba an holy virgin. 743.a
Ebcheſter. ib.
Ebiſſa. 128
Eboracum or Eburacum, that is, Yorke, why ſo called. 702.d
Eccles. 478.e
Eccleſhall. 584.c
Eccleſiaſticall livings hereditarie. 595.f
Echingham Baron. 320
Eclipſes of the Sunne in Aries diſaſterous to Shrewsburie. 598.a
Edelfleda or Elfleda, a noble Ladie. 610.d
Eden a river. 776. 760.c
Edenborgh frith. 56
Edgecombs. 193
Edge an hill. 561.b
Edgar Eathling or Aethling. 146
Edindon. 244.e
Edith virgin, a Saint. 582.b
Edith King Eadgars daughter. 246.d
Edith a Lady profeſſed. 395.c
Edmund of Langley his deviſe and preſage. 510
Edmund Crouchbacke King of Sicilie deluded by the Pope. 756.b
K. Edmunds Martyrdom. 467
Saint Edmund a moſt Chriſtian King and Martyr. 460.c
S. Edmunds liberty. 459.c
S. Edmunds bury. ibid.
S. Edmunds dike. 490.f
Edmund king of England piteouſly ſlaine. 364.a
K. Edmund Ironſide. 143
Edmund of Woodſtocke Earle of Kent. 353.a
Edrick Streona. 595.d
Edrick Sylvaticus. 624.e
K. Edward the Confeſſour where borne. 377.a
Edward Confeſſour. 143.b
Edward Earle of Warwicke beheaded. 670.e
Edward the Firſt, King of England his praiſes. 776.a Edwardſton. 463.a
K. Edward the Second entombed 361.d. murdered. 363.b
K. Edward the Third his vertues. 297.d. a moſt renowned Prince. 278
Edwin the Prince made away by his brother Athelſtan. 213.e
Egbert calleth his kingdome England. 138. vanquiſheth the Danes. 143
Effingham. 296.f
Egelricke a wealthy Biſhop of Durham. 742
Egertons whence deſcended. 603
Egleſton. 736.e
Egremond an arch rebell. 724.d
Egremont caſtle. 766.a
The Eight. 360.b
Eimot a river. 762.d
Ela Counteſſe of Salisbury. 244.a
Queene Elizabeth an excellent Prince. 256.f. her vertues. 292.

292. 297. 298. her tombe. 430.b
Ellandunum. 446.d
Elen a river. 769.c
Elden hole. 557.e
Elenborough. 769.c
Elephants bones found in Britain. 447.c
Ellen hall. 584.c
Eliot his conceit of the name of Britaine. 5
Elleſmer a Barony. 599.a
Sir Th. Egerton Baron Elleſmer ibid.
North Elmham a Biſhops See. 466.d
Elmeley. 650.e
Elmeſley. 722.d
Elmet a territory. 694.e
Elmore. 362.b
Eleſley. 485.d
Elnemouth. 769.c
Eleutherus Pope. 67
Elrichroade. 532
Elſing. 482.a Eltham. 327
Eſton. 501.e
Elvan. 67
Elwy a river. 679.d
Emildon. 814.b
Emme mother to King Edward Confeſſour cleereth her ſelfe of incontinency. 211
Enderbies. 401
Hugh Enermeue of Deping. 533
Engliſhmen converted become zealous Chriſtians. 137. Studious in Liberal Sciences. ibid.
Enfield. 437
Engliſh names what they ſignifie and imply. 139
Engelrame de Coucy firſt Earle of Bedford. 402.f
England. 138
Engliſh Saxons returne into Germany. ibid. brought thither military knowledge, learning and religion. ibid.
Engins to aſſault in old time. 400
England full of vices. 143
England diuided into Counties or Shires by Ælfred. 158
Litle England beyond Wales. 652
Engliſh men whence they tooke name. 138
Engliſhmen the guard of the Emperors of Conſtantinople. 154
Engliſh tongue of what continuance. 133
Engliſh Maior. 681.e
Entweiſſel name of a place and Gentlemen. 746.a Equites Aurati, that is, Knights, whereuponſo called. 174
Erdburrow. 522
Erdeſſey. 620.e
Erdeſwick. 583.e
Eriry mountaines. 667.d
Ernald Bois or de Boſco. 396.b
Erewaſh a river. 555.c
Eryngum in Cornwal. 186.
Eſcrick. 707.e
Eske a river. 765.e. 781.c
Eſlinton. 813.c
Eſpringolds. 400.d
Eresby. 541.e
Erminſtreet. 64
or Ermingſtreet. 485.c. 501.f
Erminſul or Irmunſull. 64.
Eſquires what degree of Gentry 176.
Eſquires of fiue ſorts. 176
Steph. de Eſchalers a Baron. 485.c.
Eſſex. 439
Eſſex Earles. 453
Eſſex Cheeſes. 443.c
Eſſexes Knight. 283.f
Henry de Eſſex became a Monk. 681.d
Eſſex, a family. 443.a
Eſſendum. 18.
Eſſendon. 526.d
Eſterford or Eaſt-Sturford. 446.
Eſter or Easter celebrated on the Lords day onely. 118
Eſton aliâs Eſtanues ad turrim. 444.e
Eſton Neſſon. 506.c
Eſtotovils an honourable family. 533.b
Eſtre aliâs, Plaiſy. 445.a
Ethered vanquiſhed and ſlaine. 550.e
Eſturmies or Sturmies. 254.f
Ethelbert an unſufficient king. 143.
Ethelbert King, Martyr. 618.e
Etocetum. 582.e
Ethelbury. 728.d
K. Etheldred. a vertuous Prince 216.b. his tombe. ibid.
Ethelward a writer. 130.
Coveſham, Eveſham or Eiſham. 577.e
Eudo Sewer to K. Henry the firſt. 459.e
Eudo a noble Norman. 541.d
Evel a towne. 221.b
Evelmouth. 225.d
Evenlode a river. 376.b
Vale of Eiſham or Eveſham. 577.
Ever or Eure a towne. 394.b
Evers Barons. ibid.c
Everingham a Baron. 550.d
Evers Barons whence deſcended. 453.b.
Evers of Axholm. 813.b
Evers noble Barons. 738.e
Ewelme or Newelme. 388.e
Ewias. 631.e
Ewias Caſtle. 617.d
Euſtach de Hach a Baron. 246.b
Euſtow aliâs, Helenſtow. 401.a
Exchequer Court. 177. 178
Exa river. 203.b
Exceter colledge in Oxford. 381
Exceter. 203.f
Exceter Dukes. 205.d
Exceter Marqueſſ. 206.a
Exceter Exrle. 206.a
Exminſter. 206.b
Exmore. 203.c
Eythorp in Buckingham-ſhire. 395.f

F

OF Faculties the court. 181
Fairefax a family of gentlemen. 692.b. 723.d
Falco or Falques Brent a faithleſſe man. 400.c. 812.b
Falcons of the beſt kind. 644.b
Falkeſley bridge. 582.a.d
Falemouth. 189.
Fanhop Baron. 401.d
Farendon. 279.c
Farmors Knights. 506.c
Faſtineog. 666.a
Faſtidius a Biſhop of Britain. 84
Faulconbergs Barons. 714.a
Fauſtus a good ſonne of a bad father. 642.c
Fawey. 190
Fawſley. 508
Faux what it ſignifieth. 692.
Fekenham Forreſt. 574.f
Feldings Knights. 519.f
Fenwick Hall. 809.d
Fenwicks a family. ibid.
Ferrars Barons of Grooby. 520.f
Henry Ferrars of Baddiſley a gentleman well deſcended and as well ſeene in Antiquities. 568.d
Rob. Ferrars how enterred. 569
Lord Ferrars of Chartley. 584.f
Fernham Roiall. 394.d
Fernham why ſo called. 294.e
Fetherſton Haugh. 799.e
Fetherſtons a family. ibid.
Fettiplaces a family. 220.c. 281
Feverſham. 334.d
Fieldon a part of Warwick-ſhire. 561.b. 223.a

Feldon. 561.b
Fens or Fienlesse. 223.a.316.b
Fienes, Barons Dacres. 813.b
Sir Richard Fienes or Fenis Baron Say and Sele. 376.f
The File. 753.a
File what it signifieth. 715.a
Files. ibid.
Filioll. 217.c
Finborrow. 607.b
Finchdale. 742.a
Firr trees found in Axelholm. 544.b
Fisburgings. 819.c
A Fish poole or Mere by Saint Albans dried up. 411.c
Fishes with one eye a peece. 667
Fishgard. 654.c
Fish pond foreshewing the death of Monks. 609.c
Fittons a family. 610
Fitz-Alans earles of Arundel. 309.310.589.f
Fitzherbets an ancient family. 553.d
Sir Anthony Fitzherbert. ibid. a most famous Lawier. 359.b
Fitz Hugh, Baron. 730.d
Fitz Harding Lord of Berkley. 362.d
Robert Fitz Haimon slaine. 368
Fitz Teke. 406.c
Robert Fitz Stephen the first of Norman race that attempted Ireland by way of Conquest. 657.f
Rob. Fitz Walter de Clare. 407.
Fitz Walters Barons. 446.c
Fitz Walters ensigne bearers of London. 215.d
Fitz Lewis a family. 442.e
Geffrey Fitz Peter earle of Essex. 454.b. a worthy Iusticer of England. ibid.c
Fitz Stephen a writer. 427.b
Fitz Paine Baron. 215.d
Fitz Warins. 281,b
Sir Fulque Fitz warin, 598,b
Fitz Williams an ancient family, 690,a Rich. Fitz Pont a Norman. 618
Henry Fitz Roy, earle of Nottingham & duke of Richmond. 551,d Flamborough head. 714.e
Flamstead. 414,b Flatbury. 578,b
Flavius Sanctus. 341,d
Fleame dike or Flight dike. 490
Fleet a riveret in London, 423.f
Flemings a family. 646,c Fleming. 202.d.755.d
Flemingston or Flenaston a towne 646.e
Flemings planted in Wales. 154. 652.d
Flemish high way in Wales. 652
Flint shire. 679
Flint castle. 680,d
Flint earles. 681.f
Flixton. 715,b
Flixton or Felixton. 468.b
Floddon an hill. 816.a
Floddon field. ibid.
Florus a Poet. ibid.
Flotes a kinde of boates. 597.b
Felix Bishop of East England. 466.c.480.c
Fluor found in Darbyshire. 557
Foix a family. 759
Foliambs a great family. 556.b
Foliots a familie. 575.c 482.a Folkingham. 535.a
Folkstone. 349.b
A Font of Brasse in Saint Albans Church. 412.d
Foreatulus his conceit of the name Britaine. 5
Fordington. 212.d
Ford castle. 815.e
The Foreland of Kent. 342.d
Forneesse. 754.e
Forneesse Fels. 755.a
Sir Iohn Fortescue. 396.e
Forses or waterfalls. 759.f
Forefenses. 789. the first. ibid. the second. 790. a. the third. ibid. b. the fourth. 16.c
Forest what is and why so called. 293.c
Forest lawes. ibid.d
Forests in Sussex. 320.d
Fortunie a Turneament. 407.d
Fortunate Ilands. 4
Forty foot way. 511.f.515.a.64
Fosse dike. 537.f
Fossewad what it is. 569.c
Fosse a river. 702.b
Fosse way. 562.b
The fosse. 366.a.64.
Foules delicate. 543.b.c
Fossards a family. 709.b
Fotheringhay Castle. 510.d
Pile of Fouldrey. 755.c
Foulnesse a river. 711.b
Foulnesse an Isle. 443.c
A fountaine ebbing and flowing. 643.f.650.b
Fountaines Abbay. 700.e
Fowy. 190
Fracastorius his opinion of stone-fish. 363.c
Framlingham castle. 465.d
Fraomarius K. of the Almans. 79
Frankners in Britain. 72. destroied. 73
Fredrick the first Emperour, held Pope Adrian the fourth, his styrrup. 415.a
Franks a people of Germany. 122 where they dwelt. 130
Freedstol. 712.a
French or Gaulish provinces cast off the Roman yoake. 86
Freewaren what it was. 694.d
Frea or Frico a Saxon Goddesse. 135. how portraied. ibid.
Fremund vilanously slaine. 561.e registred a Saint. ibid.
Fremantle. 272.c
Frechevils or Freshwels a family. 555.f
Fresh water Isle. 274.a
Fretherick Abbat of Saint Albans. 414.c
Frevils a family. 582.c.d
Friday. 135
Frideswide a Saint. 378.a
Frisones come into Britain. 131
Frodesham castle. 610.a
Frome river, or Frau. 212.d
Frompton. ibid.
Iul. Frontinius his exploit against the Silures. 54
Froshwel a river. 443.d.444.d
Frowen Shoale. 347.c
Fulham. 421.c
Funarius, a name of Gratianus. 77.
Furnivalls a noble family. 587.c
Furnivall Barons. 394.d

G

Gabrantovici, why so called 714.d
Gabrosentum. 743.c.810.a Gael. 121
Gesata. 18
Gages. 315.c
Gaidelach. 121
Gaidels, that is, Scots. 123
Gainsborough. 543.e
Gaiothel. 121
Gaiothlae. ibid.
Gal a sweet smelling shrub. 544
Gallath why so called. 23. whence derived. 20
Galba. ibid
Galle. 22
Galls. 22

Gauls commended. 22. their exploits. ibid.
Gauls named Gomeri and Cimbri. 11. their religion. 12
Galgacus a valiant Britan his oration. 47 58
Gallana. 802.a
Gallatum. 761.d
Galtres foreſt. 723.d
Galuus. 20
Gamages, a family. 643
Gamlinghay. 485.d
Ganoc. 669.f
Gaol. 22
Gargraves, knights. 691.a
Garianonum. 477.a.b
Garlick growing in plenty. 213.d
Order of the Garter. 278.c
Garumna. 20
Garw. ibid.
Gaſcoignes an ancient family. 698.f
Gaſehound. 263 f
Gaſtenoies, a family. 553.c
Gateſhead. 743.b
Gauelkind. 325.d
Gaunleſſe a riveret. 738.d
Gaunts Barons of Folkingham. 535.a
Gawthorp. 698.f
Geat or Black Ambre. 719.d
Gehennæ. 21
Geddington. 509.f
Gedwey or Godney Moore. 230.c
Geduch. 18
Geffray ap Arthur, or of Monmouth. 5. his narration of Brutus and the name of Britain diſcuſſed. 5.b
Geldable a part of Suffolke. 459.c
Gelt a river. 783.b
Geneu what it ſignifieth. 190
Saint Genoveſs Fernham. 461.c
Genounia a Province in Britain. 66
Gentlemen. 177
George duke of Clarence murdred. 462 e. drowned in a butt of Malveſey. 510.e
Saint German in Britain. 132 192. 410.c. he rebuketh Vortiger. 624.d. preached againſt Pelagians. 378.f. 707.d
Germans called Scythians. 122
Germans whence they tooke their name. 26
German words agreeing with the Perſian. 129
Gernegans knights. 729.d
Gernons a family. 537.b
Gernſton. 472.f
Gerrards Bramley, an houſe and Baronie. 584.b
Gerrard de Rodes. 541.c
Gerrard a Baron. 584.c
Geſſi. 18
Geſſum. ibid.
Geſſoriacum. 348. a.d. it is Bologne or Bullen. ibi.d
Geveny or Gevenny a river. 635
Geviſſi. 294 c
Giants in Cornwall. 186
Giants teeth and bones. 451.d
Giddy hall. 441.f
Giffards a family. 581.e
Giffards. 365.f
Giffards earles of Buckingham. 397.d
Giffards Barons. 396.a. 541.b
Gilbertines a religious order. 534.c
Gildas. 8. a learned profeſſor. 378.f
Gilden vale. 617.e
Gilleſland Barony. 782.c
Gilleſland Lords. 786.e
Gilling. 730.a
Gillingham foreſt. 214.d
Gilbourgh. 507. f. a fort there. 508.a
Gipping ſee Orwell.
Gipping a village. 463
Girald of Windeſor a valiant Captaine. 652.a
Giralds or Giraldines a noble & renowned family. 652.b
Giraldus Cambrenſis Archdeacon of Brecknock. 627.b
Giraldus Cambrenſis. 8
Girwy. 743
Girvii what people. 491.c
Gisburgh. 721.b
Giſes a family. 362.b
Giſlebert of Clare earle of Hertford, 407.b
Githa earle Goodwins wife. 207.b
Glanoventa. 812.d
Glanvills a family. 469.a
Glaſſe. 19
Glaſſe houſes. 306,e Glamorganſhire. 641.a
Glanford a towne. 543.a
Glaſiers firſt brought into England. 743.a Glaſtenbury Abbay. 226,a Glaſtum, that is, woad. 19
Glawn. ibid.
Gledaugh. 652.c
Glediau. 215.f
Glemham, a towne and familie. 465,e
Glen, a river. 534,d. 815.d
Glendal. ibid.
Gloceſter ſhire. 357.a
Gloceſter city. 360,d
Gloceſter earle. 368.c,d.&c.
Gloceſter dukes. 369.c
Gloceſter Haul in Oxford built and enlarged. 382,a Gluis. 20
Godiva the wife of earle Leofrick. 543. d. ſhe freed Coventry from Tributes. 568,a Gods houſe. 268,c Godſtow Nunnery. 376.b
Godmancheſter. 498,b Godmanham. 711,c
Godolcan or Godolphin hill. 189
Godrick or Goodrick a good and devout man. 742,a Godrus a Daniſh K. Chriſtened. 223
Godwin or Goodwin Sands. 340.f
Godwin or Goodwin the earle of of Kent his treachery. 295.c his æquivocation. 307. a. his fraudulent fetch to get Barkley. 362.e
Gold-Cliff. 634.e
Gold and ſilver veines. 767.b
Golden Harniſh found. 816.e
Gold and ſilver mines in Cornwal. 186.
Gomer and his poſterity. 10
Gomer what it ſignifieth. 10
Goodwick. 481.c
Gorlois Prince of Cornwal. 195.
Gorlſton. 468. d
Gorges a family. 364.c
Gormo or Guthrum the Dane. 463.d
Gormod. 21
Gormon the Dane. 498. d
Gorombery. 413. d
Goropius Becanus what he thinketh as touching the name of Britain. 5.
Goths language hath ſome reſemblance of Welſh and Duch. 123
Government of the Roman Empire under and after Conſtantine the Great. 76
A Goth depainted. 123
Goths a noble Nation. 123.
Goths and Vandals the ſame. ibi. they came from the Getæ. 130.
Gourmand. 21.
Gournaies or Gornayes. 222.e
Matthew Gournay. 222.f. 364.
Hugh de Gornay a traitour. 472.
Gouttes what they are. 237.b
Gower. 646. a
Grace Dieu, ſometime a Nunnery 521.f

Grafton. 506.
Grafton in Worcestershire. 574.e
Grandebeof a Baron of Normandy. 712.a
Grandison Lord his discent. 286.b
Grandison Lords. 617.d
John Grandison Bishop of Exceter. 203. b. 206. d
Grand-Seargeanty. 406. c
Grant a river. 486. a Grantcester. 486. b
Grantham. 537. d
Hugh Grant maismill, or Grantmaisnill. 518. c
Granvill. 645. f
Granvils a family. 646.
Gratianus surnamed Funarius and why. 77. perfidiously slaine by Andragathius. 81.
Gratianus a Britan declared Emperour by the Army. 84.
Gravesend. 329. b.
Grayhams a family. 781.
Gregory the great a meanes of the Englishmens conversion to Christ. 136
Greleyes a family. 746.b
Greeklade, see Creeklade.
Greeks inhabited the Coasts, and along the Isles. 27
Greekes arrived in Britain. 28
Greisley Castle. 553. c
Greisleys an ancient family. 553. c
Grenvils. 196. a
West Greenewitch. 326. d. Greenwich. 326. d
Greenes a wealthy family. 507. a Greenes Norton. ibid
Greenes noble gentlemen. 510. c
Grenhaugh Castle. 753. a Greshams Colledge. 425. b
Greshenhal. 482. a
Greve what it signifieth. 330. a
Sir Foulk Grevil a worthy knight 517. e
Sir Foulk Grevil father and son worshipfull Knights. 565. f
Greys of Grooby. 520. f
Sir Henry Grey Baron Grey of Grooby. 521. a Greys of Sandacro. 553. d
Greys Earles of Kent. 553. c
Th. Grey of Ruthin Marquesse Dorset. 217. e
Henry Grey Marquesse Dorset and Duke of Suffolk. 217. f 470. c. beheaded. 217
Greyes Barons of Wilton, 396 d. their badge. 621. a. 396. d
John Grey Earle of Tankervil. 663. d
Greystocks Barons. 778. c
Greystock Castle. 778. b
S. Grimbald. 378. c.
Grimsby. 542. c
Grimstons-garth. ibid.
Grimstons a family. 714. a
Griphins a family. 507. b. 607. e
Grismunds toure. 366. d
Gron and Gronnes what they signifie. 486. b
Grooby. 520. f.
Grossemont Castle. 630. b
Grossvenours, commonly called Gravenours, a famous family. 604. b
Grosthead or Grosteſt a worthy Bishop of Lincoln. 540. b. c
Ground most fat and battle. 478
Ground burnt for tillage. 675. c
Gruffin ap Conan a noble Prince of Wales. 670. a Guadiana. 297. a Guaine. 21
Gwain. ibid.
Gualt what it signifieth. 20
Guarth what it signifieth. 563. b
Guarthevion why so called. 624
Guash, See wash.
Gueda wife to earle Goodwin. 363. b
Guenliana a woman of manly courage. 649. c
Grerif. 21
Guerir. ibid.
Gwif. 19
Guild hall in London. 435. a Guilford. 295. b
Guilfords a family. 352. b
Guineth Vranc. 19
Guineth. 659. f
Guiniad fishes. 666. b
Guiscard of Engolisme. 502. c
Gundulph bishop of Rochester. 333. a Gunora a Norman Lady. 620. c
Gunpowder treason. 754. a
Gunters a family. 628. f
Guorong what it signifieth. 325. c
Guortimer defaiteth Hengist & the Saxons. 332. a. where buried. 340 a Guvia. 19
Gwin, a colour. 26
Guoloppum. 132
Guy Brient a Baron. 212. e
Sir Guy of Warwick. 267. a. 564
Guy cliff, or Gibcliff. 564. e
Gynæcia. 263. c

H

Hacomb. 202. e
Hadseigh. 441. b
Hadley. 463. d
Pope Hadrian the fourth choked with a flie. 415. a Hadugato a Duke or Leader of the English Saxons. 138
Hagmond Abbay. 594
Haile a river. 193
Hadulohu. 138
Haimon Dentatus. 641. c
Robert Fitz Haimon subdueth Glamorganshire. 641. d
Hakeds a kind of Pikes. 499
Haledon. 806. d
Hales Monastery. 197. e. 365. a Halesworth. 467. c
Halifax. 691. f
Halifax law. 692. b
Halton hal. 808. f
Halyston. 812. f
Hamden a town and family. 395
Hameldon hils. 215. c
Hamon. 260. f
Sir Hamon Mascy 610. c
Hampton in Herefordshire. 620
Hampton Court. 420. b
Hamsted hils. 421. b
Hanging wals of Mark Antony. 763. c
Hanley Castle. 577. b
Hanmere a place and family. 681
Hannibal never warred in Britain. 32
Hans a river. 587. c
Hansacres a family. 578. b
Hansards a family. 543. a Hantshire. 258.
Hanwell. 376. e
Hanworth. 420. b
King Harald slaine. 317. a Harald Lightfoot. 379. b
Harald Haardred. 707. d
Harald the Bastard. 143.
Harald Goodwins sonne usurpeth the crowne of England. 145.
His worthy and princely parts. 146.
Harborrow or Haaburgh. 517. c
Harbotle a place and family. 812. f
Andrew of Harcla Earl of Carlile a traitour, degraded, &. 780. c
Harcourts. 584. c
Harden or Hawarden. 680. e
Hardes ancient gentlemen. 329. d
Harde-Cnut his death. 303. b. his immoderat feasting. ibid
Th. Harding. 208. e
Fitz Hardings Barons of Barkley 223. a
Hard Knot a mountaine. 765. e
Hardwick a towne. 555. f. and a family.

family. ibid.
Hareſſeild 419.c
Harford Weſt. 653. b
Haringtons or Haveringtons a family. 755. d
Haringtons Barons. 526. b. of old deſcent. ibid.
Harington Lord. 206.e
Sir Iohn Harington Baron Harington of Extor. ibid.
Haringworth the honour of the Zouches Barons. 414. a Harleſton. 472.e
Harleſtons a family. ibid.
Harold Ewias. 617. d.
Harold a Gentleman. 617.d
Harptree. 223.d
Harrow on the hill. 420.a
Harrowden. 510.a
Hartlepole. 738.b
Harts Hall in Oxford. 381. d
Harewich. 451.e
Harewood Caſtle. 698.e
Haſlingbury. 453.d
Haſtings a noble family in times paſt. 584.c
Haſtings Lords of Abergeveny. 568.e
Haſtings Baron of Loughborow. 394.c
Sir Edward Haſtings ſole Baron thereof. 521.b
Baron Haſtings and Hoo. 319.b
Sir William Haſtings Lord Haſtings. 318. f
Haſtings great Gentlemen in Suſſex. ibid.
Haſtings a towne whence it tooke the name. 317.f
Rape of Haſtings. 318. d. Lords thereof. ibid.
George Lord Haſtings firſt of that name Earle of Huntingdon. 503.a
Hatfield Bradock. 453.e
Biſhops Hatfield. 406.f
Hatfield Poveril. 445.c
Hatherton. 607. e
Hatfield Chace. 690. e
Hatley S. George. 485. d
Hatterel hils. 631. c
Sir Chriſtopher Hatton Lord Chauncellour of England. 508 his Commendation. ibid. his Monument. 509.a
Havelock a foundling. 542.d
Haverds a family. 628.e
Haudelo, Lord Burnell. 330.c
Havering. 441.e
Hawghton Conqueſt. 401.e
Hawghlee Caſtle. 464.a
Sir Iohn Hawkwood. 450.b
Haulton a towne and Caſtle. 611
Haure. 21
The Haw. 200
Hawſted. 450.d
Hawthorn at Glaſtenbury. 227.e
Hay a towne. 627.f
Hay Caſtle. 766.f
Headon a town. 713.c
Healy Caſtle. 583.e
Hartly Caſtle. 760.d
Heavenfield. 806.d
Hebrews called Hueſi wherefore. 23
Heidons or Heydons Knights. 479. b
Sir Chriſtopher Heidon. 326.c
Heil an Idol of the Saxons. 212.
Heilſton or Hellas. 189.
Heina a religious votary. 699.c
Heitſbury. 245.d
Heiu a religious woman. 738. b
Helbecks. 727.e
Helbeck a crag. 784.b
Helena the mother of Conſtantine the Great borne at Colcheſter. 451.a Helena a devout Empreſſe. 74.
Helenum. 187
Helion a family. 452.a
Hel-Kettles deepe pits. 737.e
Helmet of gold found. 537. e
Helvius Partinax employed in Britain. 66
Propretor in Britan. 67
Hemingſton. 464.a
Hempe the beſt. 210. d
Hempſted. 414.c
Hen-Dinas. 588. b
Heneti whence they tooke name. 26
Hengham Lords. 472.f
Hengiſt and Horſa brethren. 127. they ſignifie an horſe. ibid.
Hengrave. 461.e
Hengſton hill. 196.d
Heningham. 450. a
Henly in Arden. 566.a
Henly hundred. 389.a
Henly upon Tamis. 389.b
King Henry the ſixth his vertues enterred and tranſlated 294.d
King Henry the ſeventh his vertues. 297.f
Henry the fourth Emperour, enterred in Cheſter. 605.c
Henry of Lancaſter claimeth the Crowne of England. 680.d
Henry Fitz-Roy. 240.b
King Henry the ſecond his commendation. 284.e
Henry Prince rebelleth againſt King Henry the ſecond his father. 465.a
Henry the ſeventh proclaimed King. 518.e
King Henry the ſixth twice taken priſoner by his owne ſubiects. 509.e
Heorten. 738.b
Heorthus. 135
Heptarchie of the Saxons deſcribed, with ſeverall ſhires under every Kingdome. 157
Heptarchie of the Saxons. 136 reduced to a Monarchy. 138
Herbert Biſhop of Norwich. 475.a
Herbert Loſenga Biſhop. 472.a
Herbert Baron of Shurland. 334.b
Herberts Earles of Penbroch. 359.a
Sir Phillip Herbert Baron of Shurland & Earle of Montgomery. 663.b
Herberts an honorable family in Wales. 655.d
Le Herbert, a way in Wals. 665.f
Hercules whether ever any. 207.c
Herefordſhire. 617
Hereford Citie. 618.e
Hereford Earles. 621.b.c.&c.
Hereford Duke. 622.a
Hereford Vicounts. ibid.
Hering fiſhing by Hollanders &c. 717.f
Herings in Yarmouth. 478.a
Herings frequent our coaſt. 718.a
Herlaxton. 537.d
Herons or Heirons a family. 806.b.815.e
Herlotta. 197.b
Herma. 64.
Herſt Monceaux. 315.a
Herſt what it is. ibid.
Hertlebury Caſtle. 574.b
Hertford ſhire. 405
Hertford towne. 407.a
Hertford Earles. 415.e called Earles of Clare. ibid.
Herty point. 207.b
Doctor Hervey his Cauſey. 489.c
Hervey, firſt Biſhop of Ely. 493.d
Herward a valiant Engliſhman. 533.a Heſton. 420.a
Heſus. 17.
Heſſelwood. 696.c
Heus. 17.

Heveningham a towne and family. 467.c
Hexham shire. 799.d
Hexam shire. 799.d
Hextold a river. 807.d
Hextoldesham. ibid.
Heyford Warin. 377.a
Heyford Purcell. 377.a
Hides a family. 281.a
Hide what it is. 158.339.c
Highgate Castle. 778.c
High Crosse. 518.a
High Dike a streeteway. 534.a 64
High ridge. 64.
Highham a towne and familie. 463.c
Higham Ferrars. 510.b
High-land men. 119.126
Higra 707.c. What it is. 357.c
Saint Hilda, a shee Saint, and her miracles. 718.c
Hills erected, for what purpose. 406.c
Hildersham. 489.c
Hildeards ancient Knights. 713.f
Hilton a Castle and family. 742.c
Himilconever in Britaine. 33.
Hinchingbrooke. 497.d
Hinderskel or Hunderdskell a Castle. 723.c
Hinkley a Barony. 518.c
Hith or Hide a towne. 349.b
Hith what it signifieth. ibid.
Hitching. 406.c
Ho. 329.c
Baron Ho. 318. 319
Hoes a family. 542.c
Hobarts knights, and Atturneys Generall to Kings. 476
Sir Edward Hoby knight. 286.b 334.a Hobelars. 272.275.b
Hocke and Hocks old English for mire and durt. 402.a
Hoch Norton. 375.a
Hockley in the hole. 402.c
Hodde hils. 215.c
Hodesdon. 408.d
Hodington. 578.c
Hodlestons an ancient family, 696.c.765.d
Hodengs a family. 394.c
Hodnet a towne and family. 594.b
Hodney a river. 628.a
Hoel the good Prince of Wales. 650.c
Holburne or Oldburn. 432.f
Holcrofts an ancient family. 608.d
Holcroft a place and family. 747.d
Holderneſſe a promontory. 713.c
Holdenby house. 508.c
Holderneſſe a promontory. 713.c
Holderneſſe honor. 715.b
Holes within the Ground. 440.d
Holland a part of Lincoln-shire. 529. why so called. ibid.
Hollands a great family. 519.b and most noble. 749
Iohn Holland of Denshire. 205.a his coate of armes. ibid.d
Iohn Holland Duke of Exceter and Earle of Huntingdon. 205.d
Henry Holland Duke of Exceſter ibid. his miſerable caſe. ibid.f
Iohn Holland halfe brother to king Richard the ſecond, beheaded at Plaiſi. 445.b
Hollands, knights. 353.b
Hollands earles of Kent. ibid.
Iohn Holland the yonger his ſtile. 502.f
Henry Holland Duke of Exceſter his fall. 502.f
Thomas Holland earle of Kent and duke of Surey. 304.c. beheaded. 304.c
Holme Cultrain Abbay. 773.a
Holmesdale. 294.b
Holme Pier Pount. 548.f
Holme caſtle. 296.f
Holmes chappel, a towne. 609.a
Holme Lacy. 621.a
Holt in Denbighshire. 677.b
Holt caſtle. 594.b
Holly head. 673.a
Holy Iſland. 814.c
Hooten. 606.c
Hope caſtle. 681.a
Horn church. 441.f
Horn caſtle. 541.c
Hornby caſtle. 753.f
Honorius Emperor. 83. ſuccoureth the diſtreſſed Britans againſt invaſion of Barbarians. 86
Honoriaci what ſouldiours. 118
Honoriani. 127
Horſe running. 723.d
Horſe, the badge or cogniſance of the old Dukes of Saxonie. 135
Horſe-heath. 489.c
Horton. 691.f
Hote-Spur. 596.c
Hothams a family. 711.d.721
Howards a Noble familie. 472.c
Henry Lord Howard, earle of Northampton. 516.c
Henry Baron Howard, of Marnhil. 215.c
Charles lord Howard earle of Nottingham. 551.d
Tho. Vicount Howard of Bindon. 213.a
Howards earles of Surrey. 304.c
Thomas lord Howard of Walden. 452.e. 470.d. earle of Suffolke. ibid.
William lord Howard of Naworth. 783.b
Iohn lord Howard, duke of Norfolke, the firſt of that houſe. 483 ſlaine. ibid.
Thomas Howard his ſonne vanquiſhed the Scots. 483.c
Henry Howard earle of Surry a learned Nobleman. ibid.
Tho. Howard laſt duke of Norfolke. ibid.
Houden and Houden-ſhire. 710.c
Houghton. 480.a
Howgill caſtle. 762.c
Howley. 693.c
Howty, a brooke. 608.a
Hubert de Burgh earle of Kent. 352
Hubba the Dane. 208.f
Hubbeſtow. ibid.
Huckſtow foreſt. 592.c
Huddleſton. 696.c
Hueſi. 23
Hugh the Norman. 212. d. a traitour. 205.a
Hugolin, or Hugh Spenſer. 642.b
Hugh earle of Shrewsbury ſlain. 672.d
Hull the river. 711.c
Hull, the towne. 712.d
Humfrey Duke of Gloceſter and his ſtile. 369.c. The good duke and a favorer of learning. 382 his death. 561.c
Humber an arme of the ſea. 689. 542.c
Humel or Hymell caſtle. 514.b
Hundreds or Centuries appointed. 158.d
Hungerbourne. 255.c
Hungerfords. 195
Hungerford towne. 282.c
Hungerford Barons. 245. d. 282

Hunibald a bald writer. 6
Hunshil a fort. 509.d
Hunstanston. 418.b
Hunsdon, a Barons seate. 408.c
Hunt Cliffe. 720.e
Huntercombs, a family. 394.c 815.d
Huntingdon Castle in Hereford shire. 620.c
Huntingdon shire. 497.e
Huntingdon towne. 497.d
Huntingdon Earles. 502.c
Huntingfeld towne and baron. 467.c
Huntly Nab. 720.f
Hurling. 186
Hurlers. 192
Hurst Castle. 260.d
Huscarles what they be. 576.e
Hussy the first and last Baron of that name. 535.d
Hyeritha a Shee-Saint. 208.b

I.

IAmes the sixth of Scotland, stiled King of great Britaine. 141. a mild and gracious Prince. 298.b
Iames the fourth King of Scotland, slaine. 483.c
Th. Iames of Oxford a studious Antiquarian. 639.c
Ianus with two foreheads. 97
Iaphets progenie how it was propagated. 10
Iarrow. 743.d
Iberi whence they take name. 26
Iccius portus, in France a port townelet. 36
Iceni. 456
Ichnild-street. 456.d
Iceni in Britaine discomfited. 43
Idle a river. 550.d
Iermins knights. 461.d
Iermegans knights. 468.e
Ierby a towne. 769.c
Iervis or Iorvalle Abbay. 729.c
Ierusalem in hand to be reedified. 79.
Iestine a rebell against Prince Rhese. 641.c
Iesu of Bethlems house. 297.e 420.f
Iesus Colledge in Oxford. 383.b
Iohn Iewell Bishop of Salisbury. 208. c. a profound Clerke. 248.e
S. Ies: 193
Ikborowgh. 482.b
Ikenild street. 64
Ikening street. 402.d
Ikesworth. 461.d
Ilands of what use. 478.d
An Iland floating. 478.d
Isle of Ely. 485.c. why so called. 492.f
Il-bre, an Isle. 607.a
Ilcester, or Ivelcester. 221.e
Ilfarcomb. 207.a
Ilkley. 697.c
Il-street. 603.e
K. Ina: 226.c
Innes of Court and Chauncery in London. 427.c
Inborow what it is. 815.b
Incubi. 17
Infants of Spaine. 164.
Inglebeys a family. 535.f.699.f
Ingleborne. 242.c
Ingleborrow Hil. 749.e
Inglefields an ancient family. 284.c
Inglini bipenniferi. 154
Inis wen. 24
Insula Cæruli. ibid.
Inundations in Monmouth shire, and Somerset shire. 634.d
Ioan the faire maide of kent. 353.b
Ioan de Acres. 369.b
Iohannes de Sacro bosco. 692.c
Iohn of Weathamsted. 7
Iohn Earle of Athol cruelly executed. 336.a
Iohn of Gaunt his stile. 757.b
King Iohn his sword at Lin. 480.f
King Iohn called iudicially into question in France, and endited for murdering his Nephew Arthur. 733.d
Saint Iohns knights of Ierusalem. 428.a.433.a
Ioseph of Arimathea. 68
Ioseph Iscanus a Poet. 204.d
Ioseph Scaliger. 10
Ipres towre. 319.d
Wil. de Ipres. 332.c. Earle of kent 352.c
Ipswich or Gipwich. 464.c
Ireland: the site thereof. 56
Irke a river. 746.a
Irthenfield or Archenfield. 617.e
Irt a riveret. 765.e
Irmunsull. See Ermin. 64
Irthing a river. 782.f
Irthington. 745.e
Irwell a river. 745.e
Iron or Yron mines. 581.b
Isa, a river see Vsa.
Isabell de Fortibus. 207.e
Isan parles a rock. 763.b
Isc river. See Ex.
Isca Danmoniorum. 203.f
Isca Silurum. 204.a
Iscaw. 20
Isis haire or Isidis plocamos. 211
Isis a river. 241.c
Isis a river in Glocestershire. See Ouse.
Islip. 377.a
Simon Islip. 332.c
Is-urium Brigantum. 701.c
Ithancester. 443.d
Itium is whitsan, not Callais. 348
Iudeal de Totenais. 201.f
Ivel the river. 221.b
Iulham or Chilham. 336.b
Iulia street. 639.e
Iulian the Apostata usurpeth the Empire. 79. is declared Cæsar. 78
Iulius Cæsar attempteth Britain. 34
Iulius a Martyr in Britain. 73. 636.e
Iullaber. 336.b
Ivo Talboys of Aniou. 532.f
Ivo a Persian Bishop. 499.a
A Iury of 12. men. 153.
Iustices of the Forrest. 293.e
Iustices ordained by Aelfred. 158.
Iustices of Peace instituted by K. Edward the third. 160.
Iustices of Assises. 160.179
Iustice, or chiefe Iusticer of England. 178
Iustices Itinerant. 179
Iustices in Eyre. ibid
Iustices of Goale delivery. ibid.
Iustices of Nisi prius. ibid.
Iutæ a people in Germany. 128. why so called. 130.
Ixning. 459.d

K

KAderne. 18
Kainho a Barony. 401.d
Katharine Dowager of Spain enterred. 513.
Keian a Scot. 649.b
Keidelston. 553.e
Keimes a Barony. 654.c
Keina, a devont virgin. 236.f
Keirch. 20
Kelhop a riveret. 738.c
Kelnsey. 714.a
Kelsay. 543.a
Ken a river. 753.f
Kenchester. 618.d
Kendale, or Kirkby Kendal. 759
Kendale Barons and Earles. ibid.
K. Kenelm a Saint. 365.e
Kenelworth, or Killingworth. 566
Kenelworth Castle. ibid.
Dictum de Kenelworth. 567

Kenet the river. 255.a
Keninghal. 472.c
Keniwalcsh vanquisheth the Britans. 221. d
Kent. 323. why so called. ibid.
Kentishmen right courteous and valiant. 324.c
Kent Earles. 352.d
Kentish Pety-kings or Potentates. 37
Kent-sand. 753.f
Kentigern Bishop of Glasco. 679.c a great Clerke. 378.f
Kernaw. 183
Kernellare, what it is. 753.f
Kesar, for Cæsar. 326.c
Kesteven a part of Lincolnshire. 533.b
Keston. 326.c
Keswicke. 763.c
Ket a rebell, hanged. 473.b
Kettel, the name of a family. 543.b
Kettleby. 543.a Kettering. 510
Keven. 21
Keven Caer. 661.c
Kevenles Castle. 624.a
Kevin. 21.
Saint Kibie an holy man. 673.a Kidderminster. 573.f.a. Barony. 514.a
Kidwelly. 649
Kildale castle. 721.c
Kighley, a place and family. 693
Kilgarth. 192
Killey. 816.e
Kilgarran. 654.e
Killingworth, See Kenelworth.
Kilmain Lhoyd. 650.d
Kilnsey Crag. 697.b
Kilpeck a castle and family. 617
The Kings Champions. ibid.
Kilton castle. 720.c
Kime a noble family. 535.e
Kimbolton or Kinnibantum castle. 501.c
Kindreton. 610.b
Kindreton Barons. 609. b
Kined a Saint. 646.c
Kinefeage castle. 644 d
King what it signifieth. 163. his soveraigne powre &c. ibid. his roial prærogatiues. 163
Kings of England made heires to their subiects. 485.e.f
Kings in Britain during the Romans Empire there. 67
The Kings Courts of Iustice. 177
Kings Bench. 178
Kingston Lacy. 216.f
Kings Cleare. 272.c
Kings knight or Taine. 293.e
Kinstone upon Tamis. 297.b
Kings Delfe. 500.b
Kingston upon Hull. 712.d
Kings Ditch by Cambridge. 488.c
Kings wood Abbay. 364.c
Kinneburga. 502.b
Kinnersley. 620.c
Kinton. 561.c
Kirkham. 709.d
Kirkby Bellers. 522.f
Kirkby Morside. 722.c
Kirkby the same that Pontfret. 695.c
Kirkby Lonsdale. 760.c
Kirkby Stephen. ibid.d
Kirby Thore. 761.c
Kirk Oswald. 777.f
Kirkton. 532.c
Kirsop a river. 781.d
Kirtling. 491.b
Kirton. 203.d
Kits Coty house. 332.b
Kitsons knights. 461,e Knarisborow castle. 699.f
Knebworth. 406.e
Knevets a family. 472.c,d
Knevet or Knivet, Baron of Escrik. 707,e
Knight what degree of Gentry. 170
Knights simply so called. 173
Knights of foure sorts. 171
Knights Banarets. ibid.
Knights of the Bath. 172
Knights dubbed by earles. 174
Knight a title of dignity. 175
Knights how dubbed. 176
Knights Bachelars. ibid.
Knights twelue, emploied in the Conquest of Glamorgan-shire. 641.e,f Knightleys ancient knights. 508
Knighton. 623.e
Kniveton a place and family. 553.c
Knocking castle. 597.b
Knoll. 328.a
Knolls Barons de Rotherfield. 389.c
Knots a deinty foule. 543.c
Knotsford a towne. 610.c
Knute the Hardy, or Hardy Knut. 143
Knute king of the Danes vanquisheth Ethelbert. 143
Kowain. 18
Kumero. 10
Kumbri or Kambry. 765.b
Kumari. ibid.
Kumerneg. ibid.
Kwrw, a Britisb drinke. 31

L

LAberius Durus slaine by Kentishmen.
Lac a riveret. 753.d
Lacie. 213.d
Lacies Conquerours of Ireland. 631.c
Lacie the Norman. 695.d
Iohn Lackland, who hee was. 255.f
Lacon, a family. 591.d
Lactorodum seemeth to be Stony Stratford. 397.b
Lælianus an usurper in Britaine murdred. 71
Lætavia. 111
Læti. ibid.
Lætus a valiant Captaine. 69.
Læford, by contraction, Lord. 168
Laine. 19
Laks in Staffordshire of a strange nature. 588.b.c
William Lambard commended. 323.b
William Lambard his hospitall. 327.f
Lambith. 303.b
Lambley Nunnery. 799.e
Lamborne. 283.f
Lambourn Manour. 440.c
Lampreies. 574.c
Lane the name of a family. 509.f
Lanandiffry. 649.d
Lancashire. 745
Lancaster or Loncaster towne. 754.b
Lancaster Lords. 755.f
Lancaster Earles. 756
Lancaster Dukes. 757
Lancham. 463.d
Lanchester. 742.e
Landaff. 642.d
Landes end. 188
Lanercost Abbay or Priory. 782.c 785.c
Langerston. 465.a
Abbots Langley. 414.f
Kings Langley. 414.f
Langley. 592.a
Langho. 750.a
Langtons a family. 752.e
Langanum. 668.b
Lanheath. 491.a
Lapis Tituli. See Stonar.
Lascelles a family. 707.e.724.e
Latham. 749.a
Latimer what it is. 598.c
Latimers, a towne. 394.e

Latimers de Corby, a family 507.b
Latimers, Lords. 721. f. 729.d
Latimer a surname. 598.c
Lavatræ. 732.d
Laver a river. ibid. e
Lazellin an high hill. 767.f
Lawleyes, a family. 591.f
Lawlesse Court. 441.e
Lawes of England in a tripartite division. 153.
Law-courts of England. 177
Lawes, that is, Heapes of stones. 802.b
De la Lawnds, a family. 542.c
Laurence Noel, repayrer of our Saxons language. 188
Laxton or Lexinton a towne and name of a family. 550
Layth. 21.
Lea or Ley a river. 406.e
Lea, the name of a family. 592.d
Leach. 21
Lead of Darbyshire. 556.e
League. 21
Leakes Knights. 556.b
Leam, the river. 507.e
Leam a brooke. 561.a
Leamington. 561.d
Leanminster. 17
Leckhamsted. 396.e
Leddets, a family. 507.b
Long-Leat. 245.a
Ledden a river. 620.e
Ledbury a towne. ibid.
Lee, Knight. 280.c
Lee a place and family. 610.c
Sir Henry Lee. 395.f
Leeds Castle. 331.c
Leeds. 694.e
Leegh. 441.c
Leez. 445.c
Legeolium. 695.a
Leibourne. 332.c
Leiden Castle built by Hengist. 130.
Leightons knights. 593.a
Leighton Buzard. 402.e
Leighton in Huntingdon shire. 501.d
Leiton. 439.f
Leightons a family. 667.d
Leicester shire. 517.
Leicester towne. 519.d
Leike a towne. 587.c
Lemster or Leinster. 619.f
Lemster Ore. 620.a
Lemster bread. 620.
Lena. 17
Leneham. 331.a
Leofrike Earle of Mercians. 567.e
Leofrike first Bishop of Excester. 204.d
Leofrike lord of Brane or Burne. 533.a
Leoftane Abbot of S. Albanes. 393. c
Leolin Prince of Wales his behaviour to king Edward. 363.e
Leon Vaur a fabulous Giant. 604
Leon Vaur what it signifieth. ibi.
Leonell Duke of Clarence. 462. d
Leprosie why termed Elephantiasis. 522.d. when it came first into England. ibid.
Lestoff. 468.d
Leskerd. 191
Lestuthiel. 190
Lettuy what it is. 399.f
Leuca. 21
Leven a river. 781. c. 782.b
Leveney a river. 628.c
Levensand. 754.f
Lever Maur. 67
Leventhorps a family. 408.c
S. Lewis K. of France taken prisoner. 249.e
Lewis of France his pretended title to the Crowne of England. 340.
Lewis a towne. 313.e
Lewknors. 312.e
Ley-mouth. 440.a
Lhan what it signifieth. 631. d
Lhan Beder. 657.d
Lhan Badern vaur. 658.a
Lhan Stephan. 650.c
Lhan Devi Brevi. 657.b
Lhanthony Abbay. 631. c
Lhan Vais. 672.e
Lhan Vethlin. 662.d
Lhan Heron. 193
Lhan Stuphadon or Launstaveton. 196.c
Lhein. 668.b
Lhewellin ap Sisil Prince of Wales 680.a
Lhewellin ap Gruffith the last British Prince of Wales. 670.b
Lhewellin last Prince of Wales of British race. 624.c. slain. ibid.
Lhuyd his opinion concerning the name of Britain. 5 24.
Library in Oxford furnished. 381
Lichfield. 585. b. an Archiepiscopall See. 585.d
Lickey Hill. 574. d
Lid what it is. 491. d
Lid river. 199. d 781. f
Lid a town. 351. a Lid Castle. 781. Liddesdale. ibid
Lidgate a village. 461.f
John Lidgat a Monke. ibid.
Liesnes Abbay. 328.b
Lieutenants in every County or Shire instituted by King Ælfred. 159.
Lilborne. 515.c
Lime river and towne. 210.b
Limestone great store. 694.f
Limits of the Roman Empire. 789. e. d. see Scotland.
Limseies a family. 567. e
Lime a port towne. 549.e
Line or flax of the best. 620.a
Lillinstone. 396.e
Lincolnshire. 529
Lincoln City. 538. b. whence the name is derived. ibid
Lincoln Earles. 544. e.f
Lindsey a part of Lincolne-shire. 537.f
Robert of Lincoln. 313.d
Lincolne College in Oxford. 381
Linstock Castle. 778.a
Lingeins a family. 665.d
Lin. 480.d. why so called. ibid
Old Lin. 480.
Kings Lin. ibid.
Linnum Episcopi. ibid.
Linperis poole. 668.d
Lin a river. 547.c
De la Linde. 213.f
Linton or Lenton a towne. 547.d
Lionesse. 187
Lisls a family in the Isle of Ely. 494.d
L'isle a family. 276.a
L'isle of Rougmont. 490.b
Listers a family. 592.e
Vicount L'isle. 280.d
Liver a river. 192.
Littons a family. 406.e
Litchfield in Hantshire. 272.e
Littleborough. 549.e
Lites Cary. 224.f
Littletons a family. 574.d
Littleton alias Westcot a learned Lawyer and a famous. ibi.
Livery and seasin in old time. 340
The Lizard. 189.
Llydan what it is. 111
Louder a river and family. 792
Lode workes. 184.
Loogher. 646.a
Lollius Vrbicus Propretor in Britain. 66
Lollham bridges. 512.a
London. 421.d
London an ancient Colony. 50.
London called Augusta. 79. 80.
London stone. 423. a London wall: ibid.e
London bridge. 434.a

London highway from Saint Albanes turned out of Watling-street. 415.b
London or Londres, a family. 649.d
Laurice de Londres or London. ibid.c
Longchamps a family. 532
Longford a place and family. 553.d
Long-Meg a stone. 777.c
Longvils a family. 397.c
Lonsdale. 760
Loo a river. 192
Lophamford. 467.d
Lora Countesse of Leicester, a recluse votary. 339.a
Lortie the name of a family. 221.d
Lothbrooke the Dane. 207.a
Lottery used by Saxons. 135
Lovain a family. 444.e
Lovels. 374. a family. 505.d
Lords of Castle Cary. 514.a
Lovets a family. 553.d
Loughborough. 521.d
Lowland-men. 126
Louth. 542.c
Lowy of Tunbridge. 330.a
Lowy of Briony. ibid.
Luceni in Ireland. 121
Lucensii in Spaine. ibid.
Sir Rich. Lucy Lord Justice of England became a Chanon. 328.b
Lucies a family. 769.f
Lucius King of Britan. 67
Lucies knights an ancient family. 564.f
Lucullea certaine speares. 62
Ludgate. 423.c
Ludham. 478.d
Ludlow. 590.c
Ludlowes a family. 594.b
Luffeilds. 396.f
Luffenham or Leffingham, South and North, townes. 525.
Lug, a river. 619.d
Lugus, what it signifieth. 779.a
Lullingstone, a towne and family. 328.e
Lumley castle. 742.b
Lumleys Barons. ibid.
Lune or Lone a river. 753.c
Lupicinus sent into Britaine. 78
Lupus Earle of Chester. 611.a
Lusorie naves. 811.d
Luthing, a lake. 468.d
442.a
Luthingland. ibid.
Luton. 402.c
Lutterworth. 517.f. an Episcopal See. 519.d
Lygons a family. 577.b
Th. de la Lynde. 213.f
Lyquirice in great plenty growing. 550.f
Lyrpoole or Litherpoole. 748.d

M

MAchleneth. 661.b
Macclesfield, a towne and forest. 610.b
Madin-boure or Madningboure. ibid.
Madning money. ibid.
Madock falsly dealt withall, by his Guardian Iohn earle of waren. 677.b
Maeate. 796.d
Magicke practised in Britaine. 234.a
Magnavills, alias, Mandevil. 452. b. Earles of Essex. 453.e
Magnavil his end. 453.f
Magnentius an usurper. 77. called Taporus. ibid. a fortunate Prince. 77. killed himselfe. ibid.
Magnus a Dane. 314. c. his monument. ibid.
Magoclunus a tyrant in Britain. 113
Magon a God. 803.d
Mahel earle of Hereford. 358.f
Maiden castle. 212.c
Maiden Bradley. 24
Maiden way. 761.e
Maiden head or Maiden-Hith. 286.c
Maidstone. 330.e
Maidulph the Irish Scot. 242.c
Main, what it signifieth. 569.c
Maior of London first ordeined.
Main Amber. 188
Malcolm Can Mor, King of Scots. 500.c
Maldon. 446, e. forced by Queen Boadicia. 448
Malduit or Manduit. 570
Mallets a family. 223.e
Malliveries. 700,b
Malmesbury. 242,b
Malpas. 603. c. Baront thereof. ibid.
Maltravers Borons. 217.a
Malvern hils. 577.b
Malveisin. 814.a
Mamignot. 326.d
Maminots Barons. 332.d
Mancastle. 746.b
Mancester. 569.c
Manchester. 746.a
Manchet the finest. 420.a
Manchester why so called. 747.a
Mandrubatius, See Androgeus oppressed by Cassibilinus. 37
Manduites a family. 591.e
Mangonells. 400.d
Mannours or de Manerys a family. 815.e
Mannours Earles of Rutland. 527.a.b. 536.b
Manober Castle. 651.c
Mansions what they were. 65
Mansfield a great mercat towne in Shirewood. 550.b
Manwarings or Memilwarings a family. 608.a
Sir Peter Manwood Knight. 339.b
Sir Roger Manwood Knight. ibid.
Marble quarrey. 736.e
Marca. 18
Marden. 620.d
The Marches. 589.b
Mrga what it is. 536.e
Margan Castle. 644.e
Marga. 20.
Margaret Countesse of Richmond. 216.d
Margaret Countesse of Salisbury beheaded. 250.d
Lord Marchers. 589.c.165
Marcley hill. 620.b. moveth ibid.
Marcus made Emperour in Britaine by the armies. 84
Mareschall of Harlots. 294.b
Mareschall Earle of Penbroch why so named. 655.b
Mareschal Earle of Penbroch slaine at a Turnament. 407.d
Mary Queene of Scots her end her tombe. 511.c.513.b
Mary Lady Fane. 330.d
Mary Haul in Oxford. 381.d
Mary Magdalen College in Oxford. 382.b
S. Maries of Radcliff. 237.e
Marius a mighty strong man. 779.d
Markham an uncorrupt iudge.

Markham a village and name of family. 550.e
Markham lord chiefe Iuſtice of England. 550.e
Marle. 20.393.c
Marleborough. 255.d
Marleborow ſtatute. 256.a
Marlow. 393.
Marmions a family. 729.e
Marmions the kings Champions. 582.c
Marney Baron. 213.a
Marnhill. 215,c
Marqueſites found. 720.f
Marqueſſe what degree of honour. 165
Marqueſſe how created. 165
Marchland. 690.e
Martin biſhop of Tours, againſt putting heretikes to death. 82
Martin Vicegerent in Britain, ſtabbeth himſelfe. 78
Martins, lords of Keimes.
Martins a family. 654.d
Martyrs in Britain. 73
Maſons firſt brought into England. 743.a Maſſagetes, Scythians. 121
Maſsham. 729.c
Matrafall. 662,d
Mawde the Empreſſe lady of the Engliſh. 453.e. king Henry the firſt his wife. 284.d
Mawde of Saint Valeri a ſtout Dame. 623.c
Saint Maudit caſtle. 189
Maugre Lhewellin a caſtle. 623.c
Mauleies Barons. 709.c
Peter Mauley. 719.c
Mault of Abbington. 280.a
Mault how made. 485.b
Maundbury. 212.c
Maunſels. 641.e
Maxey caſtle. 515.a
Maximus uſurpeth the Empire. 82. his vertues. ib. ſtiled Trevericus Emperor. ib.
Maximus the vſurper vanquiſhed and put to death by Theodoſius. 83
Maxſtock caſtle. 567.c
Meales what they be. 479.e
Eaſt-Mean hundred. 268.f
Weſt-Mean hundred. ib.
Meansborow hundred. ib.
Meanuari. ib.
Meaux Abbay. 712.c
Walter Medantinus an Official earle. 621
Medaghom. 634.b
Medcalfes a numerous family. 729.a
Medeſhandſted alias, Medeſwelhamſted. ibid.
Medeſwel, a gulfe. 512.b
Medley. 693.f
Medvan. 67
Medway river. 329.d
Meermarkes in old time. 515.c
Melborn caſtle. 554.a
Melcomb Regis. 211,c Melfield. 815.d
Long Melford an hoſpitall. 462
Melienith. 624,a Melin, what colour. 26
Melitus a Roman, Biſhop of London. 426.c
Melkin a great profeſſour of learning. 378.f
Melton Mowbray. 522.c
Menai. 668.c
Mendip hill. 230,d
Mendleſham. 465.b
Meneg. 189
Menevia. 653.d
Menils Barons. 721.b
Merbury a place and familie. 609.f
Mercians of the North. 559.b
Merchenlage. 153
Mereworth. 330.d
Mercury had the charge of waies. 64
Mergate. 413
Merioneth ſhire. 667
Merivale. 569.d
Merkin. 188
Merlin the Britans Tages, where borne. 649.f
Merſey a river. 745.e
Meſey mouth. 610.b
Merſhland. 481.a
Merton a poole. 749.d
Merton. 302.d
Merton Colledge. 302
Statute of Merton. 302.e
Merten brooke a riveret. 554.d
Metham a place and familie. 710
Metaris or Maltraith. 529.c
Mettingham. 468.c
Merlin Sylveſter, the Britiſh Apollo. 640.a
Michael de la Pole Earle of Suffolke. 712.e
Saint Michaels mount. 188
Michelham. 315.d
Michael Scotus a great Mathematician. 773.b
Middleſex. 419
Middleton Abbay built by King Athelſtane. 213
Middletons a family. 698.d
Middlewich. 607.f
Mikel barr. 701.f
Milburga a devout virgin. 591.e
Sir Walter Mildmay a worthy knight. 514.c
Mildred a Saint. 340.b
Milſtones. 681.a. 556.f
Milford haven. 651.d
Millum caſtle. 765.d
Mimmes. 415.d
Mineran what towne. 407.f
Minchins, that is, Nuns. 362.b
Mineral ſtones. 720.f
Minſhul a place and family. 608
Minſter. 334.a
Minſter what it ſignifieth. 245.c
Minſter Lovell. 373.f
Miſſelto of the Oke. 14
Miſſenden a towne. 394. e. de Miſſenden, Gentlemen. 394.e
Mitford. 812.b
Mutton. 731.b
Mittons a family. 665.d
Mixon. 274.e
Modwena or Mowen a religious Virgin. 569.e. 586.b. her Epitaph. 586.c
Moeles. 196.a. 221.c
Mogontus. 691.d
Mohuns. 190.f
Mohuns or Moions. 220.d
Moignes or Monkes, of Eſſex a family. 245.b
Moilenlly. 676.c
Moinglath. ibid.
Mole a river, why ſo called. 296
Mold. 681.a
Molineaux a family. 748
Mona Taciti, an Iſlle. 671
Mona ſubdued by Iulius Agricola. ibid.
Monaſtical life or Monkery when firſt profeſſed. 603.a
Monaſteries what they were. 603.c
Monaſteries ſuppreſſed 163
Monkcheſter. 810. b. Monkton. See Exceter.
Monkes Laymen. 603.c
Monkes a family. 208.a
Monkes regular or of the Clergie. ibid.
Monkes Weremouth. 742.f
Monmouthſhire. 631.
Monmouth towne. 632. b. the natal place of King Henry the fifth. 632.e
Monmouth an Academy. 633.e
Monow, a river. 617. 631.c
Montacute a place why ſo called. 222. b

Montacutes Knights. 510.a
Montacutes a family. 222.c
Earles of Salisbury. ibid. 249
Th. Montacute Earle of Salisbury slaine before Orleance. 250.
Mont Ægle Barons. 753.f
Montchensyes, Barons. 329.a
Guarin Montchensy another rich Crassus. 463.b
Montferrant Castle. 709.b
Montfichets Barons. 453.c
Montfichet Baron. 440.a.809.e
Montforts. 566.a
Simon de Montfort Earle of Leicester. 523.e
Simon de Montfort the younger disloyall to his Prince. 523.e
Simon Montfort another Catiline. 577.f. slaine. 578.a
Montgomeryshire. 661
Montgomery towne and Castle. 661.f
Montgomerie Earle. 663.b
Montgomerie made a shire. 677.
Mont Turold a fort. 513.a
Montioy. 555
Monthault Barons. 680.e
Monuments or Tombs in Paules Church in London. 426.d.&c
The Moore in Monmouthshire. 694.d
Moores what they be. 759.b
Mordants Barons. 399.b
Moresby, a place, and name of gentlemen. 766.c.f
Mooreland. 586.e
Mor. 21
Morinwyr. ibid.
Morimarusa. 11
Morleys Barons. 315.c.453.d
Morisons, Sir Richard & Charls 415.a
Moregate in London. 423.d
Mordant. 510.c
Morton Cardinall and Archbish. of Canterbury. 212.b
Morpeth. 812.c
Morton Corbet. 594.e
Morvils a family. 775.f
Hugh Morvil, that slew Thomas Becket. 777.f
Mortimers Earles of March. 619
Mortimers of Attilborowgh. 473.b
Morwic. 813.b
Mortimers hole. 548.e
Roger Mortimer the elder, sentenced to death. 624.e
Roger Mortimer the last declared heire apparent to the Crowne. 625.a
The Mosses. 745.d. whence they come. 747.b
The Moto. 783.b
Mont Sorel or Mount Soar Hill. 521.a
Mowbray. 304.f
Mowbraies a family the originall of their race. 723.c
Mowbray much affected the Templars. 566.d
Mowbraies whence descended. 481.c
Th. Mowbray Duke of Norfolk. 482.e banished. ibid.
Mowbray. 221.f
Moult-Grave Castle. 719.c
Mountsbay. 188.189
Mousehole. 188
Mouthwy, a Commot in Wales. 665.d
Moyen. 213.b
Moyly Gaer. 679.c
Muchelney. 222.a
The Mues. 432.c
Munden Furzivall. 408.b.703.a
Municipia, what they were. 409
Murdacks a family. 565.a.409
Musards Barons of Staveley. 555.f
Muschamps Barons. 815.c
Musgraves villages and a family. 760.d
Musgrave Baron. ibid.d
Mustard the best. 359.b
Mynyd Margan. 644.e

N:

Nadder a river. 245.d
Naitanus a king of the Picts. 118
Names of families altered. 583.e
Names of families taken from places. 748.a
Names taken from the fathers forename. 813.b
Nannius. 82
Nant Pencarn a river. 639.f
Nant-wich. 607.f
Natan Leod, or Nazaleod. 258.f
Nations the same have sundry names. 23
Nations at first had names of their owne. 25
Navy Royall of England. 333.e
Naworth Castle. 784.f
Neath or Nid a river. 645.f
Neath a town. 643.d
Neath land. 649.d
Nectan a Saint. 207.b
Nectaridius slaine. 79
Needles. 274.e
Needhams a family. 464.a. 598.c
Needwood. 586.e
Neirford a town and family. 480. 481.d
Neirborough. 481.d
Nen the river his head. 507.c
Nen river. 497.a
Nen or Anson river overflowech the flat Country. 513.c
Nesse. 351.a Promontory. 451.d
Nesta a welsh Lady and a revengefull woman. 628.e
Netherby. 781.d
Netherwent. 640.b
S. Neoth. 378.c
S. Neots or Needs. 497.c
Neotus an holy man. 191.497.a Neotstow. 191
Nero the Emperour how he stood affected to Britaine. 48
Nettlested. 463.c
Nevern river. 654.d
Nevills a family, their descent. 737.c
Nevill Lord Faulconberg Earle of Kent. 353.c
Rich. Nevill Earle of Warwicke. slaine. 415.d
John Nevill Marquesse Montacute. 222.c.405
Rich. Nevill Earle of Warwicke. ibid.
Rob. Lord Nevill killed in adultery. 729.c
Nevills an honorable name. 769
Nevin a mercate village. 668.b
Newark upon Trent. 549.c
Newburg. 672.f
Newborrough Abbay. 723.b
Newborroughs or de Novo Burgo. 213.a
Will. of Newborrough. 723.b
Newbury. 283.d
New Castle upon Tine. 809.f
New Castle upon Tivy in Wales. 650.e
New Colledge in Oxford. 381.e
Newenden. 351.b
Newenham Abbay. 207.a
Newgate in London. 423.c
New forrest. 259.b
Newhall. 446.c
Newlands. 767.a
New-leame. 495.b
Newmerch. 364.b
Bernard Newmarch a valiant and Politicke Norman. 628.e
New market or Newmercate towne. 459.d
Newmarket Heath. ibid.e.490.d

New-

Newmarch the name of a family. 221.c
Newnham. 401
Newnham Regis. 562.d
Newnham wells. 562.e
Newport Painel. 397.c
Newport in Monmouthshire. 639. d
Newport in Penbrockeshire. 654
Newports a family. 605.d
Newports Knights. 594.f
Newsted. 547.c
Neustria what country. 144
Newton in Northamptonshire. 509.f
Newton in Glamorganshire. 643
Newton in Mongomeryshire. 661
Nicence Creed established. 77
S. Nicolas Isle. 200
Nicolas of Tewksbury. 202.c
Nicolaus Fabricius de Petrisco a good Antiquarian. 97
Nicolaa de Albeniaco an Inhæretrice. 364.f
Nid or Neath a river. 645.f 699.e
Nidherdale. 699.e
Niding a name of Reproch. 333.b
Niger usurpeth the Empire in Syria. 68. slaine by Septimius Severus. ibid.
Ninnius a learned professour. 378.f
Ninius. 6
Ninia or Ninianus an holy Britaine. 118
Nobilis Cæsar, what title. 104
Nobilissimus the sonne of Constantine an Emperour. 85
Nobility in England of two sorts. 164
Noels a family. 284.c
Nonesuch. 287.c
Normanton Fields for Dormanton fields. 511.f
Norris. 384.a
Norris of Ricot. 384.a
Normans, why so called. 144. what outrages they committed. 144.
Normans renowmed for Martiall Prowesse. 153
Normans Conquest set downe at large. 145. &c
Normandie given to Rollo. 144
Normanay awarded away from the Kings of England. 733.d
Norrham a towne. 816.b
North Allertonshire. 723.f. the faire there. ibid.
North, Barons. 491.b
North, Hall. 415.d
Northamptonshire. 505
North Elmham. 481.f
North Leach. 366.b
Northwales. 659.c
Northfolke. 471
Northwich. 607.f
Norfolke men wrangling Lawyers. 471.c
Norwich a Bishops. See 472.a
Norwich what it signifieth. 473.e
Norfolke Earles and Dukes. 482.b
Norton in Suffolke. 464.a
Norton Dany. 507.a
Norwich a City much endangered. 475.c
North-Riding. 717.
Northampton. 509.a. why so named. ibid.
Northampton field fought. 509.e
Northamptonshire. 509.f
Northamptonshire Earles. 515.e
Northumberland. 799.
Nosthil. 690.f
Noteley Abbay. 396.a
Nottinghamshire. 547
Nottingham. 547. d. why so called. ibid.
Nottingham Earles. 551.b
Northumberland. K.K. Dukes and Earles. 819.d
Novatians hereticks. 84
Nun Eaton. 569.a
The first English Nun. 339.e

O

OBsidianus Lapis, what Cole. 735.c
Oehiehole. 230.d
Ock-river. 286.c
Ockham Oetha. 128
Odiam. 269.e
Odingsels. 567.c
Odo Bishop. 333.a
Odo Earle of Kent and Bishop of Baieux. 352.b
Oen a welch rebell. 658.c
Offa King of the Mercians his devout munificence to the Church. 410.f
Offa Dike. 421. e. 623.
Off Church. 561.e
Offton. 463.c
Ogle Castle. 812.a
Ogmor. 643.a
Ogle Barons. ibid.
Oilway a riveret. 636.c
Oisters called Mira. 449.f
Oister hils by S. Albans. 413.d
Oister pits in Kent. 335.a
Okeham. 526.a
Okenyate. 593
Oldbury. 363 269.d
Old man of Bullen. 345.c
Old Castle executed. 329.c
Oldstreet or Ouldstreet. 540.e
Old Towne. 617.c
South Okindon. 442.d
O-Nell great Monarch of Ireland. 126
Onions hole. 271.b
Onions Pennies. 271.e
Orbeies a family. 607.e
Orcas what point. 1
Orchard the Honour of certaine Barons. 223.e
Ordalium, what triall. 211.a
Ordulph his tomb. 199.e
Ordgar. ibid
Ore a river. 465.d
Oreford. ibid.
Orell a family. 748.a
Oriall Colledge in Oxford. 381.d
Originall of Nations and their names. 4
Ormesby a towne and family. 542.c
Ormeskirke. 744.a
Orthotes. 139.
Orton or Overton. 502.b
Orwell a river. 463.f
Orwell Haven. 465.a
Orewood. 184
Osgodby. 543.a
Osith a virgin. 451.e
S. Osiths a towne. 451.b
Osney Abbay founded. 375.c
Osterius Lieutenant for the Romans. 590.a
Osterius his adventures, and service in Britaine. 42. 43. his victorie. 44. honoured with Triumphant Ornaments. 45
Oswald Bishop of Worcester, a maintainer of Monasticall life. 576.b
Oswald slaine by Penda. 597 gloriously entombed. 540.f
Oswald. 690.f. 806.c
Oswald his Epitaph. 748.c Fables going of him. 540.f
Oswaldslaw Hundred. 578.c
Oswestre. 597.c
Otherhalfe stone. 191
Otelands. 295.e
Otford. 328.e
Otley. 698.d
Ottadini. 796
Ottery river. 206.c
Otterbourne field. 803.c
Otterey S. Maries. ibid.
Overburrow. 753.d
Ouerwent. 640.b

Oulney. 397.c
Oundale, for Avondale. 510.c
Ounsbery Hill. 721.d
Ousley. 565.c
Ouse a river in Glocestersh. 367.a
Ouse river first called Vre and Your. 689
Ouse or Ouze river. 241
Ouse the greater. 471.b
Ousbourne a riveret. 701.d
Owen Iustice of the common Pleas. 592.a
Owen Glendowerdwy, or Glendour a notable Rebell. 623.c
Owers. 274.c
Outborow what it is. 815.b
Oxfordshire. 373
Oxford. 377.c
made an Vniversity. 380.f
Oxford Earles. 389.d
Oxney. 351.f

P

PAcatianus, vicegerent or Deputy in Britaine. 75
Padstow. 193
Palace in Westminister. 431.b
Palatine what it is. 601.b
Paganells or Painells. 207.b
Pagetts of Beaudesert Barons. 585.a Palatine Counts. 167
Pandon gate. 810.b
Pant a river or Creeke. 443.b
Pannonians whence they took name 26
Pantulphs Barons. 594.c
Pall, what it is. 336.d
Paul, Papinianus the great Lawyer. 703.d
Palmer. 366.a
Papp Castle. 768.a
Parr Earle of Essex. 454.f
Parr, of Kendale. 759.e
Parr Lord, of Horton. 509.f
Parcus in Varro, for a Parke. 375.e
Parises, a family. 489.e
Parishes first set out in England. 160
Parish Churches how many in England. 161
Parks in England. 375.e
Parkers a family. 463.e
Parkers, L.L. Morley. 473.a
Parker Baron Mont-Aegle. 754.a
Parlament house. 431.c
Parliament. 177
Parrham a little towne. 465.e
Passham. 397.b
Paston, a townelet and family. 478.f
Pastwn. 21
Patern a Bishoppe in Wales. 668.b
Pateshul, a towne and familie. 507.a
Pateshulls. 399.d
Paules or Pouls Church in London founded. 425.c
Paules steeple burnt. 425.e
Paule. 68
Paule the Notarie, surnamed Catena. 78.b
Paulinus first Archbishop of Yorke. 693.d
Paulinus preached Gods word in Lindesey. 539.a Paunton, a towne. 537.b
Payn Peverell. 488.a
Peada a Christian prince murdered. 512.c
Peag-Kirk. 515.a
Peake in Darbyshire. 553. why so called. 556.c
Peasen growing of themselues. 351.b. growing out of rockes. 466.b
Peché. 485.e
Peculiars Court. 182
Pedred or Parret, a river. 222.a
Pedwar. 19
Pedwardins a family. 532.f
Peer of Dover. 345.d
Pega an holy woman. 515.a
Pehiti for Pecti. 118
Peincling that Britans used. 31
Peito a Franciscan Freer. 562.b
Peitoes a family. 562.b
Peitons of Peiton hall, knights. 491.a
Pelagius an Arch-Heretick. 602.f a Britan born. 87
Pelagian heresie in Britaine. 410.c
Pelham. 315.c
Pembridges a family. 594.a
Pempedula. 19
Pen, by Wicomb. 393.e
Penne. 18. what it signifieth. 393.e
Pencoh Cloud. 19
Pendle. 19. hil. 749.e
Penguall, what it signifieth. 117
Pennigent. 19. hill. 749.e
Pen a village. 221.d
Penninus. 18
Pentarchie of the Romans in Britain. 156
Penuahel, what it signifieth. 117
Pen-Elin. 187
Pensans. 188
Pennant. 191
Penal. 661.c
Penbroch or Pembrok-shire. 651
Penbroch towne. 651.c
Penbroch Earles. 555.a
Pen Maur. 19
Pen Maen Maur. 669.c
Pen Maen Bichan. ib.
Penball Crag. 811.d
Pendragon Castle. 760.c
Penk, a river. 582.f
Penkridge, a towne. 583.a
Penrith. 776.d
Pensneth chace. 581.d
Penshurst. 329.e
Penworth or Penverdant. 752.d
Pentaphyllon. 19
Penteney Abbay. 481.e
Peperking, alias Peverell. 443.f
Percies a family. 312.b
Percihaies a family. 722.d
Percy Hotespur. 803.c
Percy Earle of Northumberland slaine by rebels. 724.d
Percepierre an herbe. 237.a
Peregrine Berty, Lord Willoughbie of Eresby. 541.f
Peregrines, Falkons. 654.b
Perennius a Minion of the Emperour Commodus. 67. beheaded. 67
Perin. 198
Perith or Petriana. 777.a
Perles shell fish. 669.d
Perles. 765.e
Perkin Warbeck. 205.b
Pershor. 578.b
Pertinax, Emperour. 68
Peter in Britain. ib.
Peters Post a delfe or quary of stone. 696.c
Petre of Writle Baron. 442.d
Saint Peters upon the Wall. 443.e
Sir Willam Petre commendations. 446.a
Peter pence. 226.c
Peterburgh. 512.a
Peterril, a river. ib.
Petor. 19
Petoritum. ib.
Petrarie. 400.d
Petrock. 194
Petronius Turpilianus sent as reprætor into Britain. 52

Pevensey or Pemsey. 213.c
Peverells Lords of Darby. 558.d
Peverells a family. 445.c
Pever a river and place. 609.e
Pewter vessel. 184
Phelips or Philips a family. 467
Philibert. 269.c
Philip earle of Flanders, earle of Kent. 352
Pickering a towne. 782.b
Pickering Lith, Pickering a Liberty and forest. 722.b
Picot Sheriffe of Cambridgeshire. 485.e
Picts wall. 789
Picts what it signifieth in old British. 116
Pic. 20
Picts whence descended. 114. the progeny of ancient natural Britans. 115. why so called. when the Northren Britans became so called. 116. divided into two nations.
Picts, what became of them. 118
Piddle a riveret. 213.d
Piers Gaveston. 198
Pierpount a family. 548.f
Pigots. 401.c
Pilchards. 186
Pilgrimage to our Lady of Walsingham. 479.c
Pimble mere. 666.b
Pimthecnos. 15
Pinkneys Barons. 505.e
Pinson a Noble Norman. 541.d
Pits. 334.c 440
Pitchford a village & family. 592.b
Placence. 327.b
Plague in Yarmouth. 477.f
Plaines of Salisbury. 245.d
Planarat. 20
Plautius a governour in Britain. 447
Pleshi Plaisi, or Estre. 445.a
Plime river. 200.a
Plimouth. 200.a
Plimpton. 201.b
Plin Limon an high hill. 658.b
Plin Lin meare. 666.b
Plugenet a Baron. 618.a
Plumpton Parke. 776.f
Pœnius Posthumius killeth himselfe. 52
Poinings Barons. 215.d
Pointz Barons. 223.f
Points a family. 364.b
Poleland, why so called. 27
John de la Pole Earle of Lincoln 469.f. executed. 470.b
Polleſworth. 569.e
Wil. de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk. 469. d. banished. 469. f. beheaded. ibid.
Henry Pole Lord Mountacute. 222. d. 453.d
Pole, Cardinall. 206.a
Poltimore. 203.e
Poltrosse a river. 799.f
Pole. 192
Policletus a favorite of Nero sent into Britain. 52
Pontes. 394.a
Poole 606.f. Pontthiue County or Earldome in France how it came to the K K. of England. 394.b
Poole a towne why so called. 211.e
Pomeries. 202.a
Pomponius Lætus his opinion of the name of Britain. 5
Pooles on hiltops. 667.e
Popham. 223.e. 256.c
Pontfret or Pomfret. 695. c. infamous for the bloudshed of Princes. 695.f
Pont, a river. 809.d
Port Gate. 808.f
Port a Saxon. 210.d
Portland. 210.e
Portchester. 268.a
Port Peris. ibid.
Portsey Iland. 268.a
Ports mouth. 268.b
Porstaw. 313.d
Potheridge. 208.a
Potton. 401.c
Portcleis. 603.d
Portmen. 477.e
Portogan. 603.d
Portsholme. 498.a
Portskeueth. 633.f
Pouderbach Castle. 592.c
Poultney a family. 517.
Povers a family. 377.a
Poudre treason of Rob. Catesby. 431
Powicke a Baronie. 577.b
Powis Lords. 663.c
Princes of Powis. 663
Powise Land. 659.c
Powlet L.S. John Earle of Wiltshire. 257.a
Powlet his honorable titles. 267
Powderham. 206.b
Powndbury. 212.c
De Praerijs a family. 607.e
Prasutagus king of the Iceni 49 457.a
Præfecti Prætorio under Constantine the Great. 76
Præfecture what it is. 422
Prærogative Court. 181
Præsidium. 563.a
Priests forbidden marriage. 201
Priests married. 576.201.b
Priscus Licinius Propretor in Britaine. 66
Priscillianists the first haretickes condemned to death. 82
Priests marriage debated of in a Synode. 243.d
Prestom. 623.e
Prichards, a family. 628.e
Probus Emperour. 71
Preston in Anderneſſe. 752.d.e
Prideaux. 194
Protolitia. 808.d
Prittlewel. 441.c
Provinciall Latin affected by the Britans. 116
Provinces 2. in England. 160
Prowes. 203.a
Princes of Wales. 683
The Prince, his place, and stile. 163.164
Prudhow castle. 808.d
Pseudocomites. 167
Puckerich. 408.a
Puclechurch. 364.a
Pudsey Bishop of Durrham and Earle of Northumberland. 741.f
Pulein a professour in Divinity and favourour of learning. 379.e. 380.c
Pulhealy. 668.b
Purbecke Isle. 211.c
Purcells, or de Porcellis. 377.a
Puseies. 280.f
Putney. 303.a
Pymp. 19
Pyramides of Glastenbury. 229
Pyramidall stones. 701.a Pyran. 193
Pyrry, a drinke. 573.d

Q

Quatremans men of good note. 383.f
Queene Borough. 334.a
Queenes Colledge in Oxford. 381.d
Querendon. 395.e
Quickesands in Holland. 529.f
Quincy, Saer Earle of Winchester. 267.b
Quintinus. 82
Quintins a family. 731.a

R

Raby castle. 737.b
Raculph Minster. 335.b
Radcliffes a family. 767.d

Radcliffe

Radcliffe or Redcliffe. 437.d
Radcliffe in Bristow. 237.e
Radegund. 349.a
Radmilds. 312
Radnorshire. 623
Radnor town. 623.c
Radnore made a shire. 677.e
Radwinter. 446.a
Ragland. 636.c
Raihader Gowy. 623.a.b
Raleghs. 208.e
Ralegh a towne. 443.a
Ramsey Isle and Abbay. 499.b
Ramsey Mere. 499.d
Rammes foreheads, that is, Promontories. 184
Ramesbury. 256.b
Rank-riders. 799.c
Ranulph Earle of Chester. 607.b
Rapes in Sussex. 306.e
Ratis. 20
Ratcliffs Earles of Sussex. 321.a Ravenglasse. 765
Ravensburn river. 326
Ravenswath castle. 730.b
Reads a family. 577.b
Reading. 284
Readsquire a mountaine. 802.a
Reafan the Danes Baner. 195
Reche a towne. 490.c
Recall a river. 722.d
Rech dike. ib.
Reculver. 335.b
Redcastle, or castle Rous. 594.d
Redin. 20
Redhorse vale. 561.c
Red colour giveth name to many places. 525.d
Redbourn. 413.d
Redbridge. 262.d
Redrose and white, for Lancaster and Yorke. 725.e
Redshanks. 126
Redvers or Rivers earls of Denshire. 207.d
Redverses or de Riparijs. 201.c
Redwald King of the East Saxons. 465.c
Reforming errours a Court. 180
Reginald Pole his commendation. 216.b
Religious houses dissolved. 163
Remney a river. 631.b.642.a
Remni what it signifieth. 642.a
Remigius Bishop of Dorchester. 539.c
Rendlesham. 465.c
Renimed. 419.e
Reptacester or Richborow. 341.a
Repton. 553.f
Requests Court. 181
Rerecrosse. 732.f
Reuda. 126
Rheda. 18
Rheder. ibid.
Rhedec. ibid.
Rhedecsa. ibid.
Rhead a river. 802.a
Rheadsdale. 802.c
Rhediad. 18
Rhegium, why so called. 347.d
Rhese ap Gruffin. 623.d
Rhese ap Thomas a valiant knight. 650.e
Rhie a river. 722.d
Rhidale. ibid.
Rhia, Baron. 472
Rhre whereof so called. 319.d
Rhodanus. 21
Rutupina littora what they bee. 342
Ribel a river. 749.d
Ribelchester. 750.b
Ribald L'isle. 485.f
Ricall. 707.d
Richard the Second renounceth the crowne. 680.d
Richard duke of Yorke claimeth the crowne. 725.b
Richard a renowned Earle of Cornwal 197.d. his death and sepulchre, his sonne Henry murdred. 197.f
Richard Coeur de Lion. 380.a
Richard the third, a bad man, & a good Prince. 212.a
Richard, duke of Glocester, an usurper. 369.f. his practises to win the crowne. 370
Richard the first his praises. 285
Richard the Second, his Reliques translated to Westminster. 414.f
Richard King of Romans &c. 414
Richborow. 341.a
Richborow decayed. 341.f
Riches Barons. 441.d
Richard Lord Chauncellour of England. 445
Richards castle. 619.e
Richmond shire. 727
Richmond towne. 729.f
Richmond Earles. 733
Richmond the kings house. 297
Richmonds a family. 77.8.a
Rickmansworth. 415.c
Rising castle. 481.c
Risingham. 803.d
Rith what it signifieth. 486.a
Rivers had Divine honours. 602 heaped upon them. 698.a
Robert bridge. 320.c
Robert Earle of Leicester. 466.c
Robert Crouch backe Earle of Leicester. 519.f
Robert Consul or Earle of Glocester. 368.d
Robert Fitz Haimon. 359.d
Robin Hood. 693.a
Robin Hoods bay. 718.c
Roch a river. 745.f
Roch Dale a towne. ibid.
Rochester a castle. 802.c
Rochester city. 332.e
Rochester or Roffes a family. 405.d
Rochford towne, and Hundred. ib.
Rochford Barons. ibid.
Rochford Vicount. ibid.
Rockingham Castle and Forest. 513
Rock-Savage. 610.a
Roden a river. 594.c
Roding a river. 440.b
Roger the magnificent Bishop of Salisbury. 243.a Rogerses Knight. 215. ibid
Roise a Lady. 405.b
Roiston. ibid.
Roises Crosse. ibid.
Rolrich stones. 374.c
Rollo the Norman. 144. his dream and conversion. 144
The Roull of Winchester. 153
Rome called Constantina. 85
Romania 24
Romeswork. 343.f
Romans foiled and massacred in Britaine. 51
Roman Empire in Britain at an end. 87
Romans in Britaine. 34
Romescot. 411.a
Romara a Norman, Earle of Lincoln. 544.e
Roos Barons. 532.f
Rosamund Clifford King Henry the second his paramor. 375.
Rosamunds bones translated, and afterwards reduced againe. 376.c
Rose red and white for Lancaster and York. 725.e
Rosse. 190.714.a
Rosseland. 190.
Rosse in Penbrochshire. 652.d
Rosse in Cardiganshire. 657.c
Rosse Barons. 714.a
Rosebery Topping. 721.d
Rose Castle. 778.c
Rota temporum, that is, The wheele of Times, an History. 790.b
Rother a river. 320.a

Rotherfield. ibid.
Rotherham. 689.c
Rotherham Archbishop of Canterbury. 689.c
Rowcliff Castle. 781.c
Rouchester. 809.c
Round table. 265.b
Rowles in London. 428.c
Rousses a family. 467.c
Routon Castle. 592.c. 662.
Rugby. 562
Rudheath Sanctuary. 609.a
Ruffes, fishes. 476.c
Rugemond or Richmont Greies in Bedfordshire. 734.d
Rugemont. 204.c
Rumalds shrine. 396.d
Rumford. 441.f
Rumon. 199.c
Rumney Marsh. 350.b
Rumney towne. ibid
Runkhorne. 510.d
Rushbrooke. 461.d
Rushton. 509.f
Russel Lord Russel of Thornaugh 514.c
Russels, Knight. 578.c
Russels Earles of Bedford. 394.e 403
Ruthin. 676. Ruthlan. 679.f
Rutlandshire. 525. why so called. 525.b.c.d
Rutland Earles. 426.f
Rutters what they were. 812.b

S

Sabridgeworth. 408.e
Saca. 129. Sacasones. ibid.
Sadleir. 408.a
Sacvil Earle of Dorset and Chauncellour of Oxford 382.
Saer de Quincy Earle of Winchester. 521.a
Salisbury Church. 248.a.b
Saffron. 453.a
Salisbury Earles. 249.c
Salarin a custome or Impost for salt. 608.a
Salisbury for Sarisbury. 246.f
Salisbury Hall. 750.c
Salkelds townes. 777. e. and a family. 778.a.
Salmons the best called Vmbræ 1627
Salmon leape in Penbrochshire. 654.e
Saindie or Sandie. 401.b
Salston. 48.e
Salt made. 268.b.e
Salt Esse. 196
Salt hilles. 529.e
Salt artificially made. 753.b
Salt stones. 739.d
Saltpits. 573.b.c
Saltry Abbay. 500.b
Salt pits in Cheshire. 608.a.b
Salustins Lucullus in Britaine. 62
Salt wood castle. 349.c
Salwarp a river. 574.d
Salmonds or S. Amands. 283.c
Samonds or S. Amands Barons. 244.a. 366.c
Samothea. 24
Sampier growing aboundantly. 434.a
Sandal Castle. 693.d
The Sand, part of Notinghamshire. 550.a Sandalum. 19
Sandgate Castle. 349.c
Sandiacre or S. Diacre. 555.d
Sands Barons. 269.b.& c
Sandon. 343.a
Sandy. See Saludica.
Sanctuaries. 260
Sandwich. 342
Sanguelac. 317.c
Sapcotes a family. 501.c
Sarasins-heads. 695.a
Sarmatians, are Scythians. 121
Sarn Helen a Portway in Wales. 666.a Sasson. 23
Saxon language maintained by Lectures. 200.a
English-Saxons called into Britain. 100.127
Saxons. 119. their valour and cruelty. 134
Saturn well affected to Britain. 556.c
Savages a great family. 610.a Saulden. 396.c
Scarborough Castle. 717
Scardale. 556.a
Schilpor, See Esquires. 176
Scæva his valour and advancement. 37
Scalbie Castle. 782.c
Scilicester in the wall. 806.b
Scipio Africanus, where buried. 340.a
Sclate-stones digged. 514.d
Scorby or Scurvy-grasse. 328.b
Scordium an herbe growing plenteously. 491.f
Scoteney a Barony. 542.c
Scottishmen of East-Scotland, right English-Saxons. 129 their fashions. 133
Scots wild or Highlandmens habit sort well with the Gothes. 123
Scots whence they tooke name. 119
Scots of West Scotland are Highland men. 119.
Scots came first out of Ireland. 120
Scots when they came to be of name. 125
Scot what it signifieth. 124
Scots a family. 349
Scotus, alias, Duns. 814.b his pitifull death. ibid.
Scovies. 20
Screkingham. 535.c
Screven a place and family. 700.
Scroby. 551.b
Scropes Barons. 729.b
Scruffel hill. 767.c
Scudamores a family. 621.a
Sculton. 473.a
Scutary. 176.
Scythica vallis. 120
Scythians in Spaine. 121
Scythicum a promentory in Spain. 121
Seaton. 206.c
Sea Holly, See Eryngium.
Sea heard to grone. 720.c
Sea sand good for ground. 199.c
Sea is warme. 2
Sea coles. 735.c.799.d
Sea men caught, 466. 720.b
Seales how they sleepe and are caught. 720.c
Seaven mile dike. 490.b
Seavenshale. 801.f
Seckinton. 569.c
Sefton. 748.d
Seghil. ibid.
Segonax: 37
Segrave a towne. 523.b. a family. ibi.
Segraves Barons. 568.c
Stephen Segrave his rising and fall. 501.c.d
Iane Seimor mother to King Edward the sixth. 224
Seimors or Saint Maurs Earles of Hertford. 416
Seimor Duke of Somerset. 240.b
Seimor or Saint Maur Earle of Hertford. 634.d
Seneca a great Usurer in Britain 457.c
Seiont a river. 668.d
Selwood. 233.a
Sel what it signifieth. 271.c
Selbëies a family. 812.f
Selbrittenden. 351.c
Selaby. 737.c
Selbury. 255.a
Semare or de S. Medardo a family

mily. 714.d
Sempringham. 534.d
Serieantics. 213
Seovenburgenſes. 819.c
Seton. 811.f
Sevenoke. 328.d
Sevenok alderman of London his Hoſpitall and ſchoole. 328.d
Severn river, his head. 661.c commended. 357.d a noble river. 573.d
Severus Propretor in Britaine. 65
Severus Emperour, his exploits. 67. hee entreth Britaine. 69. fenſeth Britaine with a wall. 69. died at Yorke. 70. 703.b his funeralls. ibid.
Canonized a God. 70
Seward a Poet. 632.d
Sexwulph firſt Abbot of Peterburgh Abbay. 512.e
Sezay. 724.e
Shafts. 184
Shaftsbury. 214.d
Sharnborne. 480.c
Shavington. 607.e
Scheaths. 609.d
Sheafield. 689.e
Shene. 297.c
Sheep devour men &c. 505.c
Seffelds Barons. 544.d
Shengay a Commaundery. 485.e
Shelford a Barony. 472.e
Shepey Iſle. 333.c
Ship of king Hiero. 32
Shipſton. 561.c
Shirburne a brooke running through Shirbourne: 696.b a towne and Caſtle. 214. a. a Biſhops See. 214.b
Shirley a place, and family. 313.c 553.d. 505.e
Shires divided into Hundreds. 158
Shirewood foreſt. 547.b
Shires how many in England. 159
Shoad. 184
Shobery. 441.c
Shorne. 329.b
Shobery Neſſe. ibid.
Shochlach. 604.b
Shoreham. 313.b
Shotwich caſtle. 606.e
Shrawerden Caſtle. 597.b
Shrewsbury. 595.a
Shrewsbury Earles. 599.b
Shropſhire. 589
Shugbury a towne and family. 561.d
Shurland. 334.a
Sible Hemingham. 450.b. See Heningham or Heveningham.
Sicily cut the Iſle from Italy. 346. d.
whence it tooke name. 273.d
Sidlie a learned knight. 332.b
Sider a drinke. 20
Sidius Getâ his good ſervice in Britain. 41
Sidmanton. 272.c
Sidnaceſter. 543.f
Sidneys. 329.e
Sir Robert Sidney Baron of Penſh crets and Vicount Liſle. 329.e 280.f
Sigebert a tyrant. 272.e
Sigga a noble woman. 806.b
Silceſter, or Selceſter. 270.a Silt. 529,d
Simon Zelotes in Britain. 68
Sinbrech or Simon Brech. 126
Sinodun. 281.b
Sion. 420.e
Siſters kirks. 714.b
Siwards a family. 646.e
Siwarde Earle of Huntingdon. 502.c
Skales, Barons. 405.e
Skeffington a towne and family. 522.e
Skelton Caſtle. 720.c
Skiddaw an hill. 767.c
Skinffrith caſtle. 632.b
Skipton in Craven. 694.b
Skipwiths a family. 521.b
Slebach a Commaundery. 652.c
Sleford. 535.d
Sleepe a towne. 498.f
Smiths a family. 607.e
Snath. 729.d
Swodhil caſtle. 617.d
Snowden foreſt. 667.a
Snowdon hils. ibid.
Soar, a river. 517.b
Sockburne. 737.d
Sodales Auguſtales. 448.b
Sodbury. 364.c
Soham. 493.a
Solway frith. 775
Solente frith. 267.e
Soldurii. 20
Solidurii what they are. 99
Solidarii. 171
Solidus, a coine of gold. 99
Solyhill. 567.a
Solom Moſſe. 782.a
Someries Barons of Dudley. 397 a noble family. 581
Somerley. 468.e
Somerſham. 499.a
Somerſetſhire. 220. whence it took name. 220.b
Somerſet Dukes and Earles. 239.e
Somerton. 224.f. towne. 220.c
Snite a brooke. 549.c
Soureby. 724.e
Sow a river in Staffordſhire. 583.e
Southam. 561.d
Sowdiur. 20
South-Anton towne. 260.f
Southton or Sutton in Herefordſhire. 620.d
Southampton Earles. 272.f
Southybank. 530.a
Southrhey, or Sutherey, why ſo called. 295
South Saxons kingdome. 321.c
South Wales. 659.c
Southwels a family. 473.a
Southwold. 467.a
Spadiards. 185
Spaine rent from Afrike. 346.c
Spalding. 532.b
Spaldwick. 501.d
Spelwell by Dantrey. 508
Spenſers knights. ibid.
Spenſer, alias, de Spenſer executed. 269.c. De Spenſer Barons.
Spenſer Lord Spenſer, Baron of Wormleighton. 508
De Spenſer Baroneſſe. 330
Hugh Spenſer. 642.b
Spigurnell what it ſignifieth. 312.a
Spilmans knights. 480.d
Spittle on Stanemore. 732.f
Spittle in the ſtreet. 540.e
Sponde his tombe in Torceſter-church. 506.b
Spring turning ſtickes & ſtrawes into ſtones. 518.a Spurnhead. 714.a
Saint Ives a towne. 498.f
Saint Iohns Barons of Baſing. 269.b
Sir Oliver Saint Iohn. 239
Sain Iohns Barons of Lagham. 303.e
Saint Legiers or Sellengers. 331
Saint Guerir, or Saint Leech. 191
Saint Lizies a family. 498.a
Saint Loo or Sentlow. 196.a
Saint Georges knights, or of the Garter. 485.d
Saint Martins a family. 246.a
Saint Maries a towne. 481.b
Saint Paul, or Sampol a family. 544.a Saint Stephens in Weſtminſter. 431.a
Saint Maurs or Seimors. 224.a
Saint Cler. 591.e

Simon, Saint Liz or Selis the first Earle of Northampton. 509
Simon de Saint Liz the second. 515.f
Saint Iohn his knights. 241.f
Saint Swithins feast rainy. 265.d
Staffords of Blatherwic knights. 514.b
Staffords of Grafton. 395.e
Staffords Dukes of Buckingham. 397.e
Stafford of Suthwick Earle of Devonshire. 208
Staffords Earles of Wiltshire. 256.e
Staffordshire. 581
Stafford towne. 584.d
Stafford holdeth Carborough castle. 717.e
Stamford a Citizen of London. 208
Standard, what it was. 724
Standon. 408.a
Standrop or Stainthorp. 737.b
Stanford upon Avon. 515.b
Stanford rivers. 440
Stanford upon Welland. 533.e an Vniversity begunne at this Stanford. 533.e
Stanford destroied. ib.
Stanes. 419.d
Stanes forest or waren. 421.c
Stanley the Expensfull Bishop of Ely. 499.a
Stanlaw. 606.f
Stanleies a noble family. 583.f
Stanleies whence descended. 606
Stanleies Earles of Darby. 749.f
Stanemore. 732.e
Stannaries, and their Lord Warden. 185
Stanhopes. 549.a
Stantons a family. 553.d
Stanwel. 419.c
Stanwicks. 782.e
Star Chamber. 179
Stations or Mansions in Antonine. 399.f
Steanford. 547.c
Steort. 187
Stert point. 201.d
Stewes. 434.d
Stephanides, See Fitz Sephen.
Steven Haugh a towne. 406.e
Stibium found in Darbyshire. 556.f
Stiliard. 435.c
Stilton or Stichilton. 501.f
Stilicho protectour to Honorius in his minority. 73
Stipper stones hill. 592.c
Stoke battaile, there fought. 549.a
Stonar, what place. 339.f
Stoke Curry. 221.a
Stoke Pogeys. 394.c.521.c
Stocke pont a pety Barony. 610.
Stoke Fleming. 202
Stokesley. 521.a
Stone a towne: why so called. 783
Stones made by art. 253.a.b
Stoneheng. 251
Stoneham. 262.d
Stonely Abbay in Huntingdonshire. 501.c
Stoneley. 562.e
Stoneley Holme. ibid.
Stony serpents of S. Hilda. 718.e
Stons with Stony serpents in them 721.a
Stonie street. 349
Stones resembling Cochles &c. 363.c
Stony stroud. 21
Stonors a family. 389.a
Store a river. 408.c
Bishop Stortford. ibid.
Stow on the would. 366.a
Stow in Lincolnshire. 543.d
Stouphs or Hote houses used much. 681.b
Stow in Suffolke. 464.b
Stow. 196
Stour river in Suffolke. 462.a
Sour river in Dorsetshire. 214.c
Stour mere. 462.a
Sour a river. 573.f
Stour a river in Kent. 335.d
called Wantsume and Inlade. 339.e
Stourbridge faire. 489.b
Stourminster. 215.c
Stourton. 245.a
Stourton Castle. 581.c
Stourton the Honour of the Barons de Stourton. 214.c
Stourtons Barons. 245.b
their Crest. 245.b
Stradlings or Esterlings a family. 641.f
Stradling knight. 641.643.e
Strange a family of knights degree. 480.b
Strange de Blackmere. 365.f
598.f. de Knocking. 597.c
Strangbow Conquerour of Ireland. 397.d
Strat Clud. 676.d
Strangwaies a family. 721.b
Strangwaies. 212.f.
The Crosse there. 397.a
Stratford upon Avon. 565.a
Stony stratford. 396.f
Strait of Callais. 345.e
Stratfleur. 657
Strath what it signifieth. 117
Stratton. 196.a
Stream workes. 184
Strelleys knights, and Sturleys the same. 550.d
Strelley Sturley or Strellegh a towne and family. 550.a.b
Strensham. 578.c
Strettons. 593.a.d
Stretlham. 737.a
Strighul castle, or Strugle. 633
Strigulia. 633.c
Strigulia Earles. ibid.
Strickland a place and family. 762.e
Strongbow first Earle of Penbroch. 655.b
Strangbow. 633.e
Stroud, a river. 362.b
Studia the same that Vniversities 379.c.381.a
Sudbroke. 633.f
Sudley the Barony of Chandos. 365.b
Sudbury. 462.c
Suffolke. 459
Suffolke Cheeses. 459.b
Suffraganes to the Archbishop of Canterbury. 344.d
Suerby. 714.b.c
Simon Sudbury Archbishop of Canterbury. 337.b
Sully an Iland & name of a man. 642.f
Sueno King of Danes subdueth Ethelbert and England. 143
Sunning a Bishops See. 286.a
Superstition of the Britans.
Surrey Earles. 304.a
Suria the Goddesse. 801.e
Sur-teis, Gentlemen. 737
Susana in Spaine. 12
Sussex. 306
Sussex Earles. 320.e.f
Suit in law betweene Edward Nevill and Dame Mary Fane determined in Parliment. 636
Sutton Colfeild. 567.b
Suthwicke See Earle of Devonshire. 208.b
Suthwell. 549.b
Sutton Vautort. 200.a
Sutton Prior. 200.a
Suttons a family. 581.c
Suttons gentlemen of worth in Nottinghamshire. 549.e
Sutton in Darbyshire. 556.b
Swaffham. 481.f

Swallow hole. 297.a
Swale river. 729.e
Swaldale. ibid.f
Swale the river used for Baptisme. 136.
Swanscomb. 329.a
Suene Tivgs Kege a Danish tyrant. 543.e
Swerds delfe. 501.a
English Swet whereof it came. 24. 596
Suetonius Paulinus Propretor in Britain. 49. His oration and battaile with Queene Boadicia. 51
Swidelme King of the East Angles. 465.c
Swines pennies. 550
Swift river. 517.d
Swinborne a place and family. 806.b
Swinsey or Sinsey. 646.b
Synodes. 181
Syriack tongue mother of all languages. 204.b

T

Tabbes for S. Ebbes. 743.b
Tadcaster. 699.a
Taff. a river. 650.c.642.c
Taisborrough. 473.b
Talbois Barons. 535.e
Talbots Earles of Shrewsbury. 598.f
Talbot Vicount Lisle slaine by the Lord Barkley. 364.c
Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury, a worthy warriour, his Epitaph. 598. d. his stile and honours. 599.c
Talbot skilfull in Antiquities. 182
Talcharn Castle. 650.c
Talmachs, a family. 463.e
Tame river. 383.e
Tame towne. ibi.
Tame and Isis meet. 384.e
Their marriage poetically described. 384.f
Tamis or Thames the river. 241 281.
Tamis why so called. 384.e
Tamis how farre hee ebbeth and floweth. 298.d
Tamis mouths. 333.f
Tamis mouth. 441.d
Tamar river. 196.b.197.a
Tamerton. 196.b
Tame a river. 581.f
Tamworth. 582.a
Tanet a river in Wales. 662.e
Tanet or Tenet Isle. 335.d
Tanet Isle why called Thanatos. 339.f
Tanet inhabitants industrious. 340.d
Tanfeld. 729.d
Tania what it signifieth. 27
Taran. 17
Taranis. 17
Tarian. 18
Tascia what it signifieth. 97
Task what it is. 409.c
Tatershall a Barony. 541.d
Tathai a British S. 633
Tatsalls a family, 472.c
Tavistoke Abbay. 199.e
Taw river. 208.b
Tawstock. ibid.
Tawton. ibid.
Taxea. 20
Taximagulus. 37
Teave river. 199.e
Tees or Teis river head. 736.e
Tees mouth or Teis mouth 721.b
Teg what colour. 26
Teg-Engle. 680.c
Teigne river. 203.a
Tein a brook. 587.d
Teis or Tees river. 718.c
Telean. 642.d
Telen. 21
Temesford. 401.b
Temd, a river. 589.e
The Temple at Bristow. 238.a
Temple. 396.e
Temple Bruer a Commandery. 535.f
Templars. 427.d
Tenby. 651.b
Tenham. 334.d
Terminations of places names. 20
Terne a river. 593.b
Terringham a towne and family. 397.c
Test a river. 260.e
Tetnal, or Theotenhal. 581.e
Tetrarchie erected by Ælfred in his Monarchy. 160
Teverton or Swifordton. 203.a Teutates. 17
Tew. 20
Tewksbury. 359.e
Thanes. 168
Thaxted. 444.e
Thessey a river. 565
Thellesford. ibid.
Thelwal. 610.c. why so called. ibid
Theobalds a Stately house. 408.d
Theocus an Eremite. 359.c
Theodosius an expert warriour sent into Britaine. 79. his exploits there. 80. he recovereth the Roman province there. 80 honoured for his service. 81
Theodosius his sonne Emperour. 81. he triumpheth over Maximus the Usurper. 83
Theon the last British Bishop of London. 425.b
Theophilus Antrochenus. 9
Thet a brooke. 471.d
Thetford. 471. d. a Bishops See. ibid.f
Thinne Studions of Antiquities. 160
Thins a family. 245.a
Thireos. 18
Thirlwal castle. 799.f
Thirlwal a family first called Wades. 800
Thirlwall, why so called. ibid.
Thirty tyrants or usurpers at once. 71
Thirsleworth. 420.e
Thonderdach. 17
Thone river. 223.b
Tomas of Woodstock duke of Gloucester smuthred at Calais. 369 d
Thoneton or Taunton. 223
Thongcaster. 542.d
Thor, a God, how portraied. 135
Thoresby. 774 c Thornaugh. 514.e
Thornbury. 363.f
Thorndon. 442.e
Thorney Abbay. 494.d
Thornbils. 693.d
Thornton. 396.e
Thornton in Lincolnshire. 542.f
Thorps a family. 472.d
Thorpston, alias Thrapston. 510
Thredling see Deben.
Thresk castle. 724.c
Throcknortons a family. 565.e
Throgoy a river. 634.c
Thurgarton. 549.d
Thurkil. 326.e
Thurland Tunstalls. 753.e
Thwengs a family. 721.e
Thwengs. 196.a
Thyrn, a river. 478.b
Tibba a shee Saint and patroneſſe of Falconey. 526.d
Tiberius Cæsar medled not with Britain. 4
Tibetofts or Tiptofts Earles of Worcester. 549.c
Tibury or Titusbury hil. 262.a Tichburne. 262.f
Tickhil. 690
Ticks hal. 584.e
Tideswell. 558.c
Tikenhal by Beaudly. 573.f
Till a river. 815.b

Tilbury. 440.d
Tilliols a family. 782
Tilney a towne. 481.b
Tilneys a family. 472.d
Tilneys knights. 481.b
Tilneys smeth. ibid.
Tiltey Abbay. 444.e
Timbod castle. 624.a
Times of the world. 334
Timothee an hereticke in Britan. 87
Tinn in Cornwall. 184
Tin of two sorts. 185
Tinworkers common wealth. 185
Tindagel. 194
Tindale. 802.a Tine. 799.e
Tine. 802.a
Tinmouth. 811
Tio, vul, Finga-Cester. 549.b
Tippall, a river. 800.b
Tirells a family. 396.e
Tithings or Decimes ordeined. 158
Titus his warlike service in Britain. 42
Titus the worlds joy dieth. 56
Tivie the river. 949.b. where he springeth. 657.c
Todenay, or Tony. 536.b
Todenay or Tony. 414.b
Todington. 365.c
Tong castle. 594.a
Tonsure or shaving the Crowne. 118
Topcliff. 731.a
Torbay. 202.d
Torcester. 505.f
Torksey. 538.a
Torneaments. 407.d
Tosto vanquished. 145
Totnes. 201.e
Totuesse shore. 202
Touchets a family. 584.b. Batonsde Audeley. ib.
Tovie the Kings Standard bearer. 439.d
Tovie, the river. 649.d
Tour d' Ordre. 345.c
Towre of London. 423.e
Towridge river. 207.f
Tourington. 208.b
Towton battaile. 696.d
Trabucks. 400
Tracies. 365.d
Traiford a place and family. 747
Traith Maur. 666.a
Traith Bichan. ibid.
Traith Taff. 642.c
Trebellius Max. Proprator in Britaine. 52
Treboeth. 605.f
Trederman. 783.b
Trees under ground. 745.d. 607
Tregaron. 657.d
Tregonie. 190.
Tregian. ibid
Tregoz Barons. 617.d
Trelawnies. 192
Trematon. 193
Trenewith. 661.e
Trent a riveret. 213
Trent a river. 547
Trentham a Monastery. 583
Tresham a family. 509.c
Trevilions. 196.b
Triadum, a British booke. 33
Tribet. 29
Tribunals or Courts of Iustice in England. 177
Tribunitian auctority. 101
Trihine what it was. 159
Trimarcia. 18
Tripetia. 20
Trophee in Cornwall. 188
Trubridge. 244.e
True-place. 802.a
Trusbut. 540.e
Tuddington. 401.f
Tufa a Banner. 195
Tuisco the Saxons stock-father. 135
Tuisday. ibi.
Tunbridge why so called. 330.a
Tunstall a worthy Prelate. 744.d
Turbervelis, or de Turbida villa. 213.e
Turbevils a family. 643.e
Turkil a Coward. 464.e
Turkils of Arden. 565.d
Turkil the Dane. 500.b
Tirold Abbot of Peterborough. 513.a
Turton Chappell and toure. 745
Turpins Knights. 517
Turets a family. 594.e
Turvy. 399.b
Tuscets or Touchets Barons Audeley. 609.a
Tutbury Castle. 587.f
Twede the river. 814.e
Twifford. 813.c
Twinamburne. 259.c
Tyrants in Britain. 23
Tzetzes a fabulous Greeke writer. 32

V

Vale a river. 189
Vale. 393.b
Vale of Ailesbury. 395.c
Vale Roiall. 608.d
Vallachians why so called. 11
Valle Crucis. 677.a
Valect what he is. 663. a worshipfull title. 713.c
Valoneis a family. 465.f
Valtorts. 193
Valuasores. 168
Vandals and Burgundians in Britain. 114
Vandals brought into Britaine by Probus. 71
Vandelberia. 489.d
Vargæ. 19
Varia what it signifieth 679.e
Vaulx Barons. 786.b. 510
Vbbanford. 816.b
Vchel. 21.190
Vectius Bolanus. 53
Venables Barons of Kindreton. 609.b
Vendraeth Vchan, a river. 649.
Venedocia. 659.f
Venutius a Potentate of Britain. 48
Venutius warreth upon his wife Cartismandua. 53
Verannius Propretor in Britain. 49
Verbeia, the river Wherfe and a Goddesse. 697
Veres Earles of Oxford. 389.d
Vere the good Earle. 390.b
Vere Earle of Oxford became a Monke. 450.d
Vere. 202.f
Vere Earle of Oxford and Marquesse of Dublin.
Verdons a family. 517.f. 620.b
Veriad. 19
Vernaies Knights. 565.a
Vernons a family. 567.a
Verulam or Verlam Citie in old time. 408.f
Vescy, Barons. 722.c. neere to S. Albons.
Verulam Tribute. 409.a
Vespasian his acts in Britaine. 41 42
Vffa. 458.a
Vfkins. ibid.
Vfford a towne. 465.c
Valentinian an Arrian. 83
Valentine a rebell in Britaine suppressed. 80
Vfford Earle of Suffolke. 465.c
Vffords. 813.b
Vicarius or Vicegerent in Britaine 76
Vicounts, what title of Honour. 167
Vicount of Honour who was first in England. 521.c
Victor the sonne of Maximus slaine. 83

Victorina. 271.b
Victorinus a commendable gouernour under Honorius in Britaine. 85
Victoris what names it hath in diuers languages. 457.e
Vecturiones why so called. 117
Vellocatus Coſtrell to Venutius marieth his wife. 53
Victrix, a Legion. 604.c
Vies. 244.a
Villa forinſeca what it is. 391.e
Villiers a family. 523.a
Vineyards in Britaine. 71
The Vine. 269.d
Vines in England. 269.e
Vineards in Gloceſterſhire. 357.f
Vincents Rocke. 239.a
Virius Lupus Proprætor. 69
Virgins eleven thouſand Martyrs. 197.a.286.e
Viſigothi. 294.c
Viſi Saxones. ibid.
Viſcounts a family.
Vitſan. 347.d
Vitrum. 19
Viterinus. 691.d
Vlpius Marcellus a brave warriour. 66. his vigilancy & temperance. ibid.
Vlphus his horne. 704.e
Vlſe a Lake. 776.c
Viſtleſs. 773.a
Vlyſſes whether ever in Britain. 32
Vlyſſippo, that is, Lisbon whence it tooke name. 32
Vlverſton. 755.c
Vnfranvilt a family. 806.b.535
Vniverſity Colledge in Oxford. 381.c
Vniverſity, a publicke ſchoole. 381.b
Vnſtrote a river. 138
Voiſy Biſhop of Exceſter. 567
Vortigern the laſt Monarch of Britiſh bloud, and the bane of his country. 624. bburnt with Lightning. ibid.
Vortigerne aliâs Gourtigern ſendeth for Saxons. 128
Vortimer a valiant Britain where buried. 538.e
Vppingham. 525.e
Vpton. 577
Vortiporius a Tyrant of the Dimeta. 113
Vrſula, an holy Virgin. 197
Vrſus de Abtot. 570. Sherif of Worceſterſhire. 578.e
Vſa, or Iſa, that is. Ouſe a river. 296
Vſipians their venturous and memorable fact. 57
Vske a river. 628.a
Vske a towne. 636.c
Vtceſter. 587.e
Vther Pendragon. 195. why ſo called. 410
Vxbridge. 419.c

W

WVada a Saxon Duke. 719.b
Wadensbourg. 241.d
Wadham. 382.a
Wahul, Woodhul, or Odill. 399.c Barons de Wahul. ib.
Wakes Barons Wake and Eſtotenill. 202.d.407.533.a Wakes of Bliſworth. 533.b
Wakefield. 693.d
Wakeman of Rippon. 700.d
Wainfleete in Licolne-ſhire. 542.b
Wales. 615.c.d. 22. annexed and united to the Crowne of England. 114
Walch. 22
Walcher Biſhop of Durham ſlain in a Commotion. 743.d
Wall, by Lichfield. 582.e
Wall of Turfe betweene Edenburgh Frith and Cluid. 86
Walls end. 811.b
Wall of ſtone built in Britaine. 86
Wallbery. 453.d
Walbrooke in London. 423.a
Waldbeof a family. 628.e
Walden. 452.b
Waldeof Earle of Northampton and of Huntingdon. 502.c 515.c. his diſloyall treachery. ib.
Walleran Earle of Mellent, and firſt Earle of Worceſter. 579.a
Wallers. 320.e
Wallerond. 618.a
Walſleet Oiſters. 444.d
Walli, Wallon. 22.113
Wallingford. 281.d
Wallop or Welhope, a place. 262
Wallops a family. ibid.b
Wallot Iſlle. 443.c
Walmelford bridge. 511.d
Walnuttree at Glaſtenbury. 227
Walney an Iſland. 755.c
Walpole. 481.b
Walſhal. 581.f
Walſh, a family. 364
Walſh, what it ſignifieth. 113
Walſingham. 470.c
Walſingham a towne. 479.c
Walſiingham knights. ib.
Walter de Hemingford. 721
Walter. 752.f
Walter Eſpec. 709.d
Waltham Croſſe. 437.d
Waltham Foreſt. 439.c
Waltham Abbay or Waltham Croſſe a towne. 439.c
Walton in Darbyſhire. 556.b
Walton a place and familie. 572
Walwick. 802.a
Walwort an herbe called Danesbloud. 452.b
Wandleſworth. 303.a
Wandle a river. 287.f
Wanſdike. 241.d
Wantage. 281.a
Wantſum, or Wentfar a riveret. 473.c. See Stour in Kent.
Ware a towne. 407.c
Wapentakes, what they bee. 159
Ware a Prieſt and Baron of the Parliament. 746.a
Weſts, Barons de la Ware. 312
Warburgton a place, and familie. 610.b
Wards. 179
Wardens of the Marches. 799.b
Warden of the Cinque ports. 325.b
Wardon. 401.c
Wardon Hundred in Northamptonſhire. 507.b
Wardour a Caſtle. 246.a
Ward-ſtaff. 440.c
Warham towne. 213.c
Warkworth. 813.a
Warington. 748.b
Warnford. 269.a
Warre civill betweene Yorke and Lancaſter determined in the death of Edward the young Earle of Warwicke. 570
Warwaſt. 201.c
Warwickſhire. 561
Warwick towne. 562.f
Warwick Earles. 569.f
Warwicke in Cumberland. 778.a
Waſh a river, or Guaſh. 525.e
Waſhes a daungerous arme of the Sea. 480.d
Waſhburnes villages & families. 577.d

Wasts. 806.a Waterfall. 730.c
Water divided. 399.c
Water Germander. See Scordium.
Watford. 415.a
Watchtour erected by C. Caligula. 40
Watlesbury. 592.f
Watling-street highway. 64
Watling-Street a towne. 593
Waveney, a river. 467.d
Waver a river. 773.b
Wauburn. 479.a
Wauburnham. ibid.
Weably. 620.b
Weably Ale. ibid.
Weald in Kent. 329.d
Weare a towne. 205.c
Weares the Decay of Excester. haven. 205.e
Weddesborrow. 581.f
Wedensday. 135
Weedon in the Street. 508.c
Weimouth. 211.b
Well ebbing and flowing. 558.c
Welles medicinable. 497.d
Welch Poole a towne. 662.b
Welles Barons. 541.e. 542.b
Welles vicount. 542
Welles the City. 223.d
Welland river. 505.b
Welledon. 514.d
Welhop a riveret. 738.c
Wellingborow. 509.f
Wenlock. 591.e
Wemme. 594.c
Wenmans, a family. 384.a
Went a river. 690.f
Wentsbeck a river. 812.b
Wentsdale. 727.e
Wentworth a place, and family. 689.e
Wentworths Barons. 463.c
Weorth what it signifieth. 582
Were a river. 738.
Werburga or Warburga an holy virgin. 508.c. 583
Werburgs Church in Chester. 605.
Werith, what collour. 26
Werke Castle. 815.a
Werlam or Verlam Citie in great distresse. 51
Werlam-street. 64
Werminster. 245.c
Werywall. 754.d
Wests Barons de la Ware. 312.d 746.b
Westminster, sometime, Thorney. 428.e
Westminster Church. 428.f
Monuments therein. 429.f
Westminster hall. 431.e
Westmorland. 759
Westmorland Earles. 763.d
Westriding. 489.d
West Saxons bring the Heptarchie to a Monarchie. 138
Westsexenlage. 153.159
West Saxons kingdome. 294.c
West wales. 647.b
West weales. 184
Wetherby. 699.a
Wetherill. 778.a
Wever a river. 601.e
Wever an hill. 586.f
Wey river. 294.e
Whaddon. 396.d
Wiatts a family. 331.e
Wiat his unfortunate end. 331.e
Wic what it signifieth. 326. 355
Wicey. 354.f. 573.d
Wiches, that is, Salt pits. 573.b
Wich a towne. 575.b
Wich wood forest. 374.b
Wich a learned Canonist. 575.a
Wichliff, died. 517.f
Wickham Bishop of Winchester. 265.e. his praise. 266.c.d. his æquivocant mot. 288.d
Wicombe, or wickham a towne. 393.d
Widdevile or Woodvill a family. 506.c
Widdevill Lord Rivers. 506.d Earle Rivers. ibid High Constable of England. ibid. &c. beheaded. ibid.e
Widdevill, Earle Rivers. 405.e
Wie river. 358.e. 618.a
A wife demised to another. 312.f
Wigenhall. 481.b
Wight Isle. 273.c.&c. why so called. ibid. The Lords thereof. 276.c.d
Wiggin. 749.c
Wigmore. 619.c
Wigton. 774.b
Wilberhams or Wilburhams a family. 607.d
Wilberham. 490.b
A wild man caught in the Sea. 466.a
Wilfride Bishop. 275.d. 308.c
Wilfride Archbishop of Yorke 700.c
Wilfreedes Needle. 700.e
Willebrode a learned Englishman. 137.
Willey or Willeley. 591.d a river and village. 245.e. 246
Wharton Castle. 701.d
Wheallep Castle. 701.d
Wheathamsted. 406.e
Iohn of Wheathamsted. ibid.f
Wherfe the river. 696.d. why so called. ibid.f
Whetstones. 330.c
Whitehart forest. 213.f whereupon so called. 214.a
Whitehart silver. ibid.
Whitchurch in Shropshire. 598
Whitgaraburge. 275.c
Whitgift Archbishop of Canterbury. 542.d. his good deeds. 302.b
Whitby. 718.b
White Hall the K K. house. 432
Whitham. 446.b
Whitehorse vale. 279.c
Whitney a place and family. 618
Whitsan. 348.b
Whitespurres. 176
Whittington. 598.b
Whorwel. 262.a
William of Neuborough. 8
William or Wilcock of Mouthwy 665
William of Yorke. 695.c
William of Malmesbury. 242.f
William Long-Espee. 145. 249.d slaine neere Damiata. 249.e
William the Bastard, or Conquerour. 145. his title to the crowne. ibid. where hee landed 316.e. invadeth England. 145 he fought with king Harald. ibid.f. sworne to keepe all the ancient lawes of England. 414 c. is inaugurated King. 152 disauoweth his title, and Conquest. 152. his behaviour presently upon victorie. 152. his seale. ibid. hee enacteth excellent lawes. 153
His pollicy to root out and weaken the English. 152
Williams of Tame. 384.a
Willibourne a river. 245.d
Willimotes wicke. 801.e
Willoford. 785.c
Willoughby frozen to death in a voiage. 555.d
Willoughbyes Barons of Brooke 244.c 577.b
Willoughbies Barons 465. 541.c
Wiloughby of Parrham 543.d
Wiloughby earl of Vandosme. 541
Willoughby knigh. 547.c
Wilshire. 241
Wilshire Earles. 256.d.e
Wilton a towne. 246.c
Wilton Castle. 621.a 721.a
Wimundham or windham. 473.d
Wimundham in Leicestersh. 522

Wimondley. 406.c
Winander mere. 755.b
Winburne what it signifieth. 216.a
Winburne minster. 215.e
Wincaunton. 221.d
Winchelcombe towne & Abbay. 365.d
Winchelsey. 319.b
Winchel. See Ore.
Old Wincheſter. 809.e. 269.a Wincheſter. 262
Wincheſter biſhops. 265.e
Wincheſter toure in windeſor Caſtle. 288.d
Wincheſter Earles and Marqueſſes. 267.b.d
Winchindon. 395.f
Windeſor Barons. 289.a. 320.c
Windeſors a family. 419.c
Windeſore towne. 286.d.e
Windeſor Caſtle. 288.d
Windleſor foreſt. 293.b
Windruſh river. 374.a
Wingfeld in Darbyſhire. 555.e
Winfeilds, Knights. 512.a
Winifride a learned Engliſhman. 137. the Apoſtle of Germanie. 203.d
Winkles or cockles on Hil-tops. 727.c
Winſter a river. 760.a
Winterton a Cape. 478.d
Winwidfield. 694.e
Winwicke. 748.b
Wipped fleet. 340.a
Wire a river. 753.a
Wire-dale. ibid.
Wirkington. 769.
Wirral. 601.e. 606.d
Wiske a river. 723.e
Withburga a Saint. 482.a
Witherington or Woderington a caſtle and name of a martiall family. 812.e
Wittleſmere. 500.d
Witton a Caſtle. 738.c
Wiza a riveret. 773.b
Wye a towne in Kent. 335.d
Woad. 19
Woburn. 401.e
Woden. 241.d
Woden a Saxons God. 135
Woderington. See Witherington.
Wold in Leiceſter ſhire. 523.a
Wollaton. 547
Woodvil. See Widvil.
Wolpher a Pagan king killeth his two ſonnes. 583. became a Chriſtian. 512.d
Wolſey Cardinal a Butchers ſon 464.c
Wollover. 815.c
Wolſtane Biſhop of Worceſter canonized a S. 576.d
Wolvehunts a family. 556.d
Wolverton a towne and family. 397
Wolves deſtroyed. 665
Wondy. 634.c
Woodbridge. 465.a
Wooden, how portraied. 135
Woodhall. 407
Woodham Walters. 446.b
Woodland a part of Warwickſhire. 561.b
Woodnoths. 607.e
Woodſtock. 375.d
Wooton Baſſet. 242.a
Woodriſing. 473.a
Worceſter ſhire. 573
Worceſter. 575.c
Worceſter Earles. 578.f
Workenſop. 550.f
Workeſworth. 556.e
World how it began to be peopled 11
Wormhill. 556.d
Wormleighton. 561.d
Wormgay or Wrongey. 481.e
Worſted a town. 478.c
Worſted ſtuffe whence ſo called. 478.c
Wortley a place and family. 689
Wotton under Wever. 586
Wottons a family and Baron Wotton of Merlay. 331.a
Wotton under Edge. 364.c
Woulds what they be. 364.e
Wragby. 540.e
Wreke a river. 517.b
Wreken a river in Leiceſterſhire. 522.e
Wreken an hill. 593.d
Wreſhil caſtle. 710.a
Wrexham. 677.b
Wriotheſleys or Writhoſleies. Earles of Southampton. 273.a
Wringcheeſe. 192.
Writtle, a large pariſh. 445.e
Wroteſley or Wrotheſley a place and family. 581.d
Wroxceſter. 593.b
Wroxhall. 566.d
Wulfrune a devout woman. 581
Wulfrunes Hampton or Wulver Hampton. 581.e
Wulpet. 463.f
Wyre foreſt. 573.e

X

X. No Britiſh letter. 97

Y

Yale. 676.e
Yanesbury caſtle. 245.e
Yardley Haſting. 509.e
Yare. 721.a. a river. 468.d
Yarmouth. 476.f
Yeomen. 177
Yeverin. 815.d
Y-kil what it ſignifieth. 714.a
Yorkes wold. 709.b
Yorke City. 701
Yorkeſhire. ibid.
Yorke Earles and Dukes. 724.e
Yron mines and workes. 306.d
Yſtwith. 658.a
Yvo Ellas. 675.c
Yvor Bach. 642.e

Z

Zouches. 201. f. 202. c. whence deſcended. 519.a Zouches of Haringworth and Aſhby de la Zouch. 224.e
Zouch Mortimer. 514.a
Zouch killed in Weſtminſter hall. 519.b
Zythum. 20

THE

THE NAMES OF SEVERALL

Nations, Cities, and great Townes, Rivers, Promontories or Capes, &c. of Britaine in old time; such as Cæsar, Tacitus, Ptolemæus, Antoninus, Notitia Provinciarum, and other Authours have made mention of; together with the later and moderne names.

A

Aballaba.	Appleby in Westmorland.	761
Abone.	Avington or Aventon in Glocestershire.	358
Abus æstuarium,	Humber in Yorkshire.	710
Æsica,	Netherby upon Eske in Cumberland.	781
Ad Ansam,	Neere Coggeshall in Essex.	449
Ad Pontem,	Paunton in Lincolnshire.	537
Adurni Portus,	Ederington.	313
Agelocum.	Little-borrough vpon Trent.	549
Alone,	Whitley in Northumberland.	794
Alannius flu.	Avon in Wiltshire.	243
Alaunus flu.	Alne in Northumberland.	813
Amboglanna,	Ambleside, haply.	760
Ancalites,	The Hundred of Henley.	389
Amnitum vel Samnitum Insulæ,	Isles vpon the West coasts of Britain in France.	221.p.2
Andates Lucus.
Anderida.	Newenden in Kent.	351
Angli, sive Anglo-Saxones.	Englishmen or English-Saxons.	127
Antona sive Ausona,	Auson.	507.508
Antivestæum,	The Cap of Cornwall.	187
Aquæ Solis,	Bath in Somersetshire.	233
Arbeia.	Yerby.	769
Ariconium,	Kenchester nere Hereford.	618
Atacoti, or Attacotti,		127
Atrebatij, or Attrebatij,	Barkshire.	278
Augusta.	See Londinum.
Axelodunum.	Hexham in Northumberland.	807

B

Badiza.	Bath.	233
Bannavenna, or Bannaventa.	Weedon on the street.	508
Belerium,	The same that Antivestæum.
Belgæ,	Sommersetshire, Wilshire, and Hantshire.	219
Bellisama flu.	Rhibell in Lancashire.	749
Bennones.	High-Crosse.	518
Bibroci,	The Hundred of Bray in Barkshire.	286
Binovium.	Binchester.	738
Blatum Bulgium.	Bulnesse in Cumberland.	775
Blestium,	Old towne in Herefordshire.	787.617
Bonium,	Banchor in Flintshire.	602.681
Bononia,	Bollonge in France.	349
Borcovicus,	Borwick in Northumberland.	809

Bovium,

Brannodunum,	Brancester in Norfolke.	488
Bremenium,	Brampton in Northumberland.	803
Brementuracum,	Brampton in Cumberland.	783
Brementonacum,	Overborrow in Lancashire.	753
Brigantes,	Yorkeshire, Lancashire, B. of Durham, Westmorland, Cumberland.	685
Brouonacum,	Brougham.	762
Bullæum,	Buelth in Brecknocshire.	627
Burrium,	Vske in Monmouthshire:	636

C

Cæsaromagus,	Neere Brentwood in Essex, fortè.	442
Calcaria,	Tadcaster in Yorkeshire.	696
Callena,	See Gallena.
Camboritum,	Cambridge.	486
Camalodunum,	Maldon.	446
Camundolunum,	See Cambodunum.
Cambodunum,	Ruins neere Aldmondbury in Yorkeshire.	692
Calagum,	See Galacum.
Canonium,	Chensford in Essex.	445
Cantium,	Kent.	324
Cantium Promontorium,	The foreland of Kent.	342
Cangi,		231
Castra Exploratorum,	Burgh vpon Sands.	773
Castra Constantia,	Constance in Normandy.	224
Cassij,	The hundred of Caishow in Hertfordshire.	395
Cassiterides,	The Iles of Sylly.	227
Caturactonium,	Catarick in Yorkeshire.	730
Cattieuchlani,	Buckingham, Bedford, and Hertfordshires.	391
Causennæ,	See Gausennæ.
Cenio flu.	The river by Tregeny in Cornwall.	190
Ceni-magni.,	See Iceni.
Cilurnum,	Collerford in Northumberland.	806
Clausentum,	South-hanton.	261
Cleuum,	Glocester.	360
Coccium,	Riblchester in Lancashire.	752
Colonia,	Colchester in Essex.	450
Condate,	Congleton in Cheshire.	608
Concangij,	Baronie of Kendale.	759
Condercum,	Chester vpon the streete in the Bishopricke of Durham.	742
Combretonium,	Brettenham in Suffolke.	463
Conouius flu.	The river Conway in Wales.	669
Conouium vrbs,	Caer hean upon Conway in Caernarvonshire.	669
Conuennos insula,	Canuey at the Tamis mouth.	441
Congauata,	A place upon Caudbecke in Cumberland.	778
Corinium,	Circester or Cirencester in Glocestershire.	366
Coritani,	Northamptonshire, Leicestershire, Rutlandshire, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Darbyshire.	504
Cornauij,	Warwickshire, Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Shropshire, and Cheshire.	560
Corstopitum,	Morpit in Northumberlande fortè.	808
Cossini,		833
Croco-calana,	Ancaster in Lincolnshire.	537

Cunetio,	Marlborow or Kenet in Wiltshire.	255
Curia,	Corebridge in Northumberland.	808

D

DAnmonij,	Cornwall and Denshire.	183
Danmoniorum Promontorium,	The Lizard in Cornwall.	189
Danum,	Dancaster in Yorkshire.	690
Delgovitia,	Godmundham in Yorkshire.	711
Deruentio,	Auldby vpon Derwent in Yorkshire.	709
Deua flu.	Dee in Cheshire.
Deuana siue Deua vrbs,	Chester or West-chester.	604
Dictum,	Diganwey.	669
Dimetæ,	Westwales, Caremardinshire, Penbrokshire, and Cardiganshire.	647
Dobuni, sive Boduni,	Glocestershire and Oxfordshire.	354
Dorobernia,	See Dorovernum.
Dubris,	Dover.	344
Dunum sinus,	The Creek at Dunesby neere whitby in Yorkshire.	718
Ducornouia,	See Corinium.
Durotriges,	Dorsetshire.	209
Dur-co-briuæ,	Redborn.	413
Durnium,	See Durnovaria.
Durobriuæ,	Caster neere Wandlesworth in Huntingdonshire	501
Durnovaria,	Dorcester.	212
Durobrouæ,	Rochester.	332
Durolenum,	Lenham in Kent.	331
Durolitum,	Old foord upon Lee in Essex.	439
Durosiponte,	Gormonchester.	498
Durouernum,	Canterbury.	336

E

EBoracum,	Yorke.	701
Epiacum,	Papcastle in Cumberland.	768
Etolerum,	The Wall in Staffordshire.	587
Extensio Promont.	Easton Nesse in Suffolk.	467

F

Fretum Britannicum,	The streight of Callis.	345

G

GAbranto vicorum portuosus sinus.	Surebyin Yorkshire.	114
Gabrocentum,	Gateshead in the Bishoprick of Durham.	743.818
Gallatum,	Whealp-Castle in Westmerland.	762
Callana,	Walle-wic.	802
Gallena,	Wallingford.	761
Ganganorum Promont.	Lheyn in Caernarvonshire.	668
Garianonum,	Yarmouth.	477
Garienis flu.	Yare river in Norfolk.	476
Gausennæ,	Brig-Casterton upon Wash.	534
Genunia,	Northwales.	660
Glannoventa,	Vpon Wentsbeck in Northumberland.	812

Glessariæ,

Gelſſariæ, 220
Glevum, Gloceſter. 366
Gobannium, Abergeuenny. 635 Geſſoriacum, See Bononia.

H

HErculis Promont, Herty point in Denſhire. 207
Hunnum. Sevenſhale in Northumberland. 801

I

IAmeſa, See Tameſis
Iceni, Suffolke, Norfolke, Cambridg-ſhire, and Huntingdon-ſhire. 456
Icianos, Icborrow in Norfolke. 482
Idumanus flu. Blackewater river in Eſſex. 448
Iſannavaria, See Banavenna, for they ſeeme to be the ſame.
Iſca flu. Ex river in Denſhire. 203
Iſca Danmoniorum, Exceſter. ibid.
Iſca, Legio Auguſta, Caer Lheon in Monmouthſhire. 636
Iſcalis, Ivelceſter. 221
Iſurium, Aldburge in Yorkſhire. 701
Iugantes, whom Tacitus mentioneth, I wote not who they be unleſſe they were the Cantiani that is, Kentiſſhmen whom the Welſh Britans were wont in their language to call Y-Gant. And yet it may ſeeme as probable, to read Brigantes, for Iugantes. 688
Itium Galliæ, Vitſan. 348
Ituna flu. Eden river in Cumberland. 760.776

L

LActodorũ, ſive Lactorodum, Stony-Stratford. 397
Lagecium, vel Legeolium, Caſtleford neere Pontfreit. 695 Legio II. Auguſta, See Iſca.
Legio II. Victrix, See Eboracum.
Legio XX. Victrix, See Deva.
Lauatres, Bowes upon Stanemore. 731
Leucarum, Loghor in Southwales. 646
Littus Saxonicum, Eaſt and South coaſt. 325
Lemanis, Limehill or lime in Kent. 349
Lindum, Lincolne. 538
Londinum, London. 421
Longovicum, Lancheſter. 754
Luguuallum, Carlile. 778
Louentium, Leueny in Brecknocſhire. 628

M

MAdus, Maidſton in Kent. 330
Magi, Old Radnor. 623
Maglona, Maclenith in Montgomeriſhire. 661
Magna, Cheſter in the Wall neere Haltweſſell. 800.801
Magnus Portus, Porteſmouth, or Portcheſter. 268
Maleos, Mula among the Weſterne Iſles. 215
Mancunium. Mancheſter in Lancaſhire. 746
Mandueſſedum, Manceſter in Warwickſhire. 569

Magni-

Magni,	See Magi.
Mediolanum,	Lhan Vellin in Montgomeryſhire.	662
Magioninium,	Dunſtable.	402
Meatæ,	Northumberland.	796
Margidunum,	Neere Beuer-Caſtle.	536
Mena,	Maneg in Cornwall.	189
Metaris æſt.	The Waſhes betweene Lincolnſhire and Norfolke.	480
Mictis,	See Veſta.
Morbium,	Morsby in Cumberland.	766
Maridunum,	Caermarden.	649
Moridunum,	Seaton in Deuonſhire.	206
Moricambe æſt.	The Bay of Caerdronack.	773
Morini,
Morinorum Portus Britannicus,

N

Nidus,	Neath in Glamorganſhire.	645
Neomagus, ſiue Noviomagus.	Woodcote neere Croyden in Surrey.	302
Nouus portus,	See Lemanis.

O

Octopitarum prom.	S. Davids head in Penbrockſhire.	653
Ocellum prom.	Kelnſey in Yorkſhire.	714
Olicana,	Ilkeley in Yorkſhire.	697
Olenacum,	Elenborrow in Cumberland.	778
Ocrinum,	See Danmonium.
Ordouices,	Northwales.	615. 659
Oſtidamnij,		183
Ottadini,	Northumberland.	796
Othona,	Ithan-ceſter in Eſſex.	443

P

Pariſi pop.	Holderneſſe in Yorkeſhire.	709
Pennocrucium,	Penkridge in Staffordſhire.	583
Pettuaria,	Beverley.	711
Petrianæ,	Some place neere Peterill in Cumberland.	777
Picti,	The Picts.	114
Præſidium,	Warwicke.	563
Prætorium,	Patrington in Yorkſhire.	713
Pontes,	Colebrooke in Buckinghamſhire.	394
Pons Ælij,	Pont-eland in Northumberland.	809
Procolitia,	Coleceaſter in Northumberland.	808

R

Ratæ,	Leiceſter.	519
Ratoſtibius flu.	Taf in Glamorganſhire.	642
Regni pop.	Surrey, Suſſex, and the ſea coaſts of Hantſhire.	295
Regnum,	Ringwood in Hantſhire.	259
Regulbium,	Reculver in Kent.	335
Ribodunum,	Riblecheſter.	752
Rhutupiæ,	Richborrow neere Sandwich.	340
Rutunium,	Routon in Shropſhire.	592

S

SAbrina flu.	Seuern.	661
Salenæ,	Salndy in Bedfordſhire.	401
Segodunum,	Seton in Northumberland.	811
Segontium,	Caer Seiont nere Caernaruon.	66
Segontiaci,	In Hantſhire.	269
Setantiorum Palus,	Winandermer.	755
Scoti,	Scots.	119
Seteia æſtuat. pro Deia,	Dèe mouth.	604
Segelocum,	See Agelocum.
Silures,	Southwales.	615
Sitomagus,	Thetford in Norfolke.	471
Simeni,	See Iceni.
Sinus ſalutaris,	See Gabrantouicorum.
Sorbiodunum,	Old Sarisbury.	246
Spinæ,	Spene neere Newbury.	283
Stuccia flu.	Iſtuyth in Cardiganſhire.	658
Sulloniacæ,	Brockley hil neere Elleſtrey.	415

T

TAmarus flu,	Tamar.	196
Tamara,	Tamarton.	ibid.
Tamiſis,	Tamis, or Teamis.	384
Tanatos,	Tanet.	339
Teſis flu.	Teſe.	736
Tina flu.	Tine in Northumberland.	799
Toiſobios,	See Conouius.
Tobius flu.	Tovy in Wales.	649
Toliatis,	Shepey.	333
Traiectus,	Paſſage nere Auſt.	358.363
Trinobantes,	Midleſex, and Eſſex.	417
Tripontium,	Torceſter.	505
Triſantonis Portus,	Southanton.	260
Tueſis,	Berwick vpon Twede.	816
Tuerobius flu.	Tiuy in Wales.	657
Tunocellum,	Tin-mouth.	811
Trutulenſis Portus,	See Rhutupiæ, Tacitus named Trutulenſis, for Rutupenſis: as B. Rhenanus ſuppoſeth.

V

VAgniacæ,	Maidſtone.	330
Valentia,		797
Vallum,	The Picts Wall.	789
Varis,	Bod-vary in Flintſhire.	679
Viroconium,	Wroxceſter.	593
Vedra flu.	Were in the B. of Dureſme.	738
Veneti,	Guineth, or Northwales.	660
Venta Belgarum,	Wintcheſter.	263
Venta Icenorum,	Caſter nere Norwich.	473
Venta Silurum,	Caer Went in Monmouthſhire.	633
Vennones,	High-Croſſe.	518

Verlucio.	Werminſter.	245
Verometum.	Burrow hill in Leiceſterſhire.	522
Verolamium.	Verulam neere S. Albons.	408
Verteræ.	Burgh upon Stanemore.	760
Vzella æſtuar.	Ivel-mouth.	221
Viconia.	See Vinovium.
Vinonium aut Binonium.	Bincheſter in the Biſhopricke of Dureſme.	738
Villa Fauſtini.	S. Edmunds Bury.	459
Vindelis.	Haply, old Winchelſey.	319
Vindobala.	See Vindomora.	776
Vindomora.	Walleſend in Northumberland.	811
Vindonum.	Silceaſter.	270
Vindolana.	Wincheſter in the wall.	809
Vindogladia.	Winburne in Dorſetſhire.	215
Virecinum.	Wroxeſter in Shropſhire.	593
Viroſidum.	Werewic upon Eden neere Carlile.	778
Voluba.	Volemouth.	189
Voreda.	Old Perith.	776
Vſocona.	Oken yate.	593
Vzella.	Loſt-Vthiel.	190.221.225

A Table or Index to Scotland.

A.

Aberbroth or Arbroth. 44.c
Abercorn. 15.d
Abercorn or Abercuyning. 28.d
Abercorneth. 28.d
Aberdon new and old. 46.c
Ab-Thanes. 7.d
Adain what it ſignifieth. 13.f
Aire a Sherifdome. 20.c
Ainza. 49.b
Albainy. 39.a
Dukes thereof. 39.b
Albinich, who they be. 39.c
Alclith. 37.c
Al-cluid. 25.a
Alectum. 43.c
Alexander Duke of Albanie, killed. 39.c
Amber. 48.b. name therof. ibid.c
Amund, or Almund a river. 40
Andrews an Archbiſhoprick. 7.a
Andrews. 32.f
Anguis or Angus. 43.a
Earles thereof. 45.a
Aman a river. 16.d
Annandale. ibid.
Annandale a Territorie. ibid.
Apollo Grannus. 13.c
Aptera. 14.a
Arbella Steward a learned & noble Ladie. 26.a
Archibald Duglaſſe Earle of Anguis. 12.d
Ar-Cluid what it is. 25.a
Ardmanoch. 52.b
Ardroſſan. 21.c
Argathelia or Argile. 37.a
Argile Earles. 37.c
Argetorix a pety Prince. 32.b
his wife how ſhe answered Iulia the Empreſſe. 32.b
Argonauts. 38.c
Armitage. 16.c
Arran Iſle. 22.a
Arran Earles. 22.b
Arrol. 42.c. Earles thereof. ibid.
Arthurs Chaire. 14.c
Arthurs Oven. 28.f
Aſſinſhire. 52.a
Atheſtanford. 12.d
Athol infamous for witches. 40.b
Earles thereof. 40.c
Iohn Earle of Athol hanged on high. 40.d
Aubigni or Obigni Lords. 26.b
Eberard de Aubigni his deviſe and coat of Armes. 28.c
Aven a river. ibid.c
Azur gotten. 22.c

B

Baclugh ſurnamed Scot, a family. 16.b
Baileries or Bailiwickes. 7.c
Baileries and Ballives their originall. 20.a
Balmerinoch, an Abbay and Barony. 34.d
Bamff. 49.a
Banbrich, a place. 34.d
Banoc bourn. 30.a
Bankquo. 51.d
Bargeney, or Berigonium. 19.c
Barons. 7.c
Bas, an Iland. 12.f
Bean Caſtle. 50.a
Beares in Britaine. 30.f
Bernſwell. 54.d
Berigonium Caſtle. 38.d
Berth. 41.a
Berubium. 54.d
Berwicke Sheriffdome. 10.c.d
Biſſets, a kinred. 40.c
Bitumen. 32.c
Black-knight. 41.a
Black-neſſe Caſtle. 15.c
Bluidno a river. 18.c
Boen. 49.a

Boides Barons. 21.c
Borderers, their behaviour. 18.a
Borthwicke a Baronie. 13.b
Boschain. 44.f
Bothwell Earles. 23.d
Braid Albin. 39.a
Brankensey. 16.b
Brechin. 44.c
Brendanus. 22.c
Brochty Crag. 43.b
Brun-Albin. 39.b
Bruses LL. of Annandale. 16.e
Brus, discomfiteth the English. 30.b
Buchanan. 29.a
Beavis Bulmer. 22.c
Buquhan. 47.f
Buquhan Earles. 48.d
Buth. 22.c

C

Caer Guidi. 15.d
Caer Laverocke. 17.e
Caledonia in Scotland. 30.c used for all Britaine. 31.b
Caledonia in Epirus. 30.e
Caledonian wood. 30.e. 40.c
Caledony whence they tooke name 30.d
Castle Callendar. 29.b
Cambels a family. 22.f
Cambel Castle and Barony. 37.e
Camelot. 29.a
Candida Casa. 18.f
Cantire. 38.a
Cardines a fort. 18.e
Carrict a Baillery. 20. a. 19.e
Carrict Earles. 20 a
Carron a riveret. 28.c
Cassile a Castle. 19.f
Carthcart a river. 24.b
Cathaness. 53.d
Cathnesse Earles. ibid.
Cathcart a Baron. 24.b
Craufords a family. 20.f
Celurca, that is, Mont-Ross. 44
Cerones. 52.e
Chanonry. ibid.d
Clackmans a Sherifdome. 32
Claick-geese. 48.b
Clannes. 39f.
Clan Haton. 35.c
Clan mack Duff. 35.c
Clan Ranalds a bloudy generation. 52.c
Cluid, what it signifieth. 25.a
Cluid a river. 23.
Cluidsdale. 22.d
Clydsforth or Cluydforth. 18.c
Cockeram of a Mason became Earle of Mar. 47.d
Coleplot. 32.e
Coldingham. 10. e. College of Justice. 8.d
Columban. 38.e
Combat between Sir Iames Lindesey and Baron Wels. 22.f
Comin or Cumen, a mighty family. 36.e
Comin a mighty man murdered by Robert Brus. 17.a Commissariats. 8.f
Commissioners. 8.b
Commons. 7.f
Constablery. 6.e
Constables of Scotland. 19.c
Corneth a river. 28.d
Coumy, the same that Sheriffdom. 6.d
County Courts. 8.e
Courts Civil. 8.f
Courts of criminal causes. 9.a
Crauford Moor. 22.c
Crauford Castle and Earledom. 22.e
Creightons a family. 17.c
Cromarty. 52.d
Cromer. ibid.e
Cross. 14.c
Cruckston. 24.b
Culros, a Barony. 32.d
Cumbernald. 29.c
Cuningham a towne. 21.a
Cuninghams a numerous family. 21. f. their coat of Armes. ibi.
Cuninghams Earles of Glencarn. 17.e. 21.f
Cupre. 34.b

D

Dal. 37.c
Dalkeith. 13.b
Dalrea. 37.c
Dalreudini. ibid
Dalrieta. 37.d
Darly Lords. 24.b
L. Darly husband to Mary Queen of Scots. 22.c
David heire to the Crowne of Scotland, famished. 39.c
David the first King of Scotland a religious Prince. 10.e
Daies longest. 54.b
Dee a river. 18.e 46.a
Depth of the sea. 52.c
Dessie a french Captaine. 12.a
Dicalidonis. 5.a. 30.c
Disert. 32.e
Diœceses first set out by Dionysius Bishop of Rome. 65
Donald of the Isles. 53.a
Done a river. 46.a
Dornock. 53.e
Douglasse. See Duglasse.
Dromund Barons. 36. a. women of that race right beautifull. ibid.
Drum Albin. 39.b
Drimem Castle. 36.a
Drumlanrig. 17.d
Duff a King murdred. 49.f
Duglasse or Douglasse a river. 23.a
Duglas dale. ibid.
Duglasse Castle. 23.a
Duglasse a noble and ancient family. ibid. a. their armes. ibid.b
Duglasse Earles of Angus. 36.c
Duglasse Earles of Morton. 17.d
Duglasse a fast friend unto King Rob. Brus. 23.a Dnglasse Earle of Wigton, Duke of Tourain. 23.b
Duke a title, when first brought into Scotland. 7.e
Dun a river. 19.f
Dunbarre. 11.e
Dunbarton Sheriffdome. 25.c
Dunblan a Bishopricke. 36.e
Dunbritton or Dunbarton. 25.a
Dunbritaine frith. 18.c
Duncanes bay. 54.d
Dun Dee. 43.c
Dunfermling. 32.d
Dunfermling Earle. 32.d
Dunfreis. 17.d
Duni pacis what they bee. 28.e
Dunkelden. 41.a
Dunotyr Castle. 45.d
Dunnur a Castle. 20.a
Dunsby. 54.d
Dunstafag. 38.d
Duplin castle. 36.b
Dyrlton. 12.e

E

Ebba Priore of Coldingham Nonnery. 10 f. Her chastity and her Nunnes. ib. daughter of Edelfrid king of Northumberland. 11.a
Saint Ebbes promontory. 11.a
Eden or Ethan a river.
Edendurough. 13.f
Edenburough Frith. ibid.
Eglington a castle and family. 21.d
Elfeingston a Barony. 29.c
Elgina. 49.e
John Ereskin earle of Mar. 47.e
Th. Ereskin, Baron of Dyrlton, Vicount Felton: first Vicount in Scotland. 12.e
Ern a noble river. 35.f
Esk a river. 13.b

Esker-

Esterlings. 29.d

F

Falkland. 34
Fast-castle. 10.f
Fergus. 39.b
Fergus Lord or Prince of Galloway. 19.b. His Armes. ibid.c became a Chanon. ibid.
Fernherst a Barony. 10.b
Fleanch the Sonne of Banquo. 51.e
Fleet a river. 18.e
Flemings, Barons. 29.c
Iohn Lord Fleming Earle of Wigton. 18.e
Fife. 32.c
Fif-Nesse. 32.f
Fife Earles their priviledge. 35
Forces. 49.e
Forbois Barons. 46.b
Fordon. 45.e
Iohn de Fordon. ib.
Forth or Frith. 12.e
Frestan sea. ib.

G

Galac or Galanc. 31.f
Galloway. 18
Galloway Eeles. ib.
Galloway nagges. ib.
Galloway Princes & Lords. 19.b
Gentlemen. 7.f
George of Dunbarre Earle of Merch. 11.b
Girnego. 53.d
Glamys, a Baron. 43.b
Glasco an Archbishopricke. 7
Glasco an Vniversity & Archbishops See. 23.d
Glencarn. 17.e
Glines. 38
Glotta, See Arran. 22
Gordons Earles of Huntly. 49
Gospatrick, Earle of Northumberland. 11.b
Goury a Country. 42.c
Gouryes conspiracy. 12.b
Grahams dike. 28.d
Granni, what they are. 13.e
Grantzbain or Gramphil. 30.e
Greies of Ckillingham. 43.c
Guith what it signifieth. 15.d

H

Hadinne or Hadington. 12
Vicount Hadington. ib.
Haies Earles of Arott. ib.
Haies family almost extinguished. 36.b
Haliburtons a family. 12.e
Haskhead. 24.b
Hamilton Castle. 23. c. a family. ib. their original. ib.
Iames Hamilton Earle of Abercorn. 15.d
Hamilton of Peyle. 15.e
Iames Hamilton Regent of Scotland, and Duke of Chasteau Herald in Poicton. 23.d
Iohn Marquesse of Hamilton. 23
Hay a strong and valiant man. 42.e
Hector Boetius, an Elegant Historiographer. 43.d
Height of Hills. 52.c
Hellan Leneoc. 22.c
Hellan Tinoc. ibid.c
Hepburnes a family. 16.b
Earles of Bothwell. ibid. 23.d
Herris Baron. 17.e
Hy an Iland. 38.e
Highlandmen. 39.e, their description. ibid.
Holy Ruid house. 14.c
Horesci a people. 16.c
Henry Percy Hotespurre taken prisoner by Montgomery. 21.d
Howburn. 54.d
Hume Castle. 10.d
Humes a great and noble family. 10.e
Hume created Earle. 10.e
Hume Earle of Dumbarre. 11.f
Huntly Castle. 42.f

I

Iames the second, King of Scots untimely slaine and much missed. 10.b
Iames the sixth King of great Britaine. 25.f
Ied a river. 10.a
Iedburgh. 9.f
I-comb-kil. 38.e
Iland floating. 24.e
Inborow and Outborow. 11.b
Inch-Chafra. 36.b
Inch Keith an Iland. 15.d
Innerlothan. 50.b
Innermeth. 36.b
Innernes. 50.b
Iohns towne. 41.c
Iohn Duke of Albany honoured by the French. 39.d
Iohnstons a warlike family. 16.e
Irwin a river. 21.b
Irwin a burrough ibid.c
Iulius Hoff. 28.f

K

Kaledon. 30.d
Keiths a family ancient and noble. 45.a
Kelso. 10.e
Ken a river. 18.e
Kennedies a noble family. 19.f
Kennedie Earle of Cassile. ibid.
Kerrs a family. 10.b
Kerr Baron. ibid.
Kerr Earle of Lothien. 15.f
Kilconath. 20.a
Kildrummi. 46.a
Kile. 20.c
Kilsos. 49.f
Killian a river. 52.e
Kilmarnocke. 21.b
Kilmonorocke. 24.f
Kincardin. 36.e
King of Scotland. 7.e
Kinghorn Earle. 32.e
Kinlosse. 49.f
Kinnadie. 37.d
Kinrosse. 32.c
Kirkbird. 36.e
Kirkonbright. 18.e
Knapdale. 38.c
Knights solemnly dubbed. 7.e
Kyle. See Kile.

L

Ladeni. 9
Lairds. 7.e
Lamric a Sheriffdom.
Largis. 21.d
Lauden or Lothien. 11.d
Lauther a riveret and towne. 10
Leave a lake. 38.d
Leeth a river. 15.c
Lennox. 24.d
Lennox Earles. 25.d
Lennox Dukes, their Armes. 26
Lesley the noble Knight. 52.f
Leth an Haven town. 15.c
Levin a river. 29.d
Levinia. ibid.
Levin a lake and river. 32.e
Levingstons Barons. 29.c
Levingston first Earle of Lithqne 15.e
Lin what it signifieth. 15.e
Lindeseies a noble family. 22.f. 36
Lindum. 15.e
Lions a family. 43.b
Lithqne, or Linlithqne. 15.e
Logh Aber a lake. 38.d
Logh Cure a lake. 17.c
Logh Erre a lake. 35.f
Logh Fin. 38.a
Logh Kinkeram. 38.d
Logh Lomund. 24.d. 36.e
Logh Luthea or Louthea. 50.a
Logh Lothes. 51.d
Logh Nesse. 50.a
Logh Rhian. 19.b
Lough Maban. 16.d

Loghuabre. 51.c
Longas a river. 20.f
Lough longus. 52.c
Lards who they be. 7.e
Lorgis slew Henry the Second K. of France running at Tilt. 52.
Lorn a family. 38.c
Lorn. ibid.
Lovet Castle. 52.c
Loxa or Losse a river. 49.e
Lowland men. 5.e
Lourdoris a Monastery and Barony. 34.d

M

Mac-Conels. 38.b
Mac-Duff first Earle of Fife. 35.b
Maden Castle, or Virgins Castle. 14.c
Mailross. 10.a
Malcolm Canmor. 11.a
Mar. 46. a. Earles. 47.c
Marchidun. 10.a
Mareschals of Scotland. 45.e
Q. Mary deposed by her base brother Iames. 51.b
Marquesse a title, when first brought into Scotland. 7.e
Martha enamoured upon Robert Brus, made him her husband. 20.a
Maxwell Earle of Morton. 17.e
Maxwels a family. 16.e
Menteith. 36.d. Earles thereof. ibid.e
Merch or Mers. 10.d
Merch Earles. 11.a
Mernis. 45.d
Methwen or Methven a Barony. 42.b
Metellan Baron Thirlestan. 10
Monkes living upon their owne hand labour. 10
Montgomeries a family. 21
Monuments of stone, with their inscriptions. 27.28.
Montrosse. 44.c
Montrosse Earles. 36.e
Morton a place. 17.d
Mor wiridh. 12.e
Mull of Galloway. 19.b
Murdack executed. 35.d
Murray. 49.c
Murray Earles. 50.f
Murth Lake. 46
Muscamp. 36.b
Musselborow a towne. 13.b
Musselborow field. ibid.c

N

Nabe a river. 53.f
Napier a learned man. 13.c
Nardin or Nan Sheriffdom. 50.
Nesse mouth. 52.d
Nesse a Lake. 38.d
Newbottle a Monastery and Barony. 13.b
Nid a river. 17.c
Nidisdale. ibid.
Nights shortest. 54.b
Ninian Bishop of Candida casa. 18.f
North Berwick. 12.c

O

Ogilui Barons. 44.f
Oliphant Barons. 36.b
Olorinn an hearb. 49.e

P

Palladius Apostle for the Scottish Nation. 45.f
Parliament. 8.a
Pasley a Monastery and Barony 24.b
Peblis a Towne. 10.c
Penvael or Penvallon. 28.d
Perth the City. 41.b
Porth Sheriffdome. 40.b
Porth Earle. 42.a
Picts divided into two Nations. 5.a
Picts. 30.d
Pictland. 11.d
Pollac a fish. 24.d
Portus Salutis. 52.e
Poununy a fort. 21.c
Princes simply. 7.
Prince of Scotland. ibid.
Propheste of a Stone. 42.d

R

Ramsey, Vicount Hadington 12.b. his faithfulnesse and valour. ibid.
Ramsey Earle Bothwell. 23.d
Ratra a river. 48.a
Ravin trench. 32.e
Redhead a Cape. 44.c
Regimund. 32.f
Reinfraw a towne and Baronie 24.a
Rethuen the name of a Castle and Barony. 42.b
Rethuens Conspiracy. 42.b
Rhenda. 37.c
Rian a river. 19.b
Robert, Bishop of Cathanes, Earle of Lennox, and of Merch. 11.c
Rosburge or Roxburg. 10.a
Rossia or Rosse. 52.a
Rosse Earles. 52.f
Rosse Barons. 24.b
Rothamay Castle. 49.b
Rothes Earle. 35.e. 49.d
Rothes Castle. 49.d
Rothsay Castle. 22.c
Rothsay Dukedome. 22.c
Routs. 38.b

S

Salmons. 47.a
Salmons breed. 47.a
Salmons hunted. 17.f
Salton Barons of Abernethy. 49.b
Sanctuary. 35.c
Sauhquer Castle. 17.e
Barons Sauhquer. ibid.
Scone 42.c.a. Baronie. 42.e
Scotish Sea. 12.e
A troupe of Scots in France. 25.e
Scotland divided into seven parts. 5.c.d
Scoutes. 12.f
Seincler Barons. 32.e
Selkirk. 10.c
Sempil a place and Barony. 24.c
Seneschalsies. 6.c
The Session. 8. d. by whom instituted and when. ib.
Seton. 13. a towne and noble family. 13.a Sherifdomes. 6.c
Sheriff. 8.c
Sheriff of Teviot Dale. 10.b
Slugh hounds. 18.b
Soland geese. 12.f
Solway a village. 17.d
Somervill Baron. 23.a
South Esk a river. 44.d
Spey a river. 49.d
Speyny castle. 409
Sterling Stewarty or Territory. 26.c
Sterling towne. ibid.
Sterlin or Strivelin a towne. 29
Sterling or Esterling money. ibid.
States or Degrees of Scotland. 7.c
Stewarties. 6.c
Stewarts family how it began and arose. 51.f
Stewarts a noble family of the bloud roiall. 20.f
Sir Iames Stewart guardian to Iames Hamilton. 22.b
Stewarts the roiall line of Scotland whence descended. 25.d
Walter Stewart Earle of Athol, for his paricidy cruelly executed. 40.f
Strathbolgy. 49.b
Strathern. 35.e
Straith Ern. ibid.f. Earles thereof. 36.d

Strath Navern. 53.f
Struthers. 34.b
Suit betweene Robert Brus and Iohn Bailioll. 17.a
Sutherland. 53.b

T

TAichia, a Territory. 36.e
Tantallon Castle. 12.d
Taodunum. 43.c
Tarbarth. 52.e
Tarbar. 38.d
Tarvus what it signifieth. 54.d
Taw the river. 35.e
Taw overfloweth. 41.a
Teifidale. 9.e
Teith or Taith, river. 36.d
Tenariff. an exceeding high hill. 52.c
God Terminus. 26. e. his temple. 28.f
Teviot a river. 10.d
Thanes. 7.d what they are. 35.b
Thirlestan a place & Barons honour. 10.c
Tine a little river. 11.f
Toricles, Barony of the Lord Hereis. 17.e
Tulibardin castle. 36, a. a Barony. ib. and Earledome. ibid.
Tweede a river. 10.c
Twedesdale. ibid.

V

VTurned into. M. 45.d
Vchiltrey Castle. 20.f
Vchiltrey Barons. 21.a
Vethred Fergus his sonne murdred by his brother Gilbert. 19.e
Vecturiones. 5.a. 30.c
Vicount a title, when first brought into Scotland. 7.e
Vnderthanes. 7.d
Vrdehead. 54.d

W

WAll of Hadrian. 26.f
Wall of Antonius Pius. 27.a
Water of an admirable nature. 48.a
Wemeseies a kinred. 35.c
Wemmis a Castle and noble family. 32.e
Whitherne, that is, Candida casa. 19.a
Wisle, a river. 53.d
Wigton an Haven-towne. 18.e
Wilford a valiant Englisb Captaine. 12.a Wolves. 54.a

Y

YOung Knight Pedagoge unto King Iames the sixth. 13.

Z

ZEister a place and Barony. 12.a
Zester a Baron. 10.c

A Table of the names of severall people and places of more ancient record in Scotland.

ABravanus. Rian the river and Logh-Rian the Lake. 19
Alauna, About Sterlin. 30
Bodotria. flu. The forth & frith: Edenborough Frith. 12
Caledonia and Caledonii. 30
Cantæ, the people inhabiting Rosse. 52
Carbantorigum, Caerlaverock. 17
Catini. The inhabitants of Cathanesse. 53
Cornabii. The people of Strathnavern. 53
Castra alata or Castrum alatum. 52. Edenburough. 13
Cerones, Assinshire. 52
Calonia Coldingham. 10
Celnio, flu. The river Killian. 22
Corda a towne neere Logh-Cure: 17
Coria Damniorum, haply Camelot. 29
Creones, See Cerones.
Damnii, people of Cluydsdale, Renfraw barony, Lenox, Strivelin Menteth and Fife. 22
Dea flu. The river Dee. 18
Diva flu, the river Dee. 46
Epidii, people of Caledonia. 30
Gadeni or Ladeni, Teifidale, Twededale, Merch and Lothien. 9
Glotain's. The Isle Arran. 22
Grampius Mons, Grantzbaine. 28,30
Horesci, haply the people inhabiting Esk-dale. 16
Iena. The river Ken. 18
Ila flu. may seeme to be the river Wisle. 53
Ladeni. See Gadeni.
Lelanonius flu. the river Levin. 24
Leucopibia. haply Candida Casa or Whitherne. 18
Lindum. Linlithquo or Lithquo. 15
Littus altum. seemeth to be Tarbarth. 52
Longus flu. Loughlonges. ibid.
Loxa flu. The river Losse. 49
Novantes. People of Galloway, Carick, Kyle & Cuningham 18
Merta, in Sutherland.
Novantum Chersonesus sive Promontorium. The Mull of Galloway. 19
Nodius flu. The river Nid. 17
Orcas sive Tarverdrum. Howbune. 54
Randvara. Reinfraw. 24
Rerigonium. Bargeney. 19
Selgovæ. The people of Lidesdale Evesdale, Eskdale, Annandale and Nidisdale. 16
Tamea, haply Tanea in Rosse.
Taizali. The people of Buquahan 47
Tarvedrum promont. See Orcas.
Taus flu. Tan the river. 35. 41
Vacomagi. The people of Murry. 49
Vararis. Murray. ibid.
Vernicones, haply Mernis. 45
Victoria, haply Inch-Keith. 15
Vidogara, haply Aire. 20
Virvedrum. See Orcas.
Vzellum, a place in Eusdale. 16

The

The families of greater worth and honor in Scotland in this booke mentioned.

A

Abercorne Earle. 15
Abernethor Abernethy. 36
Albanie Dukes. 39
Angus or Anguis Earles. 45
Areskinn, See Ereskin.
Ardmanoch. 52
Arol Earles. 42
Argile Earles. 37.38
Arran Earles. 22
Athol Earles. 40
Aubigny or Obigny Lords. 26

B

Baclugh. 16
Balmerinoch. 34
Bothwell Earles. 16.23
Buquhan Earles. 48
Borthwicke Barons. 13
Boids Barons. 21.22
Brus. 16.19

C

Cambell. 37
Cassile Earles. 19
Crawford Earles. 22
Cathanes Earles. 53
Creictõs Barons Sauhquer 17.51
Carthcart. 24
Carliles.
Carrict Bailives and Earles. 20
Chasteau Herald Duke. 23
Clan-Hatan. 35
Clan-Ranald. 52
Colvil. 32
Comin. 36.45.48
Culrosse. 32
Cuningham. 21

D

Darnley or Darly. 24
Douglasse or Duglasse. 19
23.45.48
Dromund. 36
Dunbarre Earles. 11
Dunfirmling Earle. 13.32

E

Glington Earlet. 21
Eretkin. 12.29.47
Elphingston. 29.34.49

F

Ivy Baron. 32
Fleming. 18.29
Forbois. 46
Frasers. 52
Felton Vicount. 12
Fife Earles. 35

G

Gordon. 49
Glencarn Earles. 21
Glamys Baron. 44
Graham. 36
Goury. 42
Greyes. 44
Galloway Lords. 693

H

Alyburton. 12
Hamilton. 15.22.23
Huntley. 13.42.49
Hepburn. 16
Hereis or Herris. 17
Hides. 36. 42
Home or Hume Baron de Berwicke. 11
Hume Earle. 11
Hadington Vicount. 12

I

Innermeth. 36

K

Eith. 45
Kennedis. 19
Ker. 10.15
Kinghorn Earle. 32.44
Kinloss. 49

L

Evenox or Lennox Earles. 25
Lindeseies. 22.44.49
Lesley. 34.49
Levingston. 29
Leon or Lion. 32.43
Lovet. 52
Lunlithquo or Lithquo Earle. 15
Lorn Lords. 38.49
Lothien Earle. 15
Lundoris. 34

M

Mac-Conell. 38
Mac-Intoscech. 35
Mar Earles. 47
Marshall Earles. 45
Maxwels. 18
Menteith Earle. 36
Merch Earles. 11
Methwen 42
Murray Earles. 50
Montrose. 44
Montgomeries Earles. 21
Morton Earle. 17
Murray. 36.40.42

N

Newbottle. 609

O

Orkeney Earles. 53
Olyphant. 36
Ogilvy or Ogilby. 44

P

Perth Earle. 42

R

Amsey. 12.23
Randolph. 50
Reinfraw. 24
Rethwen. 42
Rothes Earle. 35. 49
Rothsay Dukedome. 22
Roos. 24
Rosse Earles. 52
Roxburgh. 10

S

Cone. 42
Scot. 16
Steward. 25.48.51
Sutherland Earles, 53
Seincler. 32.53
Somervill. 23
Seton. 13
Sempell. 24.49
Sauhquer or Sanquer. 17
Salton. 49
Strathern Earles. 36
Spiny. 49

T

Oricles. 17
Thirlestan. 10
Tulibardin. 36

V

Rqhxart. 52
Vchiltiey. 21

W

Emmis. 32
Wintwoun Earle. 13
Wigton Earle. 18

Z

Eister or Zester. 10.12

A Table of Ireland, and the Isles adioyning to BRITAINE.

A

Absenties. 85
Admirall of England, extent of his authority. 238
Alderney. 224
Angleſey. 203
Antrim County. 112
Annales of Ireland. 150
Annales of the Iſle of Man. 205
Arran. 99.214
Armagh County. 107
Arklo, Lords thereof. 90
Arts and piety ſowed among nations in ſundry ages. 85

B

Bagnall. 121. &c.
Bannomanna. 62
Barry. 78
Baſepoole. 227
Bernacles. 204
Bermwell. 94.95
Birminghams. 100
Bingham. 101.103
Biſſets. 113
Biſhopricks of Ireland. 73. Poore. 106
Blunt, Lord Montioy. 77, 105 107. Deputy. 133. &c.
Boyle Barony. 103
Brehon Law. 140
Britaines inhabite Ireland. 65
Brittain herbe. 222
Brittain Hus. 221
Britiſh Armory. ibid.
Britiſh ſea. 57. where deepeſt. 227
Burk. 81, 100. 101, 104, 117. &c.
Burgus, what. 222
Buth. 22
Butiphant Vicount. 78
Butler. 82.88. &c.
Burrough Baron Lord Deputy. 115

C

Cæſarea. 65
Cavon County. 106
Cahir Baron. 82
Carew. 76, 79, 85
Carick Earle. 82
Carauſius. 88
Caſſiles Archbiſhop. 82
Caſquets. 224
Caſtle-Conell Baron. 81
Caterlough County. 85
Cattaile. 63
Cavanaghes. 85
Cauſes of rebellion. 101
Caurus the winde. 59
Chamberlan. 224
Cerne Iſland. 62
Chamber of Ireland. 95
Cheuers. 90
Chairly Boy. 113
Clany-boy
Clan-Moris. 75
Clancar Earle. 76
Clan-Donels. 101
Clan William. 81
Clan Gibbon. ibid.
Clogher Biſhopricke. 115
Clare County. 98
Clan Ricard Earles. 100
Cogan. 70, 79
Connacht or Conaght. 98
Colby. 86
Conaght Lords. 104
Conſtables of Ireland. 97
Colran County. 114
Columb Saint. 215
Corke, County. 77. a kingdome. 79
Courts of Ireland. 72
Coner Biſhopricke. 111
Curraghmore Barons: 79
Croft Sir Hugh ſlaine. 176
Curcy. 71, 77, 53, 209
Cuthbert a Saint. 220
Cuttings, Coyne, Linerie. 76, 101

D

Darcy. 96
Deemſters. 204
Delton. 96
Dalvin Baron. ibid.
Deputies of Ireland. 71
Deſmonde Earles. 76
Deſſie Vicount. 79
Deſeaſes in Ireland. 63
Devereux. 90
Dillon. 96
Donell Gormy. 102
Docwra. 133. &c.
Dublin County. 91. Citie and Vniverſity. 92. Marques. 94
Duke of Ireland. ibid.
Dunboin Baron. 85
Dunganon Baron. 115
Dungarvan Barony. 79
Dunkellin Baron. 100
Dunſany Baron. 95, 216

E

Engliſhmen, firſt entred Ireland. 70
Eaſtmeath. 95
Eſſex Earle. 112. Lord Deputy. 117
Ewſt. 216

F

Farn Iſland. 220
Fermoy Vicount. 78
Farn, Iſle. 220
Fermanagh County. 106
Fitz Euſtace Barons. 88
Fitz-Patric. 8
Fitz-Geralds. 82, 87
Fiz Stephens. 70.79.89
Fitz-William Lord Deputy. 121. &c.
Fitz-Urſe. 107
Fortunate Iſles. 217
Frozen ſea. 219

G

Garneſey. 224
Galloglaſſes. 101, 147
Galloway County. 99
Ganalock. 122
Genevill. 97.163
Gerſey. 224
Glinnes. 90.113
Goodwin ſands. 222
Gormanſton Vicount. 95
Lord Grey. 75

H

Hawkes. 63
Hereditarie territories of England in France. 232
Hy, Iſland. 216
Hirth. 216
Hobies. 63
Holy Croſſe of Tiparary. 82
Holy Iſland. 62.220
Holy-wood. 94
Horſes. 63
Houth Barons. 94
Huſey. 95

I

Ibarcan Baron. 99
Ila. 215
Ienevill see Genevill.
Iona. ibid.
Iniskellin. 106.112.101
Ireland called Ogygia 64. called Scotia 66. 117. inhabited by Britaines 65. not conquered by Romans 66. entred by Henrie the second 69. deuided 72. neglected. 118
Irishmen out of Spaine. 66
Irish Monkes 67. 110. taught the English to write 68. their Manners. 140
Ireland neglected. 218

K

KErry County. 75
Kilkenny County. 84
Kildar County. 87. Earles
Killalo Bishopricke. 100
Killin Baron. 95
Kinsale. 135
Kinges County. 86
Kernes. 147
Knight of the Valley. 81
Konctoe battaile. 100

L

LAcy. 82.95.96.&c 203
Leinster. 84
Leinster Marquesse. 94
Leicestre. 86
Letrim County. 103
Letrim Baron. ibid.
Lenison. 135
Limerick County. 81
Lewis. 216
Lindisfarn. 220
Lixnaw Baron. 75
Lovell. 85
Longford County. 97
Londey. 202
Louth County. 105. Earle ibid. Baron. 106
Lycanthropia a disease. 83

M

MAc, Andan. 85
Mac Carty. 77
Mac-Clen. 216
Mac Connell. 102.113.216
Mac Guilly. 113
Mac Donells. 120
Mac Guir. 106.121
Mac Genis. 109.120
Mac Mahon. 107
Mac Morogh. 69
Mac William. 101.104
Mac Teg 77
Man Isle. 203. Lords. 213
Mac Swin. 117
Mac Shees. 82
Maio County. 100
Mandeviles. 109.213
Marshall E. of Penbroke. 70.86 87.155
Marshall of Ireland. 72
Malachie a Saint. 108
Meth. 94. the Bishop. 95. the Lords. 96
Messet. 155
Monaghan County. 107
Mont-Garret Vicount. 89
Mont-Norris. 107.134
More. 105
Morley. 72
Munster. 74
Muscegros: 99

N

NAngle. 96
Nauan a Baronet. 95
Nogente or Nugent. 96
Norris Sir Iohn. 122.&c
Normandie lost. 226

O

OBrien. 82
O-Brins. 89
O-Cahan. 114
O-Carell. 69
O Conor Dun. 102.104
O-Donell. 117
O-Hagan. 109
O-Hanlon. ibid.
O-Kelly. 103
Ogygia. 62
O-Mahon. 76
O Maily. 86
O-More. 86
O-Neale election. 114.120. Earle of Tir-Oen. 122.&c
Oleron. 232
O-Pharoll. 97
O-Quin. 131
O-Reyley. 106
Orcades Isles. 216. Earles. 217
Ormond. 82
O-Rorke. 103
O-Swiliuant. 76
Offery Earle. 82
Ougans. 88
O-Tooles. 89

P

PAlladius. 67
Pearles. 59
Pelagius, an Archhereticke. 111
Perot. 103
Phelipot, a good Patriot. 224
Poers, Barons of Curraghmore. 79
Prestholm. 203
Preston. 95
Professions hereditarie. 141
Plonkets. 94.95.96

Q

QVeenes County. 86

R

RHeban Baronets. 86
Ridiculous conceipt. 75
Ringrom Baron. 77
Roch. Baron. 78
Roscomon County. 103
Russell Lord Deputy. 121
Rugge. 63

S

SAlmons. 59.114
Savage. 112
Saint Bernard. 108
Saint Brigid. 87
Saint Laurence, Baron of Houth. 94. Saint Michael 86
Saint Patrickes Sepulcher. 110 Purgatory. 116
Saint Owen. 227
Saxons Islands. 220
Scalmey. 202
Serk. 227
Scots. 117
Shauing of Irish. 107
Shires of Ireland. 37
Shetland. 219
Sidny, Lord Deputy. 97.121
Silly Isles. 227.&c.
Slane Baron. 95
Slego County. 102
Smale Island. 201
Smyris a stone. 225
Steward of Ireland. 80
Spaniards in Ireland. 75.77
Stanihurst a learned man. 66
Steptholme. 202
Stella Maria. 230
Stockholme. 202
Strongebow. 69.17
Stukeley. 94
Surley Boy. 113
Sussex Earle Lord Deputy. 121

T

Talbot. 79. 80. 94. 155
Tanistry. 141
Thule. 218
Three sisters. 84
Tipperary County. 82. Earle. ibid.
Tirconel County. 115
Tirell. 91. 96
Tiroen County. 114
Toam or Tuen Archbishopricke. 100
Trimletstoun Baron. 95
Twomond Earles. 99
Tullo Vicount. 85. c. & c. f
Turlogh Lenigh. 115
Tutes. 96

V

Valentia Baron. 76
Verdon. 97
Vernayle. 155
Vfford. 103
Vergivian Sea. 61
Vescy. 87
Vines why not in Britain. 63
Vlster. 104. Earles. 117
Vpper Ossery Baron. 84
Vriaghts. 114
Vshant. 231
Vsher. 94
Vske-bah. 63

W

Walsh. 91
Warren. 86. 132
Waterford County. 79. Earles. 80
Weipford County. 88
West Meath County. 96
Western Isles. 215
White Knight. 87
Wicklow. 89
Wicker boates. 59
Wolfmen. 83

Y

Ydron Barony. 85

Ancient names of Places, and Rivers in Ireland.

Argita flu. 117
Ausoba flu. 99
Auteri. 100
Birgus flu. 84
Boreum Prom. 117
Birgantes, or Brigantes. 84
Buuinda flu. 95
Cauci. 90
Concani. 98
Coriondi. 77
Darnij neare Derry. 104. 116
Daurona. 78
Dunum. 109
Duri flu. 75
Eblana. 91
Eblani. 84
Erdini. 106
Gangani. 98
Hieron Prom. 89
Iberni. 76
Iernus flu. ibid.
Isannium Prom. 109
Laberus. 94
Libnius flu. 91
Logia flu. 116
Luceni. 74
Macolicum. 97
Menapia. 89
Menapij. 84
Medona flu. 89
Nagnata. 102. 103
Nagnatæ. ibid.
Notium Prom. 76
Ouoca flu. 90
Rauius flu. 102
Rheba. 8
Rhobogdij. 115
Rhobogdium Prom. 116
Rigia. 97
Rigia altera. 116
Senus flu. 97
Velabri. 76
Vennicnium Prom. 117
Vennicnij. 115. 117.
Vidua flu. 117
Vinderus flu. 112
Vodiæ. 77
Voluntij. 104

Ancient names of the Isles adiacent to Britaine.

Acmodæ. 220
Amnitum, See Samnitum insulæ. 231
Adros called also Andium. 203
Axantos, See Vxantisa. 231
Barsa. 227
Bergæ. 218
Birchanis. 221
Cæsarea. 224
Cassiterides. 227
Caunos. 222
Dumna. 216
Ebudæ. 215
Ebuda prima. 216
Ebuda secunda. ibid.
Euodia. 214
Electridæ. 220
Epidium. 215
Edri. 203
Fortunate Islands. 217
Glessariæ. 220
Glotta. 22. 214
Hebrides. 215
Hesperides. 228
Ieta. 223
Limnos. 203
Liga. 227
Lisia. ibid.
Mictis, happily Vectis. 223
Menavia. 203. 205
Mona. 203
Monæda. ibid.
Mula, or Maleos. 215

Nerigon	218	Saxonum insulæ.	221	Thule.	218
Nessiada.	231	Sena.	231	Toliapis.	222
Ocetis.	216	Siambis.	ibid.	Vecta or Vectis.	223
Orcades.	216	Siade.	227	Veneticæ insulæ.	231
Pomona.	ibid.	Sicdelis.	ibid.	Vindelis. Old Winchelsey.
Ricina, or Ricluna.	215	Silimnus.	203	Vliarus.	232
Sanitum insulæ.	231	Silinæ.	227	Vxantisa.	231
Sarnia.	225	Tanatos.	222

FINIS.

Faults corrected thus.

Pag.	lin.
2	25	And seeke through Ilands all, none may with British Iles compare.
16	16	with woods,
37	24	out of the fragments
38	49	invictus Romano
40	26	the signall
	32	brave victorie, he raised an high turret,
50	27	the image of victorie
	54	proofs taught, how Petilius
56	51	accord, rather than
57	4	lightest horsmen
58	7	seated therfore
61	33	thousands of enimies
62	22	Latian brest
	23	How beautifull!
66	22	Antoninus
67	6	of Commodus
68	52	the man.
70	42	or turret
71	8	with visards on their faces, resembling all the redoubted
	27	in Sicil.
75	53	of victorie
87	50	CCCCLXXVI
88	9	subdued and by
100	8	were stamped at the first
104	3	Zosimus
113	9	countrie, is left
114	30	We read [Pœnarum
	31	not Pœnarum]
115	52	these scarres
121	31	her painted
122	38	Constantine the Great
124	36	two silly arguments
125	9	shields; Then,
127	55	and none are so deadly

Pag.	lin.
133	20	was led captive purfled and
138	3	for worthy Bede
	15	Haduloha
139	3	overruled the rest
	33	that Orthotes
141	21	But, of greater
147	9	from him, then
152	27	that you see;
160	11	to Turkil earle of East-England, the fourth
161	35	or, as the forme runneth of our Law instruments,
163	50	of all, of all,
167	21	Fitz-Peter
169	19	Barons, raised, and
172	8	wishes imparting
	48	Benediction,
178	16	place, within
181	43	15. S. Maries.
	52	Stream-works
186	45	Sed pauis
195	3	A towry-topped
198	2	crowned, or,
199	38	and holloweth the ground
211	14	Isis haire
	40	mantle and ring
213	8	Henrie the first earle
	50	game for hunting
214	48	old stone
224	42	held against
240	6	siding
	11	embrued with
256	10	stone, in which
264	8	hounds there are,
265	26	the faireſt church
267	12	a labell of 7
269	8	their seat
270	15	draught;

Pag.	lin.
271	34	Escutcheon or,
273	29	whight; by so small a strait running betweene, anciently
	44	in ovall forme,
286	37	If a man
	43	use and behoofe
288	34	and finished Eton
290	14	where masters tootoo rigorous have scholars overbeaten,
295	38	of Richmont
323	35	soundeth as much as a greene bough,
332	8	buried at
334	22	cut into
345	44	between two risings
380	20	given as lost
387		which waving thus,
388	24	from Britannie
410	11	not quite;
414	4	which brooke
	52	with a tombe
420	40	faire courtly hall
432	14	Leucœum
436	16	traffique mich,
	17	metals rich.
448	55	three square
449	1	were mere-stones
457	32	rased
472	53	which had Lords
530	40	hath a sure
555	50	as they terme them, Or,
578	10	the sink
586	38	And Burton
595	25	tongue, men sayn.
610	49	worthy thou,
629	28	in bed with his wife,
631	34	of an Eremite it is, very seldome

Pag. 632. lin. 51 whiles Henry liv's, that Champion Achilles-like of ours, ib. l. 52 of his Progenitors.
Pag. 634. lin. 47 this brightnesse. 662. 43. of the antiquity thereof, 671. 54. by inspection

Perseus 218
Pollux 231
Ocyrus. 216
Orcades. 215
Pomona. 164
Priscian. 215
Saturnus Jupiter. 231
Simois. 225
Sirenum Insulæ. 221
Sirius. 221
Sirenes. 164
Stoics. 227
Sibylla. 164
Sibylla. 231
Tantalus. 212
Tritons. 210
Tarpeia. 212
Thetis. 213
Tarpeian Rock. 213
Thalia. 213
Tarentum. 213
Tritons. 213
Tarentum. 213
Tritons. 213
Tarentum. 213
Tritons